AN ANTI-INFLUENZA SERUM NOW USED

Col. Bridges, Formerly of This City, Using Serum on Soldiers with Good Effect.

Montreal, March 3.—A new anti-influenza serum is now being used by Colonel Bridges, A.D.M.S., and the medical officers of M. D. 4, as a preventive, not only of the influenza itself, but chiefly of the pneumonia diseaces and lung abscesses, which have proved more fatal than the influenza. This is a serum known as the Polyvalent serum, and it is administered subcutaneously.

Col. Bridges said that he had used this serum at the military camps in England last year, and had also been inoculated himself, and he felt confident that its use with the troops at the Peel street barracks had resulted in stemming what might have been an unpleasant outbreak of the "flu."

The door, which was locked when they retired, was found unlocked in the morning. The police department are making their usual investigation. CENTREVILLE, N. B.

Centreville, N. B., Feb. 28.—A very successful campaign in the interests of the financial part of the United Baptist Forward Movement has just been concluded in the churches under the pastorate of Rev. S. Johnson. The allocation for this pastorate was $1,100 and they raised $1,820, thus reaching their objective and "going over the top" with a handsome surplus of $720.

Rev. J. B. Champion also conducted a very successful campaign on his pastorate in the interests of the Methodist Forward Movement, securing $1,715. The allocation was $1,679. Centreville and vicinity have reason to be proud of their record in this campaign.

February has brought winter in all its old time aspects, with frequent storms, high winds, impassable roads, towering drifts and a blockade of train and mail service. On the evening of Feb. 11 a representative number of heroes of the late war met in Sherwood's Opera House and were organized as a branch of the Great War Veterans' Association by S. G. Barter, of Hartland. The following officers were elected: President, Donald Simonds; 1st vice-pres., F. R. P. McKenzie; 2nd vice-pres., James Murray; secretary, George Long; treasurer, W. Perry Crawford.

THE COTTON MILLS TO BEAT DISCOUNT

Purchase Store to Prevent Calais and Milltown Operatives Leaving Employ.

The Canadian Cotton Co., Ltd., which operates mills in St. John, Marysville and Milltown, N. B., has purchased a general store at Milltown for the purpose of meeting the discount situation. The store is for the benefit of the St. Croix mill's employees who live in Calais and Milltown, N. B., and are paid in Canadian currency, which is subject to 20 per cent discount in the latter two places.

The shrinkage caused such a shrinkage of the pay of the Maine operatives when they went to buy the necessaries of life that forty of them gave notice that they would be obliged to leave the mills and find employment on thir own side of the boundary.

House Discussed Evil of Inflation

The Problems of Finance and Exchange And Their Effect on the High Cost of Living, Intelligently Discussed in Parliament Yesterday by F. L. Davis of Neepawa---Attitude of Farmers Party And Qubec Representatives.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 4.—There are comparatively few members of the House able to discuss intelligently the problems of finance and exchange, or at least who attempt to do so. The most interesting feature of the short Wednesday session was probably the business-like discussion of the high cost of living by Mr. Fred L. Davis, the lawyer member for Neepawa, Man., although his conclusions in some particulars were based on a misapprehension as to the rules under which the Customs Department operated.

Mr. Davis stated that one of the main causes of the present unrest and high prices was the inflation of the currency. The amount of currency in circulation in Canada has risen during the war, he said, from $10 to $30 per head. The high cost of living was not due merely to waste and lack of production; there was also adding its weight the course of the government in financing through loans, without due regard to the limit of debt creation.

Canada Does Not Stand Alone.

He pointed out that Canada did not stand alone in the matter of inflation. The evil was even more pronounced in Great Britain and the United States; there was inflation of five to one in Italy, one to seven in France and one to twenty in Russia. The problem before the country was to bring about deflation, and the member for Neepawa suggested two methods, increase of taxation and economy. Unless the money raised by taxation exceeded that spent by the Government, inflation would continue. That was the situation as regards taxes and loan. Economy was another and different problem, and a very difficult one. For the national economy, Mr. Davis recommended that there should be a standing committee on estimates appointed, with a permanent staff which could carry on investigations between sessions of Parliament.

Appointments to Public Service.

He also dealt with a matter which is more or less of a public scandal with all Governments; that is, the making of appointments to the public service and the difficulty about securing dismissals of needless civil servants, asking how many had been dismissed to make room for the 25,000 returned soldiers added to the service. He criticized the practice of the Customs Department in not taking exchange into consideration in assessing the duties, saying it amounted to wiping out the British preference.

The Farmers in House.

Since the session opened the Farmers' party has maintained an attitude of watchful waiting, listening to the speeches on the Address and trying to get a line for their immediate policy on the first vote to be taken, a matter of considerable moment to them in view of the fact that the eyes of the country are probably fixed on them more intently than on either of the old parties, whose course may be judged pretty well in advance. Apparently they have come to a decision as to where they will stand on the first vote.

The member who seconded the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Alex. McGregor, of Pictou, N. S., is a man who makes no secret of where his sympathies lie with regard to the tariff. He is and always has been a protectionist, and in his speech he threw down the gauntlet pretty decidedly to the Farmers' party. He came out flatfooted in favor of the manufacturers, of whom he is one, and rapped those who advocate class legislation, aiming his shafts pretty well at the farmers, and saying that those who would set one class against another are not the true friends of any class, and their platform should not be considered. There was no escaping the implication of his remarks, and it is understood he even intimated to Hon. Mr. Crerar personally that he would say something with which the Farmers' party would not agree.

The Opposition Amendment.

Although there would sem to be nothing specific in the amendment of the leader of the Opposittion which would appeal particularly to the Farmers' party in the House, it is believed that they will support it and vote with the Opposition. The farmers had a meeting today, in which they elected Levi Thompson, of Qu'Appelle, chairman of the caucus and the first meeting will be held tomorrow. They will then come to a decision on the matter as above outlined. It appears that the farmers are convinced from the speeches that have been made during the recess and in the House by Mr. McGregor and others that their interests lie with the Opposition on this vote. They do not think that the Government will do anything effective with the tariff this session. They consider that it is standing in with the big interests, and while they are not particuarly sympatheitc with the Liberals, they want a change. They say the Government was elected for the war and reconstruction, and a new deal is coming to the people now.

Attitude of Quebec.

The most interesting single remark uttered in the House since it opened has been the remark of Mr. Guthier, Liberal member for Ste. Hyacinthe. Mr. Gauthier's speech was delivered in French, but he prefaced it with a short speech in English in answer to some remarks of Mr. Mowat regarding a possible entente towards Quebec. Mr. Gauthier intimated that his people were not in a frame of mind to enter into any conference. "Quebec has been misjudged, it has been badly treated, it has been slandered, it is waiting for its hour, and after that it will confer, but not before." Just what Quebec's "hour" is, Mr. Gauthier did not define, but there are not lack of interpreters who are reading various meanings into his speech. Some of them are even recalling the saying of the late Kaiser: "Germany strikes when Germany's hour has struck," and placing 'L'heure" n the same plane as "Der Tag."

While there was probably nothing more in Mr. Gauthier's words than a repelling of advances which, however well meant, may easily be understood to be tiresome to people who have never admitted or considered that their attitude was incorrect, the general feeling around the House is that the utterance was not altogether wise, and was calculated to perpetuate differences which have been made far less of by the great majority of parliamentarians than might have been expetced. Probably the most that could be read into Mr. Gauthier's utterance was political; he was thinking of ballots rather than bullets.

Condemned Agrarian Movement.

Ottawa, March 4—In parliament yesterday, W. F. Cockshutt condemned the agrarian movement as dangerous and hoped that it will not gain control in Ottawa. He also expressed the opinion that prohibition had not succeeded as its friends had thought it would.

F. L. Davis, Neepawa, thought the opposition would not find western members in favor of a general election now or until a census had been taken.

A. Trahan, Nicolet, condemned extensive military and naval plans while the country is half bankrupt. He said Quebec is not ready for a conference with the other provinces.

The report of the department of immigration was tabled, showing a decrease of 43 per cent. over previous year in immigration from the United States.

In the Senate, Senator Dandurand made on attack on Sir Robert Borden, saying that no French-Canadian worthy of the name would serve under him.

Senator Roche dissented from the view of Senator Proudfoot that the status of Canada had advanced in the matter of autonomous government by becoming a member of the League of Nations.

Senator Schaffner adjourned the debate until Thursday.

Was Well Known Here.

George A. Haggerty, who for many years prior to 1896 was mechanical superintendent of the New Brunswick Railway and well known in Fredericton and the province, is spending a few months at his home in Southbridge, Mass., after devoting his whole life thus far to the upbuilding of railways and their equipment, both in America and Europe. After having passed through two wars in Europe, he is yet comparatively young and very active and is still in the railroad game.

Mrs. Patrick Burns, who was seriously ill for some days with pneumonia, is now progressing favorably towards recovery. Her daughter, Mrs. W. Grant, of Aroostook Junction, was called here by her illness.

Mrs. W. J. Glenn, secretary-treasurer of York county, spent the past few days in St. John and returned home Tuesday night.

For time plays the mischief with memory—but with the date on the film you may laugh at his tricks.

All Folding Kodaks and Brownies are now Autographic, and with an autographic film, provide one means for dating, titling each negative as you make it. It is all done in a second or two, is as simple as "pressing the button," though it may not seem so at the time. A date is always worth while.

UNITED FARMERS, LIBERALS AND TARIFF.

Report has it that the United Farmers in Parliament may line up with the Opposition in the vote on the Address in Reply. The so-called representatives of the United Farmers, it is said, cannot see that their trade policy varies materially with that of the Liberal party. There are few apparently who know exactly what the Liberal party's so-called policy means; there are no two who agree in the effort to interpret. But the members in Parliament who claim to be United Farmers have been lifelong Liberals, and they no doubt feel free to take much for granted. The trade policy under which we are now operating had the hearty support of the Liberal party for eighteen years. In that time it was defended year in and year out by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. W. S. Fielding and the rank and file of the party, and few were more enthusiastic in their support than the newspapers of the Liberals. It is true that the leaders and the party generally advocated Commercial Union at one time, Free Trade at another, and Reciprocity perhaps after that. They likewise held out for Tariff for Revenue only. But all this while in Opposition striving for power. When they succeeded to Government and were charged with the responsibilities, their attitude changed. They not only accepted the policy of their Conservative predecessors, but in the changes of tariff that were occasionally made the sum total was an increase in the protection to manufacturers. The Press of the party which years before urged a "levelling downward" of the tariff were quite as wild afterward in their advocacy of the "levelling upward."

We must first ascertain and understand the financial needs of the country. We must then arrange to meet them, and in the arrangements we must have regard for the requirements of development in agriculture, industry and commerce; and these cannot be determined by mere local, class or political party considerations. We must have knowledge of the conditions generally, and act prudently and broadly; and that is what the Government intends to do; that is what it is doing. And until the Liberals—who have been seeking to inveigle the United Farmers to their side of the House for mere party use—are in a position to view the result of the inquiries made by competent authority, they are without a basis upon which a serious policy can be broadly determined. It is therefore quite unreasonable for those members of Parliament who, for reasons which may be accepted as merely selfish, are holding forth as representatives of the United Farmers, to say that the policy of their party does not vary from that of the Liberals. The Liberals, as a matter of fact, have not settled upon a trade policy; and, in view of the past, there can be no public confidence in their varied catch-as-catch-can professions of today. The United Farmers of the country, among whom are very many earnest and intelligent men and women, will certainly feel that they are being misrepresented at Ottawa by men who have presumed to speak for them as their representatives.

THE HOME RULE BILL.

The latest bill to provide a new government for Ireland to be submitted to the Parliament of the United Kingdom is not likely to provoke enthusiasm, either in Ireland or England and Scotland. In its provisions it recognizes that the present order, which has lasted for a hundred and twenty years, almost, has not been a success. It recognizes also that in Ireland itself there are divisions, sentimental rather than material, calculated to make an All-Ireland Parliament at Dublin an arena for sectarian struggle rather than an assemblage for the promotion of the general welfare. An exchange points out that the hope, if not the expectation, of the farmers is that the arrangement proposed, which includes one legislative body for six counties in the Northeast and another for counties in the south and west, will not last; but, being found expensive as well as inefficient, in a broad national sense, will be abandoned and replaced by one Parliament. A Council for Ireland, made up of members of the two proposed legislatures, of the North and of the South, is provided for, and is a recognition that, geographically and economically, Ireland is one. This council, which at the start will have only the powers delegated to it by the two Irish legislatures, may, if the Irish people will, be developed into a greater body with executive, judicial and legislative powers, controlling customs and excise taxation, in addition to the death duties, stamp taxes, entertainment, license and other taxes which, on their formation, are to provide revenue for the two legislatures, North and South. That, if there is acceptance of the principle of two legislatures for the one country, there will be an early coalescing into a united Parliament is much to expect. Seemingly the division between Unionists and Nationalists, which unfortunately is generally the division between Protestant and Catholic, is as marked today as it has been at any time; and though these may be days of rapid change in public view the signs of wholesome change in Ireland are not discernible.

Should the new bill become law Ireland will still be part of the United Kingdom. What relates to the crown, peace and war, foreign affairs, the army and navy, coinage, defence, treason, trade outside of the country, the post office, navigation and telegraphic communication, and, for the present, customs, excise and income taxes, will be controlled by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, in which Ireland will have forty-two members, twelve from the North and thirty from the South. Ireland must also contribute to the revenue of the United Kingdom, which proposal, as the United Kingdom maintains services in the interest of Ireland, is in reason. The other financial arrangements do not suggest that the new governing bodies will for a time have much money with which to exploit their ideas; and this may not be a bad thing for the taxpayers. The fate of the measure may not be foretold. Ever since Gladstone's bill of 1893 it has been apparent that in Great Britain there is no really strong sentiment in favor of modifying the union with Ireland of 1800. Gladstone's bill was killed in the House of Lords, and the people in subsequent parliamentary elections approved. The Asquith bill was engineered through Parliament by a combination of Irish Nationalists, Liberals, Socialists and church disestablishers who were willing to trade support for what did not concern them in a close way for what they or their constituents were anxious to secure. The Asquith bill could have been made law had the Government willed and had the courage of its will. The hope for this latest Lloyd-George bill is in recognition by moderate men of the gravity of the situation in Ireland, the almost continuous failure of the Government to preserve order, and the apparent hopelessness of permanent improvement. Moderate men in control might also make the proposed order workable and, perhaps, a fair success. Such an end, however, all things considered, is much for which to hope.

THE GREATER GREECE.

Premier Venizelos seems to have won a great victory in the Supreme Council. The London Evening Standard states that the Greek claims in Thrace have been conceded in full, while from other sources it is reported that both the Smyrna and Adrianople districts have been awarded to Greece for economic exploitation.

Although not recognizing the full complement of the pan-Hellenic dream, these concessions are as extensive as could have been hoped for even by M. Venizelos himself. They cut off the Bulgarian passage to the sea, extend Greek control almost to the gates of Constantinople and make the Ægean little more than a Hellenic lake.

Whether or not President Wilson will accept this settlement remains to be seen. He has objected to the blocking of the Thracian aisle to Bulgaria almost as strenuously as he opposed the Fiume settlement. It is by no means improbable that he will demand of the Supreme Council in this matter, too, the reversal of its action.

That the Bulgarians will protest bitterly is, of course, to be expected. The decision in regard to Trace deprives them of the most valued fruits of their Turkish victory in 1912-13. But it is improbable that their voice will bear much weight with the Supreme Council. Apparently M. Venizelos has won for his country a great victory, a victory second in importance only to his formation of the Balkan League, a victory which makes Greece stronger than ever before in her history since the days of the Byzantine Empire.

POLAND AND THE SOVIETS.

Word of the preparation at Warsaw of peace demands to be placed by Poland before the Soviet Government, the recent utterance of General Pilsudski in favor of a peace: these things give indication of the progress toward negotiations. In some respects the situation of Poland forms the weakest point in the rearrangement of Europe. The sooner the Polish State comes to a satisfactory living agreement with the neighbor on the east, the better it will be for the European allies counting on this State as their chief friend between the Rhine and the Pacific.

The Bolsheviki appreciate without doubt the fact that to defeat the new Poland would require exertions of quite another order than did the triumphs over the armies of Kolchak, Denekine and sundry scattered leaders of reaction. They do not need Polish territory at this time, nor have they reason to seek to alarm the military democracies into reinforcing the guards along the Polish frontier. Evidently Litvinoff, the Soviet negotiator at Copenhagen, had good reason to make his initial step last January toward the peace which seems now to grow nearer.

The success of peace negotiations, even their initiation, must depend on the evidences that the Bolshevik authorities give of willingness to tolerate a neighbor state differing from their own in political principles. To convince the Poles of their absolute security from any sudden attack or stealthy intrigue will prove more difficult than to meet any specific demands that they may present.

TWO CHILDREN BURN TO DEATH

Said to Have Belonged to Fredericton But Could Not Be Traced.

Nashua, N. H., March 3.—The two small children, Ann and Anita, aged three and four, the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Haskell Snow, of Fredericton, N. B., were burned to death in a tenement fire on the upper part of Factory street, this afternoon, shortly after 5 o'clock. Both Mr. and Mrs. Snow, residents of Fredericton, here less than two weeks, were in the city proper with Mr. Snow's brother, Theodore, and had left the children alone. The couple, who intended to return to Fredericton Saturday, will leave early tomorrow with the bodies of the children.

Enquiries were made at the City Treasurer's office, Board of Trade, D. S. C. R., and other places, but no record could be found of anyone by the name of Snow residing here.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 4—Oils, motors, shipping and equipments infused firmness to the final opening of today's stock market, other branches of the list rising or falling within fractional limits. Outstanding features embraced Mexican and Pan-American petroleums, Texas Company, Marine Pfd., Atlantic Gulf, American International, Worthington Pulp and American and Baldwin Locomotives at gains of 1 to 2 points. Leathers made partial recoveries from recent reactions, but rails manifested further irregularity. General motors assumed leadership before the end of the first half hour, extending its gain to 5½ points.

STATION WRECKED BY A SNOW PLOW

At Derby, on the Bangor and Aroostook railroad a big snowplow jumped the track, swished across the station platform and crashed into the telegraph office. Station Agent Trask and Operator Buck were at their tables when the accident occurred and jumped just in time to avoid the nose of the plow. Two great holes were torn in the station building, which was almost thrown from its foundations, and the equipment and furnishings of the office were demolished. No person was injured.

On the Bath-Rockland division of the Maine Central an extra snow train struck a side hill drift on a curve near Wiscasset post office. The plow was thrown from the track, plunged over a platform at a steamer landing and went headforemost into the river. No person was hurt.

A PEACE TREATY CRISIS IN TURKEY

Turkish Cabinet Resigns As Result of Crisis Brought About by the Peace Treaty

The Sultan Calls Upon Izzet Pasha, One of the Nationalist Leaders, to Form a Ministry—The Turkish Situation Growing in Seriousness Daily.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Constantinople, March 4.—In view of the gravity of the situation the cabinet resigned today. The Sultan has called upon Marshal Izzet Pasha to form a new cabinet.

Izzet Pasha is a partisan of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the leader of the Turkish nationalists. His designation as head of the new cabinet is regarded here as a distinct triumph for the nationalists over the Sultan and the more conservative leaders.

The Turkish situation has been growing in seriousness recently from several causes. The Allied Supreme Council in London has about completed its draft of the proposed peace treaty for Turkey through which the Turks, while retaining nominal possession of Constantinople, are to be deprived of their centuries-long control of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus and lose territory containing approximately four-fifths of the nation's population.

To induce compliance by Turkey and with a view to wielding an influence for the stoppage of the renewed massacres of Armenians, the Allies have recently sent strong naval reinforcements, which are anchored in the Bosphorus so that their guns command the parliament buildings and the Sultan's palace.

Another disturbing factor, and a mysterious one, is the nationalist movement headed by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, which threatens the overthrow of the Government if the Allied territorial demands are complied with.

Discuss Turkish Situation.

London, March 4.—The Allied foreign ministers met today at the foreign office to discuss the details of the treaty with Turkey. Premier Lloyd-George attended the meeting for a time.

After a short session the conference was adjourned until late in the day.

EASTERN CANNERIES TURNING OUT GOODS

Production Started When the Inspector Arrived—Keswick Farmers Interested.

The Eastern Canneries, Ltd. are busily engaged in putting out samples of their products to satisfy orders from the Federal Government departments for inspection purposes, brokers and firms from all over the continent who have expressed themselves greatly interested in the work of the factory.

Since the arrival of the resident inspector, Dr. F. S. Fisher, manufacturing has been started to provide the sample orders, which it is estimated will take upwards of a month.

Inquiries have come from a firm in France who have recently established factories in other parts of Europe concerning the output of the local company. A firm in the British West Indies have also made several inquiries concerning the company, with the object of handling their output.

A party from the Eastern Canneries, Ltd. were the guests of the United Farmers at a largely attended and enthusiastic meeting at Keswick last evening. After the preliminaries of the meeting were over, J. W. Huley, general superintendent of the company, gave a talk on the importance of the canning industry to the country. He stated that the Eastern Canneries, Ltd. need the co-operation of farmers and need their crops, and he urged them to become financially interested in the company and thus reap twofold profits.

J. LeBeouf, the master mechanic of the company, then told the meeting of his experiences in American canning factories, both with the hand-making machines and the canning machines. He urged the farmers to buy stock in the industry.

J. O. Tingley, secretary-treasurer of the company, discussed possibilities of the East as compared with the West concerning the canning industry. He urged the farmers to avoid shipping produce out of the country, but to have the raw material manufactured at home and thus patronize home industry. "To have such an industry as Eastern Canneries, Ltd.," said Mr. Tingley, "the people are morally obliged to boost it and not knock it." He told the farmers present that the Eastern Canneries, Ltd. were well able to handle their produce and asked that they subscribe for stock in the company.

E. E. Brian, managing director, in referring to the ownership of the Eastern Canneries, Ltd., raised the question of who was going to own the company. The farmers, he said, should own it, as they were the people who raised the raw produce, and he appealed to them to join with the company by becoming shareholders.

D. W. Olts, president of the company, told the meeting how he came to join the company. After a good deal of investigation, he stated, he had found the proposition a sound one and the people connected with it honest and all thorough business men. He saw no reason why the industry should not develop and stated that now was the time for the farmers to become interested.

At the close of the meeting a vote of thanks was passed to the various speakers. The wives and daughters of the farmers present served refreshments and the meeting dispersed.

A. E. Freeman, of Moncton, is a guest at the Barker House.

Mother and Three Children Burned

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Winnipeg, March 4.—Word has just reached the city of a tragic fire six miles north of Cartwright, where four lives were lost. As C. W. Brogden was lighting a fire with coal oil, the can exploded and in the conflagration resulting his wife and three of his children were burned. After a terrible struggle the man was able to rescue four other small children in the house. The others were trapped upstairs, where the mother was incapacitated by illness from helping the little ones or herself.

The "wet" vote, however, was not expected to be greatly increased by the returns from those missing counties.

Says Europe is in Danger of Losing the Position She Held In the World Before the War

Premier Nitti of Italy Says There Are Possibilities of Revolution Threatening All the Nations of Europe and that Tension Must Be Relaxed.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March. 4—Europe is in danger of permanently losing the position she held in the world before the outbreak of the world war, says Premier Nitti, of Italy, in an interview printed by the Manchester Guardian today. He points out that Europe is no longer a creditor, but is on the debit side of the ledger.

Public order in Italy is good, says the Premier, and if that country could get her minimum requirments in coal, foodstuffs and raw materials, she would be able to reconstitute herself economically.

"No attention must be paid to rumors about Bolshevism," he continues. "Hard work and moderation are the slogans of Italy at the present moment."

Only brief allusion to the Adriatic problem in the interview.

"We shall find a way out," says the Premier, "and we and the Jugo-Slavs will be friends."

"What, after all, is Italy demanding in the Adriatic? She wants strips of territory the population of which is less than the Italian casualties in the war. Do not confuse issues by talking of secret treaties. The Pact of London was concealed only because of the necessities of the war and, at any rate, those who might complain are, after all, the Italian people.

"There are possibilities of revolution," says Signor Nitti in discussing the general situation, "and these possiblities threaten us all. The tension must be relaxed. How can the vanquished pay indemnity unless their productivity is resotred by allocation of raw materials. It is a great thing we are not going to suffocate the Turk, but will help him to his feet like any other ruined people."

"There should be no more meddling with the internal affairs of one country by another."

DAYLIGHT SAVING TO BE DISCARDED

Every Probability Canadian Railways Will Abandon System This Summer.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 4.—The probability is that the railways of Canada will abandon the daylight saving system this summer. Ottawa, March 4.—Ottawa are champions of the N. H. L. They secured the title by defeating Toronto here last night by 7 to 4. The feature of the play was sensational work of young Vernon Forbes in the Toronto nets, who gave one of the best exhibitions ever seen here.

7TH CONSECUTIVE WIN FOR OTTAWAS

Senators Have Won Eighteen of Their Twenty-Two Games This Year.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Ottawa, March 4.— St. Patricks again failed last night to stop the Senators and the Ottawas are practically champions of the national hockey league.

The only way that Toronto could tie up the race now is for Ottawa to lose its three remaining games, one of which is at home against Quebec, and St. Patricks to win all theirs.

Toronto put up a stubbory fight last night to turn the tide, but the local team got an early lead which the visitors could not overtake and the game ended 7 to 4. It was Ottawa's seventh consecutive victory and their eighteenth win out of twenty-two starts.

Last night's game was played over a beautiful sheet of ice and the hockey was exceedingly fast throughout. The rink was crowded to witness this important fixture.

Despite some of the stories of the terrible depression in Germany, an American horseman who recently came from that country reports a big boom for racing there, as many as 150,000 people being in attendance on some of the "big days."—Boston Herald.

U. N. B. Team Beaten by Acadia's Aggressive Play

Superior Combination Work of Acadia Team Overshadowed the Outstanding Individual Brilliancy of the Crippled U. N. B. Team—Play Off for Brown Trophy at Amherst on Friday.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Moncton, N. B., March 4.—Acadia won the championship of the western section of the Maritime Intercolelgiate Hockey League here last night when they defeated U. N. B. by a score of 7 to 1.

Acadia played a fine brand of aggressive hockey and deserved to win, while U. N .B. was forced to play with a crippled team and did not return to the form shown by the Red and Black earlier in the season.

Acadia won by superior combination while U. N. B. relied upon individual ability. The Wolfville team have been hitting a lively clip lately and appear confident of their ability to keep right on and land the Brown trophy in the playoff with St. Francis Xavier, which will probably take place at Amherst on Friday night.

The third period produced probably the best hockey of the game, both teams playing hard. The U. N. B. team did some good checking in this period, Jewett and Lounsbury being conspicuous. Burgess was the star, his individual rushes being the feature of the game. His performances were well applauded.

Lounsbury Got U. N. B.'s Goal.

Acadia scored one goal in the first period a few minutes before time was called, when Tingley's shot glanced into the net off Flett's stick. In the second period Shea replaced Flett at centre for U. N. B. and Acadia scored three times in this period. Tingley scored after eleven minutes, Ayer scored again two minutes ater and about three minutes before the close of the period Fraser scored another.

Lounsbury scored U. N. B.'s only goal a minute after the opening of the third period on a pass from Lindsay. Tingley scored for Acadia five minutes later and Parker and Tingley again scored before the period closed.

Referee's Work None Too Good.

Jewett scored in the first period on a pass from Lounsbury but the referee blew his whistle after he had scored and called an offside about forty feet in front of the net, although Jewett was about five feet behind Lounsbury when he passed. The decision of the referee in this case did not meet with the approval of the fans. He was very slack in calling offside plays and allowed both sides to kick the puck.

The line-up:

Acadia		U. N. B.
Steeves	Goal	Mackenzie
Parker	Point	Jewett
Fraser	Cover	Burgess
Tingley	Centre	Flett
Rogers	Right Wing	Lindsay

Spares: Acadia—Ayre and Mason for Bearsley; U. N. B. — Shea for Flett, Somers for Lindsay, Shea for Lounsbury.

Referee—Leslie Lowther, Amherst.

BEST PURSES FOR FASTEST CLASSES

Boston, March 3—Brockton fair, one of the biggest institutions of its kind in the country and the mecca of New England horsemen the first week of October in each year, will conduct its races next fall under the rules of the new parent trotting association which is now being formed, and also will give the three-heat plan of racing a trial.

At the banquet of New England horsemen last week Charles W. Leonard read a telegram from Fred P. Field, president of the Brockton association promising his support and giving assurance that the "Lexington of New England" would align itself with the new order of things.

Harry C. Briggs, a member of the Brockton race committee, also announced a basic plan under which the programme will be given, the salient points being that the fast-record horses will race for more money than those eligible to the slow classes and that the sum of $12,000 has been appropriated for the harness events.

The purses at Brockton next fall will range in value from $400 to $1,000. The faster the class the larger the amount which will be hung up. Trotters eligible to the 2.20 and slower classes will race for purses of the first-named amount. The steeds which will be started in events ranging from the 2.15 to the 2.20 class will battle for $600 purses.

Marysville Beat Moncton In Slam Bang Hockey of the Donnybrook Fair Variety

Twenty Penalties Handed Out by Referee "Tart" Titus in Vain Attempt to Check the Slashing and Tripping—Marysville Wins by 7 to 1 Score and Were Never in Danger Despite Self-Inflicted Handicaps.

Marysville won from the Moncton Neptunes last night in a slam-bang exhibition of what was supposed to be hockey but really degenerated into old-time hurley, with slashing, tripping and other illegal tactics predominating.

The final score was 7 to 1 and it was an inferior exhibition as compared with the game of the previous night and was the poorest attraction that has been staged at the Arctic Rink this winter, the Marysville team refusing to play clean hockey and stay on the ice.

"Tart" Titus, the Fredericton team's goaler, was the referee and while he tried hard he proved incapable of controlling a game which needed the guiding hand of an experienced official with a strong determination to show the players he meant business. The Moncton team wanted Sandy Staples as referee, but Marysville stuck out for Titus, with the result that after the game had been in progress for a short time the Moncton management threatened to take their team off the ice, only to later have things smoothed over.

Edgar Wade and Bidlake Starred.

Penalties which scarcely ever exceeded two or three minutes didn't appear to bother the Marysville players once they got a substantial lead, with the result that at times they had only three and sometimes four players on the ice, but kept on hammering away. Aubrey Wheaton, the big defence player and most aggressive of the Neptunes, was the target for most of the attacks, but he kept his head, took a lot of punishment and came up smiling every time with the exception of once, when he was cross-checked and took the count. The rest of the Moncton team also played clean hockey and it was not their fault that the game took on the appearance of a Donnybrook Fair.

In spite of the fact that their excessive penalties weakened their team the Marysville team were never in danger, as Edgar Wade played another brilliant game, both in leading the attack as well as defensively, while Bidlake put up a marvellous exhibition in goal and killed Moncton's chances whenever they got their shots on the net. Milton, who had been Moncton's best scorer the previous evening, was away off in his shooting while Jones, the former Pacific Coast player, was too closely watched to get many chances to break away. Wilson turned aside a lot of shots and it was no fault of his that the Moncton team were on the short end of the score when the battle ended.

Marysville Always Sure of Winning.

The Moncton team had expected a couple of additional players to arrive in time for the game, but they failed to make the necessary train connections, with the result that they got here too late and the visitors adhered to the same line-up throughout game while the Marysville team kept changing their wings and it was the old story of there only being so much hockey that can be worked out of a limited number of players who have to keep in the game without relief. Marysville took an early lead when Clarence Wade scored before the expiration of the first minute's play and wound up the period with the score 2 to 1 in their favor, the Marysville players serving a total of eleven minutes in penalties. "Bingo" Harrison was used on one wing in the second period by Marysville, but he couldn't stay on the ice either and served two penalties; however the Moose added a couple of more tallies to their score and making it 4 to 1.

The third period started off as if it was going to produce some real hockey and Irvine Wade scored for Marysville after Edgar Wade had carried the puck right up to the Moncton net on one of the most thrilling of his hany excursions during the evening, Marysville's next score came when Clarence Wade slammed the puck past the bewildered Wilson as Wheaton was carrying it across the ice immediately in front of his own net, it being a clever bit of aggressive play on the part of the big wing player. Then the game returned once more to tripping and slashing with the brief penalties the inexperienced arbiter handed out serving merely as a license for the players to cut loose. The result was that very soon the Marysville team were playing three men to Moncton's full team, Edgar Wade and Dow Brewer being the only players on the ice aside from Bidlake in goal. Even at those odds the Marysville players held the rapidly tiring visitors in check and with one minute to play, Edgar Wade distinguished himself by scoring again, only to take the edge of his brilliant exhibition by making an uncalled-for attack upon Wheaton, which earned him a penalty just before the game ended.

The line-up:

It will pay you in cream saved from $10 to $15 a cow every year over gravity skimming.

It will give you a heavier and better cream, the kind the creameryman wants, the kind that gives you more skim-milk for your stock.

It will last two to ten times as long as other cream separators. Figure it out for yourself and you will see why the De Laval is the most economical.

And added to it all is the immeasurable satisfaction of owning a machine that "works like a charm" 365 days in the year.

FROM THE PEOPLE

PROHIBITION AND SUGAR.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The recent statements in the newspapers concerning the sugar shortage and the amount that is being used to make candy to supply the extraordinary demand for this sweet [illegible] tition, became a law leads [illegible] whether Prohibition has all the virtues that were claimed for it.

It would be interesting to hear from medical men in regard to the effect this extraordinary consumption of sugar will have on the health of the people. Will it not lead to untold misery in increasing the already too prevalent diabetes and Bright's disease and other diseases of the kidneys, to say nothing of its very harmful effect on the teeth and therefore on the whole system of men? Will not the illness caused and the economic loss be the same as that claimed to be caused by alcohol? I am of the opinion that it will, and also think that any law designed to regulate the personal habits of eating and drinking so drastically that it makes every housewife who does any preserving of fruit an unwitting law-breaker will in the end lead to the gravest kind of unrest. Especially so in regard to alcohol, for the human system seems to demand a certain amount of it, and here we have another reason for the ever present sugar shortage; evidently a great many people are trying to "make their own" and consequently are wasting thousands of pounds of sugar daily.

It is the men who were moderate drinkers upon whom Prohibition falls the hardest and who, never having had a vote in the matter, cannot understand why they should be deprived of a pleasure they never abused. Prohibition as it stands today violates the spirit of the Constitution and smacks of the intolerable days of the ducking stool and witchcraft.

WASTES IN GAMBLING.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I am an enthusiastic reader of your From the People column and feel that it has helped many, so I hope you can find room for this in the column. I would like to know from the readers if I have any cause to feel hurt. What I can't understand is my husband's attitude, why he cannot see that he has done wrong. I am rather inclined to think that he knows, but is too stubborn to admit it.

I have been married six years and am only 27 years old. My husband is 32; I am sure he cares for me, and I love him, yet we cannot live harmoniously. There is constant friction, and it all comes through the misuse of our money. My husband is a mechanic and makes enough money for us to live well and happily if we manage properly. I feel that I would be able to save quite a bit for the future if I could get hold of my husband's wages, but I can't; he neither knows how to spend wisely nor to save, and I have to stand by and see the money go while I go without necessary things, and feel that I would not dare to get sick because I couldn't afford to, there being not a cent to fall back on.

My girl friends criticize my clothes and my house, and I am hurt, but put up a brave front and tell them I was brought up in the country without their ideas of extravagance and show, and that I expect to get such a thing soon, all the while knowing that whenever I ask for anything it is to be given "next week" and that next week never comes.

My husband has stayed away from me many nights, all night and then in the morning would be cross and wouldn't tell me where he'd been. I have nearly cried my eyes out and worried until I felt I'd become mentally unbalanced. Finally I decided I'd leave him and go to work, so I went to live with a family not far from home and used to go home and work after my outside work was done, but it was very tiresome. Soon I became so discouraged I told my husband I loved him, but wanted attention and if he couldn't give it to me I'd get it elsewhere, but I soon found that one has to pay for attention, and get along without it.

Very recently I've learned that my husband gambles. He asks me why I don't come home and when I tell him he ought to know, he says I had no cause to leave, which shows that he is not yet ready to admit that he has done wrong.

I have often wished that there might be some one tactful enough to talk to him, but I know he would be angry, so I thought maybe there might be something in the "column" that would convince him. If some of your readers would kindly write, I'd be very grateful.

Yours,

COUNTRY GIRL.

TO TREAT INSOMNIA.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—To Insomnia, who inquired some time ago for a cure, I would say that several years ago I was troubled with sleeplessness and after trying many alleged cures I stumbled on a real one.

The first step is to remove any cause for worry. Then drink from five to ten glasses of cool water each day; have a light refreshment before retiring, especially a glass of hot milk. Take some olive oil each day with the food. The best way is to place same on potatoes. Lastly, sleep on a pillow of hops, which is soothing and promotes slumber; also try a warm bath before retiring.

I trust that this suggestion will help Insomnia and any other of your readers similarly troubled.

GET DOWN TO FACTS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me a small space in your valuable paper to answer the letter from Chatham signed Anxious.

Now, Miss, you say that he is an out of the town man, and only comes every few weeks; well there is what you have got to work on. First of all, don't take him serious; but get boiled down facts as to his occupation, then his address, then learn something about his people; get him to give you their address and write a friendly letter to them, and then, if you find that there is no trick and you feel that you can care for a man so much more your senior, it is up to you to decide.

But always remember that there are always all kinds of traps laid to snare girls away from home. Then it is that they find their marriage is only a fake. They wake up and find themselves in a den that is worse than Hell itself.

So beware little girl, and find out all you can about this man before you go away from the protection of your parents. I have done quite a large amount of travelling, not only in America, and I know of tricks that trapped girls so easy you would hardly believe it if I were to start to tell you.

WILLING ADVICE.

DO NOT CLOSE CHURCH.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—In answer to about nineteen words on the epidemic from Mother recently:—First, does she (with her husband) attend church regularly, and do really all of her family go to Sunday school? If so, I wonder very much at her commencing her advice to close down the churches, the very first house mentioned in her letter of nineteen words, instead of going to theatres, etc. I am regular in attendance at my church. I am sorry to say we have not enough attendance there. But visit the theatres and other places of amusement and you will find them almost lined an hour before the time of opening. That you will not find on a Sunday morning before the church doors open. My advice is, keep open the churches for prayer to our Great Delfverer, to deliver us from this great epidemic.

Yours,

CHURCH-GOER.

GUARD YOUR HOME AGAINST INFLUENZA

Don't Neglect Treating Cold on Its First Appearance.

The 'flu has again made its appearance and every home should safeguard its inmates against the epidemic. The initial symptoms of the disease are practically the same as those of a cold in the head. Consequently no appearance of such complaint should be neglected.

As soon as the first sign of a cold—a sneeze, a sniffle, running of the nose, etc.—appears, the sufferer should start taking Grip-Fix. This preparation is composed of ingredients which meet every condition of the system created by the complaint. It keeps the system open, relieves the pain in the head and muscles, reduces the feverish condition and tones up the entire system. It acts very quickly, a bad cold being relieved in 24 hours and even a case of Grippe in 48 hours.

Grip-Fix is not a patent medicine. It is a combination of just the drugs which any physician would use, and the ingredients are fully stated on each box. It comes in capsule form, the convenient method for home use, and has a record of years of satisfactory service. A box should be in every home at this time of the year.

You can obtain Grip-Fix from your druggist, where it is sold at 35 cents per box. Be sure and get Reid's Grip-Fix as there is no substitute which will do its work. Get a supply today and be safeguarded should the 'flu come or colds appear.

WOMEN WHO NEED STRENGTH

Should Take Advantage of Their Druggist's Guarantee

That Vinol Will Enrich the Blood, Create Strength, Restore Vitality and the Bloom of Health, or Will Return Your Money

Why will women continue to drag around sickly, ailing, tired all the time, nervous, and no energy or ambition to do anything, when we guarantee our non-secret cod liver and iron tonic, VINOL, to make rich, red blood, quicken the circulation and restore strength, vitality and energy to every organ and muscle of the body and impart the bloom of health to the countenance.

If women would just stop and consider that their weakened, sickly, ailing condition is almost always caused by poor, thin, watery blood and sluggish circulation, and how quickly VINOL enriches the blood, increases red corpuscles and restores old time vim, energy and vitality, we would not be able to get enough to supply the demand.

Druggists know what VINOL contains, and that it is a combination of the most successful tonics known to medicine, Iron, Cod Liver and Beef Peptones and Glycerophosphates. That is why they are so willing to guarantee it to help you or return your money.

TRAVEL SOUTH MAKES RECORD

New York, March 2.—Never before has there been such heavy travel from New York to the resorts of the South as this winter, according to an official of the Pennsylvania Railroad's passenger department. He said that it had been necessary to obtain reservations for from ten days to two weeks in advance.

During the early winter the New York Central and Pennsylvania systems reported an unprecedented travel from the West to this city, and the hotel congestion indicated that the movement from Western points to New York reached its peak just before the holidays. According to the passenger officials, great numbers of these visitors remained in the city until the recent cold snap and then started for Palm Beach, Miami, Aiken, Asheville, White Sulphur Springs, Pinehurst and other Southern resorts.

New Yorkers have joined in this exodus, and the railroads to the Southern resorts have had some difficulty in obtaining sufficient cars and sleeping accommodations for their passengers.

Ottawa Minister Wishes Old Whipping Post Back in Use

Ottawa Church Crowded for Sermon on Marriage—Modern Literature and Movies Condemned for Feeding Young People on Ideas of Affinities.

Ottawa, March 3.—"I loathe all this modern talk about affinities. It is nauseating to me; and yet, your boys and girls are being taught such things as that in the theatres of this city. They make heroines of so-called affinities, while the good old-fashioned virtues are forgotten," said Rev. John W. Woodside, in the course of a sermon at Chalmers Presbyterian church, Sunday night.

"I wish sometimes that the old whipping post, where a man's back was bared and the lash applied, was in existence," said Rev. Mr. Woodside. "We are losing our chivalry. The home, be it ever so humble, is the cornerstone of society, and it is only by arousing a deeper sense of chivalry that we will work out our domestic salvation."

"A Life Partner; Marriage," was the subject of the sermon. It was the second of a series of three, and was one of the most forceful, timely, and interesting sermons that has been heard in a local pulpit.

Man's Wife First.

In a number of scriptural quotations Rev. Mr. Woodside emphasized the fact that a man's wife should be given primary consideration at all times; should take precedence over even his parents. It was one of the most serious subjects that any man could be called upon to discuss. Laying stress upon the importance and sanctity of the marriage vows, Rev. Mr. Woodside deprecated the air of frivolity attendent upon the manner in which many young couples entered matriqiony.

"I tremble as I stand before couples who have no adequate conception of the magnitude and rsponsiblity of marriage," he said.

"One of the discouraging signs of the times in which we live is the lightness with which our young couples enter the married state. Why is his so? it is because our young people are receiving no adequate instruction about marriage in their homes. I venture to say that a large proportion of them have never been instructed in its meaning by their parents, but have garnered their conception of the responsibilities of marriage from all kinds of sources.

Modern Literature.

"The cheap, modern literature, which is so widely circulated today, comes dangerously near the forbidden territory. The trend of the times is such that an author cannot sell a book that does not deal with so-called 'sex questions.' The magazines are eagerly seeking literature dealing most frivolously with things which should be most sacredly considered.

"It is because of the pictures they see that our young people are daily becoming more and more imbued with lightness of conception of marriage and what it involves. I wish I were at liberty to tell about the people who come to me to be married. Some say, 'If you did, you would kill all romance.' Would I? I believe that romance and reason are allied. The young man who gets married without having fully considered his responsibilities is a fool.

Believes in Rmance.

"I am a firm believer in romance. When reason has done what it can, then comes romance. If we had romance and reason combined in our marriages we would be far happier. The secret of successful marriage is reason, conscience, and religion, plus the joyous and adventurous spirit of youth, termed 'romance.'

"People talk about "falling in love.' You cannot fall into love. You can fall into sin, but love is a mountain, and you must rise to it. I am not endeavoring to strangle romance, but for successful marriage you must have a foundation of reason, conscience and religion.

"This is the most serious subject for the young man of which one could possibly speak. Marriage is for life: 'Till death do us part.' When you stand before the marriage altar you take the vows forever. You may change your religion, your politics, but you cannot alter your marriage vows."

Rev. Mr. Woodside dwelt upon the facility with which mistakes might be made in marrying. John Ferguson, the eminent Scottish scientist, had had his scientific apparatus smashed to atoms by his wife.

"I have the misfortune to be married to this woman," he had said, turning to his class, which had witnessed the episode.

Such eminent men as Bulwyer and Milton, the blind poet, had been unfortunately mated.

Home the Foundation.

"The home is the foundation of modern society; of civilization," said Rev. Mr. Woodside. "From the moment of choice begins the pathway of the children which are to come—either Heavenward, or else the opposite.

"I know of couples who would cut off their right hands rather than go through again what indiscreet marriage has brought them to face. Time and again they have come back to me, asking if they might have the bond undone, simply because they did not give the matter the consideration it deserved in the first instance.

"Young men should earn the right to be married. No young man may lead a girl to the altar when he is tainted with vice or debauchery. Be fair with the young woman, I implore young men.

"Born in Hell."

"The 'double-standard' idea was born in Hell," said Rev. Mr. Woodside, "and if you believe there is a double-standard of morality for men and women, you will go to Hell. I have seen men who believed in such a thing. Young man, when you hear of a scandal, think of what it would mean if it were your sister or your sweetheart who was concerned.

"It is the duty of the young man who is to be married to be both morally and physically clean. What do you think of a man who offers himself as a 'victim' of some habit, rather than as a man? If there is a spark of manhood in him he will not make such an odious offer to a young woman.

"A man should also earn the right to be married, financially. The old saying, that 'love is blind,' and that 'two can live as cheaply as one,' are both untrue. But there are many seemingly improvident marriages which turn out to be the very best sort. The whole question financially is solved in choosing the right partner.

Duty to Marry.

"It is the bounden duty of every man, who is not prevented through physical disability, or some other unavoidable cause, to get married. The most cowardly man in the world is he who refuses to get married for selfish reasons. At a certain stage, the physical beauty is what appeals, but choice of a partner upon that basis is not good. The only beauty that abides is the spiritual beauty.

"And when a man is married he should stay married," said Rev. Mr. Woodside. "A man is always the aggressor. It is man who brings the girl to the altar, and swears to love, honor and protect her. What do you think of the man who, in a few years begins to whine, and says that he is not happy. Is that the way he should look upon any business contract. I loathe all this talk about 'affinities.' It is nauseating to me, and yet our boys and girls are being taught such things in the theatres of this city."

U. S. DOLLAR ONCE LOWLY IN CANADA

Present Position U. S. Coinage in Dominion in Contrast to Civil War Times.

Toronto, March 4.—There was a time when the American dollar, today worth $1.17 in Canadian money, could be picked up here for 40 cents. Those were the far-off days of the Civil War, before most of Toronto money magnates had entered the world, and when Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, was a youth in his uncle's private banking office at Hamilton.

During a considerable portion of the period between 1861 and 1865 the American dollar brought 50 cents and even 40 cents. At one time things looked so black for the North that in Quebec the American greenback fell to 40 cents, whereas the Confederate dollar brought 35 cents. Not until about 1879 did the American dollar get to par.

Canada was flooded with Yankee notes during the civil war and private individuals made a lot of money buying them and selling them after peace was declared. The late Cool Burgess, the famous Toronto minstrel of years gone by, is said to have built the row of brick houses on the east side of Upper Simcoe street from the profits he made on a trunkful of greenbacks he accumulated when receiving record salaries on the stage in the United States.

A prominent banker of this city states that there can be no magic cure for the present exchange situation which today has placed the Canadian dollar at a discount of 17½ per cent. in the United States. The return to conditions of pre-war days must necessarily be slow. The idea of inaugurating a moratorium, by which Canadian merchants owing money in the United States could not have judgments entered against them for deferring payments until exchange rose again from its present adverse condition is, the banker declares, impossible unless both the Canadian and American Governments agreed to it.

THE PRESBYTERY OF QUEBEC MEETS

The Delegates to the General Assembly at Ottawa in June Named.

Sherbrooke, Que., March 3.—The March meeting of the Presbytery of Quebec was held here last night. The first session opened with the moderator, Rev. W. T. B. Crombie, in the chair. Commissioners to the general assembly, which meets in Ottawa in June, were named as follows:

J. J. Wright, Wh. Chadah, M. McKay, W. T. B. Crombie, ministers, and T. Cahoon, M. G. Crombie, G. B. Ramsay, John McLennan, elders.

The following missionaries were appointed to their fields for the year beginning April 1st: Rev. M. McKay, to Winslow; Rev. Grover Livingstone, to Grand Mere; Rev. H. Michael, to Marlow; Rev. L. Abram, to Quebec; Rev. Wm. Chadat to St. Damase. The presbytery, after hearing the reports of the convener and superintendent, decided to withdraw from Sawyerville and the property to be recommended for sale to the church trustees.

Benevolent funds were reported in by letter by the Rev. D. Love, calling attention to the increased interest in the aged and infirm ministers' fund and widows and orphans' funds.

At this point the superintendent, Rev. J. U. Tanner, introduced an overture prepared by the Synod's committee and which the presbyteries are sending to the assembly. The overture, in short, is to the effect that in future all payments to the aged fund cease; that all ministers be made beneficiaries; that, on reaching the age of seniority, the retiring allowance be $1,000, and that every effort be made to put the retiring allowance on a sound basis.

DEMAND THE END OF TURKISH RULE

New York, March 3.—Declaring that the Allied Premiers have tentatively planned partition of Armenia, the United States committee for the independence of Armenia today issued an appeal asking for Americans to protest such action and also to demand the end of Turkish rule there. SEARCH ALBERTA FOR OIL AND GAS

Edmonton, Alta., March 3.—Close to 200,000 acres of land in northern Alberta have been blanketed with applications for oil and natural gas leases within the past month, according to records of the local Dominion land office. Since the first of last month there have been 241 applications filed at the local Government office for "petroleum and natural gas leases" as they are officially designated.

MINIMUM WAGE OF $14 WEEK FOR GIRL

Social Workers to Wait on the Ontario Government and Urge Matter.

Toronto, March 2.—A deputation of Toronto residents who are interested in social questions will wait on the Ontario Government and urge that the minimum wage for girls be fixed at $14 a week. Rev. Gilbert Agar, who will be one of the members of the deputation, said:

"Through this law young women should receive such wages as will insure decent living. It has been found that $14 a week is the least amount necessary to cover the cost of board, lodging, clothing and other necessary incidentals."

The Government will be asked to appoint a permanent committee with power to fix, and from time to time to adjust, as it may be found necessary, the minimum wages and conditions of labor for women and girls in Ontario.

DUNDEE TRAINING HARD FOR JACKSON

New York, March 3.—When Johnny Dundee learned yesterday morning that Willie Jackson had scored a clean cut victory over Ralph Brady on Monday night, the little Italian boxer settled down to hard training for his bout with Jackson, which is to be held in Jersey City Monday night. Dundee explained that he had not intended to exert himself training for this battle, inasmuch as he is well under the lightweight limit and is in tip top physical condition.

"But I figure that with Jackson fighting along, he'll be in great shape, and I want to be just as fit as he is," said Dundee. "I hope to knock out Jackson, so as to even the score between us."

GUY NICKALLS TO COACH YALE AGAIN

New York, March 3.—Guy Nickalls, former coach of the Yale crew, arrived here yesterday on the Cunard liner Imperator, to resume instructions of the "Varsity" oarsmen. He was met by Seth Low, captain of the '16 crew, and said that he would confer with the Yale rowing committee at the Yale club as soon as poossible.

He has been abroad since 1914, having served with the Lancashire Fusiliers during the war with the rank of Captain. His regiment went into the lines in July, 1918, and stayed until Armistice day.

CHAPTER XXI.

How Agostino Pisano Risked His Head.

Even the squires' table at the Abbey of St. Andrew's at Bordeaux was on a very sumptuous scale while the prince held his court there. Here first, after the meagre fare of Beaulieu and the stinted board of the Lady Loring, Alleyne learned the lengths to which luxury and refinement might be pushed. Roasted peacocks, with the feathers all carefully replaced, so that the bird lay upon the dish even as it had strutted in life, boars' heads with the tusks gilded and the mouth lined with silver foil, jellies in the shape of the Twelve Apostles, and a great pasty which formed an exact model of the king's new castle at Windsor—these were a few of the strange dishes which faced him. An archer had brought him a change of clothes from the clog, and he had already, with the elasticity of youth, shaken off the troubles and fatigues of the morning. A page from the inner banqueting-hall had come with word that their master intended to drink wine at the lodgings of the Lord Chandos that night, and that he desired his squires to sleep at the hotel of the "Half Moon" on the Rue des Apotres. Thither then they both set out in the twilight after the long course of juggling tricks and glee-singing with which the principal meal was concluded.

A thin rain was falling as the two youths, with their cloaks over their heads, made their way on foot through the streets of the old town, leaving their horses in the royal stables. An occasional oil lamp at the corner of a street, or in the portico of some wealthy burgher, threw a faint glimmer over the shining cobblestones, and the varied motly crowd who, in spite of the weather, ebbed and flowed along every highway. In those scattered circles of dim radiance might be seen the whole busy panorama of life in a wealthy and martial city. Here passed the round-faced burgher, swollen with prosperity, his sweeping dark-clothed gaberdine, flat velvet cap, broad leather belt and dangling pouch all speaking of comfort and of wealth. Behind him his serving wench, her blue whimple over her head, and one hand thrust forth to bear the lanthorn which threw a golden bar of light along her master's patch. Behind them a group of swaggering, half-drunken Yorkshire dale men, speaking a dialect which their own southland countrymen could scarce comprehend, their jerkins marked with the pelican, which showed that they had come over in the train to the north-country Stapletons. The burgher glanced back at their fierce faces and quickened his step, while the girl pulled her whimple closer round her, for there was a meaning in their wild eyes, as they stared at the purse and the maiden, which men of all tongues could understand. Then came archers of the guard, shrill-voiced women of the camp, English pages with their fair skins and blue wondering eyes, dark-robed friars, lounging men-at-arms, swarthy loud-tongued Gascon servingmen, seamen from the river, rude peasants of the Medoc, and becloaked and befeathered squires of the court, all jostling and pushing in an ever-changing, many-colored stream, while English, French, Welsh, Basque, and the varied dialects of Gascony and Guienne filled the air with their babel. From time to time the throng would be burst asunder and a lady's horse-litter would trot past towards the abbey, or there would come a knot of torch-bearing archers walking in front of Gascon baron or English knight, as he sought his lodgings after the palace revels. Clatter of hoofs, clinking of weapons, shouts from the drunken brawlers, and high laughter of women, they all rose up, like the mist from a marsh, out of the crowded streets of the dim-lit city.

One couple out of the moving throng especially engaged the attention of the two young squires, the more so as they were going in their own direction and immediately in front of them. They consisted of a man and a girl, the former very tall with rounded shoulders, a limp of one foot, and a large flat object covered with dark cloth under his army. His companion was young and straight, with a quick, elastic step and graceful bearing, though so swathed in a black mantle that little could be seen of her face save a flash of dark eyes and a curve of raven hair. The tall man leaned heavily upon her to take the weight off his tender foot, while he held his burden betwixt himself and the wall, cuddling it jealously to his side, and thrusting forward his young companion to act as a buttress whenever the pressure of the crowd threatened to bear him away. The evident anxiety of the man, the disappearance of his attendant, and the joint care with which they defended their concealed possession, excited the interest of the two young Englishmen who walked within hand-touch of them.

"Courage, child!" they heard the tall man exclaim in strange hybrid French. "If we can win another sixty paces we are safe."

"Hold it safe, father," the other answered, in the same soft, mincing dialect. "We have no cause for fear."

"Verily, they are heathens and barbarians," cried the man; "mad, howling, drunken, barbarians! Forty more paces, Tita mia, and I swear to the holy Eloi, patron of all learned craftsmen, that I will never set foot over my door again until the whole swarm are safely hived in their camp of Dax, or wherever else they curse with their presence. Twenty more paces, my treasure! Ah, my God! how they push and brawl! Get in their way, Tita mia! Put your little elbow bravely out! Set your shoulders squarely against the, girl! Why should you give way to these mad islanders? Ah, cospetto! we are ruined and destroyed!"

The crowd had thickened in front, so that the lame man and the girl both come to a stand. Several half-drunken English archers, attracted, as the squires had been, by their singular appearance, were facing towards them, and peering at them through the dim light.

"By the three kings!" cried one, "here is an old dotard shrew to have so goodly a crutch! Use the leg that God hath given you, man, and do not bear so heavily upon the wench."

"Twenty devils fly away with him!" shouted another. "What, how, man! are brave archers to go maidless while an old man uses one as a walking-staff?"

"Come with me, my honey-bird!" cried a third, plucking at the girl's mantle.

"Nay, with me, my heart's desire!" said the first. "By St. George! our life is short, and we should be merry while we may. May I never see Chester Bridge again, if she is not a right winsome lass!"

"What hath the old toad under his arm?" cried one of the others. "He hugs it to him as the devil hugged the pardoner."

"Let us see, old bag of bones; let us see what it is that you have under your arm!" They crowded in upon him, while he, ignorant of their language, could but clutch the girl with one hand and the parcel with the other, looking wildly about in search of help.

"Nay, lads, nay!" cried Ford, pushing back the nearest archer. "This is but scurvy conduct. Keep your hands off, or it will be worse for you."

TO RELIEVE CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES.

If you have Catarrhal Deafness or are hard of hearing or have head noises go to your druggist and get 1 ounce of Parmint (double strength), and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar. Take one tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who has Catarrhal Deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial.

WOODSMEN START SEARCH FOR FAMED HUNTERS' GUIDE

"Uncle Henry" Braithwaite Has Not Been Heard From All Winter.

WENT INTO THE WOODS ALONE IN NOVEMBER

Mail He Was to Have Called for in January Has Never Been Touched.

Henry Braithwaite, veteran trapper and probably the best known hunter's guide in America, has not been heard from for several months and parties of woodsmen have lately been sent into his hunting grounds on the Miramichi to see if any trace can be found of him.

Last November "Uncle Henry," as he is familiarly known to scores of the most noted big game hunters of America and Europe, started alone for his camps on the Miramichi to spend the winter trapping and, as had been his custom except under unusual circumstances, he refused to entertain suggestions that anybody should accompany him.

In all the weeks that have since passed not a solitary living being has seen the 78 years old trapper, so far as known, while mail which before leaving he had ordered sent in January to a box he had placed at the point on his trapping trail nearest the settlements outside was still there a few days ago when investigators first commenced to look for the aged guide at the suggestion of relatives here who were naturally becoming uneasy

This week several parties of searchers are being organized and one is already making a trip into the Miramichi woods in an effort to get some trace of Mr. Braithwaite, whose relatives here seem to be about ready for the worst kind of news. "We cannot help but fear that death has overcome him," one of them said today, "but if it has we know that, if he had to go, nothing would suit him better than to have the end come in the woods, where he loved to be."

At the same time many of his legion of friends still hope that the veteran guide will eventually turn up alive and well."

WANT THE G. W. V. A. OPENED TO ALL WHO SERVED IN WAR

Resolution Adopted by Local Branch Would Make All Ex-Soldiers Eligible.

DEMAND THAT HEARST PUBLICATIONS BE BARRED

Renewal of Request for the $2,000 Gratuity Made in Resolution.

The Fredericton branch of the Great War Veterans' Association at a special meeting last night passed a resolution favoring the principle of opening up the organization to every man who was enlisted in His Majesty's forces between August 4th, 1914, and November 11th, 1918, the period of actual hostilities.

The subject is one which has been often debated by the Veterans and up to the present those ex-soldiers who were enlisted but did not leave Canada have not been eligible for full membership, but have been admitted as associated members, although as such they did not have voting privileges. The resolution will probably come before the Dominion Convention at Montreal this month, to which William Richards, chairman of the House Committee, was last night elected a delegate, with John S. Scott as substitute. Comrade Scott moved the resolution, seconded by Comrade Gibson, and it was argued that the adoption of the principle would do much to strengthen the organization.

Another resolution which was adopted on motion of Comrade Richards favored the granting of a gratuity of $2,000 over and above all other gratuities that may already have been paid to ex-soldiers who have served in France, but with the proviso that the cost of any vocational course that may have been given be deducted. This resolution, it was said today, had been carried unanimously by a standing vote.

Another resolution moved by Comrade Barter and seconded by Comrade Hullard was passed, asking the Federal Government to debar the circulation in Canada of all the Hearst publications and any others detrimental to British interests.

INTERNATIONAL INTERESTS SECURE NEW PULP MILL

LARGE ADDITIONS TO BE MADE TO PLANT

The Aroostook Pulp & Paper Co. Mills at Keegan Have Been Transferred.

International Paper Company interests have taken over the pulp and paper plant of the Aroostook Pulp & Paper Company at Keegan, on the St. John river, a short distance above the Grand Falls, from the company headed by A. R. Gould, of Presque Isle, Me., former president of the St. John Valley Railway.

The transfer, which has just been made to the American Realty Company, a subsidiary of the International Paper Company, includes, in addition to the pulp and paper mill, the holding grounds and shore rights of the company along the St. John river on which the mill is located at Keegan, just west of the sorting booms at VanBuren, where there are large lumber mills also on the American side of the river.

It is anticipated that large additions will be made to the present plant. It is reported that these will include a mill for the manufacture of Kraft paper. It is believed that as a result of the increased activities Van Buren and its neighboring section will experience a material boom.

CHICAGO FAKE DRUG STORES TO SELL WHISKEY

Whole Equipment Consists of Talcum Powder With Large Supply of Liquors.

DOCTORS COLLECT AS HIGH AS $7 FOR PERS

Some Doctors Admit They Write from 100 to 200 Prescriptions Daily.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Chicago, March 5.—The "Talcum Powder Druggists," whose equipment is said to consist of a box or two of talcum powder for window display purposes and an inexhaustible supply of whiskey for medicinal purposes, were under investigation yesterday by Federal officials, following the arrest of two physicians Wednesday night.

One of the doctors is said to have admitted he had written from 100 to 200 prescriptions for whiskey daily, collecting a fee of from $1 to $7 per prescription, depending upon the nature of the patient's cough.

Would Salvage Liquor.

New York, March 5—Ship salvagers left last night for Washington to learn what would be the fate of "red liquor" raised from Davy Jones' locker and brought into American ports.

The wreckers declared they were ready to begin operations at once off the Atlantic coast, if the liquor which went down with the "treasure ship" could be brought into an American port and then transferred to another vessel sailing for foreign parts. If the transfer was not permitted, they were willing to have the "wet goods" go into drydock with the damaged vessels until they could put out to sea again.

The liquor laden ships they propose to salvage, the wreckers declare, sank more than eighteen months ago. Their location was kept a dark secret.

PRESENT U. S. TAX BURDEN TOO GREAT

U. S. Secretary of Treasury Suggests Billion Dollar Reduction of Taxation.

Washington, March 5—Arguing that the present tax burden was too great and was having an injurious effect on business, Wm. G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, yesterday suggested in a statement an immediate billion dollar reduction in federal taxation.

Mr. McAdoo proposed that collection of a tax to establish a sinking fund for retirement of the war debt be postponed two years and that the deferred payments of European interest be funded until Europe was in a position to pay its interest charges.

The Collapse of Denekine Resistance in South Russia

CUT OFF FROM CASPIAN FLEET

One Detachment of the Denekine Forces Retreat to Poland.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Honolulu, March 5.—The Japanese government has decided to abandon the Siberian expedition, according to a cable message from Tokio, received today by a Japanese newspaper here.

REMNANT OF DENEKINE FORCES REACH POLAND

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 5.—A large detachment of the Russian Volunteer Army, Under General Bredow, has reached the Polish lines near Kamenetz-Podolsk, says a London Times despatch from Warsaw.

These forces are the remains of General Denekine's corps from west of the Dneiper, which have been without a base since the Bolshekik occupation of Odessa.

The detachment numbers 600 men, mostly of the cavalry, and is accompanied by as many women and children. Almost three quarters of the company are reported to be suffering from typhus.

Collapse of Denekine Resistance.

London, March 5.—The complete elimination of the forces of General Denekine, in south Russia, has been brought about, according to expert interpretations of the war office advices of the past week's operations. With the Reds in possession of portions of the Tikhoretskaya-Petrovsk Railway, General Denekine's only lateral means of communication by which it would be possible to ship troops to the weakened points of his line is paralyzed, and contact with the Caspian fleet is imperilled. The Red cavalry and armored trains now are concentrating on the railway center of Ekaterinodar, making worse this feature of the situation.

The entire collapse of Denekine's resistance therefore is considered a matter of a short time. This, according to the war office, revives the fears of a menace to the British mid-Asian interests.

THE PROTECTION OF RAILWAY CROSSINGS

Hon. F. B. Carvell Says Too Much Protecting People From Own Nonsense.

Toronto, March 5.—"Where in the world are we going to get enough money in Canada to protect every crossing so that people cannot get in front of trains?" asked Chairman F. B. Carvell at a sitting of the Dominion Railway Board here yesterday, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company asked for the removal of "slow orders" on the Riverdale Park crossing.

"I think there is too much protecting people from their own nonsense in this world," the chairman added.

The board removed the order, as requested by the company. The city opposed the application and asked that gates be placed there from 8 o'clock in the morning till midnight.

ANTI-BOLSHEVIK ARE IMPLACABLE

Say They Will Never Be Bound by Any Treaties Made by Soviet Government.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Paris, March 5.—A document declaring "the Russian people will never consider themselves bound by any treaties the soviet may conclude with other nations," has been handed to the Allied Premiers.

The manifesto, which is signed by Prince Lvoff, Professor Paul N. Milukoff, former Russian Foreign Minister, General Boris Savinkoff, and some prominent Russians who were members of the Duma, considers it "will be intolerable that the Bolshevik distribute Russian patrimony in their name."

U. S. UNCERTAINTY WEAKENS LEAGUE

Hon. Mr. Rowell Says Moral Authority of League Nations Lessened by U. S.

Toronto, March 5.—Hon. N. W. Rowell, K. C., president of the Privy Council of Canada, addressing the Ontario Bar Association at its annual meeting here yesterday on the "League of Nations," said that "the delay in the inauguration of the League of Nations is due to the length of time the United States Senate has taken to consider the terms of the treaty, and the uncertainty as to whether the United States will eventually join in the league has undoubtedly weakened public enthusiasm for the league and lessened, for the time being, its moral authority."

H. J. Gagne, K. C., of the Montreal bar, gave an address on "the privy council in its relations to the Canadian system of jurisprudence." He said:

"The general influence of the decisions of the judicial committee of the privy council over our jurisprudence has been beneficent and good. Regarding the cases of Quebec, we have found the distinguished jurists sitting on that high tribunal surprisingly familiar with the principles and the intricacies of our French civil law."

HOUSE TO DISCUSS SALE OF WEST INDIES

London, March 5.—It is expected that the proposal to sell the British West Indies to the United States as a means of helping balance the war debt of Great Britain will be discussed in the House of Commons by Premier Lloyd-George, probably on Monday of next week.

Opinions obtained privately indicate that the proposal would not be considered.

FRANCE TO MAKE NO CONCESSIONS TO HUNS

The French Government Will Not Be Permitted to Modify Claims of France.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

The Hague, March 5.—The draft of Holland's answer to the second Allied note regarding the extradition of the former German Emperor is completed.

It is learned that Holland, while reiterating her refusal to surrender Wilhelm, expressed her willingness to guard him, and also her realization of the necessity of safeguarding the tranquility of the world's peace.

FRANCE WILL NOT MODIFY CLAIMS ON GERMANY

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Paris, March 5.—The French Government will make determined opposition to any revision of the treaty of Versailles that would modify her claims on Germany, it was learned yesterday.

The attitude of the French Government, according to the official point of view, is in perfect accord with the sentiments of the new Chamber of Deputies. It is held that any further concessions by the French Government to Germany would not be tolerated by parliament, and if made the Government would be overthrown.

The French official view of the economic situation, it was stated in authoritative circles yesterday, it quite the same as that set forth in London, that is, that all Europe must be put on a prosperous basis. France, however, it is pointed out, is not in a position to make concessions that would affect her own economic interests to anyone, least of all to Germany.

Prepare Cage at Doorn.

The Hague, March 5.—Holland's answer to the second Allied note relative to the extradition or internment of former Emperor William of Germany will probably be handed Premier Lloyd-George by the Dutch Minister in London this week.

Intimations have been given that the Netherlands Government will express its willingness to guard the erstwhile monarch and prevent anything that might threaten the peace of Europe.

Night and day shifts are working on the Kaiser's new residence at Doorn, and it is reported he will move there from Amerongen on May 12.

While unprotected by high walls or a moat, the Doorn estate is now in reality a 200 acre cage that can be easily guarded, and within which the Dutch Government expects William of Hohenzollern to spend the rest of his days.

Heavy Storms in The Middle West

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Chicago, March 5.—Weather conditions in the Middle States improved somewhat last night and a storm that yesterday swept across the plains States at midnight centered over Lake Huron. The winds that prevailed in the rear of the storm piled out drifts of snow, interfering with railroad traffic in some regions. Relief is expected in the Central States today, with a moderating temperature by Saturday. In the northwest, however, the cold will not moderate to any great extent for the next two or three days, the weather forecast said.

The plan contemplates a Red Cross disaster organization in every community composed of a group of representative men and women.

A Farmer in Politics Becomes a Politician

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Toronto, March 5.—Sir Andrew MacPhail, of the University of Toronto, addressing the Empire Club here yesterday on "The Farmer," said:

"The farmer who is engaged in politics is no longer a farmer, but a politician, and as such will lose some of the qualities of the farmer, which were best demonstrated on his farm."

Prof. MacPhail spoke of the fundamental enmity which existed, and always would exist, he said, between the city and the country.

"The city and the farmer have always been at enmity, and always will be," he added.

An optimism far beyond anything warranted by the conditions had been indulged in by Canadians as to this country's natural resources, Sir Andrew said. As to the forest resources, for every tree cut down, twenty-one were destroyed by fire. The glory of Canada's pine forests had disappeared, Sir Andrew said, and never would be replaced.

Federal Government Replies To Labor Congress Regarding Demands of the Trade Unions

While Recognizing the Right of Industrial Workers to Organize the Government Cannot Concede the Right to Civil Service Employees to Link Up with Trade Federations.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 5.—The Government has made its reply to the requests and suggestions of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress. The most important of the demands were "the right to organize," "collective bargaining" and the "eight hour day or forty-eight hour week."

The right of industrial workers to organize has already been recognized, as the Government points out, but they refuse to apply the principle to Government employees, stating that "it cannot be conceded that public service employees shall be subject to control of any organization or federation of industrial workers, and be thereby involved in industrial disputes."

As to collective bargaining, the Government replies that in the administration of the Department of Labor the Minister has more than once recognized the wisdom on the part of both employer and employees, whether in individual cases or in groups within a given industry, of meeting together and negotiating with a view of settlement of differences existing between them.

To the request for the adoption of the forty-eight hour week, the Government explains, the Peace Treaty, the terms of which the Government has already approved, together with the action of the Labor Conference at Washington, recommends the adoption internationally of an eight-hour day, and the Government will adhere to those terms. It leaves some doubt as to whether the matter is one for legislation by the Dominion or by the separate provinces, a matter which is now being considered.

The Government refuses to place rural mail carriers under the civil service or to interfere in the internal management of the national railways, pointing out that through their railway unions labor can negotiate with the National Railway Board.

Other minor matters are dealt with, relating to military forces, immigration, the housing problem, and so forth. A change which is considered somewhat significant is that there is a departure from the official method in giving a written reply to the requests of the Labor Council instead of the routine reply "promising consideration," formerly employed.

SERIOUS CHARGE OF ILL-TREATING GIRL

Quebec Woman Charged With Atrocious Treatment of Step-Daughter.

Quebec, March 5.—The preliminary investigation in the case of A. Gagnon, wife of Telesphore Gagnon, charged with ill-treating her 13-year-old stepdaughter, was begun yesterday in the court of sessions before Hon. Judge Choquette. The only witness heard was Dr. Marois, who made the autopsy on the remains of the victim. Though the affair is being conducted behind closed doors, it was learned that testimony rendered was to the effect that the child had been beaten on several occasions and had been the victim of atrocious treatment.

New Haven, Conn., March 5.—The directors of the Stanley Rule and Level Company and the Stanley Works, at a joint meeting yesterday, decided tho submit to the stockholders of both corporations a proposal for the sale of Stanley Rule and Level Company to the Stanley Works. The price agreed upon was about $3,000,000.

GERMAN PEOPLE HAVE GONE TO WORK

New York, March 5—Germany is on the way to a great industrial comeback, according to Colonel Wm. N. Hensley, U. S. A., just returned from five months' aeronautical observation in that country. He says Germany and Belgium are the only two European countries that have gone to work since the war.

HEAR CASE AGAINST CANADA GROCERS

Considerable Interest Taken in Proceedings to Begin at Hamilton on Monday.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 5.—The case against the wholesale grocers opens at Hamilton on Monday next, and as there are over 100 witnesses to examine, it is expected to extend over a week or ten days. After the local witnesses are heard at Hamilton, the hearing will probably be adjourned to Toronto and eventually to Ottawa. The charge in the case was laid by the Attorney General of Ontario, and Mr. Arthur Roebuck, of Toronto, will represent the Provincial Government at the investigation.

The case will be tried before the Board of Commerce, the proceedings having been instituted before, though not by that body. The bringing on of this case is said to be not unwelcome to the business interests, as affording an opportunity to settle a number of business problems in which the wholesalers, retailers, co-operative societies and other interests are vitally concerned, but have not been able to ascertain their exact position before the law. Among those problems are the legitimacy or otherwise of agreement on a common price, the fixing of a resale price, price cutting and a number of other things. Until the establishment of the Board of Commerce there was no tribunal available to solve such problems for business people.

THIEVES MAKE ANOTHER HAUL FROM BROKERS

Bogus Messagers in New York Escape With $10,000 Worth of Bonds and Securities.

WORK UNDER ORGANIZED INTELLIGENCE SYSTEM

Thefts of Securities Taking Place All Over the United States, It is Said.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 5.—Two new robberies in the financial district, in which bogus messengers escaped with $10,000 worth of bonds and securities, were reported last night.

These thefts indicate that the fake messengers are working under an "organized intelligence system," according to officials of the surety company, which suffered through the robberies. The fact that the "messengers" possess the information that they do indicate, they added, that "leaks are taking place within the stock exchange houses." Thefts aggregating $200,000 have been reported in the last few days, according to Assistant District Attorney Dooling, who said these robberies were not considered a part of "the messenger boy thefts."

They appear to be the work of trusted employees, he said, who have manipulated the books in brokerage houses. The thefts of securities, Mr. Dooling declared, have occurred from Jacksonville to Toronto, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

SAYS MONEY WOULD BE THROWN AWAY

Former American Army Officer Declares Against Cash Bonus to Soldiers.

Washington, March 5.—That a money handout to ex-service men would be simply thrown away, was the statement made yesterday before the House Ways and Means Committee, by Walter W. Burns, a former artillery captain.

Burns said all demobilized men were employed, and some of them had no idea of the effect of a bonus on the country's outstanding bond obligations. He contended that the satisfaction of having fought to defend the country was sufficient reward.

MILLIONAIRE BOOK DEALER DROPS DEAD

New York, March 5.—Geo. D. Smith, millionaire book dealer and authority on old editions, dropped dead of heart disease in his bookstore yesterday. He was fifty years old. He recently purchased the original copy of Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis" in London for $75,000.

Class Legislation Of Farmer Party

The Member for Carleton, N. B. and His Leader, Crerar, Expound Their Views in Parliament--Hon. Arthur Meighan in a Pitiless Review Cuts the Ground From Under Their Feet and Exposes the Class Legislation That Lies at the Root of the New Farmers Policy.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 5.—Yesterday was a field day in the House of Commons in every sense of the word, three members of a little group at the end of the Chamber being heard from, two of them making their maiden speeches in the House.

Messrs. Caldwell, of Carleton, and Buchanan, of Assiniboia spoke in the afternoon and as maiden speeches, amid new and somewhat overpowering surroundings, they were creditable efforts. The member for Carleton adhered very closely to his notes, and may be said to have practically read his speech, but that is so general a practice in the House, although against ancient usage, that much criticism could not be made of him for that. He made some fairly good points, but on the whole there was nothing striking in his speech.

The new member for Assinabola is of a different type, verbiose, full of assurance, as absolutely at ease as though he were haranguing a Grain Growers "local." He did not have to refer to his notes at all. If he does not succeed in impressing Parliament, and it must be admitted that he did not impress it in his maiden speech, it will not be for lack of self-possession.

Speeches Not Impressive.

Both members impressed upon the House what seems to be the keynote of the new party, and what was afterwards emphasized by Mr. Crerar himself, that there is not a class movement. They rested on mere reiteration to convince the House of this fact, and did not advance any argument in support of it, and it must be admitted that they were not convincing. The main point of interest in their speeches was that they were lining up the opposotion on the amendment of its leader.

The member for Assinabola evidently though he had a message, as he began by asking the House if all could hear his voice "across in that corner." He was rather critical of the way in which the debate had been conducted, and said he hoped to make converts before he was through. He stated that he did not believe in the protective principle at all and never had, a view in which he was not followed all the way by Mr. Crerar, who merely pleaded for tariff reduction. Perhaps a little of the altruism that the speaker attempted to emphasize the House with failed of its effect when he made a plea for some sort of government help or protection for the destitute farmers in his constituency.

Crerar Lays Down Policy.

In the evening the leader of the party, Hon. Mr. Crerar, spoke. He was very labored in his argument and in his style at first, but improved as he proceeded, and on the whole seems to have gained considerable more facility in speaking as a result of his campaigning efforts since the last session of Parliament. He expounded at some length, and in almost the exact words of Mr. Caldwell—in fact, they seemed to have read from the same manuscript—a plank in their platform on which they are laying much emphasis, the development of the natural resources of the country as a means of producing revenue, and the removal of duty from all the tools and implements of production in the basic natural industries of Canada.

Mr. Crerar claimed that if Canada in the past forty years had given to farming one-quarter of the assistance that had been given to manufacturing our wealth and population would be vastly greater than it is.

Makes Extravagant Claims.

He made the rather extravagant claim that the western prairies were capable of producing one billion bushels of wheat annually. He admitted that we would require at least fifty million people in Canada to consume even the wheat we now produce, but he saw an unlimited market for it in the United States in the near future. "It was not the policy of the farmers," he said, "to sweep away the tariff at one fell blow." Tools and necessities of life, however, should be made as free as possible, and that vague phrase, a substantial regulation, was again employed.

Mr. Crerar quoted at great length from United States' immigration statistics to prove that we are actually losing population to that country and thought next census would be disappointing. He claimed that the balance of immigration between the United States and Canada for the years from 1909 to 1919 was nearly a quarter of a million in favor of our neighbors. It may be mentioned that our immigration authorities in Canada do not place much reliance on United States statistics in this respect as temporary visitors to that country are very frequently counted in as permanent residents. After pleading for a fair and just franchise act, with fair and just electoral machinery, Mr. Crerar came to the crux of his speech with the declaration that he would support the amendment of the leader of the opposition, as he felt that the Government had exhausted its mandate and the people should have a chance to elect a new parliament.

Although, as already mentioned, Mr. Crerar has improved in his style and is more self-possessed than formerly, his speech could not be called a well-reasoned effort, though it would undoubtedly have produced a telling enough effect in an assembly where all were of the same way of thinking, such as a Grain Growers' convention.

Meighen's Pitiless Criticism.

How far he has to go before he reaches the status of a big parliamentary leader was shown by the comparatively easy way in which Hon. Arthur Meighen, who replied to him on the spur of the moment, dealt with some of his points. With the pitiless and simple logic of which the brightest mind on the Government side he is a master, he assumed that a class movement would be defined as one originated by a class, and that the farmers were a class. It was a "platform made by the farmers alone, but they were ready to welcome the votes of all who would support it."

He pointed out how Crerar was inconsistent in that he had helped in the out-turning of the Government in Ontario to put in power a farmers' Government, while he "holds back the hand of slaughter" from the Government of Manitoba, which does not contain a single farmer.

Perhaps the best and most straightforward single speech of the debate, which was rather below the average anticipated, was that of Mr. Buchanan, of Lethbridge, a former Liberal, who is still supporting Union Government, who stated that if the Government was ready to say that there would be a census and redistribution, he would take his chances with the Government rather than see the West without the full representation to which its population entitles it for the next four or five years.

An election now would mean that such full representation would not come for several years. While he felt that he had fulfilled his obligation to Union Government he would act as a free lance and avoid an election if possible for the reason given.

The minister said he looked forward to the time when there would be one car to every family in the province.

YOUTHFUL IN BODY AND MIND

Never mind your age—as measured by years. How do you feel? That's the thing that counts!

Men scarcely in their thirties—haggard, listless, weak, nervous—men who take no interest in life, just dragging out a weary existence, all in, tired and worn out. Though young in years they are, nevertheless, old men. Their vital forces are on the wane. They've lost their "punch" and "pep." They feel old—and they look it!

Stay young by keeping your body fit. Keep your nerves healthy and active. Build up your strength and health. Nothing will accomplish these results better than FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1920.

THE LIBERAL LEADER AND HIS PARTY.

It is said that Mr. D. D. McKenzie, the ex-leader of the Opposition in Parliament, was disappointing to some Liberals in his speech on the Address in Reply in that he did not make allusion to his leader's amendment. The amendment called, first, for the enactment of a new Franchise Act; second, a general election. It is quite within the range of probability that Mr. Mackenzie-King does not want a general election before the end of next summer or before Parliament is called to meet in 1921. If he is to be retained as leader of the Liberal party he has a vast amount of work to do before he is ready for a campaign. In the months that have passed since his election to the leadership he has accomplished very little; the records show nothing substantial. He has failed to win the full confidence of his party as leader. His weaknesses are yet plainly in evidence in his everyday movements and utterances. His failure to measure up is quite generally admitted, and the prospects are dismal to those who may have had hope. The party is yet a party of factions, sharply divided in some instances and somewhat mulcishly separated in others. It is a big man's work to get them together, and much bigger men than Mr. Mackenzie-King failed before his time, although not so conspicuously as he has failed, in their efforts to bring the bunches into an harmonious party. The Free Traders and the Protectionists will not co-operate, that is perhaps natural; and there are many Moderate Protectionists in the Liberal following. Personal jealousies are working havoc with intensity greater than ever before. And unfortunately Quebec has apparently been misled into assuming an attitude of defiance of the other provinces of Canada, an attitude which, we trust and we believe, will not have the countenance and support of the thoughtful people of that enterprising, progressive and ambitious province. It would be absurd to think that the Liberal party is anxious to go to the people under such conditions as these. And it will be pretty generally admitted that it is scarcely possible to improve the conditions under the present leadership. It was therefore quite natural that the ex-leader, knowing all these things and aware that they must be of knowledge to the public also, ignored the amendment of his leader, which has been variously criticized as a display of boyish heroics, absurd, and camouflage. It has been said that Mr. D. D. McKenzie is quite resentful of a reflection made in a paragraph telegraphed to the Press a few weeks ago, in which it was intimated that Mr. Mackenzie-King was, up to that time, without salary as leader for the reason that Mr. D. D. McKenzie claimed and appropriated to his own use the entire salary allowance for the year to which the leader is entitled. The fact that the item was made to do service in the Liberal Press was no doubt irritating to Mr. D. D. McKenzie, but it is nevertheless not to be assumed that the publication and the motive underlying influenced the ex-leader to ignore his leader's amendment. The item will be accepted merely as confirming what is generally understood to be the dissensions and the personal jealousies within the camp. It may be true that the Government party does not court a general election under conditions unsettled as they are today throughout the country. A general political campaign in these times would be unwise. Loyal and sincere public men would deeply regret, for obvious reasons, to think that a general election is among the immediate possibilities. But so far as the Liberals are concerned they are not prepared for a contest, and, as a matter of fact, they are neither willing nor anxious to submit to an appeal to the people.

THE JAPANESE ALPHABET.

A letter from Japan to a New York newspaper includes mention of a shortening of the Japanese alphabet as a means to making children's schooling an easier task, at present in course of adoption by Government decree. Heretofore, according to this information, Japanese children had to learn 5,000 alphabetical characters before they were able to read and write. This number has now been decreased by law to 2,600.

The English alphabet has only twenty-six letters. Whether the Japanese language, with one hundred times as many characters, will be a hundred times as influential as the English, doubtless the native speech will continue to be better usage in Japan than English, but elsewhere it must be at a certain disadvantage. As a contemporary says, the very fact that the number of characters has been reduced shows an attempt to modify the somewhat too honorable terminology of the Mikado's realm. Some very "advanced" Japanese wished to discard the old characters entirely and substitute Roman letters. This plan involved too abrupt a change, but it may still be cherished as a theory.

In China the dictionary of Kang-Hi contains 45,000 characters, including many words now obsolete. But the vocabulary of the ordinary man is said to contain only about 3,000. This may be guessed to be about the number of words in common use by the ordinary man. He may know a larger number, but his ordinary speech is carried on with some such limits. As to the English dictionaries—some of them may contain a quarter of a million words, but even in a time of great volubility and many orators it is comforting to reflect that not nearly so many ever get out upon the circumambient air, even in the course of a political campaign.

MR. CRERAR IN PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Crerar is apparently conscious of his inability to get along smoothly and effectively in disguise. His speech in Parliament last night failed to arouse interest other than that which the evidence of his waning influence as a member would naturally supply. If the House expected something new in practical suggestion it was disappointed. The political party service which Mr. Crerar has undertaken to perform under cloak was altogether too apparent in all that he said and in all that he did; it was too commonplace; savored too largely of town council. Whatever of merit there may have been in the United Farmers' political movement must be seriously weakened by the attitude of leaders whose sincerity of purpose is already doubted. It is quite apparent in the country that the movement is fast losing support, that public interest is lacking and public sympathy is relinquishing. There appears to be no doubt that the manoeuvering of Mr. Crerar is responsible for this. Farmers will not submit to a flagrant abuse of their confidence, nor will they permit their interests to be sacrificed to promote the personal ambitions of mere politicians. Mr. Crerar is playing the game of the Hon. Mackenzie-King, and he is not less crude nor less absurd than his Liberal leader. Neither want a general election at this time, and neither has brought to bear, in the consideration of the tariff problem, accurate knowledge of present and future requirements of the country upon which reasonably practical suggestion can be based. We predicted yesterday that Mr. Crerar could not long restrain the impulse to openly identify himself with the Liberal party, with whom he had been closely associated for a number of years. He threw off the cloak, however, readily and quickly, at an earlier period than we set for the performance.

A GRIM FORTRESS LEVELLED.

The fortress of Heligoland, whose great guns and solid concrete battlements held the Allied navies at bay during the war, is now a mass of harmless ruins. All the batteries have been dismantled and the destruction of the harbor works and other fortifications is proceeding rapidly.

This Gibraltar of the North Sea was built at a cost of more than $175,000,000, and was considered impregnable. So formidable were its batteries that the possibility of an assault upon them by a battle fleet was never even considered. Throughout the war they afforded not only a safe barrier for the approaches to the Kiel Canal, to Hamburg and to Bremen, but a base from which cruisers could go out to raid the British coast and submarines to war upon the merchant marine of the world. Heligoland has not inaptly been likened to a pistol pointed at the head of Great Britain.

As this grim fortress was symbolic of the German policy of blood and iron, so, says the New York Sun, will its destruction be accepted as a promise that the old Germany is gone forever. Its black, dreary shores, its ruined ramparts stand as a warning against the ambitions of princes and the folly of militarism. As the merchant vessels of the new German republic pass the island, while plying back and forth in their efforts to build up the shattered prosperity of their country, they should see in its desolate ruins not only the inevitable fruits of the old imperial policy, but a promise that that policy will never again be revived.

Mr. Caldwell, M. P. for Carleton-Victoria, delivered his maiden speech in Parliament yesterday. He wants a new franchise, a general election at once, a new tariff, more public works, less taxation; and, of first importance, he wants to be a member of the next government.

TO RELIEVE SENATE OF DIVORCE COURT

A New Bill to Have Matrimonial Matters Settled by Provincial Courts.

Ottawa, March 4.—Some members of the Senate are evidently tired of having that body used as a divorce court, for Senator Barnard is this year sponsor for a divorce bill which is in the main much the same as that introduced in the House of Commons last year by F. Nichol, the member for Kingston.

In the province of Ontario the court having urisdiction under this act would be the supreme court; in Quebec the superior court; in New Brunswick the court of divorce and matrimonial causes during the continuance in office of the judge, and thereafter the King's bench division of the supreme court. There is a similar provision for Nova Scotia, where the supreme court would eventually become the court with jurisdiction. The exchequer court would have jurisdiction everywhere in Canada, and the chief provincial courts in their respective provinces.

RAW SUGAR MAY COST MORE IN CUBA

St. John, March 5.—Cheaper sugar this year hardly seems possible in view of a meeting of Cuban planters and exporters, which has been called to consider the question of quotations on the raw material. Word to this effect has been received by Senor Armando Lopez, Cuban vice-consul in this city. The Cuban planters maintain that higher prices of machinery and other materials, as well as higher wages entitle them to still higher prices for sugar. The rise in prices in the United States during the winter did not mean that the sugar growers received increased prices accordingly, as much of the sugar was bought when the crop was new and at much lower prices. Large amounts were bought on speculation the planters maintain.

THE MONCTON VETS WANT NO POLITICS

Moncton, N. B., March 4.—The Moncton G. W. V. A. are strongly opposed to the Veterans taking an active part in politics as an organization, according to a resolution passed at their meeting tonight. The local G. W. V. A. also went on record as in favor of the consumption of Canadian-made goods in view of the depreciation in value of the Canadian dollar in the United States.

WEDDINGS.

Henderson-Robertson.

Newcastle, March 3.—The marriage of John Henderson and Miss Hilda Robertson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Robertson, was solemnized last evening at the Baptist parsonage by Rev. E. A. Kirby. The young people were unattended. After the marriage a wedding supper was served at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Bella Brooks, to their immediate relatives. The bride and groom were very popular and received many beautiful and costly presents. They received several handsome gifts from the A. D. Farrah Co., in which company both have been employed. The bride received substantial cheques from her father and Mr. Geo. Coutsi. They will reside in town.

D. B. Flewelling, field superintendent of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, is confined to his home on George street with a heavy cold.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 5.—Additions to yesterday's gains were quite general at the opening of today's stock market, although the rise was again mainly confined to oils, motors, shippings and high priced specialties. The movement was attended by another advance on foreign exchange, preliminary quotations for demand bills on London ranging from $3.60 to $3.63, against yesterday's accepted maximum of $3.58. Advances of 1 to 3 points marked the early dealings in Mexican and Pan-American Petroleums, Texas Company, General Motors, Marine pfd. and Canadian Pacific. Profit taking reduced many of these gains within the first half hour.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR

Here's why the De Laval is the cheapest machine to buy:

It will pay you in cream saved from $3 to $5 a cow every year over an inferior or half-worn-out cream separator.

It will pay you in cream saved from $10 to $15 a cow every year over gravity skimming.

It will give you a heavier and better cream, the kind the creameryman wants, the kind that gives you more skim-milk for your stock.

It will last two to ten times as long as other cream separators. Figure it out for yourself and you will see why the De Laval is the most economical.

And added to it all is the immeasurable satisfaction of owning a machine that "works like a charm" 365 days in the year.

We know that when we sell you a De Laval we sell you a machine you'll be proud to own. We sell them on liberal terms. Come in and talk it over.

FROM THE PEOPLE

TREATMENT OF INSOMNIA.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I do not agree with your correspondent who intimated in last night's paper that worry is largely, if not altogether, the cause of insomnia, nor do I think that his prescription will be the means of effecting relief in the majority of cases. Insomnia is in many instances hereditary, the victims having no cause for worry and are not worriers. It is a result sometimes of physical nervousness, sometimes of the habit which many people have of travelling mentally all over the universe after they retire for the night, intent upon this and upon that, figuring out in the imaginion all kinds of situations. Irritability produced in the consideration of some things which happened during the day is also a cause. Worry affects some people; I would not say many in this day and generation. But the treatment that will serve one case will not as a rule meet the needs of another; you cannot successfully treat all alike. Of our outstanding men Lord Rosebery was probably the victim most harshly treated by insomnia. A man of wealth he had resort to every remedy that medical science could suggest, but without avail; change of climate, change of scene, variety in activities, change of diet, and whatever else was proposed. I have been a victim, and to some slight extent I am yet a victim. I am not given to worry; but unfortunately my habit on going to bed was to travel with some interest in different parts of the world. In hours of bedtime I was awake to years of travel and adventure, sometimes near the mouth of an alligator in the south; other times doing the work in my own way of Cecil Rhodes in South Africa. Once or twice I enunciated the policy of the Government in the British Parliament. On several occasions I took a hand in the affairs of Egypt with amazingly satisfactory results, and so on. The adventures of one night with the interest aroused and the possibilities stimulated the habit, and thrilling experiences kept me awake night after night. A minister of the Gospel, in whom I confided my weakness and trouble, was a close friend. His remedy was that I should devote my thoughts to God and to what He had done for me during the day; to concentrate my mind mildly and affectionately on things of reality for which I should be thankful. And as an aid I should take a little whiskey, not more than three moderate drinks at intervals of about half an hour before retiring. I followed his advice religiously. I am yet acting upon it with beneficial results. I may not get as much sleep as I should, but I am having much more uninterrupted and natural sleep now than at any time within the last twelve years. That has been my experience; other remedies failed me.

Yours,
T. E. G.

Marysville, March 5, 1920.

ALDERMANIC ELECTIONS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Is it not awkward that we should have two elections in Kings Ward to elect two aldermen, one next Monday, the other at a future time? Is the arrangement by which this is pulled off not inconsiderate? Or was it made in deliberate defiance of the recognized order of procedure? I cannot understand how this kind of manipulating is justified. It is all incomprehensible to me. If, as I have heard, it was planned to be of personal service, the whole business should be exposed. Really, Mr. Editor, I think it is time that some serious protest were made against combination control in the city's affairs. We have been sinking pretty deeply, and the manifest disregard of the rights of the citizens shown is arousing a good deal of indignation. I am not interested personally in either one of the candidates but, in common with many of the ratepayers, I think the time is now come when the city's business should be handled openly and above board, free from manipulators who operate in defiance of proper practice.

Yours,
CITIZEN.

Fredericton, March 4, 1920.

THE ADRIATIC.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The Adriatic question should have been adjusted over a year ago without keeping the whole world in a turmoil and without the readjustment and reconstruction which the European countries need.

If we look back to history we see that all the cities and towns involved were Italian for centuries but were taken away from her by the invasion of her territory by Austria, and Italy ever since has been trying to redeem that part.

And after years of war in which she won a great victory against the eternal enemy, the Allies offer an obstacle to Italy's redeeming cities and land that were hers. The Jugo-Slavs never were a nation. They were tribes under the Austrian Empire and fought as Italy's worst enemy when Italy wanted to redeem her lost provinces.

The Jugo-Slavs ought to be content to have a State of their own and to have an outlet through Fiume or elsewhere on the Adriatic and not to take away from Italy the land fought for during centuries and now redeemed.

That the part of the land which Italy wants is populated by Jugo-Slavs is entirely apart from the subject because they were sent there by the Austrians and have no right to occupy a land which never was theirs. In other nations like France or England and the United States, where the population is superior to their own, they have had to submit politically.

Premier Nitti is willing to help Jugo-Slavia to be a free little nation and to establish friendly relations. It seems to me that the decision made by the Allies in January ought to be accepted by all the Allies and ought to finish this Adriatic dispute, which brings discouragement to the whole world.

Yours,
A BRITISHER.

CONSIDERATE OF OTHERS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—In answer to A Woman on the sidewalk rule, in a recent issue of your column, let me say that the sidewalk rule, though unwritten, should be observed as fully as the horse and auto rule, especially in cities, otherwise there is liable to be confusion and delay. One should be willing to accommodate himself to any reasonable or sensible rule when it is for the benefit of the majority, and not consider it a hardship or an interference with personal liberty.

If pedestrians would keep to the right side of the walk they would experience no inconvenience. Besides walking on the left side, girls frequently walk arm in arm and zigzag from side to side, so that one can scarcely pass to the right or left.

Consideration for others in this as well as "other walks of life" marks the true lady or gentlemen.

Yours,
TOM.

CORNER IN MAPLE SUGAR.

Attempt in Quebec District Proved Unsuccessful.

Quebec, March 5.—The recent report published in the papers about dealers and jobbers already being in the field to buy the coming harvest of maple sugar in Quebec district, has brought to light what may be termed a bold but unlucky attempt to corner that product last spring, which turned out, eventually, to the detriment of the capitalists who ventured thousands of dollars in a huge purchase of maple sugar in Beauce district. After paying from 25 cents to 28 cents per pound last spring, for the sugar, these jobbers found a closed market with no profitable outlet for their two million pounds of sugar on hand.

Most of this tremendous supply of sugar is still in cellars and sheds in Beauce district, and of the couple of million pounds cornered last spring, the buyers have lost a good percentage because, as it grows old, maple sugar dries out, thus losing weight.

Further, the buyers have tied up over a quarter million dollars in this purchase and their stock is lying idle, selling by small lots, and at a price that ensures no large margin of profit. At present they are getting about 28 cents per pound.

Ottawa, March 5.—No unionist caucus will be held before Tuesday at the earliest, when message from Premier Borden will be given to members.

TELLS DYSPEPTICS WHAT TO EAT

Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble, say medical authorities, are due nine times out of ten to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. Chronic "acid stomach" is exceedingly dangerous and sufferers should do either one of two things.

Either they can go on a limited and often disagreeable diet, avoiding foods that disagree with them, that irritate the stomach and lead to excess acid secretion or they can eat as they please in reason and make it a practice to counteract the effect of the harmful acid and prevent the formation of gas, sourness or premature fermentation by the use of a little Bisurated Magnesia at their meals.

There is probably no better, safer or more reliable stomach antacid than Bisurated Magnesia and it is widely used for this purpose. It has no direct action on the stomach and is not a digestent. But a teaspoonful of the powder or a couple of five grain tablets taken in a little water with the food will neutralize the excess acidity which may be present and prevent its further formation. This removes the whole cause of the trouble and the meal digests naturally and healthfully without need of pepsin pills or artificial digestents.

Get a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia from any reliable druggist. Ask for either powder or tablets. It never comes as a liquid, milk or citrate and in the bisurated form is not a laxative. Try this plan and eat what you want at your next meal and see if this isn't the best advice you ever had on "what to eat."

MAINE MURDER CASE RETRIAL IN APRIL?

Burke's Case Will Be on Docket But May Be Carried Over to September.

Skowhegan, Me., March 5.—The retrial of John A. Burke for the murder of Nelson W. Bartley will be in order at the April term of the Somerset Supreme Court which convenes here April 6, with Justice George Hanson, of Calais, presiding.

It is possible, however, that the state and defence may want more time to work up the case than this would give, and regardless of the fact that delay would keep the accused in the Somerset county jail all summer, until the September term of court, it is considered possible that the counsel for the defence might be the first to ask for a continuance of the trial to the later date.

It is not considered necessary to have the second trial take up more than three or four days as the testimony will be shortened and confined to most important points of the case. Meantime there will be some scurrying round to unearth something new and decisive.

Canada's Biggest Industry is Manufacture of Food Products

The Interdependence of Agriculture and Industry Exemplified in a Striking Manner—Large Capital Invested in Various Industries.

No more striking examination of the interdependence of agriculture and industry has appeared recently in Canada than that contained in a special article on "From Farm to Table," contributed to the Industrial Number of The Grain Growers' Guide, by Mr. Thomas W Fraser. "Our biggest single industry in Canada, by far," says Mr. Fraser, "is the manufacture of food products; and no less than 20 of the 27 groups of food products enumerated in the list of which the Dominion Department of Statistics takes cognizance, draw their raw material in whole or in part, from the farms of Canada."

Dealing with food products from wheat, including bread, biscuits and confectionery; flour and grist mill products; prepared foods; ice cream cones, macaroni and vermicelli, Mr. Fraser submits the following interesting statistics from each group:

Bread, biscuits and confectionery—The number of establishments manufacturing such products in 1917 was 2,026; capital employed, $35,538,738; employees, 18,327; wages paid, $13,104,365; cost of materials, $44,201,470; value of products, $77,223,581.

Flour and gristmill products—Number of establishments, 1,098; capital employed, $72,573,982; employees, 6,914; wages paid, $6,292,797; cost of materials, $183,586,936; value of products, $224,191,735.

Prepared foods—Number of establishments, 8; capital employed, $457,267; employees, 144; wages paid, $80,038; cost of materials $140,795; value of products, $443,022.

Macaroni and vermicelli—Establishments, 9; capital, $704,380; employees, 104; wages, $101,689; cost of materials, $545,263; value of products, $1,006,750.

A recapitulation of the statistics for the wheat group of industries gives the following results: Establishments, 3,161; capital, $109,799,493; employees, 25,693; wages, $19,746,900; cost of materials, $229,110,468; value of products, $304,008,890.

Establishments	70	66
Capital	$13,746,271	$ 74,909,656
Wages	2,406,571	9,983,647
Cost of materials	34,631,818	140,331,249

Continuing, Mr. Fraser says: "Butter and cheese stand third on the list of farm food products, the value for 1917 being put at about $85,750,000, as compared with $37,250,000 in 1910 and $56,250,000 in 1915. . . . An article which has made great advance in product, and particularly in export, in recent years, is condensed milk and cream. In 1910 our total production of this was valued at only $1,814,871. In 1917 this had increased to over $8,000,000 and since that time there must have been a very heavy further increase, as the exports alone for the year 1919 were considerably over that amount, and Canada is a large domestic consumer.

"Another Canadian farm food product, the supplies for which are raised almost entirely in the eastern provinces, is canned fruit and vegetables; and along with this we may consider jams and jellies, maple syrup and sugar, and evaporated fruits and vegetables. The resepective statistics for those articles for the periods which we have been considering are as follows:

Fruit and Vegetable Canning—	1910	1917
Establishments	82	118
Capital	$5,512,474	$ 8,354,097
Wages	915,008	1,361,707
Cost of materials	2,295,703	10,463,221
Value of products	5,971,082	16,385,964

Evaporated Fruits and Vegetables—	1910	1917
Establishments	65	49
Capital	510,065	1,300,779
Wages	116,715	470,478
Cost of materials	171,593	1,162,757
Value of products	448,929	2,470,344

James and Jellies—	1915	1917
Establishments	12	31
Capital	776,571	2,752,600
Wages	127,594	394,617
Cost of materials	515,895	1,783,769
Value of products	934,286	2,997,782

MARY PICKFORD IS VERY MUCH ALIVE

Report of Movie Star's Divorce This Week Disproves Story of Her Death.

Reno, Nev., March 5.—Mary Pickford, motion picture star, who has been granted a divorce from Owen Moore at Minden, a small town near Carson City, on grounds of desertion, has been at the Campbell ranch at Genao nearby since Feb. 15. She was accompanied to the court room by her mother, Mrs. Smith, and she wept freely while testifying. Moore was not in court, though he was at Minden on Monday.

Miss Pickford told the court that Moore had deserted her on several occasions and only had returned in response to her pleas, but that a year ago he left her and ever since has refused to return.

Immediately after obtaining the decree she went back to the ranch where she has been living. She said she was seeking a quiet place to live and intended to stay near Minden for a long time and to make the state her permanent home.

Moore arrived at Virginia City on Sunday night with a camera man, saying he intended to take some snow scenes for a coming picture, but he could find no hotel accommodations, so he drove down to Minden in a machine and was served with the papers while at lunch the next day. The ranch where Miss Pickford is staying is on the outskirts of the deserted town of Genoa, first settled by the Mormons in 1847 but now with scarcely an inhabitant.

Miss Pickford is out of reach of the telephone.

Reports had been widely circulated recently that Mary Pickford was dead.

HOT WATER BAGS UNDER SUSPICION

Almost Everybody Violates the Dry Law, Says Mr. Igoe.

Washington, March 5—Nearly every person in the United States already has violated the prohibition law, according to Representative Igoe of Missouri, who recently read the following formidable list of law violators:

Any farmer who has cider containing in excess of one-half of one per cent. of alcohol and which acquired this excess either naturally or artificially since Jan. 17, 1920.

Any housewife who has made any kind of a beverage since Jan. 17 containing more than one-half of one per cent.

Any one who makes beer in his home containing one-half of one per cent of alcohol or more.

Any one who has an intoxicating beverage anywhere save in his home and has not reported it to the commissioner.

Any one who has in his possession any formula or substitute designed or intended for use in making beer or wine or brandy.

Any one who carries a drink even from his home and from a supply he may lawfully have.

Any one who buys a drink.

The reading of this list was too much for Mr. Igoe and he gave way to sarcasm, closing his statement with this:

"I read yesterday that a man in Virginia was arrested for having on his person a hot-water bottle full of whiskey. I suppose the inspectors will now have to inspect all the hot-water bottles in the country. This dangerous perversion of the use of hot-water bottles must stop. Perhaps it might be well to make it a crime to have a hot-water bottle anywhere except in one's home. I shal have to talk to my friend from Minnesota about this."

Mr. Volstead is a representative from Minnesota.

NEW JERSEY FILES PROHIBITION SUIT

Asks the U. S. Supreme Court to Declare Null and Void Prohibition Amendment.

Washington, March 4.—The State of New Jersey, through its Attorney General, today filed in the United States Supreme Court its suit seeking to have the constitutional prohibition amendment declared null and void and to prevent enforcement of the Volstead Act. J. A. Lanigan, Assistant State Attorney General, has asked for an early hearing.

The bill of complaint sets forth that the amendment was improperly drawn, that in 21 states the legislatures have not ratified it as provided by their state constitutions, and that there is no power in congress to propose a constitutional amendment regulating the habits and morals of the people. It recites further that the amendment is a legislative and not a constitutional matter, and that as such it was improperly passed.

Complaint also is made that the amendment establishes a centralization of power and authority without the consent of the people of the State of New Jersey and state it is a violation of their sovereign rights. The Volstead Act having been enacted under authority of the 18th amendment, the petition says, it is itself null and void.

In conclusion, the complaint declares that if the amendment is valid the right of the federal congress to legislate under it is restricted to matters relating to "the external concerns of the United States and within the peculiar domain of the federal Government to regulate commerce among the states," and that the state alone has the power to enforce the act within its own borders.

CONCRETE BLOCKS IN HOUSE BUILDING

Decidedly Interesting Feature of the Glasgow Housing Exhibition.

[Town Planning and Conservation of Life.]

One of the most interesting features of the Glasgow Housing Exhibition is the concrete outfit which was responsible for the building of the "Mystery Port" during the war.

There are in actual operation several machines used in the construction of concrete houses. The machine makes sufficient blocks and slabs in 3½ days for a two story cottage covering an area of 400 square feet. There are other machines for various features of the work, such as a pressure machine specially designed for light labor and small housing schemes, a chain spade concrete mixer with 2½ h. p. paraffin engine, a stone breaker, which crushes the hardest rock down alomst to graded sand, and a roofing tile machine ensuring tight, waterproof roofs.

The Scottish Local Government Board, in its official report published in July, 1918, states that the following methods of construction have been adopted for the outer walls:

(1) 11-in. cavity walls formed of two 4½-in. brick with a 2-in. cavity, the walls being bound together with galvanized iron ties.

(2) 9-in. cavity walls formed of two 3-in. concrete slabs built similarly to (1).

(3) 4½-in. brick walls with 9-in. brick piers at intervals.

(4) 2½-in. concrete slabs with 9-in. concrete piers at intervals.

The last two modes of construction have been adopted only in single story types of houses.

Regardnig this special type of house construction, as demonstrated at the exhibition, it is claimed that it is absolutely bone dry, the cavity wall, like a thermos flask, retaining the interior heat and excluding that from outside, with the result that a house so built will not only be healthier and more permanent than that erected with any other material, but cool in summer and warm in winter.

New York, March 4.—Ochiya Kumagee, of Japan, who was ranked at number three last year in the first ten, is doing his lawn tennis championship hunting early this season. He is now playing in the Florida state title tournament and looks to be an almost certain winner.

CONTRACTOR SUES HOULTON MASONS

Portland, Me., March 5—Suit for $6,000 has been brought by Meguier & Jones Company, of Portland, against Monument Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, of Houlton, and also J. Alton Hallett, also of Houlton, to recover on an unpaid account claimed to have been contracted in connection with the erection of a new Masonic building in Houlton. The plaintiff company claims that it delivered certain goods to the defendant at Houlton to the value of $3,973 in October of 1918, and that the defendants have never paid the same, with the ad damnum set at $6,000.

Charles Wilson, making his way toward the water-cooler in a car on the Tyrone & Clearfield Railroad, in Pennsylvania, was nearly upset by a jolt of the car, and brought his foot down on the old floor of the antique coach so hard that his leg went right through the floor, breaking the hose of the ancient air-brake, and stuck there. The train stopped instanter, when the brakes went on, and it took the train crew half an hour to get Charlie's leg out of the hole in the floor, because he objected to having it amputated. The leg is made of hickory.

White Terror Still Existent In Hungary and Authorities Are as Autocratic as of Old

Disappearance of Journalists From Budapest Who Had Aroused the Displeasure of the Ruling Class—Their Bodies Later Found in the Danube Canal Covered With Wounds.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 5.—"Hitherto I have refrained from reference to certain incidents in Budapest, from a desire to avoid attaching too much importance to what after all might be only the last flicker of a dying revolution," says the London Times correspondent in Vienna, in a despatch dated Wednesday.

"In the light, however, of two fresh incidents this week, it is impossible not to feel that the situation is very far from normal. The disappearance of two Budapest journalists, Somozyi and Bacso, belonging to the social democrat organ Nepszava, whose bodies, covered with wounds, were discovered in the Danube Canal, drew indignant denials of complicity from other parties in the chamber and a promise by the government to bring the murderers to justice. This has not yet been done, though it is rumored the government is well aware the crime was the work of certain officers and soldiers of the so-called officers' detachment billeted in several of the big hotels of the city. Some of the guilty are said actually to have been arrested, but later released owing to the threatened attitude of their comrades.

"As though this evidence of white terror were not sufficient, the elements in question surrounded parliament on the day of the election of Admiral Horthy as Regent and refused to allow the finance minister and another deputy to pass their cordon. One hundred and fifty officers pressed into the lobbies, and even into the oath-taking hall. To crown it all, the war minister, a social-democrat, was fired upon while driving home. The would-be murderer escaped."

ITALIAN PREMIER MUST WALK WARILY

The London Times Does Not Despair of Settlement of the Adriatic Problem.

London, March 5.—In an editorial dealing with the departure from London of Signor Nitti, the Italian Premier, and the troubles he likely will find at home, the London Times says today:

"In such a state of public feeling the Italian Premier will have to walk warily, particularly if he reaches Rome without having effected a settlement of the Adriatic question. We do not despair of such a settlement by mutual agreement, even now at the eleventh hour, despite the ill-judged passion with which the whole subject appears to be treated in Rome."

FREIGHT RATES WERE DISCUSSED

Alleged Discrimination Against the Maritime Provinces Taken Up.

Mayor-elect John A. Reid presided at a conference which was held at the Board of Trade rooms yesterday afternoon when local manufacturers, lumber shippers and members of the Board of Trade discussed freight rates and transportation problems generally with G. B. Ruickby, of Toronto, rates expert of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and H. Thompson, of Amherst, N. S., secretary of the Maritime branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

President Reid as chief officer of the Board of Trade explained the object of the meeting, referring to the importance to industrial and other development that there be favorable freight rates, and C. Fred Chestnut, who through his experience of about thirty years as member and chairman of the transportation commitee of the Board of Trade is conversant with the situation, discussed the charges of discrimination at some length.

Mr. Thompson in addressing the meeting explained the purpose of it and stated that at several points in the Maritime Provinces he had visited manufacturers had stated that if they could not get relief on the freight rates upon raw material and manufactured goods they would have to close down their business and remove to some other part of Canada, claiming the rates were such a burden upon the business. One man who owned a large factory in New Brunswick, the speaker stated, had been very emphatic about the matter and said that he and his associates would move out and establish in Ontario if nothing could be done to lower the present rates.

V. A. Harshaw, superintendent of the Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Co., stated that while the railways naturally wanted business and as high rates as posible, he did not think that they wished to hurt their own business indirectly by injuring that of the manufacturers and thus the general business of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Ruickby spoke briefly, saying that he was attending such meetings throughout the province to find out the ideas of the manufacturers and others concerning the freight rates question.

The meeting was of the opinion that a committee of five members be appointed by the chair at a later date to formulate the ideas of the local situation and make them ready for presentation at a proposed conference to be held in this province of manufacturers and representatives of the Maritime Boards of Trade.

In addition to local manufacturers there were present at the meeting A. D. Ganong, of Ganong Bros., St. Stephen, and Manager Graham of the Canadian Cottons, Limited, mill at Milltown.

Chief Harry Rutter of the Fire Department is acting for City Clerk Geo. R. Perkins in completing the arrangements for the election and announced this morning that there would be one special poll for returned soldiers and they would all be compelled to vote at City Hall, irrespective of the section of the city in which they reside. There are more returned soldiers in the city than there are electors listed for any one of the six regular polling booths and there doesn't seem to be any good reason why ex-soldiers should be put to any more inconvenience to vote than any other electors.

The complete list of returning officers and poll clerks to carry on the election was announced by Mr. Rutter this morning as follows:—

City Hall.

A to F—Walter McKay, returning officer; Alex. Fleming, poll clerk.

Prussians Had Organized a German-Irish Alliance in U. S. With a View to World War

Sir Horace Plunkett Refers to American Feeling on the Irish Situation—Want Ireland to Have Self-Government but Do Not Uphold a Republic.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Dublin, March 5.—Sharp criticism of the new Irish Home Rule bill was expressed by Sir Horace Plunkett, chairman of the Dublin convention, at a "welcome home" dinner given in his honor here last night by the Irish Dominion League.

Sir Horace declared that from 1911 the Prussian Government was organizing a German-Irish alliance in United States politics with a view to the coming attack upon the world's freedom.

"I have not the least doubt that, supposing the Irish trouble had nothing to do with the beginning of the war, it was an important factor in delay in America's decisive participation in the struggle. I remember the question being actually raised whether the American navy could wisely utilize Ireland as its base of operations.

Enmity to England.

"Ireland has become increasingly during the last decade the final proof to every enemy of England and America that British aims in war and peace are mere hypocricies where they profess to have any regard whatsoever for the liberty of small nationalities.

"In America I found more bitter anti-English than in all my forty years of observation. As usual, although due to many other causes, it was tangled up with the Irish trouble, and was generally expressed in what I may call Irish terms. Americans do not bother themselves with details. They want Ireland to have as large a measure of self-government as is consistent with the safety of the British Empire, for which they in calmer moments recognize they are almost as much concerned as are the British. They wish to give the minority, particularly Ulster, ample security from any possible, even if improbable, oppression by the majority of the Irish people who differ from Ulster in economic outlook.

Criticizes Home Rule Bill.

"In my judgment America does not want Ireland to be an independent republic, but until the British government ceases to break its promises to Ireland, the sentiment of America will be that the Irish people are justified in asking anything they like."

Sir Horace criticized the Home Rule bill because it gave Ulster and a minority of not more than one-fifth of the Irish people a "virtual mandatory over Ireland, a mandatory without responsibility."

"If the southern parliament took the trouble to be born," he concluded, "it would probably christen itself a republic and be immediately carried out by its indignant nurse. Ireland would then present, as a monument to British statesmanship, the spectacle of martial law over the greater part of a country that demands Home Rule, and Home Rule in the northeast corner, which never asked for it."

St. Catharines, Ont., March 5.—Dr. Kisler, of this city, whose auto was smashed by a Niagara-St. Catharines and Toronto railway car at Niagara Falls last November, and the doctor injured so badly that he was laid up for six weeks, and who sued the Niagara-St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company for damages, was awarded $5,000 at the assizes here yesterday.

The Transportation Difficulty Solved

MR. FARMER:—

Cover a mile quickly and you save money. You are not covering ground while you hitch your horse. You are not covering ground when you feed your horse. On the contrary, you are adding to your overhead—to the expense that brings no returns.

When you feed an automobile you get mileage. When you get no mileage you do not feed it. Therefore it is easy to see that an automobile is an economy.

A good, dependable car—one which can be relied upon to take you safely and speedily back and forth between your home and the city—this is your solution of one of the greatest business problems of today, the problem of doing things on a big scale and doing them quickly.

When considering what car to buy, don't be guided solely by the first cost. Make a thorough study of all cars.

Compare the front and rear axles, steering gear, frame, transmission and differential gears, bearings, motor and the mechanical construction, and pick out the one which embodies the highest grade materials at the most reasonable price.

Compare this car with cars selling for even $500 more and you will agree that the new OVERLAND is the cheapest car to buy.

We will POSITIVELY GUARANTEE DELIVERY of your Overland by May 1st, if you place your order before March 15th.

PAT MORAN GOES AWAY MINUS GROH

Captain of Wo[illegible]'s Champions Refuses to Accept $10,000 Salary.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Cincinnati, March 5.—Manager Pat Moran, with a squad of players of the champion Cincinnati National League baseball club, boarded a train here this morning for Miami, Florida, where spring training will begin next Monday. The squad will be joined at Atlanta by Ivy Wingo and Rube Bressler. All the other players will join the team at camp early next week, going there directly from their homes.

Refusal of Infielder Heinie Groh yesterday to attach his signature to a $10,000 contract resulted in his being left behind. Groh insisted upon receiving $11,000 and declared he would not play ball this year unless his terms were met, while officials of the club asserted firmly they would not yield an inch. There is a lurking suspicion that Groh would like to end the controversy and join his teammates in the south, but Mrs. Groh absolutely refuses to let him go unless Garry Herrman offers her little Heinie more money.

Sussex Eastern Leaguers Coming to Fredericton

First Chance for Fans to Size Up Eastern And N. B. H. L. Teams

TO PLAY PICKED TEAM ON MONDAY

Fredericton is Likely to Have Strong Team for North Shore Trip.

The hockey is not over by a long shot.

Arrangements were completed yesterday afternoon for the Sussex Eastern League team to play here next week.

Manager George M. Beatty of the Arctic Rink has been carrying on the negotiations and so far he had been able to arrange for one game on Monday night when a picked team of Fredericton and Marysville players will meet the Eastern Leaguers. He hopes to be able to have the visitors stay over for a game Tuesday night with the Marysville N. B. H. L. team.

It is quite some time since a Sussex senior team played in Fredericton, not since the days of the old N. B. H. L. when Sussex used to have a nifty team that was always up in the running but was handicapped by having a small rink upon which to play their home games. This year Sussex has been in the Eastern League and against the Moncton Victorias and Amherst Ramblers, the fastest hockey agregations in the East this year, they performed creditably.

The visit of the Sussex team is the result of popular demands made by local fans who want an opportunity of comparing the strength of the N. B. H. L. and Eastern League teams. It will be remembered that recently one fan wrote to The Gleaner suggesting that, inasmuch as neither the Moncton Victorias nor Amherst Ramblers were available for various reasons, the Sussex team be secured for the inter-league test and the suggestion caught on at once with hundreds of fans so that Manager Beatty got in touch with the Sussex people over the telephone yesterday.

The North Shore Trip.

Arrangements have been about completed already for the Fredericton team's trip to the North Shore next week for the concluding games of the New Brunswick Hockey League.

The local team will leave here either Tuesday night or Wednesday morning, playing Chatham on Wednesday evening and Bathurst on Thursday night, both games being at Chatham. The possession of the Chestnut Cup depends upon the outcome of the game, the championship coming to Fredericton if the locals win both games, whereas one defeat for Fredericton will make Chatham the trophy holders, while one drawn game means a playoff between Fredericton and Chatham.

"Tart" Titus, captain of the Fredericton Hockey Club, has been getting his players in line for the trip and the chances are the Fredericton team will have plenty of spare players and somebody whose business it will be to direct the play and handle the changing of local players and other necessary details. The suggestion has been made that if Irvine Wade, who is eligible under the loosely drawn N. B. H. L. governing laws, goes along with the Fredericton team the best combination would be to use him at centre most of the time and let Billy Lounsbury, Eddie Colwell and Archie Williams be used exclusively as forwards too, with Bert Burgess available for either the defence or forward line wherever the speed of the versatile little player would prove the most effective. It would be a puzzling combination—working like a pitcher's change of pace in baseball—and if Barnett, the former U. N. B. star, is in shape he would help out on the locals' defence, too, with "Patsy" Jewett, if Rufus Jarvis isn't going any better than he was the other night against Moncton. Titus should be the only player of the local team compelled to play through both games of such an important trip if the best results are to be obtained and the players are to have a chance to show their best form.

Irrespective of the outcome of the games next week the Chatham team will probably play here on March 15th and 16th against Fredericton and Marysville, but no later dates are being alotted because of the uncertainty of the weather.—J. D. B.

Boston is all excited over the report that the Red Sox may be bought by the Holland Bros., Boston men who before Prohibition conducted the chain of liquor stores known as the Holland System. Approximately $1,000,000 is concerned and a change from the Frazee control to Boston ownership would be decidedly popular.

Headed by Bert Lint, the local horsemen have been putting forth some herculean efforts to have the winter track at the Trotting Park put in shape again. The past month has been a tough one on the horsemen, but they have battled gamely against discouraging conditions to keep the track open.

Art McWha, and "Friday" Holt, who were here with the St. Stephen curlers, were among the Border Town's brightest hockey stars some years ago. They used to play in the days when "Deacon" Babbitt, Sandy Staples, Charlie Allen and Chauncey Coleman used to be among Fredericton's idols.

The U. N. B. basketball team made a brilliant showing on their trip to Halifax and their feat of winning from both Y. M. C. A. and Dalhousie there on successive nights has done a lot to take the sting off the hockey team's unfortunate dilemma. According to private information coming from Halifax the U. N. B. quintette got the short end of the decisions from the referee on the first night of their stay in the Nova Scotia capital, but Captain Gregory Bridges and his men battled their way through to victory and then came back stronger than ever against Dal the next night. It would look as if the basketballers had corralled the share of aggressiveness—the old pep—that belonged to last fall's football team and this season's hockey combination at U.N.B. —J. D. B.

Acadia and St. F. X. Play At New Glasgow Tonight

Deciding Game for the Brown Trophy Between the Winners of the Two Sections of the Inter-Collegiate Hockey League —Moncton Paper Praises Burgess and McKenzie.

The U. N. B. hockey team returned this morning from Moncton, where they had played Acadia, who won the western section of the Intercollegiate League and are now due to play St. Francis Xavier College at New Glasgow, N. S., tonight for the Brown Trophy.

A Moncton View of the Game.

The Moncton Times, in its story of the U. N. B.-Acadia game, says:

"At no time was the issue in doubt and even when Acadia was playing five men against U.N.B.'s six, play for the most part was in the Red and Black's end and at that Acadia scored. With the exception of the last few minutes of play, the game was quite clean. The Fredericton six played the cleaner hockey for the first two periods, but in the dying session, when there wasn't a chance to overtake Acadia's lead, they settled some grievances which had been piled up against them during the early stages. They escaped being penalized while Acadia had four penalties handed out. Lester Lowther handled the game in a conscientious manner, but he was not sharp enough, both teams getting away with quite a bit of offside play which encouraged loafing. Then again he was not strict enough in watching rough play, and in one case only warned a player for cross-checking, whereas he should have had a major penalty. Had the game started out the way it ended it would have been more of "get the man" instead of playing the puck, which does not make good hockey.

Burgess and McKenzie the Stars.

"Burgess was the unanimous pick as last evening's star, and as far as individual play was concerned U.N.B. had the two best in Burgess and their goaltender, McKenzie. Time and time again the chunky little defence player would make end to end rushes, but he was never able to penetrate the Acadia defence. Had U.N.B. another man who was fast as Burgess the result might have been different. Without a doubt McKenzie was the busiest man of the twelve and played a great game, his stellar work between the poles keping the game from being a runaway. The Fredericton aggregation were unfortunate in having Flett, their centre man, sick. He has been in bed for the past week and had to be taken off the ice in the first period, but went on again in the last period.

Acadia Was Well Balanced.

"The winners all played good hockey, with Fraser and Rogers the pick. They were all better trained in combination play and no man "hogged" the puck. Their shooting was also particularly good, as well as their stick handling.

"In the first period Acadia got one tally. Play was pretty even and U. N. B. got one past Steeves for a tally which was disallowed as it was declared offside. In the second period Tingley scored after eleven minutes of play after a pretty rush. Shortly after the face-off Acadia rushed the U. N. B. nets and on McKenzie's stop, Fraser threw the disc in with his hands, which was disallowed. After about five more minutes of play Tingley again scored and just before the period ended Acadia scored again in a mixup in front of U.N.B.'s nets. Period ended 4-0.

"In the third period U.N.B. forced the play into Acadia's territory and after a minute and a half of play Lounsbury scored the only tally for them. U. N. B. started to play better hockey and for a few minutes had the advantage, but after about ten minutes of play Acadia scored again. Following the face-off, play went to U. N. B.'s territory and in a mixup that followed scored again, while just before the game ended Fraser scored number seven."

The visitors found it hard to get accustomed to the deceiving local ice because of its uneven qualities and many good stones were lost.

Skip Tom Fowler defeated "Cappy" McWha by a score of 22 to 8, obtaining a seven end on the St. Stephen skip in the fifteenth head of his match and the score at the end of the afternoon match stood 41 to 21.

U. N. B. BASKETBALL TEAM WIN, 44 TO 17

Moncton Y. M. C. A. Team Beaten by the Red and Black's Quintette.

Moncton, N. B., March 5.—The U. N. B. basketball team wound up their trip here last night by defeating the local Y. M. C. A. team by the score of 44 to 17.

The game was fast throughout and the victory for the Red and Black visitors was due to their great combination work. At the end of the first period the score stood 30 to 11 in favor of U. N. B. In the second half Moncton played more of a defensive game, holding U. N. B. down to 14 points while they scored six points themselves.

Fryers at centre played a good game for the Y. M. C. A., scoring five field throws. The Y. M. C. A. team played a fast game but they were closely marked and their shots were taken from too great a distance to be effective. Willett was the big scorer for U. N. B., making seven field goals and four fouls, while all the members of the team figured in the scoring.

U. N. B. did not make use of a substitute on the trip, finishing the third successive game here last night with the same five men who payed in the games at Halifax.

Charged With Interfering With Religious Services—Was Overseas.

Chicago, March 2.—Rev. C. S. Marsolf, pastor of the North Chicago Presbyterian church, whose resignation had been demanded by the church board, was arrested today when he attempted to enter the church. Despite the opposition of the board of directors, Rev. Marsolf had announced that he would preach a sermon at the morning service.

The minister was taken before a justice of the peace and released in $500 bonds on charges of disturbing the peace and interfering with religious services.

The trouble was said to have started when, despite protest by the superintendent of the Sunday school, he gave his permission for a Sunday rehearsal of a Christmas play. He saw service in France.

POET IN TRIANGLE SEEKS DIVORCE

Wife Objects but Would Keep Her Rival's Baby, She Says.

Kansas City, Mo., March 3.—United States Department of Labor officials in Washington were called on today to square the war live triangle of Lee Shippey, writer, poet and lecturer.

Mlle. Madeleine Babin, whose return to France has been asked by immigration authorities, names Shippey as the father of her expected child. Shippey has a wife here.

Secret testimony taken in the deportation proceedings has been forwarded to Washington authorities for a decision.

Shippey, a Y. M. C. A. secretary in France, became the godfather of the Babin family when Madeleine's father died. He advised the family that he had a wife in America, but rarely spoke of home, according to the testimony reported.

When Shippey returned from France he told his wife of his love for the French girl and asked her for a divorce, he says. Mrs. Shippey refused. Madeleine arrived in America and came direct to Kansas City last November. She advised Shippey of her condition and he again pleaded for a divorce from Mrs. Shippey to be "could give a name to the expected child." Mrs. Shippey offered to accept the child as her own, but refused to recognize the French girl.

Proceedings which may result in the mother being returned to France followed. Mrs. Shippey is now ill with acute neuritis, which physicians say is due to the severe mental shock. There is a nine-year-old son.

True Knights of Faith

"Keep your tongue still, or it will be worse for you," shouted the most drunken of the archers. "Who are you to spoil sport?"

"A raw squire, new landed," said another. "By St. Thomas of Kent! we are at the beck of our master, but we are not to be ordered by every babe whose mother has sent him as far as Aquitaine."

"Oh, gentlemen, cried the girl in broken French, for dear Christ's sake stand by us, and do not let these terrible men do us an injury."

"Have no fears, lady," Alleyne answered. "We shall see that all is well with you. Take your hand from the girl's wrist, you north-country rogue!"

"Hold to her, Wat!" said a great black-bearded man-at-arms, whose steel breast-plate glimmered in the dusk. "Keep your hands from your bodkins, you two, for that was my trade before you were born, and, by God's soul! I will drive a handful of steel through you if you move a finger."

"Thank God!" said Alleyne, suddenly, as he spied in the lanplight a shock of blazing red hair which fringed a steel cap high above the heads of the crowd. "Here is John, and Aylward, too! Help us, comrades, for there is wrong being done to this maid and to the old man."

"Hola, mon petit," said the old bowman, pushing his way through the crowd, with the huge forester at his heels. "What is all this, then? By the twang of string! I think that you will have some work upon your hands if you are to right all the wrongs that you may see upon this side of the water. It is not to be thought that a troop of bowmen, with the wine buzzing in their ears, will be as soft-spoken as so many young clerks in an orchard. When you have been a year with the Company you will think less of such matters. But what is amiss here? The provost-marshal with his archers is coming this way, and some of you may find yourselves in the stretch-neck, if you take not heed."

"Why, it is old Sam Aylward of the White Company!" shouted the man-at-arms. "Why, Samkin, what hath come upon thee I can call to mind the day when you were as roaring a blade as ever called himself a free companion. By my soul! from Limoges to Navarre, who was there who would kiss a wench or cut a throat as readily as bowman Aylward of Hawkwood's company?"

"Like enough, Peter," said Aylward, "and, by my hilt! I may not have changed so much. But if was ever a fair loose and a clear mark with me. The wench must be willing, or the man must be standing up against me, else by these ten finger bones! either were safe enough for me."

A glance at Aylward's resolute face, and at the huge shoulders of Hordle John, had convinced the archers that there was little to be got by violence. The girl and the old man began to shuffle on in the crowd without their tormentors venturing to stop them. Ford and Alleyne followed slowly behind them, but Aylward caught the latter by the shoulder.

"By my hilt! camarade," said he, "I hear that you have done great things at the Abbey today, but I pray you to have a care, for it was I who brought you into the Company, and it would be a black day for me if aught were to befall you."

"Nay, Aylward, I will have a care."

"Thrust not forward into danger too much, mon petit. In a little time your wrist will be stronger and your cut more shrewd. There will be some of us at the 'Rose de Guienne' tonight, which is two doors from the hotel of the 'Half Moon,' so if you would drain a cup with a few simple archers you will be right welcome."

Alleyne promised to be there if his duties would allow, and then, slipping through the crowd, he rejoined Ford, who was standing in talk with the two strangers, who had now reached their own doorstep.

"Brave young signor," cried the tall man, throwing his arms round Alleyne, "how can we thank you enough for taking our parts against those terrible drunken barbarians. What should we have done without you? My Tita would have been dragged away, and my head would have been shivered into a thousand fragments."

"Nay, I scarce think that they would have mishandled you so," said Alleyne in surprise.

"Ho, ho!" cried he with a high crowning laugh, "it is not the head upon my shoulders that I think of. Cospetto! no. It is the head upon my arm which you have preserved."

"Perhaps the signori would deign to come under our roof, father," said the maiden. "If we bide here, who knows that some fresh tumult may not break out."

"Well said, Tita! well said, my girl! I pray you, sirs, to honor my unworthy roof so far. A light, Giacomo! There are five steps up. Now two more. So! Here we are at last in safety. Corpo di Baccho! I would not have given ten maravedi for my head when those children of the devil were pushing us against the wall. Tita mia, you have been a brave girl, and it was better that you should be pulled and pushed than that my head should be broken."

"Yes indeed, father," said she earnestly.

"But those English! Ach! Take a Goth, a Hun, and a Vandal; mix them together and add a Barbary rover; then take this creature and make him drunk—and you have an Englishman. My God! were ever such people upon earth! What place is free from them? I hear that they swarm in Italy ever as they swarm here. Every where you will find them, except in heaven."

"Dear father," cried Tita, still supporting the angry old man, as he limped up the curved oaken stair. "You must not forget that these good signori who have preserved us are also English."

"Ah, yes. My pardon, sirs! Come into my rooms here. There are some who might find some pleasure in these paintings, but I learn the art of war is the only art which is held in honor in your island."

The low-roofed, oak-panelled room into which he conducted them was brilliantly lit by four scented oil lamps. Against the walls, upon the table, on the floor, and in every part of the chamber were great sheets of glass painted in the most brilliant colors. Ford and Edricson gazed around them in amazement, for never had they seen such magnificent works of art.

"You like them then," the lame artist cried, in answer to the look of pleasure and of surprise in their faces. "There are then some of you who have a taste for such trifling."

"I could not have believed it," exclaimed Alleyne. "What color! What outlines! See to this martrdom of the holy Stephen, Ford. Could you not yourself pick up one of these stones which lie to the hand of the wicked murtherers?"

"And see this stag, Alleyne, with the cross betwixt its horns. By my faith! I have never seen a better one at the Forest of Bere."

"And the green of this grass—how bright and clear! Why, all the painting that I have seen is but child's play beside this. This worthy gentleman must be one of those great painters of whom I have oft heard brother Bartholomew speak in the old days at Beaulieu."

CHARGES AGAINST A LUMBER SCALER ARE INVESTIGATED

Assistant Who Was Dismissed Preferred Charges Against Forest Ranger.

CHARGE HE ACCEPTED PIG AS A PRESENT

Kept It at Camp and Is Said to Have Underscaled Lumber on North Shore.

An investigation was held by the Forestry Board in the Bathurst Court House yesterday of charges preferred against Edward Baldwin, a forest ranger in the employ of the Crown Land Department, by his assistant, Albion Doiron, who he had discharged.

Three charges against the accused were investigated, as follows:

That he had received a live pig, as a present, while in the course of his duties, which he had kept at a camp of the Bathurst Lumber Company; that he had falsified his diary; and that he had under-scaled lumber cut on the Crown Lands of the province by the Bathurst Lumber Company. A fourth charge, connected with the killing of a deer, was withdrawn.

Col. T. G. Loggie, Deputy Minister of Lands and Mines, conducted the examination of the large number of witnesses who were called. The trial took place in the presence of an interested gathering of people, and at the close of the evidence Hon. Dr. Smith announced he would announce the decision later.

'Flu Epidemic Kills Horses at Blackville

During the past ten days five horses owned by Archie Alcorn, of Blackville, and used in his lumber operations, have died, and their deaths are attributed to 'flu.

Many other horses in the same stables are sick with the same epidemic, and despite the fact that a veterinary surgeon is in constant attendance other deaths are looked for.

The animals are stricken one day and suffer untold agony for a day or two and then die.

AWAIT WORD OF VETERAN HUNTER

"Uncle Henry" Braithwaite's Friends May Not Hear from Him for Some Time.

Relatives of "Uncle Henry" Braithwaite, the veteran hunter's guide, who has not been heard from since he went into the Miramichi woods in November, were patiently waiting this morning for news from the searching party who left Holtville a few days ago in an effort to find some trace of the aged trapper.

It was said that the party making the trip into the woods could not possibly make the journey and get back to the settlement again before tomorrow night and that they were given instructions not to return until they had found some trace of him Thus, it was explained, it might be a month before they were able to make the complete round of his five camps and get back to the settlement again.

Meanwhile, because of his advancing age, there is much apprehension as to the veteran woodsman, despite the fact that in former years his protracted absence had on some occasions caused much worry, too, only to have him eventually turn up all right.

WENT THROUGH ICE.

Pair of Horses Owned by Returned Soldier Farmer Drowned in St. John River Near Oromocto.

A returned soldier who has recently taken up farming at Oromocto under the Farm Settlement Board, met with a heavy loss the other day. He was crossing the Oromocto river, where the ice gave way beneath his horses and before he could do anything they were both drowned. It is presumed the enormous weight of snow on the ice caused it to sag and the horses being heavy, quickly went through.

A team of horses and sled loaded with gravel went through the St. John river ice at the mouth of the Nashwaak a few days ago, the team being rescued with much difficulty.

"HIGHER-UPS" TO BE ARRESTED FOR FREIGHT THEFTS

Nine Prisoners Who Pleaded Guilty Are Being Held as Witnesses.

SENTENCES WERE NOT GIVEN THIS AFTERNOON

Engineer Getting $300 a Month Got Three Pairs of Boots and Tobacco.

"Officials higher-up in the employ of the Canadian National Railways will soon be placed under arrest in the roundup of railwaymen which is being made as a result of the extensive thefts of freight that have been taking place on the system in New Brunswick," declared a public official who is closely in touch with the case this morning.

The ten prisoners appearing in the police court this afternoon are all section men or occupy other subservient positions with the exception of one man, who has been a locomotive engineer and was in receipt of about $300 a month salary. Nine of the ten have pleaded guilty, but were not sentenced this afternoon because it has been found advisable to have them here as witnesses, whereas if they were sentenced they would not then be available.

Detectives Lawson and Meade, of the C. N. R., are here today, but they absolutely declined to discuss the case beyond confirming statements already made by Chief Detective Page. They said they were merely here to watch the progress of the case. The lone prisoner to plead not guilty is now out on bail of $1,500 while the engineer who is under arrest obtained bail of $2,500 because of the delicate state of health of his wife. This high salaried employee is charged with securing three pairs of stolen boots and some tobacco.

LABOR INTERESTS GETTING BUSY IN CIVIC ELECTION

But Only Unofficial Action is Being Taken the Labor Council Says.

ONLY ONE BOOTH FOR SOLDIERS TO VOTE

Complete List of Returning Officers and Poll Clerks Announced Today.

While the Fredericton Labor Council, it was stated today, would take no action "officially as a body" in the civic election next Monday, when an alderman will be elected from King's Ward, there is marked activity in labor circles now in connection with the contest.

Thomas D. Blizzard, of Victoria Mills, who was nominated by the residents of the Mills' district at a protest meeting, is a member of the Labor Council and his fellow members appear to be rallying to his assistance "unofficially," perhaps, and one result has been to call a mass meeting of labor men to be held on Saturday night at Union Hall.

A special meeting of the Labor Council was held last night, but President Harry Ryan this morning said the civic election was not the subject of the special meeting, which was really held to make arrangements for the New Brunswick Federation of Labor convention here next week. He reiterated his statement of some time ago to The Gleaner that the Labor

ANTHRACITE COAL RRICES GOING UP

Increased Price Of Coal Coming

Four Years' Wage Agreement With Anthracite Miners Expires March 31 and it is Fully Expected That an Increase Will Be Demanded by the Men ---Higher Wages Means a Further Increase in Price of Coal to Consumer.

New York, March 5.—Higher coal prics ar likly at th xpiration of thz wage agreement with the anthracite coal miners March 31. This was the substance of a statement by Charles S. Allen, secretary of the Wholesale Coal Trade Assocation of New York. He says it is likely the coal miners will demand an increase, that the Government will intervene and grant them substantially what they ask and "In view of the narrow margin on which the coal business is being conducted, like every other business, will be compelled to pass these increases on to the consumer."

He declared Government control of coal had proved a bigger failure than Government control of railroads. The Fuel Administration, he said, fixed prices which in many instances were below the cost of production. Its methods also resulted in such a fuel shortage as never had been experienced in this country before.

Mr. Allen also said that since Nov. 1 the Railroad Administration has been confiscating coal by wholesale and hinted that the object was to turn over hoardings to the railroads when they go back to private hands.

"Those who are in a position to know say that at the time the railroads were taken over by the Government the individual carriers had in storage for their own use about 9,000,000 tons," he said. "It is well known that this surplus was used by the Railroad Administration and that up to Nov. 1, 1919, the carriers were practically running from hand to mouth with respect to their coal supply, due to the policy pursued by the Railroad Administration in attempting to purchase coal at less than the Government price. When the control of coal was resumed on Nov. 1 there began to be exercised by the Railroad Administration wholesale confiscation of coal, and it is the belief of many that this was done for the purpose of creating a surplus to be turned back to the individual carriers at the time of relinquishment of Government control.

"If this is so, it has been done at the expense of the individual life of the country, many concerns having found it necessary to close because of inability to procure coal. If it is not so, the question arises, 'Where is the coal?' The coal man does not know."

American Firm to Establish A Large Potato-Flour Mill Somewhere in Carleton Co.

A Representative of the American Interests Looks Over the Building Formerly Used by Potato Products Co. as a Possible Site, but Thought Firm Would Build.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Woodstock, N. B., March 6.—Mrs. Warren, who has been the Centreville guest of W. L. Carr, left for Centreville on Monday to visit Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Balloch.

C. O. MacDonald, manager of the Royal Bank of Canada here, and the efficient secretary of the Board of Trade, has received notice of his transfer to Halifax. Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald will be greatly missed in Woodstock, where they have made themselves very popular with a host of friends. During the past year Mr. MacDonald has acted as organist of St. Luke's Church. He took a great interest at all times in town affairs.

Mr. Hugh C. Dalling has bought the John Grey house, in Orange street, and will move in the 1st of May.

Mrs. L. M. Fox, of Queenstown, Queens County, is the guest of Mrs. T. A. McLean.

The Potato Products Co., which did a thriving business here during the war, is offering its building for sale. While here during the week the representative of the American firm, that is going to establish a large potato-flour mill in the province, looked over the building and thought it would do, but the head office, he thought, would prefer erecting its own mill.

Ernest Kearney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Kearney, who is attending a Boston college, was the honored guest recently, at dinner, of Lieut. R. H. Good of the U. S. destroyer Corvell.

B. W. Turnbull, Montreal, is visiting Dr. W. D. Rankin and Mrs. Rankin for a few days.

Mrs. Charles Culbert and son, Francis Leo, have returned from a pleasant trip to Boston, Worcester, Lowel, Lewiston, South Paris, and Bangor, Maine.

Dr. T. F. Sprague has recovered from his sickness and is now attending to his professional duties.

Mrs. Robert Strain, who has been unwell for some weeks, is rapidly recovering.

David Pinskey, of Bath, who has been seriously ill with bronchial-pneumonia at Dr. Prescott's private hospital, Woodstock, is recovering.

The many friends of Hon. J. K. Flemming wil be glad to hear that he is steadily improving in health. He and Mrs. Flemming left this week for Juniper, Victoria County, where his lumber mills are located.

A letter received here this week from Mrs. Douglas Haviland, who, with her mother, Mrs. Thomas Neales, is visiting Dr. E. S. Neales at Lawrence, Mass., states that Mrs. Neales is in very poor health. Mrs. Neales is the widow of the late Archdeacon Neales, of Woodstock.

The funeral was held on Monday of Mrs. Benjamin Brown, aged 80 years, who died of pneumonia the previous day.

The funeral of the late Miss Eva Smith, daughter of Charles L. Smith, a former M. L. A., was held from the residence of her parents on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Samuel Howard officiating. The pall-bearers were Leveret McElhinney, Allan Haley, Walter Estabrooks, Reginald Dibblee, Warren Hale and Charles Peabody.

Wartare Will Be Marked By Scientific Butchery

Next Great War Will See More Wanton Destruction of Life and Civilian Property Than in Recent Conflict---French Scientists and Military Authorities Talk of Probabilities Regarding Invention and Development of Modern War Equipment

Paris, Jan. 30.—(By Mail)—Thanks to the progress of science applied to the art of destruction, the next war will be a human butchery so great that not only the combatants but the unoffending civil population will be wiped out as well.

This is the unanimous opinion of six of the greatest and best qualified men in France to speak on the subject.

QUALIFIED TO SPEAK.

Three of them are members of the world famous French Academy of Sciences, and as a consequence most qualified to speak from the respective standpoints of wireless telegraphy, chemistry and self-propelling projectiles, while the others are the highest possible experts in aviation, naval and land warfare.

These men, each of whom contributes his views of the next great war, are Monsieur Edouard Branly, French inventor and developer of wireless telegraphy; Monsieur Paul Painleve, former war minister and recognized French scientist; Monsieur Moureau, chemist professor at the Colelge of France and founder of the French Confederation of Scientified Work; Monsieur Bechereau, aviation engineer and expert; General Debeney, now director of the School of War and one of the most successful French generals in the final smashup of the German army on the western front, and finally Commandant X——, one of the highest authorities of the French navy, but whose name naval etiquette does not permit to be used.

Here is the first:

By EDOUARD BRANLY.

[French Inventor.]

"It is certain that every time someone discovers something new, the first idea is to apply it to war, and immediately people get busy to make machines improving the science that helps killing.

"As soon as aviation existed, it was used to increase the horrors of war. The progress of chemistry has been employed to make the worst asphyxiating gas.

"The progress of aviation especially is formidable and disquieting. Since an airplane can carry through the air several tons of bombs, and running at great speed, I am inclined to think that it may be an urgent question to take up, in peace time, of digging underneath the ground of cities, deep underground abris, for, should war break out, there would be no more safety for anybody on any point of land.

"Thus, the first idea of those who think of the posability of a new war should be to build underground cities.

"We see airplanes able to carry 20, 30, 40 people and several tons of baggage. There will be machines soon which will carry a hundred persons. We see airplanes flying at a speed of 300 kilometres an hour. It means that within a few hours, giant airplanes leaving Berlin would come and drop on Paris tons of bombs. If we were disarmed and we would let the Germans rebuild their aerial war material, under the pretext of making commercial airplanes, nothing would prevent them from putting us within two days in a frightful condition. Without even waiting an official declaration of war, hundreds of giant airplanes would come and set Paris afire. And the future war, if it happened, would be immensely more murderous than the one preceding because much more scientific.

"It is theoretically possible to produce destrictive effects at a distance by wireless, but there are some difficulties. Suppose, for example, that they intend at Berlin to put Paris afire at distance, by wireless. The necessary condition would be that there existed in Paris apparatus previously installed to receive the order. Whatever is the thing that is to be done between one place distant from another, there must be receptive apparatus minitiously prepared to execute it.

"During the war, we thought of blowing up German dumps by wireless. It could have been done, but owing to the lack of receptors fixed by ourselves inside the dumps there was no possibility of doing it. These receptors should have been placed in caves dug underneath what we wanted to blow up.

"At sea, it is possible to throw in the middle of a fleet some kind of ship built to be directed from a distant point to cause the explosion, through wireless, of a bomb, or several bombs. Such a ship might cause serious damage. But, in the present state of wireless, we must say that these orders, to be carried out, cannot be instantaneous. This means other difficulties to solve, which are not insurmountable.

"There could also be submarines,

FEEBLE OLD PEOPLE

Need the Blood-Building, Strength-Creating Elements of Vinol

We Guarantee it to Rebuild Wasting Tissues and Replace Weakness With Strength

As we grow old the blood gets thin, the circulation sluggish, digestion weak, the organs act more slowly and less effectually than in youth, the waste of the system becomes more rapid than repair, and the result is a feeble, weakened condition.

VINOL is the ideal strengthener and body builder for old folks, for it contains the very elements needed to enrich the blood, quicken the circulation, rebuild wasting tissues and replace weakness with strength. And as a result the system is fortified against colds and pneumonia.

One old lady recently wrote: "I am 78 years of age and my husband is 79, and we owe our good health to VINOL, as we have proved it to be the greatest strength creator and invigorator known, we are strong and well, but I often say I do not believe we would now be alive if it were not for VINOL."

If you are feeble and weak, why not try VINOL on your druggist's guarantee.

T. N. T. IN THE MEN CAUSES STRIKES

New York Doctor Urges Use of Mental Clinics in Organizing Industry.

New York, March 5.—"High explosive. Handle with care" is a label that might be affixed to a good many men as well as to gunpowder, according to Dr. Thomas T. Read, of Montclair, chairman of the sub-committee which the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers appointed to study mental factors in industry.

Blame the TNT in the makeup of a large number of men for a good many of the present day industrial evils, including strikes, said Dr. Read in the report of his sub-committee presented yesterday afternoon to the institute, which is in session here. Dr. Read spoke of the men who "go off the handle" at the least opportunity, are flighty, erratic, given to crediting every teaching of every new agitator. In the words of the classics, it is with them more or less a case of "bats in the belfry."

It is not their fault, Dr. Read says, and quotes from the report of Dr. J. D. Ball, alienist, who made a study of conditions in a factory where a strike was in progress. "According to the records," Dr. Ball said, "every one of the strikers had something wrong with him, from a nervous or mental standpoint."

"Just as you need to know the characteristics of an explosive before you start to use it underground, so you should know the mental characteristics of a man before you start to handle him," Dr. Read told the engineers. "If you loaded a round of holes with TNT, not knowing that it differed in any way from black powder, you would get unexpected results. Some men explode violently on very slight provocation and others are perfectly safe to handle. This is usually learned by experiment, but it is the function of science to prophesy. If it can be learned from examination that a large element in the working force is of the type that needs careful handling this can be provided and much trouble may thereby be avoided."

Shell Shock Cured by Color According to the Doctors

Primrose Yellow Surroundings Efficacious in the Case of a British Soldier Seriously Afflicted, It Is Pointed Out.

London, March 5.—Among strange diseases due to the war, shell-shock stands out as the most difficult to cure. Yet there has come a ray of hope. A shell-shocked British soldier is said to have been cured by the simple method of sitting in a primrose yellow room. When the war began this man, whose name is cook, enlisted.

By giving his age as ten years less than it was he got into the army again and went to France. A shell buried him in the trenches; it took four days to dig him out, and during that time he was kept alive by sending compressed oxygen through the earth to him. Soon afterward he was gassed.

His wife and daughter had been acting as housekeeper and maid to the household of A. A. Frey in the London suburb of Brixton. Mr. Frey is a leading authority on healing by color. At Brixton he had a large house with spacious rooms. Some of these rooms have been turned into color rooms as an experiment. One is a violet room; another orange; another red; another blue; another primrose yellow. In all these rooms the color scheme is rigidly maintained, and great care has been taken to make sure that the colors are pure.

Cook went to Brixton to see his wife. He also saw Mr. Frey, who first cured his lung. Then he tried the color treatment for shell-shock. First, he went into the red room.

"I can't stand this," said Cook at once. Then he went into the blue room. This made him shudder. From the blue they walked to the violet room. This was too strong for Cook's nerves. Finally they went into the primrose yellow room. Here Cook heaved a sigh of relief, settled into an easy chair and said that he felt quite comfortable.

Mr. Frey gave him cigars and sent for Mrs. Cook. He left the two chatting and laughing and when he returned an hour later Cook declared that his stay in the room had done him good.

Free access to it was allowed him and Cook made a rapid recovery. Today he is earning a good living.

Here is the theory of color cure as Mr. Frey explains it. In the human brain are 3,000 million braincells, each of which is a kind of electric battery, joined into groups in other cells, so that every thought and feeling passes over the wires from one cell to another. Each cell is composed of millions of atoms which in their turn contain millions of electrons rushing in active circulation with their poles of negative electricity keeping clear of each other.

Vibration affecting the cells is the crux of the whole matter, but, says Mr. Frey, medical men generally have ignored it. This synchronous vibration is of great importance especially in controlling blood pressure and strengthening the sub-conscious mind. Everyone has an insensible perspiration which envelopes the body with a perpetual atmosphere of steam about two feet in depth. This is similar to the aura which varies in color according to the state of health.

Color is vibration caused by sound. Each color has its own vibration, different both in rate and shape; individuals too have differing vibrations. To treat a patient whose vibrations have been upset by shock with a medley of other vibrations is to make him worse and not better. The cure for disease according to the color theory, is to restore the normal harmonious vibration by the color ray that suits the complaint.

Wartare Will Be Marked By Scientific Butchery

airplanes, purposely sacrificed, carrying no passengers, and which managed by wireless would cause similar explosions.

"Anyhow, from the fact only that the progress of aviation and chemistry grows so rapidly, the future war would be a most destructive one, not exclusive for the combatants but the unoffending civil population as well."

GAS IN NEXT WAR.

By GENERAL DEBENEY.

[Director of the French College of War.]

"Should war begin again now, aviation, and especially gas, would play one of the most important parts. The progress of aviation would make the rear of each front, and very far in, extremely dangerous, and the progress of chemistry would permit to use gas on zones of such an extent that it cannot be imagined.

"But this would be the sense in which the war would develop, much more than the immediate effect that would take place from the beginning of hostilities.

"Making gas is naturally rapidly done, because all the manufactures of chemical products—still so numerous in Germany—can be requisitioned; but to make airplanes is much slower.

"Thus, while there will be people at work to prepare ways of attacking, it is evident that others will be preparing ways of protecting themselves, and that means once again the race between the novice agents and the defence against those agents.

"The defence against gas seems to be more difficult than against airplanes. I believe that, against airplanes, the anti-aircraft artillery is susceptible of making rapid progress, and perhaps, in that very instance gas will be one of the best ways if with appropriate shells the air can be poisoned all around the attacking airplane. It would be so much more effective to create, for example, a sphere of poisoned air a mile around the airplane, instead of trying to hit the machine directly with bits of the shell.

"Concerning the defence against gas, I expect that our chemists will find some 'anti-gas' neutralizing other gas. But until further order, I am afraid more of gas than of airplanes, and this, because there are no products which can be so easily made in secret.

"We will be able to control the cannon and ammunition works in Germany, but it will be the worst job to watch the manufactures of chemical products." A laboratory secret, a procedure carefully kept secret, and these manufactures become tomorrow war toxic products makers. This is the main danger.

"As regards strategy, it could not be much modified as long as we have not improved our transportation system. We can expect airplanes to carry hundreds of men, but not yet whole divisions. It may take place some day, but we have not arrived there."

NEXT WAR AT SEA.

By COMMANDANT X.

[High Authority of the French Navy.]

"What would be a new war, from the naval point of view, depends on the enemy and the kind of war that would have to be fought. For the time being, the French navy and all the world navies are waiting, and that is about all.

"But a large development of the submarine warfare may be expected. Submarines might become real warships. During the last war, except at the end, and in exceptional cases, submarines employed dodginess exclusively. They used to hide and flee as soon as they were discovered. They never accepted fight, even patrol boats or cargo boats.

"In the future, nothing prevents the building of submarines which will be armed sufficiently and equipped to fight naval units such as torpedo-boats.

"It is likely that the deepest transformation of future war would be the most intense use of submarines and water planes. We will witness one day or the other a new evolution of sea aviation.

"The field open to submarines and water planes is indefinite. Their importance will increase. One might see during the future war lively fights between submarines or against ships or airplanes.

"Nothing opposes either to the development of using boats directed from away with electric cables, like the Germans employed on the Belgian coast to attack British monitors.

"Regarding the artillery, a formidable increase of the range, and a real 'race to the caliber' must be forecasted. To destroy enormous ships enormous shells will be necessary. The shell of 450 millimeters will become a minimum for the big guns.

"Concerning the changes in tactics, the greatest circumspection rules now. The High School of the Navy has just been formed, and it has not been stated yet whether there will be a course of tactics.

"The suggestions for the naval budget are very timid, very modest, but it is probable that the Parliament will still make it less, on account of the high price of building. The idea is to act in such a way that the French navy does not disappear and keeps sufficient elements to develop itself spontaneously, if necessary.

"The naval power of a country does not only depend on the value of its material, but also and above all of its staff. In France, soldiers can be improvised, thanks to the characteristic qualities of the race; but even in France, and nowhere sailors can be made so. The maritime traditions must be kept intact, with the help of well informed chiefs, and this is what will be done.

POISON GAS IN NEXT WAR.

By M. MOUREAU.

[French Chemist and Inventor]

"I cannot say anything about my own works which are connected with the national defence, but I may state that one of the characteristics of the past war has been the coming of chemistry into the game.

"Should a new war break out, one may presume that it would be still more chemical—essentially chemical—and consequently much more dangerous even outside the fighting zone.

"When the gas war began—and I will never forget this tragic date, April 22, 1915—we have known, by the German chemists, hours of terrible anguish. If France, at that time, had not had a long list of chemists, she probably would have been lost. But we soon did better than the enemy.

"It is certain that the future war would be very scientific, and especially the science of explosives and asphyxiating gas, which would be very much developed.

"But the use of chemistry in warfare should not exclusively be considered in making shells and gas. Chemistry has intervened and would still more intervene in all the manifestations of belligerent activities.

"During the last war the Germans, without their chemists, whose number and value must be acknowledged—there were ten of them against one of us—would not have resisted more than one year. The blockade had rendered impossible for them the imports of Chilean nitrates; no nitrate means no shell. Thanks to their chemists' works, they perfected and industrialized the making of nitric acid synthetically, with azote taken out of the air.

"What has been done from 1914 to 1918 shows what might be done in the event of a new conflict. During that time we had to improvise everything, but it would be dangerous to play with fire in having the same experience. Further, the best way for us to safeguard peace is still to be ready for war, a dreadful war!"

NEXT A SHELL WAR.

By PAUL PAINLEVE.

[Former French Minister of War.]

"I dare hardly consider such a horrible and unlikely hypothesis, although I cannot believe that war has been abolished forever, as the hope has temporarily existed.

"Another war would differ with the one before, first in the more considerable part played by aviation. It is certain that we should suffer bombardments which would be much bigger, more frequent and causing more evil than in 1918.

"On the other hand, the gas war would be more intense and of a perfection which would be crushing.

"The great innovation would undoubtedly be the use of new shells, about which so many studies have been made throughout the war in all countries. These shells, being almost fired without cannon, and acquiring speed by themselves, would have an extraordinary range. What would be necessary, is preciseness, which will be had within a few years, or a few months, if not immediately.

"Much progress has been made in that direction, and it is easy to conceive what evil these shells could carry with them far away!"

GIANT PLANES IN NEXT WAR.

By M. BECHERAUX.

[Inventor of Airplanes.]

"If the menace of a war soon appeared, there would undoubtedly be many people who would take again a sudden interest in aviation and reproach the public powers for the indifference, if not the ingratitude, they have exhibited since the armistice, for 'the fifth arm.'

"Should this menace become effective, and war begin again within a few years, it is likely that the belligerence would dispose of thousands of airplanes, instead of only a few hundreds, and those machines would certainly have a largely increased power.

"The question of price and industrial means limits the number, importance, size and power of airplanes. There is not to consider, in the air, the possibility of jammed traffic, therefore there is no reason except insufficient money that can prevent building machines of 50,000 horsepower and more.

"With a little imagination, one can see what the aerial fights would be on the front, and to the rear the bombardments of strategical points and cities where life would become a permanent anguish.

"Here is a large open field for architects who have to foresee the continuance of life in cities exposed to frequent, even continual, bombardments. There are many interesting themes for competition, but cellars and underground railroad tunnels will be valueless against the cataclysm which I beg pardon to bring up.

"We must keep a close eye on our neighbor who may have sporting airplanes which could be easily turned into chasing airplanes, and commercial airplanes that look like brothers of bombing airplanes.

"Let us remember, too, that improvements, in aviation, are the result of lengthy, patient and costly studies, and every country will have, when the time comes, the aviation that it made itself or that the public opinion will have demanded."

If you would be paid according to your own ideas of your worth make yourself necessary.

DROP IN PRICES IS NEAR, BARUCH SAYS

He Predicts Only an Act of God Can Prevent It in Near Future.

Washington, March 5.—The end of high prices is in sight, Bernard M. Baruch, former head of the war Industries Board, told the House committee on war department expenditures today.

"Only a cataclysm, an act of God or some development such as the overthrow of the Government and the establishment of some unwarranted substitute can prevent a drop in the cost of living," he said.

"When the hoarders and profiteers see that greatly increased production is in sight—and they will be the very first to see it—they will unload and run to cover. With the restoration of normal transportation on land and sea and with the good world back to work, as it is going slowly but surely, reduction on the cost of living is an absolute certainty," he asserted.

Mr. Baruch apepared before the commitee to defend the war industries board's handling of production during the war. He pointed out that the board had the greatest power ever lodged in anybody in the history of the world, but added that all its work ended when the armistice was signed.

DIVORCE SLEUTH AS ENUMERATOR

White Plains, March 5.—Supreme Court Justice Platt, of White Plains, heard testimony today in the divorce action of Mrs. Florence Cummings, of 31 Grover avenue, Yonkers, against her husband, Michael R. Cummings, of Brooklyn, in which the testimony of a private detective who posed as a census enumerator furnished most of the evidence. Mrs. Cummings testified that she was married in Brooklyn on Feb. 23, 1916, and that they have no children.

According to the evidence of the detective, he went to a house in Humboldt street, Brooklyn, where he found Cummings living with another woman.

"I am a census enumerator and I came to find out some data about your family," the detective said he told the defendant. Cummings, he then alleged, pointed to the other woman as his wife. He said he had been divorced from his first wife. There was no defence.

SAYS DISEASED TEETH COMMON

Dr. Kurt Thoma Warns of Maladies Traceable to Abcessed Molars.

Boston, March 5.—Dr. Kurt H. Thoma, assistant professor in oral pathology at the Harvard University dental school, told yesterday in the fourth of the series of free public lectures at the Hartford medical school, Longwood avenue, of the relations of diseases of the teeth to disturbances in the general system. Such disturbances, he said, were recorded by Hippocrates and plagued the Greeks of old.

The doctor made some startling statistics to support his statement that tooth infections are now so common that there are very few people who do not have at least one abscessed tooth and who are therefore exposed to the dangers of consequent rheumatism, maladies of the kidneys, a form of heart trouble, certain affections of the eye and a train of other troubles, all more or less serious.

In Chicago, he said, X-ray examinations revealed dental infections in 50 per cent. of those examined who were under 25 years old, 72 per cent. in those between the ages of 25 and 29 years, 87 per cent. in those between 29 and 39 and 89 per cent. between 40 and 50 and a full 100 per cent. in all those who were more than 50-years old.

"The sure way to find dental infection," said Dr. Thomas, "is by X-ray examination. On account of the symptomless character of these infections," he explained, "the unsuspecting individual is generally not aware of their existence, nor can anyone tell by examining the teeth in the regular manner." The doctor then described in some detail methods used by physicians in establishing tooth-infection diagnosis.

"The treatment depends on what the X-ray shows," continued Dr. Thomas. "I believe that slightly abscessed teeth may be treated in a conservative way, but to my knowledge, and most dental pathologists with me, there is no treatment which can restore to normal the necrosed, absorbed root ends of abscessed teeth. While I do not wish to underestimate the importance of saving teeth, I believe that preservation begins at an earlier stage. Every effort should be made to foster the health of the teeth by frequent examinations, filling of small defects and cleaning by the dentist at proper intervals, together with personal care."

"The worth of dead teeth is much less than that of vital ones," asserted the lecturer, "and after abscesses have formed on their roots their value is decidedly negative and their retention a curse."

The wind blew so hard in New York Sunday night that a Miss Dixon on 33rd street saw her hat, blown from her head, mount higher anl higher and finally disappear on the roof of a building, where it was found later, 22 stories above the street.

HOME GROWN AND IMPORTED SEED

Careful Comparison of Virtue of Canadian-Grown Root Seed With Imported.

It is commonly conceded that, for some reason or other, European grown seed of field roots is superior, in respect to root crop producing ability, to seed raised in Canada. In order to investigate this assertion which, were it true, naturally would prevent Canada from becoming a root seed growing country of importance, several experiments have been undertaken during the last few years.

In 1916, seed of a few varieties of mangels and Swede turnips raised the previous year by the Dominion Experimental Farms' System was tested in comparison with seed of the same varieties obtained commercially. The results of the experiments strongly indicated that the Canadian-grown seed was fully capable of competing with the commercial seed, which later had been imported from Europe, in respect to crop producing power. In fact in some instances the Canadian-grown seed proved decidedly superior.

In 1919, a very large number of varieties of field roots were tested. The majority were grown from ordinary seed of commercial, and the balance from seed produced at the Experimental Farms in 1918.

Although complete reports, at the time of writing, have not been received, a few remarks on the comparative value in general of the Canadian-grown and the imported seed may be offered, particularly as the results obtained clearly demonstrate on what the crop-producing value of root seed largely depends.

Most of the crops from the Commercial, i. e., imported seed, proved rather unsatisfactory in as much as the roots were greatly lacking in uniformity and smoothness. In a large number of cases the so-called varieties were composed of all kinds of types—in fact, often to such a degree that the type which a certain variety was supposed to represent could hardly be recognized.

The crops from the Canadian-grown seed were on the whole better. Outstandingly good were the crops grown from seed which had been raised by the Dominion Experimental Farm from roots representing improved varieties, i. e., varieties which for a few years have been subjected to a rigorous selection. In other words, the importance of selection was unmistakeably demonstrated. Applying the results to practical root seed growing, it follows, then ,that, in order to gain a reputation as a reliable seed producer, the grower must base his seed-growing business on very careful selection. Growing of seed from ordinary root crops without careful selection will never lead to profitable results. On the contrary, it will result in the placing on the market of varieties apt to prove inferior. Seed growing without careful and intelligent selection of the seed roots must therefore by all means be discouraged. On the other hand, it is a comparatively easy matter for any one who takes the trouble to select only the very best roots, uniform in shape and color, to develop a variety superior to the ordinary commercial variety from which the selection is being made. Seed produced from such roots will prove very much superior from a crop standpoint.

PRTECTION HAS AIDED AUSTRALIA

As a result, largely, of tariff protection supplemented by the additional protection provided by war conditions, the Australian confectionery industry has shown remarkable development, and there is keen domestic competition, which is an assurance of reasonable prices. At a recent hearing of the Royal Commission in Melbourne, inquiring into the sugar industry, Mr. M. Robertson, manufacturing confectioner, testified that he had spent £100,000 in building and plant in the last three years. Similar action on a smaller scale, he said, had been taken by manufacturers in other States. The Association of Australian Confectioners estimates that within 12 months the local industry will be supplying the local demand. As the result of the growth of local manufacturing, imports of confestionery to Australia have fallen off sharply.

MANY HOLIDAYS DEPLETE CALENDAR

Only Ninety-Four Days Remain as Not Marked Off Somewhere in World.

Only ninety-four days are left in the year which are full, free and untrammelled working days the world around. There are 114 days still remaining in the annual calendar which are not yet holidays anywhere. But 20 of these are Sundays. It is becoming more and more difficult for a country to pick an exclusive holiday. With all the new countries which have been carved out of the political map, the rush for new holidays may start at any time.

There are reasons, of course, for some of the days being celebrated as holidays in many countries, like New Year and Christmas. But who could figure that August 2, for instance, would be a holiday in seventeen different countries or possessions and two of our United States. It is a bank holiday in the United Kingdom and in many British possessions. But in other places it is a holiday for reasons totally unrelated, as follows: India, Cocoanut day; Rumania, St. Elias Day; Swaziland, Arbor day; Cayman Islands, Emancipation Day; Kansas and Missouri, Primary Day.

For Reasons Widely Separate.

But that is no more unrelated than having Tuesday, March 2, celebrated in Texas as San Houston Day and all over India as "Maha Shivaratri." It is a far cry from San Houston of border fame and the rough riding days of the one Star State to the tinkling temple bells of weary old India.

Who is responsible for this wealth of holidays? The 1920 issue of "Bank and Public Holidays Throughout the World," just issued by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York credits our South American friend the United States of Brazil with topping the list. Brazil has eleven national or State holidays. It has seventeen more days which are church holidays. While they are not legal holidays, they are generally observed as such. Then there are fifty-eight more days (legal holidays) observed locally in the different Brazilian States. With national, church and local celebrations Brazil can boast of eighty-six annual holidays.

The Empire of India boasts twenty-one general holidays in the year in adition to more than a score of special holidays for Hindus, Parsees, Mohammedans, Jews, Jains, Christians and representatives of other religious beliefs.

Egypt has a heavy list, too, on account of her many peoples. Egypt recognized twenty-four holidays, ranging from Nau Roz, the Mahommedan new Year, to the Jewish Passover and the Gentile Christmas.

Chinese New Year.

The Chinese New Year is celebrated this year from February 19 to 23. It it is the most important of the five great popular festivals in China. The others are the Spring, Dragon or Summer, Moon or Autumn and Mid-Autumn festivals. The holidays and festival days made a total of nineteen.

Germany lists twenty holidays at present and none is in honor of royalty's birthday. As the "Bank and Public Holiday" volume pertinently says: "With very few exceptions the birthdays of royal personages have ceased to be public holidays—none of the new republics thus commemorating any of their former rulers."

Persia has only ten holidays, but their names include Leilut-el-Kadr (Night of Power); Ramadhan (two days); Idul'l-Fitz, which runs five days; Idul'l-Azha, Nau Roz (New Year) and Birth of the Prophet.

To Liberia goes the low holiday score. The republic lists only five holidays—New Year, Good Friday, Independence, Newport Day and Christmas.

The days which are holidays in the greatest number of countries are New Year, Good Friday, Easter and Christmas.

ROYALTIES WOULD KILL THE FUR TRADE

Winnipeg, Man., March 5.—Claiming that collection of royalties would "kill the fur trade," representatives of the Manitoba Fur Dealers' Association have protested to the legislature against the amendments to the Game Protection Act imposing a royalty on furs taken in Manitoba and to a provision requiring all imported skins to be accompanied by affidavits as to places of origin. The fur men maintain that as Saskatchewan and Alberta have no such laws, the fur trade will centre in future in Prince Albert or Edmonton if the legislation is enacted.

At a conservative estimate, more than fifteen million Gillette Safety Razors are in use throughout the world. It is stupendous—hard to realize! Such things, however, do not happen by chance. Unquestionable superiority must be behind this mass of opinion in favor of the Gillette Safety Razor.

First, naturally, there comes the continued facial satisfaction assured by Gillette shaving. That is taken for granted—no need to argue the point.

Next, comes the intrinsic value and merit of the Gillette sets, the carefully made cases, the mechanically perfect razors, the gleaming blades, 12 to a set, double-edged, super-keen.

Then, it is a mark of distinction to own a Gillette. It has a rightful place in the equipment of every man who prides himself on his appearance, whether the man be an artisan or artist, clerk or clubman, employee or employer.

Again, when the talk among men turns to razors, there is undoubted advantage in claiming ownership of a Gillette.

The final dictum in razor keenness is NO STROPPING—NO HONING and all devices calculated to bring other razor edges up to Gillette keenness only serve to compliment the razor that is Known the World Over.

IRISH EXECUTE A "BRITISH SPY"

Quinnlisk, Once Follower of Casement, Shot as Traitor to Irish Republic.

Cork, March 5.—Positive evidence of the first instance of the deliberate execution of a British secret agent by order of a "court of the Irish Republic" has come to light here.

Investigation into the death of Harry Quinnlisk, alias Quinn, has revealed that he was sentenced to death by a Sinn Fein court martial, arrested, led into a lonely field at midnight and shot. None of the men in the "court martial" party was masked, according to reliable information.

The proceedings throughout were dramatic, according to investigators. Quinnlisk,, they said, stood in the centre of the group of Sinn Feiners while the findings of the "court" were read by the rays of an electric flashlight. The document recited the charge against Quinnlisk, the evidence to substantiate the accusation that he was a British spy and the final sentence of the "court"—that he be put to death. The man was allowed three minutes in which to pray; then his body was riddled with bullets. A rosary was found beside his body.

The dead agent had a romantic history. He served during the early part of the war with the Royal Irish Regiment, was captured at La Bassee and taken to a German prison camp. There he met Sir Roger Casement and joined the famous Irish Brigade recruited to carry out an invasion of Ireland. Quinnlisk was well educated and spoke several languages. He was made a sergeant major.

After the armistice Quinnlisk was released from Germany and returned to Ireland, where he worked in the "Sinn Fein secret service." For some reason he broke with the Sinn Feiners and, attracted by Viscount French's offer of a $50,000 reward for information leading to the apprehension of the slayers of various policemen, enlisted in the Dublin Castle secret service.

Sinn Fein agents learned this and shadowed Quinnlisk from Dublin to Cork. Confident of their evidence, they called a "court martial" of the local Sinn Fein and sentenced Quinnlisk to death as "a traitor to the Irish Republic."

A committee was named to make the arrest and carry out the execution. The shooting followed. Sinn Feiners cited it as the example of the results of the British policy of offering rewards for the apprehension of "Irish patriots."

TIGHT SHOES ARE CRAMP TO BRAIN

Women will never amount to much in a business way unless they stop wearing tight shoes, says a certain well known physician, in spite of the fact that many women are now occupying prominent places in the city's business and social life. This medical man declares that he can prove his assertion that tight shoes seriously affects the grain, and keep affecting it until the girl who wears them loses every job she takes.

"In the first place," he says, "no one who wears tight shoes, which pinch and bind the blood vessels in the foot, can be pleasant. That in itself eliminates the wearer from holding any position for long, especially if she is on her feet any length of time during her working hours."

The physicians explains various other ways in which tight shoes impair health. They cause heavy strain on the eyes, he asserts. He declares that almost every one knows the Chinese woman to be a weak and almost helpless being, and he attributes all of this weakness to the fact that her feet are cramped from early childhood.

"With the New York girl it is worse," she says, "for her feet are not cramped from childhood. On the other hand, her feet have a healthy and normal growth for a certain number of years, after which they are squeezed into shoes several sizes smaller than the foot. Then the danger is twice as much as if this had been done from childhood."

Men, too, are in this same danger if they wear shoes too tight for them, but the physician adds that few men will tolerate anything that cramps the foot. The shoe manufacturers are not to be blamed, he says, for they make handsome shoes in almost every size, and it is purely the girl's fault if she attempts to shove a No. 10 foot into a No. 7 shoe.

4-MONTHS BRIDE SHOOTS HERSELF

Fears Love Lost—Husband Returns Too Late to Save Her.

New York, March 5.—Mrs. Irene Gays, 18, of 1104 Broad street, Newark, a bride of four months, is in the City Hospital today in a serious condition after having attempted to commit suicide last night. She shot herself above the heart.

Around her neck tied with a ribbon was a photograph of her husband, Leland Gays, in the uniform of a Canadian soldier. The husband had left the home yesterday after a quarrel with his mother, who had upbraided him for ot getting work. Mrs. Gays before her marriage was the daughter of John Broderick, of Toronto, and she married Gays in that city last October. In a letter left by her she wrote:

"My Dear Leland: I am writing to tell you why I am doing this. It is because I can't live without you and I thought when you went away today you would come back. I went down and saw your razor was gone and I knew that you had left me. I know you do not love me and when you went away you never kissed me goodby. I would have worked and helped you before I would have let you go and leave me alone. You have a long life before you. You are just a boy and you will meet the girl you really love some day. I know you will make her a good husband, but for God's sake work and help her. If you love her as much as I love you, you will never have to part from each other."

Mrs. Gays advised her husband in her letter not to leave his mother and also to keep their marriage license. She then continues:

"Don't take the picture from around my neck. I want it left there forever. You may think I was foolish, but it is all for your sake. I will have to say goodby. I am dying with a broken heart, dear."

The husband returned home late last night. He had been looking for work all day.

BOHEMIAN MASTER TELLS OF WRECK

Attributes Disaster to Steamer to Six Miles Set of Current to North.

Halifax, N. S., March 5—Captain Ernest G. Hiscoe, master of the steamer Bohemian, which was wrecked on Sambro Ledges on Monday, March 1st, told the marine court of injuiry, which opened today, that he believed there was a six miles set of current to the north the day of the wreck, to which he attributes the disaster.

The captain told the court that he had been steamship master for nineteen years, seven of which was served on the Bohemian. He said that he had lost his certificate with his money and his log book in the wreck, and regretted that a blow which a sailor had given him some years ago affected his memory, so that he was unable to give detailed evidence without the log book.

In answer to a question of the court the captain said that he had not taken soundings. He said that he could not understand why the sound of the Sambro Island guns was not more distinct.

The court consists of J. Blanchard Henry, acting wreck commissioner, chairman, and Captains Neil Hall and C. O. Hall, nautical assessors.

FOKKER PLANS AN AIR FREIGHT TRAIN

Dutch Inventor's Idea is for Carriers Towed by An Airplane.

Fokker, the Dutch agronautical engineer whose fighting planes assisted the Germans to withstand for so long the Allied onslaughts in the air, is making plans for the development of the aerial freight train. It is his purpose to design an airplane that will tow other airplanes carrying freight. The freight-carrying airplanes will not be equipped with engines.

The aerial freight train will fly along specified routes, and at each large town it is Fokker's idea to release by an automatic "slipping" arrangement one of the freight airplanes. In this manner a direct service wil be maintained with all large cities without the necessity of the train stopping at any city other than the final destination.

These ideas of Fokker are contained in correspondence received by Laurence L. Driggs, president of the American Flying Club, from a European aeronaut who recently had a long conversation with the famous Hollander. This conversation, as reported to Mr. Driggs, shows that Fokker's idea grows out of a scheme proposed by the German War Office and which is now revealed for the first time. It is interesting in view of its possibilities in future war as well as the possibility of completely eliminating the artillery arm of all military forces.

The German plans, as disclosed by Fokker, are:

"But for the blunders of the Berlin War Office the Germans would have developed airplane warfare to such an extent that they would have put the artillery out of commission; they would have made the big guns as old-fasioned as spears."

The Dutch inventor is now working out a scheme for engineless planes to be used in "air coasting." Sporting contest with such planes would be very much like coasting contests on the winter runs in the Alps. An air coaster would be towed by an airplane to a height of 5,000 feet or more and then cut loose. The flier could make a record by staying in the air longer than his rival; he might try to make more spirals downward, or he might try for speed in coming down. "They are just as safe as airplanes and I think the day will come when air coasting without engines will be a great sport," Fokker said.

It is said that Fokker proposed making the United States his home country. Holland is too small for his activities.

DRINK SYMBOLS NOW UNDER BAN

Supporters of Prohibition Frown on Display of Glass Grapes.

Though the glass grapes that hung in the windows and upon trellis work were even less than one-half of one per cent. of the pleasure of those who went to such places in the old days, there is a rumor that the implacable vengeance of those who disapproved of going into such places is wreaking even upon the poor green and purple glass grapes.

Melancholy report among those who are still faithful to the fixtures and the furnishings, who still lean upon a bar and gaze into a mirror opposite, has it that they whose faces are set squarely against all but the more torpid joys of life are bringing pressure to bear to hasten the weaning of the city from all thoughts of alcohol by forcing all of its symbols and utensils from the public sight.

"Drink undoubtedly was an error," one man ruefully told his friends today, telling them how bleak he found the old place when he dropped in there for luncheon, "but I got a lotta pleasant reminiscences over my noonday finnan haddie when I saw the steins, the glass grapes and the paper vines all still there. Now these beautiful mementos of our good old buried Dark Ages have to go. There's too much radical mending of the world these days."

WORLD HAS MANY MARCH HOLIDAYS

Besides St. Patrick's Day, Texas Pays Tribute to Sam Houston.

New York, March 5.—To most New Yorkers March looms as a month of only one holiday, St. Patrick's Day. But almost every day in the month is celebrated somewhere in the world.

The people of Texas celebrate March 2 for Sam Houston, soldier, Indian agent, lawyer, Congressman and Governor of Tennessee, who was born on that day in 1793. The army of Houston defeated the Mexican army of Santa Anna in the battle of San Jacinto and Houston became the president of the republic of Texas. When Texas was admitted as a State, Houston became the first Senator. Later he became Governor of Texas and was deposed when he endeavored to prevent the secession of Texas in 1861.

The people of Bulgaria celebrate March 4 because on this day in 1878 the treaty of St. Stephano was signed, resulting in the establishment of Bulgaria out of those provinces in European Turkey in which the Bulgarian element predominated.

The recent world war established March 11 as a national holiday in the Don Republic, in North Russia, in South Russia, in Soviet Russia, in Siberia and in Ukrainia, as well as in all other parts of what formerly was the Russian Empire, because on this day the Russian Empire was overthrown by the Revolution.

The people of Salvador celebrate March 15 as a holiday in honor of Gen. Morazan, who was elected in 1830 president of the Central American Federation. In 1832 he suppressed an insurrection against the Federal Government in Salvador, in 1838 a revolution in Guatemala and in 1842 in Costa Rica. The people of Salvador also celebrate March 1 as a holiday.

The people of Porto Rico celebrate March 22 as Emancipation Day because on this day in 1873 the Spanish Parliament freed the slaves in that island.

The residents of Alaska celebrate March 30 as Seward Day in honor of William Henry Seward, who, as Secretary of State of the United States, purchased Alaska from Russia in 1867.

Of the holy days of the month the most important is March 25, which is Annunciation Day. This day, which commemorates the announcement made by the angel Gabriel to the Virgin Mary of the incarnation of Christ, is a holiday in Austria, Brazil, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Malta, Poland and Sweden.

Nicaragua celebrates as a holiday on March 31 Holy Wednesday, which is the day on which Judas betrayed Christ.

In Queensland March 1 is kept as a holiday sacred to St. David, the patron saint of Wales, who resided in Menevia, which early became a popular place of pilgrimage. William the Conqueror, Henry II. and Edward I. went to this place. Two pilgrimages to Menevia were commonly regarded as the equivalent of one pilgrimage to Rome.

Ireland, Queensland, New Zealand and Newfoundland hold March 17 sacred to St. Patrick.

St. Joseph's Day, the Day of San Jose, March 19, is a holiday in Costa Rica, Dutch East Indies, Guatemala, Mexico, Peru, Argentina and the province of Rio Grande do Norte in Brazil.

In Japan, March 21 is observed as the Spring Festival of Shuki-Korei-Sai, and in Egypt March 23 is celebrated and observed as the Mohammedan New Year.

In New Mexico March 12 is observed as Arbor Day. In South Dakota Primary Election Day, on March 22, is a legal holiday.

SHOULD LAWYER AID A FUGITIVE?

Question of Professional Privilege Raised in Case of "Nicky" Arnstein.

When lawyers split hairs the public stops its ears—usually. However, lawyers in New York are now discussing a fine professional point suggested by the case of "Nicky" Arnstein, the alleged master mind in the bond plot, that is of unusual interest. This is summed up in the question: Has a lawyer engaged as counsel to protect the interests of a fugitive from justice who knows the whereabouts of that fugitive the right to keep his knowledge a secret, either to bargain on terms of surrender or for any other purpose?

What, also, are the rights and duties of a private individual in such a situation?

While the legal talent consulted by a reporter was by no means clear or agreed upon these points, the general belief seemed to be that it was for the judge hearing the case to decide whether a lawyer acting as counsel could plead "privilege" when questioned as to the whereabouts of his client, but that a private individual brought to the stand by legal procedure must answer the questions put to him.

In general it is the practice of the courts to consider communications between counsel and client as "privileged," giving counsel or client the right to refuse to answer questions intended to divulge their contents or import. The question of communication between counsel and fugitive from justice, however, constitutes a peculiar case which lies on the borderline of the privilege ruling, say the lawyers.

Eugene F. McGee of 149 Broadway made a vain plea of privilege. Judge Hand overruled him and directed him to answer the questions put by a member of Mr. Swann's force, which revealed the fact that he had seen Arnstein in Cleveland last Tuesday.

In discussing the reported attempts of Arnstein's representatives to make a bargain for him whereby his bail bond would be cut from $100,000 to $50,000 in event of his voluntary surrender, lawyers were reminded of the famous Rofrano case. Michael Rofrano, formerly Deputy Street Cleaning Commissioner, wanted in connection with the killing of Michael Galmari, of which he later was acquitted, after eight months' hiding surrendered by arrangements made with the District Attorney through Martin W. Littleton, counsel engaged by Rofrano's brother.

MILLS DO LAUNDRY FOR EMPLOYEES

Problem of Female Help "Laying Off" on Monday Solved.

The weekly wash day problem has been solved by managers of mills in and near New York and no longer do these mills operate with only half of the female employees on Monday.

In solving the problem the managers have added a side line which threatens to become an important and profitable factor in mill life.

For the mill laundry is here, and the housewife who works in the mill no longer "lays off" on Monday to do the family wash, but instead slips a ticket into the laundry box as she comes to work. Then she forgets all about it and on Thursday the mill delivery wagon backs up to her door and delivers the week's wash. When she gets her pay envelope she finds only a few cents deducted from her wage.

Mill managers for years have been at a loss to determine just how to overcome this Monday shortage of female help. According to a New York mill man who introduced the mill laundry in his plant he got the idea from his term of service in the army.

Switzerland's Plan For Water Power Development

In view of suggested water power developments in New Brunswick the following article [illegible] Development of Water Power in [illegible] C. Howe, which appeared some time ago in Outlook, will no doubt be read with much interest:

The little democracy of Switzerland is planning to run the state by the law of gravitation. It is preparing to place a boycott on coal and to operate its railways and its industries, to light its streets, highways and homes by the conversion of the boundless water power of the country into electric current. The rains from heaven and the glaciers of the mountain sides are to be converted into light, heat and power.

Switzerland has no coal of its own. The country is dependent upon Germany for its fuel. But Switzerland is the birthplace of the Rhine and the Rhone, the Inn and the Reuss. The country is intersected with innumerable smaller streams which converge into lakes and waterfalls. The streams have a heavy fall and are not very deep. For many years they have been used as a source of water or electric power by the private companies of the country, by the cantons, and by the cities.

The "white coal" of Switzerland is not being exploited by private capital for private gain, as is the case with Niagara, the Susquehanna, and the mountain streams of the Rockies, and the Pacific slope. It is being developed by the state for all the people. That is the great difference between the Swiss democracy and our own. Privilege has but little standing in Switzerland, less standing than any where else in the world. Big business men do not control the politics of the country for the sake of business. They do not make the tariff laws, the taxing laws, or the franchise regulations. Nor do they own the railways and the public service corporations. These enterprises are a part of the state and serve the people just as do the army and the public schools. Here the rights of property seem to be subordinate to the rights of humanity. Property is compelled to serve instead of being permitted to rule.

Switzerland, too, is a country in which the nation seems to be first in the minds of the people. Not as it is in Germany and in England, where the army and the navy attract the best talent to their service, but in a far different sense. Not only men but the things men own are at the call of Switzerland. It is this that really distinguishes the democracy of these people from the democracy of other lands. The state is paramount, and men co-operate in its service whether in office or out of it; in time of peace with the same honesty and devotion that they do in time of war. And they serve for comparatively little pay and relatively little distinction. Their deeds go unrecorded and in large measure unrecognized by the public which they serve.

Private Water Franchises Limited.

It is commonly assumed that democracy is incapable of sustained or accurate thought, and that only through government by experts can the intricate problems of organized society be worked out. But it is through democracy and not through experts that Switzerland has achieved its great reforms. It was by means of direct legislation that the water power of the country was placed under federal control. Up to 1908 the cantons which correspond roughly to our states, made such grants and regulations as they chose. Concessions were made to the cities, to the townships, to co-operative associations, to private companies, or the power was developed by the cantons themselves. There was conflict in jurisdiction, a great waste in investment and an inadequate development of the power. In these grants by the cantons, however, the public rights were carefully guarded. In many instances the cities or the cantons subscribed for stock in the private companies and converted them into virtual public undertakings. There are no grants in perpetuity to the first comer on the plea that it is a good thing to have the power developed, as has been the case with the franchise grants of our cities and the water power of the west. The laws of the canton of Berne, for instance, state that all concessions are public and must not be injurious to the public welfare or in any way disfigure the natural beauty of the country; that in all applications for use the public authorities must be given the preference, and that grants made to private companies are subject to the right of purchase by the community. In addition the companies have to pay handsomely for the privileges which they enjoy. The tax upon the right to use the water ranges from 60 cents to $1.60 per horse-power authorized in the grant, while the company is required to pay a tax from 20 to 60 cents for each horse-power generated for sale. These taxes are in addition to the regular taxes paid by other property to the canton and the local authorities.

Transfer of Rights to Government.

Ever since 1891 there has been an agitation for the transfer of the control of the water rights from the cantons to the Federal government. But nothing came of the agitation as the jealousy of the cantons prevented the adoption of an amendemtn to the Confederation. In 1901, however, the Federal government took over the railways. Since that time there has been a great development in the use of the power, and the movement has gained headway for the electric equipment of the railways. In 1907 a petition was circulated offering an amendment to the constitution transferring control of the water power to the Federal government. It obtained 95,000 names, or 45,000 more than was necessary to submit the amendment to the people. Moved by this showing of interest, the Federal Council itself drafted an amendment which was satisfactory to the petitioners. It was referred to popular vote in October, 1908, and was overwhelmingly adopted.

Following the adoption of the amendment commissioners were appointed for the study of engineering and financial problems involved as well as for the drafting of laws for carrying the amendment into effect. The work of the commissioners is well under way. The programme which is suggested is a most comprehensive one. It involves the erection of great central generating stations upon the leading rivers, which will generate power in bulk for use by the cantons, cities and villages. This power will be used by the government for the electric equipment of the steam railways, which require about 250,000 horse power. By this change it is estimated that the cost of operating the railways will be reduced by one-third. The commission has estimated the water of the country available for immediate use at one million horse power, while twice that amount can be developed by the construction of canals and storage reservoirs. The electric hydraulic power generated in 1903 amounted to 206,800 horse power and this, together with the power required by the railways, would consume only one-half of that which is already available. So that a large margin exists for future development.

Out from these central generating plants high tension cables will carry the current to every section of the country. It will be sold in bulk to the cantons, cities and local communities as well as to private companies, which will build their own distributing systems and carry the current to the local consumer.

Extent of Water Power Development.

There is little that is experimental in all this. Switzerland has been utilizing the "white coal" of the mountainsides for over twenty years. Over $49,000,000 has been invested in hydraulic undertakings. Fully seventy per cent. of the power generated is already owned by public authorities or is under public control through the ownership of stock in the private companies. There are at least six large cantoal plants and many city installations. The city of Zurich is erecting a plant on the River Albula, ninety miles distant from the city which, when completed, will have a capacity of 24,000 horse power and be capable of being greatly enlarged. The city and the canton of Basel, which are identical in territorial jurisdiction, are erecting a plant on the River Rhine, while the cantons of Berne and Schwz are building great artificial lakes, one of them alone being adequate for 60,000 horse power. Practically all the engineering difficulties have been overcome. From these plants the current is carried without loss for a hundred miles while in Italy it is distributed five or six hundred miles to users.

In the year 1903 there were 869 different plans using power generated by water. These plants ranged all the way from the miniature installations with a few horse power up to the huge plants of the cantons and the cities with a capacity of twenty or thirty thousand horse power. Of these, 350 furnished light alone, 96 furnished light and power, and 32 supplied street railways. Practically all of the street railways and the bulk of the industrial energy now comes from horse power. In the year 1903 fully niney-five per cent. of the electrical power of the country was generated by water.

The use of electricty is likely to become almost as universal in the country as it is in the cities, as both the cantons and the villages have co-operated to stimulate its use and cheapen its cost so that it will be available for even the poorest. That is one of the anomalous things about Switzerland. The leader of the movement which led to the adoption of the amendment of the constitution, Dr. Oscar Wettstein, editor of the Zurich Post, and one of the members of the Federal Commission for the study of the question, said to me: "The state must so distribute the power that every citizen shall have his share." It is not industry, it is not the electrical equipment of the railways, it is not the cheapening of the cost of operating the street railways, which the cities own, that is paramount; the motive of the movement is to relive the lives and the daily toil of the poorest and most obscure peasant of the countryside.

This is not a dream. It is already being done. It is but indicative of the seriousness with which these people view democracy and its obligations to the people. The public authorities have already carried electrical power into the most obscure villages, to the cottage and the barn of the poorest peasant farmer. Over 90 per cent. of the townships have light and power at their doors and more than two-thirds of the people have them available for their use. Not only are the cities lighted by electric power, but the smallest villages and country districts as well. In some cantons the country roads are lighted for miles and miles. In time all of Switzerland will be illuminated by means of the water-power of the mountain-sides, which has always been a source of beauty, but which now has become the greatest single asset of the country. But the Swiss are not content with operating their State owned railways and city-owned street railways with the lighting of the city and even the country districts with water-power. They are not content with abolishing the steam boiler and the substitution of electricity for coal; they are planning to serve the poorest peasant as well. Switzerland is a country where domestic industry still survives. The cantons of Zurich and Basle are centres of the silk and silk ribbon industry. In the country districts the loom is to be found in almost every home. Lace, embroidery and watchmaking are still to a large extent home industries. The looms and the machines are operated by hand. For manual labor the electric motor is being substituted. A similar development, although not so rapid, is taking place on the farm. Grain is being threshed, milk is being churned to butter, water is being pumped, food for the cattle is being prepared, and the farmer is being relieved of his most arduous labor. There are no limits to the uses to which electric power may be applied save the amount of power which may be generated and the cheapness with which it may be transmitted.

The saving which will follow the development of electric power by the State will be tremendous. The cost of water-power installation runs from $60 to $200 per horse-power, depending upon the size of the plant and the difficulties of installation. The average cost is about $120. On this basis the generation of electricity from water-power will cut down the light and fuel bills of the people from 50 to 95 per cent., and will place Switzerland at a tremendous advantage in the struggle for the markets of the world.

But the freeing of the country from dependence upon the coal fields of Germany, the reduction in the operating costs of the State-owned railways and the city-owned street railways, the placing of Switzerland in a position of industrial advantage are not the greatest gains to follow. Possibly these are but the spectacular exhibits of what a country can do when it consciously aims to use its resources for the benefit of the people. These gains do not include the dreams which men have of the life and civilization which are to follow from this revolution in light, power, and possibly the heat as well. They do not include the freedom from drudgery, the opportunity for culture and enlightenment, the brightening of farm life, of the woman as well as the man. Nor do they suggest the possibilities of a cheap rapid transportation by means of which the farmer may become the city dweller and the clerk and the mechanic obtain a country home, and both remain in close contact with their work. For the problem of energy is the problem of civilization, and, with its costs reduced to a minimum there are no limits to the visions which men may have of the society of tomorrow. Compare this achievement of Switzerland with the prodigal waste of the resources of America. Niagara has been abandoned to private exploitation without compensation to the State or to the nation, and with no idea of service to the people. Only profits have been fattened and monopoly made that much more secure. The Susquehanna, upper Mississippi, the mountain streams of Colorado, Wyoming and the Middle West, as well as the Pacific slope, have been inclosed with fraudulent claims or confirmed by grants in perpetuity to the electric prices, no right to purchase by the State, and no appreciable gain to the community. We, too, could boycott coal and light the nation and fire its boilers with the water power with which Nature has endowed us; but the sovereignty of the State and the well-being of the people have been abandoned at the behest of the powerful interests whose demands have been voiced in Congress and the Legislatures of our States by those who were sent there to represent the community.

GRAY-DORT Dealers Lead

Most good automobile dealers know motor cars inside and out. They've watched the business from its infancy. They've seen cars come and go. Above all they know motor car values. They have to.

You will find in practically every city and town in Canada, that the leading motor car dealer is a Gray-Dort dealer.

Every motor car dealer knows the reason for this. Every Gray-Dort owner knows the reason. The Gray-Dort offers unequalled value to motor car purchasers.

The $1365 (PLUS WAR TAX) GRAY-DORT is Dominant Value

What other car at anywhere near $1365 offers you these Gray-Dort qualities?

A motor larger and finer than usual for light cars—3½" bore and 5" stroke—built from flawless castings and tough, high-carbon steel—and finely finished. The crankshaft weighs 40 pounds. The radiator is cellular type and the water jackets are extra large. An improved carburetor marks this car, and a better electrical system. Starting and lighting are Westinghouse, as in the most expensive cars.

There's over-strength in the Gray-Dort frame of heavy channel steel; in the husky, Chatham-built rear axle; in the long, cantilever rear springs; in the specially designed, new steering gear; in the big brakes, now lined with Thermoid. The front wheels now have roller bearings. There is a new gas tank—larger, and in the rear.

Convenience of riding and driving is in the Gray-Dort. The steering wheel is of the height and size for tireless driving. The gears can be shifted with two fingers' pressure. The horn, the ignition and light switches, the clutch and brakes, all are placed for greatest ease in driving.

A shorter and smarter cowl now gives more room in the driving compartment. A new Gray-Dort feature has greatly increased the leg-room in the tonneau. Seats are tilted at just the proper angle for comfort. As in cars costing $2000 and upwards, the Gray-Dort now has side-curtains opening with the doors.

CLEAN-CUT GOOD-LOOKS

The Gray-Dort is not startlingly extreme, the Gray-Dort is a car of quiet beauty—smooth lines and perfect proportions. The smart, new top is hand-tailored in our own shops. The new hood, with its many long, narrow louvres lends just a touch of European style. French-pleated upholstery, too.

Unquestionably there will be a shortage of these cars at $1365. You had better see the Gray-Dort dealer now.

PRICES

The Gray-Dort 5-passenger car, finished in Gray-Dort green and black and with standard equipment is $1365 f.o.b. Chatham. War tax extra.

The roomy 2-passenger roadster is the same price.

THE GRAY-DORT SPECIAL

For the man who wishes something a little extra in his car, we have built the Gray-Dort Special. Maroon body, with brown rayntite top. Plate glass rear window. Gipsy curtains. Rookie tan wheels. Motometer. Tilting steering wheel. Real leather upholstery. Mahogany instrument board. Just the touches which lift this car above the ordinary. $150 extra on the standard.

AND THE ACE!

The Gray-Dort Ace—the most beautiful light car of to-day. Sapper green body with handsome California top to match.

Trouble lamp and bull's-eye flashlight. Electric cigar lighter. Rear-vision mirror. Plate glass windows. Oversize, grooved-tread tires. This is the de luxe car for the man who does not wish to pile up a tremendous operating cost. $255 extra on the standard.

BIRCH PIPES NOW IN PLACE OF BRIAR

A Substitute Found When the War Stopped All Importations.

New York, March 5.—American birch since the war has acquired a South American name. Nowadays it is fashioned into pipes and then called something besides birch.

The only evident reason for the change seems to be the fact that the process that converts soft birch into a hard pipe was originated in a Latin American country.

Birchwood owes it nsw name and its present prominence in the pipe industry to the war, which cut off the supply of briar, and sent the prices of the stocks in America sky high.

Substitutes have been sought for the expensive imported briar. The cessation of importations with the war—they haven't been resumed yet—intensified the search for an American wood that would prove a suitable substitute.

Many native hardwoods were tried without success. Most of them were either too hard to be worked into pipes or too heavy to rest comfortably between a smoker's lips. Then some one hit on the expedient of trying a soft wood and employing a process that would give it the required hardness for use in pipe manufacturing. Birch was found the most suitable for the purpose.

Washington, March 5.—Representatives of the railroad unions are understood to have voted today to give the new railroad law a trial in bringing about a settlement of their wage demands.

PLOT TO RUIN U. S. DRAFT OFFICER

Two Burns Detectives Arrested in the Bergdoll Evasion Case.

Philadelphia, March 5.—The summary discharge by William J. Burns of Herman F. Davis, manager of the Philadelphia branch of his detective agency, and Edward Dyer, an operative, and their arrest today at the instigation of federal and county officials, has disclosed a plot of startling and involved ramifications, all part of a desperate move to save Grover C. Bergdoll, youthful millionaire, from conviction as a draft dodger.

The story of the plot, and of how detectives trailed detectives in the plans to checkmate it, shows that it descended to the point of a diabolical and persistent effort to bring about the moral degradation of two West Philadelphia girls, according to John P. Dwyer, chairman of the draft board which stigmatized Bergdoll as a deserter.

Dwyer also asserts that it included a plan to place him in a position of false disgrace before the world by supplying him with an "affinity." Money, he charges, was of no consequence in comparison with the end to be achieved, and thousands of dollars in graft was freely offered.

The ludicrous looms large in the story as it is now unfolded. Davis and Dyer, according to Dwyer's story, went through all the gyrations of the stage detective for two weeks, all the time acting under the eyes of other detectives. They went through with elaborate stunts all the time before a gallery of other detective spectators of which they were utterly unaware. It is also alleged that, in order to cover up lack of progress in their efforts, they filed fictitious reports of wonderful achievement.

The charges against them are conspiracy in an alleged attempt to coerce or corrupt government witnesses at the forthcoming Bergdoll trial. The story also charges that Francis F. Kane, U. S. marshal here, held back the issuance of warrants against them for three days for some mysterious reason.

The two girls whom it is charged the plotters sought to degrade and defame in order that their testimony at the trial might be discredited are Gertrude and Margaret Ruane, who were employed in the office of the draft board during the war.

VETERANS PREFER RURAL SIMPLICITY

New York March 5.—Records kept by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance giving names and addresses of men discharged from the service show that there is a general movement of young men back to the land. Whereas for generations before the war the young men were leaving the farms for commercial and professional pursuits, now they are more generally taking up the employments offered in the country.

This is accounted for in great measure by the manner of life necessarily adopted by the young citizen soldiers both in this country and in the war areas in Europe. They became accustomed to and enjoyed life in the open. The plaintive wail about getting up in the morning, it appears, was genuine only as a figure of speech and adaptable for the making of a joke—it did not express an actual complaint. Following their release, the men could not easily adapt themselves to life in the city, and hence have returned to simpler life and enjoyments.

One of the queer things about a man is the way he thinks it is impossible for any woman not to admire him.

SMOKE URGED AS SIGNAL TO MARS

Professor Believes That Great Screen of Black or White Would Be Good Plan.

Bryn Mawr, Pa., March 5.—Smoke screens hundreds of miles in width as a means of signalling to Mars are suggested by James J. Crenshaw, associate professor of chemistry at Bryn Mawr College, who was in the chemical warfare service during the war. He believes this would be more feasible than geometrical designs on the Sahara desert, as suggested by Sir Oliver Lodge.

Prof. Crenshaw said today that undoubtedly enough smoke making material remained from the war to create a tremendous screen, or spot on the earth, and that it would be a good way of using this material for which no other use could be found. He would cover an area as big as the state of Pennsylvania with either black or white smoke, depending upon which physicists believe would be more effective.

"Smoke screens hundreds of miles in length were used on the front during the war, and there is no reason to doubt that they could be massed in a similar manner for signalling," Prof. Crenshaw said. "If anything would reach Mars, if their intelligence equals ours—which is necessarily presupposed — they would undoubtedly have telescopes which would enable them to distinguish a large spot on the earth's surface."

It would be possible to make the spot appear and disappear by regulating the flow of smoke, Prof. Crenshaw believes. The average velocity of smoke screens used in the war was about four miles an hour, although that was regulated to the walking speed of soldiers. If parallel lines of smoke ejectors were arranged across a great square they could be released all at the same time, so that in a short period the whole square would be covered with smoke. Then they could be shut off, the smoke allowed to drift away, and turned on again. This could be repeated as often as the space could be cleared by the wind.

Prof. Crenshaw is inclined to favor a white smoke on a cloudless day, as he believes white smoke would act as a stronger reflector than the earth's surface and would produce a brilliant spot. On the other hand a black screen would produce a huge blot that might be moreeasily seen. An enormous open space such as a desert, or the ocean, might be used, although Prof. Crenshaw says the smoke is of such a character that it could be used in sparsely settled territory without injuring anyone. "I have walked in it for hours without suffering any bad effects," he said.

Famous Rector's Closes and Becomes an Ideal of the Past

Noted Broadway Institution Succumbs to Prohibition After Years of Faithful Service as a White Light Playground.

New York, March 5.—John Barleycorn, who was buried quite generally Jan. 16 (plus), has been back in town. He returned from out yonder, or wherever it is that such spirits go to be very happy, and remained only long enough to hang some more crepe on Broadway.

For Rector's is dead. And the answer is the first guess—prohibition.

The Cafe de Paris, Forty-eighth street and Broadway, is closed today. The place that was better known to the present generation at least as Rector's will become a public ballroom—the Palais de Danse.

Rector's is a name known the country and the world over. John Barleycorn was its chief backer.

When former Mayor Gaynor ordered New Yorkers to go home or at least stop drinking intoxicants at 1 o'clock in the morning Rector's, grown into a hotel (now the Claridge) suffered most. Bankruptcy was the result.

Charles E. Rector, who had made a fortune as a restaurant proprietor who kept just a bit ahead of the times, suffered a breakdown in health because of the rude awakening. Hotel Rector had been his dream.

He had come to New York from Chicago, where he owned an oyster house established on savings as the first superintendent of the Pennsylvania dining car service.

He had established a Broadway restaurant just off Forty-second street on the east side of the street, a place that was to became known everywhere—Rector's. Father and Dame Knickerbocker had been eating and drinking quietly and sedately at Delmonico's and Sherry's, and Young Knick had no smart place to go.

Charles Rector, "the man who brought Fifth avenue to Broadway," saw far ahead. He knew these young New Yorkers were growing up, and also that folks from Lockports and Lincolns and such places wanted something lively when they got away from home and got a chance to step up Broadway.

So the green dragon that hung out over the brilliantly lighted entrance to the little building beyond Forty-second street became "the place for fun."

There were other places, too, but for a long time whenever one spoke of chorus girls and lobster palaces and sun dodgers and wine agents one immediately thought first of Rector's.

Reopens Chicago Place.

Meantime, however, Charles Rector had accumulated enough money to buy the land and building from the late Charles T. Barney of the Knickerbocker Trust Company. He had also put up the Rector building at Clark and Monroe streets in Chicago and had reopened a Chicago Rector's. The restaurant he sold soon after opening it, but the building he is said to have retained some time.

By this time George W. Rector, a son, had been graduated from Cornell, had taken a post-graduate course in Paris kitchens and had been elected a member of the Societe des Cuisiniers de Paris. And he had taken an active interest in Rector's.

Marriage Causes Trouble.

Rector's was at the height of its poularity when, on May 24, 1909, the son married Miss Bertha Ellen Curtis, of Meriden, Conn., one of Anna Held's show girls, known on the stage as Maud Hunter. This caused a break between father and son and a week later the son quit Rector's.

The following August, the son with outside capital bought Churchill's at Forty-sixth street and Broadway, renamed it the Cafe Madrid, and on the night of the 16th—oh, fatal date, some years later—all of Broadway that could be let in was there. The move was not exactly a salve to the wounded feelings of the elder Rector.

Meantime the father's place had been razed, the Schloss cafe and office building next door had been leased and the Hotel Rector was going up. All that time the son was getting the Rector business. By the time the hotel was completed, however, the father and son were again on good terms, and George W. Rector was installed as manager, having sold out his interest in the Madrid.

But the hotel was lost to the Rectors in bankruptcy proceedings, the failure operating liabilities of $2,746,070 and assets of $106,798.

This was too much for Charles Rector. He went to his home in Long Branch, where on Sept. 23, 1914, he died of heart disease. The 1910 Broadway Corporation took over the hotel, and after considerable court dispute over the Rector name decided to call the place the Claridge.

A year before George Rector had opened the Folies Begere at Forty-eighth street and Broadway. Since then this place had been more popularly known as Rector's. And the same has been true since it became the Cafe de Paris.

George Rector was divorced last July and ordered to pay $3,000 alimony. He protested that the amount was too much, as he had no employment and only a small income. The amount he named was $1,800.

FIVE SETS OF TWINS.

New York, March 5.—"That's the fifth time, you know," Judge Richard Doherty, of the Court of Common Pleas, Jersey City, said smilingly when a flustered young man tiptoed to the bench and told the court: "It's twins."

The judge has been maried ten years. Of the five sets of twins, four are alive and healthy. One set died shortly after birth. The latest addition to the Doherty family are a boy and a girl.

William Scull is Nominated for Federal Field—Labor Men Object.

St. Catharines, Ont., March 5.—Wm. Scull, of Jordan, was the choice of a convention of United Farmers here as U. F. O. candidate in the next Federal election for Lincoln county, including this city. Mr. Scull is president of the Lincoln county branch of the U. F. O., and a former Liberal.

President McAninch, of the Lincoln County Independent Labor party, took exception to the farmers bringing out a candidate without first consulting the Labor party. He declared there was an organized attempt on the part of the United Farmers to cut away from the I. L. P., and threatened that if the convention chose a candidate without first considering the Labor party, the U. F. O. candidate would not be elected.

ANDOVER, N. B.

Andover, N. B., March 1.—The winter is gone now that it is March. Will anyone be sorry to say goodby to it?

The Baptist Young People met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Titus on Friday evening of last week for a social good time and an oyster stew. All report a pleasant evening.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Cameron are reported not in god health. They are aged and this very cold winter has been hard for them.

Mrs. Jessie Turner who has been residing in Andover for some time, is leaving for the west in the near future. She has a farm there and may remain there.

Mrs. Stanley Ritchie returned from Fort Fairfield with her young son, who has been in hospital there after an operation for appendicitis. The little chap is doing well and will soon be all right again.

Farmer's Export Market

The Canadian farmer today wants reasonable proof that any increase he makes in live stock will find its market. That is the crux of live stock farming. The farmer wants a return for his investment of capital, labor and care.

Month by month the evidence is accumulating that there is a market which the Canadian can reach of which the fringe has scarcely been touched. Prospects for exports of meats become clearer every month. Devastation of war in Europe left a deep cut in the supplies which will take years to restore, if indeed, they will ever get back to a pre-war level.

A table compiles for the International Institute of Agriculture by Mr. T. K. Doherty, LL.B., given in the Agricultural Gazette, shows that, excluding Russia, there was throughout Europe between 1914 and 1918 a drop of six million head in cattle; 9½ million head in sheep and the enormous total of 24¼ million in hogs. The last named is a loss of almost 50 per cent. Despite material increases in some countries, mainly on the American continent, in that period there was a world decrease in swine and sheep though a net increase of 7 per cent in cattle.

There is another factor which will have a more direct appeal to the far-seeing Canadian farmer. It is that for years before the war the decline in the world's supply of live stock had been proceeding so steadily and irresistibly as to amount to little less than "slow starvation" in meats. This was not confined to one country; it was universal.

Our Canadian position is typical. Between 1908 and 1916 sheep and cattle declined from 20 per cent to 25 per cent, and hogs remained about the same for the nine years. A similar tendency was noticeable in the United States, where between 1908 and 1917, despite an increase in swine, there were marked decreases in cattle and sheep.

Put in plainest English, this means that there has not been in the world for several years a sufficient number of meat producing animals to meet the demand. Especially is the demand for meat great in Great Britain, which is becoming more and more a manufacturing country. Precisely there have our Canadian meats, notably bacon, already won a high place; the product is preferred and the access to the market is easy. The lesson is obvious. More live stock should be produced on Canadian farms for export to a market already waiting for our supplies. These meat exports will be a factor of increasing importance in maintaining the general prosperity of the Dominion. The two simplified tables below show the quantity and value of farm products exported in the five-year period, 1914-1918, and give an outline of the trade which could be done were the right type of live stock produced in sufficient numbers within the Dominion:—

Canadian Meat Exports.

	1914-1919
Bacon	653
Beef	214
Hams	41
Pork	58¼
Canned Meats	41¾
Other Meats	19½
Total all meats	1,027½

(Value in millions of dollars)

	1914-1918
Bacon	142½
Beef	37½
Hams	7¼
Pork	9½
Canned Meats	12¾
Other Meats	2
Total all meats	211½

The Pig's Squeal and the Rest.

The squeal is not the only thing which is lost when a hog becomes pork. Tests at one of the largest Canadian packing plants, made within the past month, show that over 41 pounds, or about 22½ per cent. of the live weight of each hog bought on the farm is of no value to the abattoir.

The tests made with 4,185 hogs gave the following results:

	Total Weight Lbs.	Av. per hog Lbs.
Weight of Meats	475,861	113.00
Hair cleaned	3,138	.75
Edible fat	35,857	8.57
Tongues	2,498	.59
Livers	8,943	2.14
Hearts	1,826	.43
Kidneys	1,654	.40
Head meat and pork trimmings	24,343	5.81
Heads trimmed	7,055	1.68
Casings, weasand, etc.	837	.20
Grease	10,571	1.21
Fertilizer—Tankage & stock	25,286	6.04
Blood, dry	8,370	2.00
	606,239	142.82
Loss, waste	166,421	41.18
Live weight	772,660	184.00

Put in another form, 22½ cents out of every dollar paid for the live animal is for material which is waste.

There were slaughtered at Canadian inspected packing plants last year approximately 2,330,000 hogs. A waste of 41 pounds per hog, therefore, amounts approximately to 95,650,000 pounds.

The Waste Lands in Ontario Province

[Ottawa Journal.]

Mr. Cauchon makes out a logical case for his plan for the reclamation and intensive cultivation of the waste areas of older Ontario as an alternative to the encouragement of people of this province, soldiers and others, to settle in the unimproved and uninhabited parts of the west summarized, his argument urges four main advantages, as follows:

(1)—To Ontario by the retention of its people within its borders;

(2)—To the cause of production, in that the settler on the reclaimed area can from the first devote all his energies to production, whereas the settler on the wild areas cannot do much in the way of production for some years;

(3)—To the settler in the way of the amenities of life to be had by living in a settled and developed community;

(4)—To the cause of land settlement, in that people will be more inclined to go on the land and stay on it under the social and economic conditions prevailing in Ontario.

For many years Ontario has been losing too many of her best people, some of them going to the western provinces to farm, some to the labor market of the United States. If Mr. Cauchon's estimate of the extent of the waste areas of older Ontario and the practicability of their reclamation is correct, the province has within her borders a counter attraction against both the agricultural inducements of the west and the industrial demands of the United States. The cultivation of these areas would be less hazardous and generally as profitable as the cultivation of the prairies or even of New Ontario and farming in an old, settled, and well served community would not be at so great a disadvantage in comparison with life in industrial centres as farming under primitive conditions.

It has been demonstrated that the scientific cultivation of small holdings of irrigated land close to market is just as profitable as the cultivation of large tracts by regular methods of farming. Several crops a year are yielded by the irrigated land and there are no seasons of bad crops, since the dependence on weather conditions is reduced to a minimum. The farmer in Mr. Cauchon's scheme would have the further advantage of being able to easily market his produce, being close to the shipping centres and to the consumers themselves.

Only the hardiest of people will endure the disabilities of life in the hinterlands, far from friends and given neighbors, with limited social, educational and economic privileges. And those who do must spend the first few years breaking and improving the land before they can produce in any volume. Their labor, therefore, Mr. Cauchon argues, is of little avail in helping to solve the problem of production in the present time of great need.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using the well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour it into a 16-oz bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disapointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

MRS. REID GETS DIVORCE DECREE

Decree Granted to Third Wife of Tin Plate King When Jury Hears Evidence.

New York, March 5.—Mrs. Margaret Carrere Reid, the former actress and the third wife of Daniel G. Reid, the financier, whom he sued for divorce, was not only completely exonerated today as the result of the trial in Part II. of the Supreme Court, but won a decree of divorce from Mr. Reid, who interposed no objections.

The question of alimony was not raised in the undefended action, but it is understood on good authority that at the time Mr. and Mrs. Reid agreed to disagree he gave her $200,000 in cash and an allowance of $30,000 a year, and that this alowance is to be continued. Mr. Reid did not even appear in court. Mrs. Reid, although she was not required to do so, took the witness stand and denied any act of alleged impropriety.

That Mr. Reid was willing that Mrs. Reid should get a decree from him was made manifest early today, when the taking of testimony in her behalf was resumed.

The first surprise in the divorce suit brought by the financier came late yesterday afternoon, when his counsel, ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott, announced that if Mr. Reid did not intend to press his charges against Mrs. Reid involving her acquaintance with Capt. Sampson Tschernoff, the Serbian artist.

The world's simplest post office is in South America. From a high cliff overlooking the Strait of Magellan is suspended, by a long chain, a barrel which receives the mail. It has no postmaster, nor is there any letter carrier or collector. A large number of the ships that go through the strait stop and send a boat to this curious little post office, look over the mail there to see if there is anything for that particular vessel, and place therein letters for seamen on board ships that are known to be heading for the strait.

"What think you of this, young sir?" asked the painter, tearing off the cloth which concealed the flat object which he had borne beneath his arm It was a leaf-sized sheet of glass bearing upon it a face with a halo round it, so delicately outlined, and of so perfect a tint, that it might have been indeed a human face which gazed with sad and thoughtful eyes upon the young squire. He clapped his hands, with that thrill of joy which true art will ever give to a true artist.

"It is great!" he cried. "It is wonderful! But I marvel, sir, that you should have risked a work of such beauty and value by bearing it at night through so unruly a crowd."

"I have indeed been rash," said the artist. "Some wine, Tita, from the Florence flask! Had it not been for you, I tremble to think of what might have come of it. See to the skin tint; it is not to be replaced for paint as you will, it is not once in a hundred times that it is not either burned too brown in the furnace or else the color will not hold and you get but a sickly white. There you can see the very veins and the throb of the blood. Yes, diavolo! if it had broken my heart would have broken too. It is for the choir window in the church of St. Remi, and we had gone, my little helper and I, to see if it was indeed of the size for the stonework. Night had fallen ere we finished, and what could we do save carry it home as best we might? But you, young sir, you speak as if you too knew something of the art."

"So little that I scarce dare speak of it in your presence," Alleyne answered. "I have been cloister-bred, and it was no very great matter to handle the brush better than my brother novices."

"There are pigments, brush, and paper," said the old artist. "I do not give you glass, for that is another matter, and takes much skill in the mixing of colors. Now I pray you to show me a touch of your art. I thank you, Tita! The Venetian glasses, cara mia, and fill them to the brim. A seat, signor!"

While Ford, in his English-French, was conversing with Tita in her Italian-French, the old man was carefully examining his precious head to see that no scratch had been left upon its surface. When he glanced up again, Alleyne had, with a few bold strokes of the brush, tinted in a woman's face and neck upon the white sheet in front of him.

"Diavolo!" exclaimed the old artist, standing with his head on one side, "you have power; yes, cospetto! you have power. It is the face of an angel!"

"It is the face of the old Lady Maude Loring!" cried Ford, even more astonished.

"Why, on my faith, it is not unlike her!" said Alleyne, in some confusion.

"Ah! a portrait! So much the better. Young man, I am Agostino Pisano, the son of Andrea Pisano, and I say again that you have power. Further, I say, that, if you will stay with me, I will teach you all the secrets of the glass-stainers, mystery; the pigments and their thickening, which will fuse into the glass and which will not, the furnace and the glazing—every trick and method you shall know."

"I would be right glad to study under such a master," said Alleyne; "but I am sworn to follow my lord whilst this war lasts."

"War! war!" cried the old Italian. "Ever this talk of war. And the men that you hold to be great—what are they? Have I not heard their names? Soldiers, butchers, destroyers! Ah, per Bacco! we have man in Italy who are in very truth great. You pull down, you despoil; but they build up, they restore. Ah, if you could but see my own dear Pisa, the Duomo, the cloisters of Campo Santo, the high Campanile, with the mellow throb of her bells upon the warm Italian air! Those are the works of great men. And I have seen them with my own eyes, these very eyes which look upon you. I have seen Andrea Orcagna, Taddeo Gaddi, Giottino, Stefano, Simone Memmi—men whose very colors I am not worthy to mix. And I have seen the aged Giotto, and he in turn was pupil to Cimabue, before whom there was no art in Italy, for the Greeks were brought to paint the chapel of the Gondi at Florence. Ah, signori, there are the real great men whose names will be held in honor when your soldiers are shown to have been the enemies of humankind."

"Faith, sir," said Ford, "there is something to say for the soldiers also, for, unless they be defended, how are all these gentlemen whom you have mentioned to preserve the pictures which they have painted?"

"And all these!" said Alleyne. "Have you indeed done them all—and where are they to go?"

"Yes, signor, they are all from my hand. Some are, as you see, upon one sheet, and some are in many pieces which may fasten together. There are some who do put paint upon the glass, and then, by placing another sheet of glass upon the top and fastening it, they keep the air from their painting. Yet I hold that the true art of my craft lies as much in the furnace as in the brush. See this rose window, which is from the model of the Church of the Holy Trinity at Vendome, and this other of the 'Finding of the Grail,' which is for the apse of the Abbey church. Time was when none but my countrymen could do these things; but there is Clement of Chartres and others in France who are very worthy workmen. But, ah! there is that ever shrieking brazen tongue which will not let us forget for one short hour that it is the arm of the savage, and not the hand of the master, which rules over the world."

A stern, clear bugle call had sounded close at hand to summon some following together for the night.

"It is a sign to us as well," said Ford. "I would fain stay here forever amid all these beautiful things—" staring hard at the blushing Tita as he spoke—"but we must be back at our lord's hostel ere he reach it." Amid renewed thanks and with promises to come again, the two squires bade their leave of the old Italian glass-stainer and his daughter. The streets were clearer now, and the rain had stopped, so they made their way quickly from the Rue du Roi, in which their new friends dwelt, to the Rue des Apotres, where the hostel of the "Half Moon" was situated.

CHAPTER XXII.

How the Bowmen Held Wassail at the "Rose De Guienne."

"Mon Dieu! Alleyne, saw you ever so lovely a face?" cried Ford as they hurried along together. "So pure, so peaceful, and so beautiful!"

"In sooth, yes. And the hue of the skin the most perfect I ever saw. Marked you also how the hair curled round the brow? It was wonder fine."

"Those eyes, too!" cried Ford. "How clear and how tender—simple, and yet so full of thought!"

"If there was a weakness it was in the chin," said Alleyne.

"Nay, I saw none."

"It was well curved, it is true."

"Most daintily so."

"And yet—"

"What, then, Alleyne? Wouldst find flaw in the sun?"

"Well, bethink you, Ford, would not more power and expression have been put into the face by a long and noble beard?"

"Holy Virgin!" cried Ford, "the man is mad. A beard on the face of little Tita!"

"Tita! Who spoke of Tita?"

"Who spoke of aught else?"

"It was the picture of St. Remy, man, of which I have been discoursing."

THE U. S. WHISKEY REBELLION OF 1794

Michigan Disturbance Recalls Armed Uprising in Early Days of Republic.

Resistance in Iron county, Michigan, to the enforcement of prohibition is not the first instance of serious trouble which the government has had over strong drink. In 1794, when Washington was President, there was an insurrection in western Pennsylvania known in American history as "the Whiskey Rebellion." It was caused by the imposition of a heavy tax by the Federal government on the manufacture of whiskey.

The producers of whiskey in western Pennsylvania first refused to pay the duty and then tarred and feathered an official sent to collect it. Another excise official was flogged, and finally the rebels took up arms. There also was resistance to the tax in North Carolina, but the uprising in the four counties of Pennsylvania west of the Allegheny mountains was far more formidable.

That part of Pennsylvania had been settled mainly by Scotch-Irish, who were Presbyterians and men of great energy and strong convictions. They could not see the justice of laws which imposed taxes on the rye whiskey of their own domestic manufacture. The trouble was especially acute in the vicinity of Pittsburg, where many outrages were committed, and it was near Pittsburg that the excise officer was tarred and feathered.

The "Whiskey Rebellion" soon assumed the proportions of a formidable uprising against the new Federal government, then only a few years old. The mob was joined by the local militia, and at one time it was composed of from 6,000 to 7,000 men.

When the spirit of the uprising spread into neighboring counties of Virginia, President Washington and his Cabinet became alarmed.

Washington and his advisers believed, however, that the great mass of the people of the disaffected region was loyal and had been misled by traitorous leaders. Gov. Mifflin, of Pennsylvania, refused to call out the militia of the State. The President thereupon first issued a proclamation calling upon the rioters to desist from their opposition to the law. Then he called upon the Governors of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia for 13,000 men. This force was increased later to 15,000, for it was estimated that the counties in rebellion could raise 16,000 fighting men.

At a final convention held at Parkinson's Ferry on Oct. 24, 1794, resolutions were passed to submit to the Government's authority, and it was agreed that all excise duties should be paid and the excise officers might proceed safely about their business. The upshot of the "Whiskey Rebellion" was a distinct gain to the new republic, since it was seen that it had the authority and power to act quickly when its orders were questioned by armed force. But the cost of the "Whiskey Rebellion" put a severe strain on the United States treasury, since repressing the trouble entailed an expense of fully $1,500,000.

Greatest Diamond Mart in World Now 30 Years Old

Amsterdam Exchange, Once Operated in Cafe, Does Its Trading in Magnificent Building and Has More Than 1,000 Members.

The big market in Amsterdam, where diamonds worth fabulous sums are bought and sold daily in the same manner that stocks, bonds, cotton and grain are dealt in on any other exchange, is celebrating its silver jubilee. This official function should really have taken place in 1914, but was postponed. To commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the exchange directors will publish a handsome memorial.

The story of this important organization which establishes the prices of the world's diamonds is as fascinating as the history of either the London or New York Stock Exchange. In thirty years it has grown from a small group of dealers assembled in a cafe to the largest association of diamond merchants in the world, transacting their business in a magnificent building. Before the war Antwerp had the second largest diamond exchange in the world, and business in cut diamonds in that city was even larger than in Amsterdam. When Antwerp was captured by the Germans, however, the diamond merchants fled to Amsterdam.

Thrown Out of Cafe.

About half a century ago the diamond market in Amsterdam was an irregular affair, with no organization and no rules. Merchants used to gather daily in the Cafe Rembrandt on Rembrandt Square. It was easy for crooks and shady characters to mix with the merchants, and swindles and robberies were frequent. These vicious elements brought the open diamond market into such disrepute that the owner of the Cafe Rembrandt refused to permit the dealers to hold their meetings in his establishment.

This was taken as an unwarranted slur on the diamond trade, and in 1889 bona fide merchants organized a regular exchange under the name of Beurs voor den Diamanthandel. This new body held its meetings at the Geelvinck. The membership soon grew to about 300, and in 1890 the corporation rented the Casino building on Waterloo Square, which remained the home of the diamond merchants until May, 1911. In 1906, when the membership had grown to 1,000, the organization voted to erect its own building. After having failed to purchase from the Government the historical old arsenal on Waterloo Square, the directors bought a site on the Weesperplein and the Achtergracht, where a building was erected.

The cornerstone was laid on Dec. 12, 1910, by the Burgomaster of Amsterdam, and the new exchange was officially opened by Minister Talmo on Sept. 18, 1911. The building of the exchange was made possible largely by the assistance of the Incasso Bank, which assumed certain financial obligations on condition that it should have the right to open a branch office in the building. For the accommodation of the diamond merchants, a branch post office is maintained, and as Sunday trading in diamonds is extensive it is kept open on that day.

The safety vaults of the exchange are the largest in the city. They contain about 1,100 deposit boxes. A diamond merchant finds a safety deposit box indispensable to his calling.

As the Dutch believe in combining business with pleasure, the diamond exchange has a billiard room and a well appointed restaurant, in addition to its numerous offices and assembly halls.

The diamond exchange now has about 1,500 members, all of whom are men of the highest integrity. The rules and regulations concerning membership are strict, and the bylaws, designed to prevent sharp practices in the trade, are severe. This is a matter of necessity, as the diamond trade depends upon confidence. It is not a trade that can be carried on by means of samples. Precious stones must actually pass from hand to hand on the exchange, and unprincipled persons would find numerous opportunities for dishonesty.

Breaches of Trust Rare.

Brokers are sometimes entrusted with large parcels of valuable stones and the temptations are great. Yet in the history of the exchange breaches of trust have been rare. All parties interested in the diamond trade are members of the exchange, so that an offender against the rules who forfeits his membership cannot pursue the trade.

All trade disputes are submitted to the arbitration committee, which is an important organ of the exchange, so that these quarrels rarely find their way into the courts.

Members are divided into two classes, merchant members and brokers and commission men. To be admitted as a merchant member the candidate must have been in the trade at least one year. A broker must have a three years' record. Foreign merchants and brokers may be admitted as visitors when introduced by a member who is responsible for them. Foreigners visiting the exchange regularly may be admitted as foreign members. Sons and apprentices of members, young men 17 to 20 years of age, learning the trade under the tutelage of their fathers and guardians, are recognized as apprentices.

Several groups of members of the exchange have formed separate organizations, such as the Association of Diamond Merchants, and two associations of brokers and commission men, one of these dealing in rough diamonds and another dealing in cut stones. These associations are distinct from the parent body.

$250,000 TO BUY POWDER AND LACE

U. S. Representative Objects to Luxuries Being Supplied Government Employees.

Washington, March 3.—Shall Congress appropriate money for Government employees to buy chamois skins, face powder, lace, sofas and cushions? That was the question that seriously agitated the House the other day when Representative Blanton of Texas called attention to the fact that these items were named in an appropriation of $250,000 contained in the pending legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. Blanton wanted to know if the House was going to keep on appropriating money to pay for such "needless luxuries" for the benefit of the ease loving departmental employees." Mr. Blanton contended that this part of the appropriation ought to be stricken out and he offered an amendment to that effect.

"Now I take it," he said, "that the young ladies who are employees in these departments, and the dandy officers, do not need these wardrobes, lace and leather sofas, and they do not need these powders and chamois skins."

"They may or may not need the powder," suggested Representative Wood of Indiana, who had charge of the bill.

"They ought to furnish their own powder and their own chamois skin and their own lace," went on Representative Blanton, "and I take it that these officers down there in the War Department ought to work during business hours and they would not have time for all these luxuries. They have no need and there is no necessity for these leather covered sofas down there. Why cannot the War Department do without them? Do the well kept officers, after their two hours noonday lunch, which usually takes about three hours to devour, have to take a buttermilk siesta for another hour on these leather covered sofas?"

"Does not the gentleman believe that if a man ate a three hour meal he ought to have a sofa to lie down on for a while?" asked Representative McKenzie of Illinois.

Mr. Blanton replied that he had tried so often without success to get War Department officers on the telephone in the afternoon that he was compelled to believe that the sofas were used for siestas.

Some silence may be golden, but most of it is ironical.

THE DE VALERA BONDS IN AMERICA

Sold as Such They Are Nothing But a Swindle Says Wall Street Journal.

[Wall Street Journal.]

More than one inquiry has been directed to this paper as to the status of the so-called "bonds" of the equally so-called "Irish Republic." Are these being sold to Irish domestic servants, and others of a like or lower standard of intelligence, as a legitimate investment for money in the savings banks? Legally everything hangs on the terms on which the money was taken by the seller of these mere receipts.

Naturally the whole question is one of a kind which politicians are too cowardly to tackle honestly. Under our laws as affecting relations with other nations the sale of such a bond issue, directly against a friendly nation, is on all fours with recruiting or the accumulation of arms. The fact that Great Britain has made no protest does not alter the moral obliquity of such a proceeding, or make it legal.

Those who are subscribing to this fund, therefore, should be cautioned that they are not lending their money but giving it, and that those who are receiving it cannot give any valid pledge of repayment. They should ask themselves and those who are exploiting such funds what has become of the hundreds of millions of dollars subscribed to Irish agitation in this country in the past eighty years. Has there ever been any accounting for a single penny of it?

There is no intention here to pass upon the complicated and long-standing differences between Ireland and Great Britain. One side of the story has certainly never been presented in this country, due to a trait in the Englishman's character which his best friends do not altogether admire. He considers that his relations with Ireland are his business and not ours. Moreover, what the Irishman has never been able to forgive him for is his contempt.

But suppose a bond issue were floated in England, under the plea of the large number of sympathetic colored citizens in the British Empire, for a negro "republic" in the South organized on the lines of Liberia, and in protest against the failure to enforce the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of our Constitution? What should we say? Under the British law no such bonds could be offered to the British public.

Sold as bonds, the De Valera issue is nothing more nor less than a swindle. Truthfully described as a fund for Irish propaganda, with every contribution received and recorded as a gift, the proposition has another and better status, although it is still open to severe criticism.

In Irish savings banks, thanks to the prosperity Ireland has enjoyed throughout the war to an extent greater proportionately than any other country, there are deposits totalling several hundred millions of dollars. This fund has obviously remained untouched. The American subscriber to the De Valera "bonds" may well ask why. Sure this sort of patriotism begins at home?

5,000 ARMENIANS WERE MASSACRED

Maris, March 5.—The total number of Armenians who were victims in the massacre in the Marash region of Asiatic Turkey last month does not exceed 5,000, according to detailed information received by French officials. Reports from London yesterday stated the number would be between 15,000 and 20,000.

In a New York department store at the bead-bag counter a man with clothes and boots caked with the day laborer's lime and dust pawed over one beautiful bag after another with his grimy hands before he found one in broken English, he declared suited him—price $97. Then he pulled out the cash to pay for it.

FERTILIZERS FOR THE POTATO CROP

The Yield of Potatoes Will Be Approximate to Available Food Plant Supply.

Of all ordinary farm crops that of the potato is probably the most profitably responsive to liberal feeding. The acceptance of this statement does not in the least ignore the fact that there are several other factors that play a very important part toward success in potato growing—type of soil, character of season and the cultivation and spraying of the crop—but it means that with these factors favorable the crop is a very responsive one to application of plant food and that the yield will be approximately commensurate with the available plant food supply.

It is generally conceded that there is no better preparation for the crop than a clover or alfalfa sod well manured (10 to 20 tons per acre) and ploughed in the late summer or early autumn. This practice of fall ploughing ensures the decay of the sod and manure and provides a good supply of humus, which is so useful in keeping the soil moist, and at the same time allows for the preparation of plant food in forms available for the use of the crop. Spring dressings of manure are not desirable, as they tend to encourage the development of scab.

As is well recognized, soils differ greatly as to their productiveness—a quality largely dependent upon richness in available plant food—indeed there are no two soils exactly alike in this respect—and this fact makes it impossible to lay down hard and fast directions for fertilizing or to give a formula that would be equally applicable for all soils. But with a fairly good soil, from a well manured clover sod as described, we should consider 350 to 700 pounds of 3:9:6 commercial fertilizer would represent the limits that may be deemed desirable and profitable. This would mean an application of nitrogen 10½ to 21 pounds, of phosphoric acid 31½ to 63 pounds, and of potash 21 to 42 pounds, per acre. If the ingredients are purchased rather than the ready mixed fertilizers (generally the more economical plan), the amounts would be nitrate of soda 75 to 150 pounds, superphosphate 200 to 400 pounds and sulphate of potash 40 to 80 pounds, per acre. On light and very poor soils scantily manured the maximum amounts here given may be somewhat raised, dressings to 1,000 pounds or more per acre frequently proving profitable. For soils rich in nitrogen, as from closer and liberal manuring, the nitrogen in the above recommendations may be cut down one-third. On clay loams the potash may likewise be reduced one-third.

It is considered good practice by many experienced potato growers to supply a part of the nitrogen in the form of an organic nitrogenous fertilizer, as dried blood. As both fertilizers contain approximately the same percentage of nitrogen this may readily be done by replacing half the nitrate of soda in the above recommendations by an equal weight of dried blood.

Probably the best plan of application is to broadcast the fertilizer mixture on the prepared land when reworked in the spring and harrow in. If the method of putting the fertilizer in the drill or furrows is considered direct and more economical, care should be taken that the fertilizer does not come into contact with the sets.

MAVIS MILL.

Mavis Mill, N. B., Feb. 25.—A very pleasant evening was spent here recently by the mill hands of this vicinity, when Mr. Mott, the owner of the mill arrived from England to look over his property.

Mr. Mott arranged a very pleasant evening for the men employed in his mill. He himself assisted in a programme by giving several selections on the violin, which were much enjoyed by those present. R. W. Baird, manager of the mill, rendered several Scottish songs and these with selections on the mandolin and step dancing by several of the men, helped to fill out a very enjoyable programme.

Prosperity may see that justice is done a man, but he would rather attend the trial in person.

ANOTHER SINN FEIN RAID IN IRELAND

French Officers Were Attacked by A German Prince

Rough and Tumble Fight in Berlin Hotel Dining Room

KAISER'S COUSIN WAS ARRESTED

Frenchmen Refused to Stand for "Deutschland Uber Alles".

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 8.—The fashionable Adlon Hotel dining room was the scene of a rough and tumble fight Saturday night between Prince Joachim Albrecht, of Prussia, a cousin of the former German Emperor, and his guests, and Captains Klein and Roughevin and Madam Klein, members of the French mission. The hostilities were due to the French people refusing to stand while the orchestra was playing "Deutschland Uber Alles."

Joachim and his friends hurled candles, crockery and other things at the French party, and Captain Roughevin was beaten and had his clothes torn. Captain Klein was escorted out of the dining room by waiters, who defended him.

Hindenburg for President.

Berlin, March 8.—Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's candidacy for the presidency of Germany is strongly urged in an appeal that has just been issued here. The appeal, according to the Morgen Post, is the outcome of an agreement between the German nationalist party and the people's party.

The Lokal Anzieger claims to have knowledge that the Field Marshal would accept a nomination. His name has been frequently mentioned previously among the possible candidates for the next presidential term.

Order Arrest of Prince.

Berlin, March 8.—Gustav Noske, Minister of Defence, has ordered the provisional arrest of Prince Joachim Albrecht, of Prussia, cousin of former Emperor William, and Baron Von Platen, for engaging in an assault upon Captain Roughevin, a French officer with the Inter-Allied Mission in this city, at the Aldon Hotel, Saturday night.

When the Prince entered the Adlon for luncheon the following day (Sunday) he was told by the head waiter that he could not be served, and that if he insisted upon taking a seat at a table, the waiters would strike. Joachim thereupon left the building.

It is believed the attitude of the waiters is due to a decision of their union, which is opposing the reactionaries.

It is not known here whether the French have taken any action as a consequence of the incident, but it is expected that it will lead to unpleasantness for the German Government.

French to Demand Redress.

London, March 8.—General Nollet, the head of the French military mission in Berlin, has demanded an immediate audience with Foreign Minister Mueller to protest against the attack on the French party at the Hotel Adlon Saturday night by Prince Joachim Albrecht, of Prussia, and his friends, says a despatch to the London Daily Mail from Berlin today.

THE FOOD CRISIS HITS EGYPT HARD

Land Owners Stopped Growing Foodstuffs and Placed Land Under Cotton.

London, March 8.—The food crisis in Egypt is due mainly to landowners, including the land owning peasantry, increasing the area planted in cotton so as to take advantage of the soaring prices of cotton, according to the London Daily Mail's Cairo correspondent.

"Wheat and other cereals actually have been plowed up when approaching maturity in order to sow cotton," the correspondent continues, "and the cotton area is now nearly 25 per cent. greater than before the war. Normally Egypt practically feeds herself, but in view of the present shortage of cereals there is greater danger of the famished people being driven to rioting. The situation is bad in the towns, but it is worse in the country.

"Gambling in cotton seed had been disastrously widespread among all classes. Mendacity and theft are rife. Nationalist agitators are persuading the peasants that their plight is due to the British. The outlook is difficult."

PROPOSITION OF LOAN TO GERMANY

The French Government Cannot Agree in Entirety to Proposal of Allies.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Paris, March 8.—The instructions sent by the French government to its delegates at London regarding the inability of France to accept in its entirety the proposed economic declaration of the Allies, in regard to the proposition that a loan be made to Germany, guaranteed by German assets in priority to reparations payments, have resulted in the revision of that declaration, according to advices received here. Some of the proposals of the original declaration, notably the loan proposition, were regarded by France as an indirect attempt to revise the treaty of Versailles. It is stated that negotiations are continuing for still further modifications in the declaration.

BLEACHED BONES OF MISSING MEN

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Rheims, March 8.—Nearly a hundred skeletons of those who are on the great list of missing in the war have been located a few miles from here in the advanced trenches. The bleached bones were found in shell craters and also in territory which was left unscarred by the great German shells, but where the thick underbrush had hidden them from view.

In addition there are in Constantinople one legion of Italian and a battalion of British troops, and there are other British forces in the region of the straits. A British division is spread over Anatolia between Scutari and Brusa, while the French have a division in western Thrace, the newspaper says.

MEN ARE EFFEMINATE.

Cardinal O'Connell Says There is a Growing Weakness Among the Men of America.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Boston, March 8.—Growing weakness on the part of the men of the country is developing a sinister feminism Cardinal O'Connell told a gathering of men at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross last night.

Man, as the head of the house, he said, should assert his proper authority in the house. Failure to do this, the Cardinal asserted, leads to a false faminism, which, unless it is curbed in time, will have disastrous results for humanity.

"The women are becoming masculine, if you please, and the men are becoming effeminate. This is disorder."

OCEAN SHIPPING TO INCREASE RATES

High Cost of Bunker Coal in England Given as Reason for the Increase.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 8.—Freight rates on ocean shipping from England would be increased at least fifty per cent. by a movement now in progress, says the London Times, in order to meet the high cost of bunker coal here. Coal in the port of London this week will cost 115s. per ton compared with 15 to 18 shillings before the war, the newspaper says. This coal can be secured by industrial plants in the United Kingdom for 40 shillings per ton.

"So heavy is the cost of coal that some owners assert they may have to seriously consider the question of laying up their ships," the newspaper states.

TOBOGANNING ON SUNDAY STOPPED

Ottawa Police Ban Sunday Amusements at Instance of Lord's Day Alliance.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Ottawa, March 8.—Following an investigation by Toronto officials of the Lord's Day Alliance and Chief of Police Hamilton of the county police, the Sunday tobogganing at Rockcliffe has been ordered stopped, because the running of the slide is a breach of the Sunday Observance Act. The slide was closed yesterday and will not be open on Sunday again this season. Last Sunday many thousands attended the slide.

The city of Ottawa has been under the vigilant eyes of Toronto officials of the Alliance Association for a number of months, and several investigations having already been carried out regarding the various Sunday amusements in the capital.

Chief Hamilton received a letter from Rev. E. B. Snyder, of the Toronto Lord's Day Alliance, about two weeks ago, asking him to conduct an investigation and make a report on the Sunday tobogganing.

Shortly after he supplied the necessary information to Toronto, Mr. Snyder arrived in Ottawa and further investigation followed. The investigation into Sunday amusements in Ottawa is the third this season. On the two previous ocasions officials of the Alliance journeyed from Toronto to Ottawa to investigate the legality of music and sacred concerts in the theatres here on Sunday.

ULSTER DELEGATION BACK FROM AMERICA

Irish Author Would Hang Both Carson and De Valera and All Other Extremists.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 8.—In addressing the Ulster Unionist Council last Friday, Sir Edward Carson, Ulster Unionist leader, recommended that Ulster abandon its opposition to the Irish home rule bill and accept the bill now before parliament, says the London Daily Mail this morning.

Say Americans With Ulster.

Belfast March 8.—The Ulster delegation, which has been visiting Canada and the United States, returned here yesterday.

Rev. Louis Crooks said that the mission had been a triumphant success, and that the American people were absolutely with Ulster.

Hang Both Carson and DeValera.

Toronto, March 8.—St. John Ervine, Irish playwright and author, in an interview here on Saturday said:

"I am dead against an Irish republic, because it would be very bad for Ireland, and because the English would, very rightly, be opposed to it."

Mr. Ervine, who was born in Belfast, and lost a leg in the war, said he was a follower of Sir Horace Plunkett and believed in Dominion Home Rule.

One of the mistakes, in his opinion, was the appointment of Lord French to the position of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, who, he said, possessed no qualifications for civil government.

"Ireland is suffering at the hands of extremists," said Mr. Ervine, "I would hang both Carson and De Valera—Carson first, to be sure of him."

EXTEND WORK OF RED CROSS SOCIETY

Voluntary Relief Work Among the Starving and Diseased Peoples of Europe.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Geneva, March 8.—Acting upon an appeal by Arthur J. Balfour, as President of the Council of the League of Nations, the Board of Governors of the League of Red Cross Societies, in session here yesterday, passed resolutions declaring for the extension of voluntary relief work among the starving and diseased population of central and eastern Europe, provided that the essentials for food, clothing and transportation be previously assured these peoples through governmental action.

Lady Drummond of Canada, speaking in the organization section, said the future duty of the Red Cross throughout the world, would be to supply the morale equivalent for war, it would assume a moral role, as well as that of physical edpcator. Canada, she said, was the first country to follow the American example of organizing a Junior Red Cross, which had been such a powerful factor in the development of the American Red Cross.

The enlargement of the Board of Governors from five members to fifteen, as authorized by the articles of organization, was voted by the congress. Canada, Australia, Argentina, Brazil, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Serbia, Spain and Switzerland will each supply one of the ten new governors.

Sufferings of Refugees.

Constantinople, March 8.—Cheated of his prey at Neverossisk, death pursued 800 refugees who had fled from that city on board the steamer Navajo, at the approach of Russian soviet forces, and assumed the dread forms of disease and shipwreck, cold and starvation. It was only after a heroic struggle with the elements that the staunch craft arrived here with its cargo of emaciated and starving passengers.

Eighteen hours after the Navajo had left port, the vessel, which had been charterer by the American Red Cross to bring the fugitives out of southern Russia, was struck by a blizzard, which for two days buffeted the ship and prevented it making hardly any headway. The ship was short of provisions and fuel and in the midst of the storm it was found there was no food on board and that the bunkers were empty. Then, for four days, the Navajo drifted helpless, a mere delelict, in the middle of the Black Sea, while the hurricane raged.

Typus apeared on board, and lacking facilities for fighting the scourge, the refugees saw the bodies of scores of their shipmates consigned to the waters. Others, weakened by cold and privations before they came on board, succumbed to their sufferings. At last another refugee ship picked up the Navajo and managed to get a hawser aboard. She was then towed toward the Bosphorus. Hundreds of the passengers arrived here with their hands and feet frozen.

GOVERNOR SMITH DENOUNCES HEARST

Hearst Papers Have Done More to Create Unrest Than Any Other Agency in U. S.

New York, March 6.—Governor Smith in a speech delivered here last night reopened the campaign which was waged against Wm. Randolph Hearst by many prominent citizens during the war. The Governor, in a slashing attack, accused Mr. Hearst of diverting to his own use almost one thousand dollars' worth of army food, which he said was intended to feed the poor of New York city.

"And I want to see some real newspaper ask him tomorrow whether he paid for it," said the Governor, according to reports printed in the morning papers here.

The Governor has bills before the assembly providing for municipal ownership, minimum wages, milk supply regulation and other reforms, but has been unable to get action on them. Speaking in regard to this legislation he is quoted as having said:

"Where is Hearst? Where is this champion of the poor, this defender of the downtrodden? He is all of that when it suits his own political purposes and at no other time. This millionaire ranch owner from California took nearly one thousand dollars' worth of army food that was sent here to relieve the distress of the poor and sent to his own home. And I'd like one of the real newspapers tomorrow to ask him whether he paid for it."

He pointed out that a special committee had been investigating unrest, Bolshevism and anarchy.

"Yet," he declared, "that committee has not yet started investigation of these newspaper, which have done more to create such unrest than any other agency."

TRY BURKE AGAIN FOR MAINE MURDER

Augusta, Me., March 7.—Regarding the rumors that John A. Burke would not be tried again for the murder of Nelson W. Bartley, Attorney General Sturgis said today:—

"So fas as I know, Burke will be tried again. I have never felt that the financial side should prevent the establishment of a man's innocence or guilt to the satisfaction of all. This can only be done in Burke's case by another trial and a final verdict by the jury. The idea of a nol pros for this case has never entered my mind. It isn't a question of what the trial cost or what another trial will cost. The only question is, 'Is Burke guilty?' This must be determined by means of a jury trial."

BISHOP POWER IS DEAD AT SYDNEY

Sydney, March 6.—The Right Rev. Michael F. Power, Bishop of Saint George's, Newfoundland, died here this morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cozzolino following a brief illness from pneumonia. He had suffered for some time from chronic asthma and bronchial trouble and came here recently for treatment. He was 43 years old and is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Power, of St. John's, Newfoundland. Four brothers and three sisters also survive. One brother, Gerald, was with her at the time of death. The remains will be taken to Newfoundland for interment. Bishop Power, a former student of St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, had been Bishop of St. George's since 1911.

OBITUARY.

Rev. Charles G. McCully.

St. Stephen, N. B., March 7.—Rev. Charles G. McCully, one of the best known clergymen of the Congregational denomination in the New England States, died at his home in Calais Saturday evening at the advanced age of 87 years. He was a native of New York State and in younger life had travelled extensively, subsequently delivering interesting lectures on lands that he had visited.

Emma Colebrook Neales.

The many friends in the city of Mrs. Emma Colebrook Neales, widow of the late Archdeacon Neales, of Woodstock, will regret to learn of her death which occurred at South Lawrence, Mass., Saturday. The deceased lady was of a most lovable character and was held in the highest esteem by a wide circle of devoted friends. She leaves one son and three daughters to mourn her death. Funeral services will be at Woodstock.

Judge Emery Grover.

Dedham, Mass., March 5.—Judge Emery Grover, 75, Maple street, Needham, Justice of the District Court of Northern Norfolk since its institution in 1898, dropped dead today of apoplexy, in a street car in Memorial Square. Judge Grover was on his way to court, and was accompanied by Samuel H. Wragg, a court officer. As he arose to leave the car he fell back into his seat. He was removed to Dedham police station. Dr. Andrew H. Hodgdon was summoned, and upon arrival said death had been instantaneous.

Judge Grover was a native of New Brunswick, born at Fredericton in 1845. Receiving his early education there, he removed to Montreal and later came to Boston and entered the Harvard Law School at Cambridge. He was admitted to the Suffolk County Bar in July, 1869. He is survived by his wife, who was Lydia A. Orr, of Fredericton, whom he married in January, 1868, in that city, and a sister, Jennie F. Grover, of Fredericton.

WESTERN MEMBERS TO VISIT ST. JOHN

St. John, March 8.—A delegation of members of Parliament from Ontario and the West will visit St. John next Saturday to look over the harbor and get a bird's-eye view of the transportation system, according to R. W. Wigmore, M. P., who arrived home on Saturday. Mr. Wigmore has been busy since the House opened organizing arrangements for the projective jaunt of M. P.'s, and he says the delegation will number between 25 and 30 members, selected mainly because of their interest in transportation.

REV. E. M'L. SMITH GOING TO ILLINOIS

St. John, March 8.—Rev. E. McL. Smith, who took so prominent a part in the inter-church forward movement campaign for New Brunswick, received word from the state of Illinois on Saturday afternoon that he had been appointed director for the inter-church forward movement for that state. He will leave this afternon for Chicago, where his headquarters will be. He expected the work of organization in Illinois will occupy him for about two months, after which he may return to Ontario. Mr. Smith made many friends during his stay in New Brunswick, and all will regret his departure and wish him success in his new field. Mr. Smith had hoped to occupy the pulpit of St. David's church for one month, but his appointment has prevented him from carrying out his wish in this regard.

When a man living on a rural delivery route complained to the postmaster at Augusta, Me., that he hadn't got any mail for a week or two the postmaster said that the carrier had been covering the route every day on snowshoes. Then the man went home and, according to his story, discovered some snowshoe tracks that had escaped his notice and following them up found that the carrier had been leaving his mail day after day in the birdhouse on the ridgepole of his barn.

SEEK TO KEEP ALIVE KING'S COLLEGE

Friends of the Institution Combat Proposed Amalgamation With Dalhousie.

Windsor, N. S., March 4.— The "Friends of King's," an organization founded some seventeen years ago to combat the proposed amalgamation of King's and Dalhousie, which was then being discussed, met here today to discuss the present situation at King's. As the organization has for some years been quiescent, an election of officers took place. Those elected were W. F. Payzant, president; W. K. Dimock, vice-president; Dr. M. A. B. Smith, secretary-treasurer; Rev. Noel Wilcox, assistant secretary, and a committee of eight. A publicity committee was appointed to undertake the preparation of a booklet setting forth the history, work and claims of King's College, Windsor, and a finance committee was elected to supply funds for the publicity campaign.

The draft of a statement by Archdeacon Vroom, setting forth the case for rebuilding at Windsor was unanimously adopted and ordered to be printed for widespread circulation. The opinion of the Church people in the provinces and the alumni to determine their mind upon the question will be sought. The action of this society will be in support of the resolution of the alumni at their recent meeting, calling for an immediate campaign to raise $500,000 for the purpose of rebuilding on the old site.

The meeting was united and enthusiastic in its determination to set King's on a proper footing. Letters and telegrams were received from prominent Churchmen and others interested in the college in zealous advocacy of consolidating the gains of the last 130 years, during which time King's has rendered splendid service to the couse of education. These letters were not confined to the Maritime Provinces, but came from all parts of Canada and the United States. The urgency of prompt action commended itself to the meeting and the publicity campaign wil be started at once.

It takes a has-been a long time to find it out.

Government Has Nothing to Fear

King Amendment, When It Comes to a Show Down on Tuesday, Will Be Defeated By a Majority of 35—No Further Defections from Government Ranks Expected.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 8.—The Government does not look forward with any great degree of anxiety to the vote on the King amendment, which will probably be taken on Tuesday.

The Government whips are counting on a majority of thirty-five, which is a pretty heavy drop from the 70 with which they came back from the country three years ago, but still quite large enough to warrant the confidence members of the Government feel in being able to stand all the external assaults which may be made upon them.

The King amendment has had the effect of clearing the political atmosphere to a great extent, and as nothinging more radical is likely to be proposed until the tariff comes on, the Government is quite safe for the present. Whether there will be a further defection from its ranks on the tariff is questionable. There is a belief that this is the call for "All ashore who are going ashore," and those who remain by the Government now will do so throughout.

Probable Tariff Concessions.

They may have their allegiance made easier by some tariff concessions which the Cabinet is now said to be arranging. The fact that even with reductions of last year, and in face of the predictions the then Finance Minister made of decreased revenue there has been an actual increase of customs collections, has strengthened the argument from some of the Government's western followers that further reductions this year are possible.

Meanwhile the leader of the Opposition has made the public statement that he is in deadly earnest with his resolution, and he will start a Dominion-wide campaign immediately at the end of the present session, beginning in Western Canada, and will compel the Government by the force of public opinion to appeal to the electorate.

The Senate to Adjourn.

The Senate will adjourn on Thursday for several weeks, or until after Easter, as there will probably be nothing for them to do until the Commons gets some bills through. After the Address is through some interim estimates to enable the country to carry on will be passed, and a supply bill for a percentage of the estimates will be presented to the Senate before it adjourns.

There will probably be a Government caucus on Thursday to consider the Premier's memorandum of policy which was presented on the eve of his departure last session, which will be supplemented by some further suggestions made in the light of the trend of public opinion since that time. As it has been announced that Sir Robert expects to return before the end of the session, it is probable that no definite action will be taken now in the formation of a permanent organization, although the general sentiment toward that end may again be recorded.

CANADA'S INDIANS.

Advanced Legislation by Which the Indians Come Into Complete Citizenship.

Among the important pieces of legislation which will be brought before the House this session will be an act designed to do a measure of justice to the first possessors of this country. It will be placed before Parliament by Hon. Arthur Meighen and will be the most advanced legislation of the kind ever introduced in this continent in dealing with those who have been the wards of the white race so long. It contemplates nothing less than the elevation of the Indians of Canada from the position of wards of the Crown to that of complete and responsible citizenship by means of compulsory enfranchisement and compulsory education. Under the old Indian Act a member of a band could only be enfranchised after passing through two probationary periods of three years each, and then only with the consent of his tribe. The new Act will release him altogether from tribal control, and make him to all respects and purposes an independent Canadian citizen. In the half a century since Confederation only 160 Indians, all told, have been given the franchise. Many of the more progressive among them were eager for it, but tribal influence prevented. Notwithstanding the fact that they were not full citizens of Canada, the Indians made a very fine record in enlistment, over 3,000 coming forward to fight for the Great White Father.

A Radical Enactment.

This record of the recognition of the responsibilities of even the nominal citizenship which they had is to be recognized in the provisions of the new Act. In 1918 a law was passed enabling those who had no land, or who had waived their right to tribal lands to secure the franchise and since that time over 200 have taken advantage of the opportunity showing that they value the franchise. The new Act permits the enfranchisement of Indians by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs without application, after investigation into the qualifications of the applicant.

It is a radical enactment and will be required to be administered with great care. In the matter of education and equality radical departure will be made under the existing Act. The enforcement of school attendance is impossible, and while many of the Indians show anxiety that their children should be educated, the Government has no legal means of enforcing attendance. The new Act provides for the compulsory attendance of Indian children at Government boarding schools. Religious segregation will be carefully maintained, the children being sent to Catholic or Protestant schools as desired.

Many Indians Fully Qualified.

Many of the Indians, in eastern Canada particularly, are fully qualified for citizenship by their industry, education and manual skill. Notable among such are the Lorette band in Quebec province, who are the descendants of the great Huron Nation, and the Caughnawagas, mighty lacrosse players and bridge builders, many of whom went down with the wreck of the Quebec bridge a few years ago. In western Ontario also many of the Indians near Brantford, Sarnia and other parts are intelligent and fitted for the privilege of the vote.

In western Canada the progress of the Indian has been slower as they were later to experience civilizing influences and were stronger in their tribal associations and customs, yet many of them have become good and progressive farmers, even under conditions which were not always of the best. A large number of them in the West are self-sustaining, while in British Columbia, as a result of the sale of valuable tribal lands, the Senghees and other tribes are wealthy. The new move inevitably means the passing of the power of the chief, which was often very great, and there will probably be some resentment on the part of individuals, who may conduct a fight against the new move.

SUNDAY SERVICES IN CITY CHURCHES

Large Congregations in Spite of Storms Heard Splendid Sermons.

At the George Street Baptist church yesterday morning, the pastor, Rev. Z. L. Fash, preached another preparatory sermon on the spiritual drive which will begin next Monday.

He stated that there were some things we should forget and some things we should remember, but most of us had too good memories in reference to the faults of others. Memory should be a spur urging us to deal squarely with our fellow man. The pastor stated that there were too many called themselves Christians like Mr. Bye-ends in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, always liking the silver tinkle following the religious service. No pastor ever began a Forward Movement Campaign without some opposition from the people in his church.

At the evening service the pastor chose as his subject "Why Are You Not a Christian." The question was a searching one and was faithfully answered in a splendid sermon.

St. Paul's Presbyterian Church.

At St. Paul's Presbyterian church Rev. L. A. Buckley, Boys' Work Secretary of the Maritime Y. M. C. A., preached the morning sermon, delivering a splendid appeal to the older members of the congregation for assistance in looking after the men of a future age. He chose as his subject The Importance of Looking After Boys.

In the evening Rev. J. S. Sutherland, the pastor, occupied the pulpit, choosing as his subject, The Refusal of the Rich Young Ruler to Follow Christ. Miss Edna Baird and Mrs. Lockwood rendered a splendid duet.

Methodist Church.

At the morning service of the Methodist church yesterday the pastor, Rev. G. M. Young, occupied the pulpit, taking as his subject, The Necessity of the Right Attitude Towards the Sun-rising.

At the evening service Rev. L. A. Buckley delivered a splendid address on The Relation of the Boy to Citizenship of Today and the Future.

Brunswick Street Baptist Church.

Rev. G. C. Warren occupied the pulpit at the morning service, delivering the fourth of a series of sermons on the Emotions of Jesus. In the evening the pastor delivered the last of a series of three sermons, taking as his subject, The Respectable Sinner.

In the afternoon Rev. Low A. Buckley addressed the Tuxis boys of the Brunswick Street Baptist church, showing them the importance of an early determination between right and wrong.

Christchurch Parish Church.

At the evening service of Christchurch Parish Church, A. M. Gregg, Provincial Boys' Work Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., occupied the pulpit delivering an excellent address on Sunday School Work and the 'Teen Age Boys.

Rev. G. W. Millidge, of St. John, assisted with the evening service.

HON. MACKENZIE-KING'S AMENDMENT.

It is admittedly absurd to say that a Government backed by a substantial majority in Parliament does not represent the people; and any action based by a minority of the Commons on such a ridiculous hypothesis can result only in a waste of valuable time and in the humiliation of the men responsible for it. There may be good reasons for a belief that an appeal to the people should be made at an early day, but these reasons are certainly not based upon a notion that the present Federal Government is not representative of the masses. Mackenzie-King's amendment takes the absurd view. Large questions are looming up, of which the tariff is but one. Can it be assumed that this or any other Government would be warranted, with experience to date and such information as it now has, in settling upon a policy in respect of each? And if warranted in determining policies, would it be wise to submit them for the serious consideration and action of the people during a period of general unrest, not alone in Canada, but throughout the world, when the public mind is not broadly receptive? Well defined policy or policies of an Opposition in Parliament would have made a basis for a reasonable amendment. If the Opposition is not without a clear-cut policy, if the factions can agree among themselves, if the party is not insincere in its professions, why such an amendment as that offered by Mackenzie-King?

The Commons under our system reflects public opinion. Supported by a majority, it is the duty of the Government to "carry on" until the end of the term, unless in its wisdom it is desirable in the meantime to submit questions of policy to the people. It is advanced by the partizan critics that the mandate to the Government expired with the completion of demobilization of our troops. It would be unreasonable to assume that the elections of 1917 were not for a parliamentary term; there is absolutely no record that they were not; there was no suggestion at the time that they were not. The Government, sustained by an enormous popular vote, continues to heartily enjoy the confidence of the then chosen representatives of the people, and in this country there can be no better mandate. The fact that two or three or four members of Government have resigned, either because of ill-health or for some other reason, does not effect the situation; it is absurd to argue that these resignations create a doubt as to the status of the present Government. Mr. Crerar too, in his dilemma, practically insists that the mandate is withdrawn. And, by the process of reasoning, he too is sitting in Parliament without a mandate; and surely the demonstratively correct Mr. Crerar would not be guilty of such a great breach as that! Did he accept his seat in the Commons only for the duration of the War? If so he should, in accordance with his contention, have resigned that seat when he resigned his position in the Cabinet. If he feels, however, that he is yet fully entitled to the seat which he continues to occupy in the Commons as a representative of the people, he must concede that his fellow members are also not without the mandate; then, based on his own action, the Government must reflect the popular will.

It may be wise or it may be unwise in the Government not to fully reconstruct at the present time; the public interests might be better served by the announcement of policies broadened to meet the needs of the present and the future, and of promptness in action; but in whatever it does, or in whatever it does not do, it has the support and confidence of a substantial majority of the people's representatives. There are many no doubt who desire greater activity, who want to see questions settled and principles adopted or readopted, and that is natural; yet in this period of world-wide uncertainty, of world-wide unrest, we in Canada must be prudent and cautious.

THE RENTAL PROBLEM.

The Montreal commission to arbitrate between landlords and tenants has given an outline of the course it is to follow with the hope of having reduced some of the abnormal and unjustifiable rent increases. Protesting tenants are to be furnished with cards to be filled out for the committee's consideration. Details as to the size of family, number of rooms in domicile, increases in rent and when made, etc., are to be furnished. The facts will be scrutinized and where there seems to be profiteering without reasonable excuse, the matter will be taken up with the landlord and an attempt made to secure fairer terms for the tenant. There is to be no force other than moral suasion at the committee's disposal, and it remains to be seen if this will prove effective to any considerable extent, remarks the Montreal Gazette. Possibly some grasping owners may be moved by the fear of publicity to moderate their demands, but it is to be feared that in general the tenants will not find relief. Only a few may care to take their cases to the committee in the first place, and a proprietor who has nerve enough to add 25 and 50 and even a higher per cent. increase to a rental for a place not worth the amount demanded, will in all likelihood be determined enough to defy criticism and reject interference between himself and his tenant. The policy of the day is to get every cent possible for services rendered, regardless of their worth. The worker demands greater compensation, with more or less reason, and frequently wins his case. The manufacturer simply adds the increased cost to his charges, and so it goes all along the line. The landlord argues that he is entitled to do the same as the maker, the wholesaler and the retailer, and the workingman, and who is to check him in the universal game of grab all, which is keener and more merciless than ever before in the world's history? The popular uplift is the paw elevated in an attempt to grasp wealth with the least possible effort. Get what you can while the getting is good is the motto for many. This tendency is one of the things the recently appointed mediation committee will have to contend with in its attempt to secure justice in the matter of disputed rent cases. And as long as there is a dwelling scarcity rents will be high and the man who wishes to profit unduly thereby will have his opportunity.

MONEY FOR GERMANY.

The reported purpose of the Supreme Council to sanction a foreign money loan to Germany, will cause more surprise than perhaps it need. The surprise will arise from the previous expectation that the defeated would supply rather than obtain the good things. Good money is scarce. Several nations of the group that won in the military contest would gladly obtain the privilege that the Council apparently meditates according to the vanquished.

But these contradictions lie only on the surface. If the council should indeed go so far as to grant priority of lien to the suggested loan, over the funded reparation claims of the victor Powers, this would only work as a measure to attract from neutral countries to Germany some portion of the sound cash there so sadly lacking. Should such a plan succeed the Ally Powers would probably gain in certain important respects. They would supply their debtor with working capital, and yet would not themselves sacrifice either their cash, their chances of indemnification or their financial control of the debtor country's affairs as majority creditors.

The hopes of ultimate dividends on the vast compensatory obligation of the defeated invader of France and Belgium would improve by the successful flotation of a soundly arranged loan such as is forecast.

The Finance Minister gave an attentive ear last week to a delegation representing the business interests of the various parts of Canada who pressed objections to the Business Profits Tax. This tax is, in very many respects, decidedly objectionable, and clearly the Finance Minister would be pleased to remove it if another practicable source of revenue can be discovered. He may, possibly, in any event remove it; but the urgent need of revenue, of more revenue, is what Sir Henry Drayton must meet now. To what source can we look?

It is pleasing to note the rapid, wholesome progress of enterprising Moncton. Its opportunities are not broader than those of several other cities and towns within the Maritime Provinces, but the citizen's sense of responsibility, his ability to promote intelligently and unselfishly, and his commendable pride and confidence in the home town are ever present.

What are the Unionists doing in the way of local organization? It is true that the general elections may not be called until 1922, but local organization is a present need.

MAINE HUSBAND ASKS FOR ALIMONY

The unusual case of a husband petitioning the court for alimony is before the Sagadahoc County Court at Bath, Me. Besides petitioning for a divorce Willard O. Eastman, of Bath, asks for the custody of his five-year-old child and for alimony. Eastman states that he and his wife, Elsie B. Eastman, were married at Salisbury, N. B., on Sept. 9, 1914, and that his wife deserted him on Dec. 10, 1916.

FRASER MEMORIAL HOME DISCUSSED

Meeting of King's Daughters Held at St. John on Saturday.

St. John, March 8.—The provincial executive of the King's Daughters met on Saturday at their rooms, Chipman Hill, Miss Thorne, Mrs. C. C. Jones, Miss Cooper, members of the executive, came from Fredericton and conferred with the St. John members of the provincial executive, who are: Mrs. A. P. Crocket, Mrs. George Henderson, Mrs. J. S. Flagler, Mrs. D. W. Puddington, Mrs. Frank Likely and Mrs. George Dishart. One of the chief items of business before the executive was the consideration of the project whether or not the order will take over the Fraser Memorial Home for Aged Men and Women at Fredericton. The ladies had luncheon at the Sign O the Lantern, Germain street, and resumed session again in the afternoon, when an open meeting was held. At this meeting, which was attended by a number of members of the order, a resolution was passed that the order in St. John would support any action in regard to the Fraser Memorial Home decided upon by the provincial committee.

NEWLY APPOINTED FISHERY OFFICERS

Those Employed on St. John River District Met to Receive Instructions from Chief.

St. John, March 8.—A conference for the benefit of the recently appointed fishery officers of the St. John river district, of which H. E. Harrison is the senior officer, and of the Bay of Fundy district, which is in charge of F. J. Calder, of Campobello, was held in the Board of Trade rooms Saturday.

The men were addressed by Chief Officer of Fisheries Ward Fisher, who explained to them their responsibilities and duties, the methods to be used in dealing with fishery problems, and the provisions of the Fisheries Act in regard to the prosecuting of violators.

Dr. E. E. Prince, chief biologist of the department, spoke on fish life and especially of the varieties to be found in the waters of the province, describing their habits and spawning seasons.

The newly appointed fishery officers attending Saturday's meeting included F. A. Batson, Westpool; V. A. Rigby, St. Andrews; C. T. Conway, Beaver Harbor; Bruce Barnes, Buctouche; J. E. Fournier, Campbellton, and A. J. Arseneault, Fredericton.

SHOOTS HIS RIVAL WOUNDS HIS WIFE

Massachusetts Man in Jealous Rage—Woman May Die from Injuries.

Franklin, Mass., March 6.—Mrs. Joseph Botta, 32, of Moore avenue, was accidentally shot by her husband tonight when, in a fit of jealous rage, he opened fire with a 32 calibre revolver on an alleged admirer. She is in a serious condition at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, where she was taken on the 9.40 train. Botta gave himself up to Chief of Police Freeman Knowlton and is being held pending the outcome of her injury.

According to Knowlton, Botta returned home about 7.30 and found his wife receiving attentions from Pasquale Bozzela, a boarder with a family occupying the lower part of the same house. He immediately began firing. The first two shots went wild. The third, aimed at Bozzela when he was standing almost in front of Mrs. Botta, missed him and entered her stomach about three inches below the heart.

Botta threw the revolver aside and rushed to the aid of the woman. Failing to check the flow of blood, he went to a telephone and called Dr. Leland Smith. Dr. Smith called Dr. John Crowley. Chief Knowlton was notified and, as preparations were being made to move the woman to Boston, Botta, sobbing, was led away to the town lock-up.

According to residents in the house Botta has been jealous of Bozzella for some time and is alleged to have warned him on several occasions to keep away from his wife. The couple have been residents of Franklin for several years and own the house in which the tragedy occurred. Mrs. Botta has a brother living in Attleboro. Botta has no relatives in this country.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 8—The week on the stock exchange began with further reactions from recent high levels, General Motors at an advance of six points proving the only noteworthy exception. Among industrials oils and rails declines extended from large fractions to 2½ points. Crucible and Republic Steels, Mexican Petroleum, Royal Dutch, Canadian Pacific and Rock Island reflected the most pressure. The large decrease in actual reserves reported by the clearing house last Saturday and another set-back on the foreign exchange probably contributed to the early reversal.

TIP FOR TRAVELLERS.

Quebec, March 6.—Here's a useful tip to Canadians who are going overseas to France:

"If you go to Europe, don't bring the usual drafts, but a letter of credit."

Information substantiating this advice comes in a letter received in Quebec today from Dr. Louis Philippe Hebert, who says that a draft is useless to the traveller who has to leave France. There is a law in France which forbids any one from going to another country with more than 1,000 francs. Some time ago, says the letter, a Canadian who was travelling in Europe was arrested and detained at the Italian border on this ground. Dr. Hebert says that he himself was inconvenienced lately on a trip he took to Belgium. He says that with a letter of credit all may travel freely without any interference.

PETITCODIAC, N. B.

Petitcodiac, N. B., March 3.—C. T. Munroe has returned from his annual trip to New York, where he attended the fur sales.

Herbert Reynolds, of the Codiac House, who was so badly burned by using parafine in making the furnace fire, is improving. A returned soldier who treated gas burns overseas rendered Mr. Reynolds first aid.

Miss Bessie Coates, who has been suffering from influenza, is much improved.

Wm. Smith, who has been lumbering in Albert county, returned home last week.

Mrs. D. A. Trites and Mrs. McGee have been confined to the house with severe colds.

Dr. Somers is able to be up again after his recent illness.

Mr and Mrs. Vinton Copp are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter at the home of Mrs. Copp's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Bleakney.

Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Archibald are rejoicing in the birth of a son.

Miss Nan Gifford was the guest of her cousin, Masie Ryan, Friday and Saturday.

Rev. and Mrs. John Young were the guests of Mrs. Young's brothers, Hugh and Robert Church.

Mr. Gregg occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church Sunday evening.

The operetta, The Postmistress' was given in the hall last evening by the Dramatic Society and was much enjoyed by a large audience. The parts were well taken and music good. The sum of $118 was taken from sale of tickets. The lunches sold by the Women's Institute netted over $22. The whole proceeds go towards the Memorial Hall fund.

A. M. Gregg, of St. John, is at the Barker House.

FROM THE PEOPLE

WOULD DROP SWIFTLY.

Sir,—The letter in your issue of Feb. 27 called forth an answer in your issue of March 2 which is decidedly misleading. The suggestion made that a man jumping into a hole that pierced the earth through its centre would fall with an accelerating speed, finally attaining 21,000,000 feet per second. Such a speed would only be reached by a body falling through a vacuum. The inertia and friction of the air would in a few seconds retard acceleration and a falling body would pass only slightly beyond the earth's centre and take a much longer time to arrive there.

Another important factor was not mentioned. If the hole began at one pole and ended at the other pole, and the earth had no gyratory motion, a falling body would not hit the sides; but if the portals of the hole were at the equator the falling body would be pressed against the side and the experimenter would scrape his way to the centre of the earth, even in a vacuum.

When beginning the fall the body would be travelling from west to east equal to the rate that the surface of the earth is travelling in its daily rotation. Descending the hole each point would face a decreasing speed until the centre was reached, when this motion would cease or be without displacement. The inertia of the falling body would carry it to the east side of the pole.

The experimenter would have a tough passage.

Yours,
G. E. F.

EQUAL TREATMENT FOR ALL

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—In reading an item in your column From the People entitled This Soldier Is Against Bonus, I would like to give my views.

I must say I cannot quite agree with him. He says, let us show ourselves men and patriots—as I hope we all did. I myself can do without the bonus, if from drummer boy to General does the same.

This being a war of equality, is it fair now that we should have to pay high taxes to give those in higher command a large gratuity when they did no more than we did as far as duty goes? We appreciate what Canada did for us while we were overseas; she could have done no better; but why not be equal now as then? War levels all.

Yours,
ONE WHO HAS ALSO FOUGHT.
Plaster Rock, March 4, 1920.

WANTS A GOOD MEAL.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I ask, can nothing be done to stop this profiteering? I am the wife of a working man, and get $20 per week to support four of us. Out of that I pay $12.75 for wood per month, and $25 for rent, and $2.50 for electric light. I am on the verge of distraction. My rent has gone up from $18 to $25 in one year. Will someone not try and do something? I would give the world for a good square meal.

Yours,
POOR MAN'S WIFE.
Fredericton, March 6, 1920.

WHY THE DISRESPECT?

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Will you allow me a little space in your People's Column to express my views on the apparent laxity among the growing generation in regard to the National Anthem. Take any public gathering, the pictures for instance, at which God Save the King is played. How many of the children who are attending school, or grown people, for that matter, stand during the moment or two that is required for its playing? Are the children of the present day being brought up without any loyalty for their country? Surely the teachers in our schools should instil into the minds of the young the love we should have for our National Anthem.

A great deal has been written and said on the great part claimed by the Americans in winning the world war. Some of us have laughed at the amount of glory they claimed for what they had done, but I have yet to visit a public gathering of any kind in the United States where their National Anthem is played and see children and grownups dashing madly out before the first bars are sounded. The love of the National Anthem is instilled in the heart of every child of the United States and it is about time our children were taught to love theirs and stand at attention during the rendering of the National Hymn.

Yours,
AN INTERESTED ONE.

MUCH SICKNESS AT MARYSVILLE

Schools Were Closed Friday on Account of Illness of the Teachers.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Marysville, N. B., March 8.—The Merry Makers' Club of the Methodist church held a successful bean supper in Castle Hall Saturday afternoon. Notwithstanding the severe storm there was a large number present for supper, which was a delightful one.

Major Frank Clements, O. C. of the Fredericton company of the machine gun brigade, held a recruiting meeting Friday evening in the Dawson assembly rooms. Quite a number of young fellows signed up, including a few returned men.

Samuel J. Hallett is confined to his home with illness.

Mrs. Joseph Fletcher and Mrs. John L. Fletcher are both suffering from a severe attack of la grippe, while Mr. Fletcher is somewhat improved.

John Wade, of Rumford, who arrived here Friday to attend the funeral of his father, the late Reuben Wade, returns to Rumford this evening.

The storm of Saturday made the roads very bad yesterday and but little traffic took place over them Sunday. About all that was moving about Sunday was the people who always attend church.

Both rooms of the school on the eastern side of the river were closed Friday owing to the illness of the teachers.

It would be easier to enumerate those who are not suffering from illness of some kind than it would be to enumerate those who are ill. The latter are in the majority.

WHEN FIVE WOMEN EQUAL TWO MEN

Seating Capacity Increased Two and Half Times in "L" Car.

New York, March 6.—They have the vote, but many women will insist that they are far from enjoying equal rights when it comes to street car seats. There is no complaint here about masculine chivalry; it is simply one of inequality of bulk. An incident that upholds this contention occurred on an elevated train.

Two rather portly men were occupying rather more than what is usually considered two seats, when a party of women entered. Both men arose and proffered their seats. Then in the places just vacated five sat down.

WIDOW WAITS FOUR YEARS FOR PENSION

The G. W. V. A. claims to have been instrumental in stirring up the Pensions Board in the matter after vain appeals had been made from time to time by the widow.

ALLOWED EIGHT HORSES TO STARVE

Commission Investigates the Charges Against Colonel Innes in Ontario.

Kapuskasing, Ont., March 6.—An allegation that Colonel Innes, a former superintendent of the soldiers and sailors' settlement, allowed eight horses to starve and refused to purchase hay, which the witness said he could procure, was made by Dunlee Cunningham, in giving evidence before the Kapuskasing commission here yesterday afternoon.

Cunningham said that in the fall of 1918 there was a shortage of hay in the colony and horses were dying for want of it. He said Colonel Innes asked witness if he could get hay, and Cunningham offered to bring a supply from Matheson at a cost of $24 a ton. The offer was rejected, he said, and the animals died.

Cunningham also declared that some of the horses in the Government barn were in a disgraceful condition through weakness, and said Colonel Innes had told witness a certain gray horse was not worth $85, whereas this horse was sold the next day to a settler, T. C. Boyce, for $150. This was in January, 1919, and the purchaser said the animal had proved a good horse. It had been starved and was still alive.

REACH AGREEMENT ON TURKISH TREATY

Judicial Commission to Be Established to Definitely Settle Zones in Asia Minor.

Paris, March 6.—Complete agreement on features of the Turkish treaty has been reached, says "Peytinax," political editor of the Echo de Paris, who adds that the operation of the Turkish financial control commission will be quite distinct from the administration of the Ottoman debt. The supreme council, he says, is about to take up the establishment of a judicial commission and definitely settle zones to be accorded Greece, Italy, France and Great Britain in Asia Minor. Plans contemplated would forbid the maintenance of allied garrisons, but Allied officers would command forces of Turkish gendarmes. These officers would be nominated by the Sultan at the suggestion of the Powers.

Quebec, March 6.—Stricken with scurvy while prospecting with a party of explorers and surveyors in the wilds of Hudson Bay, Saul Mercier, 26 years of age and single, of St. Gregoire, County of Montmorency, was first given what primitive aid a tribe of hunting Indians could imagine to relieve him, then driven over two hundred and fifty miles of snow covered wilderness on a dog-sled and taken to St. Felicien, Lake St. John district, whence he came to Quebec by train.

He was given all kinds of treatment since he arrived here on Monday last, but died last night.

JOHN TIBEAU, OF KEEGAN, A SUICIDE

First Makes Attempt to Kill His Wife—Ill Health the Cause.

Van Buren, March 5.—John Tibeau, of Keegan, at his home, Tuesday, attempted to kill his wife and himself. Tibeau has been in failing health for some time, preventing him from working, brooding over his troubles caused him to undertake the rash act.

He armed himself with a gun and a knife and attacked his wife, who ran and alarmed the neighbors. He then made an effort to take his own life while she was away, but was foiled in his attempts by the timely arrival of the people who had responded to the alarm spread by Mrs. Tibeau. He swore he would kill any one who attempted to touch him and kept the people away until Officer Cromier arrived and gathered him in.

Tibeau, however, accomplished his suicide in the rear of John B. Pelletier's office Thursday forenoon while awaiting an examination by the selectmen and local doctors. Thibeau had spent the night in the lock-up and under the care of Officer Cormier was being conducted to Mr. Pelletier's office for the examination when he asked permission to patronize the barber shop of M. Bosse, where he was shaved and had other work done. After leaving the chair, under pretext of combing his hair in front of a large mirror, he abstracted a razor from a case while his back was turned to the officer and slipped it in his pocket. On arrival at Mr. Pelletier's office he seemed rational and gave no evidence of insanity, Remi Cyr, selectman remarking he did not feel like committing Tibeau to an insane hospital as he seemed sane. However, Tibeau with the devilish cunning of the insane, was watching his opportunity to leave the presence of those in the office, and after a few moments asked if he might be permitted to retire to the shed for a moment. Permission was granted him as the shed adjoined the office and he could not escape from there except by coming within the vision of the police who had previously given him a thorough searching to make sure he carried no weapons. He was in the shed but a few moments when Officer Cormier, opened the door, and ascertained he was all right and stepped back in the office. Waiting a few moments more, he again opened the shed door and found Tibeau in a corner of the shed, with a gash across the left side of the throat. He died before aid could be called. The remains were turned over to Undertaker Keegan, where they will be held pending an inquest. Tibeau is survived by a wife and was a resident of Keegan, where he operated a barber shop.

Post-Mortem

THIS drawing is from a photograph of a veranda post from which the paint has been allowed to wear off. Is it not eloquent?

This was a good post not so very long ago but it has now gone beyond redemption. Think of the trivial cost of the paint to protect the post and keep it sound.

Every crack in this post started from the outside. Those deep checks were at the first little checks. Once the surface was broken down, the damage was under way.

How much is similar deterioration under way on your property? Do you dare to say? Have you examined it or just taken for granted that its condition is sound? Have you examined the siding of your building? Have you inspected the eave troughs and other metal trim? Have you seen the roof lately—have you really looked at it in years? Are you watching the floors, and woodwork, and furniture, inside the house?

Your thoughtful answer to these questions we do not ask that you give us: give them to yourself. You owe it to yourself and to those who will inherit your property to ask these questions and answer them.

All over this country property is rotting, rusting, crumbling, wearing, which a surface coating of paint and varnish would save.

The most needless, useless, senseless, and most aggravating loss in the world is loss due to neglect on our own part. Isn't it so?

Look at your property in a new way—closely.

Save the surface and you save all.

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT is issued by the Canadian Save the Surface Campaign Committee, for the purpose of educating the public in the Preservative and Protective value of Paint, Varnish and Allied Products for the Conservation of Property, and has received the approval of the Canadian Trade Commission in the following words:

"The realization of the above objects will lead to employment during the Reconstruction Period and bears our entire approval."

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA YIELDS TO PHOSPHONOL TREATMENT

The remarkable efficacy of this advanced scientific method of treatment is demonstrated in the case of a patient who secured a box of Phosphonol less than a month ago. This case was of a man 54 years old, who had been afflicted with locomotor ataxia for more than four years. He came shuffling into a drug store on his cane which announced his entrance as he painfully labored to a chair. This man told the old sad story of a fortune wasted in "doctoring" and "cures," trying to regain health. After only three days' treatment, this same man came back a different man. He was able to walk unaided for the first time in more than a year. His eyes spoke the gratitude his tongue could not express. For the past week this man has been working in his store. He was able to scrub the flood unaided. He does not need his cane any more. His step in walking is almost brisk. At the rate of his remarkable improvement this man should be entirely well within a short time. His name and address will be given to any one interested on application. This is only one of many dreaded ailments which have yielded to Phosphonol.

Sold at all good drug stores or by mail from The Scobell Drug Co., Montreal, Can. Prices $3.00 a box, or 2 for $5.00. Don't waste your money in cheap remedies. Get one worth while.

drifts. The Canada Eastern branch trains of the C. N. R. are running pretty well on time today, but the express for Newcastle didn't get away from here on Saturday night until 10 p. m., being held for the Valley train from St. John, which was several hours late. The storm has cut off the New England States from the provinces.

The Winter of 1875 recalled.

Rev. Dr. W. O. Raymond, formerly archdeacon of the diocese of Fredericton and now residing in Toronto, Ont., and who is regarded as a leading authority on historical matters relating to New Brunswick, in a letter to The Gleaner writes:

"This remarkable winter suggests comparisons on the part of the older inhabitants. I was a resident student at the U. N. B. in the winter of 1875, and have a keen recollection of the piercing gales we had to face in going to town from College Hill. Bishop Medley writes in his journal:

"'This winter was the severest known for forty years. From the 28th December, 1874, to the first week in March, 1875, almost uninterrupted severe frost, below zero nearly every night and generally at or below zero in the day.

"'From the 28th December there were sixty-five days of nearly unremitting cold—zero or lower by day, and much lower by night.'

"The frost got so deeply into the ground that the city made huge fires of cordwood to thaw out the frozen water pipes in King street, behind the Parliament buildings. Railways, I remember, were blocked on Good Friday by a big snowstorm. I was stormstaid myself on the occasion. This extraordinary winter ended with a great snowstorm from the northeast on the 20th of April."

St. Paul's Congregation at Woodstock Informed of Decision of Their Pastor.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Woodstock, March 8.—Rev. L. E. Ackland occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's church yesterday morning and at the conclusion of his sermon he read a communication from Rev. J. M. McPherson, moderator of St. John presbytery, announcing the resignation of Rev. Frank Baird as pastor of St. Paul's church.

Mr. Baird accepted a call to the church here between eight and nine years ago, and since that time his faithfulness and devotion to duty has won for him a high regard in the hearts of the members of his congregation. As a minister he was ever mindful of the sick and needy. He was a regular visitor at the Fisher Memorial Hospital, and took a leading part in every movement for the betterment of conditions in the town. His resignation is now in the hands of the St. John presbytery and will be acted upon March 16th.

His Lordship Bishop Richardson will institute Rev. H. F. Rigby into the rectorship of St. Luke's Anglican church next Sunday.

Declaration proceedings will take place at City Hall this afternoon, probably shortly before 5 o'clock, and it was said the Labor interests, following the meeting at Union Hall on Saturday night, were ready to nominate another candidate in King's Ward for the vacancy caused by the elevation of Mayor-elect John A. Was Well Known Here.

Mrs. William Foster, who died at the Evangeline Home, St. John, on Thursday last, just an hour or two after a baby girl had been born, was known and loved by very many people in this city who were grieved when they learned of her death. As Miss Helen McConnell, she studied nursing at the Victoria Hospital in this city and endeared herself not only to the staff but to all the patients whose privilege it was to have her to minister to them. About four years ago she graduated from the hospital and for a while carried on her profession in this city. After her arriage to William Foster, of the C. P. R., she resided at Montreal, but came to St. John a short time ago, suffering from heart disease, which caused her death. On Saturday morning the little daughter passed away and on Saturday afternoon, mother and daughter, side by side in one casket, were laid tenderly at rest. Mr. and Mrs. E. Lorne Merrithew, of this city, attended the funeral, Mrs. Merithew being a sister of the bereaved husband.

Death at Oromocto.

John Rush, one of the best known men in York and Sunbury counties, passed away suddenly yesterday morning at the home of his sister, Mrs. Patrick McCloskey, Oromocto. EXPECT INCOME TAX TO INCREASE

Mayor Hanson and A. A. Colter returned this morning from Ottawa, where they had represented the Board of Trade and local interests on a delegation who appeared before Sir Henry Drayton, Finance Minister, seeking the abolition of the business profits war tax. Besides representatives of various Boards of Trade and business interests in the Maritime Provinces representatives of Upper Canadian interests were present, including the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of Canada.

They said the delegation received a sympathetic hearing by Sir Henry Drayton on Friday afternoon and came away with the belief that the business profits war tax will be abolished and the income tax on corporations and business firms correspondingly increased.

Sir Henry Drayton said he was quite prepared to admit that this tax was bad for business and bad for Canada, but the money that it produced was required and if the business profits tax did not produce the money some other form of taxation, either through in the income tax or by other means, would have to be employed.

The Finance Minister asked for alternative suggestions. Among those that were offered were the following: A graduated income tax, a tax on the turn-over in business, a land tax based on farm values, a more rigid administration of the present income tax, the treating of borrowed money where it is used in business as capital, and a few others.

There was a brief discussion as to the merits and demerits of the several suggestions, and at the close the Minister stated that the whole subject would be closely enquired into before any definite plan was decided upon.

The progress of the City of Moncton is indicated by the initiative of its citizens in helping to keep the wheels of progress moving in the building of dwellings at a time when the need of same is so urgently felt, and also in being the first city in New Brunswick, if not in the Maritime Provinces, having a Builders' Exchange.

Digging Out Holiday in Many New England Towns to Clear Away the Big Snow Drifts

Passengers Marooned Along the Lines of Railroad in Many States and the Feeding of These Refugees Became Somewhat of a Problem.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Boston, March 8.—Railroads, industries and community volunteers combined efforts again today to restore the passenger and freight transportation facilities that were cut off in northern New England by the storm on Saturday. A "Digging Out" holiday was proclaimed in several cities and scores of industries diverted the energies of their employees to the swinging of picks and shovels over railroad ties. Great snow banks and the ice formed by the sudden drop in temperature after rain caused the most serious tie-up of the winter in many places.

The situation in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont was the most serious in many years. Hundreds of passengers were marooned in small cities and towns where trains had been stalled since Saturday night, and in some places the feeding of these refugees became a serious problem.

Service between Portsmouth and Boston, on the Boston & Maine, was resumed after a suspension of nearly 36 hours.

Tie-ups on the Vermont Central lines, where several passenger trains were held up Saturday and yesterday, were loosened early this morning.

Two thousand volunteers have been asked to dig the Berkshire Street Railway Company out of its difficulties at Pittsfield. Service was abandoned by the company last night and the railroad employees were laid off for an indefinite period. Mayor Louis A. Merchant issued a proclamation asking the citizens to assist the road.

Larger Towns Dig Themselves Out.

New Haven, Conn., March 8.—Normal conditions were in sight today in Connecticut, after two days of traffic demoralization because of Saturday's blizzard. With the exception of the northeastern section of the state, all of the larger towns had been able to dig themselves out of the storm drifts and ice packs and business in general resumed its normal swing.

In Dallas a minimum of 20 degrees was reported, the lowest for March since establishment of the bureau.

Montreal, March 8.—According to the records at McGill Observatory, the total snow fall in the storm that swept the city Friday night and until Saturday, totalled 14 inches. Yesterday morning 111 vehicles tackled the snow in the business district and were reinforced in the afternoon by 132 more.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of our dear father, Joseph E. Kierstead, who departed this life March 7th, 1918.

Yesterday recalled sad memories,
Of our loved one gone to rest;
And those who thought of him that day,
Are those who loved him best.
Sadly missed by
WIFE, SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Eleanor True, of Grafton, who "went away" March 7th, 1919, aged ninety years.

We must not say, and we will not say
That she is dead. She is just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
She has wandered into an unknown land.

Think of her living on as dear
In the love of there as the love of here;
Think of her still, as the same we say,
She is not dead. She is just away.
SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of Mrs. David McLellan, who died March 8th, 1919.

One year has passed and still we miss thee,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But they little know the sorrow
That lies within our hearts concealed.
She is gone but not forgotten,
Never shall her memory fade;
Sweetest thoughts shall ever linger,
'Round the grave where she is laid.
FAMILY.

Plaster Rock Ladies Beaten by Score of 16 to 11 on Saturday.

The U. N. B. Co-eds basketball team defeated the Plaster Rock team in an interesting basketball game at the U. N. B. gymnasium on Saturday afternoon by a score of 16 to 11.

The game was well contested and while the Plaster Rock team were not as good as their opponents in shooting field goals, they were almost perfect in their penalty shots awarded to them by Referee Clarence Burden.

At the end of the first period the score was 12 to 8 in favor of the Red and Black team. Miss Fox at centre for the visitors shot eight penalty shots in this period, while Miss M. Tracey, Miss M. Hall and Miss H. VanWart showed up well in their shooting for the local team. The U. N. B. girls had the better of the play throughout, working their combination play well and sticking close to their opponents' basket.

In the second period Mrs. McMullin, for the visitors, secured their only field goal and this with another penalty shot by Miss Fox gave them a score of three against the four made by their Red and Black team.

The line-up follows:—

First Inter-League Game Of Hockey Season Tonight

Fredericton Will Use 11 Players Against Eastern Leaguers

VISITORS HAVE A STRONG TEAM

U. N. B.'s Congatulations Sent to St. F. X. Upon Beating Acadia.

The change to cold weather during the week-end has resulted in producing a fast sheet of ice at the Arctic Rink for tonight's hockey attraction, when the Sussex team of the Eastern League will meet a picked combination team from the Fredericton and Marysville teams of the New Brunswick Hockey League in the first inter-league game staged in the East this season.

Definite announcement was made this morning that Sandy Staples will be the referee and "Tart" Titus, captain of the Fredericton Hockey Club, said he would start the game with the old Fredericton line-up, afterwards making changes as play went along so as to take full advantage of the presence of Irvine, Edgar and Clarence Wade, the pick of the Marysville team, who have been secured for the game.

The Line-ups.

Capt. Titus in goal will be the only one of the Fredericton team to play throughout the game; Jarvis, Jewett, Edgar Wade and probably Burgess will be used on the outside defence, while Irvine Wade, Eddie Colwell, Billy Lounsbury, Bert Burgess, Clarence Wade and Hall will be used on the forward line. The Sussex team will have their regular Eastern League team, it is said, so there is every indication of a lively game as Sussex gave Moncton Vics and the Amherst Ramblers some of their hardest games this season.

The Sussex team arrived this morning by C. P. R. and are at Windsor Hall. Their line-up was announced at noon as follows: Goal, Finnegan; point, Hay; Cover point, Radcliff; centre, LeClair; right wing, Friars; left wing, H. Radcliff; spare, B. Roach.

ST. F. X. CONGRATULATED.

Wire Sent by U. N. B. Manager to Antigonish Shows Undisguised Pleasure at Acadia's Defeat.

Congratulations from the University of New Brunswick students to St. Francis Xavier College team upon defeating Acadia and winning the Intercollegiate Hockey League championship, were wired to Antigonish, N. S., on Saturday by Manager McWilliam of the U. N. B. hockey team.

An extended report of the game at New Glasgow says the game was not one-sided, as the score of 8 to 3 would indicate, and adds:

"St. F. X. won, but not by any means was it a one-sided contest, as the score of 8 to 3 would suggest. From start to finish it was clean, fast hockey, and each team played full strength. Throughout there were no penalties inflicted, nor was there any call for them.

"The game was refereed by Campbell and Currie, and the only need of their attention was that occasioned by offside plays. The huge rink held a record crowd of enthusiastic fans, and hey got their moneys in real exciting sport. A large number of Antigonish fans followed their team to New Glasgow, and rooted right lustily for their champions. The line-up was as follows:

St. Francis Xavier		Acadia
L. McKenna	Goal	Steeves
Campbell	Point	Fraser
Macdonald	Cover Point	Parker
Brown	Centre	Tingley
R. McKenna	Right Wing	Rogers

Spares—McIsaac, James McDonald, A. Beaton, Burton, Ayer, Mason.

"In the first period the team from Antigonish tallied three goals, McKenna, McCarthy and Campbell doing the scoring, while Beardsley netted the rubber for one count for Acadia. In the second period the St. F. X. team again scored three goals, the same players dividing the honors.

"In the second period for Acadia, Rogers and Tingley beat out the goal tender for a goal each, and the period ended St. Francis Xavier 6, Acadia 3.

"In the final dash the leading team was able to twice bag the net, featuring Beaton and McCarthy in the scores, while the Valley college boys failed to supplement their score, the game terminating St. Francis Xavier 8, Acadia 3.

"During the entire playing the goal tenders had a busy session. The puck was not permitted to linger long in any end, and only repeated good stops by Steeves and McKenna frequently turned the tide of victory. It was not a star's game, each of the men on both sides played their position and took every advantage of an opportunity whenever there was an opening.

"When the game was over the Antigonish followers gave the victorious team a great ovation. The cup was taken on the ice and the players were cheered, and carried shoulder high with great rejoicing to the hotel from the rink. The Acadia boys proved themselves good losers, and did not hesitate to offer congratulations to their victors, and readily admitted that for the night the best team had won—but they made them go some to win."

Grace Direct, 2.00½, is scheduled to open her season at Findlay, O., May 24. She started her remarkable campaign of 1919 there and kept going into November.

Aconite, 2.04¼, Northampton's best known "citizen," is eligible to the 2.17 paces this year.

A Chance for N. B. H. L. to Get Ready for Next Season

The New Brunswick Hockey League should take advantage of the presence in Chatham this wek of representatives of the clubs in the organization to make preliminary plans for next season.

The suggestion is made that a date not later than December 10th should be named for the annual meeting and that meanwhile somebody conversant with the requirements should compile a constitution, by-laws and playing regulations to be submitted to the League at the annual meeting, together with a tentative schedule extending the season from not later than January 1st to between March 1st and 10th.

As has been pointed out before the N. B. H. L. at present is in an embryotic state and no time should be lost in completing its reorganization upon a substantial basis.

PERTINENT COMMENT on SPORTING TOPICS

Sussex Eastern Leaguers here tonight.

Pinkey Mitchell and Barney Adair are due to meet at Milwaukee tonight.

The Fredericton bowlers who vanquished the St. John Y. M. C. I. rolled consistently.

Manager McWilliam wired U. N. B's congratulations to St. F. X. upon winning the Brown trophy. What will Acadia say to that?

The Fredericton Hockey Club have determined to take Irvine Wade with them on the trip to the North Shore. They'll need him, too.

The forward pass in a specified space at mid-ice will probably be legal in the N. B. H. L. another season because it makes a faster game.

The old adage that it's an ill wind that doesn't blow good to somebody has worked out again. The week-end weather produced a fine sheet of ice at the Arctic Rink for tonight's game.

All of Harry Frazee's denials to the contrary the report will not down that the Boston Red Sox are about to be sold to the Holland brothers, wealthy former liquor dealers of the Hub.

Jeff Smith, who is in Paris, has challenger Georges Carpentier to meet him in a 20-round bout for the war veteran's fund. Sounds real Yankee-like, doesn't it? Carpentier has already done his war-work.

On one of the Moncton papers' sport pages 1 notice Manager and Vice-President McGraw of the New York Giants is called "Jack" in a heading evidently written by an uninformed but anxious-to-be-familiar expert. It's the first time the Giants' leader was ever called "Jack."

Ottawa will stage its first Stanley Cup series for some time the last week in March. Frank Patrick says the Pacific Coast champions can be in the East by the 22nd. The National Hockey League season will close next Saturday night.

The fact that Bill Byron has signed with the Pacific Coast League as an umpire makes it look as if stories of his retirement from baseball were mere camouflage. As a matter of fact he appears to have been dropped by the National League, evidently because he failed to keep strict enough discipline to suit President Heydler.

"Old Man" Courtney's caustic reference to the failure of the faculty to co-operate with him as coach of the crew at Cornell created some interest in intercollegiate athletic circles here. Much of Acadia's success in athletics is declared to be the outcome of faculty co-operation, every influence at the Wolfville institution being always lined up behind the task of producing winning teams for football, hockey and other major sports. U. N. B. and Mount A. men generally claim Acadia has a marked advantage over her opponents in this respect.

Moncton newspapers seem to regard references made to the work of Frank Brown as referee of the U. N. B.-Acadia game here as something approaching sacrilege. When an appointment as referee is accepted, particularly at such prices as the former Moncton defence player charges for his services, the individual taking on the job certainly becomes justly liable to criticism, which, of course, should be fair and without prejudice. Some Moncton people appear to have the idea that somebody has blamed Brown for U. N. B.'s defeat by Acadia, an opinion which semes to have been formed without any justification. So far as I know, nobody has accused the Moncton man of anything but failure to show the outstanding ability his reputation and financial demands led local hockey followers to expect he would display. He made just an ordinary job of handling a game which was not marked by incidents that made it a difficult contest for an arbiter and he went away leaving a bad taste behind him through his uncalled for slurs at one of the U. N. B. players who he singled out for a personal attack when called upon to speak at the banquet at which the Acadia team were entertained after the game.

The Fredericton Hockey Club have a strong line-up of players available for use tonight in the game with the Sussex Eastern League club, and in order to retain public confidence there must be some show of system and authority in the handling of the team. This can only be done satisfactorily by somebody not playing who can keep informed as to the physical condition of his players and make substitutions at the times when they will do the most good. It is particularly urgent that the players be handled properly tonight if the Fredericton club are to have their material in proper shape for the North Shore trip this week, and the generous support the public have given hockey this season entitles followers of the team being convinced that every legitimate step is taken to land the N. B. H. L. championship by accomplishing what to many seems the imposible. To-night's game will provide the required opportunity to ascertain the most effective combination to use at Chatham, and it should be taken advantage of to the utmost. There is every reason to expect that the Sussex team, if they play up to their Eastern League reputation, will prove just about the fastest outfit seen in action here this year.—J. D. B.

CARPENTIER WILL VISIT CANADA, TOO

Jack Curley, Under Whose Auspices Tour is to Be Made, May Stage Dempsey Fight

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 8.—George Carpentier, French heavyweight champion, will visit the principal cities of Canada while on his tour of this continent under the management of Jack Curley. The tour will begin May 3 and will last ten weeks.

It is possible that the Carpentier-Dempsey fight may be staged under Curley's auspices, if the big Californian gets his troubles with the United Staes Government settled in the meantime.

Jackson-Dundee Bout Tonight.

New York, March 8.—At least one formidable contender for the lightweight championship will be removed from the running this evening, when Willie Jackson, one of the hardest hitting boxers in the class, and Johnny Dundee, the nearest approach to "Battling" Nelson, in the matter of durability, meet in the star bout of eight rounds in Jersey City.

Although there would be no official decision given by the referee, the fact that Driscoll has signed Lew Tendler, of Philadelphia, to meet the winner of tonight's bout on March 22nd will be an incentive to each man to do his utmost in order to score a decisive victory.

$30,000 SOUGHT FOR ALIENATION

Lively Evidence Looked for in Mrs. Feldman's Suit Against Mrs. Freedman.

Boston, March 6.—Sensational testimony will be offered at the trial of Mrs. Tillie Feldman against Mrs. Minnie Freedman for alleged alienation of the affections of the plaintiff's former husband, Dr. Joseph H. Feldman, a dentist. There will be evidence relating to Dr. Feldman's trips to Paris and Milan, Italy, and the abrupt termination of a voyage to Cairo, Egypt.

There will be evidence concerning automobile rides and dinner parties, beach bathing and alleged visits by Dr. Feldman to Mrs. Freedman's home, where he is said to have remained out on the porch until one o'clock in the morning. There will also be evidence that Mrs. Freedman had once remarked that as soon as the doctor obtained his divorce she would marry him and see that he was taken care of financially.

Defendant Will Deny All.

Mrs. Freedman will deny all of these allegations.

There are many interesting facts in connection with the case and the parties involved. Feldman arrived in this country from Europe near 20 years ago. His thoughts were centred on becoming a singer. He also was desirous of becoming a dentist.

The girl he subsequently married came from Europe and with her sistr worked in sweat shops until they had accumulated a few hundred dollars. She says that after she became attracted by Feldman and wished to see him make a name for himself she married him and gave him what money she had saved. On the contrary, Feldman says he never took any of his wife's money, but earned his own livelihood by working in various positions until he was able to pay for a course in dentistry. He since has become a skilled and successful dentist.

After he had begun practice he opened parlors at 26 Davis street. From then on there began a lively succession of events.

In June, 1914, he was taken into custody by the New York police at Hoboken, N. J., just as he was about to board a steamer bound for Cairo, Egypt. The charge was non-support. While that allegation was set up in the warrant, it was thought to be only a technical charge so as to bring him within the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts authorities pending an investigation by the federal authorities of a more serious charge.

At about the same time Feldman left Boston a former New Bedford church choir singer disapepared from her home and Mrs. Feldman's friends declared at the time that Feldman and she had been seen in each other's company at frequent intervals previously.

When Feldman was returned to Boston he and his wife became reconciled through the efforts of District Atty. Pelletier and the charge against him was dropped. The pair had only been reunited a short time when more trouble began between them and this resulted in Feldman bringing a libel for divorce against his wife in November, 1916, in which he charged her with cruel and abusive treatment.

At the trial there was testimony that Mrs. Feldman chased her husband with a carving knife, that she threw housesold articles at him, that she tried to asphyxiate him and that she tried to put poison in his food. Mrs. Feldman stoutly denied these allegations and had a witness tell the court that Feldman had once told her that his wife was illiterate and utterly unfit to associate with intelligent companions.

After a bitter fight, which was carried to the full bench of the Supreme Court, Feldman got a divorce.

But the fight did not end there. Just before the decree nisi was to become absolute, Mrs. Feldman opposed it on the ground that he had not kept the terms of the decree. Her motion was denied and he got his divorce.

Two years later Mrs. Feldman made application to the court for alimony. Feldman agreed to pay her $5 a week until a total of $1,000 was paid.

Mrs. Freedman's name crept into the case through the affidavit of one of her salesgirls at her millinery establishment at 400 Harrison avenue. Mrs. Feldman sought out Mrs. Freedman and words and an assault followed. Mrs. Freedman, after being haled into court, paid a fine and her charge of counter-assa lt against Mrs. Feldman was dismissed. Thereafter, it is alleged, Mrs. Feldman began to harass Mrs. Freedman by calling her on the telephone and making insulting remarks; by going to her place of business and creating disturbances, making faces and grimaces at her when they met on the street and jeering and scoffing at her.

Mrs. Freedman brought injunction proceedings against Mrs. Feldman, but a stipulation was entered into in lieu of a temporary injunction. Finally Mrs. Feldman broke the stipulation and was ordered into court on contempt proceedings, which resulted in Judge Lawson of the Superior Court issuing a sweeping injunction.

The injunction forbade Mrs. Freedman to make faces or grimaces or to do any of the things Mrs. Freedman said she did. Since that injunction was issued, Atty. Philip J. Sondheim, who has offices in the Old South building, and who represents Mrs. Freedman and Dr. Feldman, has been working to put the defendant's case in shape for trial.

A NOTABLE ART INDUSTRY HIDDEN

Beautiful Pottery Made in North Carolina from Beautiful Clay Found There.

Possibly there is no more interesting primitive industry in the country than that of the Jugtown potters, which has endured without change for 200 years. Jugtown is a tiny hamlet in Northern Carolina, remote from the highroads of civilization.

There was a local fair in the next county and the Federation of Women's Clubs of North Carolina had sent their chairman of art to represent them at the exhibition. The fruit exhibitors suddenly bethought them that the chairman of art might help them to arrange their exhibits to advantage. She agreed to do this and asked some one who was acquainted with the neighborhood to go out and bring back tin plates in which she might arrange the fruit.

Plates of Brilliant Orange.

When the messenger returned he brought a dozen pottery plates of brilliant orange. The chairman of art pounced upon them in amazement. "Where did you get these?" she demanded.

"Up at the store," said the messenger as quickly as if he had not discovered a treasure of beauty.

Promptly the chairman of art gave over his labors at the fair to another and going to the store found not only glowing plates but pitchers, cups and saucers, deep preserve jars and great pottery churns, all in the wonderful [illegible]

These beautiful objects had been made by the farmers of the neighborhood, who thus make use of the clay of the district. They have been accustomed to provide themselves with kitchen and tableware of this sort. They have no desire to turn out pottery objects for the rest of the world and displayed a superb indifference to the opportunity when the woman who had discovered the brilliant jars and places called their attention to the chance of selling their wares in city markets.

Primitive in Thought and Practice.

The people of Jugtown are primitive in thought as well as in practice and ways of living. They still weave their own cloth in the neighborhood and they never think of using machine made stockings. Their speech is the old Elizabethan English which their ancestors brought with them in 1690. The outside world has made little impression on them and they regard even the folks from other parts of their own State as decidedly foreign.

The federation chairman gathered up all she could of the wonderful ware; some of the covered jugs in which the natives have brewed punch for centuries, some of the preserve jars which make wonderful lamps and a few of the huge orange colored churns that can be used for floor vases. But she cannot take many orders for these fascinating examples of old American pottery because the Jugtown potters won't be very likely to fill them.

MRS. TOM THUMB'S WILL IS IN COURT

Tiny Furniture of Famous Midget's Wife to Be Placed in a Museum.

Plymouth, March 6.—Because of its disposition of the smallest adult furniture ever made for a celebrity, the will of Lavinia W. Magri, better known in her day as Mrs. Tom Thumb, who with her first husband were considered the smallest couple in the world, has attracted a deal of attention in local court and social circles.

The will was offered for probate today. As the will failed to name an executor, Albert A. Thomas of Middleboro today petitioned the court to be appointed administrator of the estate. The will is dated Sept. 24, 1912, and bears the signature of George W. Stetson, Myra S. Stetson and Julia M. McKay as witnesses to the signature. No estimate is given as to the value of the estate.

The heirs named in the will are Count Primo Magri, the four-foot-tall husband of the testator, who is the second husband; Harry E. Bump and Benjamin W. Bump, nephews, and Edith Z. Hurley of Wareham, a niece.

The will provides that her brothers, Sylvania W. Bump and Benjamin W. Bump, receive the proceeds from the publication of her autobiography. All her remarkable collection of curios, gathered in all the big cities and capitals of the world, are to be held by a trustee to be appointed by the probate court. This collection is to be exhibited in public or private museums for hire and the net proceeds are to be given to the Menasket Cemetery Association of Middleboro and its successors.

The administrator of the will is directed to place her very small piano, her miniature billiard table and all her small household furniture in some historical or antiquarian rooms, together with four portraits of herself, one of General Tom Thumb, her first husband; one of Minnie Warren, her sister, and one of Commodore Nut, her brother-in-law. The two small sewing machines, made especially for her use, are to be included in this collection.

To her husband, Count Primo Magri, she leaves all of her holdings in the American Express Company. He is given the use during his life of the piano, now at the home of W. Homer Southworth, and at his death the instrument is to be given to Harry Bump. The rest of the estate is to be divided equally between her brothers.

Mrs. Magri, or Mrs. Tom Thump, stood three feet six inches in height; General Tom Thumb was two inches taller, and her second husband stands four feet.

"You are indeed," cried Ford, laughing, "a Goth, Hun, and Vandal, with al the other hard names which the old man called us. How could you think so much of a smear of pigments, when there was such a picture painted by the good God himself in the very room with you? But who is this?"

"If it please you, sirs," said an archer, running across to them, "Aylward and others would be right glad to see you. They are within here. He bade me say to you that the Lord Loring will not need your service tonight, as he sleeps with the LordChandos."

"By my faith!" said Ford, "we do not need a guide to lead us to their presence." As he spoke there came a roar of singing from the tavern upon the right, with shouts of laughter and stamping of feet. Passing under a low door, and down a stone-flagged passage, they found themselves in a long, narrow hall lit up by a pair of blazing torches, one at either end. Trusses of straw had been thrown down along the walls, and reclining on them were some twenty or thirty archers, all of the company, their steel caps and jacks thrown off, their tunics open, and their great limbs sprawling upon the clay floor. At every man's elbow stood his leathern black-jack of beer, while at the further end a hogshead with its end knocked in promised an abundant supply for the future. Behind the hogshead, on a half circle of kegs, boxes, and rude settles, sat Aylward, John, Black Simon and three or four other leading men of the archers, together with Goodwin Hawtayne, the master shipman, who had left his yellow cog in the river to have a last rouse with his friends of teh Company. Ford and Alleyne took their seats between Aylward and Black Simon, without their entrance checking in an degree the hubbub which was going on.

"Ale, mes camarades?" cried the bowman, "or shall it be wine? Nay, but ye must have the one or the other. Here, Jacques, thou limb of the devil, bring a bottrine of the oldest vernage, and see that you do not shake it. Hast heard the news?"

"Nay," cried both the squires.

"That we are to have a brave tourney."

"A tourney "

"Aye, lads. For the Captal du Buch hath sworn that he will find five knights from this side of the water who will ride over any five Englishmen who ever threw leg over saddle; and Chandos hath taken up the challenge, and the prince hath promised a golden vase for the man who carries himself best, and all the court is in a buzz oer it."

"Why should the knights have all the sport?" growled Hordle John. "Could they not set up five archers for the honor of Aquitaine and of Gascony?"

"Or five men-at-arms," said Black Simon.

"But who are the English knights?" asked Hawtayne.

"There are three hundred and forty-one in the town," said Aylward, "and I hear that three hundred and forty cartels and defiances have already been sent in, the only one missing being Sir John Ravensholme, who is in his bed with the sweating sickness, and cannot set food to ground."

"I have heard of it from one of the archers of the guard," cried a bowman from among the straw; "I hear that the prince wished to break a lance, but that Chandos would not hear of it, for the game is likely to be a rough one."

"Then there is Chandos."

"Nay, the prince would not permit it. He is to be marshal of the lists, with Sir William Felton and the Duc d'Armagnac. The English will be the Lord Audley, Sir Thomas Percy, Sir Thomas Wake, Sir William Beauchamp, and our own very good lord and leader."

"Hurrah for him, and God be with him!" cried several. "It is honor to draw string in his service."

"So you may well say," said Aylward. "By my ten finger-bones! if you march behind the pennon of the five roses you are like to see all that a good bowman would wish to see. Ha! yes, mes garcons, you laugh, but, by my hilt! you may not laugh when you find ourselves where he will take ou, for you can never tell what strange vow he may not have sworn to. I see that he has a patch over his eye, even as he had at Poictiers There will come bloodshed of that patch or I am the more mistaken.

'How chanced it at Poictiers, good Master Aylward?" asked one of the young archers, leaning upon his elbows, with his eyes fixed respectfully upon the old bowman's rugged face.

"Aye, Aylward, tell us of it," cried Hordle John

"Here is to old Sakin Aylward!" shouted several at the further end of the room, waving their black-packs in the air.

"Ask him!" said Aylward modestly, nodding towards Black Simon. "He saw more than I did. Ayet yet, by the holy nails! there was not very much that I did not see either."

"Ah, yes," said Simon, shaking his head, "it was a great day. I never hope to see such another. There were some fine archers who drew their last shaft that day. We shall never see better men, Aylward."

"By my hilt! no. There was little Robby Withstaff, and Andrew Salblaster, and Wat Alspaye, who broke the neck of the German. Mon Dieu! what men they were! Take them how you would, at long butts or short, hoyles, rounds, or rovers, better bowmen never twirled a shaft over their thumb nails."

"But the fight, Aylward, the fight!" cried several impatiently.

"Let me fill my jack first, boys, for it is a thirsty tale. It was at the first fall of the leaf that the prince set forth, and he passed through Auvergne, and Berry, and Anjou, and Touraine. In Auvergne the maids are kind, but the wines are sour. In Berry it is the women that are sour, but the wines are rich. Anjou, however, is a very good land for bowmen, for wine and women are all that heart could wish. In Touraine I got nothing save a broken pate, but at Vierzon I had a great good fortune, for I had a golden pyx from the minister, for which I afterwards got nine Genoan janes from the goldsmith in the Rue Mont Olive. From thence we went to Bourges, where I had a tunic of flame-colored silk and a very fine pair of shoes with tassels of silk and drops of silver."

"From a stall, Aylward?" asked one of the young archers.

"Nay, from a man's feet, lad. I had reason to think that he might not need them again, seeing that a thirty-inch shaft had feathered in his back.

"And what then, Aylward?"

"On we went, coz, some six thousand of us, until we came to Issodun, and there again a very great thing befell."

"A battle, Aylward?"

"Nay, nay; a greater thing than that. There is little to be gained out of a battle, unless one have the fortune to win a ransom. At Issodun I and three Welshmen came upon a house which all others had passed, and we had the profits of it to ourselves. For myself, I had a fine feather-bed—a thing which you will not see in a long day's journey in England. You have seen it, Alleyne, and you, John. You will bear me out that it is a noble bed. We put it on a sutler's mule, and bore it after the army. It was on my mind that I would lay it by until I came to start house of mine own, and I have it now in a very safe place near Lyndhurst."

HEROIC METHOD FOR DOPE FIEND

Hamilton, Ont., March 6.—Thomas Soloman believes in heroic methods when his friends' interests are at stake. For instance, in the bowling alley where he is employed George Casey worked. Casey had a fondness for dope. Argument not availing, Soloman walloped his friend over the head with a ten pin, tied him to a table and confiscated the needles and hop.

AGED TRAPPER IS FOUND IN WOODS IN GOOD HEALTH

The Searching Party Located "Uncle Henry" Braithwaite at Hunter's Camp.

WORD RECEIVED BY FAMILY ON SUNDAY

Old Fellow Says that He Will Be Coming Out of Woods "In a Few Weeks."

"Uncle Henry" Braithwaite, the 78 years old trapper, who is known as a hunter's guide to hundreds of the most distinguished big game hunters of Europe as well as America, is not dead after alk.

He was found on Saturday at his Hunter's Camp, 26 miles into the heart of the Miramichi woods from Holtville, the nearest settlement, by a searching party who had been despatched by relatives of the aged trapper, who became worried and feared he had died in the woods, where he went in November and had not since been heard from.

Just how soon "Uncle Henry" will come out of the woods to visit his home here is not definitely known, but he gave the searching party a characteristic reception, it is said, told them he was all right and would be out in a few weeks." They spent only about an hour at his camp and then started on the return trip to Holtville, where they telephoned the report that the aged trapper was all right to his relatives here, who were overjoyed and much relieved to get the news.

This is not the first time that Mr. Braithwaite's friends have become worried by his procted tay in the woods and failure to communicate with them.

Pat O'Brien Sets Forth His Marriage Offer

Pat O'Brien, a brick-red headed young man who anybody would know is an Irishman even if they hadn't heard his name, has published in The Gleaner today a most remarkable advertisement in which he offers to "marry any woman over 18 and under 80 years of age for one cent dated 1852."

When a reporter found 'Pat" at Long's Hotel at noon today he disclaimed any knowlegde of a story that there were no one cent pieces dated 1852 and said he had inserted the advertisement as the result of a wager and was ready to go through with his offer—which, it will be observed, makes no specifications as to color.

FREDERICTON ON A VAUDEVILLE WHEEL?

Fred G. Spencer Considering Including This City on a Circuit.

Fredericton may soon have a place on a vaudeville circuit, it was intimated today.

Fred G. Spencer, the St. John amusement promoter and theatre owner, who is here today, said this morning that he has been carrying on negotiations which he expects will result in Fredericton having a regular place on one of the vaudeville circuits in the Maritime Provinces.

On Wednesday Mr. Spencer leaves for a trip to Boston and New York in this connection and he expects while away to conclude an arrangement whereby Fredericton will be on the same circuit with St. John, Halifax and Moncton, opening Easter week and playing programmes of five acts here one day weekly—one show in the afternoon and two in the evening—at the outset.

For some time past there have been reports that Fredericton was to be included in one of the vaudeville circuits, but this the first occasion that it has approached becoming a reality.

TRAINS LATE OR CANCELLED AFTER WEEK-END STORM

Blizzard on Saturday Night and Sunday Again Blocks Some Branch Lines.

NEW ENGLAND CUT OFF FROM THE PROVINCES

Severity of Winter of 1875 is Recalled in Letter from Rev. Dr. Raymond.

One of the worst March blizzards experienced in many years, which raged during the week-end, has the train service in central New Brunswick disorganized again.

While the official measurement of the snowfall on Saturday afternoon and evening at the Dominion Meteorological Station at the University of New Brunswick shows only three inches of snow having fallen here, it was followed by a gale which continued throughout the night with the wind blowing from 25 to 35 miles an hour, accompanied by a rapidly dropping temperature.

Elsewhere, and probably here, too, the snowfall must have been much heavier than the official figures indicate, as sidewalks in many places were blocked and the railway tracks were drifted in so that it has been only with much difficulty that any have been kept open. The drop in temperature of 25 degrees from 28 to 3 above zero on Saturday night was followed by still another drop last night, when 10 below zero was the official temperature, while all Saturday night and most of Sunday gales of from 25 to 35 miles an hour added to the discomfort produced by the blizzard.

Trains were cancelled today on the Fredericton & Grand Lake Coal & Railway line of the C. P. R., as well as on the St. John Valley division of the C. N. R. The Southampton branch of the C. P. R. is also more or less tied up, while the trains on the Gibson branch of the C. P. R. are making slow progress against the

The polls close at 4 p. m. and there are 1,223 names on the voters' lists.

NEW ENGLAND STILL TIED UP BY STORM

POTUGUESE CRISIS SAFELY PASSED OVER

The Strike Movement on the Railways Subsiding and the Roads Running Again.

TELEGRAPH EMPLOYEES STILL REMAIN OUT

Some Further Difficulties Have Arisen Over the Situation in the Cabinet.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Madrid, March 9.—The latest despatches from Portugal indicate that the strike movement on the railroads is subsiding, but that the postal and telegraph employees still decline to resume work because their demands have not been complied with.

The electricians and metal workers have joined the strike in support of the government employees, thus causing much unemployment in other trades.

Further difficulties have arisen over the cabinet situation. Alvarez Castro is endeavoring to get a combination of Ministers together to take the place of the Ministry formed on Saturday by Antonio Silva, which has resigned. Up to the present, his efforts have been without success.

An occasional violent incident is reported from the provincial centres, but generally the situation is quiet. Train service has been resumed between Spain and Portugal.

DIFFERENCES OVER THE NAVAL BADGE

Naval Department Said to Have Issued Service Badges Despite Protests Made.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 9.—Mr. Duff, of Lunenburg, has two interesting matters on the order paper in the Commons. He is asking for a copy of all correspondence between the Naval Department and the Committee of Civil Re-establishment of officers of the G. W. V. A., regarding the service badge designed for Canadians who have served in the Canadian or Imperial Naval Services in Canadian or overseas waters. The Department has issued a large white metal or silver badge to such persons, despite the fact that the committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment recommended, on the request of those entitled to the badge, that it should be the same as the button issued to the Canadian Expeditionary force except that the naval end should be distinguished and the G. W. V. A. has agreed to this. The Naval Department will not agree to this proposal, and proposes to stick to its own design, which its recipients say has nothing distinctive about it.

Mr. Duff has also a resolution calling for greater development of the fisheries and urging the Government to take immediate steps to formulate a vigorous policy to this end.

Serious Shortage Of Food and Fuel In New England

Scores of Towns Still Isolated From the Great Storm

OPEN SERVICE ON MAIN LINES

Reports of Horses Starving in Lumber Woods Unfounded.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Boston, Mass., March 9.—Scores of towns in northern New England remained isolated today because of the storm and freeze up of Saturday. Several places along the blocked branch lines of the railroads reported a serious shortage of food and fuel.

Normal service on the main lines of the Boston and Maine Railrozd was possible today, except on the Mountain Division, which railroad engineers estimated could not be reopened before Thursday.

SNOWFALL DELAYS LOGGING OPERATIONS

Bangor, Me., March 9.—The News says: Reports from the logging regions say that while the tremendous snowfall of the past month has delayed operations two or three weeks, there has been no suffering by reason of bockaded roads, as was common in former years, and the reports circulated recently of many horses having been shot to save them from death by starvation are unfounded. Most of the logging now-a-days is done by big concerns, in a big way, and ample supplies are sent in long in advance of the crews, this being possible because of the good roads constructed by these corporations within the last few years. Even the small operators share the benefits of these improved forest highways, and it is said that in no instance this winter has any camp lacked for hay, grain or any camp supplies for more than a day or two.

Cut Greater Than Estimates.

It is expected that every log cut this winter will reach the landings, and that hauling will continue, with good going, until the last week in March. The vast body of snow, and the unusual depth of frost in the ground, insure a fine driving pitch this spring, and lumbermen expect every log to reach boom.

The cut on Penobscot waters, and probably in all Maine, is 20 to 25 per cent. greater than first estimates. Logs and lumber are held at the highest prices on record, but the cost of getting logs also has been the highest ever known. Men still are being hired for pulp wood operations at $75 a month and board. Thirty years ago better men were hired at $16 to $26 a month, and board that cost perhaps one-fourth as much as the liberal and varied menu of present day camps.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Halifax, N. The position of the Ellithorpe at 4.04 this morning was 20 miles east of the east point of Sable Island.

Canadian Lumber Shipments To United States Intertered With by the Shortage of Cars

Not Only Lumber and Pulp Shippers Affected by the Shortage, but Other Commodities that Are Eagerly Sought on the American Side Are Held Up.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Ottawa, March 9.—Big lumber shipments, involving orders for millions of feet ready for export to United States, are being held up here owing to the acute shortage of foreign railway cars. Not only are lumber and pulp shippers affected, but trading in other lines in eastern Ontario is in a similar plight. It is reported that in this part of the province hundreds of tons of hay, eagerly sought by United States buyers, cannot be shipped.

The extreme weather conditions in the Eastern States, the falling off of imports to Canada due to the adverse exchange situation, and the fact that many United States cars have been sent to the Western States to move grain, are believed here to be the chief causes for the shortage.

Inquiries at the local railway offices brought no hope of speedy adjustment of the situation. The use of Canadian-owned cars has been discouraged in the past because of the claim that there were great delays in getting them back, being tied up and delayed at terminal points across the border.

TORONTO WOMAN ASKS FOR ALIMONY

Husband Says Wife Had Insatiable Desire to Go on Stage and Left Him.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Toronto, March 9.—Mrs. Kathleen Semple, of this city, is suing her husband, Arthur E. Semple, secretary to the Provincial Secretary, for unstated alimony. The action was to have been heard before Mr. Justice Kelly, at the non-jury sitting of the assizes here yesterday, but the plaintiff, Mrs. Semple, was in Grand Rapids, Mich., on a concert tour, and the hearing was postponed.

The plaintiff alleges cruelty against her husband, and alleges that he has not provided her with sufficient money for her proper maintenance. She claims that in the summer of 1916, while she was stopping in Muskoka, her husband joined her for the week-ends, and though she was in delicate health, he insisted upon her rising early in the morning and bathing with him.

The defendant denies his wife's charges and states that he was not cruel to her, but contends she did not bestow sufficient care on their children and became possessed of an insatiable desire to go on the stage. He contends that his wife deserted him and is not entitled to alimony.

CAPE BRETON MINERS HOPE FOR VICTORY

A Satisfactory Settlement with the "Scotia" Management Expected Today.

CONCILIATION BOARD WILL MEET TODAY

Some Concessions by Operators Turned Down, While Others Are Accepted.

Halifax, N. S., March 9.—The Halifax Herald publishes the following despatch from its Glace Bay correspondent under date of March 8:

President Robert Baxter stated to a correspondent this afternoon that he hoped to arrive at a satisfactory settlement with the "Scotia" operators tomorrow. Superintendent Brown has made some concession to U.M.W. executives, but these have all been turned down, with the exception of the $4.50 rate paid to men who are taken from their places to work elsewhere. The U.M.W. have accepted this rate. The rates offered by Superintendent Brown for contract and machine men were flatly refused, being considered inadequate.

Superintendent Brown did not propose a datal wage for common labor, being satisfied to leave this in the hands of the Patterson conciliation board. The time agreement question will also be settled by the Board. President Baxter is confident that the board will hand down a decision satisfactory to the miners.

The board sits tomorrow morning. Four collieries are controlled by the "Scotia" company, the Princess, Jubilee, Florence and Scotia.

Montreal, March 9.—The administrative commission last night decided to reject the application for a 16 story hotel building in Montreal, to cost $5,000,000.

The reason given is that the city having sound building laws, the commissioners are of the opinion they should be maintained.

Under the present by-law no building higher than ten stories is permitted to be erected in Montreal.

Albany, N. Y., March 9.—One of several bills now before the New York State Legislature to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and wine was introduced last night by Colonel R. H. Gillette. He placed the alcoholic contents of beer at 3½ per cent. and of wine at 10 per cent. or over.

Liberals Again Press For Union Government

HERBERT M. MOWATT, M. P., A LIFELONG LIBERAL: "IF THERE IS ANY PROPOSAL THAT WE SHOULD BECOME A PARTY AND THE LEADERS CAN DEVISE A POLICY CONSISTENT WITH THE IDEALS I HAVE SEEN ON THIS (THE UNIONIST) SIDE, I WANT TO TELL YOU, MR. SPEAKER, THAT THE LIBERAL-UNIONISTS ARE GOING TO JOIN THAT PARTY."

The speech of Mr. Herbert M. Mowat, K.C., M.P., Vaudreuil, Quebec, on the Address in Reply to the Speech of His Excellency—in opening Parliament—is a clear presentation in moderate language of the general position of the Liberal-Unionists who joined forces with the Conservatives to assist in war work. Mr. Mowat said:

Mr. Speaker, in interjecting a few remarks at this stage into an interesting and vivacious debate, I take the place of another hon. gentleman who was to have spoken at this time, and my remarks will have the virtue of brevity.

As the extending of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Cronyn) and the seconder (Mr. McGregor) of the Address has not become trite at this early stage in the debate, it is not out of the way for me to say that we have in the mover of the Address (Mr. Hume Cronyn) an example to most of us in this House. The hon. member for London is a reader of books and a thinker along the lines of that which he reads, and although he has not troubled the House—or, rather favored the House with many remarks during past years, he is able, when called upon, to bring the mind of a cultured student to bear upon the subjects dealt with, and to deliver a speech which is an occasion of pleasure to all who hear it and which will go down in the records of the House as one of the best that at all events the younger members have heard.

In the member for Pictou (Mr. McGregor) we have another kind of speaker, namely, the business man who deals in a concise way with the questions that he is so well capable of dealing with and with which he is perfectly familiar. The hon. member for Pictou, when he tackles a business question, is like the description of his celebrated forbear spoken of by Sir Walter Scott, Rob Roy, when he said: "My foot is on my native heath; my name, McGregor."

It gives me pleasure on this side of the House to see the unmistakable warmth of the reception accorded to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. McKenzie King) by his own friends. He contributed a speech which was able from a debating standpoint; perhaps in only one respect did he transgress the amenities of debate. The fact that he was warmly applauded by his supporters is readily accounted for, because this is the first time that he has taken his position in the House as Leader of the Opposition. It is natural that when he took his first flight his supporters should be there to heartily applaud him.

But I must say that in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition there are some things to which I cannot give support. During the last few years we have learned a great deal in this country about the principles of "safety first." These words have been placed before the people on bill boards and in any place where there is a possibility of danger, with the result that the people have become more cautious and accidents have become less frequent. If ever a safe motion was introduced to this House, a motion which was absolutely innocuous to my hon. friend and his supporters, it is the amendment which he has offered to the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Of course, every one who is beaten wants to have a new election. That is a well recognized principle of human nature; the man who loses the race always wants to have it run over again. In a certain game on which I am not at all an authority I have been told that the man who has been losing all the evening is the man who wants still another round of jackpots when everybody else wants to go home. My hon. friend and his supporters know very well that there is no possible chance of such an amendment carrying.

But I want to go further with my hon. friend. I want to point out to him that he is not prepared for an election. If he will go to the province from which he comes and will consult the party leaders there, he will be told straight that he is not prepared for an election. When my hon. friend says that he wants an election, does he mean that he is prepared for an election in the constituency of North York, where he has been invited to become a candidate instead of in his temporary sanctuary in Prince Edward Island? If that is what he means, then I tell him that if he expects to be elected there he never was more mistaken in his life.

LIBERAL LEADER AT SEA UNMINDFUL OF THE FACTS

My hon. friend has not been here regularly. Where has he been during the war? For he seems not to have learned the great lesson of the war that no campaign, no sortie, can be successfully carried out unless ample preparation is made. The most successful leaders in the war were those who knew their details; those who had for weeks and months made their preparations so thorough that nothing was left undone to ensure success. That is the great lesson of the war. That being so, I ask my hon. friend to inquire into what took place not very long before he came into this House. Has he heard at all of an election in a celebrated constituency in Saskatchewan, known as Assiniboia? If he has, he will know the danger of being unprepared. His friends sent to that constituency two of his present supporters who have attained a respectable position in their party.

But of these two one was the father, if I may so state the position of a motion in regard to absolute free trade, a motion which, from what I can hear, from his previous remarks and from his proclivities in his province, I imagine, was not concurred in by the hon. gentleman who has preceded me in this debate, not concurred in by the hon. member from Sherbrooke (Mr. McCrae), and not concurred in by some others whom I see sitting opposite to me and who are smiling as I now speak. But he was the person sent to Assiniboia to support the Liberal candidate there against the farmers' candidate. He was so unprepared and these gentlemen who went out as his emissaries were also so unprepared that they were like "Babes in the Wood"; they were apparently absolutely without any protection and comfort, and the result was the election of a man against the candidate of my hon. friends opposite to the tune of a majority of about four thousand.

Mr. Lapointe—Great victory for the Government.

Mr. Mowat—If that is the sort of an election which my hon. friend is in such a hurry to bring on, the sooner he brings it on the better. I shall not support the amendment because, much as I regret to say it, I do not believe in its sincerity. But I should like to support any motion which would bring on an election now, because at the present time my fortunes are linked up on this side of the House, and if there were an election now I have not the slightest doubt that there would be a repetition of the result of the election of 1917. I see humor and risibility depicted in the faces of my hon. friends from Quebec. I am not at all sure that the result in Quebec would be the same as before.

Mr. Lapointe—Will the Government have candidates in the three bye-elections which are about to take place?

Mr. Mowat—The hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) deems it proper at times to throw the charge, if it be a charge, or sneer, if it be a sneer, across the floor of this House at members on this side as being the Tory party. It may please him to do so, but I can assure the House and the country that such is at present not the case. So when my hon. friend (Mr. Lapointe) from Quebec, who seems to have arisen to a high place, although I do not know what it is, in the councils of his party, asks me questions about what the Government are going to do, I may say that I am not in the confidence of the Government, and no doubt they will answer for themselves.

Mr. Lapointe—You will see what will happen.

Mr. Mowat—My point is that the position of my hon. friend who moved this amendment is such that we on this side cannot believe that he really means that we should support it and bring on an election two years after the last one.

My hon. friend made some remarks which were not at all generous toward the member of the Government (Mr. Blondin) who comes from the province of Quebec. I am surprised at that, because if there is one thing more than another to which we should direct our attention, our hearts and our heads, it is to bring about a better understanding and rapproachement between the English and the French-speaking peoples. I have no hesitation in saying that, because I have always believed it. But I was amazed, and I think we on this side were all very much surprised, to find the ungenerous allusions to the defeat of the Postmaster General in the last election treated with more applause than any other remarks made by the leader of my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. Gauvreau—We know him all right.

Mr. Mowat—I ask what my hon. friends mean by that. Do they mean that because they know that Mr. Blondin was defeated by those majorities, the allusion to which defeat caused so much sneering, of 6,000 in Chambly and Vercheres and 1,200 in Laurier Outremont—

An Hon. Member—You have the wrong county.

VAUNTED DISSENTION BETWEEN THE PEOPLES

Mr. Mowat—Did they mean that, knowing that the reason that Mr. Blondin was defeated was because he held the very opinions as to the prosecution of the war that the majority of the people of this country support? That was the reason he was defeated. In holding that view, do they mean because elections on those opinions are profitable in their province, forever to continue this dissension between the peoples of this country? I can attribute no other reason for their action. They must know and I assure them sincerely that we on this side think it is a great calamity that we have not French-Canadian members in the Government of Canada today. The reason is that there are no French-Canadian supporters of the Government elected to the House of Commons from Quebec, so how can there be French-Canadian members of the Government? But it is not too late, and I have no doubt there are members of this Government who would freely and willingly retire today if they could rest assured that members of the French-Canadian race would be elected and would so act in harmony with the present Government that they would take their accustomed places in the Cabinet Council. So I am surprised that applause should be given to such a statement. It is true that political feeling runs high, but my hon. friends opposite must remember that while majorities were large in the province of Quebec in favor of a man holding certain principles, there were large majorities in the other provinces just because other men held different principles. There were Unionist majorities of 20,000, 16,000, 14,000, I think more than that in the city of Winnipeg, overwhelming majorities. General public sentiment demands that racial dissensions between the two peoples shall stop and that large majorities because of the holding of these strong opinions shall cease, and that all the people in this country will get together to do what we know is our duty, which is the dearest hope of most of us, namely, to first uphold the honor of all Canada.

I did not notice in the speeches

DESPISED COLDS FRIENDS TO 'FLU

Medical Officials Make New Discoveries as to Malignancy of Colds.

"Never neglect a cold in your head," say the medical investigators, as it may preface or be in itself a very dangerous condition. A great many diseases show initial symptoms identical with those of an ordinary cold, and if these are not attended to promptly, severe illness and even death frequently result.

The proper treatment for a cold is to keep the system open for the elimination of toxins, and to reduce every local symptom that causes distress. Fortunately colds are all very similar and physicians agree on an almost standardized treatment. This standard is represented in Reid's Grip-Fix, a sure-fire treatment for colds and grippe, that has been on the market for the past ten years, and which has brought relief to thousands of tight, fevered heads and sniffling noses.

The aching limbs and general wretchedness of grippe quickly respond to Grip-Fix. It has a standing record of relieving a cold in a night and grippe in 36 to 48 hours.

Get a box of Grip-Fix today. Then you'll be prepared for any kind of weather that brings colds. You can get it at 35 cents per box at any drug store.

Sir Thomas White Declares Canada Wants an Opportunity To Go About Its Business

The Former Minister of Finance Shows the Absurdity of Some of the Contentions of the Opposition in Regard to the Financial Operations of the Government.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 9.—The intimation of Mr. Copp of Westmorland, that the appearances of Sir Thomas White in the House since he resigned the position of Finance Minister have been usually in response to the Macedonian cry from the Government, was not altogether without point. The appearances of Sir Thomas, it must be admitted, have been timely and they certainly have not been without effect.

The cheery note of encouragement, "Carry on," with which he closed a speech which was a vigorous defense of the Government's record during and since the war, evoked great applause from the Government side. His speech was well preapred and well delivered. It was free from anything offensive to his opponents as the speeches of the former Minister almost invariably are, and it had the effect of "jacking up" the debate, which seemed about to peter out. At the same time it contained not a little in the way of definite statement. Such, for example, as that it would have been impossible to have floated in 1914 the taxable loan floated last year, upon which there is a wide difference of opinion. It was frankly a very strong defense of the Minister's own record, as well as that of the Government.

Government Would Sweep Country.

The most interesting part of the speech, however, from a political view point, was that in which he said he would venture to predict that if Sir Robert Borden went to the people with a national Liberal-Conservative government, formed of the old Conservative party and the Liberals who joined his party in 1917, he would sweep the country.

The tremendous applause which greetd this statement from the Government side showed a considerable amount of solidarity there in favor of the same sentiment. This, coming after the statement made the other night by another Toronto member, and like Sir Thomas, a former Liberal, that he found things very much to his liking where he was, would seem to indicate that the Toronto mind is working in one direction. There are not a few who are beginning to be of this way of thinking.

The Liberal Party Divided.

The strength of the Liberals will be inevitably a good deal divided, with the Farmers' party cutting into it very deeply. There is a great deal of uncertainty still as to just where the Liberal party in the House stands on the tariff, and there are certainly many Liberals in the country who are very far away from the tariff sentiments of the Farmers' party. Although the Farmers seem to be making a considerable show of strength at the present time, and are certainly doing more publicity work for themselves and their views than both the other parties put together, there are many old political prophets who still discount their strength when it comes to a show down, and are inclined to agree with Sir Thomas White that if a moderate tariff party, composed of Liberals and Conservatives, could be formed under a suitable leader, it would emerge on top after the next election. The main point of interest to this unattached element concerns the particular political organization to emerge from the present unionist party and the personality of the leader.

The fighting speech delivered by Sir Thomas White today has given the impression that notwithstanding the frequent statements made that he is out of the race for the leadership, he may still be induced to head such a party as he described today. That he could rally almost the entire strength of the Unionist party in the House around him if he should do so is certain. There is no man now in sight who could secure so large a following. He would be more acceptable than even Mr. Meighen, though probably less able.

Another Force in Background.

Meanwhile there is to be reckoned with a great silent force, of whom little is heard in the House or in the country, but which causes many of the ambitious to cast shivering glances over their shoulders. This is Hon. James Calder. He is still the great question mark of Canadian politics, and the news that he is actively engaged in preparing the tariff policy of the Government is sufficient. He is unquestionably a strong force in the Government and was one of the two men summoned to meet Sir Robert Borden in conference at New York the other day. He is believed to be active for the perpetuation of Union Government and may have something of interest to present to the caucus when it meets in the next few days.

Sir Robert Borden still clings tenaciously to the perpetuation of Union Government, and with things in the chaotic state they now are, a moderate leader and a moderate policy would undoubtedly attract a strong following and be hailed with relief by many men who are tired of wondering where they are at politically.

Other Speakers Yesterday.

Ottawa, March 9.—In parliament, yesterday, a commitee was appointed to confer with a commitee from the Senate on the form of memorial to be erected in the parliaent buildings to Lieut. Col. Baker, former member for Brome, who was killed in action.

Sir Henry Drayton sad ithat gold had been shipped to New York to discharge obligations and not to change exchange.

Mr. R. L. Richardson declared his opposition to increased freight and passenger tariffs.

Mr. C. A. Gauvreau objected to the proposed appointment of Hon. Albert Sevigny as parliamentary librarian.

Dr. R. J. Manion announced that he would vote against the amendment and favored a high tariff on luxuries and a low one on necesities.

Other speakers were: Mr. P. Michaud, Restigouche-Madawaska, who said he would vote for the amendment; Dr. Peter McGibbon, Muskoka; Mr. J. McIsaac, Kings, P. E. I., and Dr. W. D. Cowan, Regina, who were all opposed to the amendment.

There are thousands of men and women in Canada, once run-down, anaemic and sickly, who are now strong, hearty and well, all owing to VINOL.

Mrs. James Stock, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, says: "I suffered from general debility and a nervous breakdown; I was depressed, weak and tired all the time. A neighbor told me about Vinol, and after all other medicines had failed to help me, VINOL built me up and made me well. I heartily recommend VINOL."

For all run-down, anaemic conditions, weak women, over-worked men, feeble old people and delicate children, the druggists guarantee VINOL to make rich, red blood and build you up or return your money.

SIR THOMAS WHITE.

The speech of Sir Thomas White on the Address in Reply is an admirable contribution. It dealt clearly, frankly and thoroughly with a situation which the people should understand. It was not inspired as a defence of the principles upon which the administration of national affairs has been carried on since 1914; defence of these principles is admittedly not necessary. It was a comprehensive explanation by a statesman who has a commanding grasp of the situation—an explanation of the national needs and the national duty, the methods of meeting these, and the efficiency in the discharge of our obligations. To this he contributed his broad view of the future of Canada, based upon the conditions of the present; "where in all the world "today, with its dislocation, its social "upheavals and discontents, its economic and political disturbances, is "there a country where the political, "social and economic life of the "people is on a better plane than in "Canada? Where can be found enjoyment of greater happiness and "prosperity, or a country which, after "five years of wealth-devastating war, "rested upon a more secure foundation of industrial and economic "strength? In the United States, "which has suffered less from the "war than any other country engaged "in it, and which rested upon a basis "of great national wealth, there is "today vastly more discontent and "unrest and economic and industrial "dislocation than in Canada." There is much inspiration in the accuracy of this view; and there are none who know who will say that the view is not well taken.

Sir Thomas was fortunately also emphatic in his commendation of the National Policy as the basis of the prosperity of Canada. The National Policy, he said, is not for a section or a class; it is in the interests of the nation as a whole. The National Policy is not a question of tariff schedules. It is a vital principle for Canada. It was the policy which had prevailed in 1878, which had been confirmed in 1891, which had been adopted by the Liberal party in 1896, and which, more than anything else in the country's history, had gone to the building of national prosperity. Well said in a sound argument.

Challenging the wisdom of the present but not new move for groups and third parties in our political life, he showed clearly in historical review that the group system had never been successful in British or Canadian parliamentary records, and declared that the agrarian movement, as represented by Mr. Crerar and Dr. Clark, had its basis in class consciousness, which was one of the outgrowths of the war. The triumph of such a system of government could only invite disaster for the country. It would, Sir Thomas said, result in a series of coalition governments, with the clash and conflict and the intrigues of antagonistic groups. It would strike a deadly blow at governmental stability, and it would bring about chaos in the administration of the country's affairs. In pointedly criticizing the attitude of Mr. Crerar, the leader of the agrarian group, Sir Thomas said Mr. Crerar had two policies, one for the platform and the other for Parliament. In his speeches throughout the country Mr. Crerar had preached extreme tariff hostility, but in the Commons, where he was likely to be held to more strict accountability for his words, he had preached moderation. The insincerity of such a leader is apparent.

In replying to the criticism of Dr. Clark of Red Deer, Sir Thomas said that the financial position of Canada challenged the unqualified admiration of both England and the United States. His (Sir Thomas') policy throughout had two objects: (1) encouragement of production to win the war, and (2) the placing of all classes in a position to meet after-war depression. He had been attacked for borrowing in New York; yet what had been the record of Great Britain in the same regard?—the Britain from which Dr. Clark took all his lessons in political wisdom. During the war Britain had shipped through Canada to the United States gold to the colossal value of $1,300,000,000, had disposed of $3,000,000,000 worth of securities in New York, and in 1916 had spent one billion dollars in propping up its New York exchange.

"What the country needs is a main-"tenance of the responsibility of the "two great traditional parties. Let "the public mind steady down, and "then, if Sir Robert Borden forms a "national Liberal-Conservative party "from among his present followers "who think alike with him on polit-"ical, fiscal and economic questions, "it is my judgment that he will sweep "the country."

Speeches such as that are of service to the people; and they also dignify Parliament.

IRELAND'S PROBLEM.

Sir Horace Plunkett, the unfailing friend of Ireland, is out with a suggestion that all the Irish elements should meet in London under the shadow of the British Parliament and endeavor to formulate a solution of the Irish puzzle, which would be acceptable, if not to all parties, at least to a majority—a solution which, while giving Ireland the degree of freedom which marks our own political and economic life, would at the same time pledge the supremacy of the British Crown. It is unthinkable that men of intelligence and good will could not present a solution of the age-long trouble. Sir Horace Plunkett has for many years labored in the cause of Ireland. He seeks now for a measure which would give the greatest amount of liberty under the aegis of the British flag and he expresses confidence that when the degree of liberty involved is made known, the solution will appeal to the great majority of the people. Under the form of a Dominion or a commonwealth, with responsible government, as we have in Canada, the Imperial connection would not add a featherweight to the sense of restraint, while, at the same time, it would guarantee the integrity of the Empire.

As an exchange points out, the proposed bill of the Government has found few friends, while, at the same time, outrages continue to be committed with impunity. It is a question whether the outrages follow upon coercion, or whether crime is committed in the first place to make government impossible; and thus provoke official severities which can be pointed to as evidencing the impossibility of British connection ever being acceptable to the Irish people. In recent debates in the British House of Commons these outrages have been condemned and the Government declaration that it must maintain law and order cheered to the echo. At the same time, many doubt the wisdom of the policy applied by Lord French, which is claimed to be highly provocative, in the interference with personal liberty which its enforcement involves. The Irish bishops have, it is satisfactory to note, condemned outrages in the most unqualified manner; and Cardinal Logue, the head of the Catholic hierarchy in Ireland, has insisted that the Irish people obey the laws even though these are inimical to the liberty and happiness of the people. It has been pointed out that, in the last resort, it will be the Bishops who will dictate the attitude of Ireland—indicating the degree of authority the hierarchy can wield in the connection. Those who know Ireland best are well aware that the Irish question is largely a religious question. The Catholic Church has been to a certain degree sympathetic to Irish claims; but, except in the instance which was condemned by Lloyd-George, and which had reference to the support of Sinn Feinism, it has been careful not to countenance schemes which tended to violence.

THE FARMERS AND LABOR.

When the labor wing of the Ontario Government was formed it had as one of the main planks in its platform the legalization of the eight-hour-day. In order to have effect given to it, this part of the labor programme would have to be accepted by the majority in the Drury ministry, which majority is composed of farmers. With the approach of the session the Government seems to have been looking over its stock of legislative material, and the eight-hour-day has been subjected to some close and unfavorable scrutiny. According to a statement in the Toronto Mail and Empire, this eight-hour plank came very near to tripping up the Government. The labor ministers wanted to keep it. The farmer ministers would have none of it. The thing came to an issue and was pressed to the point where one side or the other had to capitulate or break the coalition, and in the end the farmer majority had their way. The labor wing secured the promise of certain alternative legislation, which has nothing to do with the eight-hour day, and the latter plank has been dropped. The majority, it appears, realized that the eight-hour day, as applied to agriculture, was an impossibility. They then saw in it a means of making life in the industrial centres so easy that it would speedily attract whatever labor is now left in the rural districts, and food production would fall. They realized also that the eight-hour day in Ontario industries would seriously handicap the province by reducing factory production, to the benefit of outside competitors. They declined to have anything to do with it and the labor minority let it go. This is an auspicious beginning, and, as the first practical illustration of the farmers' attitude toward the eight-hour day, it is instructive.

"Lower prices for commodities are "probable as a result of contraction "of domestic consumption and a de-"cline in exports due to unfavorable "European rates," it is declared by the National Bank of Commerce in New York in the March issue of its magazine, Commerce Monthly. The bank expresses the opinion, however, that these influences will not bring on a radical price drop but that there will be a gradual readjustment.

The position in Parliament of Mr. Copp of Westmorland appears to be much the same as that which he held in the Provincial Legislature. He figures too frequently in the reports as an interjector of very small notions. It is unfortunate that his conception of things is not more in keeping with the importance of serious discussion. New Brunswick needs strengthening of its influence in Parliament, not weakening.

MAJOR BRACKLEY FORCED FROM RACE

Halifax, N. S., March 8.—The Halifax Herald this morning publishes the following item:

"Nova Scotians will learn with keen regret that, due to an accident, Major Herbert Brackley has been forced to give up participation in the great Cairo-to-Cape air race. A message to the Halifax Herald from the Handley-Page firm, London, England, announces this regrettable fact. Major Brackley was last reported leading, having left Cairo and well on his way to the Cape, some 5,000 miles away. As previously announced in the Herald, the London Times plane is also out of the race, having crashed into a huge ant-hill in making a landing."

RESIGNATION OF U. S. FORESTRY HEAD

Washington, D. C., March 8.—Henry S. Graves, head of the federal forestry service since Gifford Pinchot, has resigned to return to private life. Mr. Graves headed the Yale forestry school before entering the Government service and was at the head of the lumber operations conducted by the American expeditionary forces in France.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 9.—Firmnes ruled at the active opening of today's stock market, some of the prominent specialties, adding variably to yesterday's gains, while others reacted. General Motors, the sensational feature of the preceding session, made an early gain of four points, which was extended to 16 points within the first half hour. Crucible Steel lost two points at the outset, immediately reversing its course, soon showing an actual gain of 12 points. The stocks of other companies which are expected to revise their dividend policy as a result of yesterday's supreme court decision averaged initial gains of one to two points. U. S. Steel was the only stock to record a "wide" opening, a block of five thousand shares changing hands at 101 to 101½, an extreme rise of ⅝ of a point.

Good-Bye.

"You looked pleased with yourself today, old man," said the cashier as he unlocked his desk.

"I am," said the chief clerk. "You know I live in a flat. Well, never in my life have I been so pleased to hear my neighbor's piano going as I was this morning.

"Oh!" exclaimed the cashier. "Is there a good pianist staying there?"

"No. I heard it going away in a moving van."

Of Course They Would.

"You bet I have. Just suppose they should become fashionable that we had to wear 'em. Every time a fellow pawned his watch the whole town would know it."

PARENT'S REAL ESTATE AGENCY

FROM THE PEOPLE

HE MET A WOMAN.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The person who complained over the signature of A Woman that she had been treated as if she were a horse or an automobile because she had been rudely bumped when she walked on the left hand side of the Queen street walk may well have been the perfect lady with whom the writer had an encounter not long ago. It was one of the evenings of icy, slippery walks, and, according to custom, I walked to the extreme right in fact. Meeting a female who was as far as she could be from her proper course we both stood still and, before I had time to realize the position and step to the left as I would have been fool enough to have done, she shoved me with both hands with such force that I fell against a sleigh that happened to be standing just beyond the gutter. With the thrust she used some opprobious epithet which I have decided was—

"BRUTE!"

Fredericton, March 8 1920.

A DIFFERENCE IN VIEW.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I would like to use a little more space in your very interesting column From the People, but I am almost afraid that to do so would make F. G. Lawson mad; his majesty, it appears, is already offended. He opines that a People's Column should contain letters of public interest, and I assume that he alone is to be the judge of what is of interest to the great public. And I also assume that his knowledge of what interests the public is very limited—that's a natural assumption. His majesty may not have taken time before he wrote; he shows too much impulse and too little discretion. I would hate to think that down in his heart he is not interested in my letters.

I am very glad that T. E. G., in your issue of March 5 has such an easy remedy for insomnia; just simply get drunk and go to bed.

Yours,
M. HANNAN.

TO TREAT INSOMNIA.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—My heart aches in sympathy with your correspondent who cannot sleep, for to my mind insomnia is almost the worst disease in the world. Only those who have experienced it for any length of time really know what it means. I cured a year's attack of this disease by taking a three months' leave of absence from the office, and by eating a very light meal at evening.

During the time I took osteopathic treatments, which did me a great deal of good. The light evening meal was suggested by the doctor, for he saw that I could not digest a heavy meal at night and said that I was poisoning the nerve centres by too much food. A long walk in the fresh air before retiring; a glass of hot milk; a tepid bath (a hot one is too stimulating to produce sleep); the hot water bottle placed at the back of the neck and the base of the spine will often help to produce sleep.

I would suggest that your correspondent consult a good physician, for insomnia is a very nerve-racking and dangerous condition.

Yours,
ANOTHER VICTIM.

PERVERSE POESY.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The war, it seems, has given a boost to the muse. In the London Spectator of January 24 I counted no less than forty-three books of poetry reviewed.

It is curious, by the way, that for one poem of peace there are ninety-nine on war. The same holds true of water and wine.

This is something that the League of Nations and the Prohibitionists ought to see to. The poets, at least, might be warned.

Yours,

Woodstock, March 8, 1920.

KHAKI WEDDING ANNULLED IN MAINE

A khaki romance which began in Portland, Me., when a Canadian hospital ship arrived there more than a year ago, and progressed to the nuptial stage in New Brunswick, has just been legally ended in the Maine city by the Cumberland county superior court granting a divorce to Esther Stentosky Cartwright. When Harry Cartwright, who had served three or four years in the Canadian army in France, arrived at Portland on the Essequibo, he met a young girl, Miss Esther Stantosky, at the station. When he recovered from his wounds he went back to Portland and took the girl away with him. The two were married in Woodstock, and later moved to Houlton.

Cartwright was arrested on a charge of kidnapping and taken to Portland, where a more serious charge was brought against him. The charges were not pressed, however, and the case has just been closed by the annulment of the marriage.

OBITUARY.

Thomas Smith.

Thomas Smith, a resident of Hamlin, Me., near St. Leonard's, died on Friday aged 78 years. He was born in Green River, Madawaska county. He was selectman of Hamlin and also superintendent of schools. He leaves a brother, two sons and three daughters. One of the daughters is Mrs. Robert Martin, of St. Leonard's.

Miss Alice Mealey.

At Pennfield, Feb. 16, Alice, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Mealey, died from influenza complications. She had been away from home for a time, where her illness commenced, and within a few days after her return she passed away despite all that medical skill and loving care could do. She was a popular member of society and a general favorite in the community. Her death is felt to be a distinct loss to the many friends who had hoped for her a long and happy life, and a severe shock to her parents and one brother who are left to mourn.

Interment was at the cemetery in St. George.

Arthur W. Taylor.

Arthur William Taylor, aged 26, died on Saturday at his late residence in Halifax after an illness of influenza of two weeks, followed by pneumonia. He was married about eighteen months ago to Miss Florence Steeves, of Hillsboro, N. B. He leaves two brothers, John and Fred.

Liberals Again Press For Union Government

made by the Leader of the Oposition and his follower who so chivalrously made way for him, an invitation which was given out last year or perhaps the year before, and which had for its figurative expression "a light in the window." That was a genial invitation to return, to Liberals who had formerly been with the party which now calls itself Liberal. He said that there was a light in the window and that the latch was on the outside of the door. It is perfectly obvious that that invitation has not had any great effect. It has brought only two of that class of members from this side of the House and they had made up their minds fairly definitely before the invitation was given. The trouble with the Liberals who were thus invited was that they were not sure of the treatment they would receive after they went back in response to the light in the window. The house was all right. We helped to build the house, but the point is that you cannot live in a house unless the coal bin is pretty full and there is enough in the larder, and we did not see any particular reasons for having a good social time in the house in which the light was put in the window. The consequence was that there were not many defections from this side, and perhaps it is because the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) has seen the futility of repeating the invitation, or because my hon. friend who is now his leader is not of the same genial character as his predecessor, that that invitation has not been mentioned again. It is important to refer to some extent to that, because I think that it is a proper time now after two years, that I should make some observations regarding the first of the cleavages which we saw two years ago.

UNION OF THE PARTIES ON THE LARGER ISSUES

Political cleavages in parties are not unknown in Canada. They have generally occurred owing to a large mass of the people of one party hoping for commercial advantages, or on the other hand, because of some religious question which has stirred the hearts of the people. The Liberal party and the Liberal Government of 1878 lost thousands and thousands of supporters who thought that their commercial welfare would be better served by more protection, and the great majority of those supporters never came back to the party. The Conservative party in 1896 lost a very considerable number of its supporters, who objected that the Dominion Government was interfering with the rights of a province in the matter of separate school education. There we have an example, in the first place, of commercial advantage, and in the second place, of religious fervor, which are the two causes of cleavage in parties. Then we come to 1917, when for the first time we had a great world war, which was more potent than any other factor in creating cleavages in parties. It is true that some of us had to separate from our old friends, and we have been referred to as "The prodigal son," as the boy has strayed away, or setting the theme to music, "Oh, Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" But it must be remembered that it was not only one boy who left home, but most of the boys. Anyway, "the" boys, the best boys, left the party because of its policy in connection with the carrying on of the war. If you will look at the election results you will see that the vast majority of the Liberals who could not follow their old party on this issue were elected without the help of the military vote. If you look at the other side of the House you will find that only two Liberals were elected in Ontario, the greatest and most populous province in Canada, on what might be called old party lines, and they came from constituencies in which, for racial reasons, feeling was aroused to a very great extent against Great Britain. I am not competent to speak of other provinces, but as a general result the vast majority of the Liberal-Unionists candidates were elected. We on this side of the House cannot object to those who are left calling themselves the Liberal Party if they like, because everybody has the right to call himself whatever he chooses, but it does seem absurd that those who are in the minority should attempt to make out that we have not been treated properly on this side of the House, and that we have been absorbed into a party by another name. As a matter of fact, while we have been over here we have been well received. We have found no attempt at proselytizing. Our opinions have been received with civility, and furthermore, we have found something that has amazed some of my hon. friends opposite had they come over here, and that is that there are more real Liberals on this side of the House than there are on the other. I will go further. I have found men on this side of the House who call themselves Conservative for party reasons, who are more radical than any I have ever seen among my old friends the Liberals. I have been astounded to learn of the uprooting that some alleged Tories on this side of the House were willing to do in one way or another, so one is naturally bound to come to the conclusion that these old party names stand for nothing when a great cataclysm comes and a man takes the course he thinks is right. I am quite aware that the so-called Liberals, if they will not mind my using that term—anyway, the Liberals,— have been saying disagreeable things, as they have a right to do, about defections and turn-overs, but I can assure them that there is nothing on this side of the House that has given offence to those Liberals who went out for the principles of which I have spoken. Not only have we been well received, but we have heard nothing of the extreme views which my hon. friend from Cape Breton north and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) attributes to our colleagues on this side of the House. They have not tried to rub in, so to speak, their own particular opinions. I have heard that there are some strong party men on this side just as there are strong party men on the other side of the House, who would prefer to be alone, but, of course, they have been civil enough not to let us find that out, except that we have heard some reference here today to a former Cabinet Minister hailing from Winnipeg. So far as our colleagues on this side of the House are concerned, we have had very pleasant relations with those with whom we formerly disagreed.

The war changed things in many ways, and with the exception of those who had the most tense political feelings and political inclinations, the war made men think as they wanted to think without regard to political party trammels.

WHY UNION GOVERNMENT WAS WELL SUSTAINED

It is proper for me now, I think, after two years, and as the subject has never been discussed in Parliament before, to give a short history of the rise of the cleavage in the Liberal party, and I can do it best, and it seems to me it would be the most convincing to those who are listening to me, by giving my own personal experience. In September, 1917, returning from my usual summer vacation, when one does not read many newspapers, I was surprised to find that there were some people in the country who were opposed to Canada taking further part in the great war. I discussed this matter with three men of political prominence, candidates under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and I expressed my views, because I held them definitely and strongly. I said, "We cannot let Canada down now that we have sent her in; we cannot let our boys at the Front get discouraged and weaken; we have to send more men." The first man replied, "Of course we have, but what has that to do with politics?" Then he told me he had been going around among the people and had found that conscription was unpopular, and that Conservatives who did not want their sons to go to the Front were going to vote for the Liberal party if the Conservative party stood for conscription. The next man, who was also a candidate, agreed that many Conservatives who did not want their sons to go to the Front would vote for the Liberal party to avoid conscription, and he gave instances to show that conscription was not going to win. I shall not mention their names, but I am not abusing any confidence because anything which they said to me they will say at any time. They thought that while it was proper for Canada to continue her effort in the war, as was done afterwards by the Union Government, the more important thing was that the Liberals should get into power. That disposes of two from whom I got opinions. The third to whom I spoke—a candidate afterwards—rather shocked me when he said: "Well, I think we have done enough; let Uncle Sam do the rest." Well, I do not care to express contempt for any man, but if ever I felt like doing so in my life it was on the occasion of this assertion. If these be candidates of the Liberal party I felt, how it is possible for us, who think differently from them, to march in double harness with them again unless they change their minds? We could not endorse any policy of non-support of our men who were in the war and so there was an election. Now, mark this: The Liberals who left their party were as convinced as those who remained in it that conscription was an unpopular issue. They thought that they would be defeated, but apprehension of defeat did not alter their intention and determination that the war should be bought to a successful issue. So it came about, in an imposing outburst of public enthusiasm, that the Union Government, which was pledged to continue the war, was sustained except in one province. None were more surprised than the Liberals who had run as candidates in support of the Union Government, and I must say that the result was gratifying to them. When a prominent member on the other side made a remark in Ottawa last winter that the Liberals who left their party had done so for their personal aggrandisement I assured him he was wrong. We were elected through the patriotism of the people, in Ontario at any rate; but at the time we ran there was no idea of personal gain at all. We had played the political game before, but on that occasion we claim that we played the game of what was right for Canada without regard to the political party to which we belonged. I therefore give no credit to men like the three of whom I have spoken; they were wrong in their heads as well as in their hearts. They made a bad guess politically. They thought they were going to win and they lost, and I give them no credit for possessing any right principle or anything else to boast of. It was a pure political game with them. As I say, they were of opinion that they would win, but they lost; and it now ill becomes them to throw slurs at those who thought or acted differently from them.

PLEASING GOVERNMENT WOULD BE INEFFICIENT

I shall now conclude by saying that while this is not a political party on this side of the House—most of us have voted against the Government repeatedly, although the Government has not been senstive on that point, knowing that our hearts and our allegiance were generally in the right place—while we are not a party, I do not see why we should not become one. Men of like opinions, men with the same ideals in regard to the future of Canada, men who do not wish to see racial dissension or cleavage in the country, if they can meet on this side for two years and have no serious disagreement as to what is needed for good government, regardless of former party shiboleths, may very well compose a party. While therefore we are not yet a party, if there is any proposal that we should become a party and the leaders can derive a policy consistent with the ideals I have seen on this side, I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal-Unionists are going to join that party. We are assured there will be nothing new which will be inconsistent with anything we were ever told in political meetings on the Liberal side. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) now seriously—nay, humorously—did he ever hear political principles of a liberal kind discussed in a Liberal political meeting? No, he did not. Well, neither did I. We always played the party game. We were party men; and what a lot of rot it is to talk about Liberal principles or Conservative principles all the time! We were party men. But sometimes in a crisis we cannot be party men, and if we can find something better to substitute for what exists there is no reason why we should not take it. And we will take it. I, in common with the Liberals on this side, have had pleasure in supporting this Government, and supporting it enthusiastically, even though it be unpopular. During war I do not want to support a Government merely because it is popular. I want to support a Government that does the right thing even if it is going to be unpopular. And what a number of unpopular things this Government has had to do! One thing after another, which would almost strain to breaking point the ordinary man, these men in the Government benches, heedless of party politics, caring not whether their actions might incur the disapproval of their supporters or constituencies, or what effect those actions might have in the event of an election, have day in and day out framed policies and passed measures—orders in council, if you will—that were bound to be unpopular, but which were in their belief for the ultimate good of the country. The only thing that saved Canada during the war was the fact that there was a Government that was not afraid to do things that would be unpopular. And I mistake very much the temper and the generous spirit of my fellow countrymen if they will not ultimately support a body of men such as compose the present Government. It is true that at the present juncture criticism is freely indulged in. Attacks are made in every quarter; everyone is abusing everyone else the Bolshevists condemn the Government. But when this state of feeling subsides, I have enough faith in their gratitude to know that they will support the party that did the right thing whether it was popular or not. I admit there is some talk of the unpopularity of the Government, but that does not bother me a bit, because we know that it is merely a passing cloud. While it fostered by my friends on the other side—somethings, I regret to say, not altogether fairly—I know it is but transient. And when the next election comes, whether at the time demanded in my friend's motion, or a little later—probably a little later—the present Governent, comprising men who formerly held different political views, is going to be swept ultimately into power again. The history of Canada shows that the people have favored long keeping governments a long time in power during the last forty years, and history will repeat itself at the next election. Then, my hon. friends, I think, will be somewhat ashamed of themselves when they go down to defeat—except in one province—because they did not try to unite with us to put an end to dissensions, to throttle the racial feeling the moment it appeared, and to lend their support to a Government working for the advantage of the whole country and of the whole Epire, and for the well being of mankind at large.

Polish Forces Defeat a Red Army South of Minsk and Capture 1,000 Red Soldiers

The Poles by Their Victory Occupied Two Important Railway Junctions and Secured Much War Material—Moscow Soviet Elected.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Warsaw, March 9.—Polish forces commanded by Col. Sikorski attacked Bolshevik troops in the vicinity of Mozir and Kolenkovitz, southeast of Minsk, Sunday morning, and captured these two important railway junctions and much war material. One thousand Red soldiers and many officers were taken prisoner.

Soviet Emissary to England.

Moscow, March 9.—M. Kressin, who as head of the Bolshevik departments of trade and commerce and transportation will be a leading member of the commission to visit England to discuss the reopening of trade with soviet Russia, declares that the burning question in Russia is the solution of the transportation problem.

The immediate help of western Europe is needed, he says, in locomotives, repair material, equipment and repair shops, six years of war having resulted in a general breakdown. There is no use talking export, he says, until food has been distributed to the hungry poor of Russia.

Elect Moscow Soviet.

Moscow, March 9—The first plenary meeting of the newly elected Moscow soviet has just taken place. In the elections 570,000 votes were cast, or 97 per cent. of the voters. There were 588,000 who had no right to vote, of whom 468,000 were children. The others were criminals and those whose incomes were not derived from labor.

Under the Russian Emperor only 14,000 voted, while under Kerensky 45,000 were permitted the franchise.

company, ranging in age from 17 to 22. They will have three years of training with practice in machine gun, rifle and revolver. The total training required of these men wil be 20 nights each year. Col. Clements wants to see the very best element in town in this company. A motion carried unanimously that the York Commercial Club heartily approves of and endorses the scheme.

In order to help along the work of getting part of the permanent military forces located in Fredericton a motion was passed to bring the matter to the attention of the Dominion Government. A committee of three, Harry A. Smith, R. W. McLellan and Col. Osborne, was named to get in touch with the Board of Trade and City Council and to bring the matter to the attention of the Federal Government through Col. H. F. McLeod, M. P.

The question of better safety devices at the George street and Charlotte street crossings of the C. N. R. was feelingly discussed by a number of members and was finaly referred to the transportation committee.

Relief Committee Met.

The relief committee of the Patriotic Fund met yesterday afternoon in the Board of Trade rooms and several applications for relief granted, while others were turned down.

Grand Falls Development Must Soon Be Commenced

$100,000 Must Be Spent By January 10th 1921 or $60,000 is Forfeited

AN IMPORTANT DEAL PENDING

$5,000,000 or More to be Expended in Acquiring N. B. Railway Lands.

The development of the Grand Falls on the St. John river, the biggest water power in eastern Canada, is near at hand, according to widely circulated reports in generally well informed circles, and is likely to embrace a proposition to include the taking over of extensive timber lands from the New Brunswick Railway Land Company, Ltd.

The Grand Falls are at present under lease to a syndicate which has been controlled by the International Paper Company interests and the estate of the late Sir William Van-Horne, who have posted $60,000, which must be forfeited unless development to the extent of not less than $100,000 has been carried on in a bona fide manner within one year of the return of peace following the war, which period will elapse on January 10th, 1921.

While nothing definite is known as to what it is proposed to do in the way of development the present critical shortage of pulp and paper naturally causes forecasts to turn towards immense pulp and paper mills, in which connection it is said that some $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 will be paid for rights in connection with the timber limits of the New Brunswick Railway Land Company's holdings, which in all amount to 1,647,772 acres and which are largely in that section of the province.

It is said, however, that the International interests are not prepared to go on with development and are likely to dispose of their interests, while another report has it that experts have reported unfavorably upon Grand Falls as a site for pulp and paper mills upon the grounds that satisfactory holding grounds are not available. It is expected that within a very short time now something of a definite nature will be known in regard to the proposition.

VOTE TONIGHT ON KING AMENDMENT

Questions of Interest to Returned Men Are Due in the House Tomorrow.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Ottawa, March 9.—Several questions of more than ordinary interest to returned men and soldier dependents are due for the Commons tomorrow. D. D. McKenzie, Cape Breton, right hand supporter of the leader of the Opposition, is asking how many officers are being retained in the service of the Militia Department headquarters at Ottawa who have not seen service overseas, for their names, details of pay and length of service, and whether returned men are not available for the position held by them.

H. Stevens, Vancouver, asks for returns on the numbers of war widows by provinces, such returns to give the number of children in each individual case.

Major G. W. Andrews, Winnipeg, asks for a special committee on re-establishment.

The Commons will vote tonight on the Mackenzie-King amendment to the Address, unless all plans of the party whips miscarry. However, it is admitted that the vote will not likely be taken before a late hour in the evening.

U. S. MINE WORKERS DEMANDING MORE

Indianapolis, Ind., March 9.—The United Mine Workers of America will refuse to accept the findings of the bituminous coal commission unless a substantial increase in wages and improved working conditions are provided, it was inferred in a statement issued today from headquarters of the organization.

"There has been a steady increase in the cost of living since the first of this year," reads the statement, "in spite of the fact that the Government represented to labor last summer that living costs would be reduced and that the Government would see to it that this was done. Further promises of reduction in the cost of living would fall on deaf ears, so far as the coal miners are concerned, because they have had their experience with such promises in the past, all of which have gone unfulfilled."

Loyalist Branch Meeting.

The Loyalist Branch of the W. A. of Christchurch Cathedral are meeting in annual session today. This morning at 9 o'clock there was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral by Very Rev. Dean Neales, in the absence of His Lordship Bishop Richardson, who is stormstayed at Woodstock. The afternoon session opened at 3 o'clock and the election of officers is taking place. It was learned with sincere regret that Mrs. G. W. Allen, who has been the energetic president for several years, had resigned.

Late Cables and Despatches

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Honolulu, March 9.—The Japanese Foreign Office intimates an early resumption of commercial relations with the soviet government of Russia, preliminary to a formal recognition of the soviet as a de facto government, according to a Tokio cable to the Japanese newspaper Nippu Jiji here.

London, March 9.—French criticism of the proposed economic memorandum to European countries has been considered by the supreme allied council, according to reports, and such alterations as will meet French objections have been agreed to.

Montreal, March 9—Referring to the position of the Dominion Steel Corporation today with respect to orders, Mark Workman, the President, stated that the company was now fully booked up for a long time ahead and was, in fact, now offered more business than it could accept.

St. John, March 9.—The finding of the trawl boat Evangeline on Saturday adrift and badly battered as if it had been on the rocks of the Bay of Fundy, was reported today to the Marine Department here by James Reid, of Lorneville, 20 miles down the Bay. Trawling gear was in the boat. The find may mean a tragedy of the Bay, but as yet there are no fishermen reported missing.

Stockholm, March 9.—Fourteen persons have been drowned as a result of the sinking of the Swedish steamer Argo, in the Baltic Sea.

Osaka, Japan, March 9—Twenty-five thousand striking employees resumed work in the Government iron works at Yawatamachi last week.

St. John, N. B., March 9.—At the opening session of the annual meeting of the Social Service Council, of New Brunswick, which convened here this morning in St. Andrew's Church, it was decided to bring to an end the working arrangement between this council and that of Prince Edward Island. Instead, the council will work with that of Quebec, the latter bearing three-fifths and the New Brunswick Council two-fifths of the expenses of the united work.

New York, March 9.—The American Locomotive Company this morning announced the receipt of an order of twelve additional locomotives from the Canadian National Railways.

This brings the orders placed recently by the Canadian National with the company to a total of 67 engines.

To Attend Funeral Tomorrow.

Very Rev. Dean Neales leaves tomorrow morning for Woodstock to attend the funeral of his sister-in-law, the late Mrs. Neales, widow of Archdeacon Neales, who died in South Lawrence, Mass., on Saturday last. The funeral was to have taken place today but on account of the very heavy storms and no trains running east of Boston, the remains will not arrive until tonight.

Basket Social.

The young ladies of the Methodist church will hold a basket social in the Sunday School room tomorrow evening. A good programme has been arranged.

W. J. Southern, who has been confined to his home on George street for the past three months as the result of a paralytic stroke, was able to sit up for a short time yesterday.

E. P. Gaudet, of Moncton, is a guest at the Barker House.

Slight Decline in Canadian Dollar

New York, March 9.—The pound sterling was quoted at $3.61½ to $3.62¼ on New York Exchange today. The Canadian dollar was held at a discount of 13½ cents.

MAYOR SWORN IN THIS AFTERNOON

showed a sufficient interest in the outcome of the contest to bother voting, and 20 of their ballots were rejected by the returning officers as improperly marked. The remaining 178 of the 747 votes cast were those of returned soldiers, all returned men being entitled to vote at the election under legislation passed by the Legislature in 1919, and they voted more than 2 to 1 for the defeated candidate.

When 4 o'clock came and the polls were ordered closed there was a line-up of almost 50 returned men awaiting a chance to vote at the lone booth provided at City Hall for them, and they were loud in their protests at the inadequate arrangements provided for them to vote, there having been more than 50 per cent more votes cast at their booth than at any other.

There was no speech making nor demonstration at the declaration proceedings, which passed off as quietly as had the election itself. The official return of the voting follows:

For the First Time in Canada A Farmer-Labor Legislature Controls Destiny of Province

The Ontario Legislature Opened Today With the Drury Government Holding Power by the Narrow Majority of Two Members in House of 111 Seats.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Toronto, March 9.—Under circumstances of exceptional interest and considerable speculation, the first session of the fifteenth legislature of the province of Ontario was opened here today. It is the first Farmer-Labor legislature in the history of Canada, and the first Farmer government of the Hon. Mr. Drury holds power by the narrow nominal majority of two members, in the legislature of one hundred and eleven seats.

Included among the "supporters" of the Drury government, are eleven Labor members, some of whom are admittedly not entirely in support of the government's programme as announced to date.

However, there is a tendency on all sides, including the direct opposition, Liberals and Conservatives, to avoid unduly embarrassing the government during the session. The feeling is that the "Farmer" cabinet, composed of eight farmers, two Laborites and one lawyer, should be given a clear track to see what they can accomplish in this reconstruction period in the history of the province.

There was no salute of artillery as the session was formally opened by the Lieutenant Governor, Lionel Clarke, this afternoon, though there was a military guard of honor supplied by the famous Princess Patricia Regiment. The social side of the opening ceremonies were not so prominently emphasized as in other days, but the wives of the cabinet ministers, and many of the members, were present for the function.

Much interest was centred in the possibilities of the speech from the throne, the first in Canada under such democratic auspices.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 9.—An order on the Bank of Montreal entitling the bearer to $1,200,000 in railroad bonds was picked up in the street in the financial district yesterday by Harry Hahn, a 17 year old clerk.

Noting the brokerage firm signature of the order the youth delivered the paper at its office. A reward of two dollars was given him, with the advice "that he was an honest lad and probably would make his way in the world."

Sussex Eastern Leaguers Defeated N. B. H. L. Players In Best Game of The Season

Locals Found Visitors' Defence Hard to Penetrate While Combination of Fredericton and Marysville Teams Was in Some Respects Disappointing.

In what was generally conceded to be the best game to watch of the season the Sussex team of the Eastern League won from the Fredericton sextette of the New Brunswick Hockey League who had the assistance of a trio of Marysville players at the Arctic Rink last night by a score of 5 to 3.

While the visitors seemed to get the "breaks" of the game, which figure in hockey just as they do in every other sport, the general style of play of the Eastern Leaguers was impressive as compared with that of the locals, which at times was disorganized as a result, perhaps, of mixing up the players of two teams, while the visitors' shooting was also much more consistent.

Play throughout the three periods was maintained at a fast clip, although the Sussex team used only one substitute in B. Roach, who gave H. Radcliffe a rest, but despite the speed there was no semblance of any roughness or dirty hockey tactics on the part of either team, the penalties being largely for trips with one for playing offside and another for delaying the game—all of which demonstrated that Referee Sandy Staples was determined to run the game and keep the players well in hand, which he did.

The Sussex defence showed a lot of class in breaking up rushes and when the Fredericton players did get through they found Finnegan, the elongated net-minder of the visitors, very much at home and throwing his six feet and some odd inches of anatomy around in all directions to make countless stops which constantly bordered upon the impossible. In this way the locals' scoring was kept down and in John LeClair and Friars, the veterans, with H. Radcliffe, a graduate of a couple of years from the Sussex High School team, the visitors had just about as nifty an attacking trio as have been seen in action here this season. H. Radcliffe particularly showed wonderful outbursts of speed and it was his brilliant individual work that resulted in the visitors' two final goals and really put the game away for them.

How the Locals Sized Up.

The Fredericton team used nine players, their six regulars and the three from the Marysville team, but there was little more tact displayed in the running of the local team than there had been in previous games. In the first period the psychological moment for making some changes was allowed to slip by when the injection of Irvine Wade at centre would probably have given the punch that without a fresh player was lacking in the scoring ability of the forward line, who kept hammering away at the Sussex goal, but were doing some weird shooting. Irvine Wade was not used enough for, with Clarence Wade suffering from a cold and unable to do himself justice, the Marysville captain might have been kept in the game more and Eddie Colwell could have relieved on the wings, either of which he is able to play in a pinch. Edgar Wade was kept in the game throughout the two last periods when it was quite evident he was not playing his usual game and the generally brilliant defence player gave a disappointing exhibition.

Despite the fact that he worked throughout the game on the wing and never had a chance for a let up, Bert Burgess was probably the most brilliant individual player on the ice and the visitors marvelled at the wonderful outbursts of speed that he showed not only in getting away with rushes, but also in following back to break up the Sussex team's rushes. Time and again he carried the puck the full length of the rink and circled the visitors' net only to have his pass out count for naught, while Billy Lounsbury, who showed a lot of his old speed again, found himself generally driven too far down into the corner to get away his most effective shots or else couldn't get through to the curtain. "Patsy" Jewett played well, too, although not as successful at point defensively as at cover, but he had to do most of the checking—as Edgar Wade acted at times as if in a trance—and he got away with a lot of promising rushes only to find the Sussex defence hard to penetrate. During the short time he was used, Jarvis showed a return to his best form and he should have been in the game more while Eddie Colwell played just about his usual game, but, like the rest of the Fredericton team, he found the visitors a tough lot of birds to score against.

"Tart" Titus Almost Scored.

"Tart" Titus rivalled Finnegan in a marvellous exhibition of goaltending and stopped barrels or shots that looked like sure goals, but the Fredericton captain and goaltender was responsible for the most sensational incident of the evening if not of the season when just a few minutes before the close of the game he took advantage of an opening as he was clearing his net following what looked like an impossible stop and suddenly dashed away with the puck. While the crowd of 1,200 or more people roared with mingled laughter and applause the heavily padded goaler hustled his way through the amazed Sussex team with Billy Lounsbury alongside, looking like a torpedo boat destroyer escort of a big army transport; just in front of the net he passed to his support, who shot at Finnegan. The big Sussex net-minder turned the disc aside, but Titus got it again on the rebound and shot again, only to have Finnegan make another stop. Then the Fredericton captain hustled back to his own net amidst another outburst of applause and when the visitors worked the play back there again they found him on the job. It was a fitting climax to a sensational game and was the talk of the fans today.

The Sussex team went into the lead in the first period when they scored the lone tally on Friars' side shot that was deflected into the net off Jewett's skate. In the latter part of the period play was largely in the Sussex end but the locals didn't have the punch to put over a tally and delayed too long in getting their substitutes into the game to do any good, Clarence Wade replacing Billy Lounsbury and Irvine Wade coming on in place of Colwell when it was too late. In the second period with Friars off and his team playing five against six, H. Radcliffe uncorked one of the fastest rushes of the game, going the full length of the rink for an unassisted score. A couple of minutes later Friars scored again for Sussex when he drew Titus out and slammed the disc into the opposite corner of the net. LeClair drew two penalties in rapid succession for persistent offside playing and then for a trip while Burgess was also penalized for tripping. Then Irvine Wade got the locals' first tally on a neat pass from Jewett, who had broken away after stopping one of the visitors' rushes. Edgar Wade tallied soon afterwards when one of the many long shots he had been trying beat out the big Mr. Finnegan. H. Radcliffe got the first goal in the final period on another brilliant individual rush and then Billy Lounsbury tallied with one of his side shots. LeClair tried to kill time and was chased to the penalty box for delaying the game, being banished again for slashing soon after Edgar Wade had been nipped at the same stunt. Then H. Radcliffe got away again, drew Titus out and scored the goal that put victory out of reach of the home team.

Third Period—LeClair, 1 min., E. Wade, 1 min.

Totals—Sussex, 8 mins.; Fredericton, 3 mins.

An effort was made by Manager Beatty to have the Sussex team remain here to play the Marysville N. B. H. L. team tonight, but the visitors could not stay over. The game, if it could have been arranged, would doubtless have proven the best attraction of the season as the Sussex team made many admirers by the clean, aggressive game they played last night.—J. Ottawa Gets Scare from Quebec.

Ottawa, March 9.—Ottawa defeated Quebec 11 to 6 in their N. H. L. game here last night. The Bull Dogs nearly sprung a surprise when they led by 5 to 4 at the third period for a minute. The feature of the game was the goal keeping of Mummery for Quebec.

The Allan Cup Games.

Montreal, March 9.—It is now definitely decided that the Sons of Ireland, champions of Quebec Amateur Hockey Association, will travel to Toronto to play Varsity in the preliminary round of the Allan Cup on March 16 and will play the second game on March 18th.

I. WADE WILL PLAY WITH FREDERICTON

Chatham Said to Be Counting on Using Moar, the Bathurst Goaler.

The Fredericton Hockey Club will not leave for Chatham for the final games of the New Brunswick Hockey League until tomorrow morning, it was announced today, the dates calling for a game with Chatham on Wednesday night and with Bathurst on Thursday night.

Capt. "Tart" Titus, of the Fredericton team went to St. John this morning to appear before a pensions board and prior to leaving he announced that the players to go on the trip would be: Jarvis, Jewett, Williams, Colwell, Lounsbury, Burgess, I. Wade and Hall. Archie Sterling will go along as manager and Manager Geo. M. Beatty, of the Arctic Rink, will make the trip as treasurer.

It was said this morning that the Fredericton club were insisting upon Frank Brown, of Moncton, for referee for both games and intended to play Irvine Wade who, although figuring on the Marysville team, has been on Fredericton's list of eligible players since it was first sent in. From Chatham comes the word that if Fredericton insists upon playing Wade the Chatham team will play Moar, the big Bathurst goaler, in their net. The cases are not parallel inasmuch as Moar has not been on Chatham's list and will have to play the following night for Batthurst, but the proposal is significant inasmuch as it shows that the Chatham management have lost faith in Rigley, who has been a bone of contention all season.—J. D. B.

Wednesday—Skating with Band.

JACKSON OUTPOINTS DUNDEE IN JERSEY

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Jersey City, N. J., March 9.—Displaying one of the most vicious attacks a lightweight has shown in this neck of the pugilistic world this season, Willie Jackson outpointed Johnny Dundee by a wide margin in their eight-round bout at the arena in the Fourth Regiment armory last night. Jackson had the better of all but the fourth and eighth rounds. The fourth belonged to Dundee and the eighth was even. In all the other rounds Jackson led by a good margin.

PERSIA DESIRES REPARATION ALSO

Lays Her Case Before Allied Council—Urges Rectification of Border.

The court suspended the captain's certificate because he did not make sure of his position, and did not take any soundings, or verify his bearings. They censured the second officer for not suggesting to the captain the necessity of verifying the ship's position.

True Knights of Faith

"And what then, master-bowman" asked Hawtayne. "By St. Christopher! it is indeed a fair and goodly life which you have chosen, for you gather up the spoil as a Warsash man gathers lobsters, without grace or favor from any man."

"You are right, master-shipman," said another of the older archers. "It is an old bowyer's rede that the second feather of a fenny goose is better than the pinion of a tame one. Draw on, old lad, for I have come between you and the clout."

"On we went then," said Aylward, after a long pull at his black-jack. "There were some six thousand of us, with the prince and his knights, and the feather-bed upon a sutler's mule in the centre. We made great havoc in Touraine, until we came into Romorantin, where I chanced upon a gold chain and two bracelets of jasper, which were stolen from me the same day by a black-eyed wench from the Ardennes. Mon Dieu! there are some folk who have no fear of Domesday in them, and no sign of grace in their souls, for ever clutching and clawing at another's chattels."

"But the battle, Aylward, the battle!" cried several, amid a burst of laughter.

"I come to it, my young war-pups. Well, then, the King of France had followed us with fifty thousand men, and he made great haste to catch us, but when he had us he scarce knew what to do with us, for we were so drawn up among hedges and vineyards that they could not come nigh us, save by one lane. On both sides were archers, men-at-arms and knights behind, and in the centre the baggage, with my feather-bed upon a sutler's mule. Three hundred chosen knights came straight for it, and, indeed, they were very brave men, but such a drift of arrows met them that few came back. Then came the Germans, and they also fought bravely, so that one or two broke through the archers and came as far as the featherbed, but all to no purpose. Then out rides our own little hothead with the patch over his eye, and my Lord Audlay with his four Cheshire squires, and a few others of like kidney, and after them went the prince and Chandos, and then the whole throng of us, with axe and sword, for we had shot away our arrows. Ma foi! it was a foolish thing, for we came forth from the hedges, and there was naught to guard the baggage had they ridden round behind us. But all went well with us, and the king was taken, and little Robby Withstaff and I fell in with a wain with twelve firkins of wine for the king's own table, and, by my hilt! if you ask me what happened after that, I cannot answer you, nor can little Robby Withstaff either."

"And next day?"

"By my faith! we did not tarry long, but we hied back to Bordeaux, where we came in safety with the King of France and also the feather-bed. I sold my spoil, mes garcons, for as many gold-pieces as I could hold in my hulken, and for seven days I lit twelve wax candles upon the altar of St. Andrew; for if you forget the blessed when things are well with you, they are very likely to forget you when you have need of them. I have a score of one hundred and nineteen pounds of wax against the holy Andrew, and as he was a very just man, I doubt not that I shall have full weight and measure when I have most need of it."

"Tell me, Master Aylward," cried a young fresh faced archer at the further end of the room, "what was this great battle about?"

"Why, you jack-fool, what would it be about save who should wear the crown of France?"

"I thought that mayhap it might be as to who should have this feather-bed of thine."

"If I come down to you, Silas, I may lay my belt across your shoulders," Aylward answered, amid a general shout of laughter. "But it is time young chickens went to roost when they dare cackle against their elders. It is late, Simoh."

"Nay, let us have another song."

"Here is Arnold of Sowley will troll as good a stave as any man in the Company."

"Nay, we have one here who is second to none," said Hawtayne, laying his hand upon by John's shoulder. "I have heard him on the cog with a voice like the wave upon the shore. I pray you, friend, to give us 'The Bells of Milton,' or, if you will, 'The Franklin's Maid.'"

Hordle John drew the back of his hand across his mouth, fixed his eyes upon the corner of the ceiling, and bellowed forth, in a voice which made the torches flicker, the southland ballad for which he had been asked:

The franklin he hath gone to roam,
The franklin's maid she bides at home.
But she is cold and coy and staid,
And who may win the franklin's maid?

There came a knight of high renown
In bassinet and ciclatoun;
On bended knees full long he prayed,
He might not win the franklin's maid.

There came a squire so debonair,
His dress was rich, his words were fair,
He sweetly sang, he deftly played;
He could not win the franklin's maid.

There came a mercer wonder-fine
With velvet cap and gaberdine;
For all his ships, for all his trade,
He could not buy the franklin's maid.

There came an archer bold and true,
With bracer guard and stave of yew;
His purse was light, his jerkin frayed;
Haro, alas! the franklin's maid!

Oh, some have laughed and some have cried
And some have scoured the country-side!
But off they ride through wood and glade,
The bowman and the franklin's maid.

A roar of delight from his audience, with stamping of feet and beating of black-jacks against the ground, showed how thoroughly the song was to their taste, while John modestly retired into a quart pot, which he drained in four giant gulps. "I sang that ditty in Hordle ale-houses ere I ere thought to be an archer myself," quoth he.

"Fill up your stoups!" cried Black Simon, thrusting his own goblet into the open hogshead in front of him. "Here is a last cup to the White Company, and every brave boy who walks behind the roses of Loring!"

"To the wood, the flax, and the gander's wing!" said an old gray-headed archer on the right.

"To a gentle loose, and the king of Spain for a mark at fourteen score!" cried another.

"To a bloody war!" shouted a fourth. "Many to go and few to come!"

"With the most gold to the best steel!" added a fifth.

EASTER BALL TO BE SOCIAL FEATURE OF THE SESSION

Preparations Are Now About Complete for Opening of House Thursday.

SPEAKER HETHERINGTON IS COMING TOMORROW

Members of Government Are Arriving and Cabinet Meets Tomorrow.

The first members of the Provincial Government are here for the opening of the Legislature, Hon. P. J. Veniot and Hon. J. P. Byrne having arrived at the Queen Hotel, and tomorrow morning the meetings of the cabinet to prepare for the opening of the House will commence here.

Premier Foster is expected to arrive either tonight or in the morning and tomorrow night the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Pugsley are due here from Rothesay. Reports which have been sent out from Government sources that Hon. Dr. J. E Hetherington, Speaker of the Legislature, will not be here for the opening of the session on Thursday are declared to be incorrect, and Mr. Speaker is now expected here tomorrow.

In connection with the preparations for the session it was said today that the outstanding social event would be an Easter Ball which will be given at the Parliament Buildings during the Easter recess by the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Pugsley. For the first time in history there will be no State Dinner on the evening of the opening of the House; last year all the gubernatorial dinners were eliminated except the State Dinner, one of the reasons unofficially ascribed being that "dry" dinners have become dull affairs.

A Guard of Honor composed largely of returned soldiers, it was said today, would be on duty at the opening on Thursday.

"FATHER AND SON" BANQUET IS HELD

One Hundred and Fifty Attend Banquet to Boost Y.M.C.A. Work Here.

A father and son banquet was held last evening in the Assembly Room of the Y. M. C. A. building on York street with an attendance of about one hundred and fifty.

Mayor-elect John A. Reid, the newly elected president, occupied the chair and delivered a short introductory address to those present on boys' work. Addresses were also given by T. A. McDonald, the secretary; F. J. Patterson, Rev. Louis Buckley, Maritime boys' work secretary, and A. M. Gregg, provincial secretary of the Y.M.C.A.

The banquet was planned to bring the fathers in closer touch with their boys' work and proved a splendid success. Rev. Mr. Buckley, who is well known to every Y. M. C. A. worker as well as in athletics in the Maritime Provinces, and Mr. Gregg asked the fathers to help their boys in making and keeping to the right decisions in trying times.

THE WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.

Old Burial Ground to Be Discussed and Committee Appointed to Take Action on Its Care.

The Women's Institute held their regular monthly meeting last evening with the Misses Beverly, Brunswick street. A good attendance of members showed their interest in the work being done by the institute.

A matter of deep interest to almost every one in the city was taken up last evening when the Old Burial Ground was discussed. This spot is one of the places of beauty in the city, but for some time past has been allowed to go behind. Pedestrians have made short cuts over lots and otherwise marred its beauty. A committee was appointed to wait on the Local Improvement Association and see what steps can be taken towards preserving and beautifying the Old Burial Ground and the sum of $100 was voted for this purpose.

After the transaction of other routine business dainty refreshments were served by the Misses Beverly.

Other Men's Shoes.

Delighted audiences saw the opening presentation of the big seven-part photoplay "Other Men's Shoes" which was shown at the Gaiety yesterday. It is a big production from every angle, and contains that rare combination of drama, comedy and pathos which prove so popular with local audiences. The same splendid programme will be repeated today.

A Great Combination.

Eeryone is agreed that good fun and healthy exercise is one of the greatest and most essential combinations of the day. Both of these are on the bill for tonight at the Arctic Rink—the masquerade ball. The ice is perfect. Good music.

Opposed to Percentage Increases in Freight Rates for the Maritime Provinces.

The meeting of the York Comercial Club held last evening was one of the most successful that has been held by the club. There was a good attendance, a splendid series of discussions and a record amount of business done.

A report was received of the club quarter's committee, and as a result of this report the club is taking steps that will probably lead to acquiring a home of its own in the near future, a proposal to take over the Dunbar building on Queen street having been made.

Reporting for the transportation committee, J. Stewart Neill said that a joint meeting had been held by his committee, the Board of Trade and two representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to discuss the increased freight rates that seem to be pending. Representations are to be made to try and get better freight rates for the Maritime Provinces and at least to prevent further percentage increases.

THREAT OF SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC

SITUATION OF IRELAND DESPERATE

John Dillon Declares Plunkett's Proposals Unworkable and Dangerous.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY WOULD BE NO SOLUTION

Former Premier Asquith Arraigns Government for Its Coercive Measures.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Dublin, March 10.—John Dillon, the Irish leader, in an article in the newspapers, says that while any suggestion of Sir Horace Plunkett, chairman of the Dublin convention, for a solution of the Irish problem deserves the utmost consideration, his recent plan is an unworkable and very dangerous proposal.

Mr. Dillon says the situation of Ireland is desperate and demands an immediate remedy. He does not believe any hope for a solution is offered by a constituent assembly or the granting to Ireland of a status like that of Cuba of the past.

The Sympathy of America.

Belfast, March 10.—Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, in an address to the Ulster delegation which has just returned from a visit to Canada and the United States, said he had been kept informed of the movements of the mission throughout and had come to the conclusion that the whole of America, "barring the hyphenated Irish who are in conspiracy with the hyphenated Germans," was on their side.

Asquith Arraigns Government.

London, March 10.—Former Premier Asquith, who was recently re-elected to the House of Commons for Paisley, spoke scathingly last night of Irish conditions before the "Eighty Club," of which he was re-elected president. Never in the memory of the oldest member, he said, had the methods of government in Ireland been so reactionary, or denial of the elementary principles of Ireland's political liberties been so complete, so defiant, so insolent as today. He charges that a very large proportion of the crime in Ireland was due to the senseless policy of the present government.

Pledged to Home Rule.

While he and the Liberal party were pledged not to apply coercion to Ulster, they were equally pledged to the Home Rule Act now on the statute books, and he would think himself worse than a traitor if he asked the Irish people to accept any form of self-government less than was contained in that Act.

The great obstacle to frank and friendly co-operation between Great Britain and the United States, he asserted, was Britain's failure to apply to Ireland the principles they had both agreed at the peace conference were the governing principles of civilization.

Referring to Turkey, the former Premier declared that the massacre in Cilicia ought to be the last chapter of Ottoman rule.

PRINCE JOACHIM DISCLAIMS CHARGE

Says He Made No Attack on the French Officers, but Evidence Against Him.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 10.—Prince Joachim Albrecht, cousin of the former German Emperor, and Captain Von Platen, are still locked up in the Moabit jail awaiting final action of the court respecting the legality of their arrest. Both disclaim responsibility for the attack in the Hotel Adlon on members of the French Commission, but the State's Attorney has confronted them with damaging evidence, given by dining room employees and several guests, whose corroborative testimony apparently implicates the Prince and the Captain with those who began the assault.

Count Matternich, an Austrian, who sat near the Prince's table, charged with Prince Joachim, not only shouted: "Throw out the swine; kill the dogs if they refuse to go," but threw crockery and glassware at the Frenchmen, whereupon other guests joined in the attack on Captain Klein and Roughevin.

A certain Prince Hohenlobe is charged with removing one of his boots and striking one of the Frenchmen with it.

General Nollet, head of the French Mission, has forwarded a report to Paris. Joachim is primarily blamed for the attack.

TO WATCH EXECUTION.

Brother of Murdered Girl Allowed to Witness Execution of Negro Slayer.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Frankfort, Ky., March 10.—The state has stretched the law prohibiting public executions and decided to permit T. C. Hardman and about fifteen other residents of Lexington and vicinity to witness the execution in Eddyville prison next Thursday of William Lockett, negro, convicted murderer of Hardman's sister, Geneva.

A promise to allow Hardman and members of his family to be present when Lockett dies in the electric chair was made to Hardman by Circuit Court Judge Charles Kerr at Lexington when the mob gathered at Lockett's trial. This promise was made on condition that Hardman appeal to his friends to allow the law to take its course, which he did. Governor Morrow ratified the agreement.

Lockett has confessed to the murder of four women.

ELECTIONS TODAY IN SOUTH AFRICA

Result May Decide Fate of S. A. as a Component Part of British Empire.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

London, March 10.—Parliamentary elections being held today in the Union of South Africa will, it is believed, decide the fate of the government headed by Jan Christian Smuts, which is contending against strong Dutch Nationalist elements, aided by the Labor party. The result may decide whether Cape Colony, the Transvaal, Orange Free State and Natal are to continue British, or are to form a South African Dutch republic under its own flag and with an elected president.

Anti-imperial forces have recently been strengthened by being joined by many who were influenced by charges that Yorkshire spinners have been profiteering at the expense of South African wool growers. The high cost of living has also been a campaign issue, and the racial longing of a section of the Boers to be rid of British domination has been brought to the front by politicians.

Separation, it is believed, would meet with strong opposition from the British Government. Nationalist sentiment is said to be so intense that in some instances families have been divided over this issue, which is a survival of the old struggle which has been going on between the Dutch and the British since the Netherlands ceded Cape Colony to Great Britain in 1814. Present conditions are viewed with concern, because of the attitude of the Labor party, this being the first time the anti-British Boers have been joined by any of the British population.

FAVOR THE BOLSHEVIK FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Delegates Discuss the Eight-Hour Day and Condemn Opposition in Legislature.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Victoria, B. C., March 10.—Discussion of resolutions favoring the Russian Soviet form of government and calling for the resignation of the Federal Minister of Labor because of alleged lack of action in the Crow's Nest coal miners' strike, and also deprecating the six months' hoist proposed for the eight-hour day bill proposed in the provincial legislature, took up the session of the British Columbia Federation of Labor convention.

Delegate V. R. Midgely bitterly attacked the "Secret Police," declaring the government had seen fit to watch the democracy of the country; referred to "open and barefaced collusion between international unions, employers and secret police." One Big Union sympathizer had been discharged on "trumped-up" charges at the instigation of internationalists, he asserted.

By a vote of 40 to 5 the gathering went on record for dissolution of the British Columbia Federation of Labor and for consolidation as One Big Union.

HASTY DEED OF A WESTERN FATHER

Thinking He Had Accidentally Killed His Son, He Turned Gun on Self.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Saskatoon, Sask., March 10.—Suffering pangs of remorse at having, as he thought, just shot and instantly killed his son, Andrew Olsen, a well known farmer, reloaded his rifle and shot himself dead.

His son was lying sick in bed when Olsen was beside him cleaning his gun. Seeking information on how he worked the gun, the father asked the boy, who believing the gun was not loaded, was showing his father how it worked with the muzzle pointed towards him. In some manner the father pulled the trigger. The shot entered the boy's arm. The son turned his face toward the wall, crying with pain.

Under the impression his son was dying, the father then turned the rifle on himself. The shot entered his head, killing him instantly.

In Government, in the Public Life, We Must Be Prompt, Prudent, Broad

MR. J. H. BURNHAM, M. P., DEALS WITH THE THREAT BY A MEMBER "THAT QUEBEC WOULD NOT CONFER UNTIL HER HOUR HAD COME, AND THEN SHE WOULD BE PREPARED TO CONFER"—OTHER DOCTRINES OF FORCE—THE CONDITIONS IN CANADA—"THERE CAN BE AND WILL BE NO SATISFACTION SO LONG AS THE EVIDENCES OF LUXURY (SUPPLIED BY PROFITEERS) ARE PARADED BEFORE THE MEN WHO MADE THE SACRIFICES WHICH MADE POSSIBLE THE ENJOYMENT OF THESE LUXURIES."

Th espeech of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., of West Peterborough, made in Parliament on Tuesday last in the debate on the Address in Reply, dealt reasonably and effectively with several important phases of the situation within Canada and without. Mr. Burnham said:

I should like to join Mr. Speaker, in the praise extended to the mover and seconder of the Address, for I am sure their speeches are worthy of every encomium that has been bestowed on them.

This noble building one might expect to inspire noble thoughts, but I have been somewhat disturbed by the spech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Gauthier). He began by repudiating the conciliatory remarks of the member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat), and ended, as I understood him, by saying—and he asserted that he spoke for himself and his Province—that Quebec would not confer until her hour had come, and then she wowuld be prepared to confer. If that is what the hon. gentleman said and if that is what he meant, I would ask him if he intended that as a threat.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not a threat; it is a declaration.

Mr. Burnham: The difference between a threat and a declaration, especially a declaration of that kind, is that the man who makes the declaration is afriad to back it up.

Mr. Gauthier: The hon. gentleman has no right to insinuate that I am a coward.

Mr. Speaker: It would not be in order for any hon. member to impute cowardice to another. It is a question of construction as to whether that is what the hon. member (Mr. Burnham) meant in the present instance, and I can hardly go so far as to place that interpretation upon his words.

Mr. Burnham: Mr. Speaker, I of course bow to your ruling instantly. I might explain that I was not attributing physical cowardice to the hon. gentleman; I was attributing to him moral cowardice, something that he himself—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has now clearly brought himself within the rule of the order, and his latter remark ought to be withdrawn.

ANSWER TO THE THREAT FROM A QUEBEC M. P.

Mr. Burnham: I certainly withdraw the remark, Mr. Speaker. Proceeding then upon a declaration which is not a threat, but which is a full, plain and explicit declaration by a man who is speaking for himself and his Province, as he said, I must say that I am unable to distinguish between his remarks and something of a very warlike and threatening character. I do not understand such talk as that. I am an admirer of the French. I like the French—the French of Canada as well as the French of old France. But in these days when we in Ontario have had to stand the Nationalists, when we have had to endure from Quebec every insult under Heaven, why should we be subjected to a statement of the most mysterious character, a statement that they would only confer when their hour had come. That means when their hour has struck. Well, if it means that, I can only say, with most infinite regret, that I do not care a brass farthing whether they threaten or whether they do not, for I am confident that we will be able to hold our own with equanimity.

Mr. Gauthier: I may say that we will never confer with the hon. gentleman, for if we did he would not understand.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Burnham: However, this sort of feeling that has been aroused, to my infinite astonishment and very great regret, indeed, seems to be in the air. The passion displayed by the gentleman of that portion of the Opposition is no doubt largely aroused through the feeling that they have lost the major portion of themselves. The farmers of this country, beyond all doubt, according to my way of thinking, owe to the Liberal party, who held the fort for many a long day, at east a tribute of respect, if not of consideration. But now the farmers have repudiated the Liberal party, and surely if the farmers repudiate their associates, the least we can do is to agree with them. They know the Liberals better than we do, and they have cast them aside like a brand into the burning. I regret this parting from old associates, from those who remain of a great historic party, now about to disappear because it is to be swallowed up in that far greater movement known as the Agrarian or Farmers' Movement.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY AND AGENCIES AGAINST

This is one of those incidents arising from furious feeling which has been developed by the war. We have other exemplifications of force; we ave the women of this country (whos forte is practical but not philosophical idealism), advocating force. Strange to say, in this general convulsion after the war, when peace should have supervened, we have the doctrine of force being preached from one end of the country to the other, by ministers in the pulpit and by women out of it. The religion and the morals of the people, as well as their peace and content, depend upon individual liberty, and if we are to understand, as the Rev. Dr. Bland said recently in his pulpit—a prominent pulpit in Toronto—that individual liberty has disappeared, and that that we must henceforth have only community liberty, then we must bow to force. Well, we will bow to force only when we have to. And we will not submit to the force of the majority, because I have known a minority that, when it came to force, could overcome a majority; and if our women and the pulpiteers have so far forgotten their respect to God, and desire to spread infidelity throughout this country, as they are most certainly doing, let them remember that the remnant who hold dear all the old basic elements of the moral law, the basis of religion, will adhere to those elements when these people proclaim, as they are proclaiming, that the death of Christ himself was unnecessary if the Almighty had had brains enough to prohibit the source of evil. It is one of the most extraordinary and deplorable conditions imaginable. I am well aware that those who say that do not mean it, but they do not know. Those people who pooh-pooh philosophy; who sneer at the fundamental reasons of things and set up something that they adore and that they are determined to back up by force, have intensified the spleen and excitement which we now see throughout the country and which will result in the country's downfall if something is not done. I am not now referring to any particular brand of prohibition. It is not necessary to stop at alcohol; that form of prohibtion is a very minor affair. We need only follow that idea up to revive at once the conditions of the inquisition. If it is wrong to misuse alcohol, it is wrong to misuse religion—and we have all the horror of the days when women were burned at the stake, the persecutors maintaining the while a remarkable self-complacency. The antecedents of these very people are today delighted to see a repetition of what has happened before. One cannot look back on those days without wondering how these things could have been done; but when people are wedded to force they can do anything. I can only say that I do not come of a race that submits to force. If force has to be exercised, then let us "cry havoc and let loose the dogs of war." We can all join in that, and possibly out of this extraordinary condition of things there may come that spirit of re-union which the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Gauthier) a few moments ago seemed to repudiate. We cannot and we will not put up with this dogmatism which has been negendered by a false system of ethics, this force which has been substituted for the old religion and which sooner or later will destroy the very foundations of society.

PROFITEERS AT HOME A DISTURBING ELEMENT

One of the disturbing elements of the present day is, beyond all doubt, the condition of the mind of the soldier. He is not satisfied. Why? Because broadly before him is placed this simple fact: That the people who stayed at home have profited and that the people who went to war have lost. They simply say to themselves: Upon us has fallen not only the burden of the war at the front, but the burden of the war at home; we are ignored; we must struggle. The consequence is that there has been engendered and aroused a feeling which is regrettable in the extreme because it arises from ingratitude—above all things the basest and the meanest flaw in the human character.

I confess that the people who have been negaged in looking after the returned soldier have thought that they were doing well. To some extent they have been doing well. But he gives twice who gives quickly, and they did not give quickly, nor did they follow up what they intended to do with that instantaneous and practical carrying out of the intention which would have taken away so much from the sting of the loss which these men have suffered. Delay followed delay. Impracticable things were suggested. It was suggested that returned soldiers should go upon the farm who did not know a farm when they saw it. Men were offered inducements to go upon the farm but no inducement to go into business. Afterwards the loan principle was extended in some degree to business but there has been throughout a lack of promptitude on the part of our people—on the part of all of us—with regard to the soldier. And the soldier feels it. He does not want to be paid for what he did. He cannot be paid; no country could pay him. But after four or five years of war he finds that he is in an extremely bad condition in many cases—a poor, unfortunate condition—and he thinks that if he had some decent help in time of need; if the people of this country had been a "very present help in time of trouble," this post-war period would have been tided over, with possibly few exceptions. But the condition has been so widespread and so general that it has occasioned at last a suspicion in the minds of the people themselves that all is not right. In England they have said that war fortunes must not only be regretted; they must be given up. How frequently do we say that people in this country made a good thing out of the war; but we let them keep it. Let them in all honesty and ourselves in all honor remember that while they are entitled to a fair reward and fair remuneration, they are most decidedly not entitled to keep the fortunes they made during the absence in the field of strife of our glorious soldiers. There can be and will be no satisfaction so long as these evidences of luxury are paraded before the men who made the sacrifice which made possible the enjoyment of these luxuries. Therefore when we analyze the various causes of discontent we must remember that we have not by any means done all that we could do to allay it.

HIGH COST OF LIVING; AWFUL INFLATION

The high cost of living is founded upon the most awful inflation that ever took place in the history of the world. It is true that the nations' holdings of gold have been enormously increased, but the paper currency in circulation, based upon that gold, has been stil more enormously and disproportionately increased. The increase has extended from three times what it was before the war in some cases to ten times what it was before

A Government Majority of 34 On King Amendment Shows Opposition Where They Stand

The Greater Part of Yesterday's Sessions Taken Up in Personal Feud of Messrs. Murphy and Rowell, in Which the Latter Carried Off the Honors of the Debate.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 10.—The fourth, and many will hope the last episode in the Murphy-Rowell feud, which has excited if not edified Parliament at intervals during the past two or three years, occupied the greater part of the time of the House yesterday afternoon and evening. Outside of some new and unusual epithets and purple patches of description which the combatants applied to each other, there was little if any new ground covered. News that the debate was likely to be staged today attracted a large gallery, and the result must have been fully up to their expectations.

In the course of the debate some exhibits were produced which went to show that sectarian strife in the province of Ontario can sink to very low levels, and that men will bring to the game of politics a code of ethics from which they would shrink in all the other relations of life.

Murphy's Bitter Invective.

The attack was renewed by Hon. Charles Murphy, according to his promise at the last session of Parliament, and, it is believed, against the wishes and advice of the majority of the members on his own side of the House, particularly those from Quebec. It was noticed that, until the speaker had left the purely personal issue between himself and Mr. Rowell and began to touch on the religious and racial aspect of the case, there was very little interest or enthusiasm manifested. Perhaps the most that can be said of Mr. Murphy's speech—and the less said of it the better—that as a piece of bitter investive and personal scarifying there is nothing on the pages of Hansard to approach it.

Honors Went to Rowell.

Hon. Mr. Rowell arose to speak at the evening session. His friends thought it would be the better tactics if he would dismiss the matter in a brief speech and allow the contrast to carry its own lesson, but Mr. Rowell apparently thought it wise to go into detail. He gave a specific and circumstantial denial to the most of Mr. Murphy's charges, and explained the others with a frankness that aroused constant applause from the Governments side of the House.

So far as the honors of the debate such as it was went, Mr. Rowell certainly carried them off. He spoke with little reference to his notes, and in a voice tense with emotion. His reply was impassioned and full of the eloquence of which he has a large share. While it was a trifle less bitter than that of his opponent, he did not hesitate to hit hard. It was noticed that while Mr. Rowell remained in the House throughout Mr. Murphy's speech, the latter was not present in the evening to take his medicine, although he is not a man who can be charged with lack of courage in giving and taking hard knocks.

Lapointe on Amendment.

When the big, good-natured Ernest Lapointe arose in the evening and announced that he did not propose to interfere in the conflict between the two members, but would devote himself to the amendment he put the House in good humor, as he is usually able to do, and his method was perhaps the best way of dismissing an episode which has been of so purely personal a nature that men on both sides of the House hope that they have heard the last of it.

The length of the Murphy-Rowell debate had the effect of detaining the House to a very late hour before the vote on the amendment was taken.

Government Majority of 34.

Hon. Martin Burrell followed Mr. Lapointe and gave the first intimation from any member of the Government of the appointent of R. D. Waugh, of Winnipeg, to represent the British Empire on the Saar Valley commission as chairman.

Mr. Halbert and Mr. Maharg also spoke.

The division on the MacKenzie-King amendment was then taken and was defeated by a Government majority of 34. There were no switches and all cross-benchers voted with the opposition.

In the Senate, Senator David declared for a tariff which would encourage industrial development and aid all Canada.

Senator Poirier and Senator Boyer and Senator Casgrain also spoke.

GRAND FALLS WATER POWER, AND THE TIMBER LANDS PURCHASE RUMOR.

There may be some truth in the rumor that the International Paper Company, a United States concern, are not unlikely to acquire some of the lands in this province of the New Brunswick Railway Lands Company, Ltd., who hold 1,647,772 acres in all. The price said to have been offered is between five and six million dollars. The International Paper Company interests and the estate of the late Sir William Van Horne have a conditional lease of the Grand Falls water power privileges, and to acquire the New Brunswick Railway Land Company's holdings would serve the interests of a pulp and paper enterprise. Development of the Grand Falls water power has been "talk" for a considerable period. It was while the Tweedie-Pugsley Government held sway that the scheme was launched. There were rumors of scandal at the time; concessions, believed to be of much value, were granted for a very small consideration, and the whole contract was so loose that suggestions of a political deal were pretty generously accepted as not inaccurately based. However, the arrangements were such that the interests in control have apparently found little difficulty in holding up development of the Grand Falls water powers even until this day. It may be that some practical work will be undertaken during the coming summer and fall, and within the next two or three years there may be a development that should have been in progress years ago. The pressing public needs of the present demand immediate action at Grand Falls, and if practical work is not commenced within a short time it will be the duty of the Government to exercise reasonable authority; it might be advisable to pass legislation during the session which opens tomorrow under which reasonable protection of the public interests can be assured.

The report that International Paper Company interests, ~~said to be promoters~~ of the Grand Falls water power, are not unlikely to purchase lands of the New Brunswick Railway Lands Company is interesting. But if these valuable holdings are upon the market, they should be acquired by the Crown. We must ever look to our forest holdings as one of our chief sources of revenue. These lands were originally the property of the province; they were transferred to the Railway Company to assist in building the New Brunswick Railway from Gibson to Edmundston—a basis upon which to finance. We are getting dangerously short of lumber for future requirements, and it is not well, under these circumstances, for the Government to be inactive while there is a prospect of foreign interests getting control of a very large part of the most valuable of the raw material within the province.

DEFEAT OF THE MACKENZIE-KING AMENDMENT.

The defeat of the Mackenzie-King amendment by the substantial majority of thirty-four is a great disappointment to the Liberals in Parliament who expected some results upon which they could boast. The new leader, and perhaps Mr. Crerar also, should, however, profit by the experience. Combinations effected for service that is not broad—merely to advance personal or partizan interests—are rarely successful. Mr. King may have misled Mr. Crerar as to his strength, or Mr. Crerar may have unduly influenced Mr. King; yet, in either event, the weaknesses of the combination, in debating force as well as in voting power, should satisfy each, as it has demonstrated to the country that such a union cannot command public respect.

SHIPBUILDING IN CANADA.

It would be well if the whole country could have impressed upon it the true situation of Canada's shipbuilding programme as given to the Ottawa Branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada by Mr. Alexander Johnston, Deputy Minister of Marine. Political enemies of the Government, jaundice-eyed scoffers whose mission in life is to sneer at public undertakings, maligners of public men in general, all have taken their turns in condemning the shipbuilding enterprise on one score or another. To have believed them was to have been convinced that the Government had blunderingly or maliciously committed the country to an undertaking in which it had no business engaging and that in carrying it out it was establishing a record in inefficiency, extravagance and dishonesty.

The facts are, as the Ottawa Journal points out, that the Government was fully warranted in engaging in the shipbuilding business, that it went about it in a thorough and business-like way, seeking the best results at reasonable costs; that it succeeded to the extent that results and costs so far compare favorably with those of Great Britain and the United States, and that the Government and the country have reason for nothing but satisfaction and pride in the achievements to date. Mr. Johnston is thoroughly conversant with every phase of the undertaking—to a not inconsiderable extent, in fact, he is responsible for much of the success that has been obtained—and he laid the facts before the Engineering Institute with frankness and fairness. Both as to policy and execution, the record he outlined of the national shipbuilding project was honest and convincing.

Those doubters of the capacity of Canada and chronic critics of the country's administration had it that Canada couldn't build ships for herself and that even if she could the Government wasn't capable of undertaking the job. The ships were needed, but they professed to prefer that they be built on the order of the British Government, believing the agency of the British Government in Canada, the Imperial Munitions Board, more capable than the Government of Canada. Had that proposal been followed, the splendid fleet of ocean carriers now built and building would not belong to this country but to Great Britain, would not be assisting in the promotion of the commerce of Canada but be at the disposal of Great Britain and probably employed in strictly Old Country trade. But nevertheless Canada would have supplied the money for them. As it is, this country already has a fleet of 24 ships, 22 more are under construction, and 14 others are on order. Canada hasn't had merely the privilege of paying for these ships, as would have been the case had the proposal which the Government rejected been adopted; they are, or will be, under Canadian register, fly the colors of the Canadian mercantile marine, are under the sole jurisdiction of Canada, and are engaged in carrying Canadian goods to the world markets and bringing back supplies to this country. Canadian ocean tonnage has been increased by sixty or seventy per cent., and this year will probably see it at the highest point in the Dominion's history.

In addition, there has been revived by the Government's policy the shipbuilding industry, the demise of which caused much regret and loss to Canada. We have also created the nucleus of a steel industry which it is hoped will relieve this country to some extent from dependence upon the steel corporations of foreign countries—a dependence the effect of which was painfully felt during the war.

And it is not as if these achievements had imposed a financial burden upon the people of Canada. The Canadian national ships will pay for themselves and earn interest on their cost. Of that there need be little doubt.

As to the cost of the ships, the figures speak for themselves, despite the fact that they have been ignored in malicious criticism of the Department and of the Government. The price being paid Canadian Vickers, Limited, is $167.50 a ton. It was charged that the ships could have been built in the Old Country for $100 a ton. The price quoted by one of the largest shipbuilding firms in England for a standard type of ship not the equal of what is being built in Canada was more than $160. United States coats were from $25 to $100 a ton more than the Canadian price. And the Canadian labor employed on the building of these ships is being paid the highest wage—in some cases double the Old Country rate.

Canada needs now and will need in the future these ocean carriers. Thanks to the far-sighted, courageous policy of the Borden Government, she has and will have them at her service. Had the fears and the sneers of timid "Little Canadians" been heeded, she would not have them.

COMMERCIAL CREDIT.

The last issue of the Commerce Monthly, issued by the National Bank of Commerce in New York, says that reductions in the volume of funds employed in stock market operations seem to have been more than offset by increased requirements from commercial and industrial sources. Because of this pressure for additional supplies of commercial credit there has as yet been no relaxation of the strain under which the banking system has been laboring.

"It is probable, moreover," the bank says, "that although increasing care "is being exercised by users of credit "in making forward commitments, the "demand for funds for commercial "purposes has not yet passed its maximum. There is, therefore, no prospect of an easing of commercial "money rates in the early future."

Further increases in the outstanding volume of credit in the United States are to be avoided, particularly in view of the steady outflow of gold, the bank advises, and the Monthly adds: "Any easing of money market "conditions must come from a decrease in credit requirements and "not from an increase of the aggregate volume of credit. In this situation it is highly desirable that "banks and business interests generally co-operate to conserve credit "for essential employments and to "minimize its use in non-productive "activities."

The forty-ninth annual report of the Sun Life Assurance Company, published in these columns yesterday, is of considerable interest. The business of this company in force at the end of January last was $416,358,462. Upwards of eighty-six millions of this was placed during 1919. The figures create a new record—a great record. In the last year the company paid out to policyholders and their beneficiaries $12,364,000, bringing the total amount paid out in this connection since organization to $91,227,532. The income for the year is another record-breaker, $25,704,201, an increase of $4,053,101 over the previous year. The Sun Life of Canada is a great institution.

FAIR RENTAL BOARD FOR THIS PROVINCE

Moncton Approves of Legislation to Control the Size of Rents in Province.

Mocton, March 9. — Moncton city council passed a resolution tonight approving of the move that is being made by the New Brunswick Federation of Labor towards having legislation passed at the approaching session of the Legislature providing for the appointment of fair rental boards in cities and towns of the province.

The matter was brought up by Alderman Melanson, who is chairman of the Labor Federation, and who leaves tomorrow morning for Fredericton, where the labor organization will meet. Alderman Melanson read the resolution which he had prepared for submission at tomorrow's session in Fredericton. The proposal is to establish fair rental boards, such boards to be formed on a two-thirds vote of the city or town council. The board is to be appointed by the council and be composed of three members. Any tenant having a grievance against a landlord as to the rate of rent is to have the privilege of making application in writing to the board, and upon the receipt of such complaint within five days the board shall proceed to investigate, taking into consideration the actual value of the dwelling occupied by the tenant and other matters relating thereto and if in opinion of the board the rental charge is exorbitant and unreasonable the board shall by order fix rental to be charged. The rent so fixed is to be binding upon tenant and landlord until such time as an application is made by the landlord or tenant to the board showing good and proper cause why the rental shall be decreased or increased as the case may be.

Under the proposed act a landlord shall have the same right to make application to the board as the tenant.

Mayor Chapman said he had received numerous complaints about excessive rentals. People had asked him to take some action but at present it is impossible for him to do anything. In some cases rents have been advanced one hundred per cent. and even more.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 10. —Rails and oils furnished the constructive features at the irregular opening of today's stock market, gaining 1 to 2 points. They were accompanied by steels, equipments and shippings, while motors and their subsidiaries tended downward with leathers and textiles. The demand for rails again centered in investment shares, notably Reading and the Pacific group, but soon extended to secondary issues, Rock Island and Texas Pacific displaying especial activity. Foreign exchange, particularly in London rate, was substantially sigher.

ST. JOHN GIRL HIT BY RUNAWAY HORSE

St. John, March 10.—A runaway horse charged into a girl at the corner of Germain and King streets, about 3.15 yesterday afternoon, with such force that she was tossed into the air and knocked against a fire hydrant, causing serious injury to her back and ribs. The sleigh ran over the leg of her little brother, who was with her, but did not injure him. The name of the unfortunate girl is Effie Pond, and it was reported at the General Public Hospital, last night, that her chances of recovery are very slim, although the results from the X-ray examination are not yet known.

the war in others. There is an immensity of paper money. In some quarters it is worth nothing; in other quarters it is worth little, and we have high prices, based, of course, upon this inflated currency—the Governments of the world, not excluding our own Government, meanwhile standing by and taking no steps or adopting no measures to shrink that inflation and enable prices to get back to where they were. The most extraordinary feature of it all is that we have in exchange a loss to this country which is almost beyond belief and is almost more than we can bear. There are people, the farmers included, who view this condition with equanimity. They may be a little disturbed, but they say: We will not buy in Canada if we can buy more cheaply out of it. Well, if they are determined to follow that system and they are bled year by year many millions of dollars in discount or by way of foreign premium, then, just as a case of Bright's disease will sooner or later destroy and exhaust a human being, so will the payment of that money surely destroy Canada. The nations of this world are not one. We have all our households, national and domestic, to look after.

OUR FARMERS ARE THE MOST PROSPEROUS

Our farmers are the most cultured and, generally speaking, the happiest and most prosperous class in the whole community. For them to consider that they have a right to envy the rest of us because of our superior luxuries or attainments is a serious and sad mistake. I know of nowhere that the farming community enjoys such a high, broad and luxurious life as in Canada. Therefore, it is with the utmost regret that I see that they have formed themselves on a basis of force into a class of group, and to prove that they have formed themselves into an exclusive group, they say that nobody but a farmer can join them. You have nothing left; you cannot follow in behind them because you approve or disapprove their principles, because they repudiate you. And why do they repudiate you? Because their whole new policy is founded on selfishness of self-interest. How can they say that they intend to do what is best for Canada when they refuse to let good Canadians join them unless they are actual farmers? They hope, by the power of their numbers to come to Ottawa to rule the country, and I am stirred to make these remarks by hearing the Premier of Ontario say that he did not care so much for his job as Premier of Ontario, only for one thing, namely, that he regarded it as an outpost in his keeping, and he bade the farmers of Ontario keep their eyes and their minds upon Ottawa. There, he pointed, was the field of their operations, and the province of Ontario will be kept as an outpost while a class or group, defying all the traditions of good Canadianism and all the desire that we have that we should blend our interests, will reject all these and say: We will keep the province as an outpost and make out assault upon our fellow citizens at Ottawa. As for the others—their day will come; labor, the professions, their day will come; the manufacturer, their day will come, their hour will come, in the language of my French friend. But now, just like a great storm blowing across the country, the farmers have announced that they are determined to sweep all before them. Well, that is a magnificent way to proclaim the unity and solidarity of Canadianism. I sympathize with the Liberals that I see before me who are going down in this great storm. I do not suppose that two years hence Liberalism will be more than a name; and if the Conservative party, or that which shall succeed the Conservative party, does not defend the true national policy, which means Canada for the Canadians, a well developed and well balanced country, the Conservative party, or the party which succeeds it, will go down too.

NOT WEDDED TO PARTY, BUT CANADIAN POLICY

Like the hon. member for Parsdale (Mr. Mowat), I am wedded to no party but I am wedded to a Canadian party. I am wedded to the national policy, not to every feature of it, because there have been mistakes; there have been injustices; but to the principle. Work at home, work together; buy at home; let your country be well balanced; then when time of trouble comes, you will be developed and able to take your part as in the late war, and when difficulties of a financial character arise, they will all be at home and you will not be paying out your gold to redeem yourselves and paying a huge discount to other nations. These things are too serious to trifle with, and I hope, in these crucial days, nobody is approaching these subjects except with the most acute concern.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o clock.

Mr. J. H. Burnham (resuming): When the House rose for dinner I was calling attention to the question of exchange and inflation, and I shall not detain the House further than to make a general summing up. I will begin by congratulating the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, the former leader of the Opposition (Mr. McKenzie) on the courage and fortitude which he displayed in pronouncing unequivocally for Protection, in favor of Canada for the Canadians. It required some courage to do that in view of his surroundings, but I am pleased to see that he thinks more of Canada than of any party; the same spirit should inspire us all.

I just wish to say further with regard to the farmer that if any body asks why it is the farmer has become so aroused he will find the answer in the fact that the farmer dreads high wages, daylight saving, and things of that kind. Especially does he dread shorter hours, and he cannot be blamed for that in view of his industrious life and its requirements. The question of shorter hours is no reproach to labor, because when we consider how it arose the answer at once presents itself. In the United States, for example, the operators of the coal mines, in order to have as little coal on hand as possible when the demand came for it, shortened the hours of production, so that if the worker in the coal mine was to have any pay at all he must necessarily shorten the hours of his working day so that he could get in more working days, because it frequently happened day after day and week after week that he would have not only many hours but whole days idle. Now when he sees that the operators have made tremendous profits, running all the way from 400 to 2,000 per cent, what can he do but strike? For neither this Government nor any other that I know of has provided him with any means of expressing his feelings in the matter except by striking. People when they read the newspapers hold up their hands in horror at the usurious percentage exacted by such operators as I have referred to, but they make no effort to stop it. The reason I refer to the United States is that the Americans have at last taken up this question in their usual strong and vigorous way. We in Canada, although I have nothing but the greatest respect for our Minister of Labor (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who is, I think, a man of great energy and great ability and certainly of great sincerity, seems to be utterly confounded by these things. We have no solution; we offer no suggestions, and the cruel work goes on. Labor has, therefore, taken the matter into its own hands, and if ye do not get an eight-hour day it will be because we will get a six-hour day, and the farmer will then be worse off than ever. If the manufacturer, for instance, decided to run the country, decided to form a powerful financial group and to concentrate their energies and their wealth, with all the ability that their leading men have, upon their own interests in this House, and with the farmers doing the same, where pray would the rest of Canada be? It would be just as strongly against the manufacturers in any such event as I would be against the farmers. We must be a united and a sane people, or we will cease to exist as a nation. I am confident that one of the difficulties this country labors under is that the people are largely uninformed except as to their own business, and here is a reproach that lies at the door of our leading men. Our ministers of government and the leading men of the Opposition might well go through the country, not at election times when nobody believes anybody else, but at other times, and explain the broad principles of government and of statesmanship. A statesman, Gladstone said, is a man who ascertains the facts and acts accordingly. In this way our leading men would learn in their peregrinations what the true conditions of the country were; they would know what the country thought and needed, and the country would know also what they thought; but at the present time, until the war drum of elections is sounded, nobody pricks up his ears about the country at all, and it is left to Canadian clubs and similar institutions to educate the country. This is a very serious drawback, and I am quite convinced that the good feeling as well as the intelligence of the country would be very much developed if our leading men were to visit different sections of the country at different times.

MUST HAVE CHEAP POWER NOT CHEAP SENTIMENT

I want to touch for a moment upon a source of energy that has come like a flash into view and will afford us more comfort than anything else that I know of. The day of coal has gone by. Even if it could be mined, it is of poor quality or it is not there—I am referring to hard coal particularly, and the highest quality of soft coal. Gasoline has become so tremendously expensive that it is fast disappearing in public estimation and is creating a need which is about to be supplied, industrial chemists tell us, by industrial alcohol. The Americans a few years ago manufactured 6,000,000 gallons of alcohol per annum. Now they manufacture over 100,000,000 per annum. Our industrial alcohol, owing to the nervousness of the temperance people, has to be shipped from the distillers to Ottawa, there to be denatured, and sent out to the users throughout the country. The consequence is that the freight alone is so expensive that Canada is put out of business as a consumer of industrial alcohol. That has to be stopped. The National Council of Industrial Research begs the Government to tell the people to grow more corn, and potatoes and everything of that sort from which alcohol can be easily made, and then to take off all sorts of embargoes such as I have referred to, so that this source of energy may be made available to the people.

We are short of electricity, and even if we had all the electricity we wanted alcohol has become so cheap as a manufacturing product that one might almost describe it as the product of the wizard's wand. The hope of the world lies in industrial alcohol. Let us be alive to that fact and see to it that the Government duly recognizes it. A few years ago it was discovered that peat could be made into a fertilizer. I wrote to the department then, some five years ago, and begged them not to let some people get hold of all the peat bogs in the country and, after they had been tied up in this manner, find that they were all owned privately. I believe that some steps were taken in the matter. There is a fertilizer which, as the chemist might say, by a single twist of the wrist could be made available to the whole country, and surely it is necessary and desirable that this should be done.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY THE BEST SAFEGUARD

I desire to say in closing—because it is a matter very dear to my heart—that the basis of religion and morals is individual liberty; and when individual liberty is gone, then no religion nor morals can exist. The Creator recognized this truth, and He could not establish the moral law nor be the fountain of that law and compel one single human being by means of prohibition or any such device. We are to have no freedom, no free will in anything, except by the behest of the prohibitionists. If you want Bolshevism, if you want that frightful explosion of energy which we saw in Russia, which overthrew like a volcanic eruption the tyrannical and autocratic system that was in vogue there, then that is the way to get it. There was no sense in the cruelty practiced there by the ruling classes. The country did not belong to the people but to the few. How can we expect a great multitude, disturbed like an immense animal from its long sleep of oppression, to do otherwise than rise up and smash everything to pieces? Believe me, there is far more of that very spirit in this country than many people imagine, and it may show itself in many peculiar ways and not be recognized as the spirit of Bolshevism until it is too late. Why pray when the policeman is at the door? That is the motto of the prohibitionists and the user of force, the man who is substituting force for faith. Hail the policeman! Crush them! Do what no divine plan ever did or could do, and you will show your human presumption, your ignorance and your incapacity. Let me say that no system can substitute the "must" for the "ought." In conclusion, let me extend in all sincerity the hand of fellowship from one province to another, if I may be bold enough to do so. Surely the Protestant and the English-speaking people have played some part in Quebec. Surely they have shown their faith in Quebec, as well as their high regard for the French people. We are the same as they; our interests are linked up with theirs; our prosperity and our whole future, in Ontario at least, is linked up with that of Quebec. If Quebec and Ontario cannot pull together they will both be ruined, and Ontario knows this whether Quebec does or not. Now, we are all men and women, whether we are French or English, Liberals or Conservatives, farmers, manufacturers or mechanics. Let us drop the race cry; drop the party cry. Let us of course be loyal to whatever school of thought which we belong to; let us be loyal to our friends within reason. But let us remember that above all things we are human beings and must be loyal to human liberty and human rights.

Look around at the men and women you meet in a single day. One glance is enough to tell the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says that to help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Ignace Jan Paderewski, Ex-Premier of Poland and Master Pianist; United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Claims of Washington; also former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

DIRECT BRITISH EMIGRANTS HERE

One Emigrant to Canada Worth Twenty Times as Much to Empire as One to U. S.

London, March 9.—In the Commons discussion of the colonial office vote today, Colonel Amery explained that the overseas settlement committee, having secured effective co-operation with the Dominion Governments in directing emigration into Canada, had granted ex-service men easy terms and applications for about 18,000 persons to emigrate had been made and 11,000 to 12,000 had already sailed or were about to.

From the point of view of the safety of the Empire, one emigrant into Canada was worth twenty times as much as one who went into even a friendly country like the United States. What the government aimed at was putting emigration on the best conditions.

The latest financial game at Eastport is played by Canadian bank depositors who withdraw their money from the Eastport banks, receiving American funds, which they deposit in Canadian banks to get the premium, giving them a profit of from 17 to 22 per cent. in Canadian money.

His Death Expected
New Brunswick Man Saved

Mr. Isidore Thomas, of Tilley's Road, Gloucester County, N.B., while expecting death, availed himself of help that was offered at random. Here is part of a letter he wrote to us:—

"I beg you to publish my letter, so that people may know what Gin Pills did for me. My case was very serious. I was so sick everybody expected my death any day. Finally, on advice from friends, I tried Gin Pills, and in a short time was well again, and soon had gained 20 pounds."

Kidney and bladder troubles, very often, work in secret ways. A bad condition may exist, with only a backache to indicate it. That is why the slightest pains in back or sides should be investigated. These pains, along with sciatic neuralgia, rheumatism, dizziness, constipation, lassitude, lumbago, highly-colored urine, headache, floating specks before the eyes, gravel, indicate kidney trouble. A course of Gin Pills, taken at once, will give relief, and prevent the progress of the disease, enabling the organs to right themselves and restore good health. Gin Pills are the sure, safe, quick remedy. Get a box from your druggist or dealer—50c. Money refunded if no relief found. Send for free sample.

FROM THE PEOPLE

WHERE HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS GO TO.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—With lumber selling at a higher price this year than ever before in the history of this province, at a price last year also higher than that of any previous record, is it not unaccountable, except from the partizan standpoint, that the Crown stumpage rate remained all last year and the previous year at the absurd figure of $3.50 a thousand? The authority to fix the rate of stumpage is with the Government, by order-in-council; legislation is not necessary. As a matter of fact, by the Local Government's inaction, by its failure to do its duty, the province is about three-quarters of a million dollars short of the revenue it should have had in the last two years from the territorial revenue. When the demand is made for public money for development we are told the treasury cannot afford it; when we ask to have done what other provinces are doing, when we ask to keep moderate and judicious pace, the reply is, no money. Does Premier Foster think he can fool the people? He has had three years of power. The people wished him well and hoped for good results; but instead of good results we have conditions today more deplorable than any of which this province has a record, and there is a belief, now general, that the worst of recent years is not yet uncovered. Is it any wonder that the province has not been keeping pace with the requirements of agriculture, industry and general development?

TO CURE INSOMNIA.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—A two-fold obligation moves me to immediately reply to your correspondent, who is a victim of insomnia, and in search of cure. An erstwhile sufferer from this trouble, I am deeply grateful to those who helped me overcome it, and I am glad also to offer this contribution in return for the interest your From the People column gives me.

I have gone through the siege, sustained through many weary nights and days by knowing the malady would finally yield, as in the cases of friends and acquaintances. Briefly, I tried a number of remedies, consulted physicians, who prescribed medicines which did not help and three-week vacation trips that I could not take.

Then fortunately I came upon one physician who had a full of psychology combined with a knowledge of insomnia, and both time and inclination to discuss the case and cure it. He explained that while ordinary insomnia might have its cause in either mental or physical condition, in due time it would affect both so that we would have to fight it both ways. He cheerfully refused to give me an opiate, saying that I had better forego sleep for a while rather than run the risk of becoming addicted to a drug. But he did prescribe a sedative (three bromide) and a medicine to promote digestion. I was advised to go out evenings, preferably a new place each time in search of amusement and entertainment, and to walk from 2 to 5 miles every night and to take a warm bath, or at least a foot bath, before retiring. Once in bed I was ordered to get comfortable, relax, smile and breathe deeply. And smile I must, even if sleep come not the first night or the next.

On rising I was told to smile again—forcibly, if need be—and drink a cupful of warm water, to exercise the stomach muscles and, if practicable, take a walk before breakfast. Meals were to be as usual, preferably lighter with all sorts of spicy condiments and pastry eliminated. But the smile was insisted on throughout the day, particularly when thought drifted to myself, my insomnia, or any other gloomy subject.

Insomnia is gone; the smile persists. The good doctor tried to make it clear to my mind that the smile has actual power to ease not only psychological but also physiological disorders. Try it.

Yours,
C. R. S.

THOSE PUNCH BOARDS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I see by The Gleaner that the police of Fredericton are getting after the punch boards. Why would it not be a good thing to get after the man who sends those punch boards out broadcast throughout the country districts, and make a good job of it. Now, sir, we have here in this settlement one grocery store, and in that store, within three months, there have been three punch boards; and as each board represents $100, that means that the little boys and young men of this small place have been swindled out of $300; and it is the same in nearly every country store in the village of Boiestown. There are three I know of; one in the post office, one in the barber shop, and one in a grocery store; and it is the same all through this section of the country.

Now, Mr. Editor, I think you will agree with me when I say it would be a wise act for the people to take action and have this gambling device banished now and forever.

Yours,
DAVID A. SMITH.

MONDAY'S ELECTION AND RETURNED SOLDIERS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The failure of those in charge of yesterday's civic election to provide the same facilities for returned soldiers to vote that were accorded other electors has been roundly condemned by thoughtful citizens as one of those troublesome incidents which stir up unrest at a time when everything possible should be done to facilitate the re-establishment of those who are getting back into civilian life. Almost fifty ex-soldiers who had been granted a franchise by an especial act of the Legislature last year were waiting outside the only polling booth at which they could register their votes when the poll closed. There can be no justifiable excuse given for the failure of those who had charge of the election to make proper provision for them to vote, but it looks as if the only way the soldiers can hope to obtain justice at City Hall is to have their own representatives there. They have enough votes to control the situation, if they wish to make the move.

Yours,
RETURNED MAN.

Opening of the Legislature Here Tomorrow to be Filmed For the Moving Pictures

Everything in Readiness for the Opening Ceremonies Which Promise to Provide Few Novelties—Budget Ready for Next Week, It is Said.

The stage was just about all set today for the opening of the fourth session of the seventh Legislature of New Brunswick here tomorrow afternoon.

Premier Foster arrived this morning and all the members of Government with the exception of Hon. Dr. Roberts and Hon. C. W. Robinson were present when a meeting of the Executive Council opened about noon to discuss the Government's plans for the opening of the House. Hon. J. A. Murray, leader of the Opposition, and Hon. Dr. J. E. Hetherington, Speaker of the Legislature, were also in town today, as well as a number of private members.

Lieutenant-Governor Pugsley, accompanied by Mrs. Pugsley and some others, will arrive this evening and will make their headquarters at the Queen Hotel, where the reception tomorrow afternoon following the opening proceedings and other social functions of the session will be held. As has been stated before, however, there will be no State Dinner tomorrow night, for the first time in history this function being omitted.

Change in Firing Salute.

The time set for the opening of the House is 3 p. m. That is the time the chaplain will commence prayers, after which the formal election of John M. Keefe, of Grand Falls, as Clerk of the House, will take place. By 3.30 p. m. it is expected the Lieutenant-Governor will have arrived and be ready to enter the Assembly Chamber, where he will read the Speech from the Throne. Military arrangements, if carried out according to orders issued from headquarters, will bring about a change in the firing of the salute from the battery that is to be located on the St. John river bank. Heretofore the salute has not been fired until just as the Governor was entering the Assembly Chamber, but orders this time call for the salute to commence just as the Guard of Honor presents arms and the band plays the National Anthem when Governor Pugsley alights from his sleigh. It was said today that the Guard of Honor under Major W. C. Lawson, M. C., would be at full strength, while the band of the 71st York Regiment will furnish music.

The Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne will probably made the customary reference to the outstanding national and provincial events of the past year, including the signing of the Peace treaties, the opening of the Valley Railway through to St. John, while the most important legislation forecasted will doubtless be the Government bill relating to the development of water powers. The policy in this regard has already been annunciated by Premier Foster and it is said the bill when brought down will be accompanied by reports of the Federal Commission on Conservation, the Provincial Water Powers Commission and a firm of engineers who have been engaged in making an enquiry.

Following the custom of last year it was said today there would likely be speeches only by the mover and seconder of the Address, Mr. Magee of Westmorland and Mr. Leger of Kent, tomorrow, while it was said there was a movement under way today to curtail the debate on the Address and bring down the Budget next week in the hope of making the session as short as possible. Hon. J. A. Murray, leader of the Opposition, said this morning that the course to be adopted by the Opposition would be determined at a caucus to be held probably before the end of the week. The outcome of the caucus will be watched with interest.

During the first hour demand sterling rose to $3.72, the highest rate since the slump of last month, when it fell to $3.19.

The disount rate on Canadian money was quoted at 13 per cent. this morning.

LOYALIST BRANCH W. A.

The meeting of the Loyalist Branch of the W. A. was held yesterday beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral at 9 o'clock. A large number of W. A. members made their corporate communion at this service.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the business meeting was held in the Church Hall, Mrs. Allen in the chair. Mrs. Allen has been the honored president for nine years and her resignation was very reluctantly accepted. Mrs. Richardson in a few well chosen words on behalf of the members presented Mrs. Allen with a small gift and a bouquet of flowers. Mrs. Allen made a very feeling reply.

Honorary President—Mrs. Richardson.

President—Mrs. Wainwright.

1st Vice President—Mrs. Smithers.

2nd Vice President—Mrs. H. Richards.

Treasurer—Mrs. Fitz Randolph.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Brooks.

Corresponding Secretary—Miss Adelaide Robinson.

E. C. D. Treasurer—Mrs. Branscombe.

Leaflet Secretary—Mrs. Boulteel.

Ladies' Branch Secretary—Mrs. B. Lemont.

Dorcas Secretary—Mrs. S. Burns.

A Day was endowed in the Pickett Memorial in the memory of Mrs. Lord. The interest of this fund is used to supply a nurse in a clergyman's family in time of sickness.

Mrs. J. H. Hawthorn was made a life member of the Society and was presented with a life member's pin and certificate.

The thank-offering taken at the meeting amounted to $62, and the treasurer's report was most encouraging. The society is better off financially than ever before, each fund showing a gain over the preceeding year.

His Lordship Bishop Richardson gave a short but most helpful address on the spiritual side of the forward movement. Very Rev. Dean Neales followed in a short address and the meeting closed with the members' prayer and the Benediction by the Bishop.

Whiskey Smuggler Killed by Officer

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Edmundston, N. B., March 10.—United States Customs Officer Vernier shot and killed an unidentified man said to come from Van Buren, Me., last night during a scuffle when the officer attempted to stop his victim smuggling a load of liquor from Canadian into United States territory.

The shooting took place about midnight, when the Van Buren man had reached Madawaska, across the St. John river from here and in the State of Maine, with a two-horse sled load of liquor he was declared to be smuggling. Customs Officer Vernier and another officer were said to be waiting for him, and when they ordered him to halt the driver, instead of stopping his horses, crashed a heavy blow from his whip upon the head of Vernier. The officer then fired a shot from his revolver, the bullet passing through the smuggler's head and killing him almost instantly.

The State of Maine authorities have taken hold of the case and it was said this afternoon that an inquest would be held at Madawaska, Me., this evening.

THE SOCIAL SERVICE COUNCIL CONVENES

St. John, March 10.—Brilliant speakers dealt ably with the many problems of social welfare which confront the world today in splendid addresses heard at the annual meeting of the New Brunswick social service council, which held its opening sessions in St. Andrew's church and hall yesterday.

Besides Rev. Mr. Goodwin, the other officers of the council for New Brunswick are: Vice-presidents, Hon. R. J. Ritchie, J. L. Sugrue, St. John; W. B. Snowball, Chatham; G. L. Holyoke, Woodstock; secretary, Rev. F. S. Dowling, of this city; treasurer, T. H. Estabrooks. The latter is in California on a visit, while Rev. Mr. Dowling is in Halifax on denominational business.

In the afternoon Miss Cooper spoke of the good work accomplished by the establishment of a Children's Aid Society in Fredericton. At first, children taken from unsuitable surroundings had been boarded, then a home had been opened and was supported by the city and county. She touched on the needs of the delinquent child, saying that no juvenile court was needed in Fredericton while the Magistrate gave such sympathetic consideration to each case, but that a probation officer to see that children did not return to bad habits could do much good.

A. J. Parker, of the Boys' Industrial Home in East St. John, spoke on juvenile delinquency in New Brunswick.

The City Council Meeting.

The special meeting of the City Council at which the newly elected aldermen will be sworn in has been called for Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Other business to come up will be the selection of the standing committees for the coming year, the passing of the pay for the officials at the recent election and the naming of a date for the by-election to fill the vacancy of one alderman in Kings ward. City Clerk Perkins, who has been confined to his home for the past several weeks through illness, was able to be out yesterday for the first time.

This week's Royal Gazette contains notice that the capital stock of the Wiley Drug Company, Ltd., of Grand Falls, has been increased from $4,000 to $15,000.

The Government Caucus on Thursday Likely to Adopt National Unionist Policy

Montreal, March 10.—The Gazette in an Ottawa despatch today says:

The government caucus on Thursday will adopt the policy of the National Liberal-Conservative party that was announced by Sir Thomas White. Last November Sir Robert Borden submitted to his supporters for their consideration his views on National issues. Since then the cabinet has carefully reviewed this memorandum, making certain additions and modifications, but not materially altering the proposals of the Premier. They will be submitted to the Government caucus on Thursday with the unanimous endorsation of the cabinet. Union on a party name and policy has been accomplished in the cabinet, and will, with few if any defections, be accepted by the Unionist supporters in parliament and on this policy, after a census and re-distribution, the National Liberal-Conservative party will appeal to the electorate for endorsation.

Interest is chiefly centred in the fiscal resolution. It has been carefully revised, and though the principle of a revenue tariff is adopted, it is very indefinite on the protection to be afforded by the tariff. It leaves a wide latitude for support.

ABANDONED SHIP OFF N. S. COAST

The Portuguese Steamer Albatross Went Ashore Near Egg Island Last Night.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Halifax, March 10.—While returning to port leaking, the Portuguese owned steamer Albatros, which sailed from Halifax on Monday for Portugal, went ashore last midnight near Egg Island, 28 miles east of Halifax. In abandoning the ship two of the crew lost their lives. They here Dunn, the cook, and Walker, a seamon. The ship struck on Tommy's Ledge, which is near the Egg Island Light. The crew immediately decided to abandon the ship, and in getting away from the steamer two of them were drowned.

The remaining eight were provided for by the light keeper and will likely be taken off by one of the steamers which are going from Halifax. The tug Sarnia City, owned by the Maritime Wrecking and Salvage Company, left Halifax for the scene this morning. The ledges are dangegous and it is considered a foregone conclusion that the Albatros will be a total loss.

A telephone message from Clam Harbor this morning said that the rescued crew of the Albatros were still at the Egg Island light station, being taken there for the daybreak. They are scantily clad and suffered much from exposure.

The Albatros left Halifax about four o'clock on Monday afternoon, in company with the Lustada for Portugal, via the Azores. They were formerly in the naval service, and were purchased last year by Portuguese parties for the sardine fisheries.

HARNESS RACING ACTION EXPECTED

Maritime and Maine Circuit and Fredericton Track Due to Hold Meetings.

During the next few days it is expected that some moves will be made in connection with preparations for the opening of the harness racing season.

When the Maritime and Maine Shorthip Circuit last met here it was agreed that a further meeting would be held during this month, and until March 10th was given for the various tracks to file any suggestions as to changes in dates.

That period therefore expires today and it is presumed that President Heckbert, of Chatham, will at once send out a call for a meeting, which the representatives of the tracks have already decided will be held here. While arrangements for the season are pretty well under way there is more to be done, and within a week it is expected the track managers will meet.

The Local Situation.

So far nothing has been done here towards local organization in Fredericton and, from all that can be learned, last year's affairs of the local track have not yet been completely settled up. It is understood, however, that certain events have transpired during the past day or two which make it imperative that a meeting of the local organization be held at once, but Hugh O'Neill, who has been secretary for the past several seasons, said last night that, although he knew nothing of any developments, a meeting was to be held next week at the latest to prepare for the coming season.

The Fredericton Driving Club, who have maintained a winter track all this season at a greater cost than ever before heard of here, has proved to be a very live organization in many ways, and there is a strong feeling that some of the active workers in that club might profitably be interested in the Fredericton Park Association and become identified with the management. In fact, it is no secret that there is a movement in that direction and that it has been under way for some time; but so far it has not come altogether to the surface, although it might be expected to at any time. There is every indication that the coming racing season will be one of the most successful from many standpoints in years providing sufficient horses are available and local horsemen seem intent to have Fredericton continue to retain its position as one of the banner racing centres of the East.—J. D. B.

THE CURLERS' TRIP WAS CALLED OFF

Fredericton Club Will Make the Trip to St. Stephen This Week.

The trip of the Fredericton curlers which had first been arranged for Thursday and then for today was postponed because the curlers could not get the necessary number of players together to make an over-night trip to the Border town this week.

In the points competition last evening A. S. McFarlane put on a score of 45, the highest in recent years at the club. He has offered a prize for the highest score in the general points competition and Geo. H. Clark has put up a prize for curlers of not more than two years' experience. John R Walker is heading the list of the new players in the competition at present.

In the Management Committee Series of games Skip Fowler defeated H. H. Hagerman's rink, skipped by D. W. Burpee, by a score of 12 to 10 last night.

The score follows:

G. H. McFarlane,	C. W. Hall,
H. R. Babbitt,	W. Walker,
E. J. Miles,	H. H. Hagerman,
H. E. Fowler, skip.....12	D. W. Burpee, skip 10

BOWLING

Thirteen bowlers took part in the weekly roll-off at the Palace Bowling Alleys last evening, Charlie Burgess leading with a total of 286, followed by Beebe with a pinfall of 285. The scores:

C. Burgess	101	92	93—286
Beebe	94	88	103—285
Comeau	115	88	78—281
Pederson	97	87	84—268
Bright	82	86	93—261
Thompson	90	78	93—261
R. Paynter	78	100	83—261
Bishop	86	86	85—257
J. Lawlor	93	79	84—256
Fogg	85	87	83—255
Kelley	79	82	78—239
Carr	76	83	76—235

Will Fleming plans to bring James Albert, 2.09½; Millie Irwin, 2.09¾; Baby Doll, 2.10¼; Barney Hoyt, 2.10½, and others from Windsor to Readville around the first of May.

FREDERICTON PLAY CHATHAM TONIGHT

Bert Burgess Unable to Accompany Fredericton Team—Gilbert Likely to Referee.

The Fredericton Hockey Club left this morning for Chatham, where tonight and tomorrow night they play the final and crucial games of the New Brunswick Hockey League, meeting the Chatham team tonight and the Bathurst team on Thursday night.

Archie Sterling went as manager but the Fredericton team were unable to take their full strength along on the trip, but Irvine Wade, who has been on the eligibility lists of both the Fredericton and Marysville teams was there, while George M. Beatty, manager of the Arctic Rink, went along as treasurer and will pay the bills of the trip. Bert Burgess was not with the team.

Tom Gilbert, who has been handling most of the games at Chatham this season, will probably be the referee of both games, it was said from Chatham this morning, as there was not felt to be any necessity at Chatham of importing a refere to handle a game between teams which had played such a clean brand of hockey throughout the season. "If a play off is necessary between Chatham and Fredericton," said an officer of the Chatham club today, "we will expect to have Frank Brown or some other outside referee for home and home games to settle the possession of the Chestnut cup."

There was every indication today that the teams would line up at the outset of tonight's game about as they did in their game here, except that Bert Burgess will be missing, Chatham officially disclaiming any intention of using Moir, the big Bathurst goaler. "We'll depend upon Rigley and some prayers to do the trick," said a Chatham club official in referring to their situation. As has been stated before, the outcome of the N. B. H. L. race depends upon these two games; Fredericton must win both to land on top, one loss gives the championship to Chatham while a win and a tied game will mean a play off between Chatham and Fredericton.

Irrespective of the outcome of the games the team which represents Fredericton is one of which local hockey followers may well feel proud. Throughout the season they have played the cleanest kind of hockey, characteristic of the clean-cut sportsmen they all are, and whether they win or lose Fredericton fans can at least feel confident that they have been represented by a team of young men who are a credit to the community and to hockey.—J. D. B.

Appreciation of Fair Play

The following letter was received too late for publication on the date intended:—

To the Sporting Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I have been watching your sporting section ever since I came to Fredericton and consider it the most up to date of any in the Maritime Provinces. Especially have I been impressed by your fairness to the visiting team. The article in your paper a few weeks ago about the playing and all-round sportsmanship of the Chatham team, was to me the best ever.

Now, we are to have with us tonight a hockey team from Sussex, Kings Co., and, if they win or lose, I trust you will give them as good a hand as you did the Chatham boys. I am personally acquainted with the visiting team and if they get half a show they are good sports.

Here's hoping the best team wins!

Yours,

A KINGS COUNTY BOY.

Fredericton, N. B., March 8th, 1920.

LEWIS FAVORITE.

London, March 9.—The next international boxing contest of any importance will bring out Ted Lewis, the former welterweight champion, against Johnny Basham, the English champion.

They will meet in London for twenty rounds on March 16. Lewis has been made the favorite in the betting because of the good form he has shown in recent bouts. He is soon to return to the United States for another battle with Jack Britton.

FOOTBALL TROPHY GOES INTO VAULT

The Clark trophy which was ordered to be placed in a safety deposit vault at St. John by the trustees of the trophy at their meeting in Moncton was taken to St. John this morning by Capt. Clarence B. Burden, of the 1919 U. N. B. football team.

Yesterday morning the cup was taken out of the case at the University in which it had stood since 1914, when it was won by U. N. B. in the first year it was offered for competition between Acadia, Mt. Allison and U. N. B., and Capt. Burden took it along when he went to St. John with the U. N. B. basketball team.

The cup was offered by F. T. Clark, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1914, after Acadia had become permanent owners of the King-Richardson trophy in the fall of 1913. Mr. Clark is the step-father of "Gammy" Atkins, who was captain of the Acadia football team in 1914.

Many of the students took a farewell look at the cup before it was taken to St. John but its removal has made the student body more determined to bring it back next year.—R. H. B.

NEW YORK GIANTS NOT TO BE SOLD

Charles A. Stoneham Declares He Bought Club for His Son.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Havana, Cuba, March 10.—When Charles A. Stoneham purchased the New York National League baseball team it was done primarily for the purpose of handing down the club as a legacy to his son. Mr. Stoneham made this statement last night to set at rest rumors which he said were current in the United States and Cuba that the Giants were for sale.

"I would not part with the Giants for several million dollars," he said, "adding that he hoped New York would be given a championship team this year or in the near future."

White Sox Secretary Dead.

Chicago, March 10—Joe O'Neil, travelling secretary of the Chicago White Sox, died at his home here yesterday of pneumonia. He was 35 years of age and had been with the Chicago club for nine years.

Groh Signs With Reds.

Cincinnati, O., March 10.—Heinie Groh, captain of the Cincinnati baseball team, signed a contract yesterday.

Waterbury Club Sold.

Waterbury, Conn., March 10.—The Waterbury Eastern League baseball franchise, with its fourteen players on the reserve list, has been sold to Charles A. Templeton by M. E. Keeley and F. P. Becton, who obtained the franchise last year, it was announced today.

Youngsters Star at Jacksonville.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 10.—Yankee colts yesterday took a fall out of the regulars to the tune of 3 to 1, scoring all their runs off the underhand delivery of Carl Mays. Incidentally three of the youngsters were the star performers of the day, these being Ward at third base, Meusel at first and Gleich at right field. Ruth, accustomed to the limelight, was thrown in the shade for once.

At the Dodgers' training camp the veterans also were trimmed by the youngsters 3 to 2. Neis, who was with Saskatoon last season, knocked out a double in the third off Sherrod Smith. His single in the first was responsible for the first score against the regulars.

Giants' Squad Now Complete.

San Antonio, Tex., March 10.—With the arrival of the sad faced Cuban, Miguel Gonzales, the Giants' squad is now complete. Yesterday Kelly, a young pitcher from California, knocked the first home run of the season. Kelly has never played professional ball before, but it seems certain that if McGraw sends him to the minors it will be with a string attached. Others who went in for home runs yesterday were Jimmy Cooney, the young infielder from the Providence club, and Frank Frisch.

NIGHTWATCHMAN AT NELSON LOSES LEG

Jack Barry Has Leg Amputated in Flywheel of a Dynamo.

Nelson, N. B., March 9.—Jack Barry, night watchman at Fraser's mill, met with what might have been a fatal accident just after 6 o'clock last night. As it was, one of his legs caught in the fly wheel of the dynamo and was so badly broken and crushed that it will in all probability have to be amputated.

Mr. Barry, who is about 50 years of age and married, was all alone in the mill at thte time of the accident and, owing to his presence of mind, was found about five minutes later by Manager Gilberson, who was attracted by the incessant blowing of the mill whistle. After getting his leg released he crawled from the dynamo to the whistle and tied down the string, thus causing it to blow. The unfortunate man was rushed to the hospital at Newcastl, where it was said today he would probably have to have the leg amputated.

CHAPTER XXIII.

How England Held the Lists at Bordeaux.

So used were the good burghers of Bordeaux to martial display and knightly sport, that an ordinary joust or tournament was an everyday matter with them. The fame and brilliancy of the prince's court had drawn the knights-errant and pursuivants-of-arms from every part of Europe. In the long lists by the Garonne on the landward side of the northern gate there had been many a strange combat, when the Teutonic knight, fresh from the conquest of the Prussian heathen, ran a course against the knight of Calatrava, hardened by continual struggle against the Moors, or cavaliers from Portgual broke a lance with Scandinavian warriors from the further shore of the great Northern Ocean. Here fluttered many an outland pennon, bearing symbol and blazonry from the banks of the Danube, the wilds of Lithuania, and the mountain strongholds of Hungary; for chivalry was of no clime and of no race, nor was any land so wild that the fame and name of the prince had not sounded through it from border to border.

Great, however, was the excitement through town and district when it was learned that on the third Wednesday in Advent there would be held a passage-at-arms in which five knights of England would hold the lists against all comers. The great concourse of noblemen and famous soldiers, the national character of the contest, and the fact that this was a last trial of arms before what promised to be an arduous and bloody war, all united to make the event one of the most notable and brilliant that Bordeaux had ever seen. On the eve of the contest the peasants flocked in from the whole district of the Medoc, and the fields beyond the walls were whitened with the tents of those who could find no warmer lodging. From the distant camp of Dax, too, and from Blaye, Bourge, Libourne, St. Emilion, Castillon, St Macaire, Cardillac, Ryons, and all the cluster of flourishing towns which look upon Bordeaux as their mother, there thronged an unceasing stream of horsemen and of footmen, all converging upon the great city. By the morning of the day on which the courses were to be run, not less than eighty people had assembled round the lists and along the low grassy ridge which looks down upon the scene of the encounter.

It was, as may well be imagined, no easy matter among so many noted cavaliers to choose out five on either side who should have precedence over their fellows. A score of secondary combats had nearly arisen from the rivalries and bad blood created by the selection, and it was only the influence of the prince and the efforts of the older barons which kept the peace among so many eager and fiery soldiers. Not till the day before the courses were the shields finally hung out for the inspection of the ladies and the heralds, so that all men might know the names of the champions and have the opportunity to prefer any stain upon them which should disqualify them from taking part in so noble and honorable a ceremony.

Sir Hugh Calverley and Sir Robert Knolles had not yet returned from their raid into the marches of the Navarre, so that the English party were deprived of two of their most famous lances. Yet there remained so many good names that Chandos and Felton, to whom the selection had been referred, had many an earnest consultation, in which every feat of arms and failure or success of each candidate was weighed and balanced against the rival claims of his companions. Lord Audley of Cheshire, the hero of Poitiers, and Loring of Hampshire, who was held to be the second lance in the army, were easily fixed upon. Then, of the younger men, Sir Thomas Percy of Northumberland, Sir Thomas Wake of Yorkshire, and Sir William Beauchamp of Gloucestershire, were finally selected to uphold the honor of England. On the other side were the veteran Captal de Buch and the brawny Olivier de Clisson, with the free companion Sir Perducas d'Albert, the valiant Lord of Mucident, and Sigismond von Altenstadt, of the Teutonic Order. The older soldiers among the English shook their heads as they looked upon the escutcheons of these famous warriors, for they were all men who had spent their lives upon the saddle, and bravery and strength can avail little against experience and wisdom of war.

"By my faith! Sir John," said the prince as he rode through the winding streets on his way to the list, "I should have been glad to have splintered a lance today. You have seen me hold a spear since I had strength to lift one, and should know best whether I do not merit a place among this honorable company."

"There is no better seat and no truer lance, sire," said Chandos; "but, if I may say so without fear of offence, it were not fitting that you should join in this debate."

"And why, Sir John?"

"Because, sire, it is not for you to take part with Gascons against English, or with English against Gascons, seeing that you are lord of both. We are not too well loved by the Gascons now, and it is but the golden link of your princely coronet which holds us together. If that be snapped I know not what would follow."

"Snapped, Sir John!" cried the prince, with an angry sparkle in his dark eyes. "What manner of talk is this? You speak as though the allegiance of our people were a thing which might be thrown off or on like a falcon's jessel."

"With a sorry hack one uses whip and spur, sire,' said Chandos; "but with a horse of blood and spirit a good cavalier is gentle and soothing, coaxing rather than forcing. These folk are strange people, and you must hold their love, even as you have it now, for you will get from their kindness what all the pennons in your army could not wring from them."

"You are over-grave today, John,' the prince answered. "We may keep such questions for our council-chamber. But how now, my brothers of Spain, and of Majorca, what think you of this challenge?"

"I look to see some handsome jousting," said Don Pedro, who rode with the King of Majorca upon the right of the prince, while Chandos was on the left. "By St. James of Compostella! but these burghers would bear some taxing. See to the broadcloth and velvet that the rogues bear upon their backs! By my troth! if they were my subjects they would be glad enough to wear falding and leather ere I had done with them. But mayhap it is best to let the wool grow long ere you clip it."

"It is our pride," the prince answered coldly, "that we rule over freemen and not slaves."

"Every man to his own humor," said Pedro carelessly. "Carajo! there is a sweet face at your window! Don Fernando, I pray you to mark the house, and to have the maid brought to us at the abbey."

"Nay, brother, nay!" cried the prince impatiently. "I have had occasion to tell you more than once that things are not ordered in this way in Aquitaine."

VALLEY RAILWAY IS TIED UP AGAIN BY TRAIN WRECK

A Double-Header Special with Plow Wrecked Yesterday Near Gagetown.

MAY BE NO TRAINS BEFORE END OF WEEK

Another Storm Threatening Before Country Recovers From the Last.

With another storm threatening this afternoon the St. John Valley Railway division of the Canadian National Railways was still blocked between here and St. John and there was no definite news of when the train service would be resumed.

Yesterday afternoon a special train with a wing plow and two locomotives was badly wrecked near Gagetown, one of the locomotives and the plow leaving the rails. It was not until noon today that they were back on the rails again, and then one of the locomotives was found to be so badly damaged that it is being brought back here for repairs.

Meanwhile traffic on the line, which is part of the through route from St. John to Quebec via the Transcontinental, is still tied up, and it was said today it might be the end of the week before a service was restored. On the western end of the Valley line a plow special succeeded in getting through to Centreville yesterday, but no trains are running on that section of the road today.

The first train from Boston since Saturday arrived here last night with mail and passengers, but brought no newspapers or parcel post, which it was said might arrive some time today.

N. B. Federation of Labor Convention Opened Today

Organization Session Was Held and Committees Named This Morning.

WANT A DEPARTMENT OF LABOR ESTABLISHED

Mayor Reid's First Official Act Was to Welcome Delegates This Afternoon.

Demands for the establishment of a Department of Labor by the Provincial Government and increases in the amounts of compensation for disablement are expected to result from the annual convention of the New Brunswick Federation of Labor which opened here this morning.

Not only have the labor delegates beat out the legislators in getting here and thus been able to control the choice of the hotel accommodations, but they have unofficially explained that their reason for being on the scene even before the Legislature opens is that when they appear before the Government with their demands there will be less opportunity to "shelve" them. John A. Sinclair, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board, and other members of the Board, are here from St. John and will discuss changes in the Compensation Act with the convention.

Mayor Reid Extends Welcome.

This morning the first session of the Federation was held, with some 50 odd delegates in attendance, but it was largely for organization purposes, and the formal openjng this afternoon was featured by the first public appearance of Mayor John A. Reid in his new office, when he officially welcomed the convention to Fredericton.

Following the mayor's speech addresses were delivered by Harry Ryan, president of the local labor council, and by C. A. Melanson, of Moncton, the president of the Federation.

This morning the list of delegates was gone over and up to noon fifty had reported themselves. Four district councils and twenty-four local unions were represented. At 11 o'clock President C. A. Melanson opened the meeting for the election of standing committees and he extended the courtesies of the meeting to A. D. Colwell, editor of the Union Worker and to J. L. Sugrue, member of the compensation board.

The following standing committees were then appointed:

Credentials—F. A. Campbell, Stanley Steeves, Newton Jarvis, James Cummings and F. W. Henderson.

Resolutions—J. E. Tighe, Charles Cameron, George Hennessy, G. C. Crawford and James S. Martin.

Ways and Means—Eugene Steeves, Samuel Mackay, Edward McGinnis, G. E. Duncan and Roy Longard.

Audit—H. H. Stuart, F. Scurrah, P. Moore, George O'Neill and F. Vanderbourne.

Constitution—A. E. Legere, I. D. Ferris, F. Emms, J. Hooley, James Cummings and Edward Kirby.

Special committee on compensation and factory acts—Charles H. Cameron, J. E. Tighe, Roy Longard, J. S. Martin, G. C. Crawford, D. Kennedy, G. C. Langblen, Eugene Steeves, F. Scurrah, William J. MacNeill, F. Henderson, James Cummings, H. H. Stuart, Henry Heffernan and William O'Donnell.

Press—H. H. Stuart, A. D. Colwell and C. A. Melanson.

CANADA WANTS MORE WHISKEY THAN IS MADE

Liquor Firms in Scotland Have More Orders from Canada Than They Can Supply.

CORRESPONDENT SAYS PROHIBITION A FARCE

Scotland Increasing Its Barley Acreage to Meet the Canadian Demand.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

London, March 11.—A special correspondent of the Daily Graphic says the only way Scotland is likely to go dry is by Canada draining her of whiskey. A greatly increased area is being sown with barley, and the correspondent declares he has seen evidence in the hands of a whiskey exporting firm that Canada is prepared to take more whiskey than Scotland can supply.

"Vancouver, for instance, has been getting hundreds of cases per month from one firm alone, and the cry is, 'Send us more'," says the correspondent.

According to the correspondent, a Scottish distiller scoffed at the idea of prohibition in Scotland, adding: "Prohibition in Canada is a farce, and we have a splendid market for more whiskey there than we can spare."

NO DUTY TO KEEP UP MILITARY FORCES

Joining the League of Nations Does Not Necessitate Keeping Up Standing Army.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Copenhagen, March 11.—Whether joining the League of Nations is synonymous with the duty of keeping up a standing army to be placed at the disposal of the League to enforce the League's decision has been for a long time a burning question in Denmark and Norway. The democratic majority, against the protests of the conservatives in both countries, read the treaty as giving a member of the League full right to abolish its army and navy.

Lord Robert Cecil, the British representative of the League, in reply to an inquiry by the President of the Norwegian Storthing, says:

"I have no doubt that your reading of article eight of the treaty is right. Undoubtedly it was never meant to put on any member of the League the burden and duty to keep up military forces."

SASKATCHEWAN GREET WAR VETS

Annual Convention in Session at Prince Albert Discusses Important Matters.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Prince Albert, Sask., March 10.—The annual convention of the Great War Vetetrans' Association of Saskatchewan at the first session yesterday resolved to petition the Dominion Government to take immediate steps towards placing an embargo on shipments of Canadian lumber into the United States, or at least to restrict the export of same.

The housing scheme in existence received a severe condemnation, delegates claiming that in effect the scheme was not in existence in any part of Canada. A resolution was adopted urging the Dominion Government to make provision for housing loans through the machinery available in the soldier settlement board.

Allies to Occupy Important Points To Impress Turk

Allies Are Determined to Have Turkey Comply With Armistice Terms

STRONG FORCES NOW ON THE WAY

Greek Army to be Used to Round up the Kemal Forces.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 11.—The report of the Allied Commissioners in Constantinople was presented at Wednesday's meeting of the Supreme Council, according to statements current in peace conference circles last night, where it also was said that the Council adopted the main proposals of the report.

These are said to have recommended very sharp measures to impress upon Turkey that the Allies are determined to have Turkey comply with the armistice terms and treat the Armenians and other subject races in accordance with the ideals of western civilization.

To this end the Council is believed to have ordered certain important points in European and Asiatic Turkey occupied by Allied naval and military forces.

Should a decision be made to round up Kemal and his forces, it is thought likely that the task will be entrusted to the Greek army, now occupying Smyrna and the surrounding district, whose services, M. Venizelos, the Greek Premier, is said to have offered the Council on behalf of his government. This army is estimated at ninety thousand men, while it is presumed Kemal's forces do not exceed 40,000.

It was stated that the earnings of controlled ships had exceeded the estimate by £54,000,000, and while the surplus from Dominions and Allies was £7,000,000, there was an excess of £61,000,000.

The House of Lords had an unfinished debate on the second reading of Lord Buckmaster's matrimonial case bill, which proposes to reorganize the divorce laws, according to recent recommendations of the Divorce Commission. The vote against a general strike came after Secretary Hodges, of the Miners' Federation, moved a resolution for direct action for nationalization. He took this step in accordance with instructions issued by the Miners' Federation yesterday. Adoption of a resolution favoring political action in the from of intensive political propaganda, in preparation for the general election, followed.

SCORES OF EYES WERE BLACKENED

Free-for-All Fight When Columbit Sophomores Tried to Break Up Dinner.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 11.—Police reserves from three stations were summoned last night to stop a free-for-all fight which broke out in a Columbus Avenue restaurant when Columbia Sophomores attempted to break up a dinner staged by the Freshman Class. Six arrests were made and several scores of eyes were blacked before the dinner proceeded.

The trouble was brewing since Tuesday, when Freshmen captured the Sophomore class President and kept him in hiding until last night, when he was brought to the restaurant in handcuffs.

The second year men, who had been trailing their leader since his capture, heard of the plan for his public discomfiture and were on hand when the first diners arrived. Seizing some of the Freshmen, they threw them into taxicabs, took them into the heart of Central Park and dumped them on slush covered drives, returning for more captives. Other first year men were trussed up and dragged with ropes to a smaller park nearby, where they were tied to benches.

ORGANIZED HUN OUTRAGE ON A BRITON

British Lieutenant and Belgian Comrade Hooted and Stoned by German Soldiers.

IGNORED ORDERS OF ESCORT TO DESIST

London, March 11.—When General Nollet, head of the French Mission, and M. De Marcily, French Charge d'Affaires in Berlin, received the apology of the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, Herr Mueller, for the Adlon Hotel incident, they called attention to a more serious affair, the details of which have not previously been published, says the London Daily Mail's Berlin correspondent.

This, the newspaper continues, was a violent and apparently organized attack on three uniformed officers on March 4th, when a British lieutenant and a Belgian comrade were visiting the barracks at Premziau, province of Brandenburg, in connection with the demobilization of the German army. While being escorted through the camp by a single German officer, they were hooted and stoned by soldiers, who ignored the orders of the escort to desist. The Briton and the Belgian were wounded by stones. Their escort took to cover.

The visitors undertook to walk toward the officers' quarter, where the commandant advanced to meet them and ordered the yelling soldiers to fall in. They immediately obeyed, showing, says the correspondent, that they were not out of hand and giving the impression that the demonstration was arranged to continue until it was ordered to cease.

(11) St. John Teamsters and Chauffeurs' demand that members of owner's family driving automobiles be registered and licensed.

Last evening Chairman J. A. Sinclair and Commissioner J. L. Sugrue, of St. John, spoke on the Compensation Act.

Discussion on Resolution.

In considering resolution 5, relating to co-operative stores, Eugene R. Steeves, of Moncton, explained the Moncton Co-operatove store and Geo. Crawford and others the Fredericton venture. Moncton pays five to six per cent. on investment; first half-year's profits were left in the business; and a good dividend is expected this month. Customers are allowed credit up to limit of their transferable stock. No one may have more than $400 stock. Moncton labor men desired to do away with all unnecessary middlemen.

President Melanson said Moncton Co-operative paid better wages to help than other stores.

Geo. Crawford, of Fredericton, said Fredericton gave credit only on withdrawal stock issued in $5 shares. There were 250 co-operators.

Resolution 6—greater representation in the Legislature for Moncton, brought out discussion. It was spoken to by Delegates H. H. Sturat, Henderson, E. R. Steeves, Tighe, the President and J. L. Sugrue, all of whom demanded proportional representation.

Resolution 7—on rent, evoked much comment on landlordism. The compulsory feature was somewhat objected to, but the section carried unanimously. Bitter protest was made against the undue raising of rents in the cities and elsewhere. Numerous instances were cited in St. John, at rent being raised $72 a year to meet a $15 raise in taxes.

Resolution 13, advocating closer relations of labor with the farmers divided the house. Delegate H. H. Stuart who introduced it, B. Kennedy, of the United Mine Workers of Minto, Geo. Hennessy, of St. John, J. E. Tighe and others supported the resolution, arguing that the farmers, being workers as well as owners were natural allies of labor in the latter's efforts to eliminate useless middlemen and overcome profiteering. Other delegates opposed making advances to a political party. Delegate Ryan, of Fredericton objected to the farmers' opposition co-operative scheme. The Ontario coaltion government was cited, and the discussion was most spirited and general.

All the Moncton and Minto speakers and a part of those from St. John supported the motion. It was strongly opposed by Fredericton and part of the St. John speakers. Finally, on motion of F. A. Campbell, the resoultion was , by a majority vote, laid on the table.

Secertary Treasurer George R. Melvin gave an encouraging report of the year's work. Twenty-five new organizations had been formed during the year, including a very large one on the Miramichi. The machinists now had a permanent Maritime organizer, C. H. Cameron, of Moncton. There should be others.

He concluded with a very fine report of the last Dominion Labor Congress.

The President's report was along the same lines—very optimistic.

The Fair Rent Act

DRAFT OF BILL WHICH WILL BE PRESENTED TO THE LEGISLATURE FROM THE NEW BRUNSWICK FEDERATION OF LABOR—PROVIDES FOR BOARDS TO INVESTIGATE TENANTS' COMPLAINTS WHEN LODGED.

The following is the complete draft of a bill to be known as The Fair Rent Act, which was submitted to the New Brunswick Federation of Labor, now meeting here, from the Moncton Amalgamated Labor Unions, and endorsed by the Moncton City Council and which it has been decided to seek to have passed at the present session of the Provincial Legislature:

1. This Act shall be cited as "The Fair Rent Act, 1920."

2. For the purposes of this Act, except where the context otherwise requires,

(a) The expressions "landlord" and "tenant" include any person from time to time, deriving title under the original landlord or tenant.

(b) The expression "dwelling house" means a house or a part of a house let as a separate dwelling, where such letting does not include any land other than the site of a dwelling and a garden or other premises within the curtilege of the dwelling house.

3. Any city or incorporated town in the province may adopt the provisions of this Act upon the passing of a resolution supported by a two-thirds vote of the Council of any city or town.

4. Upon the adoption of the Act by any city or town the City or Town Council is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a Board of Commissioners to be known as "The Fair Rental Board"; such Board shall consist of three persons who shall be appointed by the City or Town Council and of whom one member, designated by the City or Town Council shall be chairman of the said Board. Such appointments, including that of chairman, shall be made on or before the first day of March in each and every year. No person shall be capable of being appointed a member of such Board or sit or act thereon who shall be a member of the City or Town Council. The City or Town Council shall have power to remove the Board or any member thereof from office and from time to time to appoint any other person or persons to the office in its discretion, and fill any vacancy in such Board caused by death, resignation, removal from office or commission to appoint such Commissioners before the said first day of March in each and every year.

5. The remuneration, if any, to be paid to the Chairman and other members of the said Board shall be fixed by the City or Town Council.

6. The said Board of Commissioners shall elect one of their members who shall be designated and known as the Secretary of the said Board, whose duty it shall be to prepare all notices, take copies of the minutes of all meetings of such board and all evidence taken before said Board upon any complaints filed.

7. The books and minutes of the Board shall be open at all reasonable times to the investigation and examination of any member or members of the City or Town Council.

8. A majority of the Board shall constitute a quorum and the acts of a majority shall be considered the Acts of the Board.

9. All meetings of the Board shall be open to the public unless otherwise decided by the Board.

10. In the absence of the Chairman, any member of the Board may preside.

All meetings of the Board shall be called by the Chairman.

11. Any tenant having any grievance as to the rate of rent charged by any landlord may make application in writing, stating such grievance to the said Board, and upon the receipt of said grievance and within five days thereafter the Board shall proceed to investigate the said cause of complaint, taking into consideration the actual value of the dwelling occupied by the said tenant and any other matters relating thereto, and if in the opinion of the said Board the rental charged said tenant is exorbitant and unreasonable, then such Board shall, by order, fix the rental to be charged for said dwelling house to be based upon the actual value or cost of same and the rate of rent so fixed by the Board shall be conclusive and binding upon said tenant and landlord, and the order of the Board fixing such rent shall continue to be binding until such time as an application be made by the landlord or tenant to the said Board showing good and proper cause or reason why the said rental shall be decreased or increased, as the case may be. Any landlord shall have the same right to make application to the Board in like manner as a tenant under this Act.

12. Five days' previous notice in writing of the time and place of hearing of any investigation of such complaint shall be given by the Chairman of the said Board to the landlord and tenant by causing a copy of said notice to be personally served upon the said landlord and tenant or by leaving said notice at the last place of abode of the said landlord or tenant with the wife of the said landlord or tenant or an adult member or inmate of the family of the said landlord or tenant or either of them.

13. The chairman of the said Board shall be authorized to administer oath to any person or persons giving evidence at any investigation held under this Act.

14. Any person who contravenes any of the provisions of this Act or any order made by the Board under the authority thereof shall incur a penalty of not more than fifty dollars for each and every violation recoverable under The New Brunswick Summary Convictions Act, which shall, when collected, form part of the general funds of the city or town in which such cases arise.

15. In every case of an order made under or by virtue of this Act by the said Board the landlord or tenant in case he feels himself aggrieved shall have the right to review the said order before a judge of the Supreme or County Court and the procedure in so doing shall be the same as laid out in section 44 of chapter 123, Consolidated Statutes of New Brunswick, 1903.

The following is the resolution passed by Moncton Lodge, International Association of Machinists, and endorsed by the Moncton Central Labor Unions, which brought about the drawing up of The Fair Rent Act:

Whereas, the biggest profiteers and exploiters of earnings the workers have to contend with are the unscrupulous landlords on whom a majority of us are dependent for shelter, and,

Whereas, there seems to be no limit to the amount of rent they may charge and intervals at which increases may be added except at 30 days' notice, and,

Whereas, these landlords with but few exceptions do not hesitate to evict tenants at all times of the year and under all conditions, and

Whereas, it is often stated and advertised that parties with children need not apply for houses to let, which is a barbarous state of affairs and entails much hardship on the workers, especially those with families;

Therefore be it resolved, that Moncton Lodge, I. A. of M., No. 594, recommend to the Central Amalgamated Labor Union, that they, through their representatives at the City Council, ascertain through the city solicitor, the provisions of the Landlords and Tenants' Act, in the Province of New Brunswick, and if possible propose amendments to the New Brunswick Legislature at their next session that will afford some means of protection to those concerned, and a copy sent to Provincial Federation of Labor.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

The Speech of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor in opening the Legislature this afternoon foreshadows legislation of importance on some matters; and, if the measures are prepared with due regard to the public interests, reasonably good results should follow. Water power development, long delayed in this province, comes in for a passing reference, although the bill to be brought down may be a measure of first importance. The promise is, "a bill to provide for power development and to enable the Government to proceed without delay with the development of such water powers as are found to be commercially feasible." This is somewhat indefinite, and, in view of the last measure on the subject brought down by the present Government and withdrawn at the close of the session, the full meaning can scarcely be determined until the bill is introduced. In the past the Premier was opposed to development by the Government. Since then, however, his friend Mr. Foss, Chairman of the Water Power Commission, has been seeking to negotiate contracts or deals in the interests of companies which he has apparently promoted; and he is said to have made some progress and to be hopeful that the future will have in store some valuable profits for his companies if the business is developed in accordance with his notions and his, perhaps, unselfish way of looking at things. This may possibly have influenced the Premier to a change of view; and therefore a bill "to enable the Government to proceed without delay with the development." Hitherto the Premier doubted that we had water powers in New Brunswick worth developing. It is interesting to feel that on this phase of the situation also he has reason to change his view. It is very important to New Brunswick that our water powers be developed immediately, and developed for the public service. The paragraph in the Speech making reference to the subject may not satisfy the people that the Government has a comprehensive and enlightened policy.

The reference to the progress made in agriculture and to the development of the live stock industry suggests that the farmers have been doing well; and, it may be added, doing well in spite of the disadvantages they have been laboring under. The provincial grant to agriculture has not been increased proportionately with the increase to other services. It has not, in fact, been increased for practical service. The Federal Department, however, has contributed quite generously; and it is through this agency that activity has been encouraged and progress made. The Federal Department has also contributed the services of some of its experts, and in this way something has been accomplished. But it is to be noted in this connection, and it will be noted with regret, that our progress has not been as great nor nearly as substantial as the progress recorded in the other provinces. If the practical effort had been as persistent as the departmental talk has been fulsome, we would possibly have had a record of results quite the equal of that of other places.

Other matters are unfortunately very strangely alluded to. In his reference to the Highways the Lieutenant-Governor says, "the Public Works Department is to be congratulated upon the notable progress made in the construction of the more durable roads," etc. Had there been regard for the fitness of things, regard for the responsibilities in the preparation of the time-honored opening Speech, the impropriety in this reference, altogether too plain, would not have been possible, unless indeed the person to whom the preparation of the Speech was committed was without knowledge of his duties and the requirements, and, generally, without respect for the fitness of things.

We are to have a referendum on the liquor question; the question of increases in the school teachers' salaries is to have attention, and action may be based on the recommendation of the Commission appointed to report upon the matter. Other matters that should have attention are not mentioned; but possibly the omission does not imply that they will not have consideration and action. However, let us hope.

BAITING THE LION.

The discussion always is made easy by having the one side say of itself the things the other side thinks, but does not care to say. It is foolish, and altogether against the interests of the United States first, of Canada perhaps second, and of Great Britain third, for these countries to engender enmity. But if the United States never does know its own mind, and leaves to itself the acceptance or rejection of its presidential agreements, then the world of nations must be allowed at least a smile. It will want to do a great deal more. But possibly it is unbecoming the desire of the times to dwell upon the feelings raised among nations trying hard to relieve distress and assuage international dissensions, yet being baulked by quibbling quidnuncs among the leading partizan politicians of the United States. Fortunately a great mass of people in the United States regard the entire matter in a sane light, remarks an exchange. They neither are misled nor desire to mislead. But that they are not vociferous like the others is the misfortune of the world. They may have the right, but the others make the noise. It is but seldom you hear the former speak. Once in a while. Then the voice sounds from down among the people, not perhaps in some high place from which the sounds might be expected to come; but just the ordinary, plain-speaking, downright common sense of the American-born citizen. If you want to hear one such say what you should not say, no matter what you think, read this editorial on Baiting the Lion, taken from the Peru Journal, which sees the light daily in the State of Indiana:

"The baiting of Great Britain in the United States is bringing a kick-back from the United Kingdom. It suggests that unless there is some specific benefit to be gotten from twisting the lion's tail it might be well to call a halt in Congress and in the columns of certain papers. Not because we love the British, not because we want to be friends generally, but purely because it is money in our pockets. Of course, the United States does not fear Great Britain. Nor does it fear the Japanese. The combination of the two, with a merging of naval strength at a giant base at Shanghai for war possibly against the nation which indulges with equal freedom its remarks about two proud peoples, rather alters the situation. Add Canada to the combination with 4,000 miles of frontier; and Mexico with the backing of South and Central American republics, sore at the patronizing Monroe doctrine, and there is quite a husky hostile combination.

"And why the speculation? Simply because the British resentment of entirely unnecessary flings from this side of the water is finding concrete expression in events and possibly in plans. The United States generally is as unpopular in Europe now as it was in the days when the Allies were shedding their blood and paying their millions to United States munition manufacturers, protected in their commerce by the British fleet. Charles Palmer has just been elected to Parliament over a Government and a Labor candidate. He ran on a British national platform and made anti-American speeches in his campaign. Every newspaper in Canada has grounds for hostility to the United States through the fact that American publishers were getting the print-paper right from under the Canadian noses. International enmity is expensive and wasteful. Concord between the United States, England and Canada costs only some self-restraint and a decent appreciation of the other fellow."

THE KAISER'S FATE.

Holland has replied to the somewhat weak second note of the Allies of the war that it stands by its original decision not to give up the ex-Kaiser of Germany for trial by his late enemies. There seems a probability that this will be the end of the correspondence, says an exchange. The people of Holland would prefer that their unbidden guest had chosen some other country for a home. So far he has been for them a cause of worry and some expense, and as long as he remains with them the burden will not be removed. But the people of Holland, though small in number, have ever been resolute in upholding their independence, and there is no doubt the mass of them will approve of their Government's course. Possibly, too, the governments which demanded the surrender of the Kaiser will not be displeased at the turn of events. They quickly accepted Germany's claim that Hindenburg and other generals of the German army should be tried at home for the offences alleged against them during the war, which offences were of the gravest kind, though the means of fixing responsibility were not clear. The anger of the war time is passing. An evidence of this was given in Paisley, where Mr. Asquith was elected to the Parliament of the United Kingdom after declaring that for the British people it was more important in the interest of the world to accelerate the restoration of normal economic life in Europe than to ruin Germany, and that a peace to end war was more important than a peace for revenge. The delay in the early stages of the negotiations at Versailles were advantageous for the ex-Kaiser, as apparently it has been for the Sultan of Turkey, who is to keep his bag and baggage in Europe for a while longer.

Oh, that Speech!

LOST FOOT IN MILL

Hopewell Hill, N. B., March 10.—Morrison Wright, head sawyer at McClellan's mill at Brockton, suffered the loss of one of his feet by an accident yesterday. Mr. Wright was in the act of kicking sawdust into the blower, which had become choked when his trouser leg was caught and his foot drawn against the big saw and so badly cut that amputation was found necessary.

TORE ARM FROM SOCKET.

Moncton, N. B., March 10.—Caught in a dye extracting machine while at work in the Atlantic Underwear factory here this afternoon, William Fraser, an employee of the works, had his right arm completely torn from its socket and is tonight in the city hospital in a precarious condition.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 11.—Stocks were very active and strong at the opening of today's session, the further advance coinciding with another spirited rally in foreign exchange, the British rate rising 8 cents to the pound over yesterday's final quotation. Rails were the first to move forward, averaging one point gains, but motors, equipments, steels and coppers soon helped to swell the volume of business, advancing two to ten points within the first half hour. Tobaccos, shippings, rubbers and numerous miscellaneous issues also were materially higher.

"Is this all you have got to eat?" the traveller asked dejectedly as he looked over the counter display in the railway luncheon.

"Oh, I haven't got to eat it, thank goodness," the attendant responded earnestly. "I only have to sell it."

Different Then.

"P. T. Barnum said the public liked to be humbugged."

"Quite true," admitted the man who was doing some arithmetic. "But it cost so much less to be humbugged when Barnum was alive."

Inconvenient.

The honeymoon had waned, and the young bride felt the difference.

"You used to love to hold my hand, George," she said pathetically one evening.

"I love you now," George answered calmly, without looking up from his newspaper, "but it would keep you from your housework, dear!"

No Tightwad.

"Ain't that guy that married Rosamond sort of a tightwad?" asked Heloise of the rapid fire restaurant.

"Gosh, no!" returned Claudine of the same establishment. "Why, he borrowed every cent she's saved up and spent it all in three days!"

A Fair Guess.

Teacher—"In what battle did Gen. Wolfe, when hearing of victory, cry 'I die happy?'"

Johnny—"I think it was his last battle."

Revenge.

Waiter—Porterhouse steak — and make it small and tough.

Chef (in surprise)—Why small and tough?

Waiter—The guy that ordered it used to be my second lieutenant.

Preparedness.

Green—"What on earth do you want with that sheet of postage-stamps? Why, you've got a hundred there!"

Grey—"Well, you see, I've just completed a poem and I may—er—send it to more than one editor."

Glory of the Pyramids.

"You have doubtless admired monuments in the old world?"

"I have," replied the travelled person.

"And what impressed you most about the pyramids?"

"So far as I could judge from a rather hasty inspection they were quite free from all advertising matter."

A Strategic Move.

Presence of mind is a great thing. A boy came running to his father with the news that a man had fallen through the open coal hole. "Clap the cover on quick and call the policeman," said his father. "We must arrest him for trying to steal our coal or he will be suing us for damages."

FROM THE PEOPLE

RETURNED SOLDIERS' VOTES

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I was interested to see the letter signed Returned Soldier in The Gleaner tonight which referred to the lack of facilities at the civic election on Monday for the soldiers to vote together with the kick that the boys have not been getting everything coming to them from the authorities at City Hall.

If the G. W. V. A. is still to be considered a live organization in Fredericton and the returned soldiers feel they have not been given a square deal, why did they not have some returned soldier candidates in the field to contest the various wards and also the mayoralty? To my mind the soldiers here need a leader who will take an active interest in their welfare, the G. W. V. A. needs some officers who will show some aggressiveness and progressiveness and the boys will all want to commence to understand that they must stick together and look after their own interests if they are to get anywhere or be a forceful power in the community.

Yours,
AN EX-OFFICER.
Fredericton, N. B., March 10th, 1920.

PROGRESSIVENESS AND EDUCATION.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I was much impressed with the short editorial in your issue of the 8th instant, in which, referring to the rapid growth of the town of Moncton, you attributed its remarkable prosperity not to any special advantage it has in location, but to the enterprise and public spirit of its citizens.

One of the best criteria by which to judge of the enterprise and public spirit of a community, and the far-seeing wisdom of its public men, is by its attitude towards education. The youth of today will be the citizen of tomorrow, and the future prosperity of the city will depend absolutely on the nature of the education given in its schools, and the character and ability of its teachers.

Applying this test, may I be permitted to state how the City of Moncton has shown its appreciation of its teachers, in the only way real appreciation can be shown, viz., by giving them salaries somewhat commensurate with the importance of the work in which they are engaged.

Salaries from Trustees Only.

High School.

Principal	$2,600
2nd teacher (male)	2,400
3rd teacher (male)	2,350

Principal Victoria School (male)	1,900
Grade VII. teachers (female)	1,050
Teachers of Grades I. to VI. (female)	1,000

The above salaries are supplemented by the Government grants, from $350 to $400 to Grammar School teachers, and from $130 to $175 to first-class teachers.

Yours,
B. C. FOSTER,

Canadian Naval Defense is Now Before the People in the Jellicoe Report to the House

Four Propositions Suggested in the Report Would Cost All the Way from Five to Twenty-Five Million Dollars a Year—The People Can Take Their Choice.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 11.—Parliament got down to real business today. It was private members' day, when much of the pentup flood of curiosity which has been burdening the members during the interval since the last session was given the opportunity for relief. Although the session is only about two weeks old, already no less than eighty-five questions, thirty-five notices of motion, eight government notices of motion, and a collection of bills and other Parliamentary impedimenta had been accumulated, while the laconic reply from the Mnister concerned was in many instances "stand." Quite a number of questions were answered and orders for returns made, the Minister of Railways appearing to be particularly well prepared to meet his inquisitors.

The Jellicoe Report.

The long expected Jellicoe report on the navy was laid on the table. It is a lengthy report of over forty pages. The general form of five by thirteen inch size and typographical appearance indicates that it was printed in England, though there is no imprint on it. It will require close study before it will be ready for discussion, and that study Mr. Duff, of Lunenburg, and other parliamentary sharps on the navy question are now giving it. That it will be criticized goes without saying.

The general suggestion contained in it is somewhat on the line of the "club breakfast" plan. Canada may have a twenty-five million dollar navy if she is ready to go the whole hog, or she may have others for seventeen and a half millions, ten millons, or a little mosquito fleet for five million dollars a year.

To the Canadian Government, Parliament and people is left the task of determining which if any of them shall be adopted. Two of the fleet organizations suggested are of such a character that in time of war they could undertake the local defense of Canada and of trade and in addition "afford real help to Empire defense as a whole." The other and less costly two would be useful only for the defense of Canadian coasts and Canadian trade.

Of the $10,000,000 a year programme Lord Jellicoe's report says: "There is little naval force which can be used offensively. In other words, while Canada would be protecting her own interests defensively, it would fall to the lot of the United Kingdom, with the assistance of other Dominions, to endeavor to take such action as would be necessary to bring the war to a conclusion."

Object of Lord Jellicoe's Visit.

Lord Jellicoe came to Canada in accordance with a request made to the British Government by the representatives of the Overseas Dominions assembled at the Imperial Conference in 1918. The subject of naval defense had been raised in the conference and the representatives of the Dominions asked the British Government to appoint an expert to visit the various Dominions and to give their respective governments his advice. Lord Jellicoe was therefore commissioned "to advise the Dominion authorities whether in the light of the experience of the war the scheme of naval organization which has been adopted, or may be in contemplation, requires reconsideration, either from the point of view of efficiency of that organization for meeting local needs or from that of ensuring the greatest possible homogeniety and co-operation between all the naval forces of the Empire, and should the Dominions authorities desire to consider how far it is possible for the Dominions to take a more effective share in the naval defense of the Empire, to give assistance from the naval point of view in the drawing up of a scheme for consideration."

Questions Put to Jellicoe.

The Canadian Government submitted on its part to Lord Jellicoe a series of questions dealing with general policy and details of organization and training.

It asked the opinion of the Admiral of the fleet on the necessary steps to be taken and the best methods to be adopted in the event of the Canadian Government deciding to adopt a policy of a local navy. It suggested that Lord Jellicoe submit alternative recommendations for consideration and versed its desire to have the Admiral's opinion on any point connected with naval defence on which he might care to express an opinion.

Lord Jellicoe points out that Canada must decide whether it will extend the scope of its future navy activities from the standpoint of Canada's own requirements and safety or in the broader light of the security and safety of the Empire as a whole. The four schemes he offers therefore fall into two classes. The two more expensive programmes will provide a margin of strength for the Empire defence over and above that required for the defence of Canada's coast and trade in the vicinity thereof. The two lower priced programmes provide only for local defence requirements.

The Cost of Construction.

The figures of annual cost include cost of construction, spread over a period of eight years in the cases of the more expensive plans and of seven years in the less expensive schemes, maintenance, depreciation, administration, auxiliary services such as aircraft and wireless and naval education. The programmes suited to play a part in Empire defence, it will be noted, are headed by battle cruisers; those suited only for local defence purposes are headed by light cruisers.

Evidently whatever plan may be adopted, the principle of the local control will prevail. Lord Jellicoe naturally does not enter at length into this question, which has been frequently argued in Canada. He merely asserts that it is of great importance that the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Navy should hold themselves in the very closest relationship. Ships should be of the same types and organization, training and discipline on the same lines in both services, "while in war the general plan of campaign must be directed from one central authority." He says "it may still be desirable to depute local authorities to carry on part of the plan, especially that part dealing with portions in far distant waters."

Government Action Unknown.

What action the Government will take upon the report it is too soon to predict. It is understood that so far it has not been decided whether or not naval legislation shall be presented to Parliament at the present session, or which plan of construction, if any, should be recommended to the legislators. The whole question of naval defence will doubtless be discussed in the light of Lord Jellicoe's report by the caucus of Unionist Senators and members of the House of Commons. Among them, it is surmised, there may be some divergence of views as to the advisability of embarking upon a programme of naval expenditures at the present time, in view of the financial burdens being borne by the country.

Legislative Programme is Outlined in Speech Today

Proposals of the Government on Many Matters of Importance Set Forth in Speech From Throne -- Will Co-operate With Federal Government in Construction of Trunk Roads--- The Development of Water Powers Found Commercially Feasible Promised "Without Delay".

The following is the Speech from the Throne as read at the opening of the Legislature this afternoon by Lieutenant Governor Pugsley:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to the fourth session of the Seventh Legislative Assembly of the Province of New Brunswick and the first session since the Proclamation of Peace, which will enable the world to carry on the great task of reconstruction and restoration made necessary by the ravages and destruction caused by the Great War.

During the recess, the people of New Brunswick have rejoiced in the home coming of those of their sons and daughters who had remained on duty overseas; other great sources of pleasure were the visits of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and His Execcency the Governor General of Canada, the Duke of Devonshire. His Royal Highness honored this Province by landing in Canada at Saint John and received a most loyal and enthusiastic welcome. Memories of his visit, his delightful personality and the splendid impression of the Heir to the Throne will ever remain with the people.

PREMIER FOSTER.
As Leader of the Government He is Meeting the Legislature for the Fourth Time at the Session Which Opened Today.

The great scarcity of foodstuffs which still pervails in many parts of the world has so lessened the margin between demand and supply as to increase prices everywhere and emphasize the difficulties attending the cost of living. The prosperity of this Province has not met with any serious drawbacks, on the contrary, the ability of its people was distinctly shown by their prompt and large over-subscription of the amount allotted as their share of the last Victory Loan. Our chief industries, agriculture and lumbering, were never so productive or their products in such demand. It is a source of gratification to note the favorable conditions of the crops in New Brunswick during 1919.

Crops and Live Stock.

The official reports of both Dominion and Provincial Agriculture Departments show that the live stock and field crop acreage of New Brunswick were largely increased. The importance of the live stock industry cannot be over-estimated and the increase in the number of cattle, sheep and swine was more than a quarter of a million and the increased value nearly five million dollars. An increase of nearly two million bushels of oats and nearly two million bushels of potatoes; more than one-half million bushels of buckwheat and a total output of creamery butter of about one million pounds and a million and a quarter pounds of cheese will give some idea of the progress made in this basic industry in New Brunswick.

The arrangements of the Department of Agriculture to provide a sufficient supply of ground lime at cost for the needs of the farmers and at the same time utilize a valuable natural resource will, I am confident, have the approval of agriculturists everywhere.

You will be pleased to learn that the reports of the Provincial Foresters indicate that the lumber cut for 1919-20 will again assume its normal proportions and that the territorial revenue for 1918-19 was the largest in the history of the province; also that every effort is being made, consistent with the rights of the timber licensees, to so restrict the operations of the lumbermen as to conserve this most important asset of the province as far as possible.

Valley Railway Financing.

I am pleased to know that the Valley Railway has been completed to Westfield and is now being operated by the Canadian National Railways to the City of St. John. The completion of this railway will not only prove a great convenience and avenue of trade to the people along its whole length from Westfield to Centreville, but will afford another entrance from the west to St. John, one of Canada's winter ports. In view of the heavy burden imposed upon the people to build this railway, it is a matter for sincere congratulation that the Government has been able, by reason of the lowered price in the English market of its guaranteed debenture stock and the rate of exchange prevailing, to purchase and cancel such a portion of the outstanding stock as to effect a considerable reduction in the liability for the construction of this road.

My Government is pleased to announce that, during recess, bonds guaranteed by the province in connection with the construction of the International Railway to the amount of $896,000 have been paid off by the company and cancelled thereby, further reducing the liability of the province.

No decision has yet been given respecting the claims of the several provinces upon the Dominion Government. New Brunswick, as one of the four original partners in Confederation, will insist that there be no division of the lands or natural resources unless all the provinces which formed the Confederation are given the fairest consideration.

Federal Highways Aid.

During recess, conferences have been held between my Government and the Federal Highway Board with respect to the agreements necessary for co-operation between Dominion and Provincial Governments for the construction of roads of satisfactory standard, and I am pleased to announce that legislation will be introduced at this session to enable the province to take advantage of any agreements. The Public Works Department is to be congratulated upon the notable progress made in the construction of more durable roads in every county of the province, and the work will be continued in addition to that mileage built with Federal assistance.

The advantage that will result from additional manufacturing industries throughout the province and the increased demand for cheaper light, heat and power, have caused my Government to give further consideration to the development of its water powers. With this end in view and in co-operation with the Dominion water powers branch of the Conservation Commission, the Water Power Commission of New Brunswick has gathered valuable information which will be submitted to you in their report, with a bill to provide for power development and to enable the Government to proceed without delay with the development of such water powers as are found to be commercially feasible.

The Teachers' Salaries.

The report of the committee appointed at the last session of the Legislature to inquire into the question of increases of salaries to school teachers will be laid before you together with their recommendations upon this important matter, and should such recommendations call for financial assistance on the part of the province, my Government will give same favorable consideration.

The first report of the Workmen's Compensation Board, covering a period since the Act came into force, will also be laid before you and certain amendments to the Act based upon administration experience will be submitted for your consideration.

Matters relating to health throughout the province have been given continuous watchful care by the Department of Public Health. Most of the municipalities have cooperated generously with the department and good progress has been made in providing medical inspection in the schools, collecting vital statistics and organizing to cope with any epidemic which may threaten the province or any of its communities.

I am pleased to know that the women of the province took advantage of the legislative provision extending the franchise to them for the first time and afforded the revisors much assistance in placing their names upon the voters' lists. To provide for omissions, legislation will be introduced allowing names to be added to the official lists upon proof of proper qualifications. The right to vote by women of the province will for all time be an outstanding event in the history of New Brunswick.

The Prohibition Referendum.

The Intoxicating Liquor Act of 1916, having been in force and operative for a sufficient length of time to enable its efficiency to be fairly tested, and the declaration of peace having been signed, the Government intends to hold a plebiscite during the year for or against the retention of the Act and to submit such questions as may be deemed advisable to be voted on at such election.

At no time in the history of the world has there been a greater demand for practical instruction. The outstanding lesson of the recent war was the need of more technical knowledge and very many of those who served overseas are taking advantage of the opportunities afforded them in the Vocational Schools of the Dominion Government. It is a pleasure to note in this connection that the larger communities are taking advantage of the provisions of the New Brunswick Act to encourage and assist vocational instruction and a beginning has been made toward that technical knowledge which will be of such advantage to the men and women of the future.

HON. DR. J. E. HETHERINGTON,
Speaker of the Legislature, Who Presided Over the Proceedings of the House Today.

The Government of this province was represented at the recent Congress held at Washington for the discussion of industrial relations and labor laws as well as to consider the labor provisions of the Treaty of Peace. It is satisfactory to note that legislation is already upon our Statute books providing for a Bureau and a Commissioner of Labor which will enable the Government to take such action as seems to them to be necessary in the interest of labor and of industry.

The Sale of Old Government House.

During the period of the war the building formerly occupied by the Lieutenant Governor of the Province and the considerable acreage of ground in connection therewith, known as Government House and grounds in the City of Fredericton, were utilized without rental charge by the Military authorities for Hospitals and Vocational Schools and a very large expenditure was made by them not only to erect buildings suitable for military purposes, but also to convert the former Government House into a modern hospital. Since this was done, negotiations have been pending between the Dominion Department of Public Works and the Provincial Government for the transfer of the above properties to the Federal Government, and in view of the legislation already on our Statute Books designating the proceeds of this property when disposed of as a trust fund, your attention will be invited to a consideration of how the said fund should be disposed of.

The estimates of the probable income and expenditure for the current year will be submitted to you and I believe that you will find that the estimates for the expenditure have been prepared with a due regard to economy and the requirements of the public service.

I wish to assure you in conclusion, of my belief and confidence in your patriotism and zeal for the public good and to express the hope that your deliberations will result in promoting the welfare and increasing the prosperity of the province.

Cut This Out

OLD ENGLISH RECIPE FOR CATARRH, CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES

If you know of someone who is troubled with Catarrhal Deafness, head noises or ordinary catarrh cut out this formula and hand it to them and you may have been means of saving some poor sufferer perhaps from total deafness. In England scientists for a long time past have recognized that catarrh is a constitutional disease and necessarily requires constitutional treatment.

Sprays, inhalers and nose douches are liable to irritate the delicate air passages and force the disease into the middle ear which frequently means total deafness, or else the disease may be driven down the air passages towards the lungs which is equally as dangerous. The following formula which is used extensively in the damp English climate is a constitutional treatment and should prove especially efficacious to sufferers here who live under more favorable climate conditions.

Secure from your druggist 1 ounce of Parmint (Double strength). Take this home and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day. This will often bring quick relief from distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and hearing improve as the inflammation in the eustachian tubes is reduced. Parmint used in this way acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system and has a tonic action that helps to obtain the desired results. The preparation is easy to make, costs little and is pleasant to take. Every person who has catarrh or head noises or is hard of hearing should give this treatment a trial.

A MISCONCEPTION ABOUT PENSIONS

Caused by Claims Canada Will Present to Germany Through Britain.

Ottawa, March 10.—A report in circulation to the effect that Canadian pensioners are to receive additional payments out of Canada's portion of the war indemnity when this is received from the Central Powers was emphatically denied by the Board of Pension Commissioners.

The board states that the report is probably based on a misconception regarding the claims Canada will make on Germany through the Imperial Government in respect to the liability she has already incurred on account of war pensions.

The board is now preparing data on which to base this claim, which, it is stated, is solely in respect of Canada's Pension Bill. A circular sent out by the board recently asking pensioners for such data may have given rise to the report that an additional pension would be forthcoming out of the war indemnity.

Legislature Was Opened Today With All the Usual Display and Formalities

Militia Provide Guard of Honor and Firing Party for First Time Since Before the War, But They Were Made Up Largely of Returned Soldiers—Short and Snappy Session May Be the Outcome as Members Want to Get Home Before the Spring Break-up.

With militia rather than active service troops providing the military display for the first time since before the war, the fourth session of the seventh Legislature of New Brunswick was opened here this afternoon.

Under most auspicious weather conditions, with a warm sun shining upon the snow which is everywhere highly banked, the opening attracted as much attention as ever, and Fredericton is buzzing with politicians and others interested, while for the first time the opening proceedings were filmed by moving picture photographers.

While the usual large crowds watched the out-of-doors display there was a strikingly brilliant gathering in the Assembly Chamber when the session was opened with the reading of the speech from the throne and the other customary formalities. In fact, there seemed to be an even larger number of visitors than usual, judging by the crush on the floors of the House, where every available bit of space was taken.

There was every indication this morning, too, that it would be a short but snappy session, as with the late date of opening the members are all anxious to get away to their homes with as little delay as possible before the spring break-up takes place. In Government circles the idea has been put forth that it might be possible to wind up the business of the session in four weeks, but when Premier Foster was asked about the suggestion he said that the situation naturally depended largely upon the Opposition.

The Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne was again a lengthy document, but it was not as long as last year's. It consisted of about 1,500 words and referred to many matters of interest, although critics declared it departed from the usual form in some respects and thus had some unexpected features. As expected, the most important matter referred to in the Speech was the prospective development of the water powers of the province under legislation which was forecasted along with the rest of the legislative programme of the session. One of the problems which it was intimated the House would be called upon to settle was the question of disposal of the $75,000 or thereabouts which will come from the sale of the Old Government House property here to the Federal Government, by whom it has been converted into a military hospital. Legislation now on the statute books provides that the proceeds from the property, if sold, shall go into a trust fund.

Premier Foster and members of the Government were all present at the opening, but there were a number of vacant seats. The vacancy in Carleton county's representation, which has existed for several years, or since soon after the last general election, has not been filled and Hon. William Currie, former Speaker, who was absent throughout the last session, was not present today and probably will not be here this year. At least one member, Dr. H. I. Taylor, M. L. A., for Charlotte, is storm-stayed and unable to get here; he sent word from his home at St. George that he could not get here because the Shore Line railway was still snowed up.

FRED MAGEE, M. L. A.,
The Chief Whip of the Government Party, Moved the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

The New Clerk Elected.

The first official ceremony of the day after the opening prayers had been offered by Rev. Z. L. Fash, the chaplain, was the formal election of John M. Keefe, LL.B., of Grand Falls, as clerk of the House. After Hon. Dr. J. E. Hetherington, the Speaker, had announced the vacancy by the death of the late George Y. Dibblee, Premier Foster nominated Mr. Keefe and the motion was adopted. Clerk Keefe's first official act was to nominate J. Bacon Dickson, of this city, son of the late J. Howe Dickson, K. C., for many years clerk of the executive council, as clerk assistant. Premier Foster seconded this nomination, which was confirmed.

The sergeant-at-arms, H. C. Rutter, announced the arrival of the Lieutenant Governor and the Speaker, accompanied by the clerks, retired, after which the gubernatorial party entered the assembly chamber. His Honor was accompanied by Lieut. Col. Osborne, Major Alex. McMillan, D. S. O., and Major William Vassie, M. C., the latter two of St. John, as A. D. C.'s, and R. S. Barker, secretary, Brigadier General Macdonnel, C. M. G., Colonel A. H. H. Powell, Lieut. Col. Sparling, Lieut. Col. Lawson and others from the staaff of Military District No. 7, St. John, were included in the khaki clad officers in attendance.

It was just about 3 o'clock when the strains of the National Anthem played by the 71st Regimental Band announced the arrival of the gubernatorial party at the entrance to the Parliament Buildings. Brigadier General Macdonnel and the other staff officers made a more imposing retinue than usual while His Honor was almost covered with the gold braid of his uniform. As the Lieutenant Governor alighted from his barouche the guard of honor from the 71st Regiment, under command of Major W. C. Lawson, M. C., with Capt. John S. Scott and Lieut. Albert E. McElveney, presented arms. The guard of honor was composed largely of returned soldiers and they made a creditable appearance, while the battery under the command of Lieut. Norman Cass, who fired the salute from a station on the river bank, were also returned men and were under the command of Lieut. Norman Cass, a returned officer.

Following retirement of the Governor and the military from the Assembly Chamber there were some formal proceedings, and after the formal announcement by the Speaker that he had received a copy of His Honor's Speech, Mr. Magee, of Westmorland, the chief government whip, moved, seconded by Mr. Melanson, of Kent, the formal resolution that the Speech be forthwith taken into consideration and the speeches in moving the address were then commenced.

The Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Pugsley are holding their first reception this afternoon at the Queen Hotel, the only one until after Easter, but there will be no State Dinner this evening. However, instead of the formal function the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Pugsley are holding an informal dinner at 8 o'clock for the members and their wives who happen to be in town for the opening of the session. Covers will be laid for twenty-six.

YOUTHFUL IN BODY AND MIND

Never mind your age—as measured by years. How do you feel? That's the thing that counts!

Men scarcely in their thirties—haggard, listless, weak, nervous—men who take no interest in life, just dragging out a weary existence, all in, tired and worn out. Though young in years, they are, nevertheless, old men. Their vital forces are on the wane. They've lost their "punch" and "pep." They feel old—and they look it!

Stay young by keeping your body fit. Keep your nerves healthy and active. Build up your strength and health. Nothing will accomplish these results better than

EIGHT HOUR DAY AND FUEL SUPPLY

Interesting Discussion in House Yesterday—Private Members Day in the House.

Ottawa, March 11.—In the House, fuel supply and the eight-hour day were under discussion in the afternoon, and it was private members' day. Both questions arose from motions by Mr. Burnham of Peterboro, seconded by Mr. Stevens of Vancouver, and both urged adoption of an eight-hour day, subject only, in the words of the motion, to "the right of express private contract."

Opposition came from Mr. Proulx, of Prescott, who argued it would decrease production.

Speaking of coal shortage recently, Mr. Burnham urged the Government to give some consideration to the scientific discoveries as to possibilities of alcohol as a source of industrial power.

BRITISH LABOR PARTY DRAWS OUT

Labor Members Disassociating Themselves With Administration of Govt.

London, March 11.— The Labor party became entirely disassociated from administrative work with the resignation today of Geo. J. Wardle, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Labor. Mr. Wardle announces that he retires because of ill-health.

The Food Controller, Geo. H. Roberts, Labor member for Norwich, and Geo. Nicoll Barnes, Minister without portfolio and Labor member for Glasgow, recently resigned.

TO MAKE NO CHANGE IN DRESS DESIGNS

Chicago, March 11.—Modistes who will hold a five-day semi-annual convention here beginning March 15, will advocate no change in design, according to an announcement today by Madame Alla Ripley, president of the league.

"Prices of material and workmanship combine to make a radical change in style imposed," she said. "Never were women so well dressed. The present modes conform to every woman's individuality."

RUSSIAN INTERESTS PAY ASSESSMENT

Paterson, N. J., March 11.—A tax assessment of $11,000 on forty-seven locomotives built here for the Russian government during the reign of the Czar, but never shipped, will be paid by Coudert Brothers, of New York, representing Tsarist and Kerensky forces.

SEA TRAGEDY OFF NOVA SCOTIA COAST

Halifax, N. S., March 11.—Still another sea tragedy is reported today. Early this afternoon the National Fish Company received a radio from Captain Hansen, master of their trawler, the Lemberg, reporting finding two dories 100 miles south-southeast of Halifax, one of the dories containing the body of a fisherman. The body has been identified, the radio says, as that of John Ellison, of the steam trawler Jutland.

H. E. Kane, of St John, is at the Barker House.

LATEST

Norfolk, Va., March 11.—The coast guard cutter Manning has left Norfolk to aid the American steamer Tyee, which sent out urgent calls for assistance. The Tyee reported her position 90 miles east of Five Fathom Lightship, crippled by boiler trouble and without food supplies.

Chillicothe, O., March 11.—Following the exhumation yesterday of his father's body, Layton Devault, a boy of 17, confessed that he murdered his parent. It was first believed that Devault had been killed by a horse. The boy struck him on the head with a hatchet.

The committee on officers' reports found these correct and congratulated President and Secretary-Treasurer on the same.

J. E. Tighe reported for a special committee who recommended: Amendment of Factory Act forbidding employment of children under 16, eight-hour day, overtime to not increase working hours to more than 58½ per week; eating and dressing rooms in factories, separate toilets for males and females, female inspectors, first aid instructors and inspectors, two persons in charge of locomotives on construction work, a competent engineer and fireman, the administration of Factory Act to be under jurisdiction of Workmen's Compensation Board.

Organizer Livingstone, of the U. M. W., argued against handing over the Factory Act to the absolute control of the Compensation Board. Parliament and government, he thought, should rule directly, not by boards or commissions.

President Melanson favored administration of the Compensation and Factory Acts by a responsible Minister of Labor.

Commissioner Sinclair said the Board consented to administer labor laws on the request of labor. The Compensation Board were not subject to any government and were impartial. The Board were not asking to administer the Factory Act, but if they have to, they will appoint inspectors.

H. H. Stuart advocated the handing over of the Factory Act to the Compensation Board at present, also demanding a Labor Minister who should be backed in the next Legislature by labor members.

J. L. Sugrue supported the resolution and said that the future Labor Minister should be selected by labor men.

Secretary Melvin and others also supported the resolution. Carried.

Following amendments to the Compensation Act were recommended by the same committee:

1—Permanent disability compensation to be from $1,500 to $2,500. Adopted.

2—Full medical and skilled medical attendance from date of accident. Adopted.

3—Increase of funeral expenses to $100. Adopted.

4—Widow's and child's pensions to be $10 and $10 per month, respectively. After addresses by Commissioner Sinclair and others, referred back to committee.

GIRL CONFESSES SHOOTING SISTER

Pretty Italian Girl Says She Fired in Self-Defence When Attacked with Knife.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 11.—Marie Tucci, a pretty 20-year-old Italian girl, walked into the Atlantic City jail last night and announced that she wished to be arrested because she had killed her sister, Mrs. Angelia Conti, in New York, Monday. The New York police, who have been seeking the girl, immediately sent a detective to the New Jersey resort to bring her here.

The girl said she had shot her sister in self-defence, after Mrs. Conti had threatened to attack her with a knife for refusing to go out on a party arranged by her. Then she wandered about for two days and finally reached Atlantic City. She was hysterical when arrested.

The body of Mrs. Conti, shot through the right temple, was found in her apartment on West Houston street early Monday.

United States Naval Heads Declined to Throw the Full Weight of Navy Into War

Admiral Sims Declares that He Had Instructions to Take No Risks With Warships, as United States Would Require Them After the War Was Over.

One— United States Naval—Page 7

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Washington, March 11.—Indications that the United States Navy Department withheld sending all available American naval craft to European waters early in the war, because of a desire to keep the main body of that nation's sea strength intact for possible eventualities, were contained in Admiral Sims testimony today before the Senate committee investigating the naval conduct of the war.

He read a cablegram from the Navy Department, dated July 10, 1917, containing an outline of the Department's policy and declaring that "while a successful termination of the present war must always be the first Allied aim, and will probably result in diminished tension throughout the world, the future position of the United States must in no way be jeopardized by any disintegrity of our main fighting fleet."

Minor Ships Could Fight.

The same cablegram, Admiral Sims said, contained this statement:

"The Navy Department announces as its general plan of action the following: Its willingness to send its minor fighting forces in any number, not incompatible with home needs, to any field of action deemed advisable by the Allied Admiralty Council; its unwillingness as a matter of policy to separate any division from the main fleet for service abroad, although it is willing to send the entire battleship fleet abroad to act as a united but co-operating unit, when the emergency is deemed to warrant it."

Definite Statement of Policy.

With regard to this message and statements of policy, Admiral Sims said it was the "first definite statement of policy I had received, arriving a few days over three months after we had declared war."

"The astounding feature of this policy was, however, that while it stated our intention to co-operate to the fullest degree, still such co-operation was conditioned first upon an adequate defence of our own waters and next upon the future position of the United States after this war was finished," said the Admiral. "I am wholly unable to conceive of any war policy, particularly in a world war of this nature, which was certain to exhaust all of the participants with the possible exception of ourselves, based upon the requirements of any possible future war."

A message received from the Navy Department, dated July 5, to the effect that several small vessels were being sent to augment his forces, "indicated that they were at last beginning to realize that there was a war being fought in European waters," declared Admiral Sims.

Still Hanging Back in 1918.

Even as late as January, 1918, he was still calling for more destroyers, Admiral Sims said.

On April 23, August 24, and September 19, 1918, Admiral Sims said, he wrote the department expressing his disappointment at the apparent non-success of the destroyer building programme in the United States, and urging the necessity of "speeding up" production of anti-submarine craft and sending every available small vessel to the war zone, even at the expense of the protection of the coasts of the United States.

"I am only introduing testimony so far along as 1918 at this time, to bring out the accumulated effect of not having thrown our full weight into the war at the beginning," the Admiral said.

MONCTON STORY WAS EXAGGERATED

Piano and Victrola Were Not Stolen from C. N. R. as Given Out.

A vigorous denial of a story sent out from Moncton to the effect that even a piano and a Victrola were included in the articles stolen from the Canadian National Railways in the thefts on the National Transcontinental division, was given by H. J. Page, of Toronto, chief of the investigation department, who is here today with a number of other C. N. R. detectives.

"The thefts of freight have been bad enough," said Mr. Page, "but they are not so bad as that story sent out from Moncton would make it appear. The records will show and the freight claims will prove that there has not been as large a proportion of freight stolen from the C. N. R. as from other railways in Canada. I came here at the direct request of Superintendents L. S. Brown and Atkinson and other officials of the eastern lines to clean up the situation on the eastern lines and I am pleased with the co-operation that I have received and am receiving."

It was reported today that two railwaymen had come here to give themselves up as implicated in the thefts without waiting to be arrested.

SCIENTISTS FIND MEANEST DISEASE

Colds Weaken the System and Pave the Way for 'Flu.

There is nothing that will sour your temper quicker than a cold in the head. Most people will sniffle and cough until they become sick enough to see a doctor who in nearly every case prescribes standard remedies and drugs for a cure.

The standard prescription which has been used by physicians successfully for many years is now put up in capsule form under the name of Grip-Fix. The exact formula is on every box and the makers of Grip-Fix invite you to submit it to your family physician for his approval.

When you notice the first symptoms of a cold coming an take two Grip-Fix capsules according to the directions on the box. If these directions are followed to the letter your cold will be relieved in a night.

A good plan is to always keep a box of Grip-Fix in your house. You are always in danger of colds and when you have Grip-Fix with you, you can feel immune. It is easy to cure if taken at the start. There is nothing more foolish than to let a cold "run its course."

Grip-Fix may be obtained at any drug store at 35 cents a box. Be sure to remember the name and to avoid substitutes. There is no real substitute for Grip-Fix.

Chaplain Hooper Asks for Assistance for His Work.

Some months have elapsed since I last asked for assistance for my "Sick and Wounded Soldiers' Fund." This fund began its splendid ministry in 1915 and continues to this day. I have seldom had to ask for contributions. They have come so freely and generously from people, principally in St. John, where I and my work were alike well known, but also from many people and societies in other parts of the province. By means of my "fund" I have been able to do an immense deal for the physical and mental comfort of nearly 20,000 men and I am continuing this endeavor today in the four hospitals of this province in which sick and wounded men are being treated. These hospitals are: 1—The hospital at Fredericton, with 100 patients; 2—Lancaster Hospital (West St. John), with 60; 3—County Hospital, East St. John, with 85; 4—The River Glade Sanitarium, with 50. The last two hospitals are for tuberculous men. The patients, whom I visit every week, are men who, as soldiers, served Canada and the Empire during the Great War. To me these men are "my lads," to them I am just the "Padre." To cheer and help and be of the sort of blessing to them is my great and happy duty. While I constantly remember that these "lads" of mine have souls, I do not forget that they have bodies and minds as well, and I try to do what I can in the way of material comforts. But I need help, I need money. I spend not less than $150 a month. I must frankly state that I am at the end of my tether. I have waited for the "Forward Movement" with its splendid financial success, to be over. My work is very real, my need very great. Will those who are convinced of this help me by sending me what they can afford. My address is

NEW YORK COLTS SHOWING UP WELL

Huggins Ready to Back Yanks' Seconds to Beat Any Rookies in South.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Jacksonville, Fla., March 11.—Miller Huggins, manager of the Yankees, after seeing his colts whip his regulars two days in succession, announced last night that he would back his second team against the second team of any club in either the American or National leagues for $1,000 a game. His optimism seemed to be justified by the fact that the colts beat the regulars yesterday 5 to 0, although it must be admitted that George Mogridge and Ernie Shore did the pitching for the colts. The former struck the great Ruth out twice.

Giants' Rookies Win, Too.

San Antonio, Texas, March 11.—The Giants' rookies are getting the habit of victory. Once more yesterday they trimmed the regulars to the tune of 6 to 3.

Arthur White, the young infielder from Framingham, Mass., who played shortstop for the cubs, helped a lot towards winning the game. He added a home run to a record of flawless fielding and looks like a big leaguer.

Roush Gets Into Line.

Cincinnati, O., March 10.—Eddie Roush, centre fielder of the world champions, Cincinnati Nationals, announced here today he would sign his contract for the coming season at the Reds' training camp at Miami, Fla. Roush arrived here after an arduous motor trip from his farm at Oakland City, Indiana. President Herrmann left for Miami today.

St. John, N. B., March 11.—Before a bumper house composed of a bunch of over three hundred enthusiastic rooters, the U. N. B. basketball team, after a triumphant tour of the larger centres of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, went down to defeat before the local Y. M. C. A. Seniors last night in a game which, for clean playing, close checking and brilliant passing, will go on record as beyond doubt the best game of the season.

The half-time score was 6 to 3, and at the close the score was 20 to 19 in favor of the Y. M. C. A.

Representatives of the Clubs Are Meeting at Chatham This Afternoon.

CHATHAM WINNERS OF THE CHESTNUT CUP

Fredericton Team Beaten 6 to 3 by Chatham, Will Play Bathurst Tonight.

Chatham, N. B., March 11.—Representatives of the various clubs of the New Brunswick Hockey League are meeting here today to make preliminary plans for next season.

It is understood that all the clubs represented this year will take memberships in the league again for next season, while there is every assurance that the Marysville club will have their own rink before next winter.

Fredericton and Bathurst play the final game of the league here tonight, Fredericton having paid the travelling expenses of the Bathurst team to Chatham, as the game could not be played at Bathurst, where the rink has collapsed.

Chatham's victory over Fredericton last night by a score of 6 to 3 gave the North Shore club the championship and the Chestnut Cup, donated this year by R. Chestnut & Sons, of Fredericton, will remain in possession of the Chatham club for its first year.

Chatham Wins.

Chatham, N. B., March 10.—Before a bumper crowd, Chatham defeated Fredericton here tonight, 6 to 3, and clinched the championship of the New Brunswick Hockey League. They went through the league without a defeat. In the first period Chatham scored twice and added one more in the second. In both these periods Fredericton was outskated and outplayed. The phenomenal work of their defence, particularly that of Titus, kept the score from going into double figures. The final period brought out some of the fastest hockey ever seen in Chatham, both teams putting up a great exhibition. Fredericton was without the services of Burgess. The whole Fredericton team put up a splendid game, and their work in the final period was of the best. For Chatham, Shorty Veno, Currie, Troy and McMahon were the stars. Thomas Gilbert handled the whistle and kept the game well in hand. Only a few penalties were handed out, and these were for minor infractions. The line-up:

Fredericton.		Chatham.

CIRCUIT MEETING TO BE HELD SOON

President Heckbert Announces Resignation of P. S. Watson as Local Representative.

Chatham, N. B., March 11.—President S. D. Heckbert, of the Maritime and Maine Shortship Circuit, said this morning that a meeting of the executive had not been called as yet, but one would be held at Fredericton within a few days.

Meanwhile, it is understood, he is waiting to learn whether St. John will hold an exhibition this fall, as that will affect the whole latter section of the circuit. While March 10th was the date named by which requests for changes in dates had to be made, Mr. Heckbert has not received any such requests. He has, however, received notice of the resignation of P. S. Watson as the representative of the Fredericton Association on the executive of the circuit, Mr. Watson also disclaiming responsibility for the dates which he had claimed for Fredericton.

Mr. Watson this morning admitted he had forwarded his resignation and said he had done so to bring the local situation to a "show down." It is said that unless some other action is soon taken a general meeting of local horsemen will be called.

The game went against Skip Page up to the tenth head, when he sent a seven end over. In the eleventh head he gained one more shot and added another in the twelfth, pulling his score up to thirteen. The ice was keen, and while Skip Page lost out by a good margin the game was at no time one-sided.

Special Trades Union Congress to Meet and Consider Situation Tomorrow.

London, March 10.—The national conference of coal miners at its session today declared in favor of a general strike as a means of enforcing the demand for the nationalization of the mines.

The decision of the miners' body will be referred to the special trades union congress which meets tomorrow, and opinions which have been expressed by leaders give rise to the expectation that this body will decide on the continuation of constitutional means for achieving the end desired, instead of a resort to direct action.

FOOD DRAFTS FOR WAR SUFFERERS

Bank of Montreal Will Aid in New Scheme for Relief of Famishing People.

[Montreal Gazette, March 5.]

The American Relief Administration operating in the war-stricken countries, and of which Mr. Herbert Hoover has long been the efficient director, has made a new arrangement to facilitate the efforts of any who are willing to help in reducing the sufferings of those who lost property or the means of making their livelihood in consequence of military operations and the attendant disruption of industry.

The circular of the American Relief Administration says:

"Throughout the whole of Central and Eastern Europe the food supply of the people falls into two classes: First, the ration issued by the Government; second, illicit circulation of food available to those who have a sufficient amount of money. The Government ration is necessarily meagre and nowhere sufficient to properly maintain life, and must be supplemented. Under these circumstances the scramble for such supplementary margin has placed the price of the illicit food supplies entirely beyond the reach of the great bulk of the population. To illustrate: A single ham, outside of the ration system, sells for as high as $150."

The appeal is not only to the many people now in America whose homes were originally in the European countries concerned, but to all who have pity for the suffering. The circular proceeds:

"The object of this plan is to add to the total stock of available food supplies in Central and Eastern European countries. Under an arrangement set up with the governments of these countries, this food will be allowed to revolve outside the rationing system, with the hope that enough food will be injected to reduce the pressure on the narrow marginal supplies. The officials of these new governments are endeavoring to impress upon the American people that it is useless to remit money to a family in Central or Eastern Europe with the hope of improving its food situation. The sum total of food now available in Central Europe is insufficient to keep the population alive, and under these circumstances money thus becomes that much paper so far as nutrition is concerned. A hungry man wants food, not money, and under the arrangement outlined above we can meet his need."

By the arrangement made the American Relief Administration will carry at Hamburg, Warsaw, Vienna, Prague and Budapest, stocks of flour, bacon, beans, corned beef, lard or vegetable oils and condensed or evaporated milk. Through the co-operation of the banks, orders will be issued on the European agents of the Administration for the delivery to individuals or communities of stated quantities of foodstuffs, or, if it is desired, the relief may be made indefinite and agents of the organization will distribute the food where it is most needed. When an order is filled the agents will report to the bank issuing the drafts, and the benefactor will be informed.

The plan has been approved by the American Bankers' Association, and United States banks have agreed to give their aid and will issue food drafts on the American Relief Administration.

The Bank of Montreal has been asked to give its assistance and has agreed to put its branches at the service of the Administration free of charge.

It is to be explained that the plan is not a commercial project. Surplus funds, if any, will be used for the American Relief Administration European Children's Fund.

BANQUET OFFICERS GREAT WAR VETS

Winnipeg, March 10.—On behalf of the people of the Province of Manitoba the province tendered a banquet last night to the officers of the provincial command of the Great War Veterans of Canada and the delegates attending the provincial convention.

The tone of the speeches of most of the delegates was against political action by the association, but nearly coincided with the remarks vigorously expressed by W. A. Irwin, President of the Albert command, that the Great War Veterans warned all governments that no legislation could be put on the statute books of the country without passing the censorship of the G. True Knights of Faith

"A thousand pardons, dear friend," the Spaniard answered quickly, for a flush of anger had sprung to the dark cheek of the English prince. "You make my exile so like a home that I forget at times that I am not in very truth back in Castile. Every land I promise you, Edward, that when you are my guest in to Toledo or Madrid you shall not yearn in vain for any commoner's daughter on whom you may deign to cast your eye."

"Your talk, sire," said the prince still more coldly, "is not such as I love to hear from your lips. I have no taste for such amours as you speak of, and I have sworn that my name shall be coupled with that of no woman save my ever dear wife."

"Ever the mirror of true chivalry!" exclaimed Pedro, while James of Majorca, frightened at the stern countenance of their all-powerful protector, plucked hard at the mantle of his brother exile.

"Have a care, cousin," he whispered; "for the sake of the Virgin have a care for you have angered him."

"Pshaw! fear not," the other answered in the same low tone. "If I miss one stoop I will strike him on the next. Mark me else. Fair cousin," he continued, turning to the prince, "these be rare men-at-arms and lusty bowmen. It would be hard indeed to match them."

"They have journeyed far, sire, but they have never yet found their match.

"Nor ever will, I doubt not. I feel myself to be back upon my throne when I look at them. But tell me, dear coz, what shall we do next, when we have driven this bastard Henry from the kingdom which he hath filched."

"We shall then compel the King of Aragon to place our good friend and brother James of Majorca upon the throne."

"Noble and generous prince!" cried the little monarch.

"That done," said King Pedro, glancing out of the corners of his eyes at the young conqueror, "we shall unite the forces of England, of Aquitaine, of Spain and of Majorca. It would be shame to us if we did not do some great deed with such forces ready to our hand."

"You say truly, brother," cried the prince, his eyes kindling at the thought. "Methinks that we could not do anything more pleasing to Our Lady than to drive the heathen Moors out of the country."

"I am with you, Edward, as true as hilt to blade. But, by St. James! we shall not let these Moors make mock at us from over the sea. We must take ship and thrust them from Africa."

"By heaven, yes!" cried the prince. "And it is the dream of my heart that our English pennons shall wave upon the Mount of Olives, and the lions and lilies float over the holy city."

"And why not, dear coz? Your bowmen have cleared a path to Paris, and why not to Jerusalem? Once there our arms might rest."

"Nay, there is more to be done," cried the prince, carried away by the ambitious dream. "There is still the city of Constantine to be taken, and war to be waged against the Soldan of Damascus. And beyond him again there is tribute to be levied from the Cham of Tartary and from the kingdom of Cathay. Ha! John, what say you? Can we not go as far eastward as Richard of the Lion Heart?"

"Old John will bide at home, sire," said the rugged soldier. "By my soul! as long as I am seneschal of Aquitaine I will find enough to do in guarding the marches which you have entrusted to me. It would be a blithe day for the King of France when he heard that the seas lay between him and us."

"By my soul! John," said the prince, "I have never known you turn lagard before."

"The babbling hound, sire, is not always be first at the mort," the old knight answered.

"Nay, my true-heart! I have tried you too often not to know. But, by my soul! I have not seen so dense a throng since the day that we brought King John down Cheapside."

It was indeed an enormous crowd which covered the whole vast plain from the line of vineyards to the river bank. From the northern gate the prince and his companions looked down at a dark sea of heads, brightened here and there by the colored hoods of the women, or by the sparkling head-pieces of archers and men-at-arms. In the centre of this vast assemblage the lists seemed but a narrow strip of green marked out with banners and streamers, while a gleam of white with a flutter of pennons at either end showed where the marquees were pitched which served as the dressing-rooms of the combatants. A path had been staked off from the city gate to the stands which had been erected for the court and nobility. Down this, amid the shouts of the enormous multitude, the prince cantered with his two attendant kings, his high officers of state, and his long train of lords and ladies, courtiers, counsellors, and soldiers, with toss of plume and flash of jewel, sheen of silk, and glint of gold as righ and gallant a show as heart could wish. The head of the cavalcade had reached the lists ere the rear had come clear of the city gate, for the fairest and the bravest had assembled from all the broad lands which are watered by the Dordogne and the Garonne. Here rode dark-browed cavaliers from the sunny south, fiery soldiers from Gascony, graceful courtiers of Limousin or Saintonge, and gallant young Englishmen from beyond the seas. Here too were the beautiful brunettes of the Gironde, with eyes which outflashed their jewels, while beside them rode their blonde sisters of England, clear cut and aquiline, swathed in swans-down and in ermine, for the air was biting though the sun was bright. Slowly the long and glittering train wound into the lists, until every horse had been tethered by the varlets in waiting, and every lord and lady seated in the long stands which stretched, rich in tapestry and velvet and blazoned arms, on either side of the centre of the arena.

The holders of the lists occupied the end which was nearest to the city gate. There, in front of their respective pavilions, flew the martlets of Audley, the roses of Loring, the scarlet bars of Wake, the lion of the Percies and the silver wings of the Beauchamps, each supported by a squire clad in hanging green stuff to represent so many Tritons, and bearing a huge conch-shell in their left hands. Behind the tents the great war-horses, armed at all points, champed and reared, while their masters sat at the doors of their pavilions, with their helmets upon their knees, chatting as to the order of the day's doings. The English archers and men-at-arms had mustered at that end of the lists, but the vast majority of the spectators were in favor of the attacking party, for the English had declined in popularity ever since the bitter dispute as to the disposal of the royal captive after the battle of Poictiers. Hence the applause was by no means general which the herald-at-arms proclaimed, after a flourish of trumpets, the names and styles of the knights who were prepared, for the honor of their country and for the love of their ladies, to hold the field against all who might do them the favor to run a course with them. On the other hand, a deafening burst of cheering greeted the rival herald, who, advancing from the other end of the lists, rolled forth the well-known titles of the five famous warriors who had accepted the refiance.

TYPHUS EPIDEMIC RAGING AT WARSAW

Warsaw, March 10.—The typhus epidemic has not yet reached its worst point, medical authorities believe. Cases registered in January numbered 5,500 and a big increase is expected in the February figures, which are not yet available. It is feared if peace is made with the Russian Bolshevik an influx of Polish refugees will swell the number of cases.

A SHELL-SHOCKED SOLDIER HANGED HIMSELF TODAY

Fred Gorman, of South Devon, Jumped Out of a Window

WITH FIRE ESCAPE ROPE AT FREDERICTON JCT.

Body Hung Suspended for Several Hours While Trains Went By.

Fred Gorman, aged 29 years, of South Devon, a returned soldier who had been badly shell-shocked on two occasions as well as having been wounded, hanged himself in a dramatic manner at Fredericton Junction this morning.

After having spent the night at the Canadian Hotel he is said to have got up and dressed himself and then to have jumped out of the window with a fire escape rope that under the law is placed in every hotel room in New Brunswick, around his neck.

It is believed it was some time later when a young man coming along the highway road saw the body suspended in front of the hotel, where it was also in plain sight from the C. P. R. station and all trains passing along the main line of the railway as well as the branch running into Fredericton.

Life was extinct when the body was found, but it was some hours before it could be cut down, as it could not be removed until Coroner Murphy reached Fredericton Junction from Hoyt station, which is some miles distant. The case is of a very sad nature, as the young man had been demented ever since his return from overseas and had previously attempted suicide and had for some time been a patient at the Provincial Hospital for Nervous Diseases at Fairville.

The police here were notified of the sad occurrence and they immediately got in touch with the family of the deceased, and the father and a brother went to Fredericton Junction on the 10.25 train and will probably bring the body to the city tonight.

The deceased is survived by his father, William Gorman, of South Devon, two brothers, Herbert, of this city, and Walter, of St. John, and one sister, Miss Charlotte, a school teacher.

Moccasin Dance Tonight.

The Arctic Rink management, in response to many calls for another mocasin dance, have decided to put one on tonight. Good ice, good music and an excellent programme of dances arranged.

MAN CRAZED WITH DRINK HOLDS UP A LUMBER CAMP

Flourishing What Was Thought to Be Revolver Chased Men

OUT OF LUMBER CAMP AT WEST OROMOCTO

Arrested and Only Weapon Found on Him Was a Knife.

Crazed with liquor, a man who had been acting as cook at Clowes' camp, West Oromocto, held sway for two nights at the camp and with a knife chased the men out of the camp, but did not touch any of them.

All winter the man and his wife have been employed at the camps and Friday night he got too much "kill joy" aboard and started to run things generally. He flourished what was supposed to be a revolver and the men left the camp for their own safety. On Saturday night he repeated his wild west stunts again and the men again left their quarters. Early Sunday morning the constables at Oromocto were notified of the affair and they started after the man and rounded him up on Monday morning and placed him in the jail at Burton. When searched the only weapon found on his person was a knife.

Later he appeared before Magistrate Kimball and he was bound over to keep the peace for two years and given so long to get out of Oromocto. He is now at his former home in South Devon.

"61" Floor Varnish
IS NEITHER BRITTLE NOR STICKY—IT IS TOUGH.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH

NOTHING—your hammer leaves no impression — why? Because rubber is elastic. And it is the elasticity of "61" Floor Varnish that makes its life so long. This elasticity, which resists the hammer test, also resists the countless heel-blows every floor receives.
WRECKAGE — the glass is shivered into a thousand pieces — why? Because glass is brittle. And this same thing in a lesser degree, is exactly what happens to countless floors finished with ordinary varnishes which crack, craze, check, chip off and mar white.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is tough—so tough that the wood may dent but the Varnish WILL NOT CRACK.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is thoroughly waterproof, and is the most durable and lasting Floor Varnish that is on the market.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH can also be used for all kinds of woodwork, either for inside or outside and will stand all kinds of weather.

Minahan Also Signed a Pledge for Unconditional Release of Prisoners.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 12.—The Labor party has cancelled its endorsement of Mr. Minahan as the party candidate for Sydney in the forthcoming state elections, for asserting that preparations had been made for declaring Australia a republic if the second conscription referendum had carried, and for signing a pledge favoring the unconditional release of prisoners, says a despatch to the London Times from Sydney.

The despatch adds further that Minahan has been barred from the Labor party for seven years. It is asserted that his statements were scaring a large moderate section of the community, on whose votes Labor was confidently counting. Mr. Minahan is a wealthy boot manufacturer and has been one of the financial props of his party.

Thousands of Chinese Coolies Held in British Columbia Encampment Make Desperate Attempt to Escape Return to the Home Land.

ABOUT TWO THOUSAND COOLIES SUCCEEDED IN BREAKING AWAY FROM BARRICADED CAMP

The Guards Insufficient to Stem the Onrush of Mutineers, and Many Escaped Into Country, Where They Were Rounded Up by the Military.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Victoria, B. C., March 12.—At the point of the bayonet, several hundred Chinese Coolies, who had made a determined attempt to escape from the William Head Cantonment yesterday, were finally rounded up by the military guards and herded back within the encampment fences.

Over eight thousand Coolies are at the encampment, and when the riot occurred, it is estimated that about two thousand succeeded in breaking away from the strongly barricaded enclosure.

The guards were insufficient to stem the onrush and the leading forces of the mutiny succeeded in getting out into the surrounding country and scattering before reinforcements could be rushed to the scene and the crowd of rioters forced back at the point of the bayonet into the camp.

The cause of the riot is not known. It was stated, however, that the riot had been quelled and that order prevailed at the camp.

Direct Evidence that He Personally Threw Crockery at the French Officers.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 12.—Prince Joachim Albrecht of Prussia and Captain Von Platen are still being detained in jail for the part they played in the attack on members of the French Commission in the Hotel Adlon. Joachim Albrecht was confronted yesterday by Count Metternich, an Austrian, who was in the dining room at the time of the attack. The meeting was in the presence of the State Attorney, and Metternich reiterated his original testimony that Albrecht not only shouted: "Throw out the swine, kill the dogs if they refuse to go," but that he also threw crockery and glassware at the French party.

The attorney for the imprisoned men will petition the military court for a writ of habeas corpus, as they are being detained under the jurisdiction of Minister of Defense Noske.

Members were outright in their denunciation of such a method of "hightering the cost of living" as far as their trade was concerned, and said it would mean a big loss annually to them.

Expression of opinion was to the effect that if the government wants to raise additional revenue, the tax should be slapped onto the manufacturers.

It is alleged that the suspicion of the authorities were first aroused by a visit of a stranger to the home of Rev. George Boushfield, a prominent Anglican clergyman of this city. The report is that the stranger visited the Rector to secure his co-operation in a scheme which had as its object the "removal of a prominent Canadian."

Mr. Boushfield was ill at the time and the stranger refused to wait until further information could be secured. Any information with regard to the other clues on which the Dominion authorities are working have been kept secret, although it is known that there has been activity regarding the circulation of incendiary literature.

FLOODS THREATEN MISSOURI NOW

Every Creek and River Reported Either Overflowing or Running Bank Full.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Branson, Mo., March 12.—Flood streams today added a further menace to life and property in southwest Missouri, where yesterday a tornado killed 13 persons, injured a number of others and did property damage as yet unestimated.

Every creek and river of the Ozark hills region today was reported either overflowing or running bank full from the torrential rains that preceded and followed the tornado. Should the precipitation continue it was said the danger from floods would become serious.

Observers agreed today that one tornado instead of two swept the affected districts. Apparently it struck first at Nevada, Mo., where three persons were killed and property damage $100,000 or more. Lifting, it swept above four counties before it descended and spent its strength in a rush through Taney County and the Turkey Creek Valley, with a total of ten additional lives.

It was believed that the death list would be increased today when full reports from the devastated district were received.

Labor Federation Favor Organization of a Political Labor Party in Province

Resolution Authorizing Executive to Call a Convention Endorsed Yesterday Afternoon—Want Free School Books Up to Grade VIII.

The New Brunswick Federation of Labor have adopted a resolution calling upon their executive to call a labor convention to organize an Independent Labor party in New Brunswick for political action.

The resolution was one of a large number endorsed by the convention of the Federation yesterday afternoon when the delegates returned to Union Hall after attending the opening ceremonies at the Provincial Legislature. Other resolutions included one demanding free school books and supplies for all children attending the public schools up to Grade 8, inclusive, and "legislation ensuring minimum living wages to each class of school teachers in the province" with the consolidation of small school districts, where possible but no schools to be allowed to be closed in any district.

The report of the special committee on the Workmen's Compensation and Factory Acts was taken up, and the following sections submitted:

5—Providing that in case of injury to or killing of any child employed under age, full cost of such injury or death be paid by offending employing company, the payment of same to be enforced by Compensation Board. Adopted.

Report was adopted excepting section four, which was referred back.

The Resolution Committee reported the following:

Resolution 14, proposed by William O'Donnell: Whereas in this community several private employment agencies exist and are actively engaged in procuring workmen for contractors and industrial plants, charging fees from both employers and workmen; and whereas it is to the interest of these agents to have the greatest labor turnover possible; and whereas in time of labor troubles these agents are used to procure strikebreakers: be it therefore resolved, that this convention ask the Provincial Government to prohibit the operation of any private employment bureau in New Brunswick. Concurred in by committee, and adopted.

The Housing Act Discussed.

Resolution 15, proposed by Wm. McGinnis, was concurred in by committee and is as follows: Whereas the Dominion Government has loaned the Provincial Government a sum of money for the erection of homes, especially for returned soldiers; and whereas such houses are built at such a high price that it is impossible for any returned soldier, who we all know are mostly workingmen and largely belonging to our rank and file, to be benefitted; therefore resolved that we ask the Provincial Government to put such homes for sale, so as to make it possible for returned soldiers to purchase same.

Delegate McGinnis argued that the workingmen could not meet conditions of the Housing Act.

President Melanson supported the Housing Act, which, he said, had worked out well in Moncton. That city had spent $150,000 and was asking for $50,000 more. Houses were given at cost plus about five per cent., which was reasonable.

Delegate Tighe condemned the Act as beyond reach of men with large families, and emphasized the hopelessness of workers trying to find homes under its provisions.

Frank Vanderbourne supported the motion.

F. Scurrah thought if a house might be for two families it would be better; any self-contained house would cost $4,000.

Delegate Lee supported resolution.

Secretary Melvin said stipulation that nobody earning over $3,000 a year was made on request of labor. Governmental building, if centralized, was cheaper than private construction, he said.

Delegate Middleton complained that St. John city taxed him as much on a small house as his neighbor with a three-story building, so he had to enlarge.

H. H. Stuart claimed that while it was hard to buy a home under the Housing Act, it was easier than by borrowing money from private parties. The Housing Act should not be condemned until something better is found. As long as interest must be paid the Government's five per cent. is much preferable to what others charge.

Delegate Scurrah said houses could be built cheaper, but Government properly wanted better housing conditions.

The resolution was laid over.

School Teachers' Salaries.

Resolution 16, by St. John Steam Engineers, asking for passing of Steam and Operating Engineers Act introduced in 1919, was concurred in and adopted.

Resolution 17, proposed by H. H. Stuart, of Newcastle, seconded by J. H. Cummins, of Moncton: That this Federation request the Provincial Government and Legislature to introduce and enact legislation ensuring minimum living wages to each class of school teachers in the province and that school be kept up continuously in every school district, small districts being consolidated wherever practicable. This was concurred in by the commitee and adopted.

Resolutions from St. John.

Following fifteen resolutions submitted by St. John Trades and Labor Council were concurred in and adopted:

18—Requesting Provincial Government to legislate against storing food products more than thirty days in cold storage.

19—Requesting legislation establishing centralization of administration of all labor laws.

20—Requesting uniform system of sanitary plumbing based on modern standards combined with examination and licensing of master and journeyman plumbers.

21—Motormen and conductors to have fourteen days training.

22—To simplify recall of commissioners in St. John.

23—Withdrawn.

24—Requesting union label on all Government printing.

25—To amend law so as to guarantee workers' wages without forcing latter to go to law.

26—Election of civic and municipal officials now appointed by councils and government.

27—"Union or prevailing rate of wages" to be paid all workmen on Government work.

28—Free school books and supplies up to grade eight inclusive.

29—Urging upon local and Dominion Governments immediate necessity of taking over and controlling all necessities of life to prevent any further exploitation of people.

30—Requesting Provincial Government to appoint representatives of workers on all public boards.

32—Calling for labor convention to organize independent labor party and decide upon platform and constitution.

To Abolish Qualifications.

From Miramichi Waterfront Workers, presented by H. H. Stuart:

(a) Pensions for widows and orphans whose bread-winners are not covered by Compensation Act.

(b) Proportional representation in provincial and Dominion elections so that each political party may be entitled to and enabled to elect the same proportion of members of the Legislatures as it obtains of the votes cast by the electors.

(c) Asking that Legislature be requested to abolish all property qualifications for offices of mayor, alderman or county councillor.

A letter from Premier Foster to President Melanson was read asking that the president or Federation name one of the three New Brunswick representatives to be appointed to the proposed Dominion commission to coordinate and unify labor laws. This commission will meet about April 1st, the expenses to be borne equally by the Provincial and Dominion Governments.

AUGURY OF GOOD TO UNIONIST PARTY

Yesterday's Caucus One of the Most Harmonious Since Government Formed.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 12.—The following sentence from the message flashed from the Government caucus room to the absent Premier fairly represents the feeling exhibited at the first caucus of the season held yesterday morning: "We approve of the rest you are now taking and which you have so justly earned, and we assure you of our determination to carry on and to give our whole-hearted support to the acting Prime Minister and to the Government during your absence."

This dissipated a great cloud of false witnesses which had been built up by idle talk and speculation during the past few months. It indicated clearly the spirit with which the Union party has returned for the session and it represents fairly what was apparently the whole spirit of yesterday's caucus. It will be noticed that it employs Sir Thomas White's timely watchword, which embodied the spirit of the fighting speech he made on Monday and which has been of inestimable value to the Government as a means of strengthening its morale and putting fight into it.

The official communique issued after the caucus is a somewhat bare document, as official accounts of caucuses always are. The true spirit of the meeting has to be gained from incessant questioning of those who attend the meetings, and on this occasion opinion is unanimous that no more largely attended or harmonious caucus was held since the Government was formed. It is an augury of good for future caucuses, when contentious matters may come up.

SHARP'S BALSAM

of Horehound and Anise Seed

gave relief to those suffering with colds, etc., seventy years ago—long before most of the "cold cures" now on the market were even thought of.

Sharp's Balsam was the old standby—the reliable family remedy—of our grandparents, and it is equally effective to-day.

MR. CAMPBELL'S EXPERIENCE

J. G. Campbell, a prominent barrister of St. John in 1852, writes:

"One of my children suffered for years with a severe cough. The usual remedies were applied without effect. I obtained some Sharp's Balsam and after the use of about eight ounces of this extraordinary medicine the cough stopped completely."

The Latest Books

THE STRONG HOURS—By Maude Diver.

A masterful romance of England and the Canadian Wilderness, by a Novelist placed by the New York Times in "the front rank of English writers."

Etched against the stormy background of today, the characters stand forth as living men and women valiant and great hearted comrades to every reader who has the power to think at great deeds and noble adventure. A story that every lover of good books will enjoy.

THE APARTMENT NEXT DOOR—By William Johnston.

Lovers of mystery tales will revel in this story of the secret service.

THE HOUSE OF BALTAZAR—By William J. Locke.

In a Locke Novel there is always some one to love. This time it is John Baltazar, the man who came back. It is a big story, perhaps the biggest that Mr. Locke has ever written.

THE RIDIN' KID FROM POWDER RIVER—By H. H. Knibbs.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Mr. Magee of Westmorland referred to many subjects in speaking yesterday on the Address in Reply. The problem of Exchange, to which he directed considerable attention, does not come within the scope of the Legislature to determine, but Mr. Magee dealt with it just the same. The enthusiasm he displayed suggested a deep and abiding interest and, perhaps, a firm belief that the problem could be readily solved through the agency of a union of the Maritime Provinces. Mr. Magee was somewhat interesting, however, in his reference to the Crown Lands stumpage rate, which he considers ridiculously low, particularly in view of the fact that laths are selling at sixteen dollars and lumber at forty dollars a thousand. His criticism is reasonable; but where, as a matter of fact, does the responsibility for the absurd rate lie? The Government cannot carry on even in matters of this kind if not supported by a majority in the House; and the majority at present is not large. The stumpage rate was quite as absurd in 1918 as in 1919, and in 1917 it was also admittedly much too low; yet Mr. Magee supported the Government in all that it did, and he is supporting it today. He should have some influence, and he may have a following in the House. We would be sorry to feel that Mr. Magee is not sincere; we hope he does not too clearly lack independence.

Development of the water powers is another matter in which Mr. Magee manifested some interest, although admitting that he was satisfied to an extent with the Government measure of last year, which measure was withdrawn at the close of the session for obvious reasons, and without protest. It is possible that Mr. Magee is deeply interested, for he would harness the tides of the Bay of Fundy if experts of eminence considered it practicable to do so; and, again, through the power which a union of the Maritime Provinces would give, he would find sufficient money, some five or six millions or more of dollars, to ensure development—the exact amount is quite unimportant for the reason that, with Maritime Union effected, the whole operation would assuredly be "dead easy." The public will no doubt watch the progress of Mr. Magee's water power proposition with considerable interest.

Mr. Magee moved the Address in Reply.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—WILL THE GOVERNMENT ACT?

It was hoped that the opening Speech of the Lieutenant-Governor would foreshadow legislation providing reasonable protection for the tenant. Other provinces have become interested in what has clearly become a hardship, and are taking steps to relieve the situation. We in New Brunswick are quite concerned, for the vexation and injustice of the profiteer landlord is as pronounced in this province as elsewhere. It is in the power of the Legislature to provide a measure of relief; it is the duty of the Government to take the initiative. It cannot also be that the Government is not aware that hardships are possible under the law of Landlord and Tenant; it would not be inaccurate to say that members of the Executive and the majority of the members of the Legislature have knowledge of glaring acts of injustice committed by landlords. It was, therefore, reasonable to expect action by the Government. The landlord has, undoubtedly, too much power; and in these democratic times, from which we are not likely to emerge for many years to come, his methods of treating with the tenant, his way of doing business, all countenanced by an antiquated but enforcible and enforced law, the protection given him, are naturally viewed as unreasonably out of keeping with the spirit of the age. The property of every citizen is entitled to reasonable protection, and there is reasonable authority given him in the handling; but why should the landlord have greater protection than others; why should he have authority to enforce heartless action and to commit acts which, if committed by others, would be treated as acts of gross injustice? The law of Landlord and Tenant should be amended to meet the conditions of today. Can it be possible that the Government is indifferent to the situation, and quite unconcerned as to the injustice made possible under a statute for which it must bear responsibility?

TRUST FUNDS AND INDIFFERENT GOVERNMENT.

If the financial affairs of the Provincial Government are not in bad shape, why is legislation proposed to permit it to tap a trust fund. A paragraph in the Speech from the Throne yesterday foreshadowed a measure under which the moneys received from the sale of Government House, and which were to be held by the province in trust for a specific and proper purpose, can be diverted to other use and service. These moneys were intended to be applied to the building at the capital of a new and suitable official residence for the Governor of the Province. It is now, clearly, designed under disguise to switch these moneys into the general pot. There is, unfortunately, other evidence that the Government is not unwilling to disregard absolutely all reasonable and just principle in the administration of affairs.

GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

Bolshevik having become a word of reproach, a tendency has sprung up among those wishing to discuss the present Government of Russia dispassionately to call it the Soviet Government. We shall do well to remember that the party at present holding authority over the greater part of the old Russian territory remains essentially the same party as at the start and deserves the name that it took at the start and retained.

Soviets existed before the Bolshevik party arose. They apparently ranged from co-operative societies and committees in the merchant and farming world to workers' unions in divers trades, including the soldiers'. In 1917 the Bolsheviki obtained power by control previously established over certain of the latter type of soviets. They had in the chief soviets a majority over the supporters of the preceding revolutionary socialist government, who were known as the Mensheviki by way of distinction.

At present the Bolshevik leaders of September, 1917, rule the State. As a contemporary says, they have the support of the Bolshevik party, controlling many soviets, though not necessarily representing the sentiment of all or even most of the soviets' members.

The Bolsheviki have sat in the old chairs of Russian bureaucracy for two years and five months, just as they have dominated the leading soviets and made tools of them. There is a Bolshevik government. There is no soviet government, any more than there is an old-style bureaucracy. The Bolsheviki govern and are not governed. And more and more the boss Bolsheviki rule the organization under them. Oddly enough, the very fact that Russia lies subject today to such highly concentrated power makes it possible for the Government there to change its policies with despotic readiness when it must do so in order to obtain peace with the outer world.

JAUNDICED VIEWS.

It was said that a ragout which disagreed with him lost Waterloo to the great Napoleon, through supervening sickness, which upset his strategic genius; and of President Wilson an exchange remarks that his illness and confinement to the house have jaundiced his viewpoint and made him think awry. The President's hasty dismissal of Mr. Lansing; his inconsistency in heatedly intervening in the Adriatic dispute as between Italy and the Jugo-Slavs, while at the same time refusing the Turkish mandatory, and giving the impression that in spite of his idealism in respect of the Treaty of Peace and his interest in the welfare of Europe, he might retire from all concern with the reconstruction of the latter—this varying attitude has given the impression that, being indoors so long through illness, the impaired condition of his health, which is physical, has influenced his actions, which are mental, and that the personality which seemed to dominate the Paris Peace Conference, and that which now discloses itself in querulousness, are radically different, through the reaction on the mind of a debilitated body. The President seems to have lost interest in the large issues of world-settlement, of which he himself supplied the basis, while he fixes his thought upon a single point of dispute—a strip of debatable territory, sought equally by Italy and the Jugo-Slavs. Mr. Wilson even hints that America may retire altogether from the consideration of European affairs, in which he took a passionate interest, and adopt an attitude of absolute unconcern, notwithstanding that during the past month 5,000 Armenians have been massacred by the unspeakable Turk, who has the effrontery to expect that he will be recognized by the comity of nations—America not showing any intention of accepting the mandatory in this connection, which had been suggested to the American Government. There is a curious pathology here; and many are interested in the duality disclosed during the illness of the President. If Napoleon could lose world-power through a fit of indigestion, could the enforced seclusion of President Wilson induce awry thinking? Can the thought be indulged that the settlement of the world is at the mercy of—bile?

SECOND MAN SHOT IN SMUGGLING CASE

Albert Morneault Wounded in Hand—Slain Man Won Distinction in War.

A Van Buren special to the Bangor News says: "Candide Dumais, son of A. J. Dumais, of this town, was shot and killed and Albert Morneault, son of Fred Morneault, also of Van Buren, was shot through the hand by Deputy Collector of Customs Emil J. Vanier, near Madawaska late Tuesday night for resisting arrest and assaulting the officer. The story as told here is to the effect that the officer ordered the young men to stop and one of them assaulted the officer with a sled stake, striking him a glancing blow on the head. The officer then opened fire on them with the above results. Thirty gallons of grain alcohol and the team were seized.

"Candide Dumais was a member of the 26th (Yankee) Division and served with distinction during the war, winning the Distinguished Service Medal for gallantry in action. He leaves an aged father and mother in their sad bereavement. Identification of the body was made by the finding of his discharge from the army in his pockets. Morneault escaped into the woods and search is being made for him. Deputy Vanier has been here two years, coming from Portland, Me."

SAW MILL BURNS AT MILLERTON

Newcastle, N. B., March 11.—The Vanderbeck mill in Millerton, run by R. A. Snowball, Chatham, was burned early this morning. The mill was lately repaired at a cost of $2,100 and started sawing laths yesterday. The total loss is estimated at about $15,000 with very little insurance.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. J. Francis Howard.

St. Stephen, N. B., March 11.—It was heard in St. Stephen with much regret that Mrs. J. Francis Hayward had passed away at her home in Parona, Colorado, on Feb. 28. Mrs. Hayward was formerly Miss Keziah Thompson, daughter of the late Hiram Thompson of St. Stephen. Her death following so quickly that of her son, Julian Hayward, which occurred about two months ago, makes it more sad. Mrs. Hayward had reached the age of seventy-four years.

Alger Mawhinney.

Alger Mawhinney, eldest son of Joseph Mawhinney, died at his home in Mace's Bay, on Saturday, March 6. He was thirty years of age, and leaves, besides his father, one brother, Clifford, of Toronto, and two sisters, the Misses Olive and Lottie, at home.

Miss Gladys Thomas.

St. Stephen, N. B., March 11.—Miss Gladys Thomas, daughter of Frank Thomas, postmaster of Waweig, and Mrs. Thomas, was admitted to Chipman Memorial Hospital today suffering from diabetes and passed away this evening. She was 25 years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have the sympathy of many friends in their sudden bereavement.

TO VISIT SCOTLAND.

St. Stephen, March 11.—Andrew Mungall, for many years the efficient superintendent of the St. Croix cotton mills at Milltown, who is enjoying a leave of absence for a few months, will leave here in the morning for St. John to sail on the steamship Empress of France on Saturday for a visit to his old home in Scotland. It is gratifying to his many friends on the border that he has announced his intention of returning.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), Mar. 12—Regardless of another reaction in foreign exchange, the British rate especially forfeiting much of its recent recovery, stocks continued their upward movement at the outset of today's session. Within the first half hour of the active trading advances of 2 to 10 points were recorded by prominent automobile shares under lead of General Motors, while rails and equipments supplemented yesterday's gains by 1 to 3 points. Oils and steels made advances extending from large fractions to 2 points and Industrial Alcohol features the specialties, rising four points.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF LIFE

Not a Beggar.

Little Marjorie had enjoyed her visit to her aunt very much until Monday morning came.

Then auntie went out to collect some rents in a very poor district, and took Marjorie with her.

After calling at several houses and receiving the usual reply of:

"I'm sorry, but can't give you anything this week," the small girl's face assumed a look of great disgust.

"Auntie," she said coldly, "I think I'd better go home this afternoon, please. I'm quite sure my mummy wouldn't like to know you had taken me round such dirty streets begging."

A Hope That Failed.

The great ocean liner rolled and pitched.

"Henry," faltered the young bride, "do you still love me?"

"More than ever, darling," was Henry's fervent answer.

Then there was an eloquent silence.

"Henry," she gasped, turning her pale, ghastly face away. "I thought that would make me feel better, but it doesn't."

Sufficient.

"My boy, when are you ever going to develop a sense of responsibility?"

"I don't know, father. Mother says you haven't any, either."

"But I don't need it. I am married to your mother."

Encore.

Mrs. Thricewed—Well, Elsie, how do you like your new papa?"

Elsie—"Oh, mamma, do go on marrying men like that; he's given me a whole dollar."

Results Guaranteed.

"You bet I do," replied the specialist. "Why, last week a man came to me for nerve treatment and when I'd finished with him he tried to borrow £50 from me."

cases ended in death! So a recent Canadian investigation showed. These were not cases of infectious diseases—of consumption—of typhoid! They were cases where a person had sustained some slight injury—a cut, a burn, a wire-prick—and where the wound, being thought not serious enough for careful treatment, had been neglected. Blood-poisoning and death resulted.

FROM THE PEOPLE

TO PATRICK O'BRIEN.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Would you allow a damsel, who is in truth too shy to openly state her case to Mr. O'Brien (who inserted such a wonderful ad. in your valuable columns the other evening) to express herself in your column, From the People?

Patrick Dear: Now it came to pass that on the second day of the week as the time of the setting of the sun drew near I did read the doings of the day in The Gleaner.

Verily, as mine eye did scan the printed sheet it was caught by your ad. I did eagerly read the writing and mine heart did flutter whilst it seemed as though a voice said unto me: Thou art the chosen one.

Then did I repair unto an upper chamber and did anoint mine head with oil and gird mineself with sackcloth.

Yea, verily, I did procure a candle and did set it in a golden candlestick and I did sweep the whole house and I did search diligently.

Now, it came to pass that mine efforts were fruitful, even beyond expectation; for I did find a coin. And I was as one walking in a dream; for the coin did shine not at all but had inscribed upon it a number. And the number thereof was one thousand eight hundred, two score and twelve. Moreover, there was writing on the reverse side of the coin which being interpreted did read, One Cent.

Then did I call in my friends saying: "Come and rejoice with me for the hour of my deliverance is at hand. Behold I have found that which will give me married life."

Give ear, then, O son of Erin, for here am I a maiden, who doth possess that which your heart desireth; and whose years are two score and ten. Wilt thou, then, declare me thy future wife.

Yours, RUTH.
Fredericton, March 10, 1920.

FASHION; DRESS.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—It is quite interesting to read the different opinions of the people on the various subjects of the day.

I would very much like to have their opinion on a subject that for some time has been in my mind, viz., Fashion. Surely now when everything is so expensive the majority of the people are going crazy over dress.

There may be a few who do not feel the need of the money they spend in new dresses, hats, coats and all the paraphernalia that the fashionable world adore, in the four seasons of each year; but there are many poorer people who like all those things and want to be somebody else as well as his or her more fortunate neighbor. If there is sickness and doctor bills to pay or any other unexpected debts, poor Ellen has to go without the latest style of hat, and therefore cannot go to the fashionable party given by her more fortunate school friend who would be very much ashamed of one of her guests in that hat she had actually worn all last season.

I could write for hours on this most important matter, but I must not take up too much of your valuable space.

Yours,
ONE WHO TAKES NOTICE.

HOW HE WOULD FALL.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Noticing in your issue of the 8th instant another attempted explanation of the experiment of falling through the earth I wish to state that the arguments appearing therein have failed to change my views on the subject, and I will attempt to maintain my former stand on the question.

My former stand was that, granted a hole through the centre of the earth, and granted that the hole is a vacuum, a man jumping into the hole would fall right through the earth until his feet stuck out on the other side of the world. This conclusion was reached from reasoning that a body falling from this side of the earth to the centre obtains exactly sufficient energy of motion to carry it to the other side. Your correspondent of the 8th instant states that "if the portals of the hole were at the equator the falling body would be pressed against the side and the experimenter would scrape his way to the centre of the earth even in a vacuum" and that "the body would be travelling from west to east equal to the rate that the surface of the earth is travelling in its daily rotation." I cannot credit these statements for if they are true a person jumping upward off the earth's surface would see the earth whizzing by under his feet at a rapid rate, an absurd state of affairs. Therefore, I claim that the experimenter would fall through the hole without scraping the sides, as, though the earth is rotating, so also is the experimenter, and there is no relative motion between the two.

Yours,
SCHOOLBOY.

New Franchise Bill Brought Down in House and Generally Viewed With Much Favor

Broad in Its Conception and Exceedingly Fair in All Its Details—Enumeration in Cities Done Away With and Registration to Take Its Place.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 12.—The long expected in some quarters much feared franchise bill, which was presented to the House yesterday by Hon. Hugh Guthrie, in his capacity as Solicitor General, has been exceedingly well received on all sides, and the general opinion, even by critics of the Government, is that it is broad in its conception and fair in its details.

It will replace the wartime election act as a general enactment, so that act is now out of business and a great object of criticism of the Government on the part of the opposition is removed. It is in every respect a much less restricted piece of legislation than that act. The act appears to be most fair both in relation to the scope of the franchise and the compilation of the lists.

There are no disfranchisement clauses in the act. Broadly, it provides that any British subject of 21 years or older, male or female, native born or naturalized, may vote. Citizenship is the basic qualification for all franchise.

As to the method of preparation of the lists, provincial lists, if not more than one year old, are to be used. No one may vote by reason of marital relations, that is, the wife, son or daughter of a naturalized alien will not get the vote by reason of the naturalization of the husband or father. They must have been personaly naturalized. With this possible exception there does not seem much in the act which can offer a ground for criticism.

The doing away with enumeration in cities, and the substitution of registration, will be generally considered a change for the good, as the former method was notoriously inefficient through carelesnes, while the partisan efforts of the rural enumerator are curbed by the provision that a voter who has been left off the lists can go to the polling place and "swear in" and vote.

Another noticeable feature is that a voter attempting to vote illegally may be arrested on the spot by any of the duly qualified electoral officials.

INCREASED PAY FOR U. S. COAL MINERS

Commission Recommends that Bituminous Miners Get Advance of 25 Per Cent.

Washington, March 11.—A 25 per cent wage increase for bituminous coal miners is recommended in a majority report of commission appointed by President Wilson to settle the coal strike.

No change in working hours or conditions was recommended.

John P. White, representing the miners, held out for a higher wage increase, it was said, and will submit a minority report.

The wage increase proposed will absorb the 14 per cent granted when the miners returned to work last November, so that the actual increase is 11 per cent over present wages.

Increased Stumpage Rates Suggested in Legislature

Government Whip Makes Reference to the Subject in Moving the Address---Wants Feasibility of Harnessing Tides at Head of Bay of Fundy Investigated ---Maritime Union Urge Finds Little Sympathy--Big Crowds at Opening.

That the opening of the Legislature has lost none of its attractiveness as a drawing card was evident yesterday afternoon when one of the largest throngs that ever gathered at Parliament Square watched the out-of-doors events while inside the Assembly Chamber every available bit of space was crowded, with women even more in the majority than ever.

Composed almost entirely of returned soldiers who are either patients at the D. S. C. R. Hospital here, attending the Vocational School, or employed in the various offices, the guard of honor, which was commanded by Major W. C. Lawson, M. C., who returned with the 26th, New Brunswick Battalion from overseas as second in command, made a most creditable appearance. They were snappy in their action, while the band, under Bandmaster Sgt. James White, played marching music that did not lag and added zest to the proceedings.

For the first time since before the war there was a color party, Capt. John S. Scott and Lieut. A. E. McElveny bearing the 71st Regiment colors, but all the military were in khaki and there were many service ribbons and decorations in evidence. Brigadier General Macdonnel, as general officer commanding No. 7 Military District, was in attendance but he didn't make an inspection of the guard nor the firing party, who, under the command of Lieut. Norman Cass, fired the customary salute. To those who were in or about the Legislative Buildings it seemed as if more powerful guns were being used to fire the salute than is customary, but this was not so; the explanation of the apparent additional concussion was found in the fact that the location of the guns was considerably nearer the buildings than in former years. After the Lieutenant-Governor had departed, however, Lieut. Col. A. H. H. Powell, A.A.G. of No. 7 District, expressed to Major Lawson the warm appreciation of the G.O.C. of the excellent guard which had been turned out and the military formalities were thus shortened as much as possible.

The formal opening ceremonies in the Assembly Chamber after the election of the new Clerk all passed off without a ripple. A dozen or more officers, mostly of senior rank, lined themselves up almost across the entire open space before the Throne after the Lieutenant-Governor had been admitted and remained standing there while the Speech was read by His Honor. The uniform that was worn by Lieutenant-Governor Pugsley was that of a Privy Councillor; it was generously decorated with gold braid but the stately appearance of His Honor with his now thoroughly gray beard made him a most imposing central figure for the whole scene. It required some time for the reading of the lengthy Speech, but every word could be distinctly heard all over the Chamber, while the impressive manner in which His Honor read it paragraph after paragraph caused one spectator to remark that "he could read off a telephone directory, page after page, and make his audience think it was a document of great importance."

Chief Whip Magee's Speech.

In spite of its length, there was really nothing that was not expected in the speech from the Throne. Memories of last year's Speech with its promises and suggestions that have since passed like so much vanishing cream may perhaps account for the scant references that were made to the subject matter of His Honor's message by the mover and seconder of the Address, who were the only speakers of the afternoon.

Fred Magee, chief government whip and one of the members for Westmorland, was the mover of the Address, and his friends who predicted he would make one of the most interesting speeches that had been heard for some time in the moving of the Address were not disappointed. Mr. Magee did not talk very long, but he covered a lot of ground and dealt with subjects of general interest very largely; he didn't follow the custom of taking the Speech from the Throne as a text and explaining what the various paragraphs meant or forecasting what line any legislation that had been suggested would take.

Those who expected some intimation as to what is going to happen in respect to the salaries of school teachers from the Government's chief whip were disappointed, just as were those who looked for him to enlighten them as to what new policy the Government had adopted for the development of the water powers since they threw overboard the bill which was introduced last session to provide for assistance to private development. In fact, it seemed quite evident that Premier Foster had not shared the stock of "ammunition" with his leading "back-bencher" but rather was keeping it for this afternoon when the leader of the Government himself is expected to speak. It therefore had evidently been up to Mr. Magee to make his own material, and perhaps that accounts for some of the unusual features of his speech.

Must Maintain Imperial Relations.

"We should not break any links of Empire,' declared Mr. Magee early in his remarks when referring to statements which had been made in favor of having only a Canadian bred as Governor General of Canada. "Unless we want to become nationalists or convert Canada into a republic," he continued, "we must keep the only remaining links that bind us in the Empire."

These declarations which brought forth applause from both sides of the House, were made during a reference to the paragraph in the speech from the Throne which told of the visits to Canada of the Prince of Wales and the presence in this province of the royal party, including His Excellency the Duke of Devonshire, who the speaker characterized as one of the leading British statesmen of the age.

In dealing with agricultural progress that had been made in the province, Mr. Magee refered particularly to the success of co-operative selling of lambs, wool, poultry, etc., and also took up the co-operative creameries, all of which, he said, pleased the farmers exceedingly.

"The cost of living is the result of that law of supply and demand that governments cannot alter," declared Mr. Magee and then he went on to refer to the conditions in Europe where countries which had not yet recovered from the war's effects were not producing anything like their share of the world's food or other necessaries. Then he referred to the agrarian movement throughout Canada, saying that the farmers were becoming a factor politically to be reckoned with. They were looking, he said, for a lower tariff. The Liberals, he continued, sympathized with the agrarian group and their policies were almost alike; so much so that Mr. Magee intimated his belief that they would openly combine.

Wants Stumpage Increased.

Mr. Magee congratulated the Government upon having collected an additional territorial revenue from the Crown lands. Then he quoted laths as worth from $12 to $15 a thousand feet and spruce lumber at $40 and upwards a thousand, and it was soon evident that he is to be regarded as one of those favoring increasing the stumpage rates for lumber cut upon the Crown lands as one of the methods of increasing the revenue of the province. "Is there any reason why there should not be increased returns from our Crown lands, with lumber of all kinds bringing the present prices?" asked Mr. Magee. "When values have increased so much, the revenue should not be increased; the vested interests of the lumber industry not be affected by a fair increase." There was a significant lack of applause on the part of the members of the Government at this and some other parts of Mr. Magee's speech.

Referring to the Department of Public Health, the chief whip congratulated Hon. Dr. Roberts upon the work he had done and declared that when it was recalled that he was working without remuneration it would be agreed that the Minister of Public Health was the exception and not the rule in public life nowadays.

Mr. Magee also paid a warm tribute to Hon. P. J. Veniot, declaring that the Minister of Public Works was supported by "unbiased public opinion" in the work he had been carrying on and congratulated him upon his "able and efficient management." As to costs all he had to say was that the province cannot expect materials or labor at pre-war costs and must be prepared to pay more. He declared he had assurances from the Minister of Public Works that the great gravel deposits of Westmorland county would be developed and used to supply road-building material for portions of the province which were without the right kind of gravel.

As chairman of the Vocational Education Board of the province Mr. Magee said their report would be tabled in the House and intimated that the ideal they had in mind was the establishment of industrial high schools which would follow in the wake of the present night classes and day vocational schools.

Development of Water Powers.

Referring to the promise of a bill for the development of the water powers for commercial and industrial purposes Mr. Magee frankly admitted that he did not know what the Government bill was going to be, but he expressed the hope that it would be along the same line as the legislation that was brought down last year but never pressed, because, he said, that bill protected the public interests. He further said he did not know how many water powers it was proposed to develop or whether it was the idea to carry on local developments or embark upon larger propositions. Then he urged that the Government should, perhaps in conjunction with the Nova Scotia and even Prince Edward Island administrations, cause proper borings and soundings to be made at the head of the Bay of Fundy to determine the feasibility of harnessing the great tides, as had been sugested. He would like, he said, to see reports obtained on the project from eminent engineers and declared his belief that the Canadian National Railways, who were said to be looking into the possibility of electrification of their eastern lines, might be willing to become partners in the investigation work and would at least be leading customers if the project were caried out.

Dealing with the revenue of the province Mr. Mage said it was now about two million dollars, but there really was need for not less than three million dollars a year, or about twice the amount before the war. There were only two sources from which revenue in any large amount might be expected to come, one being the crown lands and the other through the province's claims against the Dominion. Ther was need, he said, of at least a legislative union of the Maritime Provinces if their claims were ever to be fruitful while the new census, which was now being talked of, would, he predicted, entirely ruin the influence of the provinces unless they united.

The Maritime union suggestions apparently found little favor in the House, however, and Mr. Magee closed his speech with a feeling reference to the late George Y. Dibblee, who died in office while clerk of the House, and an expression of belief that the pound sterling would return to par and become the standard of currency throughout the world once more.

A lack of co-ordination in the Government forces was evident before Mr. Melanson, of Kent, had proceeded very far with his speech in seconding the address. He read a prepared speech and entirely disregarded the admonitions that Mr. Magee included in the latter portion of his remarks to participated in the debate on the Address to approach the subect without partizanship and stick to their text. Mr. Melanson's speech read largely like a campaign document which exhibited the deeds of the Government from a purely partican standpoint and hurled verbal bouquets promiscuously about the Government benches.

When he had concluded Hon. J. A. Murray, leader of the opposition, moved the adjournment of the debate and then some routine business was put through, including the oppointment of the official reporter, the appointment of a committee consisting of Hon. Mr. Foster, Hon. Mr. Veniot, Hon. Mr. Robinson, Hon. Mr. Murray (Kings) and Mr. Smith (Carleton) to nominate all standing committees and the presentation by the Speaker of the report from Sir Douglas Hazen of the judgment of the Court of Appeal on the special case regarding the New Brunswick Power Company which had been referred to that body.

The House then adjourned shortly before 5 o'clock until this afternoon.

The Address In Reply to Speech

The Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne as moved by Mr. Magee, and seconded by Mr. Melanson, follows:—

Labor Federation Wants Further Restrictions Placed On Pulpwood Shipments

Would Prevent Exportation as a Means of Increasing Industrial Wealth of the Country—Delegation Place Demands Before Government.

The New Brunswick Federation of Labor are evidently not superstitious, for this morning they sent a delegation of thirteen members to appear before the Provincial Government when the demands of organized labor for legislative amendments and new laws were placed before Premier Foster and his cabinet.

In addition to the amendments to the Factory Act and the Workmen's Compensation Act, increasing indemnities being demanded, the delegation among other things asked for the immediate establishment of a Department of Labor and the continuation of the public employment service offices by the Provincial Government assuming half the expense and the abolition of all private employing agencies. The members of the delegation were President Melanson, E. R. Steeves, J. E. Tighe, F. A. Campbell, G. R. Melvin, F. Scurrah, W. J. McNeill, H. H. Stuart, J. S. Martin, B. Kennedy, Wm. O'Donnell, H. Hefferman and C. H. Cameron. The convention will close this afternoon with the election of officers.

This Morning's Session.

When the New Brunswick Federation of Labor resumed this morning the special committee on the Compensation and Factory Acts recommended:

Section four—Allowance from Compensation Board to widows and their minor children to be increased from twenty and five dollars per month respectively to thirty and seven and one-half dollars per month respectively. Adopted.

Then Stationary Engineers' Bill brought in last year but not passed, was again recommended, with the addition, that on all engines there should be one competent engineer and one competent fireman. This provision had been in the bill presented last year by the Federation, but had been omitted in the Legislature. The bill as amended was endorsed by the Federation.

Delegate McGinnis' resolution re Housing Act, was again taken up.

Delegate Hennessy, member of St. John Housing Board, explained that houses are sold for cash at cost, and on time at cost plus five per cent interest. The highest priced houses in St. John would cost $4,500, and lowest about $4,000. The Government cannot build houses any cheaper than anyone else. He thought the minimum loan, $3,500, now too small, as the Housing Act was framed in 1918, and figured according to previous year's prices, which have since vastly increased.

The price of land went up wondrously as soon as the owners found it was needed by the Housing Board. The housing proposition is hampered because of prices of land and materials. Under the act a man can build a house for himself. The act aims to stop landlordism. Some want to build a double house to make a tenant of half pay for the whole. On a wooden house one can borrow 85 per cent. of cost up to $3,500.

The resolution was defeated.

The Federation resolved to petition the Federal Government to place their employees under the Provincial Factories Act, on motion of Delegates Cummins and Walker.

G. P. Stewart and E. A. Kirby, of Miramichi, moved: Whereas exportation of our raw material to foreign countries is to be deplored, this convention recommends that the Provincial Government place further restrictions on the shipment of pulpwood to foreign countries in an unmanufactured state, therefore causing said pulpwood to be made into paper in New Brunswick, thus bringing more industries into our own country. Adopted.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of Jessie, beloved wife of James MacLellan, who died on March 11th, 1919.

Although one year has passed
Since that great sorrow fell,
Yet in our hearts we mourn the loss
Of one we loved so well.

God called her home; it was His will,
But in our hearts she liveth still;
Her memory is as dear today
As in the hour she passed away.

She found a friend in Jesus,
Better than an earthly friend.
And One who was ever near her
And was with her to the end.

ACIDS IN STOMACH CAUSE INDIGESTION

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain. How to Treat.

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestents are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

GOOD FRESH BEER HAS FOOD VALUE

Ontario Physician Declares that Two Per Cent. Beer Has No Food Value.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

London, Ont., March 12.—"Good fresh beer has considerable food value, being rich in vitamines," said Dr. J. W. Crane, in an address to a western university audience last night on "the psychology of the menu," but he added, "the two per cent. beer sold here has no vitamines and has therefore no food value."

He had at one time advised his students not to use tobacco, believing it weakened digestion, but tests had shown the saliva of a smoker digested starch better than that of a non-smoker. But, he declared, experiments show that the average output of work cannot be increased by tea, coffee, alcohol or other drugs.

PROHIBITION TO STOP U. S. GROWTH

New York, March 12.—A statement issued here shows that prohibition is causing so many foreign born to leave the United States that emigration is now exceeding immigration. According to Ellis Island records, 53,000 people came into the United States and 61,000 left since January 1st.

Fifty Thousand Men of Kolchak Force Cross Lake Baikal and Join Semenoff.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Vladivostok, March 12.—The revolutionary Government at Irkutsk maintains itself, according to reports here, despite reports from Chita, that remnants of the Kolchak forces, numbering fifty thousand men under General Voitzekoffsky, have reached Messovaya, east of Lake Baikal.

Detouring Irkutsk, Voitzekoffsky's forces marched across the frozen southern section of Lake Baikal for the purpose of making a juncture with the Semenoff forces.

SOCIALISTS HOLD SWAY IN SWEDEN

New Government Promises to Continue to Work in a Democratic Spirit.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Stockholm, March 12.—Hjalmar Branting is Sweden's first Socialist Premier. The new Government, it is declared, will continue to work in a democratic spirit. Its programme is limited, as the popular representation is not yet sufficiently in accord with the socialistic views, that a socialistic Government comes into power as a matter of course.

Besides the taxation problem, other important questions before the Government include the housing crisis, revision of the country's system of defense, membership in the League of Nations, examination into industrial democracy and the matter of nationalization.

Preparing for Journalists' Visit.

A. H. Lindsay, of Moncton, advertising agent of the Canadian National Railways, is in Fredericton today on his return from the North Shore, where he has been making arrangements for the visit in June of the party of two hundred odd members of the National Editorial Association of the United States, who are to visit the Maritime Provinces as guests of the Canadian National Railways. The party will arrive here on the afternoon of June 15th via the Valley Railway from St. John and will remain here until the following morning, when they leave by Canada Eastern branch for Newcastle en route to Inch Arran, the summer resort near Dalhousie, where it is expected the New Brunswick Tourist and Resorts League will be in session. Mr. Lindsay spent today conferring with officials of the Board of Trade and others regarding the local arrangements for the visit of the party.

HOUSE WILL ADJOURN TODAY TO TUESDAY

FIRST CAUCUSES TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

Lots of Guessing as to How Long Before Budget Will Come Down.

The Legislature will adjourn from this afternoon until next Tuesday, Premier Foster announced this morning.

Usually the week-end adjournments have been only until Monday evening, but the Premier said that, in view of the train service, he believed it would be more satisfactory to the members to make the adjournment until Tuesday.

This afternoon Premier Foster is expected to follow Hon. J. A. Murray, leader of the Opposition, in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, but how much further the debate will go on is not known as yet.

The Government, it was said today, would be pleased to see the Address passed this afternoon; and, if that is done, it is understood everything is in readiness for the Budget to be brought down next week. Predictions that are made as to the situation, however, are mere guesses.

Neither party have had a caucus as yet. The Government party's first caucus, Premier Foster said today, would be held on Tuesday night, and it may be that the Opposition party will hold their first caucus about the same time, Hon. Mr. Murray declaring there was little prospect of a caucus being held before next week.

The Government were in session this morning, but aside from the usual line of routine business all their time was taken up with hearing the delegation from the New Brunswick Federation of Labor, who placed before the Cabinet their demands which had been drawn up during the week at the convention which has been in progress here.

SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT WINS

Strength in Next House Will Be About the Same as in the Last One.

London, March 11.—In the South African elections yesterday it is understood that the nationalists shirked the republican issue. A forecast of the result gives the South African party 48 seats, the unionists 34, the nationalists 40, and labor 12. The present position of the parties in the South African parliament is:

South Africans, 52; unionists, 38; nationalists, 27; labor, 5, and independent, 6; vacant, 2.

RUSSIA'S "ROAD TO FREEDOM" DISCUSSED

the labor men. He did not agree with Mr. Livingstone and some other speakers. Labor, he said, would make a mistake if they went into politics. Let them vote as a unit if they wish, but not run distinctly labor candidates. Labor convention reminded him of a meeting of the Lumbermen's Association. Both worked the same way. In both, lots of business was jammed through at the last moment, many not knowing how they voted. Laws of safety should be so observed that there'd be no compensation needed. The Board would deal justly with both employees and employers. He thought workmen should contribute a little towards the compensation fund.

Organizer Cameron said unionization was to benefit posterity. Legislation should be watched that labor laws were not nullified.

H. H. Stuart, a former resident of Fredericton and member of the printing trade here, advocated the closest possible union and most hearty co-opération of all useful workers, whether workers with hand or brain. Old sores should be forgotten as soon as healed and no revenge taken. In complete organization and wise political action lay the safety of the workers. Only such occupations as enabled people to live off the work of others should be abolished. Co-operation was the ultimate law of Nature and was enforced by all the precepts of true religion. Labor and farmers were natural allies.

Ambrose Legere, of St. John, favored labor going into politics only so far as to wield the balance of power. He scored such people as the St. John ladies who wanted working girls to wear a uniform, and the military authorities for allowing majors to run for Parliament but had sought to stop private soldiers taking part in politics.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered J. A. Sinclair and the Fredericton Labor Council, to which Messrs. Sinclair and Ryan, for the Labor Council, replied very happily.

VON BERNSTORFF AGAIN HEARD FROM

Says He Could Have Kept U. S. Out of War but for Military Crowd at Home.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 12.—Count Von Bernstorff, former German Ambassador to the United States, has been trying his skill at public speaking in Berlin during the past week, as a preparatory training for his fall campaign for a seat in the national assembly. He addressed audiences on various subjects and entertained a largely attended meeting at the Grunewald with a recital of his Washington experiences. The former ambassador told the audience he was confident his efforts to keep the United States out of the war would have been successful except for the intervention of the German military "crowd" at the moment when prospects were brightest. President Wilson's failure to secure recognition of his fourteen points, he believed, were due to the fact that Premiers Lloyd-George and Clemenceau were more dominating figures in the conference.

Von Bernstorff asserted that even today he was not informed as to what military quarters in Germany had inspired the American plots and crimes, not charged up to Von Papen, Boy-Ed and others.

BARBERING NEARING THE LUXURY CLASS

Latest Advance in Prices is Said to Be Likely to Drive Trade Away.

An advance in barbers' charges which went into effect yesterday has brought the cost of haircuts from 35 up to 50 cents, while shaves have advanced in cost from 15 to 20 cents. The notice of the advance which was given was signed by practically all the barbers.

Disgruntled patrons who have enquired for a reason for the upward movement have been told that it is just a case of the old story of the high cost of everything else, including more pay for the journeymen, being responsible. Some of the proprietors of barber ships have expressed surprise that the change was made effective before May 1st, which they said was the date intended.

ANOTHER ARREST FOR C. N. R. THEFTS

January 29th was the first witness called to the stand. He stated that on going to the shunting engine to borrow some valve oil, he had been told the engineer of that engine had none but had "something better." He was then given two bottles of liquor by the defendant and was told not to disclose where he got it. The defendant was sitting in the cab of the engine and produced the liquor from under his seat. The fireman and another man were in the engine at the time.

The second witness called was one of the employees at the round house at Napudogan, who stated that he had not been arrested but had been dismissed and had come in to the city and expected to be arrested. To R. B. Hanson, K. C., for the prosecution he stated that word had been received by him that the car in question contained liquor, and he with three other employees had gone to the car on the night in question. The seal was unbroken, but through the opening at the bottom of the door it was seen that two cases had ben emptied. The smaller man of the four went into the car through the hole and passed out four cases of the liquor, which was found to be Green River Kentucky rye. The four hid their cases in the snow and later made another trip when about ten more cases were taken. At this time the defendant appeared and stating that he wanted one for the fireman of his engine, took two cases.

To P. J. Hughes, for the defence, the witnes stated that for some time it had been customary to send word among the employes when a car of liquor was expected in the yards. He had not stolen any liquor from cars since about three years before because it had been coming through in iron barrels. When asked who intigated the thefts the witness admitted he had and that he was practically the ringleader of the rest. On being asked what they finally did with the liquor, he stated that the shunting engine had carried a number of cases from the west end of the yard down to the round house whence they took their liquor home.

DUTCH DOCKERS ARE STILL ON STRIKE

The Hague, March 12.—The strike of the Dutch dockers and sailors shows no signs of breaking. Wednesday the congress of the Dutch General Labor Union decided to support the contest, all members being required to contribute five florins.

Nova Scotia Miners Taken Back By Report of Wilson Commission on Miners' Wage

The Nova Scotians Have Already Received Far Greater Percentage of Wage Advance Than that Accorded the Americans—Canadians to Still Demand More.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Sydney, N. S., March 12.—A lightning change of front on the part of the United Mine Workers of Nova Scotia will be necesary to meet the conditions brought about by the award of the Wilson Coal Comission, provided that award is accepted by the Americans.

Up to the present time every prospect of future wage increases has hinged upon the finding of the Wilson board, and now it has come and left the Nova Scotians with a higher percentage of wage increases than the Americans have got.

The coming anual convention was to be a sesion of "levelling up" rates, but if the American Government proposals carry there will be nothing to level up to.

The Canadians Favored.

Some time ago local officials of the U. M. W., in the midst of the MacKinnon award fight, announced that the Nova Scotians during the war had received a maximum increase of one hundred and six per cent., as compared with a maximu of eighty per cent. during the same time for the Americans. The fourteen per cent. granted by President Wilson during the recent coal strike was included in the eighty per cent. total. This means that when the present award is adjusted the war increase percentage will still considerably favor the Canadians.

The U. M. W. leaders, prior to the announcement of the award, made no secret of their intention to demand on May first next sufficient increases to keep them level with whatever the Americans might get from the Wilson commission. It is thought that they expected the award would be much greater than it is.

The Canadians to Ask for More.

J. B. McLachlan, district secretary of the U. M. W., was asked this morning whether the miners would abandon their intention to ask for more money in May. He said that they would not.

It should be noted that although the Nova Scotians have received greater percentage increases than the Americans, the latter still draw more actual cash for a day's pay, because when the period of comparison started in 1914 they were then receiving somewhat higher rates all round than the Nova Scotians. Their advantage is calculated roughly at from fifty to seventy-five cents per day.

Asked on what grounds the miners of Nova Scotia would proceed on May first, Mr. McLachlan said: "We will drop all percentage calculations and endeavor to eliminate, partly at least, the differences which now exist in favor of the Americans on the straight cash basis."

COST OF BUILDINGS OVER $8,000,000

Winnipeg, Man., March 12.—It will cost $8,075,418 to complete the parliament buildings in Winnipeg, according to figures given the legislature of Manitoba at its sittings yesterday by the Hon. H. A. Grierson, Minister of Public Works.

The return sets out that the Board of Appraisal awarded $1,207,351 against Thomas Kelly & Sons, the original contractors.

Most of the sitting yesterday afternoon and last night was occupied with debate on the budget and on committee of supply.

VACCINATE WHEAT AGAINST RUST NOW

Cambridge, England, March 12.—Canadian farmers may soon be able to have their seed wheat vaccinated against rust and other troublesome disease before they plant it. Tests by botanists of Cambridge University are said to have shown the power of breeding disease proof plants and immunizing wheat, oats, barley and potatoes. They have also produced a new wheat known as "Yeoman," which has yielded 96 bushels to the acre.

OTTAWA TO STAGE STANLEY CUP GAMES

Capital Confident that the Senators Can Defeat Vancouver's Veterans.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Montreal, March 12.—At a meeting of the National Hockey League here yesterday it was practically decided that the Stanley Cup games between Ottawa and the Pacific coast champions should be decided at Ottawa.

Ottawa Is Confident.

At Ottawa the belief is that the Vancouver team will represent the Pacific Coast Hockey League in the Stanley Cup games. It may be a case of the wish being father to the thought, as the following from the Ottawa Journal indicates a belief at the capital that the Senators will find the Vancouver team, which is made up largely of veterans, easy to overcome:

"First and foremost, old Fred Taylor will be back amongst us. Fred has been missing from several of the last games. The old Cyclone is said to be as speedy as ever. The seven-man game is certainly a great aid to some of the old worthies. Gordon Roberts, whose hook shot with the curve on it is one of the leading scorers of the league; Little Sibby Nichols, one time of the Montreal Shamrocks; Art Duncan, formerly of the 228th Battalion team, and Adams, Cook, Skinner and "Smokey" Harris comprise the rest of the team.

"In goal the Millionaires have no less a personage than old Hugh Lehman. The Pembroke boy has been a sensation for years and there is no mistaking the fact that he is up among the first flight of goal keepers.

"Lamping the outfit, one is inclined to the conclusion that Ottawa should win back the Stanley Cup. Taylor Roberts and Company won't cope with the six-man game the same way they do with the old time brand that still prevails out the coast way. Skinner and Adams couldn't catch on regularly in the N.H.L., but seem to star in the far west. The present Ottawa team is one that will make any team in the country step and is probably the premier hockey team in the world."

To Defend Allan Cup.

Toronto, March 11.—Either Toronto Granites or Hamilton Tigers will now defend the Allan Cup as a result of the victory of the former team over Kitchener by a score of 2 to 1 in the semi-final of the series last night.

It is the general opinion that from the form displayed by the winners, the Tigers will duplicate their championship of last year in the Home and Home games which will be played Friday in Hamilton and Monday in Toronto.

Sudbury won the Northern Hockey League championship, while Collingwood captured the Intermediate O. H. A. honors.

British Columbia Amateurs Win.

Victoria, B. C., March 11.—Selkirks of Manitoba overwhelmed an all-star Victoria hockey team here last night, 17 to 4.

FRENCHMAN WILL WRESTLE LONDOS

Duel Will Be a Prelude to the Caddock-Lewis Bout Next Monday.

New York, March 12.—Jim Londos, the Greek wrestling champion, will reappear here when he tackles Salvatore Chevalier, the French title holder, in a finish match Monday night, at Madison Square Gardens. This duel will be a prelude to the clash between Caddock and Strangler Lewis, the winner of which will meet Joe Stecher for the world's championship.

Lewis Throws Madvas.

Gloversville, N. Y., March 12.—Ed "Strangler" Lewis, heavyweight wrestler, threw Ivan Madvas, "the Russian giant," twice here last night, the first time in 48 minutes with a headlock and the second fall in 16 minutes with an arm scissors and farther armhold.

Caddock Defeats Draak.

WILDE FAVORITE TO WIN TONIGHT

The Britisher Will Pull Down $10,000 for Fighting Frankie Mason.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Toledo, O., March 12.—With both contestants down to the stipulated weight, 108 pounds, at 3 o'clock this afternoon Jimmy Wilde, flyweight champion of Great Britain, and Frankie Mason, of Fort Wayne, Ind., are ready for their 12-round bout here tonight.

Both boxers have been training faithfully here for the bout, and both are pronounced in first class condition. Last night Mason weighed 107 pounds and Wilde 105. Betting has been running along about even, but this morning it was announced that Wilde rules a slight favorite.

Wilde will draw down $10,000 for his end of the bout, while Mason accepted $5,000.

Mason is Wilde's senior by two years, the Fort Wayne boy being 30 years old. The height of each is the same, 5 feet 2½ inches. Wilde has it over his opponent in reach, measuring 68 inches, while that of Mason is 65¼ inches.

GIANTS CUT LOOSE AT TRAINING CAMP

Regulars Defeat Recruits by 6 to 1 Score in Game at San Antonio.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

San Antonio, Texas, March 12.—John McGraw gave his Giants yesterday the welcome order: "Let loose," which meant that for the first time the regulars were permitted to use everything they had.

In the afternoon game between the colts and the veterans he sent four out of his five second pitchers into the box. Jess Barnes and Arthur Nehf worked for the regulars and Fred Toney and Rube Benton pitched for the recruits. The regulars won, 6 to 1.

Yankees Get Busy, Too.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 12.—The Yankee regulars for the first time yesterday defeated the second string 9 to 8, after a ding dong contest, with plenty of hitting.

Two of the pitching recruits, Collins and Devitalis, had a turn, but both were freely stung. The second team had their big inning off Bob McGraw, who lost his control long enough to let three men past in the second. Once more the pleasure of a base hit was denied Ruth.

Hank O'Day at Dodgers' Camp.

In the camp of the Dodgers, Captain Wheat and Hy Myers turned up. Myers reported that Grimes, the only Dodger now missing, would be on hand in a few days.

Umpire Hank O'Day was a visitor. He presided at the seven inning game in the afternoon which the colts won from the regulars, 4 to 3. He had to call the pitchers on several occasions for rubbing the ball, getting into practice for the new rules.

FREDERICTON LOST TO BATHURST TEAM

Worst Exhibition of Roughhouse Hockey of the Season Staged.

The Fredericton Hockey Club returned by C. N. R. at noon today from their trip to the North Shore, where they lost both of the final games in the N.B.H.L. schedule, being defeated last night by Bathurst by a score of 4 to 2.

Those who watched last night's game said it was the worst exhibition of hockey staged this winter, the Bathurst team employing the same roughhouse tactics they used against the Marysville team in their efforts to register a victory instead of going through the season with an uninterrupted string of defeats.

Joe Currie, of the Chatham team, was the referee and his efforts to control the game did not produce very good results, as the Bathurst players cut loose in lively fashion and there were frequent clashes and penalties as a result. Supporters of the Fredericton team were thoroughly disgusted with the game and were none too well satisfied with the trip to the North Shore.

REPORT MADE ON RACE MEETINGS

Ottawa, March 11.—The report of Chairman Rutherford, of the Dominion Racing Commission, was given out by Sir George Foster today.

The commission finds that long continued race meetings, with betting as a public adjunct, are likely in the communities in which they are held to exert a bad influence on young and inexperienced men, and others lacking in self-control and moral stamina.

The tendency, he says, is especially evident in those cases in which the length of the meeting is excessively out of proportion to the size of the community in point of population.

The commissioner does not recommend cutting off the charters of any specified tracks, neither does he say whether or not there should be a reduction in tracks or in the days of racing.

Springfield, Mass., will give a four-day meeting in the Bay State Circuit. Its early closing events will be 2.16 trot, $1,000; 2.10 trot, $1,000; 2.12 pace, $800; 2.17 pace, $800; 2.09 pace, $700.

WORKERS LIBERTY BONDS FOR SALE

Winnipeg Strike Defence Endeavoring to Secure Funds from American Public.

New York, March 11.—New York is becoming the happy hunting ground for those who are in need of a little ready money for propaganda purposes. No sooner has De Valera departed, leaving a trail of "Irish Republic" bonds behind and carting off a lot of the hard-earned money of the Home Rule faction of the Irish colony, than there comes the announcement of another little touch, this time for propaganda purposes in Canada.

The announcement was made last night by the workers' defence union, and is to the effect that "Workers' Liberty Bonds" issued by the Winnipeg strike defence committee are on sale at the union's headquarters over on the East Side.

Evidently it is not believed that the New York socialists are as openhearted or as affluent as the supporters of the Irish Republic, for while De Valera's bonds ranged from $10 to $100, the ante is considerably lower in the case of the latest propaganda issue. The "Workers' Liberty Bonds" are in denominations of $1, $2 and $5.

A mass meeting is being arranged by local socialists to protest against the sentence of "Bob" Russell, the Winnipeg strike leader, and an attempt will be made to dispose of some of the Winnipeg labor bonds at this meeting.

HINDENBURG ASKS CONSENT OF KAISER

Berlin, March 11.—The Deutsch Zeitung reports that when the German Nationalists offered Von Hindenburg the candidature of the German Presidency, the Field Marshal asked for time to consult the former Emperor, to whom he had sworn allegiance, according to a despatch to the London Times.

"As Von Hindneburg has since accepted the candidature," adds the despatch, "it is clear that the ex-Kaiser's opinion still carries weight in the Reichs party's political opinions."

True Knights of Faith

"Faith, John," said the prince, "it sounds as though you were right. "Ha! my grace D'Armagnac, it seems that our friends on this side will not grieve if our English champions lose the day."

"It may be so, sire," the Gascon nobleman answered. "I have little doubt that in Smithfield or at Windsor an English crowd would favor their own countrymen."

"By my faith! that's easily seen," said the prince, laughing, "for a few score English archers at yonder end are bellowing as though they would out-shout the mighty multitude. I fear that they will have litle to shout over this journey, for my gold vase has small prospect of crossing the water. What are the conditions, John?"

"They are to tilt singly not less than three courses, sire, and the victory to rest with that party which shall have won the greater number of courses, each pair continuing till one or other have the vantage. He who carries himself best of the victors hath the prize, and he who is judged best of the other part hath a jewelled clasp. Shall I order that the nakirs sound, sire?"

The prince nodded, and the trumpets rang out, while the champions rode forth one after the other, each meeting his opponent in the centre of the lists. Sir William Beauchamp went down before the practiced lance of the Captal de Buch. Sir Thomas Percy won the vantage over the Lord of Mucident, and the Lord Audley struck Sir Perducas d'Albert from the saddle. The burly De Clisson, however, restores the hopes of the attackers by beating to the ground Sir Thomas Wake of Yorkshire. So far there was little to choose betwixt challengers and challenged.

"By Saint James of Santiago!" cried Don Pedro, with a tinge of color upon his pale cheeks, "win who will, this has been a most notable contest."

"Who comes next for England, John?" asked the prince in a voice which quivered with excitement.

"Sir Nigel Loring of Hampshire, sire."

"Ha! he is a man of good courage, and skilled in the use of all weapons."

"He is indeed, sire, But his eyes, like my own, are the worse for wars. Yet he can tilt or play his part at hand-strokes as merrily as ever. It was he, sire, who won the golden crown which Queen Philippa, your royal mother, gave to be jousted for by all the knights of England after the harrying of Calais. I have heard that at Twynham Castle there is a buffet which groans beneath the weight of his prizes."

"I pray that my vase may join them," said the prince. "But here is the cavalier of Germany, and by my soul! he looks like a man of great valor and hardiness. Let them run their full three courses, for the issue is over-great to hang upon one."

As the prince spoke, amid a loud flourish of trumpets and the shouting of the Gascon party, the last of the assailants rode gallantly into the lists. He was a man of great size, clad in black armor without blazonry or ornament of any kind, for all worldly display was forbidden by the rules of the military brotherhood to which he belonged. No plume or nobloy fluttered from his plain tilting salade, and even his lance was devoid of the customary banderole. A white mantle fluttered behind him, upon the left side of which was marked the broad black cross picked out with silver which was the well-known badge of the Teutonic Order. Mounted upon a horse as large, as black, and as forbidding as himself, he cantered slowly forward, with none of those prancings and gambades with which a cavalier was accustomed to show his command over his charger. Gravely and sternly he inclined his head to the prince, and took his place at the further end of the arena.

He had scarcé done so before Sir Nigel rode out from the holders' enclosure, and galloping at full speed down the lists drew his charger up before the prince's stand with a jerk which threw it back upon its haunches. With white armor, blazoned shield, and plume of ostrich-feathers from his helmet, he carried himself in so jaunty and joyous a fashion, with tossing pennon and curvetting charger, that a shout of applause ran the full circle of the arena. With the air of a man who hastens to a joyous festival, he waved his lance in salute, and reining the pawing-horse round without permitting its fore-feet to touch the ground, he hastened back to his station.

A great hush fell over the huge multitude as the two last champions faced each other. A double issue seemed to rest upon their contest, for their personal fame was at stake as well as their party's honor. Both were famous warriors, but as their exploits had been performed in widely sundered countries, they had never before been able to cross lances. A course between such men would have been enough in itself to cause the keenest interest, apart from its being the crisis which would decide who should be the victors of the day. For a moment they waited—the German sombre and collected, Sir Nigel quivering in every fibre with eagerness and fiery resolution. Then, amid a long-drawn breath from the spectators, the glove fell from the marshal's hand, and the two steel-clad horsemen met like a thunder-clap in front of the roal stand. The German, though he reeled for an instant before the thrust of the Englishman, struck his opponent so fairly upon the vizor that the laces burst, the plumed helmet fell to pieces, and Sir Nigel galloped on down the lists with his bald head shimmering in the sunshine. A thousand waving scarves and tossing caps announced that the first bout had fallen to the popular party.

The Hampshire knight was not a man to be disheartened by a reverse. He spurred back to the pavilion, and was out in a few instants with another helmet. The second course was so equal that the keenest judges could not discern any vantage. Each struck fire from the other's shield, and each endured the jarring shock as though welded to the horse beneath him. In the final bout, however, Sir Nigel struck his opponent with so true an aim that the point of the lance caught between the bars of his vizor and tore the front of his helmet out, while the German, aiming somewhat low, and half stunned by the shock, had the misfortune to strike his adversary upon the thigh, a breach of the rules of the tilting-yard, by which he not only sacrificed his chances of success, but would also have forfeited his horse and his armor, had the English knight chosen to claim them. A roar of applause from the English soldiers, with an ominous silence from the vast crowd who pressed round the barriers, announced that the balance of victory lay with the holders. Already the ten champions had assembled in front of the prince to receive his award, when a harsh ugle call from the further end of the lists drew all eyes to a new and unexpected arrival.

ANOTHER ARREST MADE IN THE C. N. R. FREIGHT THEFTS

Ten Prisoners Likely to Be Sentenced in Police Court Today.

JAMES DORCAS SENT UP TO THE COUNTY COURT

Witness Who Admitted Being Ring Leader Arrested Soon Afterwards.

James Dorcas, the only one of the ten employees of the Canadian National Railways to plead not guilty to the charges of freight thefts, was this morning sent up for trial at the York county court, which meets here next Tuesday.

The arrest of this man brought the number of prisoners to appear before Police Magistrate Limerick this afternoon up to ten, and it was said that he would plead guilty, which would mean that all of them will probably be sentenced this afternoon, after which it is said the railway detectives are likely to at once commence another roundup.

God Save the King and O Canada.

The Speeches.

Chairman Ryan gave an address, discussing the labor problem from several angles and embracing the co-operative movement.

Mr. Livingstone spoke, in part, as follows, on Independent Political Action:

Today in Canada the Independent Labor Party is organizing everywhere, leaving old line poltcial parties. Today legislatures are elected by the masses, but represent the capitalist class, who legislate in capitalist interests. Is Labor fit to govern? Many say no—they are fit only to vote. But in Britain the Labor party is working for nationalization of mines, railways, factories, etc., through independent political action. Labor has become fit to govern in Britain through long practice in organization. In this country we need Labor representatives in our legislatures. The latter will produce many measures, mostly in favor of the privileged class, while any labor legislation has to be squeezed through. Petitioning governments yields no satisfactory results—fill the Legislatures with Labor men. Organzied Labor is used in Canada and United States much the same as it was used in Russia. The capitalists naturally use any means to secure themselves in possession of their monopoly; but to the workers belongs the product of their toil. The mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne in the Legislature a few hours before had said no government could regulate the cost of living, but he said nothing about profiteering. The producer in this country pays for everything. The worker with hand or brain receives as wages only part of what he produces—capitalists and hangers-on take the rest. All Europe is taking action to overcome this injustice. Russia took one road to freedom. Her way is not necessary nor desirable in Canada. Canadians, who are organized industrially, can get all changes they need constitutionally through the ballot box. The law of supply and demand, so much talked of, is interfered with by a band of pirates who are organized to obstruct it in their own interests. The governments do nothing to stop this, he said. No family can get along decently on less than $5 a day, but the average do not get that much. "The only remedy is Labor government," said the speaker.

J. E. Tighe reviewed the rapid progress of the Federation, urged general unionization, and advised careful study and trial of Compensation and Factory Acts. Labor should capture legislative representation.

J. A. Sinclair spoke very plainly to

"61" Floor Varnish
IS NEITHER BRITTLE NOR STICKY—IT IS TOUGH.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH

NOTHING—your hammer leaves no impression — why? Because rubber is elastic. And it is the elasticity of "61" Floor Varnish that makes its life so long. This elasticity, which resists the hammer test, also resists the countless heel-blows every floor receives.
WRECKAGE — the glass is shivered into a thousand pieces — why? Because glass is brittle. And this same thing in a lesser degree, is exactly what happens to countless floors finished with ordinary varnishes which crack, craze, check, chip off and mar white.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is tough—so tough that the wood may dent but the Varnish WILL NOT CRACK.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is thoroughly waterproof, and is the most durable and lasting Floor Varnish that is on the market.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH can also be used for all kinds of woodwork, either for inside or outside and will stand all kinds of weather.

HUN GOVERNMENT THROWN OUT BY REVOLTING TROOPS

German Assembly is Dissolved, A New Government in Formation, A General Strike is Declared

Power of the State Passes Into Hands of General Director Von Kapp, Who Has Appointed General Von Luettwitz Commander-in-Chief of the Military Forces.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 13.—A proclamation was issued in Berlin this morning at ten o'clock stating the German government had ceased to exist, according to a Reuter's despatch from the German capital received here.

Revolting troops entered Berlin this morning and occupied Wilhelmstrasse, the despatch declares. No acts of violence are reported.

The troops concentrated at Doeberitz, which advanced on Berlin, included the Erhard and Loewenfeld Naval Brigades. As early as five o'clock this morning they had reached the Tiergarten Railway Station, the advices say.

Power of State Has Passed Into Hands of General Director Von Kapp, Who Becomes Chancellor

Paris, March 13.—A proclamation issued in Berlin today declares that the government of the Empire has ceased to exist and that the power of the state has passed into the hands of General Director Von Kapp, who becomes Chancellor, and has appointed General Von Luettwitz Commander-in-Chief of the military forces, Berlin despatches state.

The proclamation declares the national assembly dissolved.

It is announced that a new government is being formed.

The socialist parties have declared a general strike, the despatches add.

The Deposed President of German Republic, Freidrich Ebert, Was an Imperialistic Socialist

Friedrich Ebert, formerly head of the main committee of the Reichstag and leader of the social democratic party, was elected first President of the new German "Progressive Republic" for a term of seven years on Feb. 11, 1919, by the National Assembly at Weimar. He has been characterized as a type of pan-German, or imperialistic socialist.

It was the Ebert government which arose from the ruins of the Hohenzollern dynasty and which enabled the Entente Allies to conclude peace with Germany.

On Nov. 10, 1918, when former Emperor William abdicated and fled, Ebert was the Imperial Chancellor, having succeeded Prince Maximilian of Baden, who was instrumental in negotiating the amistice. He at once assumed command and succeeded in quelling revolutionary outbreaks.

Ebert's Complicated Problem.

The independent socialists, including a radical element, favorable to Bolshevism and known as Spartacides, complicated Ebert's problem. When he became Chancellor, many of these radicals, including Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, were freed from prison, and the two mentioned were subsequently assassinated.

The national assembly which elected Ebert was formed for the purpose of adopting a constitution. Its document, which was approved last August, provided that "the executive power lies with the people." The power of the upper chamber of the Reichstag was limited, similar to the British House of Lords.

There were special protection for labor and "generally accepted rules of international law" were incorporated in the new government. Ebert took the oath of office on August 23, and two days later the national assembly ceased to exist, it being superseded by the new Reichstag.

The First Premier Under Ebert.

Phillip Scheidemann was the first Premier of Germany under Ebert. Gustav Noske, formerly Minister of Demobilization and before that Governor of Kiel, was named the first Minister of Army and Navy. By reason of his drastic enforcement of new regulations he became known as a "dictator."

The Ebert government underwent many changes by reason of political, economic and popular demands.

The first real crisis to threaten the Ebert regime, however, arose over the question of accepting the peace treaty terms. Ebert, Scheidemann and other leaders were opposed to yielding to the Entente demands. Scheidemann resigned and a pro-treaty cabinet including Dr. August Mueller and ex-Labor Secretary Bauer, former socialist member of the Reichstag, was organized. Bauer, in a speech at Weimar before the national assembly, announced the government's decision to sign.

Ebert Had Backing of Moderates.

President Ebert had the backing of the moderates of Germany almost from the beginning. One reason for this was that when he succeeded Prince Maximilian he announced that property rights would be respected, that no banks would be seized and that the government would uphold the German war losses and pay all claims on the state.

The President in a New Year manifesto said that 1920 would decide whether Germany would maintain herself as a nation. A week later he was threatened by a mob in Stuttgart. On the preceding Dec. 12 the Ebert cabinet's fall was reported as likely as a recult of the Allied demands over the Scapa Flow sinkings.

GERMANS FEAR FOR STATUE

Berlin, March 13.—Berlin is much exercised over a rumor that speculators, believed to be Americans, are trying to buy the great wooden statue of Von Hindenburg, into which nails were driven by the people during the war at so much per nail. The government will be asked to prevent the sale.

The Berlin Coup Was Effected by Troops That Recently Returned from Baltic and Held i nBarracks Outside

(Sepecial Havas Agency Cable by Leased Wire.)

PARIS, March 13.—A military pronouncement has been issued at Berlin proclaiming a new Chancellor, according to advices received here.

The issuance of the proclamation followed the occupation of the Wilhelmstrasse, where the government buildings are situated, by troops who had returned from the Baltic and had been in barracks at Doeberitz, in the suburbs. The troops entered Berlin this morning, it is stated.

Ebert Government Aware of Plot to Overthrow Republic But Failed to Rise to Occasion

The Leaders in the Revolt Are Prominent Pan-Germans and It is Suspected that They Cover a Monarchist Plot for the Return of the Hohenzollerns.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 13.—Cables received early this morning, before the announcement of the fall of the German government, indicate that the plot to overthrow the government was foreseen and attempts were made to meet the move, apparently without success.

An Associated Press cable from Berlin early this morning reported that General Von Luettwitz, commander of the first Reichswehr Brigade, was summarily removed from his post by Gustav Noske, Minister of Defence, yesterday, and that units of military organizations in Berlin were being held in their barracks ready for instant action in order to put down the reactionary plot, which had then been discovered.

This morning's reports state that General Von Luettwitz had been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the military forces by General Director Von Knapp, who has assumed the office of Chancellor.

Official bulletins issued from Berlin last night declared the plotters had planned to move on Berlin, and with the aid of the Doeberitz garrison, overthrow the government.

Von Kapp a Pan-German.

Dr. Von Kapp, who is evidently the central figure in the new government, was mentioned in this despatch as being among those involved in this despatch as being declared to be one of the ringleaders. Both of these men were formerly prominent in the fighting in Berlin during the early revolutionary period. Von Kapp has been a prominent Pan-German propagandist. Troops recently returned from the Baltic states are also said to have been implicated in the conspiracy.

The earlier cables indicate that the conspiracy was not taken seriously by the people of Berlin, probably because the government made no effort to minimize the danger which it faced. Inquiry in official quarters by correspondents last night failed to elicit any information beyond a statement that the government was warranted, in the light of the attitude of the Pan-German press, to suspect a monarchist plot. The early cables stated the impression prevailed last night that the government exaggerated the critical nature of the situation.

A Monarchist Struggle.

The names associated with the new revolutionary movement in Germany indicate its reactionary character. It would appear, therefore, that Germany is in the throes of the long-expected and frequently predicted counter-revolutionary, monarchist struggle.

The Dr. Von Kapp, reported as having assumed the Chancellorship was one of the deputies who early in 1918, urged the government to speed up the U-boat building programme. He became President of the German-Fatherland party, the notorious Pan-German organization which urged that Germany carry on the war to the bitter end. After the abdication of Emperor William and the signing of the armistice, Dr. Kapp was one of the men whose arrest the independent socialists clamored, on the ground that he and his associates had been responsible for the continuation of the war and the hindering of peace.

Has an American Wife.

Major General Baron Von Luettwitz, who according to the despatches has been named commander-in-chief, was Military Governor of Belgium for a period in the early days of the war. He later was a commander on the Verdun front. When the German treaty came up for action by the government last June, General Von Luettwitz was one of the leaders of the military party prominent in opposition to the peace terms. He has an American wife, who was a Miss Cary, of Cleveland. He always has been classed as thoroughly Prussian.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

LONDON Ont., March 13.—William Eison, a farmer residing near Wingham, felled a huge soft elm tree, in the top of which was the winter home of a family of raccoons with three lusty youngsters. The lumber in the tree sold for $98.14. Then the farmers sold the skins of the coons for $70, making the total amount he realized from the tree and its occupants $168.14.

The neighbors think this is a record in high finance in furs and lumber.

Cudney is 73 years of age and a native of Canada.

The press was so great that 35 policemen were assigned to keep order. On a rumor that Cudney was about to appear there was a rush that bore five of the guards into the river. All were rescued.

Reports Thursday that the "healer" had restored sight to the blind started a rush to the levee. Many invalids were carried on cots. Cudney worked all night, retiring at dawn when in danger of physical collapse. The rich came with the poor, but offers of money were refused.

The authorities are taking no action against "Brother Isaiah," because he is neither prescribing medicines nor accepting fees.

HOUSING PLANS IN QUEBEC PROVINCE

The Provincial Director of Housing Gives His Reasons for Resignation.

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Quebec, March 13.—In defence of his rejected housing programme, Dr. Emile Nadeau, who recently resigned as Provincial Director of Housing, states in an interview that his detailed programme and estimates must have been approved, because they were adopted in toto and embodied in an order in council. He adds that it was not until objections were raised by Montreal interests that a change in the attitude of the ministry supervened, which resulted in the virtual abandonment of everything that had been done.

In regard to obtaining money from housing societies, Dr. Nadeau said he had been instrumental in getting leading citizens of Sherbrooke to raise $75,000 in twenty minutes and had been assured of $150,000 by some of the most responsible business men of Montreal, provided he could satisfy them the money would be spent wholly for the public benefit and not for that of speculators.

Steamship Companies Fear That Coastwise Shipping Will Be Tied Up.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 13.—The strike of local longshoremen, checkers and dock workers, to enforce demands for an increase in wages and adjustment of working hours, which was unanimously voted last night, became effective this morning.

The unions involved claim a membership of between 7,000 and 8,000, but no figures were obtainable early today as to the exact number of men who obeyed the strike call.

Steamship owners said, however, that if the full membership walked out coastwise shipping would be nearly tied up.

The longshoremen are now paid 65 cents an hour for a basic eight hour day with $1 an hour for overtime. The checkers want an increase from $25 a week to $38.50 and a reduction of four hours a week. The dock workers want a 25 per cent. increase in wages over their present scale of $25 a week.

Steamship owners declared they were unable to meet the demands because they were bound by the award of the national adjustment commission, which was to remain in effect until September 30, 1920.

Opposition Leader's Amendment to Address in Legislature to Double Stumpage Rates Causes Sensation

Hon. James A. Murray Explodes a Political Bombshell Which Surprised Government and Caused Premier Foster to Immediately Move Adjournment of Debate Over Week-end -- Quotes Lumbermen's Profits and Stumpage Paid Private Owners of Timber Lands--Deficits of $802,056 in 2 Years and 7 Months of Foster Government Rule.

The first political bombshell of the present session of the New Brunswick Legislature which opened on Thursday was exploded yesterday afternoon when Hon. James A. Murray, leader of the Opposition, moved an amendment to the Address in reply to the Speech from tthe Throne, calling for an increase in the rate of stumpage upon lumber cut on the Crown Lands from $3 for fir and $3.50 for spruce to $7 per thousand feet.

The amendment came as a complete surprise to the Government and it plainly upset their programme, as Premier Foster, who was scheduled to follow the leader of the Opposition, hurriedly moved the adjournment of the debate over the week-end until Tuesday. The Opposition leader's striking proposal came at the close of a clean-cut, short speech and it created a great political sensation.

What Will the Government Do?

What attitude the Government will assume in the matter is already the subject for much speculation. Only the day before Fred Magee, of Westmorland, the chief whip of the Liberal party, in moving the Address had spoken strongly in favor of increasing the stumpage rates to bring in a revenue that would come nearer to meeting the requirements of the administration, which admits a deficit of $327,686 on the past year's operations, and following the adjournment a number of supporters of the Government let it be known that they favored the proposed increase in the stumpage rate.

A Government caucus has been called for Tuesday night and it is considered unlikely that the stand to be taken by the Government in the situation which has thus unexpectedly developed will be known until after the supporters have then gathered. One story has it that already the word has gone out that the administration regards the amendment as a vote of want of confidence and upon that ground will endeavor to have it voted down; on the other hand it is contended that Chief Whip Magee and other prominent supporters of the Government are already on record as favoring an increase in stumpage and cannot consistently vote against a proposal to put their own publicly expressed views into actual effect. At least one result has been to at once arouse interest in affairs at the Legislature and to make it evident that a lively session is to be expected.

Lumbermen's Profits Told Of.

Hon. Mr. Murray led up to his proposal by quoting the statement of a gentleman some time ago on the floors of the Assembly Chamber during a hearing before a committee on a bill that "a lumbermen's association had been formed which could make and unmake governments." That statement, he said, had done more to arouse the members of the House and the people of the country in connection with the lumber industry than any other statement that was ever made. "No one industry, class, faction or section can make or unmake governments," declared the Opposition leader, "as that is a right which belongs to the people as a whole."

Then he went on to say that upon the authority of practical lumbermen he was prepared to make the statement that with present prices the average profit of lumbermen on every thousand feet manufactured was from $15 to $20 and that the profits from slabs and edgings alone made into lath was sufficient to cover the entire cost of manufacturing the long lumber. Those facts, he said, should make it evident that the province was not getting a proper return from the Crown Lands when the stumpage was only from $3 to $3.50 while from $8 to at least as high as $12 per thousand feet was being received by the owners of private lands. "In view of the tremendous advance in prices of lumber the time has arrived when the people demand that the Government increase the stumpage rate in proportion to the advance in the value of the lumber," declared Hon. Mr. Murray amidst applause from the Opposition benches.

HON. J. A. MURRAY.

Opposition Leader's Contribution to the Debate on the Address in Which He Moved Amendment.

The routine business at the opening of the afternoon session was brief, consisting merely of the tabling of the committee to nominate all standing committees by Premier Foster and the introduction of a bill by Provincial Secretary Treasurer Murray to confirm the rate of interest on provincial debentures authorized by an act of a couple of years ago.

Hon. Mr. Murray, when the order of the day was called, resumed the debate on the Address and, after the usual congratulations he recalled that during recess death had claimed a gentleman who had long been prominent in the mercantile life of the province and had served it with distinction in Great Britain. He had reference to the late F. W. Sumner, of Moncton. Mr. Sumner was a man possessed of rare attainments and as agent general of the province rendered a service in England the great importance of which few peope realize. He (Murray) had had the opportunity of securing personal knowledge of his work and he was sure that many of the boys who had served in France had felt in his loss the death of a personal friend. He felt sure that all hon. members deeply regretted the death of so excellent and useful a citizen.

The Carleton County Vacancy.

While the Speech from the Throne refered to many matters there were some omissions, one of which was the failure of the Government to fill the vacancy in Carleton county which had been open since early in the session of 1917. The Premier when replying to inquiries in the House on that subject surely did not expect to be taken seriously. In 1917 he had informed the hon. member for Carleton that owing to the busy agricultural season it would be wrong to bring on an election for one vacant seat. In justification of his position he had pointed out that the old administration had left several seats vacant for a lengthy period. The old Government had been wrongly condemned for taking that course and the men who condemned them were now even greater sinners. In 1918 Mr. Sutton, of Carleton, had been told that the matter of filling the vacancy was under consideration. The same question was put in 1919, and the reply was to the effect that owing to the Victory Loan campaign the Government would not be justified in issuing a writ. At St. John a short time ago the Premier had made the statement that he would assist in turning out Union Government in order that the people might have their proper representation. That was certainly a fine idea, emanating from one who from political expediency had failed to give the county of Carleton its proper representation. In connection with that vacancy the Governmen, which claim to be carrying on the public business in a careful manner, had displayed a narow and partizan spirit.

A similar spirit had been shown in connection with the appointment of commissioners for the Jordan Memorial Sanitarium. It was the intention that the act relating to that institution should be administered in a non-political manner. The old Government had selected the commissioners from both sides of politics. The vacancies had recently occurred. The Government in filling the vacancies had not followed in the footsteps of the old administration, but had selected two of their own supporters, one of whom was a member of the executive. He (Murray) was the only representative on his side of the House serving on the commission and the Government probably was waiting for him to tender his resignation.

Agricultural Progress Started in 1908.

The mover and seconder of the address had been very generous in their praise of the Minister of Agriculture. listening to their remarks one would almost have thought that the farmers had done nothing at all and it was the Minister who had made the desert blossom as the rose. He (Murray) was glad to see that the Hon. Minister was administering the department along the lines which he had adopted when at its head. The department began its growth when the Hazen Government took office in 1908. It was then a department in name only, but had since gone steadily forward. Every branch inaugurated by the late government had been kept going by the present administration. He (Murray) approved of the plan to use limerock as fertilizer, and when at the head of the department had tests made with a view of bringing it into use. The old government had adopted a policy with reference to drainage, live stock, poultry division and Women's Institutes, and the work was now being carried on. He would like to know why the department could not do good work in view of the fact that all the machinery had been supplied by the old administration. He wished to congratulate the Minister on the diligence he was showing, and he felt sure that the people approved of his action in following the lines which his predecessor had introduced.

Referring to the Valley Railway, he was very glad to know that the road had been completed. There was a time last summer when the people thought that that might never happen. That was the occasion when there was a difference of opinion as to who had the authority to complete the arrangement for running rights over the C. P. R. On several occasions passengers had gone to the railway station only to learn that no trains were running. He was glad to know that the hoad had been turned over to the C. N. R. and he believed it would eventually become a paying proposition. In this connection he would remind the leader of the Government that a plant in the platform of his party adopted in 1917 called for the completion of the road from Grand Falls to St. John. That was the platform which, according to a Montreal paper edited by Mr. Fielding, was to get in on and not to stand on. His hon friends had embodied several planks of that nature in their platform.

The speaker next took up an article on provincial finances published in the St. John Telegraph in reply to a statement made by the Standard newspaper. The Telegraph had stated that the old government was responsible for the sum of $1,087,270.21 which the present administration had bonded at the close of the fiscal year 1917. Now, in reference to that matter he wished to point out that the government had employed a firm of chartered accountants who had gone carefully over the books and had then given out a statement showing the financial position of the province. That statement had shown that the old administration had been responsible for $747,586, which amount had been bonded on October 31st, 1917. That left a balance of $339,713.36, which belonged to the present administration. If it did not belong to the present administration then the report of Price, Waterhouse & Co. was absolutely worthless. Now, in adding up the deficits occurring each year he found that the present government had gone behind to the extent of $802,056.56 in the two years and seven months they have been handling the affairs of the province. The government has had a career of the wildest extravagance and although they now occupied the seats of the mighty, he could assure them that the people were taking notice and that the day of retribution would come.

No Permanent Roads Yet.

He would only make brief reference to the department conducted by the Minister of Public Works. In this connection he would repeat the statement made on a previous occasion, that there were thousands and tens of thousands of dollars being spent on roads which, although classed as permanent, were nothing but ordinary roads. The Minister had borrowed for this purpose $500,000 in 1917, $700,000 in 1918, and $115,000 in 1919, and today the province was paying interest on that money and had nothing but ordinary roads to show for it. "More durable roads" was the farthest His Honor was permitted to go in referring to the roads in his speech. On one occasion they were called "permanent roads" and in all probability next season they will be referred to as ordinary country roads. They had been told that the roads being constructed by the government would outlive the life of the bond issue, but that would not be the case with some of the so-called permanent roads in his own County of Kings. It was his opinion that the government expenditures on roads was the most wildly extravagant in the history of the province.

He was glad to know that it was the intention of the government to bring down legislation for the development of water powers. Such a bill had been introduced during the last session, but had not gone far. He was hopeful that another would be forthcoming which would be the means of giving the manufacturers the cheaper power which they so greatly needed.

The Speech from the Throne promised a report from the committee which had been investigating the question of increased salaries for school teachers. He felt that the teachers were deserving of generous treatment, but in all probability any increase which was made from the Provincial Treasury would have to be supplemented from municipal sources.

With reference to the subject of Vocational Education, he had listened with great pleasure to the remarks of the mover of the Address. That hon. member was in earnest in the matter and possessed the brains to grapple with a subject of so much importance to the people. He freely attributed to him a large share of the credit for the progress which has been made. In this connection he might point out that the matter had engaged the attention of the late government and that a good start had then been made.

The Stumpage Question.

Before closing he wished to make reference to one subject which was far above all others in importance, the Crown Lands of the province. The Speech from the Throne had referred to a normal production during the year and a larger revenue. The mover of the Address had expressed the opinion that the price of lumber having advanced the revenue from the public domain should also increase. The member from Moncton, in an interview published in the Telegraph in 1917, had endorsed a remark made by Prof. Miller, "that by cutting down our forests without regard to growth was like beating the tomtom at our own funeral." It would be generally conceded that the Crown Lands are the greatest asset of the province. In 1908, when the Hazen Government took office, there had been a period of absolute stagnation in the department. The revenue had not been collected and the territorial revenue did not average more than $250,000 per year. By adopting business methods instead of the loose methods followed by the old government, the revenue from Crown Lands was greatly increased, and it was done without increasing the cut or without an advance in the price of lumber. The present Minister had given his department a fair measure of attention, but the time had arrived when the public domain must be dealt with in a business-like manner. The best authorities agreed that the annual cut in New Brunswick was in excess of the annual growth, especially when an account was taken of the ravages by fire, the spruce bud worm, etc. The deficit of the province last year was $327,618.22, and he wanted to point out that there was only one source from which the revenue could be supplemented, and that was the public domain. A short time ago a gentleman had stood on the floors of the Assembly Chamber and had made the statement that "a Lumbermen's Association had been formed which could make and unmake governments." That statement had done more to arouse the members of the House and the people of the country in connection with the lumbering industry than any other statement that was ever made. No one industry, class, faction or section could make or unmake governments, as that was a right which belonged only to the people as a whole. It was in 1916 that lumber began to advance in price and it was now higher than ever before in the history of the world. He would make the statement on the authority of a practical lumberman that the profit of the average lumberman on every thousand feet of lumber average from $15 to $20. If that was the fact, he would ask if the people

The Amendment

The following is the amendment to the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, as moved in the Legislature yesterday by Hon. J. A. Murray, leader of the Opposition, and seconded by Mr. Smith, of Carleton:

Resolved, that after the word "consideration" in the proposed Address in reply to the Speech of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor the following words be added:—

"But we regret that Your Honor's Speech does not contain any intimation of the intention of the Government to overcome the serious deficit in the ordinary current account of the province, amounting for the fiscal year ended 31st October last to $327,686.22, by taking steps to increase the territorial revenue proportionate to the value of the lumber cut on the public domain by an increase in the rate of stumpage which, in the opinion of this House, should be advanced from the present rates of $3.00 and $3.50 per thousand feet, to $7.00 per thousand feet.

NINE RAILWAYMEN ARE SENT TO JAIL

Nine Given Sentences of Six Months Each for Thefts at Napudogan.

Nine of the employees of the C.N.R. charged with thefts at Napudogan were sentenced by Magistrate Limerick yesterday afternoon to six months' imprisonment in the York County Jail.

The tenth prisoner, who pleaded not guilty after being given his preliminary hearing, had been sent up for trial. The eleventh prisoner, a brakeman, whose wife is seriously ill, is to be allowed out on bail and given a chance to visit his home for a week. When he comes back he will be sentenced to the same term of imprisonment as the other nine.

The court opened at 2.30 o'clock, when the prisoner who was arrested at noon was given a chance to be tried by Magistrate Limerick or by a jury. He elected to be tried forthwith and pleaded guilty to the charge of theft from the C. N. R.

C. D. Richards, on behalf of the nine prisoners, stated he had been asked to represent them subsequently to their having pleaded guilty. He asked the Magistrate to consider deeply both sides of the question and offered a special plea for those prisoners who were married men and had families dependent upon them. The other men, while not married, had parents, in some cases aged ones, depending on them for support. They were not to be looked upon as criminals in the ordinary sense of the word, as they had no criminal record to face and had been found honest in their everyday work in the majority of cases. They had probably known that thefts were being made and each one thought he had as much right to the goods as his neighbor. From the evidence heard in the Dorcas case the Court would be more in touch with the situation than he was and more competent to form his opinion as to the characters of the men. He stated that while he wished the Court to be lenient with the prisoners, he could not ask him to give suspended sentence, but he did not think that the crime deserved the full penalty of the offence, which was 14 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Magistrate Limerick, in delivering sentence, stated the question before him was to be viewed from the C.N.R. standpoint as well as that of the public. The C.N.R., in allowing goods to pass over their lines, placed a good deal of confidence in their employees to see that the freight arrived safely at its destination. The prisoners had misused that confidence and the penalty they would receive would be more to ensure the public of safer transportation of their goods and less interference, than it would be punishment for the prisoners. He stated it was a matter of great personal regret to him that when the C.N.R. had rounded up the lawbreakers they should charge them with the theft of liquor and seemingly forget the fact that other goods were stolen. The full penalty of the offence, he considered, was too harsh, as the prisoners had already lost their positions. Many of them, he said, might hold the idea that although they had lost their jobs it would be a matter of a short time before they were reinstated. This, he said, had been denied by railway officials, and it was stated the prisoners would never get their positions back. As the full sentence was too harsh, so also the suspended sentence would be too light. When he sentenced them he wished to do it in such a way it would warn other railroad employees not to repeat the offence. One C.N.R. brakeman, charged with stealing liquor in transit, had ben given a three months' suspended sentence, but this did not seem a sufficient waraing to other employees, as the present prisoners were before him on the same charge. The sentences would be for a six months' term in the York County Jail, with a warning that if they ever repeated the offence they would never be let off with such a light sentence again.

The case of the eleventh prisoner was then considered. The prisoner, a brakeman, had stated that his wife was seriously ill. This report was verified by Chief Detective Page, and the Court stated he would be allowed out for one week, providing he could secure a bondsman to go bail for him, in which to visit his wife at his home in Moncton. After the week was up he would have to return and take the same sentence as the other men.

Chief Page's Statement.

Chief Page, in dislussing the cases, said:

"I am perfectly satisfied with the sentences meted out to the different men who have been found guilty in connection with the Napudogan cases and feel that while some people may have expected more severe sentences, Magistrate Limerick had a good deal to consider, and therefore it is my opinion that the sentences given the men will have a good general effect in the prevention of crimes of this nature in the district.

"Mr. Richards, who spoke on behalf of the prisoners, was very fair and honorable in the manner in which he laid the case before the Court. He spoke, to my mind, not as a lawyer but as a man with purely humane feeling. It must not be understood, however, that the liquor cases were the only cases against some of the parties in question, as we have evidence on which we could have convicted several for other offences, but felt that the convictions and sentences in the liquor cases would be sufficient warning for both the prisoners and the public, to show that this kind of work can go on no longer with impunity. What is more, I am afraid it would have been defeating the ends of justice in still another important investigation which will follow.

"I might say, regardless of what has been said concerning thefts on the C.N.R., that it is an absolute fact that the records of the C.N.R. claims will show up very well in comparison with any of the railways in America. In the last six months it is quite evident that there has been a decided improvement in this relation, the credit for which can only be honestly given to the operating officers and the police departments of New runswick and Nova Scotia.

"The company are determined to put a stop to the drinking and stealing on the part of the employees and thefts by other parties from the railway, and intend making such arrangement as will force the pursuance of this policy."

Government Owned Power Development.

The following resolution was presented on behalf of the Miramichi delegation by J. E. Tighe and adopted:

"Whereas the Provincial Government has under consideration the development of water powers in the province of N. B., and whereas the development of such power on the Miramichi and other waters would create extra industries and lessen the rate of heating and lighting to consumers, therefore be it resolved that the N. B. Federation of Labor go on record requesting the Provincial Government to put into operation in the Miramichi and other districts at the earliest opportunity the deveopment of such water power under Government ownership."

C. Gus. Langbien, of St. John, was elected to serve on the proposed Dominion commission to co-ordinate and unify labor laws.

According to an old hunter, the raccoon is so particular that he will not touch a piece of meat until he washes is in some kind of water, and as a rule he'll do a deal of hunting until he finds clean water. If there's a spring on the place he will run there with it and roll the chunk of meat over and over in the water with his forefeet until he is sure it's immaculate.

THE AMENDMENT TO THE ADDRESS.

The Hon. J. A. Murray's amendment to the Address is a proper move. With deficits multiplying, the need of revenue has become pressing. We had a huge deficit last year; there was also a huge deficit in the previous twelve months' operations. We will have another huge shortage this year, if the House does not see to it that the Government adopt an enlightened policy and exercise prudence and caution in the administration of the public business. Stumpage should pay much more than double the amount it now contributes to the revenue, and this without oppressing the lumber industry in the slightest. Stumpage on private lands ranges today from $7.50 to $12 a thousand; the Crown Land stumpage charge is $3.00 a thousand for fir and $3.50 for spruce. Such a ridiculously low price as that fixed by the Government cannot be reasonably justified. But the Foster Government feels that it cannot continue without the influence and support of the lumbermen; it has had that feeling since it came into power, and there is much evidence that there is a great deal of selfishness within the Foster Government—much of the feeling that the personal interests are the first, if not the only, consideration. With the increasing market value of lumber the stumpage rate for the last three years should have been at least $7.50 a thousand; that figure would have given the province an increase in revenue in that time of at least a million and a half dollars. The cost of keeping the Government in power has therefore been very great. The deficit in the three years has been upwards of $800,000. While the lumbermen have been reaping very rich returns from this kind of Government, the public services have been very inadequately administered. To carry on our road work we are floating millions in bonds, the interest upon which is becoming a burdensome tax; and the security for the principle lies in fact in the personal property and the real estate of the people. To carry on, we have also had resort to direct taxation to an extent hitherto undreamed. Today the state of the treasury is such that, to meet any new and reasonable requirement, the Government must make a direct levy upon the people; and recently we have, unfortunately, heard of proposals to tap trust funds. The Hon. Mr. Murray's amendment, if adopted, would provide the needed revenue from the proper source. The million and a half we have already lost as a result of the Foster Government's political necessities will continue to be a burden; the unnecessary taxation imposed upon the people within the last three years to relieve the lumbermen may have to be debited to indifferent and inefficient Government; but we can provide reasonably for the present and the future.

The amendment is evidently discomforting to the Government, and perhaps also to the mover of the Address, who rarely, if ever, acts in conformity with the theories and notions which he parades quite frequently. But the public welfare must be the first consideration. The duty of the members of the Legislature is clear, if the members are to have respect for the interests and the rights of the people.

PEACE FOR TRANSYLVANIA.

There is reason to hope that when the American commissioners representing the Unitarian churches arrive in Transylvania they will find that the Rumanian rule of military law has been mitigated and some approach made toward the revival of civil and religious liberty. Dr. Copeland Bowie writes to the Westminster Gazette that the new Prime Minister of Rumania, with whom he has had a lengthy interview, has given his positive assurance that the friends of religious liberty need no longer entertain any misgivings regarding the genuine intention of the present Rumanian government to observe in letter and in spirit the right of every citizen freely to follow his own reason and conscience in matters of religious belief. This is only a promise, but it marks an important change of attitude, remarks an exchange. It would not have been made by the Ministry of Bratiano, nor by that of Gen. Vaitoianu.

The new government has felt the force of Allied pressure through measures taken by the Supreme Council, and also the force of public opinion in America, Britain and other countries condemnatory of the excesses committed by the Rumanian army at Kolozsvar and other places in Transylvania. We know that vengeance could not but be uppermost in the minds of the Rumanian soldiers after the overrunning of their country by the Austrian, German, Turkish and Bulgarian armies in the campaign planned by Falkenhayn and Mackensen. But that feeling must be buried with the dead of the dead past, and the sentiment to live must be satisfaction with the liberation of the Rumanians who form not less than 55 per cent. of the total population of Transylvania. The colonies of Hungarians, Szeklers and Saxons in that former principality never overcame the wish of the majority of the Transylvanians for union with their brethren in Rumania. That union has been achieved. Now there should be peace.

And it is essential that there shall be no oppression of any of the minorities. Whether they be Unitarian or Trinitarian, Roman Catholic or Protestant, the Rumanian government must not interfere with their rightful freedom, under the mistaken belief that it is serving the interests of the Orthodox Greek Church. Rumania seems to know that she has put herself in the wrong. It is with the authorization of her government that Commissioners Metcalf, Snow and Witte are about to proceed from Boston to Bucharest, and thence to Kolozsvar, in order to investigate conditions and initiate reconstruction in portions of Transylvania where inhabitants not Rumanian and churches not Orthodox Greek have suffered under the severities of the Rumanian occupation. The commissioners might have gone conveniently by way of Budapest, but their choice of the Bucharest route will seem more friendly to the Rumanian government. And a little tact may go a long way in dispelling suspicions, removing asperities, inducing reparation for wrongs that have been done, and bringing about the establishment of good government for the future.

AUSTRALIA AND STRIKERS.

Labor has gained great political power in Australia, and its interests have been well cared for by legislation. But when a trade union persists in carrying on a strike which is injurious to public interests it runs the risk of conflict with the most powerful labor leaders and the whole machinery of the government. The engineers took the risk and the result has taken them aback. They do not seem to have expected that Premier Hughes, whose success has been largely due to association with the Labor party, would resort to any extreme measure for the stoppage of the strike. But the engineers, who have been on strike since early in December, have rejected every attempt at settlement and thereby exhausted public patience and impelled governmental action of unusual severity. The government forbids the banks to provide the engineers with money or goods, or to lend on or buy the securities that the union may own. This has been called a starvation blockade.

Montreal Gazette: "The fifty-cent "haircut being an accomplished fact, "the general organizer of the Barbers' "International Union now predicts a "charge of a dollar. This would possibly be accompanied by the fifty-"cent shave. The barbers, with their "doubling of charges, have driven innumerable customers to shave themselves. The threat of a dollar for "a haircut is enough to encourage the "wearing of long hair and lead to "more home cutting. The price "boosters are beginning to overreach "themselves."

The St. John, N. B., Local Council of Women probably acted wisely in deciding not to declare for a uniform type of apparel for women, remarks an exchange. Such a declaration would have been valueless. What feminine person desires uniformity in dress? The popular idea is for change as frequently as possible, and the very seasons are outdistanced nowadays. A man likes to be clad as are his fellows. With a woman it is a difference that is sought.

She was summoned before King George and Queen Mary at Buckingham Palace as the "perfect type" of England's motor women.

ANNUITY SCHEME UNDER GOVERNMENT

Ottawa, March 12.—In the House of Commons this afternoon criticism of the Government's annuity scheme proposals was voiced by Hon. W. S. Fielding and Dr. Michael Clark. Sir Henry Drayton had stated that the proposal now was to so amend the scheme that it would be more popular and so that the Government could make a little money out of it. "If it is profitable for the private companies to go into this sort of thing I think the Government should also see that it pays the country," he said.

Sir Henry Drayton remarked that there was no intention of having any army of employees. There was a great need for production in the country, but there was also need for saving.

The resolution was carried, and a bill based on it was introduced and given first reading.

THE OPPOSITION AMENDMENT MADE

were getting a proper return from the Crown Lands of the province, a return that would make ends meet. He would answer that question in the negative. He would also make the statement, on the authority of a practical lumberman, that the profit derived from slabs and edgings made into laths was sufficient to cover the entire cost of manufacturing long lumber. From $8 to $12 is now paid in stumpage to owners of private lands, while the government received but $3.50 per thousand on spruce and $3 per thousand on fir. He had no hesitation in saying that it was not enough. In view of the tremendous advance in prices, the time has arrived when the people demanded that the government must increase the stumpage rate in proportion to the value of lumber. The revenue in 1919 from stumpage was $561,890. He believed that if the people were to be given a fair return, that amount should be doubled. A new area had been reached and the government could not afford to look upon the matter of such importance as in the old days. The time has come when they must be up and doing. Before closing he would move an amendment to the Address setting forth that the time has arrived when the revenue must be increased. The methods for direct taxation adopted by the government were far from popular. A fair yield had been made by the Amusement Tax, and it would be recalled that $118,000 had been taken from the Patriotic Fund. The Crown Lands were the one source of revenue to which the government would have to turn. He then moved, seconded by Mr. Smith (Carleton), his amendment.

Mr. Murray, in conclusion, thanked hon. members for the careful attention they had given him and expressed the hope that all measures brought before the House would have careful consideration. He believed that all were desirous of doing their best to promote the public welfare and conduct the affairs of the province in the interest of the people.

Hon. Mr. Foster moved the adjournment of the debate, which was made the order of the day for Tuesday next at 3 o'clock p. m.

Hon. Mr. Murray submitted the annual reports of the Moncton Hospital, the Provincial Hospital and of the Factory Inspector, also the annual report on schools and returns and valuations of the several cities and towns of the province.

Hon. Mr. Byrne laid on the table of the House the annual report of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Hon. Mr. Foster, in moving the adjournment of the House, said that, owing to the irregularity of trains and the changes in the hour of arrival, the House would not sit again until Tuesday afternoon. Later in the session, when conditions became normal, it would meet after week-end adjournment on Monday evening.

The House adjourned at 4.10 p. m.

FROM THE PEOPLE

CHARGES THE GOVERNMENT LOST $1,500,000 IN STUMPAGE.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—With promises broken and with a greater cut of timber from the Crown Lands during the past two years, and with a greater price for lumber than ever before, stumpage dues not increasing as promised, having been held up by the big interests, and with a deficit instead of a surplus, the Foster Government again meets the House for 1920, after having lost in stumpage dues alone for the past two years $1,500,000. It is about time a change was taking place.

Yours,
A DISAPPOINTED SUPPORTER.
Fredericton, March 11, 1920.

PAT O'BRIEN'S ANSWER TO RUTH.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Here is on answer to Ruth's letter. If you care to publish it, you will be doing me a favor.

O, maiden of two score and ten years: I did read and inwardly digest your most beautiful script. Through the mouth of The Gleaner I bid thee anoint thine head with more oil and put on thy marriage robe and prepare for the wedding feast; for verily, if thou wilt present me with the coin, thou art married.

Mavourneen Bawn, how can I marry thee if thou wilt not make public thine identity? Be not afraid, maid! I am made public; is it that you are afraid of your young beauty being injured by the cold air of outdoors? I challenge thee, fair woman, to gird on thine armor and proclaim thyself.

Yours,
PAT O'BRIEN.
Fredericton, March 13, 1920.

ANOTHER WHO WANTS TO KNOW.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—Would you please ask A Poor Man's Wife to explain her method of running her table, as I find after she had paid for rent, fuel and electric light she has something over four dollars a week to feed four. After a man has read an article like that it makes him think if one woman can do it and keep out of debt another can. Maybe if she cut down her rent she would be able to get that square meal she longs for.

Yours,
A HUSBAND.
Fredericton, March 12, 1920.

FREDERICTON G.W.V.A. ASK FOR CO-OPERATION.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—As ex-soldiers and G. W. V. A. officers, we have to express our genuine satisfaction on reading the letter in your columns signed by an ex-officer, who so readily made suggestion as to our possibilities in civic affairs.

To enable us to benefit by his ideas, we most earnestly solicit his identity which we trust will not be denied us. As apparently he was a leader in the field, now let him become a leader at home and not "hide his light under a bushel." But as a rule leaders are selected for their bravery and initiative; accordingly we may naturally invite the gentleman to have the courage of his own conviction and be brave enough to sign his name when, as a body, we shall have much pleasure in extending an invitation to become a member, whereby we may profit by his wisdom, as he clearly states we need a leader.

We have a leader and one whom we are proud of, but as a progressive body we are always open to improvement. So let the ex-officer throw away the mantle of obscurity and approach us as a genuine friend, which we hope may prove to our mutual advantage.

Yours,
E. H. COY,
Sec. Fredericton Branch,
G. W. V. A.
Fredericton, March 12, 1920.

HAS AN 1852 CENT BUT IS MARRIED.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—I am one in the city who has a cent dated 1852, but as I am married I don't care for the second husband.

If Pat O'Brien wishes to obtain the cent, address a letter to "M. S.", care of The Gleaner.

Yours,
A LADY.

"Heresy Hunt" by Police for Literature of Objectionable Character Comes up in House

Socialist Indignation Over the Seizure of Standard Works Shown to Be Without Foundation—House Gets Through a Large Amount of Work Yesterday.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 13—The Government got through an amazing amount of detail work in a very short time yesterday afternoon in the three hours between 3 and 6 o'clock. There was no evening session.

When on Thursday afternoon, item after item was put down for consideration on Friday it looked as though there would likely be considerable congestion, but with the House in good humor, and the most of the bills not yet at the contentious stage, considerable progress was made.

It is surprising how many news bubbles get pricked when they reach parliament. For some time there has been indignation manifested in many forms and in many different parts of the country over the report that the Mounted Police had burst ruthlessly into a public library in the West on a "heresy hunt" in search of socialist books. The most intense indignation seems to have been aroused over the fact that they took among other volumes, a copy of "Plato's Republic," which, as is well known, is the favorite light reading of even our humblest homes. Socialist and near or parlor socialist orators in the East have been making this indignity to the revered Plato a constant theme of discourse and attack on the Government has been heavy.

Minister's Explanation.

It appears from Mr. Rowell's explanation that the police were simply after the productions of a Chicago firm, "Kerrand Co.," whose books had been put under the bann during the press censorship because it was discovered that they had been sending objectionable books into Canada enclosed in volumes of an innocent nature. Such as were of this class the Police received from the librarian and forwarded to Ottawa for examination. Anyone who has ever paid a visit to the office of the Censor in Ottawa and seen the mass of lurid literature piled up there as the result of seizures might think better of the activities of the Police.

Sir Henry Drayton introduced a bill to reduce the fineness of our silver coins from 925 to 800 parts per thousand in order to forestall the activities of those across the border who have been melting down our coins because they contain so much more silver than their own. The matter was important, as the coinage of silver had risen from $734,000 in 1914 to $3,215,000 last year. He stated that now that its fineness had been reduced it would not pay to export it to the States to be melted.

Bill Respecting Indian Lands.

Ottawa, March 13.—In Parliament yesterday, Hon. Arthur Meighen introduced a bill with the object of enabling the Dominion Government to negotiate with the province of British Columbia in respect to a difference between the two on Indian lands. He also introduced a bill looking to more ready enfranchisement of Indians.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act was given second reading, put through the committee stages and now stands for second reading. Before it received second reading there was a lengthy discussion about the inadequacy of pensions granted to veterans of the force. Hon. N. W. Rowell promised this phase of the matter would receive consideration by the cabinet.

Hon. C. C. Ballantyne's resolution, providing for the issuance of certificates to master and mates who had served for a year, and subject to certain conditions, was carried.

The House adjourned at six o'clock until Monday.

In the Senate Senator McLean's bill providing for a court of appeal in criminal cases, similar to that in vogue in civil cases, was reported out of committee and stands for third reading. The Senate adjourned until April 6th.

Summary of Night Dispatches

Washington, March 13.—Admiral Sims stated last night before the Senate investigating committee that more shipping was saved by keeping track of German submarines and routing vessels clear than by any other single measure.

Public Works Expenditures.

Ottawa, March 13.—The report of the Minister of Public Works for the fiscal year to March 31, 1919, showed a total expenditure of $21,295,500, of which $8,498,603 was charged to war appropriations.

Substitute for Reservation.

Washington, March 13.—Senator Lodge introduced yesterday a substitute for his own reservation to article ten and led to much discord. The probabilities of final agreement remain as beclouded as ever.

Three Died From Gas.

Toronto, March 13.—Dead bodies of two men and a woman were found dead by gas in a house at 355 King street, west.

The Turks Indifferent.

Constantinople, March 13.—The Turks receive with indifference the notification of supreme council of decision to take drastic action to prevent killing of Christians and enforce peace terms.

Complications in Near East.

London, March 13.—Indications here are that the Near East tangle is quite serious and anxiety is increased by the complications threatened in Syria and Mesopotamia.

Industrial Disputes Act.

Ottawa, March 13.—Amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, introduced by the Minister of Labor, make it possible for a conciliation board to deal with a large number of firms employed in a similar industry as a group, instead of separate and distinct entities.

Message From Premier Borden.

Ottawa, March 13.—Sir Robert Borden wires yesterday to followers in the House that he is making steady and encouraging progress towards recovery and expects to be in Ottawa within seven or eight weeks.

After carrying fire, lightning and cyclone insurance for 30 years on "the biggest barn in Waldo County," in Maine, Abraham Lincoln Blaisdell loses $5,000, with no insurance, because the tremendous mass of snow and ice on the roof flattened out his barn.

Machias Horsemen Put Up $10,000 for Fred Southard to Gather a Winning Stable

Washington County Town in Maine to Have Midsummer Races Too—Free for Aller Being Bought—Fredericton Driving Club's Hard Luck.

[Fort Fairfield Review.]

Fred E. Southard, the well known Aroostook county trainer and driver of fast horses, who formerly lived in Fort Parified, has located in Machias, and a syndicate of gentlemen there has contributed $10,000 for the purchase of a lot of fast horses, one of which is to be for the free-for-all class. It is reported that a horse has already been bought, and that he has a mark of 2.10½. Machias will hold a midsummer meeting in July.

LOTS OF HARD LUCK.

Fredericton Driving Club Still Blocked by the Weather Man.

After having spent $250 on their winter track since February 5th the Fredericton Driving Club have been unable to stage a matinee in all that time. Just as surely as they have arranged races the weather man has put the kibosh on affairs.

Yesterday was no exception to the rule as the rain made it necessary again to postpone the racing and now it is proposed to try again next Tuesday. Two dyed-in-the-wool matinee fiends, Earl McDonald and "Pete" Watson, had a brush at the track yesterday afternoon in the midst of the rain but it was a "dare," which Mr. Watson won.

Last night the Driving Club at their regular meeting provided the secretary, George E. Howie, with enough money to settle all their accounts for the winter and the members are hoping the weather man will be good to them for next Tuesday.

HOOF PRINTS.

The $2,500 free-for-all at Ruthland will have a $100 entry fee with nothing deducted from money winners.

Followers of the Bay State Circuit are strong to have Brattleboro, Vt., drop into the chain with a meeting the week after Greenfield. This would give five meetings with only 100 miles of shipping expense.

The snow has bothered Will Fleming very little this winter for the track at Windsor has been kept in good condition. The boys down that way say Billy had Baby Doll in top form for that Gardiner, Me., free for al.

The entry fee in the $1,000 purses at Rutland, Vt., will be 2½ per cent, with 7½ per cent deducted from the winner and second horse and 5 per cent from third and fourth. The classes are 2.09, 2.14, 2.18, 2.25 pacing, 2.12, 2.17 and 2.24 trotting.

Lee Magee Threatens Suit; Claims to be Blacklisted

Released by the Chicago Cubs He Can't Obtain Another Job

MAGNATES TO TELL SECRETS

Baseball Will Benefit When Betting Stories Are Unfolded.

Lee Magee, the ball player who was unconditionally released by the Chicago National League club a month ago and then found it impossible to obtain another engagement in the major circuits, threatens to carry the matter into the courts.

If Magee sues the owners of the Chicago club for breach of contract and the other major league clubs for conspiracy on the ground that he has been secretly "blacklisted" for betting on ball games, the magnates will have an opportunity to tell what has been going on behind the scenes.

The Player's Statement.

In a statement that he has issued the player says:

"The manager of the Chicago Cubs has not advised me that he did not want me as a member of his team this year. Neither he nor any one else has ever accused me of improper betting upon games, and at no time in my baseball career I have been accused of indifferent playing. All during my baseball life I have given my best efforts, and I shall continue to do so in future.

"I have in my possession evidence that without cause the owners of major league teams have unlawfully blacklisted me. My attorney is now at work gathering evidence and a suit will soon be filed to test the right of a club to exercise its option for my services in December and a month later release me. On Dec. 1, 1919, I received a letter from President Veeck of the Chicago club reading: "This is to notify you that the Chicago National League ball club has decided to exercise its right to your services for 1920. This right is given to the Chicago National League ball club by reason of the option contained in your contract of 1919. A formal contract will be mailed to you in accordance with the rules and regulations of the National League.

"After this notice to me that the Cubs wanted my services during 1920 owners of other teams agreed that I must be released unconditionally, and the Cubs were compelled to submit. I have a number of offers from minor deagues, but my record shows I am entitled to remain in the big game, and I shall."

Might Revive Chase Case.

Commenting upon the case Joe Vila writes in the New York Evening Sun:

Legal proceedings by Magee will turn the light on the baseball betting evil which has been a live topic ever since Christopher Mathewson, when manager of the Cincinnati Reds, brought charges against Hal Chase, who was tried and acquitted by President Hedyler a year ago. The stories of collusion between professional gamblers and certain Chicago players who took part in the last world's series, while hard to believe, never have been disproved to the satisfaction of the fans.

The dropping of Magee and the absence of other noted players from the big league training camps would seem to indicate that the magnates are trying to accomplish something far under the surface. But for the best interests of baseball the veil of mystery should be lifted, and for that reason the fans hope that Magee will "go through" with his lawsuits.

It would be far more satisfactory to make public the reasons why certain players will not return this year. By naming the supposed culprits who are said to have been dealing with professional gamblers, the honest players would receive a square deal, to which they are entitled.

Test of Player's Contract.

Magee attaches much importance to the fact that on December 1, 1919, he received a notice from the Chicago Club that, by reason of the option clause in his contract for last year, the club had decided to exercise its right to his services for this season and that a formal contract would be mailed to him in accordance with the rules of the National League.

Magee signed a regular form of National League contract with the Brooklyn club last spring, having been traded by the Cincinnati club for Jake Daubert. The Brooklyn club, after Magee had played forty-five games, traded him to the Cubs for Peter Kilduff.

The contract which Magee signed with Brooklyn contained the usual option and ten days' release clauses. Magee received a certain amount in payment for the option on his services for this year and said option was turned over to the Chicago club.

The courts must decide whether Magee's contract, which is drawn in the same form as that of every other major league player, is equitable; whether the release clause of last year which Magee accepted could be used before he signed a 1920 contract, although the Chicago club had exercised its option on his services.

Magee probably will maintain that the option clause is legal, but will fight the legality of the ten days' release notice, at the same time claiming a repetition of last year's salary for 1920. His attorney probably would try to bring out the reason for Magee's release, but the Chicago club officials might explain that the player had become useless as a result of advancing years.

Hard to Prove "Blacklist."

It might be hard to prove that the major league magnates had actually "blacklisted" Magee. It's a sure thing that the club owners have studiously avoided the use of this unpopular word in dealing with Magee and two other players, said to have been driven out of the sport for betting. Magee, in order to establish a case, would have to prove that the National and American League clubs had entered into a binding agreement to keep him off their teams. Incidentally, Magee would have to submit to a cross-examination, which might disclose interesting particulars regarding what happened when he and Chase played ball with the Cincinnati Reds in 1918.

The Retirement of Gandil And Risberg of White Sox

Owner Charles A. Comiskey Denies that He Has Driven These Players Out of Baseball by Offering Them Ridiculously Low Salaries.

First Baseman "Chick" Gandil and Shortstop "Swede" Risberg, of the Chicago White Sox, have announced their retirement. Gandil already has signed to manage the St. Anthony, Idaho, club in the Snake River-Yellowstone League and Risberg has gone into a private business venture in California.

Owner Charles A. Comiskey denies a report that he has forced these players out of Organized Baseball by offering them ridiculously low salaries. The Old Roman declares that Gandil and Risberg will be held under reserve, which means that they cannot play ball with any other major or minor league club. Chicago baseball critics seem to think that if Comiskey agrees to pay certain salaries Gandil and Risberg suddenly will change their minds and will report to Manager Kid Gleason at Waco, Tex.

Gandil and Risberg began to talk of leaving the national game soon after the world's series between the White Sox and the Cincinnati Reds last October. In those big games Gandil and Risberg were severely panned for poor playing. Gleason frequently roasted them to a turn in newspaper interviews and gave the impression that he would be glad to get rid of them. During the battles with the Reds Gandil displayed shocking weakness at the bat when he had chances to drive in runs, while Risberg committed blunders in the field that were very costly.

Following the retirement of Hal Chase of the Giants and Lee Magee of the Cubs the threatened withdrawal of Gandil and Risberg is unusually interesting. If Gandil and Risberg remain away from the White Sox Gleason will probably try Shono Collins at first base, with Buck Weaver going back to shortstop and McMullin playing third. Gleason has two young first basemen who will be tried at Waco, but it is doubtful if either possesses major league calibre.

STOCK DECIDES TO JOIN CARDINALS

Holdout Infielder Sought By the Giants Decides to Get Into Line.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Pfeffer Signs With Robins.

Jacksonville, March 13—Jeff Pfeffer, the Robins' big right-hander, has signed a Brooklyn contract at the club's camp here. The contract were not announced, but after Pfeffer had affixed his signature he said that everything was satisfactory. The pitcher has been in the club's camp about a week.

It became known this morning that efforts were made by the Robins to get Casey Stengel back. Stengel is now a member of the Phillies and Robbie offered Manager Cravath two pitchers and a catcher for the popular player. Cravath turned down the offer.

Braves Let Casey Go.

Boston, March 13.—The Boston National League club have alowed Pitcher Causey, secured last year in a trade from New York, to go. Philadelphia, it is said, secured him by a drawing at the waiver price, which indicates several clubs were after him.

Loftus Joins Reds.

Boston, March 12—Richard ("Dick") Loftus, Concord's baseball star, has left to join the Cincinnati Reds at Miami, Fla. Loftus played left field for the Fitchburg New England league outfit last summer, and would have joined the world's champions after the New England league broke up, but a broken ankle kept him from getting a chance.

Fredericton Players Not Badly Hurt.

After the hockey game at Chatham between Bathurst and Fredericton reports were current here that a number of the Fredericton team had been badly hurt in the scraps which took place there. One of the players was said to have suffered severe injuries and to have broken his collar bone. This report was denied this morning by a member of the Fredericton team who stated that although several of the players had received some hard knocks during the game, they were not incapacitated.

Poincare Asks Anglo-Saxon Friends of France Not to be Moved to Pity by Fate of Huns

The Former French President Denounces the Attempt of Germany to Evade the Terms of the Versailles Treaty and Asks Allies to Remember France's Desolated Regions.

(Special cable to The Daily Gleaner.)

Paris, March 13.—Former President Poincare, in his first political article in the Revue des Deux Mondes, denounces Germany for her attempt to secure a revision of the Treaty of Versailles. He asks the Anglo-Saxon friends of France before being moved to pity at Germany's fate, to look at France's devastated regions.

A German Protest.

Berlin, March 13.—The Government has made an emphatic protest to the peace conference and to the inter-Allied commission for the plebiscite territories in upper Silesia, West Prussia and East Prussia against a series of decrees issued by the commission, which Germany contends will interfere largely with the judicial organization and procedure in the districts concerned. It also is contended that the decrees contravene the stiuplations of the peace treaty.

Foch Favors the League.

Washington, March 13.—Marshal Foch, through the French embassy, yesterday denied reports in Paris news despatches published in the United States regarding his attitude on the League of Nations. The despatches said the marshal was opposed to the League.

To Discuss Peace Terms.

Copenhagen, March 13.—The Berlinske Tidende says it learns that a Lithuanian delegation has arrived in Moscow, ostensibly to negotiate for an exchange of prisoners, but in reality to discuss peace terms. The majority of the Lithuanians, says the newspaper, are eager for peace.

It is added that a Czecho-Slovakia delegation has arrived in Moscow with the same intentions as the Lithuanians.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of Ethel, the beloved daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rainsford Smith, Upper Gagetown, who died March 13th, 1919:

One year has gone since that sad day,
When our dear Ethel was called away;
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent the voice we long to hear.
Her journey here on earth was short,
Her race so soon was run.
From pain and sickness now she's free—
Her work on earth is done.
Just twenty-three years, how short the time,
Seems like a summer's day,
The Saviour called her, she must go—
She could no longer stay.
Now our home is sad and lonely,
Since dear Ethel went away.
But, dear friends, if we prove faithful,
We will meet her some sweet day.
Some sweet day! O, happy thought,
To meet in that bright home,
Where pain and sorrow enter not,
And partings never come.
We ofttimes wonder why it is
That ones of so much worth,
Are called to die while others live,
Who could be spared from earth.
But God, in His wise judgment,
Knows why those ties are riven;
He chooses the ones he sees best fit,
To dwell with Him in Heaven.
And now our hearts are filled with grief,
And tears bedim each eye,
But God will wipe them all away,
When we reach that home on high.
Sleep, dear sister, thy labor's o'er;
Thy willing hands can do no more.
The midnight star shines o'er the grave
Of one we loved but could not save.
Her loving parents' hearts are broken,
Her brothers and sisters' hearts pain,
And her little children may sadly cry,
For they will never find her equal again.
She is gone but not forgotten,
Neither shall her memory fade,
Flowers of love will bloom forever,
Around the grave where she is laid.

FATHER, MOTHER, SISTERS AND BROTHERS.

Commercial Club Gets Active.

After the appointment of the standing committees the Council returned to the Council Chamber, where the appointment of these committees ,as appointed, were confirmed. The delegation, appointed at a recent meeting of the York Commercial Club, then waited upon the Council, asking that they co-operate with the Board of Trade and Commercial Club in drafting a resolution to be placed in the hands of Col. H. F. McLeod, M. P., to put before the Dominion Government requesting that permanent military force be located in this city.

President H. A. Smith suggested that a delegation of three representing the three bodies be appointed to go to Ottawa and interview the local member of the Dominion Government at Ottawa, stating that a resolution was not apt to have much effect and that the delegation would produce better results. The matter could be taken up with the Minister of Militia by the representative and there could thus be some action. Lt. Col. Osborne and R. W. McLellan also spoke. His Worship promised that the matter would be given consideration by the Council and the delegation left.

When the matter came up for discussion, Ald. Neill moved that a committee of three members be appointed by the Mayor to confer with the Board of Trade and the Commercial Club concerning the appointment of delegates from the three bodies to go to Ottawa concerning the matter.

Ald. Wilkinson, Camp and Neill were named by Mayor Reid as the committee.

G. W. V. A. CONVENES AT ST. JOHN TODAY

Matters Recommended for Consideration of Members During the Sessions.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

St. John, March 13.—The provincial convention of the G. W. V. A. opened this morning with about fifty delegates in attendance. The Secretary's report showed six new branches formed during the year, making a total of 22 in New Brunswick. It suggested the need of an organization and recommended the appointment of a committee to look into the farmer settlement policy, it being said that settlers were taking up farms in working order and not clearing the Crown lands, which tended to lessen production and increase the cost of farms.

Among the matters to be considered this afternoon are resolutions on vocational training for all soldiers, whether disabled or not; extension of membership; political action; housing conditions; and re-establishment and other matters.

President Barton, of Moncton, was in the chair and the session will conclude this evening.

BOLD BANDITS ROB JEWELRY STORES

Raids on New York Stores Witnessed by Thousands of People on Streets.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York, March 13.—While Broadway last night was crowded with theatre-goers, three armed bandits smashed in the window of a jewelry store at 37th street, kept the crowds at bay with their revolvers until they had emptied the contents of several trays into their pockets and then escaped, shooting one pedestrian who attempted to stop them.

A few minutes later three men entered another Broadway jewelry store, a few blocks uptown, and after throwing pepper in a clerk's eyes, grabbed some trays of jewelry and ran from the store. Two men, alleged to be members of the trio, were arrested by the police after the chase.

Both robberies, committed in the heart of the White Light district, were witnessed by thousands of persons.

Holland Will Be Watched by The Allies to See if There is Any Movement by Kaiser or Son

Although Forewarned of the Coup the Ebert Government Does Not Appear to Have Made Any Resistance to the Revolters —No Mention of Hindenburg or Ludendorff Made.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Washington, March 13.—Press despatches brought to official Washington its first news of the overthrow of the German government by the military.

"Such a revolution was inevitable," was the comment of White House officials, but officers at the state department would make no statement, preferring to wait for official advices and additional details.

Monarchists Bided Time.

New York, March 13.—There has been a strongly held belief both inside and outside Germany that the pan-German monarchist party was merely biding its time, and awaiting an opportune moment to seize control of affairs. It was this belief, for one thing, that caused the Allies worriment when they considered the nearness of former Emperor William's retreat at Amerongen to the German border, and prompted their strong representations to Holland of the danger to the peace of Germany and the rest of Europe of his presence there. In response to this the Dutch government promised to keep a close guard over the exruler. Former Crown Prince Frederick William also is a refugee in Holland, but his retreat at Weiringen is farther removed from the German border.

While there has been no hint in the early reports of the overturn at Berlin to indicate that the movement looked to a restoration of the Hohenzollern dynasty, the fact that the development is apparently of a monarchistic nature, will cause close attention to be paid to any news from Holland regarding the former royal personages who have been making that country their home for more than a year. Interest in this phase of the situation is all the more strengthened by the indications that have come from Berlin that the reactionary movement was possibly precipitated by the fact that a Hohenzollern prince, Jachim Albrecht, had been arrested and was about to be tried and possibly imprisoned in connection with the recent demonstration against French officers at the Hotel Adlon.

Ludendorff and Hindenburg.

The despatches from Berlin under yesterday's date telling of the discovery of a reactionary plot, in which the leaders were the very men mentioned in today's advices of the plot's success, would indicate that the government had explicit foreknowledge of the attempt, and this fact makes an explanation of the reported easy success of the anti-government forces in entering Berlin difficult of explanation. It may be noted that the names of the two men most prominent in military affairs under the old regime, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and Gen. Ludendorff, so far have not been mentioned in connection with the new developments. The Field Marshal, indeed, had only recently announced his willingness to become a candidate for the German presidency in the elections that were to be held later this year, while Berlin despatches in January credited Gen. Ludendorff as well with the intention of becoming an active participant in the next German political campaign.

Make Peace Terms More Strict.

If there has in fact been an effective overturn of the present government in Germany, the effects upon the relations between Germany and the Allies and the carrying out of the terms of the Treaty of Versailles can hardly be estimated. With a militarist regime in control in Germany, there seems little doubt that the outside pressure for the strict execution of the stipulations of the peace pact would be markedly increased, particularly from such nations as France and Belgium, with their territory contiguous to that of the former Empire. It has been generally conceded, however, that the military requirements of the treaty, which has been already put into effect, have rendered Germany militarily impotent for a long time to come, at least so far as any aggression on her part might be concerned. This, however, is perhaps not true of the French army leaders, among whom Marshal Foch in particular has been insistent in pressing for greater military protection against Germany for France than was provided for by the peace pact signed last June.

SPRING BREAK-UP STARTS WITH RUSH AND WARM RAIN

Many Cellars Already Flooded and Country Roads in Bad Shape.

HEAVY HAULING FOR THE WINTER FINISHED

Railways and Lumbermen are Preparing for Abnormal Spring Freshets.

While only one-fifth of an inch of rain fell here yesterday, according to the official measurement taken at the meteorological station at the University of New Brunswick, there has alreaady been a rapid settling of the snow, some cellars are flooded and many of the country roads are already practically impassable.

This afternoon another rain set in, and it is freely predicted that a serious situation will result unless there comes a distinct change in the weather. City Engineer McDowell has a crew of men and two thawing machines opening up the surface drains and getting all the facilities in readiness to carry off the anticipated great volume of water, but the sidewalks in some places are getting very "cuppy" while the streets are becoming slumpy and at Phoenix Square this morning horses wallowed in deep slush and were unable to move heavy loads.

Preparing for Big Freshets.

There was no hay in the country market, and it is well nigh impossible in many districts to get horses over the roads at all while hauling heavy loads is out of the question. Some cellars along Queen street and in other parts of the city were already commencing to get flooded this morning, while the St. John river ice is commencing to be covered with sush and water is forming along the shores in many places. The railways are taking precautions, it was said today, in preparation for abnormal spring freshets in New Brunswick, and the lumbermen are said to be confident of plenty of water—if not too much—for driving conditions to bring out the logs.

A. T. Murchie, chief scaler, and William Kerr, scaling inspector for the province, returned last evening from an inspection trip to the lumber camps of Wallace Johnson on the Northwest and Little Northwest Miramichi. This morningg Mr. Murchie stated that in the woods around the camps the snow had settled about a foot, leaving about four feet in depth. On account of the soft weather conditions in the woods were bad, but the hauling roads were still in good shape. Mr. Johnson's cut is about 8,000,000 feet of logs from his four camps.

Potatoes remain high and sold this morning for $6.75. There was a good supply of pork on hand for the first time for some weeks, and it sold at 26 cents per pound. There was no hay in the market today.

The prevailing prices today are as follows:

Pork, per pound, 26 cents.
Beef, per pound, 12 to 16 cents.
Veal, per pound, 14 to 18 cents.
Butter, per pound, 60 to 65 cents,
Eggs, per dozen, 70 to 75 cents.
Potatoes, per barrel $6.75.

$3,000 WORTH OF LIQUOR

Big Shipments from North Shore Placed in Cellar of Departmental Buildings.

Included in the shipment were two ten gallon kegs of wine, two trunks full of different brands, about twenty packages as well as a number of cases and several pugs of alcohol.

The assortment, the chief inspector, stated this morning, had been accumulating for the past month at the North Shore towns and were sent here to be put in the Government warehouse in the cellar of the departmental buildings.

The funeral of the late Miss Millicent Lister will take place tomorrow afternoon from the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Lister, Saunders street, with service at the house at 2.30 o'clock by Rev. G. C. Warren and interment at the Rural cemetery.

King's Ward Election to be Held March 29th---W. J. Glenn Declines the Nomination

Manager of Victoria Mill Was Endorsed by Commercial Club and Tendered Nomination by Ratepayers at Public Meeting Last Night at the Mills—Last Monday's Election Cost the City About $200—Ald. T. S. Wilkinson is Named Deputy Mayor—Commercial Club Delegation Got Action in Military Matter at Last Night's Meeting of the City Council.

Monday, March 29th, was the date set by the City Council last night for the bye-election to fill the vacancy which has been caused in the representation of King's Ward by the elevation of Mayor John A. Reid, who for the past six years had been an alderman from that ward.

Yesterday it was intimated that William J. Glenn, manager of the Victoria Mills for the Fraser Companies, Ltd., was being urged to offer as a candidate by the Commercial Club and at a meeting of the ratepayers of the lower district at Saint Margaret's Hall, Morrison's Mill, last night, Mr. Glenn was tendered the nomination, which made it likely that he would be unopposed.

This morning, however, Mr. Glenn declared that his final decision, after full consideration, had been not to offer. David W. Olts, president of Eastern Canneries, Ltd., and member of the real estate firm of Olts & Thomas, has also been mentioned as a candidate, but he has also declined to accept nomination. Checks for payment or the officials of the election last Monday, amounting to $116, were approved by the Council last night and other expenses will bring the cost of the election up to approximately $200, it was said today.

The Mayor's Inaugural.

The standing committees were appointed for the year and a delegation from the York Commercial Club asked the Council to co-operate with that club and the Board of Trade in endeavoring to have the Dominion Government station permanent military forces in this city again without delay. The first order of business was the swearing in af the recently elected members of the Council, Aldermen Joseph A. Cain, J. Stewart Neill, Walter L. Jennings and T. S. Wilkinson, by His Worship Mayor Reid, who administered the oath.

Following this Mayor Reid gave a short inaugural address in which he welcomed the new aldermen to the Council urging upon them the necessity of co-operatitng with each other to fulfil their oath of office. He referred to the various questions which were to come before the Council during the year; among these he stated were the street lighting question and improvements at the city filtration plant which had been left in the hands of the new Council by the retiring Council.

On the motion of Ald. Wilkinson, seconded by Ald. Cooper, the Council then adjourned to committee for the appointment of the standing committees. Ald. T. S. Wilkinson was appointed Deputy Mayor and the standing committees were appointed as follows:—

Finance Committee—Ald. Wilkinson (chairman), Ald. Neill and Ald. Cain.

Water and Sewerage—Ald. Neill (chairman), Ald. Jennings and Ald. Barker.

Roads and Streets—Ald. Camp (chairman), Ald. Cooper and Ald. Young.

Street Light—Ald. Baxter (chair-

"61" Floor Varnish
IS NEITHER BRITTLE NOR STICKY—IT IS TOUGH.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH

NOTHING—your hammer leaves no impression—why? Because rubber is elastic. And it is the elasticity of "61" Floor Varnish that makes its life so long. This elasticity, which resists the hammer test, also resists the countless heel-blows every floor receives.
WRECKAGE—the glass is shivered into a thousand pieces—why? Because glass is brittle. And this same thing in a lesser degree, is exactly what happens to countless floors finished with ordinary varnishes which crack, craze, check, chip off and mar white.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is tough—so tough that the wood may dent but the Varnish WILL NOT CRACK.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH is thoroughly waterproof, and is the most durable and lasting Floor Varnish that is on the market.
"61" FLOOR VARNISH can also be used for all kinds of woodwork, either for inside or outside and will stand all kinds of weather.

NEW GERMAN GOVERNMENT NOT RECOGNIZED BY ALLIES

HOLLAND MAY SEND KAISER TO THE INDIES

The Present Coup in Germany Brings Home the Danger of Kaiser's Proximity.

ESCAPE ALWAYS EASY FROM DUTCH TERRITORY

The Kaiser Kept Well Posted on Current Events by Constant Stream of Visitors.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 15—The reactionary movement in Germany makes the Kaiser question an acute one at Rotterdam, says the London Times correspondent in that city. It is learned from reliable sources, he adds, that the decision of the former Emperor's future residence is being seriously considered. Meanwhile, extensive measures are being taken for any eventuality.

The Dutch government has considered alloting him a residence in one of the Zealand Islands. This was abandoned owing to the possibility of escape by boat, and further, because the climate is not suitable for the former Empress, whose health gives rise to anxiety lately.

Though the ex-Kaiser is making elaborate plans for his stay there, it is by no means certain that this will be his permanent residence. The government considers publicity might defeat the object aimed at. Should the ex-Kaiser know that plans were being considered for his deportation to the West Indies, efforts might be made for his escape.

Evidently the former Kaiser is being well posted on events, great activity prevails in this neighborhood and a constant stream of cars is going and coming.

Nervous Strain on Kaiser.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Amerongen, March 15.—Former Emperor Wiliam spent the greater part of yesterday in the garden of Bentinck Castle, where he passed up and down with evidence of being under great nervous tension. Religious services, which have been held regularly every Sunday, were omitted yesterday.

The terrible strain of the events of the last few days seems to weigh so heavily upon the mind of the former Emperor that he cannot tolerate the company of others, and he makes every effort to get out of doors.

Coup Long Prepared For.

London, March 15.—Behind the movement to overthrow the Ebert government of Germany and substitute a conservative ministry, stand well-known military leaders, including Colonel Bauer, who has the reputation of being the most clever staff officer in the German army, says a Berlin despatch to the London Daily Mail.

"The leaders,' the despatch continues, "have been working secretly for months in preparation for their coup. They realized that in his heart the German still thought of the kindly old days, gilded, as they now are in his recollections, by memories of peace and prosperity. They knew that on their side would be all former officers, government officials and most of the disciplined among the middle classes, who have suffered worst from Germany's present penury."

FUNERAL JUDGE McCARKILL

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Quebec, March 15.—The funeral of the late Mr. Justice McCorkill was held here on Saturday and was attended by a large train of mourners, in which the bench, the bar and the provincial Government were well represented. The service was conducted at St. Andrew's church by Rev. Dr. Love.

Existence of Plans for New War Denied---New Chancellor is Said to Plan Arrests of Ebert and Bauer

Belief That Military Party May be Able to Hold Berlin and Other Large Centres, but Without Support of Other Political Elements Than Pan-German Party, Movement Doomed to Failure.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

London, March 15.—One of the first acts of the new government in Berlin was to request recognition from the Allied Commission in Germany, according to an official British message today.

The request was ignored, the Commissioners taking the attitude that they would not extend recognition even to the extent of answering the communication.

An official message filed in Berlin at 6.30 o'clock last night, said there was no confirmation of the reports that the sailors at Kiel and Altona had gone over to the new government.

The New Government Declares It Has No Plans For Compulsory Military Service or New War

Copenhagen, March 15. — The semi-official German Wolff Bureau here issued a statement, evidently emanating from the new government, saying:

"There is no truth in the defamatory rumors circulated with regard to the re-introduction of compulsory military service and the existence of plans for a new war. The government desires peace externally and internally."

Count Von Bernstorff Said to Have Gone to Stuttgart to Negotiate With Ousted Ministers

Berlin, March 15.—Count Von Bernstorff, former German Ambassador at Washington, is reported to have gone to Stuttgart to negotiate with President Ebert and Premier Bauer, of the government which was ousted on Saturday by the reactionary revolt.

A Berlin Report Says That New Hun Dictator Has Ordered Arrest of President Ebert and Bauer

London, March 15.—The Berlin correspondent of the Central News says that Dr. Kapp is taking steps to have Ebert and Bauer arrested on the charge of high treason.

Former Chancellor Declares That Only Way to Oppose New Government is by General Strike

Berlin, March 15.—In his appeal for a general strike, Gustav Bauer, Chancellor in the former regime here, says:

"This is the sole weapon at the disposal of the workers for twisting the neck of the new government."

An unconfirmed report was current shortly before midnight tonight that the new German government had reached an agreement with the Ebert government in order to avert the threatened railway strike.

Up to the Present the New Revolution Has Been Only Supported by Military and Pan-Germans

Paris, March 15.—The latest advices to the French foreign office from Berlin, it was said today, indicated that revolution in Prussia had thus far been confined to the military and the Pan-German party, and was without other political support. Leaders of the conservative parties, and such industrial leaders as Dr. Walter Rathenau, president of the German General Electric Company, it was declared, had condemned the movement.

From all the inforation thus far received, it was added, the impression in official circles was that the military party might hold possession of Berlin and other important centres and prolong the state of uncertainty for some time, possibly a month or two, but that without the support of other political elements than the Pan-German party the movement was doomed to failure.

Franco to Reinforce Troops on Rhine.

France contemplates sending three more army corps to Wiesbaden, Neustadt and Bonn, thus doubling her forces along the Rhine, according to the Petit Parisien. Marshal Foch will call a meeting of the supreme war council as soon as he returns from Mayence, where he will confer today with Allied commanders. Reports reaching this city state that every step has been taken to maintain order in occupied districts of Germany and that the Inter-Allied commission for the Rhenish provinces has received the German High Commissioner after having conferred with Allied military leaders.

Information received here would seem to indicate the utmost calm is prevailing in Germany, although the severe censorship in Berlin may be responsible for lack of detailed news from the city. Telegraphic communication with Berlin is interrupted, the last telegram from the French Charge D'Affairs there having been received at the foreign office in this city at one o'clock Sunday morning.

Berlin Mobs Looting Stores.

Advices from other sources, however, indicate the reactionary movement begun on Saturday morning is confined to Berlin, and that mobs are busy looting stores in some quarters of the city. A general strike, affecting transportation, electric power and water supply of Berlin, has been decreed, and railroad workers are said to have asked Dr. Kapp, the new Chancellor, to leave Berlin. A general strike affecting all public services has also been called at Kiel, Bremen, Hamburg and Regensburg, while public sentiment in favor of the Ebert Government is declared to be increasing in Cologne, Essen, Dusseldorf, Bochum, Duisburg, Spandau and Frankfort. In these cities a general strike is expected today. Bread is said to be already scarce and expensive in Berlin, and there are fears the supply may fail completely.

Military forces at Leipzig appear to favor the new regime, while a contary view of the situation is taken by the people generally, it is reported. At Munich the Bavarian Government has handed over control to a General who is in favor of the Ebert Government. The Germaan National Assembly has been summoned to meet at Stuttgart on Tuesday.

Marshal Foch to Return to Germany As Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces in Occupation Along the Rhine

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

PARIS, March 15.—The Echo de Paris says that Marshal Foch, who on his recent trip to the Rhine affirmed that he possessed, as President of the Military Commission at Versailles, his former commission as commander-in-chief of the Allied Armies, will soon return to Mayence, adding: "France's preparations of every kind will be a useful warning to German fermentation."

L'Homme Libre believes that Saturday's reaction was due to Ebert and Noske keeping the Generals as functionaries of the Empire and the Entente's failure sufficiently to disarm Prussian militarism.

Von Luettwitz Declares the New Government in Germany is To Combat Bolshevism There

Says That Allies Are Doing Nothing to Stay the Advance of Bolshevism from the East and That Prussia Must Take a Hand—A Larger Army Required.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Copenhagen, March 14.—Major General Baron Von Luettwitz, Minister of Defense in the new revolutionary government in Berlin, has been interviewed by a correspondent of the Pulitiken.

"We considered it an urgent necessity to take action for the protection of Europe against danger from the East," he said. England is doing nothing and can do nothing to stay the advance of Bolshevism. Prussia must take a hand in it.

"We must have more than the 100,000 men permitted by the Entente. How are we to combat Bolshevism with that handful of men ?"

General Von Luettwitz said the new government had no monarchist tendencies. The correspondent observed, however, that "his tone was not particularly convincing."

The correspondent gives the following description of Von Luettwitz:

"He is an amiable gentleman of the old type, with short, wiry hair, a moustache clipped in English fashion and a powerful Roman nose. He looks like a man who knows what he wants. He is not burdened with sentimentality and is manifestly far stronger than Noske. He does not look bloodthirsty."

Von Luettwitz expressed great satisfaction that not a soldier had fallen during the revolt. He said he had between sixty thousand and seventy thousand troops at his disposal in Doeberitz and Berlin.

Reckoned on Berlin Soldiers.

Asked by the correspondent if he had reckoned that the Berlin troops would go against the old government, Von Luettwitz said:

"Absolutely. I told the government that four days ago ,and demanded that it should include professional ministers in the cabinet who opposed Bolshevism. The government reckoned that the Berlin troops would back it and so objected to my demands and deposed me. Even this has shown that I was right."

Asked concerning the general strikes that have been called, he said:

"I think the workers will come to their senses when they learn what social reforms we are planning. If not we must intervene."

Ready to Use Machine Guns.

The correspondent asked how and where the intervention would take place, at which he says Von Luettwitz burst out laughing and answered:

"With crocodiles and pop guns as far as I am concerned."

Asked if he meant machine guns, the new Minister of Defense said: "You must take the responsibility for that word."

The correspondent says the revolution is regarded as an eight-day affair in liberal circles in Berlin. The President of the National Assembly is said to have declared that the members have their mandates from the people and cannot regard them as lost.

Another announcement by the Kapp government stated that conditions in east Prussia were quiet, civilians and militia guarding the railways and the postoffices.

As regards Hamburg, the government statements said the situation there was not clear and added:

"In Necklenburg-Schewerin no strikes have taken place. Gen. Lettow-Vorbeck (former commander of the German troops in German East Africa) has taken charge of the troops, who are supporting the new government. Saxony is quiet and the troops are neutral. General Nercken has ordered that no strikes take place. Stettin, Hanover, Hesse, and South Germany are quiet."

Indications That Hamburg Would Line Up With The Reactionary Government Formed at Berlin

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Hamburg, March 13.—"We will follow Berlin," said Oberburgomeister Distel to the Associated Press correspondent here today, indicating that the officials of the free state of Hamburg would line up with the new reactionary government.

There are no troops in the city at present other than the police and noncommissioned officers from the army and navy, who form an effective force for the maintenance of order.

There are 3,000 government troops stationed in the suburb of Altona. The officers there say they arr being held in "alarm readiness" for emergency service.

Some Trouble at Hamburg.

Copenhagen, March 15.—A correspondent at Hamburg, telephoning Sunday evening, says that during the night public security troops favoring the Ebert government succeeded in taking possession of the town hall, the trades union building and other public places, so that the power in Hamburg is in the hands of the senate and burgesses.

At Altona, Colonel Von Waagenheim, an adherent of the new government, is in authority. A general strike has begun on the tramways, the elevated, suburban and other railways, which have suspended their services.

PRESIDENT BEATTY AT C.P.R. BANQUET

Welcomes New Railway System and Gradual Release of Burden on Taxpayer.

Toronto, March 14.—The fourth annual banquet of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was held Saturday night at the King Edward Hotel, attended by some six hundred guests who had arrived by special trains from the eastern and western parts of the Dominion and from the United States at an early hour in the city. They were representative officials and employees of every department of the Canadian Pacific Railway service. The feature of the function was the speech delivered by President E. W. Beatty, K. C., who announced that he welcomed the competition of the Canadian National Railways and emphasized the fact that the Government railway system "is and will be an extensive system, which will probably increase in magnitude. We all hope it will be a success," he added, "and we do not need to be altruists to harbor that hope. I think I can say with perfect candor that no man in Canada has more reason to hope for its success than I have."

Mr. Beatty said he had two reasons for this hope, because the sucess of the publicly owned system meant the gradual release of the burden on the taxpayer, and secondly, because the factors which would contribute to the National Railway's success would also ensure the further and continued success of the Canadian Pacific.

Apart from the holding of the official banquet outside of Montreal this year, another innovation was the fact that for the first time representatives of the Railway Brotherhods throughout the Dominion were in attendance as the guests of the company. One of the features of an eventful evening was the emphasizing of the relationship which was growing stronger day by day between the skilled laboring men and the officials of Canada's great system.

BANDITS GET BIG HAUL.

Philadelphia, March 13.—Bonds totalling $410,000, a third of them negotiable, were stolen yesterday by bands in a raid on the Wrightman building.

71st's Efforts Appreciated.

As a result of the excellent showing which was made by the band and guard of honor at the opening of the Legislature from the 71st York Regiment, Major Sterling, the Adjutant, was able to secure through Brigadier General Macdonnel permission for the unit to have the use of additional quarters for the band, staff and other purposes of the unit. It was largely through the personal efforts of Major Sterling that the military display at the opening of the House proved so successful.

THE VALUE OF FARM LAND IN DOMINION

Ottawa, March 1?.—The Dominion Bureau of Statistics publishes todday its annual report on the average values for the year 21919 of estimates of (1) the values of farm lands, (2) the wages for farm help, and (3) the value of farm live stock and of wool. These estimates have been compiled from the returns of a large amount of correspondents throughout every province of the Dominion.

The average value of farm land for the Dominion, including improved and unimproved lanfl, with the value of dwellings andd other farm buildings, is placed at $52 per acre, as compared with $46 last year, $44 in 1917, $41 in 1916, $40 in 1915, $38 in 1914.

This shows an enhancement in value of farm lands of $14 or 36.8 per cent. in five years. By provinces, the value is highest in British Columbia, being $174, as comparedd with an estimatedd unit value of $149 per acre in 1917 andd 1918.

Quebec Acreage $72.

Ontario, with an estimated average value of $66 per acre, and Quebec with $72 per acre are above the average for the Dominion. Last year both Ontario an Quebec gave each the average value of farm land at $57 per acre. In Prince Edward Islandd the average of farm lands has risen from $44 per acre, the highest previous value value, to $51. Nova Scotia also shows an increase from $36 per acre in 1918 to $41 in 1919. New Brunswick valuedd its farm lands at $19 per acre in 1910, $29 in 1916, and 1917; $35 in 1918; and $32 in 1919. The value of farm lands in Manitoba, while fluctuating between $29 in 1910 and $32 in 1918, rose to $35 per acre in 1919. In Saskatchewan farm lands were valued at $32, as compared with $29 per acre in 1918, and $24 in 1914, and Alberta lands increased in value from $21 per acre in 1914 to $27 in 1917, and $29 in 1919.

The average wages paid for farm held in 1919 show considerable increase as compared with the previous year. For Canada as a whole, the wages per month during summer for males, inclusive of board, is $78, and for females $43 per month; the value of board $24 per month for males, and $19 for females, is included in the above estimate.

Value of Horses.

The downward trend of the value of horses from the high mark of 1917 is again in evidence in the figures of 1919; the values of milch cows continues to advance, while the value of other horned cattle, sheep and swine is either stationary or slightly lower. For the Dominion as a whole the average price of horses under one year old is $55, as against $56 in 1918, and $57 in 1917; for horses one year old to under three, the average value per animal was $108 as against $112 in 1918, and $116 in the previous year; for work horses the price per animal is practically the same in 1919 as in 1918 ($161 and $162).

The continued upward trend of the value of milk products is reflected in the average price of milch cows, which is placed at $92 per head in 1919, as compared with $37 in 1918 62 in 1915, and $42 in 1910. The average value of other cattle under one year was $25, as compared with a similar figure in 1918, while those of three years old and over dropped in value from $88 per head in 1918 to $83 per head in 1919. Sheep averages $10 as against $16 in 1918. Swine are valued at $26, as against $25 in 1918. Wool showed a drop of from 62 cents per pound to 55 cents for unwashed, and from 80 cents to 70 cents for washed. Correspondents were required to report from the best possible information available the average value per head of each kind of farm animal in their districts, and the average thus obtained have been compiled and employed in the calculations of total values according to the number of farm animals as returned in June, 1919.

ACOUSTICS POOR IN NEW BUILDING

Members at Back of New Commons Chamber Complain That They Cannot Hear.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 15.—When Artemus Ward lectured in the Egyptian Hall in London many years ago he began by remarking when the Egptians built this hall I wish they had attended to the Venetian. Similarly a good many of the members of the House of Commons are beginning to wish that the architect of the new Commons chambers had paid more attention to accoustics and less to ornamentation.

The chamber is so large that it is difficult to hear some of the members a few feet from where they speak. There has been constant complaining from the farmers' party and others at the extreme end of the chamber that they cannot hear a word of what is being said by the ministers, with the exception of one or two with extra good voice equipment, such as the Minister of Railways.

In the House this afternoon, after the president of the Privy Council had made an explanation of a bill he was introducing, the member for Vancouver, Mr. Stevens, arose and said he had not heard a word of what had been spoken. He suggested that the ministers should move down towards the centre of the chamber, and this may be done.

INVERNESS ROAD TO BE TAKEN OVER

Negotiations for Nova Scotia Railway About Completed by the Government.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 15.—In reply to questions by Dr. Chisholm, M. P., regarding the Inverness Railway, the Minister of Railways stated that the Government made an effort to buy the road. The committee representing the bandholders urged that the Government take over the road as a feeder for the C. N. R. system, the transfer to be made on a basis similar to that on which certain branch lines in New Brunswick has been taken over. In this basis it was agreed that the price be $150,000 for 60.91 miles of road, and 46 miles of siding, exclusive of the company's piers at Port Hastings, the rolling stock and equipment to be paid for at a price to be agreed on, but not to exceed $175,000. This was agreed to and the Government hope to complete negotiations on that basis.

FATHER HAS FIRST CLAIM TO CHILD

Pathetic Case Decided Yesterday Against Motherless Baby's Grandparents.

Montreal, March 13.—A case of some human interest held the Practice Court for a short time yesterday while a contest went on for the custody of a baby in arms. The father, James Larventz, clerk, petitioned for the custody of the infant, which had been under the care of its maternal grandmother since its birth on Aug. 4 last.

The grandfather, Joseph Hyman Golt, contested the petition. He said the petitioner, his son-in-law, had lived with him since he married respondent's daughter. After the baby was born, the mother remained very delicate, and she died in February last. Respondent stated that the father made a death-bed promise to his wife that the baby should remain under the care of its grandmother, to whom it was a great consolation. Subsequently, however, a quarrel arose and respondent alleged it was in a spirit of spite that petitioner now sought to take the baby from the grandmother's care.

Petitioner denied this, and said he wished his own mother to bring up the child.

Justice Duclos said he was very sorry to cause pain to the grandparents who, he was convinced, were inspired by the sincerest love for the infant, but, under the law, and all other things being equal, a father in such a case had the first claim to his own child. Therefore the court could do no other than maintain the writ of habeas corpus and order the respondent to give the child into the custody of the father.

MR. MURRAY'S AMENDMENT, MR. MAGEE'S RESPONSIBILITY AND THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION.

Mr. Magee of Westmorland, the mover of the Address in Reply, insisted that the Government's rate for stumpage is much too low. He also expressed the opinion quite emphatically that the province should have a very much larger annual revenue. The amendment of the Hon. J. A. Murray expresses regret that a higher rate of stumpage is not enforced, and names a figure, seven dollars a thousand, which, under careful and independent administration, would serve to add more than half a million dollars annually to the receipts. Will Mr. Magee support that amendment? Will his colleagues on the Government side of the House, who feel as he feels on the subject, also support the amendment? There is no doubt that the amendment is reasonable; there is no doubt that the proposition, if adopted, would meet in a large measure the needs of the situation; it is the duty of the House to give effect to a suggestion that would admittedly provide needed additional revenue. But will the House act consistently? Will it have regard for the public interests? It was in moving the Address that Mr. Magee urged a material increase in the stumpage rate as a naturally equitable process by which to obtain the needed income. He fixed the time, and made the occasion, for expression of opinion and action; and Mr. Murray's amendment is absolutely in accordance with the views set forth with emphasis by Mr. Magee, in whatever capacity he may be accepted. There will be some interest in waiting to see just how Mr. Magee will measure up.

An amendment to the amendment is permissible; and there are reasons to believe, in what is occurring in its moments of anxiety, that the Government is preparing one for a supporter to move, setting forth, in effect, that it is the prerogative of the Governor-in-Council to fix the rate of stumpage; and the House has confidence that a reasonable rate will be fixed and announced at an opportune time. But such an amendment does not satisfactorily meet the situation. While it commits its supporters to an expression of confidence in the Government, it also fastens them helplessly to the Executive; and leaves the question of stumpage rate and revenue as at present—under the control of the lumber interests who dominate the Government. The members of the Executive may possibly, and no doubt will, promise their supporters that the stumpage rate will be materially increased almost immediately; to do so would assist their followers, whose interests are chiefly the interests of party, to smilingly and assuringly meet their constituents for a time; but recent experience has shown how helpless the Government is to redeem any promise to its supporters or the people that is not satisfactory to the lumbermen. It is but a few years ago that the present Government, in need of revenue and satisfied of the justice of its position, passed an Order-in-Council increasing the stumpage to $3. a thousand in a defined section of the province, and $4. in other parts. The lumber interests at once protested and threatened, and within sixty days the Order-in-Council was cancelled, and a reduced rate, satisfactory to the lumbermen, substituted and incorporated in a new order. Lumber was then selling at a high figure, and as a matter of fact the demand was for all that could be produced. The market value of stumpage was then nearly double the figure set by the Government, but while to hold office was the Government's chief ambition it was powerless in the hands of the lumbermen. It is, in fact, not more independent today. Such an amendment to the amendment as that outlined and intended for service would, therefore, not be of practical utility from the public standpoint, whatever of service it may be in making pretexts and cloaks for mere partizans.

The stumpage rate is ultimately fixed by Order-in-Council, but the opinion and recommendation of the House in session should not be treated as out of place. The mover of the Address invited expression of opinion. He took the responsibility upon himself properly, whether wisely or unwisely from the mere party standpoint; and he was quite emphatic in giving to the House the view he entertains. It would be something new in parliamentary practice for the Government to repudiate that invitation, not to speak of the discourtesy involved. It would be adopting mere pretext for the Government to insist that the members of the House, including its supporters, must await its pleasure in expressing opinions they entertain on vital questions of public import and in making recommendations.

It is admitted by public men and others who do not come under the influence of the lumbermen that the present value of stumpage is much more than double the figure charged by the Government of the province. Add to the stumpage the mileage charges, the bonus moneys paid and the fire tax, and Crown Land stumpage at seven dollars a thousand is even then very much below the average price paid for stumpage from private lands. Why is that the case, if the Government is not subject to unreasonable influences? A rate based on the actual present day market value of stumpage would give the province an addition of at least $750,000 a year to the revenue. An increase of nearly that amount would have been available last year had the Government performed its duty reasonably and consistently. In 1918 a rate in accordance with actual market value would have yielded an increase in revenue for that period of upwards of $600,000. Yet in 1918, as in 1919, notwithstanding that unreasonable levies were made upon the people by the Foster Government through the process of direct taxation, the revenue in the year's operations fell far short of the receipts. In 1919 the deficit was $327,686.22; and in 1918, the fact concealed for a time, it was $474,370.34; in the two years a deficit of $802,056.56. A rate for stumpage in keeping with market value, and collected, would have enabled the province to come through these years' operations with a surplus, without resort to unreasonable direct taxation and to the tapping of trust funds. Mr. Murray's amendment, and his speech thereon, have naturally aroused the public to the gravity of the situation in which the province finds itself.

CANADIAN FINANCES.

The revenue and expenditure statements of the Government of Canada for the eleven months of the fiscal year ending with February bear testimony to the need of that economy in outlays and maintenance of revenues which the Minister of Finance is reported as saying it is his intention to insist upon. The revenue receipts are good, indicating that business must be maintaining a high degree of activity, and also that the agencies charged with the collection of war taxes are increasing in effectiveness, says the Montreal Gazette. The figures of the revenue for the past eleven months and the corresponding period of the preceding year are as follows:

	1918-19	1919-20
Customs	$134,832,715	$147,112,840
Excise	27,331,357	37,939,480
Post office	18,300,000	18,500,000
Works and railways	35,407,700	38,642,006
Miscellaneous .. .	56,885,209	85,537,975
	$272,756,984	$327,732,303

The increase in 1919-20 in customs taxes of twelve and a half millions suggests that advice to buy less abroad, even when coupled with abnormally unfavorable exchange rates, has had small or no effect in curtailing imports. The increase in excise taxes makes it seem that the drinker and the smoker, in spite of restrictions and increase in prices, still do their part in maintaining the solvency of the treasury. The receipts from the post office and public works and railways mean the meeting of a greater demand for services.

The expenditures continue to show that inclination to outrun the income that the appropriations of last year's sessions of Parliament made possible. They are given as follows:

	1918-19	1919-20
Ordinary services.	$180,043,856	$309,661,571
Works and railways	14,026,462	40,290,157
Railway subsidies	25,896	121,665
	$194,096,214	$350,073,393
War	276,296,239	307,179,925
Total	$470,392,453	$657,253,318

There is recorded in the past eleven months an increase in every division of outlay when compared with the record of the preceding fiscal year. The greatest advance has been in the ordinary annual outlays for administrative services and the maintenance of public buildings and works. It amounts to over $129,500,000. It is the result in part of the increases in pay to public servants, in part to the greater cost of almost every article needed by the Government in its various services, and in part to the increase in the variety and extent of these services. It is here that economy should be possible. Without the war outlays, the expenditure exceeded the revenue by more than $22,000,000. Including the war outlays, there was an excess of expenditure over revenue of $329,500,000. The war outlays, owing to the liberal allowances to soldiers on their discharge, have been greater during the current fiscal year than they were in 1918-19, when fighting was actually going on in Europe. In February, however, they were only $8,364,000, compared with $31,482,000 in February, 1919. There is reason to expect that the present month will see a further decrease, and that the appropriation for the coming year will be relatively small. The gross debt of Canada is now $3,149,000,000, and though this huge total is reduced by assets, some excellent, some of doubtful value, to $1,900,000,000, it is a heavy load to carry and makes embarkation on schemes of great cost unwise, if not impossible.

PEACE CONDITIONS.

The Supreme Council of the Allies in the late war has issued a memorandum on the world's economic conditions, which the members apparently regard as serious. The memorandum also suggests remedies. First of all it is declared of paramount importance that peace conditions should be fully and completely restored at the earliest possible moment. To this end it is said to be desirable that normal economic relations should be re-established; that armies should be reduced, and armaments limited; that states which have been created or enlarged, as a result of the war, should re-establish free and friendly co-operation, and unrestricted interchange of commodities; that governments, and all engaged in the task of production, should give attention to measures which will contribute to the full resumption of peaceful industry and greater production; that governments should urge on their nationals of every rank of life the vital necessity of suppressing extravagance and reducing expenditure; and that early steps should be taken to secure the deflation of credit and currency, by the reduction of current Government expenditure, and the imposition of such additional taxation as is necessary to bring expenditures within the limits of revenues, by the funding of short term obligations by means of loans subscribed out of the peoples' savings, and by the immediate limitation and gradual curtailment of note circulation. All this is to the point, remarks an exchange. It has all been said before, however, and quite as well as it has been said by the Supreme Council, most of whose member nations, it is to be added, are in some degree sinners against its proclamation. The Council rightly puts the complete and full restoration of peace conditions throughout the world at the head of its list. The duty in the connection is primarily its own. Until the Council's work is done, peace conditions cannot be fully restored throughout the world. It is now the seventeenth month since the Armistice with Germany ended the fighting. What is now necessary is for the Council to end its internal disagreements, and finish its work. It should get busy on its job.

BRUTAL MURDER AT GREENVILLE, ME.

Two Woodsmen, Intent on Robbery, Shoot Down Husband and Wound Wife.

Greenville, Me., March 14.—Robert C. Moore was believed to be dying tonight and his wife was suffering from serious wounds as a result of an attack upon them at their home last night.

According to the story told by Mrs. Moore to the authorities two men entered the house, forced their way up stairs to a room where her hsuband was taking a bath and opened fire with revolvers. Five of the bullets took effect, one entering Moore's abdomen, two penetrating his chest and two striking his arms. Mrs. Moore said that as her husband fell unconscious, the men fired at her. She was wounded in the head, and one bullet entered each of her arms. She was able to get to the outside door and shout for help and meanwhile the men ran off.

Acting upon Mrs. Moore's charge that the two men were William Pomeroy and J. C. Scott, who came here from New York last Tuesday to work as woodsmen, Deputy Sheriff Rogers started a search for them. Late today word was received from Jackman that Pomeroy and Scott had been arrested without resistance while trying to escape to Canada.

The Stock Market

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

New York (Wall Street), March 15.—The only notable exception to the moderately heavy tone at the opening of today's stock market was Crucible Steel, which immediately added five points to last Saturday's 16 point advance. This was increased to almost ten points within the first half hour. In other quarters of the list trading seemed to be influenced by further uncertainty respecting the course of foreign exchange and latest developments in Germany. The local money market also figured as an unknown quantity because of today's heavy tax payments.

LEGISLATORS LOOK OVER ST. JOHN FRONT

St. John, March 15.—Twenty-one of Canada's legislators at Ottawa, came to St. John on Thursday to look over the winter port and hear the views of city fathers and the business community regarding further development and the necessity of protecting berths and other harbor property from exposure to tides and gales. Most of the visitors represent constituencies in the western provinces, although several are from Ontario. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Minister of the Interior, who is of the party, came as a member of Parliament and not as a cabinet representative. The party was piloted to this city by Rupert W. Wigmore, M. P. for St. John-Albert.

In the name of the West, Hon. Mr. Meigher made a contribution of first importance to the discussion of the Winter Port Question at the civic banquet tendered to the visiting Western members at the Union Club Saturday evening, when he emphasized the view that the development of Canadian nationhood is bound up with the question of developing a self-sufficing and independene system of transportation.

Lieut. Governor Pugsley dwelt somewhat on the view that the Act of Confederation placed a specific obligation on the rest of the Dominion to give special consideration to the problem of developing trade through Maritime ports.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF LIFE

The Value of Time.

The retired Colonel was fishing in a quiet stream, when there approached a yokel, who remarked with a yawn:

"Time ain't very valuable to you, is it? Here I've bin a-watchin' you three hours an' you ain't had even a bite."

"Well," drawled the fisherman, "my time's too valuable, anyhow, to waste three hours of it watching a man fish that isn't getting even a bite."

"Dear John," wrote Mrs. Newlywed from London town, "I enclose the hotel bill."

"Dear Gladys, I enclose cheque," wrote John, in return; "but please don't buy any more hotels at the price—they are robbing you."

"John," said the vicar's wife, more in sorrow than in anger, "I'm sorry to see you're not paying into our coal club this year."

"Well, mum," replied Johnson, "it's like this 'ere. I used to live in Rhododendron terrace, but now I've moved into Station road, and my 'ouse is just be'ind the coal-yard !"

A soldier was telling his friends of his experiences out in France, and among other things they discussed was the difference between the beers of the respective countries.

"Well," said the soldier at last, "my idea is that drinking one of those Frenchy beers is about like kissing your sister."

"You should try to cultivate a spirit of optimism," said the tireless mortalizer.

"It can't be done in my business," said the harassed looking man.

"What is your business ?"

"I have charge of the liquor shipments for an express company."

FROM THE PEOPLE

A CRIME AGAINST CHILDHOOD.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—There has been a movement for the last few years to deprive children of their fairy tales, I believe the idea being that they should be taught nothing which cannot be proven true. I had hoped this crime against childhood was dying out, but I see by the papers that on Washington's birthday, celebrated in the United States, several school teachers, either by agreement among themselves or by orders from those "higher up," told the children that the story of the cherry tree and the hatchet is not true. Children are also being taught in the schools of that country that there is no Santa Claus. What a crime!

The movement has found some foothold in this country.

What is to be the result of this painful extraction of fairy tales from the child life of coming generations? Most fairy tales point very good morals, and the dose in its sugar coating and often fascinating style induces the child to read and reread and comprehend what might, in its plain form, be an obnoxious, boring sermon. Our children's reading matter will be reduced virtually to a dictionary, a speller and some modern history. As soon as we go back more than a few centuries in history we run against traditions and fairy tales again.

The romance and mystic beauty is early squeezed out of this country now by the rush and roar of industry, and the demands. Are they going to build our children's minds, girdered within brick and mortar, every brain cell crammed with facts and truths and no little space left for the seeds of spontaneous, unadulterated joy to flourish?

I have often wondered why most of the greatest artists in music and other high arts come from foreign countries, and as yet we can hold a place only in literature but, in comparison, not much of a one at that. Is it that they have behind them generations of art and folk lore and traditions, the doing of things for the pleasure of it and not for the market price?

Yours,
MOTHER.

St. Stephen, March 12, 1920.

RUTH SAYS SHE IS PAT'S NO LONGER.

To the Editor of The Gleaner.

Sir,—Since Pat O'Brien has so kindly replied to my letter through your columns, would you please allow me to give Pat his answer through the same medium?

My Dear Patrick: Thine epistle of love and fidelity to plighted word hath been presented to me.

Behold now, it did please me and did gain much favor in mine eyes. And I was overjoyed and did exclaim: "Ye gods, how lucky am I, for verily, verily, the hour of my dreams is at hand, I have nabbed a man!"

And when the even was come I did place the epistle under my pillow that I might have pleasant dreams thereon.

And it came to pass with the dawn of the Sabbath, I did rise up early and did call unto my maidservant and did bid her to prepare my glad rags for I must needs carry the glad tidings of great joy unto my father.

Then did I tog up and did journey unto my father's mansion. And when I was yet a great way off, he did perceive me, and he was greatly moved, thinking that surely some evil had overtaken me, that I should seek his consolation so early on the Sabbath.

And when I was come unto his house I did run forward to him, crying: "Behold, now, O my father, thy maiden daughter, virtuous and wise, who hath, in this year of the Leap, procured for herself an husband."

Now, when I had spoken in this wise, my father was overjoyed, so that he did cry out: "Hola, hola, how great is the power of Cupid!"

Then did he bless me for my virtuous action and did require me to make known unto him my Prize.

And when I had shewn him thine epistle he did read thereof and did think well of his son-in-law to be, crying:

"Thou hast captivated a true and noble son of the 'Ould Sod,' O, my daughter; come, let us call the bridegroom and proclaim a great feast where with pers the wine shall flow like unto water."

But now it came to pass that his contenance did change for his eye did perceive one phrase of thine epistle wherein thou didst bid me "to gird on thine armor."

Yea, verily, he was much wroth and did tear asunder his garments and did declare: "Surely, surely, this man is of an evil spirit for this phrase doth proclaim him either a Prohibitionist or one who would pass his honeymoon in a Flivver.

"Harken then, O my daughter, unto the words of age and wisdom and be not deceived by the words of this armor loving scrapper. Yea, no daughter of mine shall be exposed to the evils surrounding a Prohibitionist or a Flivverist; but rather shall she spend all of her days within the limits of 'old maidhood'."

Give heed unto me, O thou hard, armorclad son of Erin, for I have harkened unto the counsel of my father and I have had mine eyes opened!

Yours no longer,
RUTH.

SCHOOL TEACHERS AND THEIR SALARIES.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The remark is often heard that the man with an average salary today is the poor man. There is a good deal of truth in it. The man in the street, the great army of skilled workmen and artisans, and even the unskilled laborers, have seen their wages doubled or trebled during the last five or six years. Grim necessity set the pace. The cost of living had doubled or trebled.

How has it been with our teachers? Have their present salaries been doubled? If not, why not?

I was greatly interested in Dr. Foster's letter on this subect in a recent issue of The Gleaner, showing the generous response being given to this question by Moncton and St. John. Can Fredericton afford to be less fair and generous to its staff of experienced, able and successful teachers, whose devoted services have brought our schools to a very high degree of efficiency? We are proud of our educational institutions, and must heartily approve any action the School Board and City Council may take in the matter to increase the teachers' salaries. All, from the teachers of the primary department to the principal of the high school, including the teacher of vocal music, should receive a substantial increase.

Yours,
A. PARENT.

Fredericton, N. B., March 13th, 1920.

HOW A WIFE MAY KEEP BUSY.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—With wonder and amaze did I read the recent letter from the pen of one of your correspondents. Her difficulty of too much time is not one which troubles many of us these days. If she has a home of her own, even though it consists of three or four small rooms, I do not see how she can lead anything that faintly resembles a "drone's life." For me, similarly situated, there are not hours enough in the day.

I would ask your correspondent a few questions. Assuming she has no servant to do it for her, does she not do her own marketing? (Which, let me say, always takes more time than that which is allotted to it in the scheme of the day's events). Does she delight in surprising her husband with new dishes which are dainty and "different" without being extravagant? Does she do her own sewing, mending? Does she not find it fascinating to build up and add to her home bit by bit, or was it too complete when she entered it? Does she make a real home for her husband?

For recreaton—does she never entertain? Does she never embroider, crochet, etc. Has she no correspondents? Has she no music to keep up? Has she no church interests? No constructive work?

A few of these activities would help to relieve a monotonous day.

Yours,
A BUSY WOMAN.

DRYS URGE U. S. TO BUY THE BOOZE

Anti-Saloon League Would Pay Distiller His Costs for Bonded Stocks.

Westerville, Ohio, March 11.—Purchase by the Federal Government of all liquor stocks in bond is urged by the Anti-Saloon League in a statement issued here today at the league's national headquarters by Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of the league's executive committe. The statement says:

"Now that prohibition has gone into effect everything which the Government can do to make it easy to enforce the law should be done.

"With over sixty million gallons of whiskey in bonded warehouses there is a constant temptation to devise ways and means of utilizing that liquor in spite of the law. Moreover, so long as that whiskey is in existence those who own it, realizing as they do its great commercial value, except for prohibition, will be constantly tempted to use millions of dollars in efforts to repeal and break down the prohibtion laws.

"The Government of the United States should purchase that whiskey at a price to be fixed by a federal commission, which price should represent the actual cost of producing it. Upon purchasing the whiskey the Government should convert it promptly into denatured alcohol, for which there is an ever increasing demand.

"By such an arrangement the distillers will get all they actually have invested in the whiskey. The greatest temptation to break the prohibitory law will be removed; the incentive to spend vast sums of whiskey money to secure repeal of prohibition or a serious modification of the law will be eliminated; the Government will be able to realize almost as much from the sale of the whiskey in the form of denatured alcohol as the whiskey will cost the Government, and the public will be the gainer in every way. It will require less effort and expense to enforce the law."

It was said the Anti-Saloon League might ask congress for legislation authorizing purchase of all bonded liquors.

Number of Cases Increase At the Provincial Hospital

The Report of the Medical Superintendent of the Hospital Shows That 176 Mental Cases Were Admitted During the Year, Which Total Has Been Only Twice Exceeded.

Dr. J. V. Anglin, of the Provincial Hospital, in his 72nd annual report of the Medical Superintendent, says:

The number of patients at the beginning of the year in the hospital was 626—337 men, 289 women; absent on trial, 5 women. There were admitted during the year 176 patients—80 men, 96 women. There were discharged 92 patients—41 men, 51 women. There died 61 patients—34 men, 27 women. There remained at the end of the year in the hospital 639 patients—339 men, 300 women; absent on trial 15 patients—3 men, 12 women.

There were also entrusted to our care 12 men per day on an average throughout the year by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. Quite a number of these did not belong to New Brunswick, but had enlisted in this province.

The daily average of patients in the Hospital during the year was 636—340 men, 296 women; the smallest number present was 622; the largest number, 643. In all, 807 cases were under care for the whole or some part of the twelve months.

Since the Hospital was erected nearly three-quarters of a century ago, 8,606 cases have entered it—4,920 men, 3,686 women. Of the total, 3,361 were discharged recovered, and 2,862 died at the institution.

Admissions During Year.

The admissions during the year of all classes of mental patients were 176, which total has only twice before been exceeded in the history of the Hospital. The women were in the majority, which is quite unusual. As stated in the preceding paragraph, the men have outnumbered the women by over 1,200 in the entire history of the institution. The larger number of women admitted during the year cannot be fully accounted for. The influenza, that was epidemic a year ago, was responsible to some extent. Apart from this, there was nothing unusual in the causes assigned. Eleven of the cases admitted were congenital; 47 others had been insane for over a year before hospital care was sought; 42 were over sixty years of age. These facts show that many entered the hospital whose recovery could not be expected.

Of the 176 patients admitted, 37 had been in the hospital in previous years once or more; 158 were Canadien-born; 36 had had no school education.

The discharges numbered 92—41 men, 51 women, of whom 70, or 39.8 per cent., had recovered, or were capable of self-maintenance in the community.

Deaths of patients numbered 61—34 men, 27 women—a rate of 7.5 per cent., which is lower than most years. Fortunately no deaths were due to accident or suicide. Influenza claimed two women in November. This disease attacked a number of both patients and employees in the early weeks of the year, but was less severe than might have been feared. There was much extra strain thrown on those of the staff who escaped the epidemic, but the adequacy of all in meeting the situation is a source of pride and satisfaction. We lost one estimable nurse, Miss Clare Hampton. The employees who were ill with it seemed to have a more severe type of the disease than the patients. With the sane, only the younger persons were affected, while among the insane there appeared no age discrimination, quite a number of our patients who had influenza being well along in years.

During the year we lost our oldest inhabitant, a woman from Queens county who had been a patient continuously since the year 1860. Two other women who died had each been here over 42 years.

Fifteen of the 61 who died were past 70 years of age. Several patients died shortly after their admission, whose physical condition was critical when they entered the Hospital.

The Cost of Maintenance.

To maintain the 843 civil and military patients who were cared for in the Hospital during the year $152,865.48 was expended for all purposes. Based on the daily average in residence this means an outlay for each patient of $235.18 for the twelve months—a per capita cost of $4.52 per week, which is an increase of 67 cents over the year preceding. Food, coal and wages are the largest items on the expense account. No matter what else we get along without we must have these—nourishment, and warmth and guardianship.

The outlay for food of all kinds was $53,942.04. Bread was the heaviest item, costing over $14,000. For heat, light and power $32,045.33 was expended. Coal alone cost almost $28,000.

To pay the staff over $37,000 was required, an increase of nearly $10,000 over what was being paid in the year before the war. We have had to meet the increase in wages that has prevailed everywhere because of the high cost of necessities. Why this has been required of us is not altogether clear. Most of the Hospital staff are provided with bed and board, and higher prices do not affect their pockets to a great extent. But experience has proven that in order to secure and keep adequate help more money has to be paid out. Offers of higher wages would entice our entire staff away from us even if in the end they were no better off. The larger sum seems to attract even though none of it can be saved. Some of the employees are married, and could not maintain their families on the old scale of pay.

The results from the cultivation of the farm land were good. The supplies of food received from it prevented the outlay for maintenance from mounting even higher than it did. The growing season was not altogether favorable. In the earlier weeks the rainfall was insufficient, and in the latter, it was excessive. As a consequence, there was more anxiety and arduous labor than in most years. It was an unusually tedious task saving the hay, and before it was all housed the acres of oats were ready for the reaper. The root crop was abundant and in the main of excellent quality. All the vegetables except potatoes were as good as we could buy anywhere.

The products of the farm and gardens, valued at prices current in this vicinity were as under:

Beans, green	$ 11.50
Beets	153.00
Cabbage	60.40
Carrots	1,264.50
Celery	56.00
Eggs	25.00
Green fodder	850.00
Hay	5,125.00
Lard	48.51
Lettuce	60.00
Mangels	550.00
Milk	7,900.80
Oats	1,742.90
Parsnips	417.00
Peas	14.00
Pigs and Produce	1,200.00
Pork consumed	1,463.44
Potatoes	750.00
Potatoes, fodder	126.00
Rhubarb	75.00
Straw	1,092.00
Turnips	1,049.00
Sundries	200.00
Total	$23,964.05

The expenditure for seeds, implements, wages, etc., was in the neighborhood of $10,000. The value of the farm cannot be measured in dollars and cents. The actual profit lies in the value of the milk, pork and vegetables, which necessary articles of diet, the tilling of the land obviates the necessity of buying. The hay, oats and some of the roots are consumed by the farm stock in the process of providing the staples mentioned.

The live stock on hand at the end of the year consisted of 9 horses, 37 milch cows, 6 heifers, 4 calves, 2 bulls, 28 store pigs, 27 slips, 33 sucking pigs, 8 brood sows and 2 boars.

The Annex housekeeping stored for the winter use of the farm workers the following quantities: 127 quarts strawberries, 116 quarts rhubarb, 10 quarts currant jelly, 57 quarts raspberries, 157 quarts blueberries, 76 quarts cranberries, 47 quarts cranberry jelly, 200 quarts crab apples, 51 quarts apple jelly, 57 quarts pumpkin, 24 quarts apple preserve, 92 quarts canned beans, 41 quarts peas, 198 quarts mixed pickles, 22 quarts mustard pickles, 95 quarts rhubarb relish and 150 quarts chow-chow.

While the outlay for the upkeep of the institution was greater than foreseen, happily the estimated income was surpassed by more than $10,000. The payment of old debts accounted for part of this. The receipts from paying patients were much larger than usual. These have more than doubled in the past four years. There are more patients who pay, and the rates are higher to meet the increased cost of maintenance. They are still lower than in other institutions. Indeed, our highest rate is on a par with the charges at the average boarding house, where nursing, care and attention, and medical treatment are not required.

Revenue of $58,881.60.

The total revenue for the year was $58,881.60. Its sources are as follow:

For maintenance of patients by municipalities	$24,801.00
For maintenance of patients by private means	29,315.75
For admission frees from municipalities	2,160.00
For admission fees from private sources	1,360.00
For articles sold, chiefly from farm	1,244.85

Deducting the recipts for the year from the expenditure, the amount paid out by the Province for maintaining the Hospital was $93,983.88, well nigh four times the sum received from municipalities.

From the following figures may be seen how the past year compares with some that immediately preceded it:

Year	Number Resident	Number Admissions	Average Annual Cost per Patient
1909	525	139	$162.76
1910	537	136	156.90
1911	540	148	155.45
1912	562	162	151.60
1913	591	173	147.20
1914	610	151	153.64
1915	616	173	149.96
1916	641	190	147.25
1917	630	177	175.92
1918	635	160	200.47
1919	648	176	235.18

Only necessary repairs have been made during the year, although they are always considerable in the upkeep of spacious old buildings like ours. The roof of the wing extending from the rear of the central building had to be renewed. Though this had been restored only ten years ago, after the fire, the woodwork was found to be rotten, probably because of insufficient ventilation. The roofs of farm outbuildings also demanded and received quite extensive repairs.

Our chief interest has been in the stalled the boilers and built the furcompletion of the new power house. During the summer the contractors inaces under them. We hope during the coming winter to move into it, and that a saving of fuel will result.

President Beatty On Y.M.C.A. Work

In a foreword to an attractive little pamphlet issued by the Railway Y. M. C. A. of Canada, Mr. E. W. Beatty, President of the C. P. R., pays a tribute to the work of this association.

"The high value of the work," says Mr. Beatty, "of the Young Men's Christian Association in the interests of men and boys has come to be generally and properly recognized, particularly on account of its efforts and accomplishments on behalf of our soldiers during the recent world war.

"Among the various spheres of the Association's activities not the least valuable is the work of the Railway Branches which minister to the intellectual, the social, the moral and the physical needs of railway men irrespective of race or creed.

"The inception of this work on the Canadian Pacific Railway dates back to 1906 when the building at Revelstoke, B.C., was erected, and so well satisfied were the Company's officers with the experiment tried there that nine additional branch associations have since been established. These provide home surroundings and comforts for men in train service when away from home and to many employees located at outlying points they afford the only home facilities that are available to them.

"It is not only that good meals and clean beds and baths are provided, but the educational advantages, the recreational facilities and the opportunities for social intercourse amidst wholesome surroundings must necessarily contribute to the well being of the men and benefit the community in which they live, and the Company with which they are employed.

"The eminently satisfactory results of this work on the Canadian Pacific lines in the past for which I desire to express my admiration and appreciation, have without doubt been achieved through the earnest and cordial co-operation of the Company's employees with the Association's offices and staffs, and with the continuance of their united efforts the future success of the work can, I feel sure, be confidently entrusted to them."

The Railway Y. M. C. A. provided 140,000 beds to railway men and served 328,000 meals in 1919. Its buildings are valued at $581,000.

St. Stephen, N. B.

Is known as the home of several important industries, nation-wide in reputation for excellence of products and for financial success largely due in every case to the clear-sighted vision and practical business ability of the men behind. One of these thriving industrial plants is devoted to the manufacture of high grade ladies' shoes, known from coastto coast. For the purpose of providing additional capital to take care of the rapidly growing business, and giving the investor the advantage of the good-will and reputation built up by the management through seven years of successful operation, WE OFFER

$100,000

CLARK BROS. LIMITED OF ST. STEPHEN, N. B.

Dividends payable quarterly Feb., May, Aug. and Nov.
Price 100 and accrued dividend, Yielding 8 per cent.

Clark Bros. manufacture high grade Mackay stitched ladies' shoes of such well known brands as "Supreme Lady", "Clark's Special", Canadian Maid". Winnie Walker", etc. These Shoes are of a quality as good as can be made by that particular process and retail at a price within the reach of 75 p c. of the women of the country, a fact which at all times assures a wide and ready market.

Not only does the investor assist in the development of a Canadian industry, but he has the further assurance that the material used for these ladies' kid boots is produced in the British Empire, and is tanned and prepared in a Canadian factory which has sold its entire output to Clark Bros. Ltd. at a price whoch gives them a saving of 18 to 20 cents a foot over all competitors. As from three to four feet of leather enter into one pair of ladies' shoes, the saving in cost at once becomes apparent. This firm is at present producing from 700 to 800 pairs a day, and the increase in capital is designed to bring the plant up to full capacity of 2,000 pairs daily. Hydro-Electric power at low cost is used in operation. The factory building, valued at $18,000, is owned by the town of St. Stephen and is rented on a seven per cent. basis.

Personality enters very largely into the success of a business of this kind, and Mr. John F. Clark, who continues as manager, has already demonstrated what grit and persistence will do. Associated with him are his brothers, James F. Clark, of Montreal, general salesman, for the concern, and William F. Clark, also of St. Stephen, a practical shoe manufacturer. Insurance on the lives of these men for practically the amount of the entire issue, protects the preferred shareholders, the policies to be held by trust company.

Backing up successful Canadian industry with good Canadian money should be not only the habit but the principle on which Canadians from now on should do their investing.

The weather surely is thorough in its work of searching out every joint and remote place in farm machinery. Paint and varnish, however, are equally searching and prolong the life of implements wonderfully. Is your machinery protected?

Everybody walks and some door-steps look as if everybody walked there. Paint your door-steps for protection as well as looks. Keep a coat of surface protection spread on them to take the rough service. Save the surface.

Somebody Blundered!

THIS house is not old, but look at its condition! Anything but an actual photograph from which this drawing was made might be considered an exaggeration.

Note the way the building has rotted away under the eaves owing to neglect.

Paint — surface protection — would have prevented this ruin. The unpainted metal eave troughs rusted through, water got into the eaves and decay did the rest. Repairing will be expensive business.

This extreme case points an example which any property owner will admit is impressive. Any waste through lack of surface protection is unnecessary waste. Damage has to start at the surface. If the surface is undamaged the property lasts—repair bills are avoided—money is saved.

Your house may or may not be well protected—it will pay to make sure. And remember that surface protection is vital to everything you own—to all wooden and metal property, to outbuildings, to machinery, to furniture, to everything exposed to weather or wear. A thousand and one things grow old before their time simply through lack of surface protection.

Examine your property as closely as you would expect some one else to do it to whom you had entrusted its care. Save the surface and you save all.

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT is issued by the Canadian Save the Surface Campaign Committee, for the purpose of educating the public in the Preservative and Protective value of Paint, Varnish and Allied Products for the Conservation of Property, and has received the approval of the Canadian Trade Commission in the following words:

STARTED RUMPUS IN U. S. CONGRESS

Washington, March 13.—A frank statement by a witness that members of Congress would support soldier relief legislation in order to get votes started a rumpus yesterday in the House Ways and Means Committee, considering a multitude of bills dealing with the subject.

F. P. Keech, a New York broker, formerly a lieutenant colonel in the Inspector General's Department, opposing additional compensation for former service men, declared some legislation might be expected because of political pressure.

The inference that members would be swayed through fear of losing votes was characterized by Chairman Fordney as an insult to the committee and Congress.

Keech replied his statement was not intended to be insulting, but that it was nevertheless true.

Jellicoe's Report on Naval Defence of Dominion Leaves Much for Further Discussion

No Mention Made in the Report of Defence of the Pacific, Yet It Is Realized That It Is There That Any Future Menace to Canada Will Come From.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 15.—Some criticism is being heard of Lord Jellicoe's report because of the things which it does not contain, and as it now stands it would certainly need to be supplemented by some additional report dealing with specific aspects of our naval defence problem, before it would be of great service. It is not improbable that there is such a report, or that one is contemplated, which for imperial reasons could not be made public at present.

There is no reference, for example, to the naval basis either on the Atlantic or on the Pacific, although Lord Jellicoe was specifically asked for recommendations on the latter, as he mentions in the introduction to his report. If there is a further and confidential report, it is probable that the fact will be elicited by questions in Parliament. It is quite conceivable that for reasons of Imperial policy this additional report has been made in confidence.

Defence of the Pacific.

With the menace of German naval ambition removed by the destruction of its fleet for many years to come, there would not seem to be much reason for any elaborate plans of naval defence on the Atlantic coast of Canada. It is understood that the British naval policy of the near future will be directed more to the Pacific. The British treaty or understanding with Japan expires within a year or two. Although much criticized when it was made, it proved its value in Imperial affairs, but latterly there has been a pretty strong feeling against its removal. The Allies were far from satisfied with the part Japan played in the late war, and there is a very large body of opinion distrustful of the rising nation of the East, which does not hesitate to predict that Japanese world ambitions will be the next to be dealt with.

The Japanese Menace.

Australia and New Zealand embarked on their policy of naval construction with Japan in view, and it is still the dominating menace in their opinion. It is the only naval power from which Canada could have anything to fear. It is scarcely conceivable, if Canada is to have a navy at all, that its main force would be concentrated anywhere but on the Pacific, which makes it all the more remarkable that there should be no mention in the Jellicoe report of Pacific Coast defences. If our naval policy is developed, therefore, it would seem reasonable to assume that the greatest development would take place on the Pacific Coast. It may very well be doubted if any naval policy will be framed during the present session of Parliament, at least. It is a matter which would not be dealt with in the absence of the Premier, and it is one pregnant with such possibilities of difference of opinion that the natural tendency would be to leave it alone as long as possible.

Government Caucus Tuesday.

There will be another Government caucus on Tuesday, when the matter will probably come up. Sir Robert Borden has repeatedly expressed himself as opposed to any Naval policy being put into effect before the matter is referred to the people. During the naval debate in the session of 1909-10, he said: "I am as strong as any man in this country in the belief that it is the duty of Canada to participate upon a permanent basis in the defence of this Empire, and to do our reasonable share in this regard, but I say that to attempt to force a policy of this kind upon the people of Canada, without giving them an opportunity to say yea or nay with regard to it, would be one of the worst mistakes that could be made by any man who really favored that policy."

Sir Robert moved an amendment at that time, one clause of which was as follows: "That no permanent policy should be entered into involving large future expenditures of this character until it has been submitted to the people and has received their approval." At a later date, in March, 1912, he declared that before any permanent naval policy is put into force the people would be given an opportunity to pronounce on it.

There are two further matters which must be given weight in the consideration of this question. One is whether the United States will enter the League of Nations, or remain aloof. The other is the approaching Imperial Conference, when the whole question of Imperial defence will be considered and a permament policy in all probability determined. In view of all the circumstances, it would seem as though our naval policy is not one to be hastily determined.

Growth of the revolutionary movement in Korea is also reported by the despatch, which says that the Japanese authorities have made many arrests. At the same time, the Soviet message asserts, the Japanese Government is taking special measures to fight the communist movement at home.

Montreal, March 15.—The naval problem will be discussed at a government caucus tomorrow, according to a special Ottawa despatch to the Gazette.

Boston, Mass., March 15.—A distress call was received here early today from the steamer Mohawk, fifty miles off Frying Pan gas buoy on the Carolina coast. The message asks for a tow and said the engines had broken down.

RAILWAYS TIED UP BY WEATHER

are now covered for long distances with coatings of solid ice, which plows and flangers will not remove and can be only cleared away by crews of men with pick axes. The ice and water that has formed in the Fredericton yards is more than a foot deep and both the C. P. R. and C. N. R. are finding it practically impossible to move freigat cars from the local sidings. Trains on the St. John Valley, Canada Eastern, Gibson Otis and Minto branches were all more or less tied up today by the formation of ice on the rails, which necessitated carrying crews of men in some cases to go out and clear off the tracks when the trains become ice-bound.

The Gibson branch train which left here this morning for Woodstock, experienced difficulty all the way until it reached Cardigan, where it is stalled in the ice and snow and it will be some hours before it will be able to proceed on its way.

The train which left Otis this morning for Fredericton is also hard hit by the ice and snow and no definite word was received as to its location.

The Minto train which left this morning for Minto and Chipman, got no further than Glennie and is stalled there.

The train on the Canada Eastern division of the C. N. R. was four hours late in leaving here Saturday night, due to a run-off in the yards at St. John, which delayed the Valley train three hours and the heavy ice and snow delayed it another hour on the way up, not reaching here until about 10 o'clock Saturday night. The C. N. R. from Newcastle today was two hours late in arriving here.

Fire in Queens County.

Quite a bad fire occurred at Union Settlement, Queens Co., Saturday morning, at 3 o'clock. It started in a barn and destroyed two cows and a horse. Flames caught the house, burning it to the ground with all its contents. The house was owned and occupied by John McCaw. He and his wife had a narorw escape from being burned to death, escaping only with their night clothes.

Visiting His Old Home.

Fred McLean, the local boy who has been playing with the Quebec team in the National Hockey League, has arrived in the city to visit relatives and is receiving a warm welcome.

Because.

Because there is no doubt it will at least be one of the last, and because we were so fortunate as to be able to make ice again, there will be twelve long bands at the rink tonight. Why not enjoy them?

Miss Ella DeLong, of Boston, Mass., is in the city, the guest of her sister, Mrs. Frank S. Lister. Miss DeLong accompanied the remains of her niece, Miss Millicent H. Lister, from Boston, and remained here for the funeral.

BIG DAMAGE FROM STORM AND FLOOD

Washouts on Railways Out of St. John While Lightship and Buoys Are Adrift.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

St. John, N. B., March 15.—Newly reported incidents illustrate the extent of the damage caused by the storms and floods. On the C. P. R. traffic was held up by washouts at Lawlors Lake, five miles from St. John, where the lake overflowed and caused a washout thirty feet in length and on the Courtney Bay branch where a section of the trestle was destroyed at the fot of Duncan street. In east St. John a house floated from its concrete foundation and was badly shifted. In parts of the city section the water was so deep in the roads that belated travelers had to swim their horses through. In Courtney Bay the large suction dredge was blown from its moorings and grounded on the breakwater. The Musquash bell buoy was carried away and lost and many other buoys along the coast were cast adrift.

The local office of the Marine Department was advised today that the lightship at Sambro Ledge was sent adrift and made Halifax only with great difficulty. The St. John harbor ferry was blown from its moorings and knocked about for three hours before tugs succeeded in getting it back to the dock.

Owing to the dislocation of the telephone service between St. John and Moncton connection was made yesterday via St. Stephen, Woodstock, Fredericton and Newcastle. Two crews were sent out from St. John and one from Newcastle to make repairs along this section.

Better fire protection for the city's wharves and warehouses at Sand Point was demanded by the Board of Fire Underwriters, whose representatives appeared before the council this morning. A committee of the council will report on the instalaltion of a sprinkler system.

The Deposed Socialist Government Realizes Its Power Through the Calling of a General Strike—The Entente Likely to Have a Part in the Final Decision.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 15.—The German national assembly has been summoned by the Ebert government to meet at Stuttgart tomorrow, Tuesday, March 16.

(Berlin advices Sunday night reported that the old German government had established its seat at Stuttgart, the capital of Wurttemberg.)

Austrian Press Comment.

Vienna, March 15.—The newspapers in their comment on the overturow of the Ebert government in Berlin show marked anxiety over the situation.

The Neues Wiener Abendblatt says it is a crime "that a handful of blind generals and other officers who organized the plot" can occupy public buildings but cannot compel workers to work. It adds that "a durable military victory is impossible."

The Neue Tag says: "Berlin is not all of Germany and a successful raid is not a victorious revolution. The Entente still has a word to say."

"It is a great misfortune," comments the Neue Frie Presse, "that strikes Germany. The Entente should not in any circumstances recognize an overthrow that the German people in their entirety do not approve."

The Wiener AllGeimeine Zeitung laments that Germany is torn by her own fault and likens the condition of Germany to that of Austria. "The fate of Central Europe is being decided," says the newspaper.

British Editorial Opinion.

London, March 15.—Indications of the trend of a large part of London's editorial opinion relative to the German revolution are given in headlines appearing over comment on the situation this morning. "Allies fooled again," "The old Adam" and "As was to be expected," appeared as captions in leading journals today. There is a disposition to await developments before giving any decisive opinion as to happenings, which are as yet admitted to be imperfectly reported.

"While our politicians have been filling us with hot air, the junkers have been biding their time," said the London Daily Mail. "In dealing with Germans one must always calculate upon bad faith. They set up a 'dud' government to sign the treaty of peace but when the time comes to carry out the capitulations the junkers again take charge. Whatever their purpose is, our visionary statesmen are ignorant of its nature."

To Order Early Elections.

Berlin, March 15.—Chancellor Kapp issued a proclamation yesterday promising to order elections for the Reichstag as soon as quiet is restored.

Look for Early Collapse.

Berlin, March 15.—The conviction has prevailed from the start among men not identified with the present revolution that it will be short lived, as it is outwardly without the support of the conservatives or the reactionary leaders, and it is viewed in many quarters as a "trial balloon" which will collapse shortly.

The most immediate danger is recognized as a general strike throughout Germany, which has already been proclaimed in many of the principal cities, including Berlin. In the meantime, the old government is recovering its nerve, and seems to have very liberal support from the federal states.

Prince Joachim Still in Prison.

Berlin, March 15.—Measures looking to arrests calculated to prevent an uprising against the new regime have been abandoned, according to a statement issued here yesterday. Prince Joachim Albrecht, who has been confined to Moabit prison since his attack on Allied officers at the Hotel Adlon, ten days ago, has not as yet been liberated.

GIANTS RELEASE COONEY AND ROSS

Infielder Goes to Milwaukee While Pitcher Returns to San Antonio.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

San Antonio, Tex., March 15.—Manager McGraw yesterday made the first cut in the roster of the Giants when he announced the release of Jimmy Cooney, the shortstop, to the Milwaukee club of the American Association and the return of Sidney Ross, left handed pitcher, to the San Antonio club of the Texas League. It is expected that many more releases will be made known before the Giants leave next Friday night.

Ross came to the Giants in 1918 and was sent to Toronto. Last season he went back to San Antonio and came up for another trial. When the Giants leave for their tour with the Red Sox the recruits will go direct to Rocky Mount, N. C., where the Rochester club will train.

The American Horse Breeder says: Leslie K. Morse announces that Kenoza Park, Haverhill, again will be on the New England racing map, the property having recently been taken over by a syndicate which will put the plant in shape and stage a fair and race meeting, to be known as the Massachusetts State Fair, some time this fall. The return of Haverhill will be a welcome addition to the New England chain of tracks, as the course at Kenoza Park is a fast piece of dirt, and under the promised progressive management a big fair enterprise is in the making.

First Steps Are Taken To Continue N.B.H.L. in 1921

Either a Six Club Circuit or League of Two Sections Will Be the Outcome---Three New Rinks Ready Next Winter ---November 23rd Is Date Set For Annual Meeting--Unsportsmanlike Players to be Suspended or if Necessary, Expelled to Curb Rowdy Tactics.

As suggested and predicted in The Gleaner the first steps towards the continuing of the New Brunswick Hockey League next season have already been taken.

During the Fredericton club's visit to the North Shore last week a meeting of the excutive was held at Chatham when the future of the league was discussed and Tuesday, November 23rd, 1920, was named as the date for the next annual meeting.

There are indications that another season will see a marked change in the composition of the N. B. H. L. One proposal is to have a six-club circuit by the addition of a couple or more North Shore towns and the other is to take in at least four more towns and then divide the league into two sections.

The latter suggestion seems to meet with the most favor and if it is adopted the chances are one section will be made up entirely of North Shore towns, including Chatham, Bathurst, Campbellton and one other; while Fredericton and Marysville are counted upon for the western or southern section with St. Stephen and Sussex or Woodstock counted upon to provide the other two teams.

The league, it will be noticed, is thus figuring upon three new rinks being in operation next season. These include, of course, the rebuilding of the structure that collapsed this year at Bathurst while St. Stephen promoters have announced their intention of having a new rink built this year and the story published in The Gleaner some time ago that there would be a new rink in readiness for use at Marysville next winter has since been officially confirmed.

Will Extend Playing Season.

The competition of a league with two sections is therefore dependent upon getting one more club than already assured for each section, which those interested claim is within the realm of possibilities. Winners of the two sections will then play off for the championship and possession of the trophy donated this year by R. Chestnut & Sons, Ltd., of this city. The proposal to extend the schedule has met with so much popular favor that the chances are the first games will be played in the week between Christmas and New Years and the league fixtures continued until at least March 1st.

An important step which has been taken has been a movement towards the suspension and even complete expulsion of players who are guilty of unsportsmanlike actions on the ice during the progress of games. One or two players' names already have been mentioned in this connection, one being a goaltender who is earning an unenviable reputation for slashing at opposing players when play is not his net and the referee's attention is directed elsewhere, and it is said that if warnings do not have the desired effect they will at once be "blacklisted." Just how the idea would be worked out is not known; there is, of course, the proposal to have the referees make reports to league headquarters and the other is to have specially appointed agents of the league stationed on the side-lines who would report direct to the league officials.

Should Be on Permanent Basis.

Before another season rolls around, therefore, the chances are there will be some important changes in the hockey situation. The N. B. H. L.—like the Fredericton club, only not to such a pronounced extent—has been carried on this year with an incomplete organization centred on the North Shore and with officials who have been actively connected with one of the clubs. The proper basis upon which to carry on a hockey league is to have an executive head who is not associated with any club, who will handle all the business of the league—including the assigning of referees to the games—and keep the organization going along in a smooth and business-like manner. Such a system would cost something but the expense would be small as compared with the benefits that would accrue and only a trifling percentage of the gate receipts would be required to provide the funds of an organization that would soon become permanent. —J. D. B.

They surely are trying to make racing one of the features at the Vermont State Fair. The programme for White River Junction, Sept. 28-Oct. 1, is: Free-for-all, $1,200; ;2.14 trot, 2.16 trot, 2.14 pace, 2.16 pace, $1,000; 2.18, 2.20 ,2.25 trotting, 2.17, 2.20, 2.25 pacing, $700.

Boston Must Increase Offer to Get Chatham

Latest reports regarding the proposal for the Chatham team as champions of the New Brunswick Hockey League to go to Boston for two games at the Pavilion are that unless the Boston promoters increase their guarantee the trip will not be made.

The offer for the trip is said to have come from the Boston A. A. A. through "Red" Synott, a former Chatham boy who has been in Boston for several years and this winter has been playing with a team known as the Boston All-Stars. It is said that the Boston offer was $600, whereas the expenses of the Chatham team have been estimated at $700.

Ottawa, March 15.—The world's championship Stanley cup hockey series between Ottawa and the Pacific Coast Hockey Association winners will open on Monday night, March 22.

Vancouver and Seattle play at Vancouver tonight in the final game of their deciding series, after which comes the games at Ottawa. Vancouver has a lead of two goals.

Season Ends at Toronto.

Toronto, March 15.—The last game of the season in the N. H. L. ended in St. Pats defeating Canadiens 11 to 4. The game was listless and without special interest.

Plans for Next Season.

Montreal, March 15.—Montreal may have two teams in the National Hockey League next season, according to reports which are now generally circulated. The plans call for a six club circuit with two teams here and one each in Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton and Quebec. If Quebec is dropped, as talked of, too, Toronto would have two clubs in a six club circuit or else Hamilton would take Quebec's place and keep on with four clubs in the league.

New York, March 15.—Alfred Goullett and Jake Magin won the 28th international six day bicycle race, which finished on Madison Square Garden at 11 o'clock on Saturday night. They covered 2,379 miles and two laps, as did four other teams.

The Goullett-Magin team won on points in the sprints.

Norman Tallman is anxious to see the dry clay at Readville so he can move the yearling by The Northern Man, 2.06½, out of Anna Bradford, 2.00¾, a bit. He has a hunch that the youngster is a pacer and hopes it is.

Maritime Baseball League

There is a movement on foot to restore professional baseball in the Maritime Provinces.

The initiative is being taken from Moncton, it is said, and it is declared that Fredericton, as three times winners of the old New Brunswick and Maine League, will be invited to take a franchise in the new organization.

So far as can be learned, the plans of the promoters call for teams in Halifax, Amherst, Moncton, St. John, Fredericton and at least one other place. So far as both Fredericton and St. John are concerned, they are both without suitable or properly equipped baseball grounds but both places have the fitting up of modern plants in prospect.

PERTINENT COMMENT on SPORTING TOPICS

With hickey about all odver, basketball will hold sway until baseball starts.

Fred McLean, who wound up the hockey season with the Quebec club in the N. H. L., is expected to visit his old home here soon.

Fredericton fans would like to see Sussex in the N. B. H. L. next season. The Sussex team made the hit of the season here.

Joe Malone of the Quebec club was the leading scorer in the National Hockey League with Newsy Lalonde as runner-up. Nighbor led the champion Ottawa club's scorers.

The demands upon his time to keep up with his studies at U. N. B., where he is a junior in the electrical engineering course, made it impossible for Bert Burgess to get away last week with the Fredericton Hockey Club.

Owner Somiskey of the Chicago White Sox has gone to the Pacific Coast to try to induce Chick Gandil to return to his club. That should end the reports that Gandil is being "black-listed" as a result of the investigation into gambling charges.

If the Chatham team goes to Boston it's a cinch that "Shorty" Veno will be offered opportunities to remove to the Hub before next winter to play with one of the teams backed by wealthy and influential sportsmen who have attractive jobs for good Canadian hockey material.

The Maritime & Maine Shortship Circuit managers cannot afford to lose much more time before they complete their organization for 1920. While there is plenty of snow on the ground yet, the time is almost here when announcements must be made to prevent stables which migint be secured getting hitched up elsewhere.

Both Boston clubs in the major baseball leagues look lamentably weak at this stage. H. H. Frazee through his methods has completely wrecked the Red Sox, while the Braves have been getting worse each season since George Stallings found himself without Fred Mitchell.

Billy Lounsbury is given credit for playing a really wonderful game for Fredericton against Chatham last week. As a matter of fact the U. N. B. winger has been one of the most consistent forwards in the N. B. H. L. this winter.

The conflict that has developed within the management of the Fredericton Park Association is to be regreeted as it will not help the racing game in any way, no matter from what angle it is viewed. There can scarcely be any way by which failure to have last season's business settled up before this late date can be justified and it seems most remarkable that things should have been allowed to drift so long. Washing the family dirty linen in public is poor business, but something of a decisive nature must be done in a hurry to clear the local racing atmosphere. The sooner the Fredericton Park Association returns to legal methods of doing business and gets reorganized according to the provisions of its charter the better it will be for all concerned.

The Fredericton players do not charge Tom Gilbert, who was referee of the Fredericton-Chatham game last week, with showing partiality; it was just a case of incapacity. The game is described as a fair sample of the "forward pass" variety—although not billed as such. "Tart" Titus admits the home team excelled and points to the fact that he had 47 shots on his net to stop, or more than four times as many as Rigley, the Chatham goaler, who frequently was down on the ice in spite of the rules of the game. In the Bathurst game the players cut loose and Joe Currie, the veteran Chatham player, proved incompetent to control the teams. Capt. Schryer is said to have expressed regret at the conduct of his players, but to have professed inability to prevent it. "Patsy" Jewett and Billy Lounsbury retaliated with their fists when attacked, while Rufus Jarvis handed out a beautiful cross check in return for an attack made on him. Young Cripps, who was trying to get into the limelight at his former home town, became disgruntled over his inability to score for Bathurst and slashed Titus across the hand after he had a hard stop. The Fredericton goaler started to swing on the youngster with his war club, but stopped when he commenced to figure the serious results that might follow. From a strictly artistic standpoint the trip was a failure, but the local players are all pleased with the manner in which they were entertained socially. —J. D. B.

YANKEES STARTING SERIES WITH REDS

New York American Leaguers and World's Champions Play Today.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Miami, Fla., March 15.—The first three days of this week should give a fair line on what the Yankees may be expected to do this season. They will try conclusions daily with the world's champion Cincinnati Reds. Pat Moran, although the Reds have been in training only a week, says he is not worrying.

The Reds are all signed up for 1920 except the star southpaw, Dutch Reuther, who is here with the team. Groh and Kopf, the last of the holdouts, arrived Saturday.

Skawkey, Quinn and Thormahlen will do the pitching for the Yankees in today's game against the Reds; while Luque, Ring and Sallee will work for the latter.

WILDE SIGNED FOR A CANADIAN BOUT

(By Canadian Associated Press.)

Toronto, March 15.—Jimmie Wilde, British champion flyweight, will box "Bed News" Eber, of Hamilton, for a guaranteed purse of $6,500 at Windsor Armories, the contest to take place at the end of this month or the first week in April. If Eber, for any cause, should not be ready, Carl Tremaine will be Wilde's opponent.

BRIDE PROPOSES COURT DISPOSES

Suspended Sentence in Massachusetts Court Had Prior Claim on Celia Cronin.

Worcester, March 1.—Central district court probation officers put over a knockout on Dan Cupid today when they stepped in and stopped a proposed marriage between Celia Cronin, 18 years old, 61½ Orchard street, and William H. Buckman, 121 Front street.

Wedding bells will not ring for Celia for six months at least, as a suspension of a six months' sentence given her in December on a charge of larceny of a dress was revoked and she was committed to the house of correction.

The girl is alleged to have filed a marriage license intention to marry Buckman, who she said was a contractor. She told the probation department that she was going to California to live.

Chief Probation Officer Joseph P. McIntyre got in touch with her and tried to talk her out of the proposed marriage. He asked her to bring her intended husband to his office, but she said the man would not come. He then tried to persuade her to go to the House of the Good Shepherd at Springfield, but she refused.

Buckman, when found at the Front street address, said the girl suggested marriage and he thought it more or less of a joke, but gave her $2 to get a license. He now says that he will ask for the withdrawal of his intentions. He came from the west to work for the Worcester Gas Light Company and has been employed by them for about six months.

CLAIMS FROM LOVER.

Defendant Denies Woman's Story of Love and Loan.

Toronto, March 1.—Mrs. Ada Dina Donn, who claimed to have advanced to Harry Rottenburg $950 with which to furnish a home for Mr. Rottenburg and herself, and who lost her suit recently when she sought to recover the money, has appeared against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rose, who presided at the trial of her case, claimed that Rottenburg had made love to her and promised to marry her, but when he got her money he turned a cold shoulder towards her. She stated that she learned afterwards that he was married.

The defendant denied her story absolutely.

"I sincerely hope that it may be provided that no teacher's salary shall be less than $500 per year. At that, we shall be behind many other places.

"I would also recommend that provision be made for officers of this service, who have retired through disability or who may wish to retire for the same cause or who ought to be retired because of advanced age.

"That the salaries of the inspectors ought to be increased and that they be given a bonus for the last calendar year at least.

"I would further recommend that a compulsory attendance law be enacted more in keeping with modern school requirements."

The Scarcity of Teachers.

Referring to the scarcity of teachers the report says:

"Up to this time the cities and towns have not felt the pinch to the same extent as the country districts, but where they formerly supplied their own needs, they now are drawing upon the country districts as fewer Normal School students than formerly are coming from the cities. They are finding better paid work in the banks, business offices and hospitals. It will not be long before the supply from country districts will fail and it is imperative that teachers' salaries should at once be raised sufficiently (1) to provide a living wage; (2) to reward merit and competency, and (3) to meet competition.

"Teachers themselves have been patient and moderate under most adverse living conditions, while in many instances they have formed associations to better conditions, they have observed scrupulously their contracts, and have not caused suffering to innocent parties. They have not struck, but in many cases have resigned when they could properly do so.

"In this Province the higher class teachers have agreed upon a scale of salaries, dependent upon the honor of teachers to carry out.

"In so far as I know, this scale which is not unreasonable, has been generally adhered to by the teachers and not seriously objected to by the school boards concerned, who have frequently of their own accord substantially increased salaries. The result has been a marked increase of salaries of the teachers of graded schools. There have been minor increases to the teachers of ungraded schools but they have been inadequate."

Commission on Teachers' Salaries.

While declaring that he cannot anticipate the recommendations of the commission to consider and report upon increased salaries for teachers, Dr. Carter includes the following in his report:

"A survey was made as to valuations and salaries paid in school districts of $100,000 and under.

"There are districts at present paying as high as $7 on the $100 school taxes, and those paying as low as 15 cents on the $100. Sometimes the richest and the poorest are situated in the same parish. There are school districts in the province with valuations as low as $1,000 and a number of districts having a valuation of less than $5,000.

"Assessment values vary greatly in the different counties and parishes. Some districts, chiefly cities, are assessed at full value, other districts varying from two-thirds to one-quarter. Some poor districts employ teachers of the higher classes and maintain excellent schools, while some rich districts employ cheap teachers and maintain poor schools. Under these conditions it is well nigh impossible to standardize teachers' salaries according to district valuations.

"Such inequalities as have been pointed out in rates of taxation, and modes of assessment, do not provide equal opportunities for pupils nor equal burdens of taxation for ratepayers.

"The poorest districts pay the most for education and get the smallest results. It is safe to say that many school districts are at present paying more than they ought to pay or are able to pay for school privileges and many others much less than they should "Any scheme for increased teachers' salaries should provide for a better equalization of the burdens, and it seems to me this can only be done by distributing them over wider areas. It cannot be accomplished with the school district as the unit for taxation purposes. Any plan devised will scarcely cover all cases of hardship and will need adjustment from time to time.

High prices in London have been given a hard jab by a millionaire Member of Parliament, Harry Mallaby-Deeley, who has opened a clothing store in the Strand, where tweed and cheviot suits of good cloth are sold to the public at prices ranging from $9.50 to $12.75. The suits are ready-made or made to order, and Mallaby-Deeley insists he can produce 10,000 suits and overcoats a week.

True Knights of Faith

"Nay, nay, Sir John, you have gained as much honor as one man can bear, and it were hard if you could not rest now. But I pray you, squire, to tell your master that he is very welcome to our court, and that wines and spices will be served him, if he would refresh himself before jousting."

"My master will not drink," said the squire.

"Let him then name the gentleman with whom he would break a spear."

"He would contend with these five knights, each to choose such weapons as suit him best."

"I perceive," said the prince, "that your master is a man of great heart and high of enterprise. But the sun already is low in the west, and there will scarce be light for these courses. I pray you, gentlemen, to take your places, that we may see whether this stranger's deeds are as bold as his words."

The unknown knight had sat like a statue of steel, loking neither to the right nor to the left during these preliminaries. He had changed from the horse upon which he had ridden, and bestrode the black charger which his squire had led beside him. His immense breadth, his stern composed apearance, and the mode in which he handled his shield and his lance, were enough in themselves to convince the thousands of critical spectators that he was a dangerous opponent. Aylward, who stood in the front row of the archers with Simon, big John, and others of the Company, had been criticising the proceedings from the commencement with the ease and freedom of a man who had spent his life under arms and had learned in a hard school to know at a glance the points of a horse and his rider. He stared now at the stranger with a wrinkled brow and the air of a man who is striving to stir his memory.

"By my hilt! I have seen the thick body of him before today. Yet I cannot call to mind where it could have been. At Nogent belike, or was it at Auray? Mark me, lads, this man will prove to be one of the best lances of France, and there are no better in the world."

"It is but child's play, this poking game," said John. "I would fain try my hand at it, for, by the black rood! I think that it might be amended."

"What then would you do, John?" asked several.

"There are maany things which might be done," said the forester thoughtfully. "Methinks that I would begin by breaking my spear."

"So they will strive to do."

"Nay, not upon another man's shield. I would break it over my own knee."

"And what the better for that, old beef and bones?" asked Black Simon.

"So I would turn what is but a lady's bodkin of a weapon into a very handsome club."

"And then, John?"

"Then I would take the other's spear into my arm or my leg, or where it pleased him best to put it, and I would dash out his brains with my club."

"By my ten finger-bones! old John," said Aylward, "I would give my feather-bed to see you at a spear-running. This is a most courtly and gentle sport which you have devised."

"So it seems to me," said John seriously. "Or, again, one might seize the other round the middle, pluck him off his horse and bear him to the pavilion, there to hold him to ransom."

"Good!" cried Simon, amid a roar of laughter from all the archers round. "By Thomas of Kent! we shall make a camp-marshal of thee, and thou shalt draw up rules for our jousting. But, John, who is it that you would uphold in this knightly and pleasing fashion?"

"What mean you?"

"Why, John, so strong and strange a tilter must fight for the brightness of his lady's eyes or the curve of her eyelash, even as Sir Nigel does for the Lady Loring."

"I know not about that," said the big archer, scratching his head in perplexity. "Since Mary hath played me false, I can scare fight for her."

"Yet any woman will serve."

"There is my mother then," said John. "She was at much pains at my upbringing, and, by my soul! I will uphold the curve of her eyelashes, for it tickleth my very heart-root to think of her. But who is here?"

"It is Sir William Beauchamp. He is a valiant man, but I fear that he is scarce firm enough upon the saddle to bear the thrust of such a tilter as this stranger promises to be."

Aylward's words were speedily justified, for even as he spoke the two knights met in the centre of the lists. Beauchamp struck his opponent a shrewd blow upon the helmet, but was met with so frightful a thrust that he whirled out of his saddle and rolled over and over upon the ground. Sir Thomas Percy met with little better success, for his shield was split, his vambrace torn, and he himself wounded slightly in the side. Lord Audley and the unknown knight struck each other fairly upon the helmet; but, while the stranger sat as firm and rigid as ever upon his charger, the Englishman was bent back to his horse's crupper by the weight of the blow, and had galloped half-way down the lists ere he could recover himself. Sir Thomas Wake was beaten to the ground with a battle-axe—that being the weapon which he had selected—and had to be carried to his pavilion. These rapid successes, gained one after the other four celebrated warriors, worked the crowd up to a pitch of wonder and admiration. Thunders of applause from the English soldiers, as well as from the citizens and peasants, showed how far the love of brave and knightly deeds could rise above the rivalries of race.

"By my soul* John," cried the prince, with his cheeks flushed and his eyes shining, "this is a man of good courage and great hardiness. I could not have thought that there was any single arm upon earth which could have overthrown these four champions."

"He is indeed, as I have said, sire, a knight from whom much honor is to be gained. But the lower edge of the sun is wet, and it will be beneath the sea ere long."

"Here is Sir Nigel Loring, on foot and with his sword," said the prince. "I have heard that he is a fine swordsman."

"The finest in your army, sire," Chandos answered. "Yet I doubt not that he will need all his skill this day."

As he spoke, the two combatants advanced from either end in full armor with their two-handed swords sloping over their shoulders. The stranger walked heavily and with a measured stride, while the English knight advanced as briskly as though there was no iron shell to weigh down the freedom of his limbs. At four paces distance they stopped, eyed each other for a moment, and then in an instant fell to work with a clatter and clang as though two sturdy smiths were busy upon their anvils. Up and down went the long, shining blades, round and round they circled in curves of glimmering light, crossing, meeting, disengaging, with flash of sparks at every parry. Here and there bounded Sir Nigel, his head erect, his jaunty plume fluttering in the air, while his dark opponent sent in crashing blow upon blow, following fiercely up with cut and with thrust, but never once getting past the practised blade of the skilled swordsman. The crowd roared with delight as Sir Nigel would stoop his head to avoid a blow, or by some slight movement of his body allow some terrible thrust to glance harmlessly past him.

LOCAL RAILWAY YARDS UNDER ICE AND WATER

Trains Carrying Crews of Men Today to Clear Tracks as They Go Along.

Several branch railways running out of Fredericton are again tied up as a result of the remarkable weather of the week-end during which the temperature dropped from 50 to almost the zero point, the change being accompanied by gales, while the rain storm which commenced on Saturday morning changed into sleet and then snow.

Floods had already commenced to threaten much damage before the temperature commenced its rapid drop and by Sunday the slush which had formed on the sidewalks was covered with a coating of ice, the drains were all frozen up again and another formation of crust, which shone like crystal, was everywhere over the snow, thick enough to hold people who cared to walk upon it and in some places to even bear horses.

On the railways the tracks after being pretty well flooded in many places

STUMPAGE RATES QUESTION MAY GO OVER TO CAUCUS

Government May Delay Action Until Supporters Meet on Tuesday Night.

ANOTHER AMENDMENT SEEMS TO BE EXPECTED

$3.74 Average Gross Receipts Per Thousand of Crown Lands Cut.

The action to be taken by the Provincial Government in the situation brought about in the Legislature by the introduction of the amendment to the Address by Hon. A. J. Murray, leader of the opposition, calling for an increase in stumpage rates from $3 and $3.50 to $7, may not be finally determined until after the caucus of the Government party which has been called for tomorrow night.

There is a very well defined report in political circles today that Premier Foster and his cabinet will declare the amendment to be a direct challenge for a vote of want of confidence in the Government and as such will call upon their supporters to vote it down, at the same time taking the ground that the fixing of the stumpage to be the prerogative of the Government and intimating that action in the matter will be taken in due course by the cabinet.

Another Amendment Coming.

Another report has it that there may be an attempt made to dispose of the amendment by having it declared out of order, and it is said the situation is being carefully surveyed to see if such a way out is possible. At the same time there is also said to be a movement under way to have an amendment to the amendment introduced which would set the new stumpage rate at a figure which would not bring about as radical an advance as suggested by the leader of the opposition. Meanwhile calculations are said to have been made which have shown that the average stumpage collected during the past year on lumber cut on the crown lands was $3.22 per thousand feet while the charges for mileage, fire protection, etc., are said to have amounted to an additional 52 cents, which makes the actual average gross amount paid into the provincial treasury on every thousand feet of lumber cut on the crown lands exactly $3.74

FREIGHT THEFT CASE WILL NOT BE TRIED TOMORROW

Insufficient Notice Given to Have Juries Present at the York County Court.

CASE LIKELY TO BE POSTPONED FOR WEEK

Only Small Civil Docket for This Session of County Court.

The trial of James Dorcas, C. N. R. employee at Napudogan on the Transcontinental division, who was the only one of eleven prisoners arrested in the recent roundup for freight thefts to plead not guilty, will not be proceeded with when the York County Court meets here tomorrow.

Official notice that Dorcas had been sent up for trial did not reach H. G. Fenety, clerk of the York County Court, until today and there was thus not sufficient time in which to have a grand jury and petit jury summoned so as to be in attendance at court tomorrow. It is likely, therefore, that a motion will be made tomorrow to fix a date about a week later for taking up the only criminal case on the docket and in the meantime the juries will be summoned.

It was said today that there was not a large civil docket for the court and that no jury had been summoned.

Civil War Seems To Be The Only Outcome of the Situation.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Stuttgart, March 16.—Refusal to negotiate with the reactionary faction headed by Dr. Kapp, head of the new Government at Berlin, was decided upon here yesterday by the council of the old cabinet, over which President Ebert presided.

Unconditional resignation of the leaders of the new Government was demanded by the Ebert cabinet, which arrived here yesterday afternoon by a special train from Dresden. The national assembly will meet in this city Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock.

EBERT GOVERNMENT REFUSES NEGOTIATION

Announcement was made that the Ebert Government is in contact with almost all points in Germany.

"The constitutional Government," reads an official announcement, "refuses to negotiate, being responsible to the people for the maintenance of the constitution and negotiations would only occasion distrust and confusion and would prolong disorders."

To Hold No Conference.

Copenhagen, March 16.—President Ebert, in officially notifying Dr. Kapp and his associates in the new Government that no negotiations would be held between officials of the two regimes, declared he would direct the country's affairs with Wurttemburg as the capital, according to a despatch received from Berlin.

Civil War Imminent.

Civil war seems imminent in Gerany as a result of the refusal of the Ebert Governent, now sitting at Stuttgart, to carry on negotiations with the reactionary regime which seized power suddenly last Saturday morning.

Unconditional surrender of the men directing the new Government is demanded by President Ebert, who announces he will continue to direct the affairs of the troubled country from Wurttemburg. The German national assembly will meet in Stuttgart tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock.

Berlin is in the grip of a general strike, called by the socialists and labor leaders as a counter stroke to the assumption of power by the Government headed by Dr. Kapp, who has issued a decree threatening all strike leaders and pickets with death or there is interference with vital public services.

Fighting is reported at various points throughout Germany, and it is said there was bloodshed in the suburbs of Berlin yesterday, but it would seem the clashes so far reported have been between militia units and disorderyl crowds. So far as is known armed forces of the two Governments have not come into collision.

The former Empress is well again. The guard about the castle is very strict. A high placed government official assured the Associated Press today:

"The Allies and the world may rely upon Holland to guard the ex-Kaiser, though no more measures will be taken than are necessary to prevent his escape."

Crown Prince Unperturbed.

Wieringen, March 16.—Frederick William, the former German Crown Prince, who is very reserved in expressing his ideas about the counter-revolution, seems to be entirely unperturbed. He may go wherever he likes about the island. His friend Von Zoebelitz, who arrived here Saturday, has been expected for four weeks.

Death Penalty for Strike Pickets and Ringleaders is the Dictum of New Hun Regime

Intense Anxiety is Felt in Berlin Over Continuance of the Strike, With a Possibility of Resulting Famine and Epidemics From Lack of Proper Food.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 16.—Men who act as leaders or pickets in the general strike called in this city as a protest against the reactionary revolt were threatened with the death penalty in a proclamation issued yesterday by Dr. Kapp, the new Chancellor.

The order for the infliction of capital punishment was to be effective after 4 o'clock this afternoon, and was based on the decree prohibiting any strike or passive resistance in any vital service which was issued earlier in the day by the Minister of Defence. The Chancellor's proclamation follows:

"Ringleaders who are guilty of acts specified in the decree for safeguarding important services and for the protection of labor and peace will, as well as strike pickets, be punished with death. This decree is effective from four p. m. today."

There is intense anxiety over the prospect of a continuance of the strike, with a possibility of famine and epidemics resulting from the lack of sanitation and the stoppage of the water supply.

No world capital probably ever before experienced such a complete paralysis of all its living and commercial facilities as Berlin did yesterday. The Hotel Sdlon made heroic efforts to provide food for the British and French and American missions and newspaper correspondents, but gave up the task at 10 o'clock yesterday morning when the last of the kitchen force walked out, leaving foreigners to shoft for themselves. It was a common spectacle subsequently to see frock-clad diplomats returning to the hotel from foraging expeditions carrying brown paper parcels, foodstuds, oil stoves and other necessities.

PALE ANAEMIC GIRLS AND BOYS

Need the Tissue Building, Blood Making, Strength-Creating Elements Contained in Vinol

Druggists Guarantee Vinol Will Make Them Strong, Robust and Rosy, or Return Your Money

It is not natural for a child to be pale, sallow, thin, ailing and puny, with no appetite, and with little limbs, thin and scrawney.

What such children need is more iron in the blood and the strengthening, tissue, and body building elements of good old-fashioned cod liver oil, without the oil, such as is contained in VINOL, together with other vitality-making ingredients.

VINOL increases the red corpuscles and enriches the blood, quickens the circulation, increases the appetite, aids digestion; soon the cheeks regain their rosy hue and the little limbs fill out round and plump and instead of being thin, sickly, ailing your child is transformed into a happy, healthy child, strong, robust and rosy.

Mrs. L. Andrews, of Bainbridge, N. Y., says: "My little daughter, 13 years old, overworked and was rundown, tired all the time, nervous, had headaches, couldn't eat and had to stay out of school. VINOL has built her up. She has a good appetite, no more headaches and has returned to school."

For all run-down, nervous, anaemic conditions, weak women, overworked men, feeble old people and delicate children there is no remedy like VINOL.

OLD WESTERN CASE STIRS PARLIAMENT

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 16.—After one hour's discussion, in which several Ministers participated, it was decided that the case of James Conner, which has been brought up in Parliament for the past three years by the member for Springfield, Man., R. L. Richardson, be investigated by some official satisfactory to that member. Connor was a preventive officer in Manitoba and was summarily dismissed in 1917 before the present Government came into power, and the member for Springfield has ever since been desirous to ascertain the reason, even to the extent of lying awake at nights thinking about it. As the case was presented to the House, Connor, a $700 a year man, was dismissed on the grounds of economy and an $1,100 man was appointed in his place. Whereat, the member for Springfield said, "His indignation naturally burned." It has continued smouldering ever since, and this afternoon the flames burst through the hatches and carried him to the length of a threat to start a party of his own unless he got an immediate promise of action.

The Government, to avoid the catastrophe indicated, surrendered at discretion and promised an investigation. An hour's time of Parliament costs about one thousand dollars, but justice must be done.

THE NAVAL BADGE UNDER DISCUSSION

Canadian Sailors Not Satisfied with Emblem Struck by Authorities.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 16.—The motion of Mr. Duff, of Lunenburg, asking for a copy of all correspondence in connection with granting of a badge to Canadians for naval service came up in the House last night and created a lengthy discussion. Mr. Duff said he voiced the complaint of the sailors, who were not satisfied with the badge, as instead of the little brown disc such as the soldiers wear they had been issued something that looked like a Mexican dollar. He quoted a number of letters from sailors, who said "they would not wear it to a dog fight," as it looked like a military cap badge and was usually taken for one.

He reviewed the action of the committee on soldiers' civil re-establishment, which had listened to the complaints of those interested and made a definite recommendation that the sailors should be given a badge similar to the little brown badge the soldiers wear, but with "naval" for "C. E. F."

He reviewed the work of the sailors in the war, pointing out that a number of Canadians had taken part in the great enterprises at Zeebrugge and Ostend. He refused the claims of the Naval Department that the sailors were satisfied with it, and read a letter from the G. W. V. A. stating that they had no objections. He urged that only one class of badge be issued and advised that those which had been issued should be brought in.

The Minister of Marine showed a cut of the badges and explained the three classes proposed to be issued. He claimed that the barge proposed to take their place would be mistaken for a soldier's badge and would not satisfy the men. After a number of members had spoken on both sides of the House, nearly all of whom favored the request preferred by Mr. Duff, the motion to bring down the papers was agreed to.

Mrs. Fred Ebbett and Miss Deborah Ebbett, of The Barony, and Mrs. J. Chesley Hallett, of Bear Island, were among the visitors in the city on Saturday.

Miss E. G. Scheid, of the Public Health Department, is in St. John today.

The Lobbies of Parliament To Be Sacred Ground Which Pressmen Forbidden to Tread

At the Instance of Speaker Rhodes the House Passes Resolution of Exclusion, Which Will Make the Work of the Press Correspondent Much More Difficult.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 16.—At the opening of the House today, the doors were closely tied against the members of the press gallery. The fourth estate is never admitted for prayers, which are on the exclusive behalf of the members only, but today after prayers the House went into secret session for fifteen minutes to discuss a proposition of the Speaker that the press should be excluded from coming into close contact with the members. They may gaze upon them from the lofty heights of the Press Gallery, but closer they may not come, and the lobbies in front and on either side of the chamber, which is the only convenient place where the members may be easily and conveniently seen, are hereafter sacred ground.

The same order of exclusion applies to the Senate also, and two ancient representatives of the "bulwark of privilege" who had unwittingly strayed into the sacred precincts today in order to get into touch with the world for a brief space were summarily ejected.

During the secret session the Speaker presented his scheme of exclusion to a small House, many of the members apparently having heard of the matter for the first time, and succeeded in having it put through. The leader of the Government, of the Opposition, and even of that democratic body, the Farmers' party, which has been declaiming throughout the length and breadth of the land for openness and publicity, gave their assent.

In effecting this segregation of the members of the House from the outside world, the Speaker is apparently introducing something which is absolutely new to this democratic country, and should have some effect in retarding the advance of democracy.

In the mother of parliaments at Westminster, and at Washington, the press has free access to the representatives of the people, but Canada is to set a precedent and the name of Hon. Speaker Rhodes will hereafter be linked in connection with this "reform." It should be understood that the arrangement of the new House is such that the strict carrying out of this rule will make it extremely difficult to see the members at all, unless they are to be hunted out separately in their rooms, which are scattered all over this enormous building.

If the new order was designed to make the work of the correspondent at Ottawa as difficult as possible, it will effectually accomplish its purpose. The new order came as a surprise not only to the press, but to a great number of the members of the House, who expressed themselves as being quite out of sympathy with the proposal, and suggested that it seemed to cast a suspicion of a desire for a lack of publicity, which they had no sympathy with. Under such circumstances it is not improbable that the matter will again be brought up, and the privileges which the newspapermen of this and all other countries where there is a free parliament have enjoyed from time immemorial will be restored to them.

DIPHTHERIA HITS UPPER BLACKVILLE

Family Sick for Days, One Died, and No One to Attend Them.

[Chatham World.]

A young daughter of an Upper Blackville household returned the other day from a small mining village of Nova Scotia and slept that night with two members of the family. These two and three of the other members of the house were soon prostrated with the disease and one of them died. The neighbors were afraid to go to the house, the Board of Health representative in the parish kept away, and it was two days before the corpse was taken away for burial. Dr. Ryan was the first to go to the relief of the diseased family, and he found a pitiful sight—one corpse, four suffering from the worst type of diphtheria, and seven others huddled together in their very small cottage, with no medicine and not much food. He telephoned for antitoxine. Dr. Desmond soon afterwards visited the pesthouse and treated the sufferers. It was very difficult, he found, to get any definite information from the girl respecting where she had been, what she had been doing, and whether or not she was sick before returning, but he feels sure that she has very recently recovered from the disease and brought it home in her clothes. Dr. Desmond will be after parish Board of Health representatives with a sharp stick if they do not promptly act in such cases and report them to him.

GIRL SENT TO JAIL.

Inmates of Disorderly House at Chatham Arrested, Some Fined, Others Sent to Jail.

[Chatham World.]

Last Wednesday night the police raided a house on Castle street, kept by a woman named Mrs. Warren, who came here from Kent county. The police arrested two girls—Alma Clarke, of Millbank, and Christina Thibideau, of Brantville—and a young man They were brought before the magistrate the following morning. The young man was fined $45; the Clarke girl was given two months in jail, and each girl was given a suspended sentence of two years. Mrs. Warren was given a week to leave town, and she left on Monday en route to Chatham.

Died in Montreal.

A telegram from Montreal on Saturday announced the death on that day of Mrs. Geo. Coster (nee Holdbrook), widow of Rev. Dr. Coster, for many years the esteemed head of the St. John Grammar School. Mrs. Coster left St. John long ago for Montreal. An accident occurred to her some time since by which she was seriously injured, and since last July she resided in the Convent of the Sacret Heart at Sault au Recollet, where her death took place. A daughter, Mother Clare, a religious of the Sacred Heart, was a member of the community at Sault an Recollet, and died there last summer. A few years previously another daughter, Mother Grace, died in the same institution. Mrs. Coster was 89 years of age, and she was in the full possession of her faculties up to the end of her brief fatal illness. A charming old lady of distinguished appearance, Mrs. Coster enjoyed the warm friendship of many persons she met during her residence in Montreal, and her death will be deeply deplored by them as well as by her old friends in St. John. Two sons survive, Charles J., St. John, and Robert, New York.—St. John Globe.

A CANADIAN NAVY.

As between a naval policy looking only to the purely local defence of Canadian ports and coasts and one looking to the real defence of Canada through Canadian participation in the naval effort of the British Empire, the choice for Canada is clear. To provide only for guarding Canadian ports against attack would not be to provide naval defence for Canada any more than it would have been defending Canada in the great war to have maintained a military force in this country to resist invasion. Canada's military frontier in the war was the battle line of France and Belgium and had victory over the enemy not been achieved on that frontier no defence in Canadian territory could have saved Canada. Canada's naval frontier is on the high seas, and if an enemy of this country triumphed on the high seas its victorious navy would make short work of any purely local Canadian naval defence. If the enemy were defeated on the seas by British naval forces in which Canada was not represented, we would be in the sorry position of being saved by Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand.

Lord Jellicoe, of course, does not attempt to advise Canada as to which of the two policies should be hers. He merely advises what in his opinion her naval requirements would be under either policy. And if Lord Jellicoe's opinion were the final word as to these requirements, Canada might very well settle her naval question at once. As the Ottawa Journal well says, we must do our proportional share in maintaining the naval defence of the Empire, for in the naval supremacy of the Empire rests our own safety in the eventuality of war, and we are not going to let the people of the other parts of the Empire pay for that safety.

But the requirements of Canada in contributing her proportional share to the naval defence of the Empire cannot be definitely determined until it is decided what the extent and character of the naval establishment of the Empire are to be, and that decision depends on the outcome of two issues, one of which is beyond the control of Britain. These issues are, first, as to what are the most effective types of naval craft in modern warfare, and, second, whether or not the United States is to enter the League of Nations.

The decision of the United States must materially influence the naval programme of the British Empire. The United States is now considering plans for a navy the equal or superior of any in the world—which, of course, means the equal or superior of the British navy. If America stays out of the League, the chances are she will go ahead with these naval plans, and that course would be followed no doubt by naval expansion on the part of Japan. The problem of the maintenance of the British naval position would then take on a new aspect and would have to be faced by Great Britain and the Empire. Britain, whose defence is on the seas, could not remain idle while gigantic naval forces were being erected by other powers, even friendly powers. She must be sure of her strength at sea. But should the American republic come into the League of Nations she very likely would greatly modify her present plans and there probably would be a limitation of naval establishments all around, and Canada's share in the Empire naval defence would be proportionally smaller.

The question of what are the most effective types of warships has arisen out of the war, and is being strenuously debated. The tentative programme of the U. S. Naval Department provides for big battle cruisers, and Japan is also building such vessels. But Great Britain, we believe, has abandoned work on three sister-ships of the Hood, the world's largest battle cruiser, and such eminent authorities as Lord Fisher and Sir Percy Scott contend that the day of the big ship and heavy armament is past. They claim that the light cruiser, the destroyer, the submarine, and the airplane are the naval weapons of the future. It would seem inexpedient in the absence of urgency for Canada to hurry into the construction of ships that shortly might be condemned as obsolete.

The Canadian Government, we think, has done well to take up the question of the position of Canada in respect of naval defence, and Lord Jellicoe's report may be of very great value in the formulation of our naval plans no matter to what extent his recommendations may require modification as a result of the outcome of the issues we have mentioned. But as our requirements depend upon the extent of naval defence required by Britain in the future, and as the extent of Britain's naval establishment will turn, depends largely upon whether or not there is to be a complete League of Nations embracing the United States, Canada cannot wisely do very much, we think, until the United States decides what she is going to do. The Government might very well postpone the submission of a definite policy for a short while. It is not likely to be long now before the United States gives her answer—probably not more than two or three months. There is nothing to be lost by moderate delay.

GOVERNMENT AND STUMPAGE AMENDMENT.

The Government may be expected to do much fencing on the stumpage amendment. The public will be interested in watching the operation. There is no thought that the Government will meet the situation in a manly way; but there cannot [illegible] to be interest in the dodging. Nat[illegible] and in accordance with practice, the members of the Legislature who have contracts with the Crown, who are lessees of Crown Lands, will not vote on an amendment which effects their contracts; nor should they be counted for or against any decision or action having to do with the subject matter of an amendment which has a direct bearing on their personal or business interests. It is to be regretted that the Government of this province is so bound up with interests which have recently developed a great deal of the selfish spirit that it cannot act independently, that it cannot adopt and enforce a sane policy for the collection of a much needed revenue to reasonably develop the public services; but there is nevertheless a widening interest in the situation as it is now generally understood.

FARMERS AND DAIRYMEN.

Fredericton extends a cordial welcome to the members of the New Brunswick Farmers' and Dairymen's Association, who opened their annual convention here today. It is now nearly half a century since the Association first saw the light of day, and during that time great advancement has been made in matters pertaining to the culture of the soil and in animal husbandry. This has been due in great part to the counsel of wise and sagacious leadership, with which the Association has been singularly blessed in the past and which, it is to be hoped, will still remain a portion of their heritage.

The call to the farm today is a most impelling one. No class in our citizenship is in a more prosperous condition or with a brighter future portrayed. The conditions that drove so many of the boys from the farm in the past are no longer in evidence, while the home life has been made more pleasant for young and old.

Many important subjects are to come before the Association for discussion during the present sessions and will undoubtedly receive the same careful attention that has been bestowed on agricultural matters in the past.

The appointment of the new Clerk Assistant in the Legislative Assembly was made by the Government and gazetted before the House met. This usurpation of the authority of the Assembly was probably not intentional, notwithstanding that there has been much of that kind of thing within the last three years. Lack of knowledge of proper procedure is one of the many weaknesses of the Foster Government.

THE BYE-ELECTION IN CARLETON CO.

Member of Parliament Curious as to Visit of Cabinet Ministers on That Occasion.

Ottawa, March 15.—In the House of Commons, today, Mr. Casgrain had a series of questions to ask with regard to the visit paid by three members of the Cabinet to Carleton-Victoria County, N. B., during the by-election of October last. "They did not," Sir George Foster said, "use a Government private car for the expedition." The object was to take part in the by-election.

"Whether," Sir George added, "their object was attained or not can be answered by each individual according to his views."

Anticipating Increased Sessional Allowance.

The Fredericton coachmen, evidently anticipating a considerable increase in the sessional indemnity of the legislators, have jumped their fare from 25 to 50 cents. The new arrival, travelling light, has the choice between hiring himself at ten cents a minute to walk to the Queen or giving it to the coachman. Most of the arrivals would fine it difficult to earn fifty cents so easily.—Chatham World.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Turton, formerly of this city, but now of Montreal, are guests today at the Barker House.

NEW BRUNSWICKERS IN MURDER CASE

Victims of Shooting in Maine Said to Have Lived in Kent County.

St. John, March 16.—William Pomeroy, one of two men arrested at Jackman, on the Canadian Pacific line in Maine, on Sunday, charged with murdering Robert C. Moore, a boarding house keeper, at Greenville Junction late Saturday night, is said to have formerly worked in St. John, but it is thought he is a Nova Scotian. J. C. Scott, who was arrested with Pomeroy on the same charge, is said to belong to Oxford, N. S., and Mr. and Mrs. Moore are believed to have been former residents of Canaan, Kent Co., a station on the C. N. R., nineteen miles north of Moncton.

According to Mrs. Moore, two men, former boarders at the house, entered her home about 10 o'clock Saturday evening and forced their way upstairs to where her husband was taking a bath. They opened fire with a revolver, five bullets hitting Moore, one in the abdomen, two in the chest and two striking his arms. As Moore fell the men fired at Mrs. Moore, hitting her in both arms. When she went to the door and called for help the men escaped from the house.

Moore died at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon. His wife was taken to the hospital in Greenville and will recover, it was expected last night.

The prisoners are being held in the Piscataquis county jail at Dover for a hearing next Monday.

MARITIME DAIRY SCHOOL IS URGED

Truro, March 15.—The need of a maritime dairy school will be brought to the attention of the Federal Government this week by a committee consisting of Mr. Brandt, of Fredericton, Secretary for Agriculture for New Brunswick; Hon. Mr. Lee, Minister of Agriculture in the Prince Edward Island Government, and Dr. Melville, Cummings, of Truro, Secretary for Agriculture for Nova Scotia. They are a sub-committee appointed by a committee representing the dairymen of the Maritime Provinces. Dr. Cumming left for Ottawa on the Maritime express this afternoon.

Moncton, N. B., March 15. — The death occurred this afternoon of Mrs. J. W. Humphrey, formerly Miss Martha Sewell, residing at 34 Archibald street. Mrs. Humphrey took ill early this morning, and passed away before a doctor, who had been summoned, arrived. She was forty-three years of age and is survived by her husband and three sons, Harold James and Lloyd. Harold is a student in Mount Allison College and a returned soldier.

Mrs. G. R. Turner is spending a few days in St. John with friends.

The Stock Market

New York (Wall Street), March 16—Prompted largely by the reported collapse of the German revolution and the rapid improvement of foreign exchange, stocks rose vigorously at the lively opening of today's session. Gains of 1 to 5 points attended the initial trading in steels, motors, equipments, and oils. An early reaction of two points in Texas Company was soon replaced with an actual gain of 8 points. Leather, food, textile and chemical issues, as well as numerous miscellaneous shares, helped to swell the large volume of operations in the first half hour. Investment rails also displayed moderate improvement.

ST. JOHN SCHOONER MISSING MONTHS

The three-masted schooner Thomas W. H. White is so long overdue on a passage from Perth Amboy to St. John that grave fears are felt for the safety of the vessel. Laden with coal the schooner, in command of Capt. O. Clarke and carrying a crew of six men, left Perth Amboy Dec. 5 and a week later she arrived at Vineyard Haven. The passage to St. John was resumed Dec. 22 and since that time no tidings have been received from the vessel.

FROM THE PEOPLE

AMERICANS TAKE CANADIAN CHECKS AT PAR.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—It is thought that the following circular letter sent by a prominent American exporting firm to its Canadian trade, a copy of which was received at this office, may be of interest to the readers of your paper:

"To our Canadian Friends:

"We appreciate very much the loyalty of our customers in Canada who have continued to place with us their orders in spite of the adverse exchange conditions.

"As concrete evidence of this appreciation we have decided to accept your checks at par. They will be deposited in Canadian banks and we will from time to time use these funds for the purchase of Canadan bonds.

"This action is an expression of sincere desire on our part to help Canada and yourselves as well as make possible the non-interruption of our cordial, pleasant relationship with you."

Yours,

G. C. WOODWARD,
American Consul.

Campbellton, N. B., March 12, 1920.

A HUMAN PENDULUM.

To the Editor of The Gleaner,

Sir,—The question put by a correspondent about the way a person would fall through a hypothetical hole through the earth was one that many a student stumbled over in recent examinations. Some thought the victim of the experiment would fall slower and slower as he neared the centre of the earth, finally stopping there. Others thought he would fall faster and faster till he reached the other side, but didn't trouble to explain what would stop him or if he would pop out at the other end.

As a matter of fact his motion would be much like that of the pendulum of a clock. He would go faster and faster until he reached the centre then start slowing down until he came to a dead stop at the other side of the earth. At this point he should reach out and grab somebody by the ankle, for otherwise he would start a return trip without using stopover privileges. The pendulum analogy can be used to explain the motion still further, for in each case the cause is the effect of gravity, which pulls everything toward the centre of the earth. When the pendulum passes the lowest point it starts "rising," so the pull toward the centre of the earth retards it. When the man falling through the shaft passes the centre of the earth the attraction pulls him back and slows his speed down. Whether the man landed upside down or not would be detemined just as in the case of a diver—it all depends on the "takeoff." If he started absolutely feet first, with no "turning over" movement, he would arrive feet first; that is, upside down compared to the people on the other side.

The time for the trip would be about forty or forty-five minutes. Moreover, it is a remarkable fact that if we could bore a perfectly straight hole from any one place on the earth to any other, and coast through it on a frictionless car, the trip would take exactly the same time.

It is understood, of course, that the above statements ignore resistance of the air, the fact that no car is frictionless and that the earth is not perfectly round, and its centre of gravity is not exactly at its geometrical centre. Any one of these things would alter the results of the above discussion enormously if taken into account.

Yours,

PAUL.

SCHOOL CHILDREN CARRIERS OF GERMS

Every Child Should Be Protected from Colds—They May Lead to 'Flu.

Medical health officers have found that in many cases children who are themselves healthy are carriers of disease. Children mix so freely and so informally with their playmates that the danger of infection is a real and constant one. These facts show conclusively that parents can not be too careful in paying prompt attention to symptoms developed by their children. At the first sign of a cold in the head immediate measures should be employed to allay the symptoms, particularly as it is well known that many dangerous diseases such as 'flu first appear in the form of a "simple cold."

To break up a cold, tone up the system and reduce the inflammation that accompanies such symptoms there is nothing so good as Grip-Fix. This remedy which has many successful years behind it, is prepared from the formula of a well-known physician. This formula appears on every box of Grip-Fix. You owe it to your children and to yourself to buy the remedy that honestly displays the names of all its ingredients.

All you have to do is to follow directions carefully—Grip-Fix will do the rest. In a single night even a bad cold will be relieved.

Grip-Fix may be obtained at all drug stores for 35 cents a box.

COMPLETELY GRIPPLED

Terrible Experience of Mr. J. Harrop

It is seldom that anyone who has been continually exposed to every weather condition does not contract some form of Kidney or Rheumatic trouble. In many cases, cold, settling in the kidneys, so weakens those important organs that they are unable to filter the waste and poison out of the blood. The latter is carried throughout the body, causing uric acid to accumulate in the joints, with consequent rheumatism, stiff joints, swollen ankles, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, constipation, torturing pains in back and side and head. These ills can all be made right. Gin Pills give quick, certain and sure relief. Read what Mr. J. Harrop writes to us:—

"I have been crippled up so completely that I could not stand. Work was out of the question. A few doses of Gin Pills put me right. I cannot praise Gin Pills too much, and every home should have a box."

Gin Pills can help you. If you suffer from backache, or have that dreadful feeling of lassitude, with floating specks before the eyes, highly-colored urine, stone in the bladder and general debility, get Gin Pills at once. At all druggists or dealers, 50c. Money refunded if you are not relieved. A sample large enough to demonstrate its value, free on request.

ANNUAL REPORT ON FACTORIES

104 Accidents During Year, 6 of Which Resulted Fatally.

The ninth annual report on the inspection of industrial establishments in the province has been submitted by John Kenny, factory inspector, for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1919, and among other items has the following:

During the years that have elapsed since my incumbency of the office of Fatory Inspector, many and various changes have taken place in the industrial life of our province, all of which have a tendency toward progress and prosperity. It is, therefore, with some degree of satisfaction that I am in a position to state that the year covered by this report has kept pace with the years that have preceded it, along the lines of industrial expansion and activity. This is evident from the fact that a number of our progressive manufacturers have found it necessary to enlarge their premises more or less, in order to cope with the ever-increasing demand for their products. Also several of our old and reliable firms who have been doing business in this province for a great many years, and giving employment to a large number of hands, are adding to their vast numbers of plants by the erection of others in different parts of the province. This is a strong tribute to the enterprise and energy of our manufacturers, and speaks well for the future welfare of our province.

Industrial Advancement.

In looking over the industrial situation I find that a great many improvements have been made and that many additions have been made. The Fraser Companies, who operate several large saw and shingle mills in this province, are erecting a small mill at or near Magaguadavic Station which will have a capacity of about 35,000 feet of long lumber per day, and will furnish employment for forty hands. This company is also erecting two large mills at Athol, Restigouche Co., one a long lumber mill with a capacity of 125,000 feet per day, and one shingle mill with a capacity of 12,500 per day. These mills are expected to give employment to 175 hands.

The Miramichi Lumber Company, who do an extensive lumber business on the North Shore, are building a new mill at Douglastown. This mill will be 200 feet long and will be equipped with a band mill and re-saw. It is proposed to make it first-class and up-to-date in every particular. This company expects to employ in connection with this mill about 75 men. It will have a capacity of 75,000 feet of long lumber per day.

Accidents During Year.

During the year the total number of accidents reported was 104; of these six terminated fatally.

Employment of Child Labor.

In demanding that other counties keep their little children from the inhumanity of premature labor, we in Canada must remember to do our part, and keep our own protecting laws in their behalf right up-to date. Raising the age limit to 15 years is but one improvement that we must have, and have soon.

Portable Mills.

In New Brunswick there are about 146 portable saw mills and they confine their operations principally in the counties of Kings, Queens, Albert, York and Charlotte.

Hotel Inspection.

The act for the prevention of accidents by fires in hotels is well adhered to by the installation of proper and necessary appliances for the safety of guests, and it is gratifying to note that with the possible exception of four hotels, all proprietors have made improvements which make them reasonably safe for guests in event of fire.

Moving Picture Films Rejected.

During the year there have been in operation 49 picture houses located in different parts of the province, and at the present time there is in course of erection at Moncton two buildings to be devoted to the exhibition of motion pictures.

During the year 4,708 reels of film were examined; of these 4,643 were passed by the censors and 115 condemned.

Looking back over the period of my official career, I have no hesitation in saying that, while conditions under which persons earn a livelihood in our industrial establishments may not in all places be ideal from every point of view, they are at least 75 per cent. better than when I took up the work, with regard to the essential things, safety to life and limb, and as to ventilation, sanitation, etc.

THANKSGIVING FOR OUR PRESERVATION

Discussion in British Commons on Proper Day for Annual Thanksgviing in Empire.

London, March 15.—Sir J. Butcher asked the Premier in the House of Commons whether the Government would consider resolutions passed by the Empire movement committee suggesting that the Premiers of the Empire might advise His Majesty to appeal to his peoples in all parts of the Empire to hold religious services on Empire Day, May 24th, and also suggesting that the time had come for the use of an Imperial flag, with symbols representing the Dominions, Crown Colonies, and Indian Empire, to be flown on all places of worship and public buildings, as a token of thanksgiving for the preservation of the Empire.

Mr. Lloyd-George replied: "His Majesty's Government will take these resolutions into consideration, but I am inclined to think that, having regard to the way in which the whole Empire chose the anniversary of the signing of the armistice for thanksgiving, and in view of the impressiveness of that occasion, it might be preferable that similar action should be taken in future on that anniversary."

Captain Loseby—"Will the right hon. gentleman also consider whether patriotic forces of the country are not now sufficiently strong to enable us to insist that children in the national schools should be taught history and the duties of citizenship."

The Speaker asked the honorable member to put his question on paper.

URGE STOPPAGE OF TURK BRUTALITY

Canadian Meeting at Which a Demand Was Made to Stop Armenian Massacres.

Brantford, Ont., March 15.—A mass meeting in sympathy with the Armenians was held here Sunday afternoon, when a resolution was passed demanding that the massacres of the Armenians should cease, and that the boundaries of Armenia should be changed so that the Armenian nation would not be entirely surrounded by hostile Moslem countries, as provided in the peace treaty.

Mayor McBride presided at the meeting, and addresses were given by a number of prominent citizens, including W. F. Cockshutt, M. P.

TWO MEN AND A WOMAN GASSED

Fumes from a Gas Stove Responsible for Three Deaths in Toronto House.

Toronto, March 15.—Mrs. Sarah Callicott informed the police on Saturday that it was not she who was asphyxiated with her husband, John Callicott, and M. Johnson, in a room on King street West, where the bodies of the two men and a women were found last Friday. It was at first supposed that the dead woman was Mrs. Callicott, but the police received notification on Saturday that the body was that of Miss Mary Stewart, of Buffalo. Fumes from a gas stove caused the three deaths.

MADE IN CANADA

St. Stephen, N. B.

Is known as the home of several important industries, nation-wide in reputation for excellence of products and for financial success largely due in every case to the clear-sighted vision and practical business ability of the men behind. One of these thriving industrial plants is devoted to the manufacture of high grade ladies' shoes, known from coastto coast. For the purpose of providing additional capital to take care of the rapidly growing business, and giving the investor the advantage of the good-will and reputation built up by the management through seven years of successful operation, WE OFFER

$100,000

CLARK BROS. LIMITED OF ST. STEPHEN, N. B.

Dividends payable quarterly Feb., May, Aug. and Nov.

Price 100 and accrued dividend, Yielding 8 per cent.

Clark Bros. manufacture high grade Mackay stitched ladies' shoes of such well known brands as "Supreme Lady", "Clark's Special", Canadian Maid", Winnie Walker", etc. These Shoes are of a quality as good as can be made by that particular process and retail at a price within the reach of 75 p c. of the women of the country, a fact which at all times assures a wide and ready market.

Not only does the investor assist in the development of a Canadian industry, but he has the further assurance that the material used for these ladies' kid boots is produced in the British Empire, and is tanned and prepared in a Canadian factory which has sold its entire output to Clark Bros. Ltd. at a price whoch gives them a saving of 18 to 20 cents a foot over all competitors. As from three to four feet of leather enter into one pair of ladies' shoes, the saving in cost at once becomes apparent. This firm is at present producing from 700 to 800 pairs a day, and the increase in capital is designed to bring the plant up to full capacity of 2,000 pairs daily. Hydro-Electric power at low cost is used in operation. The factory building, valued at $18,000, is owned by the town of St. Stephen and is rented on a seven per cent. basis.

Personality enters very largely into the success of a business of this kind, and Mr. John F. Clark, who continues as manager, has already demonstrated what grit and persistence will do. Associated with him are his brothers, James F. Clark, of Montreal, general salesman, for the concern, and William F. Clark, also of St. Stephen, a practical shoe manufacturer. Insurance on the lives of these men for practically the amount of the entire issue, protects the preferred shareholders, the policies to be held by trust company.

Backing up successful Canadian industry with good Canadian money should be not only the habit but the principle on which Canadians from now on should do their investing.

Chancellor Kapp Locks Horns With Organized Hun Labor In a Struggle for Mastery

The New German Dictator Realizes That His Power Will Be Short if the Strike is Long Maintained—Serious Fighting at Steglitz and Hamburg.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Berlin, March 16.—Heavy troop reinforcements were received yesterday by the new government in Berlin. The troops marched into Berlin from various nearby garrisons.

Chancellor Kapp, who was carried into office on the point of only 8,000 bayonets three days ago, has thus far been able to produce only military backing for his government. The basis of his political authority and the source of support other than military which he claims continue to be matters of profund mystery.

Notwithstanding this the new Chancellor appears buoyant with optimism, born of the conviction that the insurrection which he leads will win the people.

The Chancellor yesterday locked horns with organized German labor in a struggle for mastery. However, if the general strike which is already paralyzing Berlin by reason of its unexpected ramifications, and which is reported swiftly spreading to the nation's vital industrial centres, should be maintained for only three days, the view of many observers here is that it would be unreasonable to assume that he would establish his government firmly, despite his armed forces.

15 Killed at Steglitz.

Berlin, March 16.—Fifteen persons are reported to have been killed and many wounded in fighting yesterday at Steglitz, in the southwest outskirts of Berlin.

At Charlottenburg, a western suburb of Berlin, four persons are said to have been killed and six wounded as a result of collisions.

Many Victims at Hamburg.

Copenhagen, March 16.—Thirty persons were killed, including some women and children, in yesterday's fighting in Hamburg between citizens' guards and Baltic troops, advices from that city state. Among the killed was Captain Berchtold, commanding the Baltic troops.

Shippers to Get Liquor.

This morning Police Magistrate Limerick granted the application of Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, for the return of five barrels of liquor consigned by them to a local vendor and seized by Liquor Sub-Inspector Fraser D. Saunders on November 1st and 3rd of last year. The case has been standing for some time, the application having been made by the Montreal firm through P. J. Hughes. One barrel of the liquor was seized by Sub-Inspector Saunders on Nov. 1st, 1919, at the local vendor's drug store, and the other four were seized at the C. P. R. station on Nov. 3rd, the Inspector making the seizure on the grounds that there was a technical omission in the labelling.

Dr. G. G. Melvin, chief medical health officer, returned from St. John this morning, where he had been on departmental business.

"Higher Education" Has Its Shortcoming

Every once in a while somebody cracks the old time joke about an unsophisticated individual mistaking a fire alarm box for a mail box.

Last night it really happened in Fredericton and the guilty person was none other than a student at one of the local educational institutions, according to an eye-witness, who has since been busy trying to learn the address of the "green horn."

The student in question pulled in an alaarm from box 23, at the corner of George and York streets, anad when the fire department members learned of the circumstances of the false alarm their ideas on the value of higher education dropped with an awful thud.

THE FARMERS AND DAIRYMEN MEET

About 125 in Attendance at the Opening Session—The Business Transacted.

The 44th annual meeting of the Farmers and Dairymen's Association of New Brunswick opened this morning in the Assembly Hall of the Provincial Normal School with the President, F. C. Alward, of Havelock, in the chair. In all about 125 were in attendance at the opening meeting, of whom about 75 were delegates from the various agricultural societies in the province.

The meeting opened with an address on Clover Culture and Seed Selection, by O. C. Hicks, of the Soils and Crops Branch of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Hicks dealt with the importance of the seed selection and the clover culture in connection with haying. He emphasized the fact that the United States and Great Britain had called for large shipments of hay for forage for horses in overseas work in the Great War. Upwards of 642,225 tons of hay had gone out of Canada during the war.

L. T. Floyd, Provincial Apiarist, was the next speaker, dealing with the beekeeping industry, its opportunities and progress. The speaker stated that the advance in the province in connection with this industry was becoming marked and more people were now interested in bee culture than ever before. As an important branch of agriculture it was rapidly becoming prominent.

Geo. B. Danby, Assistant Horticulturist, was the next speaker, dealing with horticulture. Mr. Danby described the wonderful strides New Brunswick, and especially the St. John Valley, had made in apple growing and stated that New Brunswick apples were becoming world famous for their quality. He discussed demonstration orchards, dealing with the processes of spraying and pruning, which he advised the farmers to adopt in their orchards, as it provided a better chance for the young trees and would eventually bring forth splendid results.

A. C. McCulloch, Poultry Superintendent, followed Mr. Danby. His address was on the subject of poultry raising. He referred to the action of the Agricultural Department in bringing in the bred-to-lay poultry to help the pure bred strain gain the mastery over cross bred hens because of their better laying. In referring to the poultry clubs and the manner in which they were carried on he stated that artificial incubation, it was found, had to be resorted to if the department wished to gain any ground. Thirty-six poultry clubs for boys and girls had been formed in the province in the last two years, with a membership of about 500 and these were doing splendid work in producing the pure bred-to-lay strains.

This evening the formal opening takes place and addresses will be made by the President, C. F. Alward, His Worship Mayor Reid, Hon. J. F. Tweeddale, Minister of Agriculture, and Vice-President J. E. De Grace.

MIRAMICHI PULP MILLS ARE SOLD

the stumpage from $3 and $3.50 to $7 per thousand feet.

It was said this morning that when the Legislature resumes this afternoon Premier Foster will continue the debate on the Address, but further than that no announcements have been made as neither the Governor nor Opposition party have yet held a caucus. The House will not sit tonight, however, as the Government party's first caucus is to be held. In Government circles it was said that the Opposition leader's amendment would not be allowed to pass and that the Government would assert that it is the prerogative of the Executive Council to fix the stumpage rates. It is said that supporters of the Government are being given assurance that the administration is preparing to increase the stumpage rate to $5 per thousand feet after August 1st next.

Shall License Holders Vote?

The proposal has been made that members of the Legislature who are licensees of Crown lands or interested in companies controlling licenses should not vote on the Murray amendment. At the same time stories of hitherto unheard of prices being paid for stumpage on private lands are being told; one member of the House admitted he had received as high as $14 per thousand this winter, while it is said the Miramichi Lumber Company paid the Nashwaak Pulp & Paper Company as high as $14 per thousand feet for stumpage on lumber cut on the Gibson lands on the Miramichi.

The stumpage question has overshadowed the other matters in the Speech from the Throne, but it is impossible to accurately predict how long the debate on the Address and amendment will continue.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

U. S. INCOME TAX BRINGS VAST SUM

New York, March 16.—All day yesterday great lines of men and women from millionaires to day laborers fought for a chance to pay their income and excess profits taxes at the customs house, this being the last day for making returns. POTATO MARKET IN THE AROOSTOOK

[Fort Fairfield Review.]

For quite a part of the past week no potatoes at all have arrived in the Fort Farifield market. A few, however, have straggled in between times, but the roads are too poor to do much hauling upon. Those that have arrived have brought about $5 a barrel as a standard price. The shippers, would, of course, pay more but for the shortage of cars and their consequent inability to get stock to market. Unless things open up a great deal more rapidly pretty soon it will indeed be hard for Aroostook to get her potatoes to market before June. But presumably the snow blockades and other troubles that keep cars away cannot continue forever. Seldom is it that so little potato buying and shipping is done in Aroostook in February and early March as has been the case this year.

A Terrific March Blizzard Ties up Traffic in the Prairie Provinces and Cripples Wires

The Railroad Services Completely Disorganized—Winnipeg Practically Isolated from All Points West—Storm Started Sunday Night Across Alberta.

(Associated Press by Leased Wire.)

Winnipeg, Man., March 16.—As a result of one of the worst March blizzards ever experienced in the west, railroad traffic and telegraph and telephone service are still badly crippled throughout the west. The storm, starting late Sunday night, swept across the prairie from Alberta, reaching Winnipeg at noon yesterday.

Heavy wet snow, accompanied by high winds, carried away telegraph poles in several districts in Saskatchewan early Monday and gradaually worked eastward until Monday night, when Winnipeg was practically isolated from all points west. All Canadian Press wires were down, necessitating re-routing press reports from Vancouver as far east as Saskatoon and Regina.

All railroads reported services completely disorganized from the west this morning, but with clearing weather expected today hope is held out for some improvement. Several trains over the Canadian Government's Railways were cancelled, while others were running as much as fifteen hours behind schedule.

The Canadian Pacific Railway service, while being in many cases much behind running time, is being maintained. West of Winnipeg the storm seems to have hit Brandon hard, while Regina reports the worst tie-up in years.

In Winnipeg the street railway service was being operated under difficulties.

SEATTLE TO PLAY FOR THE STANLEY CUP

A Number of Former National Hockey League Stars on the Team.

VANCOUVER BEATEN BY 6 TO 0 LAST NIGHT

Metropolitans Will Be Ready to Start Games at Ottawa Next Monday.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Ottawa, March 16.—The Seattle team, who are now en route east to play for the Stanley Cup, include a number of former National Hockey League stars, who are well known here and throughout the East.

"Happy" Holmes, formerly of Toronto, is guarding the nets. Bobby Rowe, of Renfrew, and Rickey, a former Ottawa boy, comprise the defence. Jack Walker, whose inimitable poke check is more of a direct hook, and a more potent puck grabber than Frank Neighbor's famous poke, is playing rover.

Frank Foyston, who starred with Toronto in 1914 and Tobin, formerly of Winnipeg, and Riley help fill up the line. The latter is an unknown quantity in the East, as is Tobin.

Riley enlisted at Seattle with the Canadian forces when the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission opened stations in the United States. He joined the Engineers and was captain of their baseball team at the Canadian Segregation Camp which was opened in August, 1915, at Bourley, near Aldershot, in England. His team played off with the Alberta team for the camp championship and afterwards Riley took an active part in athletics at the Engineers' training camp at Seaford in the south of Engalnd.—J. D. B.

Vancouver Vanquished at Home.

(Special despatch to The Daily Gleaner.)

Vancouver, B. C., March 16.—The Seattle hockey team will go east in quest of the Stanley Cup. Last night the Metropolitans, in the final match of the two game play-off series, vanquished Vancouver six to nothing, overcoming the Millionaires' two goal lead on the round secured in the game of the play-off at Seattle, and winning the Pacific Coast Hockey Association series, seven to three.

Seattle's win last night gives them the right to meet Ottawa for the Stanley Cup and the coast champions will board the train this evening for the capital and play the first game of the world's series against Ottawa next Monday.

The Stanley Cup at Ottawa.

Ottawa, March 15.—The Stanley Cup has come back to the capital. It is now in the keeping of the Ottawa Hockey Club, and the Senators will hold it at least until after the world's series next week against the Pacific coast champions.

True Knights of Faith

Suddenly, however, his time came. The Frenchman, whirling up his sword, showed for an instant a chink betwixt his shoulder-piece and the rerebrace which guarded his upper arm. In dashed Sir Nigel, and out again so swiftly that the eye could not follow the quick play of his blade, but a trickle of blood from the stranger's shoulder, and a rapidly widening red smudge upon his white surcoat, showed where the thrust had taken effect. The wound was, however, but a slight one, and the Frenchman was about to renew his onset, when, at a sign from the prince, Chandos threw down his baton, and the marshals of the lists struck up the weapons and brought the contest to an end.

"It were time to check it," said the prince, smiling, "for Sir Nigel is too good a man for me to lose, and, by the five holy wounds! if one of those cuts came home I should have fears for our champion. What think you, Pedro"

"I think, Edward, that the little man was very well abale to take care of himself. For my part, I should wish to see so well matched a pair fight on while a drop of blood remained in their veins."

"We must have speech with him. Such a man must not go from my court without rest or sup. Bring him hither, Chandos, and, certes, if the Lord Loring hath resigned his claim upon this goblet, it is right and proper that this cavalier should carry it to France with him as a sign of the prowess that he has shown this day."

As he spoke, the knight-errant, who had remounted his war-horse, galloped forward to the royal stand, with a silken kerchief bound round his wounded arm. The setting sun cast a ruddy glare upon his burnished arms, and sent his long black shadow streaming behind him up to the level clearing. Pulling up his steed, he slightly inclined his head, and sat in the stern and composed fashion which he had borne himself throughout, heedless of the applauding shouts and the flutter of kerchiefs from the long lines of brave men and of fair women who were looking down upon him.

"Sir knight," said the prince, "we have all marvelled this day at this great skill and valor with which God has been pleased to endow you. I would fain that you should tarry at our court, for a time at least, until your hurt is healed and your horses rested."

"My hurt is nothing, sire, nor are my horse weary," returned the stranger in a deep, stern voice.

"Will you not at least hie back to Bordeaux with us, that you may drain a cup of muscadine and sup at our table?"

"I will neither drink your wine nor sit at your table," returned the other. "I bear no love for you or for your race, and there is nought that I wish at your hands until the day when I see the last sail which bears you back to your island vanishing away against the western sky."

"These are bitter words, sir knight," said Prince Edward, with an angry frown.

"And they come from a bitter heart," answered the unknown knigth. "How long is it since there has been peace in my hapless country Where are the steadings, and orchards, and vineyards, which made France fair? Where are the cities which made her great? From Providence to Burgundy we are beset by every prowling hireling in Christendom, who rend and tear the country which you have left too weak to guard her own marches. Is it not a by-word that a man may ride all day in that unhappy land without sceing that chupon roof or hearing the crow of cock? Does not one fair kingdom content you, that you should strive so for this other one which has no love for you? Pardieu! a true Frenchman's words may well be bitter, for bitter is his lot and bitter his thoughts as he rides through his thrice unhappy country."

'Sir knight," said the prince, "you speck like a brave man, and our cousin of France is happy in having a cavalier who is so fit to uphold his cause either with tongue or with sword. But if you think such evil of us, how comes it that you have trusted yourselves to us without warranty or safe-conduct?"

"Because I knew that you would be here, sire. Had the man who sits upon your right been ruler of this land, I had indeed thought twice before I looked to him for aught that was knightly or generous." With a soldierly salute, he wheeled round his horse, and, galloping down the lists, disapeared amid the dense crowd of footmen and of horsemen who were streaming away from the scene of the tournament.

"The insolent villain!" cried Pedro, glaring furiously after him. "I have jaws for less. Would it not be well even now, Edward, to send horsemen to hale him back? Bethink you that it may be one of the royal house of France, or at least some knight whose loss would be a heavy blow to his master. Sir William Felton, you are well mounted, gallop after the caitiff, I pray you."

"Do so, Sir William," said the prince, "and give him this purse of a hundred nobles as a sign of the respect which I bear for him; for, by St. George! he has served his master this day even as I would wish liegeman of mine to serve me." So saying, the prince turned his back upon the King of Spain, and springing upon his horse, rode slowly homewards to the Abbey of Saint Andrew's.

CHAPTER XXV.

How Sir Nigel Wrote to Twynham Castle.

On the morning after the jousting, when Alleyne Edricson went, as was his custom, into his master's chamber to wait upon him in his dressing and to curl his hair, he found him already up and very busily at work. He sat at a table by the window, a deerhound on one side of him and a lurcher on the other, his feet tucked away under the trestle on which he sat, and his tongue in his cheek, with the air of a man who is much perplexed. A sheet of vellum lay upon the board in front of him, and he held a pen in his hand, with which he had been scribbling in a rude schoolboy hand. So many were the blots, however, and so numerous the scratches and erasures, that he had at last given up in despair, and sat with his single uncovered eye cocked upwards at the ceiling, as one who waits upon inspiration.

"By Saint Paul!" he cried, as Alleyne entered, "you are the men who will stand by me in this matter. I have been in sore need of you, Alleyne."

What the Doctor Says about Twin Beds

IT is no new thought with you, of course—the idea of a separate bed for each member of the family.

This has been the custom with thousands of families for years—a rapidly spreading custom ever since Twin Beds put the separate bed at the service of households where space is limited.

IT is a thing, too, that doctors have long been urging. Not only for the warding off of infections, such as coughs, "sore throat" or grippe, but for the sake of sound sleep.
