Poetry.

REVELRY IN EAST INDIA.

We meet 'neath the sounding rafter,
And the walls around are bare,
As they shout to our peals of laughter
It seems that the dead are there.
But stand to your glasses, steady!
We drink to our comrades' eyes,
Quaff a cup to the dead already;
And hurra! for the next that dies.

Not here are the goblets glowing;
Not here is the vintage sweet;
'Tis cold, as our hearts are growing,
And dark, as the doom we meet.
But stand to your glasses, steady!
And soon shall our pulses rise,—
A cup to the dead already;
Hurra! for the next that dies.

Not a sigh for the lot that darkles;
Not a tear for the friends that sink;
We'll fall 'midst the wine cup's sparkles,
As mute as the wine we drink.
So stand to your glasses, steady!
'Tis this that the respite buys;
One cup to the dead already;
Hurra! for the next that dies.

Time was when we frowned at others;
We thought we were wiser then;
Ha! ha! let THEM think of their mothers,
Who hope to see them again.
No! stand to your glasses, steady!
The thoughtless are here the wise;
A cup to the dead already;
Hurra! for the next that dies.

There's many a hand that's shaking:
There's many a cheek that's sunk;
But soon, though our hearts are breaking,
They'll burn with the wine we've drunk.
So stand to your glasses, steady!
'Tis here the revival lies;
A cup to the dead already;
Hurra! for the next that dies.

There's a mist on the glass congealing;
'Tis the hurricane's fiery breath;
And thus does the warmth of feeling
Turn ice in the grasp of death.
Ho! stand to your glasses, steady!
For a moment the vapor flies;
A cup to the dead already;
Hurra! for the next that dies.

Who dreads to the dust returning?
Who shrinks from the sable shore?
Where the high and haughty yearning
Of the soul shall sting no more.
No! stand to your glasses, steady!
The world is a world of lies;
A cup to the dead already;
Hurra for the next that dies.

Cut off from the land that bore us
Betray'd by the land we find,
Where the brighter have gone before us
And the dullest remain behind.
Stand! stand to your glasses, steady;
'Tis all we have left to prize;
A cup to the dead already;
And hurra! for the next that dies.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE;
—OR—
A TALE OF CUBA.

BY MARIA E. BISBEE.

"Husbands, cherish your wives."—Scripture.

It was one of those balmy sunsets peculiar to the Isle of Cuba. The sun, sinking below the horizon, threw his golden beams on tree, and shrub, and flowers, tinging them with that gorgeous hue so magical in southern climes. The last rays of that glorious sun glittered down a woody dell, which might have served a fairy's home. On one side a gradual eminence, with picturesque road, meandered in the distance; on the other, rich pasture land, covered with wild flowers, waved like the billows of the sea, when swept by a stormy wind. Beyond was the broad Atlantic, whose waves washed the Cuban shore; it lay sparkling in the distance calm as the summer breeze that glided over the soft waters like a haven of rest to the world-worn voyager.

In the midst of the pasture-ground, rose an isolated mound, like a citadel of defence to the surrounding Portuno. On the eastern side of this mound lay the entrance to one of those caverns so common to Cuba, whose crystalized walls, and dark explorations, add so much to the romance of the isle. The aperture was obscured by the wild passion flower, whose rich clusters sparkled like fallen stars amid the dark green leaves. This shrubbery was thrown hastily aside, and a tall elegant Spaniard appeared.

"Ah!" he exclaimed, with a look of disappointment, "she is not here! Yet at this sunset hour, this is her favorite resort." With a slight frown he commenced ascending the hill.

If he had looked a little beyond, in the dingle covered with wild-flowers, he would have seen two laughing eyes glancing roguishly from the perfumed vines; and had he been less intent on his own thoughts, he would have heard the smothered laugh of a happy heart, as it broke upon the summer air.

Reader let us peep into the dingle of beauty. Do you see that lovely girl reclining on yonder bank? Life has but commenced with her. How innocent she looks, reclining upon a bed of convolvulus, with one arm around the neck of a Newfoundland dog, who apparently conscious of her wishes, is crouching before her, with his paws on her lap, and his large lustrous eyes gazing earnestly into the sweet face before him. This is Alice Travers, the heroine of our story, who evinces, in that high placid brow, and that dark expressive eye, the capacity of suffering and the powers of endurance.

She was attired in a simple robe of white muslin, with a bunch of wild flowers twined in her flowing tresses. The only ornament on her person was a hair bracelet clasped with a circle of gold; she touched this clasp, and revealed a face of manly beauty. For a few moments those dark eyes were rivetted on the miniature, and a bright flush suffused the pale forehead. She bent her head, and kissed it fervently.

"Oh! dearest, may I be all that you could wish; as high-souled, as good, and as pure [illegible]

Had that young, unsophisticated girl made an idol, as so many do?—was she worshipping it?

At this moment the vines were separated from the opposite side; the same tall, graceful figure, who emerged from the cavern, entered; as he did so, a glowing smile irradiated his fine face.

"Ah! dearest Alice, have I at length found you? Are you aware that I have sought you through every glade, copse, and even cavern on the plantation?"

"I know not, sir knight," said the young girl, tauntingly, "why you should thus intrude on my privacy."

"Alice, do not mock me longer—I have come to tell you earnestly and truly how much I love you! Do not frown but listen patiently. We have been playmates for five years; during all that time, young as we were, I have loved you with intense devotion—loved you without encouragement, without hope. Whenever I have told you this you have discarded me with a laugh. Are you incapable of serious attachment? Or is there some favored suitor, unknown to me?"

"Ferdinand," said a soft, low voice, "you will always have my friendship; my love it is not in my power to bestow."

"And why not your love?" said the youth earnestly. "You cannot have given it to another. Although surrounded, as you are, by a host of admirers, I have watched you with the jealous eye of love, yet I can detect no preference. If you do love, do you not owe it to my long, earnest devotion to acquaint me with it."

"With you, Ferdinand, I have ever been ingenuous. If I have not been perfectly so, you must attribute it to maiden modesty, and not to want of sisterly affection."

Had Alice looked up, as he pronounced these words, she would have been appalled. The whole expression of his noble face before her was concentrated agony! To tell the truth Alice dare not raise her eyes, but touching the spring of the bracelet, revealed to the astonished gaze of the young Spaniard the face of his rival. For an instant he bent his eyes earnestly on the miniature, then in tones of greatest agony, exclaimed—

"For God's sake, Alice, why did you keep this from me!"

Those tones pierced the heart of Alice; she lifted her eyes, alarmed at what she had done. Her lover stood leaning against a tree for support; his hand pressed upon his brow, as if to exclude his burning thoughts, his teeth clenched, his pallid lips parted, as if for breath, which was denied him, while specks of foam appeared upon their clammy surface.

The young girl rose, and taking the cold hand of her lover, which hung listless at his side, pressed it fervently to her lips.

"Forgive me, dear Ferdinand. Oh! forgive me this unintentional injury. I did not realize, until this moment, that you loved so deeply. I have regarded it as a mere boyish passion, which would pass away on seeing the next pretty face. I see it all now. How deeply I regret my want of confidence on this subject you can never know; but I am solemnly plighted to another; one every way worthy of my love; and yet now I almost wish I had never seen him; I did not, indeed I did not know—you loved me thus."

"And now that you do know it, Alice, can you not give me one ray of encouragement? What shall I do if my day-star is clouded? Could you not imagine that beneath this light exterior a stream of deep, unutterable love lay concealed? Could you not see in every action of my life my deep devotion? How is it, that, knowing you as intimately as I have done, I have never met with this favored lover?"

"He has never been here: I met him six months since during my stay in Havana. I have avoided speaking of him to you, from delicacy. But he writes me he will soon visit us, then you can judge for yourself whether it is strange I love him passionately. In regard to yourself, dear Ferdinand, I never dreamed you seriously loved me; I thought your affection for me was that of a brother. Had I known, previous to my visit to the capital, how deeply your happiness was involved, this might have been avoided."

"Oh! say those blessed words again! Let me again dream there was a time when I might have been blessed with your love, your whole love."

"But does Ferdinand remember that time has passed. I am now the plighted wife of another, with my own consent and that of my friends. Parents, alas! you know I have none to guide me. It is my duty now, to turn my thoughts from the frivolities of life, and prepare for the new duties that await me. I will not mock you by asking a transfer of your love to another. But I do beseech you, think of me as a sister, and one who will always be deeply interested in your welfare."

The young man knelt before her, and taking her hand within his own, raised his eyes to Heaven:

"Hear me! Father of Light,' he exclaimed; 'here, beneath the blue canopy of heaven, I solemnly promise never to love any one but Alice; she shall be the beacon of my life. If I find myself in error, the thought of her shall reclaim me; if temptation draws me aside from the path of duty, the loved form of Alice Travers shall be my guardian angel to restore me to myself. Wherever I am, whatever I may be, Alice shall be my polar star. And, oh! God grant, if we may not be united on earth, we may at last meet in heaven.' He covered the hand with impassioned kisses; the next moment the bushes were separated, and Alice found herself alone.

How that gentle heart was pained to find she had been so deeply loved by one whom she had never thought of as seriously loving her; they had been playmates from childhood. To roam the woods, and gather wild-flowers, to seek the crevices of rocks for shells, chase the humming bird from flower to flower, or watch the gorgeous butterflies as they glitter in the sunlight, (had been the favorite amusement of both.) They were equally intellectual, and when tired of more active sports, they have taken equal pleasure in sitting under the shadow of some lofty palm, alternately reading the exciting plays of Shakspeare. As Frederick understood English perfectly, who can wonder that, with his ardent, enthusiastic nature, he entered more deeply in the plot than became his happiness. Yes, such had been unfortunately the case; the young Ferdinand had insensibly read Shakspeare until he found himself a Romeo, and the fair Alice, in his eyes, a Juliet to be worshipped. Alice, on the contrary, more reflective in character, had only thought of those scenes as events in life, without giving them personality or place. She thought that Ferdinand looked upon her as an agreeable companion, and never for an instant imagined he loved her for herself alone. She had now much to reflect upon. She had plighted herself to one whom she had known but a few months, and she found that one whom she had known for years loved her with equal intensity.

Yet with her there was no feeling of gratified vanity. Her great desire was to act well her part, whatever it might be. She therefore, soon decided upon her course: as she had engaged herself to one lover without suspecting the love of another, she could not consider herself in any way to blame; and, therefore, felt no regret for the past, but determined to watch over the happiness of Ferdinand with the faithfulness of a sister.

She sat thus absorbed in her own reflections until the hour of vesper called her to evening prayer. She then arose with more decision in her step, and a more saddened expression on her face. The last few hours had marked a new phase in her character.

Entirely different was it with Ferdinand: his whole soul, even unknown to himself, had been absorbed with one feeling—love to Alice. He had never slept, but to dream of her. He had never wearied, but the first thought of her had filled his morning hours; if he rode, she was generally by his side,—or if not, he fancied she was there; if he hunted, the game was first brought for her supervision; if he went on a fishing excursion, she sang the hours away. Now all was to be changed. By two or three little words, the whole destiny of two noble souls was revealed. To live with her and regard her as another's he felt to be impossible. Yet how could he leave her—how tear himself away from all the earliest associations of childhood. Yet the more he reflected, the more he became convinced of the necessity for immediate action.

After mature consideration he determined to wait until he had seen his hated rival, then leave Alice forever. But how could he endure to meet him. At one moment, distracted by his love, he felt this meeting must be fatal to one or both; then he reflected that he could mar the happiness of Alice,—and not for millions would he voluntarily cause her a single pang. He finally resolved to see as little of Alice as possible; when they met, to maintain a serene composure, and endeavor, by frequent excursions in the open air, to harmonize the hurricane within.

A month after these events there arrived at the plantation St. Sebastian an elegant young American, whom report said was engaged to Alice. There even now continued fetes and balls; dinner and supper parties followed each other in quick succession. It was observed that Don Ferdinand seldom came and that his visits were much shorter than usual. He beheld in Clarence Willoughby the successful rival, but one whom he feared would never confer happiness on the pure minded, enthusiastic Alice.

He could not find fault with his personal appearance, for it was eminently handsome. Tall and graceful in his person, he possessed a very intellectual face, and brilliant smile which illuminated that noble countenance like a halo: yet with all these advantages Ferdinand felt there was something wanting to constitute a perfect character. Was it selfishness?—he would observe—and he did observe—and many times heart-sick sighed for the lovely Alice.

Clarance Willoughby was the only son of a very wealthy merchant of New York, who had been educated with the greatest care, and every accomplishment bestowed upon him which wealth could furnish. Yet while every attention was paid outwardly, that inward training of the heart, so much needed in every human character, was neglected. At the age of twenty one, the business of his father called him to Havana; it was there he first saw and loved Alice then on a visit to her cousin. The elegant manners of Alice attracted universal attention, and many were the suitors for her hand. She gave that preference to Clarance, and loved him with the earnest devotedness of a young enthusiastic heart of sixteen. On arriving home she acquainted her friends with her preference, received their sanction, and was formally engaged. During all this time she had never imagined that Ferdinand Hetlander had anything more than a brotherly regard for her; had she known how very devotedly he loved her, her destiny might have changed.

The month of December was appointed for their marriage. Here cold and rigorous winter holds sternest rule; but in Cuba the air is soft and balmy as in spring. The birds show as gay a plumage, the butterflies wanton as freely on the summer like breeze, and even the little humming birds flutter as gaily from flower to flower culling the ambrosial nectar.

The day arrived, and Alice, looking as beautiful as the birds, and as happy, too, was united, by a Spanish priest, to Clarance Willoughby. The ethereal beauty of Alice compared well with the gossamer texture of her robe, thrown over white satin, like moonlight upon snow. A wreath of orange blossoms, recently culled, was twined through her flowing tresses of ebon hue, when clustering fell upon her fair round shoulders revealing glorious pearly whiteness, and the statue-like grace of her form: a small bunch of orange buds nestled coyly on the fair bosom, which heaved with mingled emotions of joy and sorrow as the ceremony proceeded. Fleeting bridal and overshadowed beauty and feeling like the mists of the morning when first touched by the sun's golden beams. A magnificent picture it seemed enchanted this silvery veil on one side thus leaving the classic profile revealed to wondering observers. Even the priest stopped a few moments the youthful couple, as they stood in their beauty before him. Clarence's tall manly form, drawn to its full height, his high intellectual forehead relieved by close dark curls. The flush of pleasure sparkling in his eyes and beaming on his cheek. The gentle Alice, now sunshine and now shower—as she thought alternately of the one she loved, and those she was going to leave. She was a shade paler than usual, but it only added to her charms, softening and subduing her lofty style of beauty, and making her appear as she was, an angel of love and hope. Ah! improper Ferdinand could have seen her thus. But he would not subject himself to such a trial, and bade her adieu for an indeterminable length of time, a few days previous to the ceremony.

They were to pass the winter in Cuba, and in the spring to sail for New York, Mr. Willoughby having purchased a home for their reception, in the upper part of the city, and furnished it with every luxury of the age. During the winter there were many things in the character of her husband which struck Alice unfavorably; she could not avoid comparing him, in many instances, with Ferdinand, and he always suffered by the comparison. He had been reared in extravagance, and, being an only child, had never known a wish ungratified; consequently he was in many respects self willed and selfish. Alice sighed, as she detected these errors, but she was full of hope, and looked upon her handsome husband with the pride of a 2d heart. He had sought her, too, without property, when so many of fortune would gladly have accepted his hand. Alice was too humble to realize the many advantages she really possessed. She was endowed with every accomplishment both personal and mental, and inherited rare beauty from her mother; added to this, her connections were all rich and powerful, so that willingly lost nothing, or least, by the connection.

The winter passed away, as all winters do in Cuba, and spring came, and with it the pure balmy breezes that invigorate this country. The woods only assuming a richer green, and the flowers looking fresher and more gay.

Ferdinand had gone to Havana, and there was a report that he had secluded himself in one of the convents; nothing more was seen of him.

It was a lovely day in the month of May, that the gallant bark Eugenie [illegible] friends of the parties accompanied them in barges with pennants streaming to the breeze and the soft strains of music floating on the breeze. A [illegible] many friends in Cuba [illegible] there when very [illegible] the house. She [illegible] and merry laugh of Eugenie [illegible] reflected that she would [illegible] Alice, as in the thought inv[illegible] made her sad. She devoted herself frequently [illegible] upon what might be his fate; yet she [illegible] devotedly, and felt that every [illegible] for him was a privilege.

The voyage was [illegible] so short that Alice found herself, ere she was aware, rolling in a carriage through Broadway, to her sumptuous residence in the city of New York.

Mr. Willoughby, senior, was delighted with his new daughter, and [illegible] upon Clarence the necessity of [illegible] sweet a bride; and the [illegible] more devoted than [illegible] novelty of being a bachelor [illegible] little attentions [illegible] always wanted upon her to church, now he [illegible] to the theatre, he would frequently attend, [illegible] that he had a young wife at home, left [illegible] over by-gone days, and, perchance, lament her destiny.

Alice struggled bravely against the feeling of reproach [illegible] could not avoid feeling toward her husband; [illegible] of Cuba she had always commanded the most devoted attention, [illegible] it was a pleasure to wait upon her, and each day the image of Ferdinand came more distinctly to her mind; she thought of the [illegible] when they required nothing more than a pretty flower, or rare shell to make them happy; of the brilliant sunsets, when together they had watched the fleecy clouds as they wreathed themselves in gorgeous hues above their heads, or shot from golden beams down into the leafy dingles. Then she would contrast those halcyon days with her present situation; why was she not happy—her apartments were splendidly furnished—all that art or taste could devise, even their marble statuary, rare exotics, fountains where gold and silver fish sparkled in the sun lit waters, classical books to suit every taste. Yet the sympathy of soul was wanting. Alice, unfortunately, was too [illegible] she could not be satisfied with these [illegible]; her aim was nobler standing; she looked for a greater degree of perfection in herself and others than she found, and disappointment was her lot.

"Clarence," said her husband, one morning carelessly, "I wish you would mend my coats; I tore it last night upon entering the opera."

"Then you went to the opera last evening, Clarence," said Alice, [illegible]

"Yes, I met my friend, Sidney Hastings, and I persuaded me to go with him."

Alice mended the coat in [illegible] a word—but the thought—He went there without me although he knows how much I love opera music, and that I refused an invitation from young Howard because I preferred going with my husband."

Some bitter feelings crept in her heart, as the thoughts passed through her mind, but she quickly stifled them, saying—He probably did not intend going, when he left home, or he would have asked me."

SINGULAR CASE OF SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—The London Times narrates a series of occurrences in the town of Bedford, England, which greatly excited public curiosity and puzzled the wiseacres. On a recent night an alarm of fire was raised in that town, which was found to proceed from a house where the servants, in the absence of the family, had been thoroughly cleaning, with a view to rid it of vermin. In furtherance of this design recourse was had to fumigation by means of burning sulphur. The sulphur was duly ignited and the vessel placed in what was deemed a safe position—the middle of the room—and the room vacated. About two hours thereafter it was discovered that the sulphur as stated had jumped from the vessel, fired the floor, and found its way through the boards. The fire was extinguished, and all was deemed safe. This was on Tuesday night. On Saturday evening the head of the family returned home on retiring to rest, and having innocently thrown his damp stockings on the carpet, what was his astonishment on seeing them ignite! Something like a panic seized the household, but at length their fears were pacified and they went to rest. The next day (Sunday) while the master was at church, fire was again discovered in the house. It was suppressed, but in the course of the day no less than [illegible] fires broke out in different parts of the house in the presence of most respectable and intelligent persons.—Says the [illegible]

"Every part of the furniture in every room of the house appeared to be charged with some mysterious, self-igniting gas. Smoke issued suddenly from cupboards, large and small, from almost every drawer, and even from boxes of linen and woollen materials, which had not been opened for some length of time prior to the Tuesday's fire. Some of the statements made before the coroner are so startling as to be nearly incredible. One gentleman had his handkerchief burnt up on the sofa, when it certainly ignited. Another gentleman, while discussing the marvels of the day and washing his hands, discovered that the damp towels on the horse in the bedroom were on fire. A lady, anxious to prevent further mischief, had a short time previously examined a box containing articles pertaining to feminine apparel, and pronounced it safe. Had shut it up, but on going to remove a shoe it was hot, and on re-opening it discovered its contents in a blaze, but it is impossible to enumerate all the strange fantasies played by this subtle combustible as fire. Of course, suspicion was soon awake, but closest investigation afforded no ground on which to rest the surmise of foul play."

On Monday the same phenomena, somewhat chastened, manifested, and it was [illegible] that the greater part of the property in which it was charred or burnt to tender. A fire consequently held an inquest upon the subject, and all the above mentioned incidents, with others, were elicited. A lengthy investigation was had, but no evidence of two medical gentlemen who had witnessed the phenomena, however, indicated a most remarkable and important class of truths in chemistry. Without venturing to give a formal solution of the matter, these gentlemen were of opinion that the sulphurous fumes, in connection with the gas of the charred wood, had charged the entire house with inflamable gas, which in case of friction, in others by electricity, had been from time to time ignited.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Sept. 20.

The steamer Ro[illegible] arrived this morning with Liverpool dates to the 17th inst.

The markets present little change. Breadstuffs were firm at the highest quotations by the Canada. Wheat had slightly advanced. Money in active demand. Consols 94.

The European news generally is dull.

The Chartist associations were being revived in England.

The state of affairs in Naples was causing considerable concern.

It was reported that the numerous questions arising out of the treaty of Paris will lead to another Congress, to be held during the coming winter.

Switzerland and Prussia are settling the Neufchatel affair.

Rumors of further notes from Naples are rife, but not credited.

The London Morning Star warns the Southern States of the United States not to dream of annexation to England.

Diplomatic relations are about to be established between Russia and Spain.

The official account of the affair in Algeria with the Kabyls, show it to have been very severe, six thousands Kabyls being opposed by only one Regiment and a squadron of Chasseurs. After a desperate [illegible] Kabyls retreated, but returned again next day, when they were again beaten. An expedition against them is resolved upon.

Liverpool, Sept. 17th.—Breadstuffs—At Tuesday's market wheat was in rather lively demand chiefly for new. Flour, good, closed with fair demand.

The weather continued favorable, and the bulk of the grain crop in England is now gathered, but in the north of Ireland and Scotland a considerable quantity yet remains out.

London, Tuesday Evening. The Stock Exchange experienced a favorable change to day, the panic feeling of last week having entirely disappeared. There were large purchases at improved prices. The rally in Consols is fully 1-2 per cent. There was a general recovery on Railway shares of 3-4 1 1-4 per cent, the market closing decidedly firmer. Money market unchanged.

At Paris yesterday Three per Cents declined 1-8 and 1-4.

LATEST FROM CALIFORNIA.

By the arrival of the steamship Illinois, at New York, we have dates to the 15th ult.

The Vigilance Committee has formally adjourned, not to meet again unless compelled by necessity.

Mining is in a prosperous condition.

The papers contain accounts of murders in various parts of the State.

For the first time in the history of San Francisco there is not a prisoner in the jail waiting trial.

The Vigilance Committee, before their final adournment, notified Cusick, Thompson and Hennessy, who had previously been warned to leave the state, that they might do so by the steamer of Sept. 5th; after which, if found in the city, they would incur the penalty of death.

John L. Durkee and Thos. Hand, who, under the direction of the Vigilance Committee, boarded and seized upon some arms which were on board a vessel in the Bay of San Pablo, and were intended to be used against the self constituted authorities, have been indicted in the U. S. Court at San Francisco. The Court refuses bail, and they were committed to jail, but it is only a farce to try men for such an affair as this for the capital crime of piracy.

Advices from Nicaragua of Aug. 30th, were at Aspinwall. Walker remains quiet. Leon had been abandoned to the invading army, which numbered 1500 troops. Dr. Livingston had been released and sent to San Salvador. The people of Sonoto had risen against the Leon faction and assassinated several of the prominent partisans, including Joaquin Chamorro and Augustin Hernandez. Walker had issued several decrees, confirming the Transit grant to Morgan, and another declaring the property of the Accessory Transit Company, forfeited to the State.

A rumor had reached Aspinwall of a revolt among Walker's troops, 50 of whom refused to do duty. Walker gave them 24 hours to reconsider, at the expiration of which, still refusing, they were led out and shot.

Col. Schlessinger had published a letter to the army denouncing Walker as a traitor, accusing him of dishonesty and offering protection to all W.'s troops who will join him. Schlessinger was at Matazalpa, in the interior.

South American dates from Valparaiso are to Aug. 16th, and Callao to 27th. A revolution had been headed by Gen. Castillo, and some fighting took place under the Prefect. The engagement lasted several hours, but the revolutionists were finally subdued.

We have ever endeavored Radicalism and Reality as convertible terms. The horrors of the first French revolution are too fresh in our memory, the facts too recent, and the effects too visible, for any well-thinking mind to desire to see the principles of Parliament dominant. A Radical is a leveller; he has no respect for the sanctity of time-honored institutions, however fundamentally. Anarchy, Mobism, and confusion, is the atmosphere in which he delights to breathe. He is a continual grumbler, dissatisfied himself, his whole aim is to make others dissatisfied likewise by stirring up political strife, and spreading his pestiferous doctrines and principles. Such an one is abhorred of God and man—of God, for His Word inculcates obedience to the Laws of man, and respect for the powers that be. Of man, for he aims at the subversion of all social order and peace, both public and domestic, and could he obtain the fulfilment of his wishes, has nothing better to offer in exchange to an honest Society. He is a wretch, and thank God, owing to the influence of the spread of Education and Temperance principles, the number is daily diminishing. Miramichi Gleaner.

Douglas Jerrold, one of the famed clique of London Punch satirists, is coming to America, to lecture. Jerrold commenced life as a sailor, and after six years' salt water experience became a compositor in a London newspaper office. His first literary achievement was an essay on German Music, which the author, after the manner of Benjamin Franklin, dropped into the lion's mouth, the editor's box where he was a printer, and two days after he had the delight of setting up his own article, none of the editors being aware of the author's name. Jerrold next dropped another anonymous article in the box on Fashionable Charity, which is written with all his peculiar vigor. This caused so great a stir that the editor, in his notice to correspondents, begged the author to call upon him—in other words, he was requested to "Stand and unfold yourself." He did, much to the astonishment of the editor, who at once recognized his talents, took him from the case, and put him to the desk.

At a special session, held by our Magistrates at Newcastle, during the past week, to take into consideration what course will be adopted with respect to Biggar; they unanimously conclude to petition the Governor for an extra session. And by their orders the Clerk drew up a strong petition to the Governor, to allow a Judge to come on and try him under a Special Commission.—Miramichi Advance.

[illegible] Accident.—We sincerely regret to learn that Mr. George M. Langhan, [illegible] on Monday last, on board a vessel in the Bay of [illegible] on Sunday day. Mr. M. Langhan was [illegible] year, and was an old inhabitant of the town. St. Andrews Standard.

Mr. Rowcroft, late British consul at Cincinnati, dismissed with Mr. Crampton, embarked in the Cherubim, at Richmond, Va., in good health, but died suddenly on the voyage to London.

From Quebec.—Arrival of Passengers.—A [illegible] on board the royal mail steamer [illegible] on her last trip from Quebec to Liverpool, America, the passengers were the Rev. [illegible] Marsden, D. D., of Trinity College, Toronto, and wife. A few days before reaching Liverpool, Mr. Marsden passed of the [illegible] in the [illegible] was any Pleasant water on board, [illegible] water being [illegible] Canada? A [illegible] decreased inquiries if there were any [illegible] board. The [illegible] answered both, yes [illegible] go and get some. He went [illegible] with a bowl containing about a quart of [illegible] which he handed to the boy. Mr. Marsden [illegible] mouthful of the liquid. He found it [illegible] it tasted very much, and went up [illegible] called to him. Inquiries were instituted, [illegible] was ascertained that the liquid was the [illegible] drank was carbonic of zinc, [illegible] purposes. The man who gave the water [illegible] that Mr. Marsden shortly [illegible] the greatest [illegible] danger. The steward stated that [illegible] the liquid was carbonic of zinc, [illegible] Mrs. Marsden denied. An inquest [illegible] held, and a verdict was returned, [illegible] came to his death from the effects of [illegible] poisonous liquid taken by mistake.

UNITED STATES.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—The steamer [illegible] Collingwood on Monday, with between [illegible] 175 passengers. When about four [illegible] Port Washington, the passengers [illegible] issuing from the engine room, and in a few minutes the whole cabin was in flames.

The wildest consternation followed. [illegible] were lowered and all filled, but [illegible] one containing passengers.

Numbers jumped overboard, and were instantly drowned. Every assistance was given by passing, and by life boats, but 50 or 60 lives were lost. Three bodies [illegible] Washington.

It is rumored that the fire was the work of an incendiary. It is stated that immediately after the fire was discovered, a leg dropped off, [illegible] the flames in every direction.

The Cuban Line.—We learn [illegible] government has decided to [illegible] the Cuban line, [illegible] Company has [illegible] strictly avoiding [illegible] fear, diminishing the [illegible] leaving the rest of the crews, [illegible] the government [illegible] fund, private individuals [illegible] greater economy of the new [illegible] apparent from the fact that the [illegible] consumption of coal per day at high speed [illegible] now; at low speed 55 tons. The [illegible] cost to $1000 per voyage, and it is calculated that the saving in wear and tear of machinery will equal this amount; so that the total saving on twenty-six round trips, [illegible] by contract, will exceed $50,000 per annum, or more than compensate for the loss of pay. It is claimed that there is nothing in the contract [illegible] speed, but simply that the vessel shall be built for high speed. N. Orleans Delta.

A Pale Town.—A man disappeared from Chicago a few days ago, and was supposed to have been drowned. The lady could not be found, but the Coroner, not to be cheated out of his fees, held an inquest on the hat and jacket found on the bank of the lake. Verdict—"Found empty."

Indiana, Sept. 22.—A man named Suffel, a supporter of Fremont for President, was pulled today, in Logansport, into the house of Rev. Mr. [illegible], a man of Buchanan men, and there handled, and cut to pieces with axes.

An attack was made on a [illegible] load of women and children by the mob, who afterwards clubbed and [illegible] men and women, and took possession of the town, the inhabitants fleeing for their lives.

From Nassau, P. R.—A hurricane had done much damage at Inagua. In four days there had been [illegible] vessels stranded, and 3 days lost.

A few days since, a young man attempted to cross Lake Champlain, alone in a small boat, but was upset by a squall, near Fort [illegible] and drowned. The gentleman, however, succeeded in clinging to the bottom of the boat until [illegible] was seen from a vessel at quarantine, and he was taken off in quite an exhausted condition. It is said that the pearl and [illegible] of the gentleman were so [illegible] and the plaything of the waves and the sport of the billows, which an hour before, when beautiful as Adam, turned almost white, and he now appears as a leader, not from age, but from fright.

Brogden Case.—At Rochester, N. Y., on the 23d ult., Mr. George Brogden, of Port Hope, Canada West, deliberately shot Thomas Henderson dead, for eloping with his wife. Henderson ran away with Brogden's wife several weeks ago. Brogden followed them, and after a chase between several places, the guilty pair separated. But the injured husband vow[illegible] would have vengeance, and finally accomplished his purpose. Both were young men, residents of Port Hope, who were educated and grew to manhood together, and both embraced the same profession, that of the law. Henderson made no attempt to escape.

From Havana.—New York, Sept. 25.—Advices from Havana to the 27th August have been received. The British Colony of the Bay Islands had virtually ceased to exist, and the Mosquito flag had been lowered by the officers of Her Britannic Majesty. Alejo Cossack of the terminations of the English protectorate, and consequently the coast of Mosquito. The Islands would be transferred to the Republic of Honduras.

Poetry.

From the New York Berean.

TO THE AMERICAN PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION.

Firm and resolved to stand,
Undismayed, unconquered,
Strong and united, heart and hand,
Like the Derry Boys of old,
O the Derry Boys of old!
O the Derry Boys so bold!
Who fought, who bled, and died
For truth and liberty!

Despite the anger of the foe
Go on and prosper still
Till all our land from shore to shore
Your mighty hosts shall fill;
Shall fill with loyal hearts
Like the Derry Boys so true,
Who fought, who bled and died
For truth and liberty!

Go forth and fight in Freedom's cause—
Fain would your battle-field
An hoever-flashing sparkling swords
Will carry to victory,
Shall yield to men as brave
As the Derry boys of old
Who fought, who bled and died
For truth and liberty!

There are be to the mighty brave
The champions of the free,
A flowing banner, laurel wreaths,
And immortality.
A name on history's page
With the Derry Boys so free,
Who fought, who bled and died
For Truth and Liberty!

VARIETY.

JOSIAH HOLT TO HIS SWIPY ANN.

Mr. Swipy Ann,—Should you object to the two last words, I would regret it most sincerely, and from the very bottom of my—hoots, because the hoots are the seat of the soul, but in case that you may not be in want for two hoots, I retain these in case they are offensive, I say you lost them which I authorise you to strike out forever. You can, if you choose, take the whole in a lump, and multiply them by any or any large number that occurs to you, and thereby have a process concentrate the refined essence of, and you will have but a faint idea of the preponderous strength of my sentiments. Here is the list:

My, my, my jet, my darling, my angel, my one, my all, my heart (I mean my soul), adored Ann, my queen of my heart, queen of my bosom, my preciousness, sweetness, ducky, sis, cause of my joy, my grief, bigger-up of my affections, destroyer of my peace, ruthless but beautiful invader on the dominion of my emotions, crusher of my ambitions, peace-blasting, hope-annulling, prospect-destroying, soul-collapsing, heart-annihilating, mind-doting beauty. Jiminy how I love you.

Don't talk to me of despair. I honestly believe that if we had such a dangerous instrument in our houses, as a bar of soft soap, I should be disposed to cut my throat with it, and thereby abbreviate the rugged of my miserable existence.

What in thunder is the use of having a pretty girl, with all the strength of a "two forty" horse power, high pressure, West India hurricane, and being separated from her for the distance of over three hundred miles, by fate, pine barrens, circumstances, and swamps.

Oh Sewipy, Dear Sewipy, why did I ever find you? Why did my poor old battered up plank road ever converge so far as to bisect your pathway of flowers? Why did the fates ever direct that my new eighteen-inch cowhides should be destructive to the crawling insects upon the same road, which has been pressed with scarce weight enough to crush a violet, by your dear little slipper?

I find that my mind is fast giving way under my miseries. I am hourly anticipating the moment when I shall commence smashing the crockery, drinking whiskey, or combing my hair, any one of which courses of procedure, would be indubitable evidence of insanity.

Sweetest Sewipy Ann, may I, can I, must I, could I, might I, would I, shall I continue to hope on and ever.

Yours till death breaks my back,
JOSIAH HOLT.

WHEAT AND MARRIAGES.—It is a singular fact, says the Newburyport Herald, that when bread is plenty weddings are, and when the crops are poor, weddings are few. There is nothing more definitely settled by the registers than this. The statistics of Great Britain show that from the cessation of the famine in 1847 up to 1851, the number of marriages was continually on the increase; and that in the latter year, for the first time in 7 years, they began to decline. One might suppose that the Eastern war, which broke out in 1851, was the cause of this falling off. But the decrease in the number of marriages commenced with the first quarter of the year, before war was proclaimed, and months before the waste of life, caused by hostilities, could affect the result. The real cause must be found in the fact that in November, 1853, the price of wheat rose to seventy-two shillings and five-pence per quarter, nearly double of what it had been in 1852, and considerably more than it had been since 1847. This enormous rise was attended by a great check to the foreign trade of England, especially with the U. S. and Australia, produced by the scarcity of wheat in those places; and to these causes, all resolving themselves really into one, the decline in marriages is really to be attributed.

NIAGARA ECHOES.—The river Shirawhan, between Bombay and Cape Comorn, falls into the Gulf of Arabia. The river is about one-fourth of a mile in width, and in the rainy seasons, some thirty feet in depth. This immense body of water rushes down a rocky slope, three hundred feet, at an angle of forty-five degrees, at the bottom of which, it makes a perpendicular plunge of 850 feet, into a black and dismal abyss, with a noise like the loudest thunder. The whole descent is, therefore, eleven hundred and fifty feet, or several times that of Niagara. The volume of water in the latter is somewhat larger than that of the former, but in the depth of descent it will be seen there is no comparison between them. In the river Shirawhan, the Sikthawati is a small stream, and the fall is divided into three cascades, of surpassing beauty and grandeur. They are almost dissipated and dissolved into mist, before reaching the bed of the river below.

LABOR IN VAIN.—A monk whose name is Spencer, says a German paper—and who is a member of the family in England, is making a pilgrimage through Hungary, with the permission of the Pope; his object being to establish praying societies, whose special task it will be to pray in churches that the English nation may be converted and return to the bosom of the Roman Church.

The Spaniards account by a strange legend for the constant political disturbances in their country. When St. Iago, their patron, went to heaven, he interceded for blessings on Spain. Brave men, handsome women, a fertile soil, and a fine climate, were readily granted. The saint then asked for "good government." "No, no," was the reply; "all that were conceded as well, the Angels would quit heaven to live in Spain."

"How do you get along with your arithmetic?" asked a father of his hopeful son.

"I've gone through addition, partition, subtraction, abomination, justification, hallucination, damnation, amalgamation, creation, and adoption."

AMORous FRIARIES.—In Newcastle, Pa., Sam Cannon has been fined $10 for kissing Rebecca Rose against her will. On paying the fine and costs Cannon was discharged. We supposed he was loaded with "grape" at the time of the occurrence.

A man in Boston has eloped with a horse and buggy, and a 15-year old girl. So say the papers. The man is 65.

St. John, Feb. 1, 1856.

Caution to the Public.

HE leave to notify my friends and customers that on the first day of May I removed one door above my old stand in the same building, and since that period parties who leased the premises formerly occupied by me, have without a particle of right put up the sign of "GRANITE HALL," the name that I have done business under for the last seven years; and taken other means to lead strangers and others to believe that it was the same establishment as heretofore.

In justice to the public I can distinctly state that I have no communication with the place whatever, that my place of business is one door above, in the Store formerly occupied by William Mechinley, where I hope to give as good satisfaction to the public as I have formerly.

The Subscriber having been appointed Agent to the above Company for New-Brunswick, begs to announce that he is prepared to receive Proposals for FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE. The large Capital of the Company, and the number and influence of its Proprietors, enable it to rank with the most eligible Offices, either in America or Europe, with respect to the advantages offered to the Public.

FIRE BRANCH.

Persons Assured by this Company are not subject to any covenants or calls to make good losses which may happen to themselves or others, nor do they depend on any uncertain fund or contribution, the Capital Stock of this Company being an unquestionable security to the Assured in case of Loss or Damage by Fire.

LIFE BRANCH.

In addition to the more customary methods of Insurance, the Company likewise Assures Lives on any of the following contingencies:—

For the terms of One Year, Seven Years, or any other definite period.

For the whole continuance of Life.—The Premiums to cease, after a limited number of Annual Payments.

For Two Joint Lives.—The sum assured to be paid on the death of either.

On the longest of Two or Three Lives.—The sum assured to be payable at the death of the last survivor; or,

The Survivorships.—To secure the payment of the sum assured, if a life A die before another life B.

For a sum to be payable at age 60, or at death.

Premiums on Credit.—A portion of the Premiums on Credit. Assurances may be effected in various ways, not enumerated, to meet the convenience of parties.

The important advantages afforded by the Company in the Life Branch will include the following viz:—

The Guarantee of an ample Capital, and Exemption of the Assured from liability of Partnership.

Moderate Premiums.

Large Participation of Profits by the Assured amounting to Two-thirds of its net amount, which may be applied at the option of the party effecting the Assurance:—1st. By the immediate payment of the sum so apportioned.—2nd. By an equivalent increase of the sum assured.

Small Charge for Management.—The expenses of the Office being borne in due proportion by the two Branches.

Prompt Settlement of Claims.

Policies lapsed by non-payment of the Premium may be renewed within three months, by paying the premium, with a fine of 10s per cent., on the production of evidence to the satisfaction of the Director's of the good health of the life assured.

The Company will always be prepared to Purchase the Policies of this Office at their equitable value or will grant a New Policy in lieu thereof without any further payment of Premium, for a sum to be agreed on.
