"It Saved My Life"

is a common expression, often heard from those who have realized, by personal use, the curative powers of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. "I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died from lung troubles.—E. Bragdon, Palestine, Tex.

About six months ago I had a severe Hemorrhage of the Lungs, brought on by a distressing Cough, which deprived me of sleep and rest. I had used various cough balsams and expectorants, without obtaining relief. A friend advised me to try

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

I did so, and am happy to say that it helped me at once. By continued use this medicine cured my cough, and, I am satisfied, saved my life.—Mrs. E. Coburn, 18 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for over a year, and sincerely believe I should have been in my grave, had it not been for this medicine. It has cured me of a dangerous affection of the lungs, for which I had almost despaired of ever finding a remedy.—D. A. McMullen, Sandsor, Province of Ontario.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life. Two years ago I took a very severe Cold which settled on my lungs. I consulted physicians, and took the remedies they prescribed, but failed to obtain relief until I began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Two bottles of this medicine completely restored my health.—Lizzie M. Allen, West Lancaster, Ohio.

A Lecture to Young Men

On the Loss of

MANHOOD

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Poetry.

Peace.

Winds and wild waves in headlong huge commotion
Scud, dark, with tempest, o'er the Atlantic's breast;
While underneath, low fathoms deep in ocean,
Life, peace, and rest.

Storms in mid-air, the rack before them sweeping,
Hairy, and blue, like furies hate possessed;
While over all white cloudlets pure are sleeping
In peace, in rest.

Heart, O wild heart! why in the storm-world ranging
Flit'st thou thus midway, passion's slave and jest,
When all so near above, below, unchanging
Are heaven, and rest?

"Bonnie Maggie."

—OR:—

GRANDFATHER'S STORY.

"About five and twenty years ago, Jack, business called me from Toronto on a particular visit to England.

After I had spent three weeks in one of the busiest parts of London, I began to think of a little relaxation and decided to see some of the grand old English scenery before I returned home to Canada.

Accordingly after visiting some of the most historical of the midland counties, I journeyed southward into Devonshire and stayed a short time at Torquay, which I thought one of the prettiest places I had ever beheld.

Next I stayed awhile at a quaint little Cornish town, where the old fashioned dialect of the town seemed very strange, and where nearly all the inhabitants' names began with Tre, Pol, or Pen.

I had not spent many days at Trewelly—the name of this queer little place—when I received a business letter summoning me to Liverpool. Accordingly I hastened thither at once, intending to remain there the next ten days when my vessel would sail for New York.

My business at Liverpool, however, was concluded much sooner than I had anticipated, and as I had another week before the Corinne set sail I determined to spend the remaining days in North Wales.

Consulting my guide book I found that Llandudno is only a few hours' sail from Liverpool. Packing a few things in a small valise, I hastily took the next boat there.

I think no place in the old country ever pleased me better than that small and peaceful Welsh sea-side town, so beautifully situated beneath the high rocky mountain known as the Great Orme's Head.

How often I thought of my two boys in their Canadian home far away over the Atlantic, as I sat in Happy Valley—a quiet green nook on Orme's head—and gazed down upon the beach below at the group of merry youngsters playing on the yellow sands.

One glorious morning after breakfast I started out for a long walk and toiled up a picturesque mountain called the Little Orme's Head. Up, up I went, through some lovely woodland scenery. Up and down more steep mountain sides, through more shady forests, where sometimes through the green branches of the trees I could first catch a glimpse of the wide, shining ocean.

Up and down, up and down hill I walked, pausing occasionally to gather some of the sweet wild purple heather or bracken-fern or to admire a lovely rugged view, until I, at last, began to grow very, very weary, and looking at my watch found that it was nearly four o'clock in the afternoon. In all probability I had walked eighteen or twenty miles.

I had just then climbed the highest mountain I had met with since leaving Llandudno, and were looking down to the valley below I beheld a romantic looking little fishing village.

Of course I hastened down the steep path for I was hungry and weary and longed for rest and refreshment. But in my hurry to make a final descent my foot slipped off the rock and I fell a distance of twenty feet, badly spraining my left ankle. The pain was so intense that for a few moments I lost all consciousness, then I became aware of a tiny pair of dimpled hands patting my face and head and a small, childish voice lisping, 'I'se so 'frald you're hurt. Poor, big man! Shall Bonnie Maggie look if grandpa's come?'

'You are a good and brave little girl,' I said smiling, as with great difficulty I arose. 'And so your name is Maggie, Maggie what, my dear? Will you tell me your other name?'

'Just Bonnie Maggie.'

'But Bonnie Maggie what, dear?' I questioned again, wondering what my two big boys at home would think of this charming little fairy could they but see her.

'I'se just Bonnie Maggie——Oh, there's grandpap!' and the tiny, fairy-like figure—she could not have been more than five years old—went flying with fleet little bare feet across the wet sands, her curls dancing in the breeze, her pretty face destitute of its sheltering white sun hat, turning to look back every now and then to see if I remained where she left me.

'Grandpap—Grandpap!' she called, gathering up her little frock and paddling through the wavelets to an aged and weather beaten sailor seated in an old sea boat, whose name, painted in large, white letters on the stern, I could plainly read was the Bonnie Maggie.

'Grandpap, the big, big man has hurted his foot. Let us take him home wis us?' I heard her eagerly ask, as the old tar lifted her into the boat and kissed her tenderly.

After he had moored his boat he placed the child upon his broad shoulder, carrying her through the shallow water and across the sands to me.

'Grandpap is going to take you home, big man,' she said, coming forward to stroke my beard and then retreating to place her tiny hand in the old sailor's horny palm.

'Yes, sir! if you will accept the poor hospitality of a rough, old salt, who tried his best to serve his queen and his country. The big scar on my cheek I got six years ago in the Crimean war, for I was then on board H. M. S. Sussex, and for which I now receive a pension. Proud of it, you ask? Ay, ay, sir, I am almost as proud of it as of my Bonnie Maggie, here. God bless her.'

As I grasped the hand and looked into the honest eyes of Isaac Winford. I knew that he, indeed, was making for the safe port—I mean the Heavenly one. But, alas! I did not think his life's voyage was so near the end.

I must not stay now to tell you much about the neat, little, one story, white-washed cottage, nor of the old man's great kindness to me the two nights I rested in the comfortable hammock-bed he provided for me.

I am now coming to the worst part of my story, Jack.

The third night of my stay in the little cottage, was, I think, the saddest I have ever experienced.

There had been a fearful thunderstorm that day and towards evening the wind arose, blowing in great gusts, the heavy rain pouring down in torrents. The waves rose higher and higher, and came nearer and nearer, until I feared they would reach our windows.

Isaac had left home that morning in his boat, according to his usual custom. In fine weather he always took Bonnie Maggie with him, but when likely to be squally and rough, as to-day, he generally left her in charge of a friendly neighbor. I had, with her aid, prepared her a bowl of bread and milk; but which, however, I failed to make her eat. She sobbed pitifully for 'Grandpap,' as the night wore on. I strove to hide my uneasiness as to his non-appearance by telling her funny stories of Canadian little boys and girls and by and by she fell asleep in my arms.

Then I heard, amid the roaring of the wind and waves, the heavy boom of a signal gun and I knew there was a vessel wrecked upon the coast.

Carrying Bonnie Maggie in my arms I limped to the casement, through which I could see a large crowd of fishermen and women hastening to the shore.

I longed to go to them and be one of the active workers; but dare not leave the little one entrusted to my care.

I could only wait through the long hours, with a strange feeling of sadness and pain at my heart.

Bonnie Maggie gave a joyful cry, 'Grandpap is come!' when, at last, through the raging of the storm, we plainly heard the dull thud of men's heavy footsteps, and the cottage door opened gently.

But, Oh! what a sad sight met our eyes The good old Isaac—not dead, as I first supposed; but very badly injured with a blow from the mast of the ill-fated vessel—was lying upon a wooden shutter, supported by the village doctor and three brave sailors.

The latter took off their oil-skin caps and for a few moments bent reverently down by the side of the bed whereon they had tenderly placed their wounded comrade.

After they, with the doctor, had left the cottage to hasten back to other sufferers of the wreck, Isaac gathered Bonnie Maggie to his heart and besought me, with tears rolling down his bronzed cheek that I would take care of her as one of my own children. And as I grasped his hand and solemnly promised to bring her up as my own, he replied, 'Thank God!' I knew you'd do it, sir. Now I can steer for Home in peace, for I feel that my little lamb will be safe from harm. God has been very good to me, sir,' he added. 'Sure it was He who sent you here. I have not much strength left, sir, but I must try and tell you that she is not my grandchild. I was never married and have neither kith nor kin. I saved her from the wreck of the Ariel five years ago, when she was a tiny baby—here was the only life saved. It was my boat, the Bonnie Maggie, that rescued her and I named her after it, she knows no other, for there was no mark upon her clothes to identify her. Bring her up, as your own, sir.—I am growing weaker for—I am—steering—Home—God bless my Bonnie Maggie—'and the old man's voice grew fainter and fainter as he murmured over again, 'I'm—steering—Home.'

Surely no purer, truer soul ever steered Heavenward than that of Isaac Winford.

We buried him in the little graveyard, where I erected a white marble slab bearing his name and the date of his brave death.

Bonnie Maggie and I then sailed from Liverpool to Toronto, where Grandmama welcomed her as a sweet little daughter to play with her two big sons.

And by-and-by, when Bonnie Maggie grew a big girl, Grandmama and I, although we could hardly bear to part with her, for she was the sunshine of our home, decided to send her to a good school at Montreal for a few years.

She returned to us a beautiful young lady, and as good and true as she was beautiful. Just the old winsome, Bonnie Maggie, only older and more thoughtful.

And like your fairy tales end, my lad, there came a handsome young prince to win our Bonnie Maggie's heart. But the young prince was no other than my eldest son Cyril—your father, Jack,——for your dear mother, my boy, is the Bonnie Maggie.

Coming Home to Die.

At a period of life when budding womanhood requires all her strength to meet the demands nature makes upon it, many a young woman returns home from the severe mental strain of school with a broken-down constitution, and her functions disarranged, to go to an early grave. If she had been wisely counseled and given the benefit of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' her bodily development might have kept pace with her mental growth, and health and beauty would not have given way to decline and death.

Wanted—A Recipe.

BY PRISCILLA MULLEN, OF BRIDGETOWN.

'My bread has been just dreadful for a long time, and I have come to the conclusion that the yeast I get at the goocery is not good.' 'Why do you use it then?' 'It is such a particular job to make yeast, that is good yeast that I have never dared to undertake it. Nearly all the ladies about here use the kind that I do, but Mrs. Brown told me in the spring that she made her own, and liked it much better, and Mrs. Winters told me last week that she also made her own, and I have a great mind to try it too, you and I ought to be able to do what others do, and if you will just run down to Mrs. Brown's and ask for directions, we will try it this afternoon.'

We were in Mary Harlow's pretty little kitchen, I doing the breakfast dishes, and Mary cooking, when the foregoing conversation took place. I was spending my vacation with her as I had done each of the four happy summers that she had been married, and it was nothing unusual for her to ask me to run out on errands for her, when too busy to go herself. I was well acquainted with the inhabitants of the little town, and always called upon them with the familiarity of an old friend, rather than the formality of a summer visitor. As I sallied forth, Mary called to me.

'If Mrs. Brown isn't at home, call at Mrs. Winter's, she is always at home.' Half way down the street I met Mrs. Brown. 'Why Miss Sarah,' she began in her high unpleasant tone. 'What's happened? No one sick I hope, that you are out so early.' 'We are all well, thank you. I was on my way to your house to ask for your recipe for hop yeast, Mrs. Harlow wants to make some.' 'Well, now that's what I call sensible, no dependence to be put in this boughten stuff. I used it till I was clean out of patience, and I said to Nathan, 'no more of that trash for me, I'm just going to make my own, it can be done.' I never yet tried to do a thing, but that I done it, and so I——' Will you just please tell me how you make the yeast?' I interrupted. 'O, certainly. I don't think any one else makes it the same way. You see there are but few folks around here that try it, most of them buy the cakes. They are foolish enough to think that making yeast is a particular job, but it is nothing if you only have a good recipe.' 'That's just what I want, and just what I started out to get,' I said, 'and if you will please tell me just how you proceed, I will not detain you any longer.' 'My yeast is always good,' said she, beginning at the place where I had hoped to stop her, 'and' (raising her voice which was unnecessary, as she was then speaking in a tone that could have been heard, I won't say how far away,) 'I should like to see the woman that can beat me making bread.' 'How do you make your yeast?' I asked, savagely, for I knew if she once got started upon an enumeration of the things in which she 'couldn't be beat,' that nothing short of an earthquake, or a cyclone, could stop her. Planting her feet squarely on the ground, she began, 'Well, take five or six potatoes, according to the size of course, and if you want to make a great quantity of yeast, take more potatoes,' (as if I didn't know that). 'How do you prepare the potatoes?' I interrupted, fearing she might start another strain. 'Grate them very fine with a grater, steep a few hops in a little water.' 'How many hops, in how much water?' 'Oh, that's according to the amount of yeast you're making, or whether you want your bread to taste hoppy; some folks don't use any, but I said to Nathan, hops are healthy and I——' 'What next?' I snapped. 'Pour some boiling water over the potatoes, and strain the hops, and——' 'How much boiling water do you pour over the potatoes?' 'That's according to how many potatoes you use.' 'Well, go on.' 'Put in salt and sugar, and set away to cool; when cool enough——' 'How cool?' 'Oh, milk warm, put it into air-tight jars.' 'Is that all?' 'That's all, only you must put in a cup of yeast from your last making, or a yeast cake dissolved. I always save a cup of the old to begin the new. Now Miss Sarah, if you do just as I have told you there will be no trouble.' I turned impolitely and continued my walk down street, leaving her to finish the conversation. As I walked, I mused, 'she can't be beat in one thing, and that is talking.'

I called upon Mrs. Winters and in very humble tones, said, 'Will you please tell me how you make yeast? Mrs. Harlow wishes to make some this afternoon.' 'O, yes, with pleasure I would do anything to please Mrs. Harlow. As I was telling Jeremiah last night, she is one of the women that wears well, why when she came here with her pretty face and city ways, we all made up our minds she would be too stuck up to notice us, but land sakes, Miss Sarah, she just comes in and out among us just like a lady, as she is, and if she wants my receipt for hop yeast, I'm sure she is welcome to it, for as I was telling Jeremiah——' 'It is getting late, Mrs. Winters, and if you will give me the directions, I will hasten home,' I broke in. 'Well, I always take eight or nine potatoes, according to the amount of yeast I want to make, of course, if you are going to make a lot, you will have to take more.——' That was too much for me, I didn't wait for any more; I bolted, and Mrs. Winters never seemed very friendly after that, and I heard that she said to a very intimate friend, 'I can't make out what that Sarah Blake got mad about. I was just giving her a receipt for hop yeast, and all on a sudden she right up and dusted right out my front door and never stopped running as long as I could see her.'

Oh, good Mrs. Winters, I can stand a great deal, but human nature is a queer thing, you have some of it, and so have I, and so has Mrs. Brown, and you and she would get along nicely together, but I don't think either of you could get along with me, that is, in peace. Though I gave Mary a glowing account of my adventure, she didn't seem to give it much credit, but her husband nearly choked himself laughing at it.

Cure and Care of Burns.

In all burns great care should be taken to save the cuticle—the raised portion of the skin that forms the blister. Clothing, etc., should be removed with the utmost gentleness. Blisters should be carefully punctured with a clean needle. The best way to be sure that a needle is clean when required for such service is to heat it red hot, allow it to cool, and then use it. It will thus be freed from any organisms, for in such a place as a burn germs will thrive abundantly and prove most detrimental, so that the utmost care is necessary. Then the raised cuticle should be pressed down to the true skin, and covered with a large quantity of clean cotton wool to prevent the access of air, as free exposure tends to increase shock and pain. Equal parts of lime water and linseed oil applied on lint and covered with cotton wool is a favorite remedy, known under the name of carron-oil, or the blister may be covered with wheaten flour. Lately powdered clay has been employed, but for the first few days it is best to wrap the part in cotton wool, sufficient oil being employed to prevent its sticking. The dressings once put on must not be removed for some days—not, indeed, until they have been loosened by the discharge or become offensive. The constant removal of dressing is disturbing, painful and consequently injurious, and to obviate any necessity for it carbolic oil, as a disinfectant, is used in proportion of one to ten or more.

Small burns or scalds may be treated by water dressing, lead lotion, chalk and water, collodion or Friar's balsam Two parts of collodion to one of castor oil is an excellent application. The patient should be kept in a warm atmosphere, well covered up, and some wine or brandy and hot water may be administered.—Family Doctor.

ROSY CHEEKS FOR THE LITTLE ONES.—Mothers who wish their children to brighten their homes with sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks—in other words to have sound minds in sound bodies—should pay particular attention to their diet. The food for children should be plain as to quality and plentiful in quantity. Articles of food which are largely composed of starch, are of very little use in nourishing the growth of the body; in illness, where simply bland, innutricious food is required to sustain a system that is not capable of digesting stronger aliments, these substances do very well. For a child under six years of age, the best breakfast is bread and milk, with fruit either stewed or fresh; this may be varied by substituting oatmeal, or Indian meal mush, if well cooked, for the bread and milk. For dinner, meat carefully cooked so as to preserve the natural juices, but without any made gravies or sauces, with vegetables and some light dessert, is all that is required, while the supper should consist of bread and milk, or equivalent. All rich pastry, hot bread, fat meat, tea, coffee and spices should be avoided. The bread, either Graham or wheat, should be twenty-four hours old. Potatoes are best roasted or baked. Eggs may be permitted, if fresh, and plain boiled and rather soft. The proper way to cook for old and young is to place them over the fire in cold water and bring them to a boil, allowing about ten minutes for the process. Then set back on the range the vessel containing them, and if they are wanted soft let them remain one minute, and longer for different stages of hardness. By plunging them at once in hot water, the albumen is hardened and rendered indigestible, while the yolk is nearly raw.

—An old man said to me: 'My gals never forget me. They married and went away to their homes, and though there were none of them well to do, yet not one of them ever saw the time she wouldn't steal a dollar from her husband to give to father or mother; but it isn't so with the boys. They never knew they owed me anything; they never put their hands in their pockets for me; they never laid awake o' night thinking how to scrimp housework expenses to get me or mother a present, like the gals did. And yet when I was a-raisin' 'em I thought one boy was worth a dozen gals.

Putnam's Corn Extractor

Is the best remedy for corns extant. It acts quickly and makes no sore spots and effects a radical cure. A hundred imitations prove its value. Take neither substitutes offered as good, nor the close imitations of the genuine too often offered.

—'Maybe I haf to fall before spring,' said a Philadelphia merchant to a travelling salesmen who was trying to sell him a bill of goods. 'But you are worth $40,000 and have only $10,000 worth of stock. You'd have to pay $4 for one if you failed.' 'Mein gootness, vhas it like dot? FOUR CHILDREN AT THE ALTAR.—Buffalo, N. Y., March 16.—Judge King of the police court was astonished to-day, when a pretty little girl, between 13 and 14 years of age, with her skirts above her knees, and her hair hanging, school-girl fashion, down her back, requested that he grant her a warrant for the arrest of her husband for non-support. The experienced judge looked at the child and thought she was so was crazy. But she was so persistent that the paper was issued. She said her husband's name was Herbert W. Stone, that her name was formerly Grace Kendall and that she had been secretly married in January.

When the warrant was placed in the hands of an officer, it was not long before the boy who is 16 years old, was found and brought into court. The whole thing then came out. It seems that the two named, together with Charlie Estes, aged 16, and Mary Vaughn, aged 15, met in January at a dancing party. They were acquainted slightly before, but on this particular evening, seemed to have become completely enamored of one another. They talked the matter over and agreed to proceed to the residence of Rev. Charles H. Smith, 208 East Eagle street, where they were quietly married. Miss Kendall had been living with her uncle, C. F. Kendall, the head of the Kendall manufacturing company, who is her guardian, and who, when he heard how matters stood, tried to make the best of it and have the two children live together. Young Stone is willing to do this, but his mother, who is a rich woman living at Tonawanda, will not agree, and wants to have the marriage broken off. She was so stubborn to-day that she allowed the boy to go to jail, emphatically refusing to provide bonds.

The other two are not living together either, young Eagles, of course, being totally unable to support his child-wife. Mr. Kendall, however, offered to provide for Mr. and Mrs. Stone, but the mother-in law wouldn't have it that way. Eagles and his wife came from poor but respectable parentage. Much blame is laid upon the clergyman who allowed these four children to contract marriage. Mr. Smith is pastor of St. James' Episcopal church. It is probable that the respective families will endeavor to have the marriages annulled.

THE DEAF AND DUMB INSTITUTION.—We have received a copy of the 29th annual report of the institution for the deaf and dumb which has just been issued. After reviewing the work of the year, Principal Hutton says:

"I feel constrained again to call attention to to this serious evil, which seems to show no sign of abatement. Deaf mutes are constantly travelling over this province, and the neighboring provinces and states, ostensibly "collecting" for some plausible object or other, but really living by systematic begging. Some have been in this city, even within the last few weeks. Sometimes they profess to be collecting for the Halifax institution and hundreds of dollars have been received by them, not a cent of which ever finds its way to the treasury of the institution. At other times they give themselves out as "agents" of some other institution. In either case every dollar given to them is a direct premium upon vagrancy and fraud. It should be distinctly understood that the Halifax institution has no such agents in the field, and never employs deaf mute collectors to ttinerate for contributions. As for the St. John school, it can have no claim upon Nova Scotians, who send none of their deafmutes there, and who have for years been contributing heavily to educate New Brunswick deafmutes in the Halifax institution. The money given to these wandering mendicants is much needed at present at home, and would be better applied to the support of our own institutions."

The report also contains a copy of the law relating to deafmute education passed in 1884, giving free education to deafmutes.

JOURNALISTIC ENTERPRISE.—The Toronto Globe, has embarked upon a great enterprise. It has engaged a special train, which carries nothing but the Globe, and which runs on fast time to London via the Southern Southern Division of the Grand Trunk Railway, reaching the Western Metropolis by 6.45, in time to make the connection with all the morning trains leaving that important centre. The practical effect of this undertaking is that the Globe can now be placed upon the breakfast tables of one-half of the people in the densely populated Western Peninsula of Ontario. In addition to this the annual subscription of the Morning Globe has been reduced from $7 to $5, and single copies from 3 to 2 cents. Coincident with these important changes the publishers promise that increased energy will be thrown into every department of the Globe so that the paper will become more than ever the representative of the Canadian thought and enterprise. The first special train started on Thursday morning from Toronto at 3.53 and arrived in London at 6.39; and at 6.45 the Globe was upon the streets of that city in time to give the early risers a genuine surprise. Such enterprise deserves and no doubt will achieve success.

OUR WATER WORKS.

As will be seen by our legislative summary in another column, the act to enable us to provide the town with a system of water works and a system of sewerage has passed the House of Assembly. It will, no doubt, pass unobstructed through the upper house and become law.

This necessary step gained, it now remains for the inhabitants of the town to bring it into effect.

Mr. J. E. Sancton, one of the commissioners appointed under the Act, having occasion to visit Halifax last week on business, called upon Mr. Keating, the engineer of the city water works, and laid before him the nature of the work, and asked him for a rough estimate. Mr. Keating kindly drew up the same, and the result showed that we can bring the water into this town for a sum not exceeding $16,000, estimating on 4 miles of pipe as follows: an 8 inch pipe for the first mile, a 6 inch pipe for the next mile and 4 inch for the remaining two miles. The sewerage system, from all the information at hand, will cost in the neighborhood of $1,500. The estimates for both systems have, however, been based upon outside figures. The cost of the pipe, for instance, was based on $30 for short tons, whereas Capt. Hugh Fraser, hardware dealer of this town, has received advices from Glasgow informing him that the pipe can be laid down here for $30 for long tons, making a difference in our favor, in the amount we will require, of $700, and it is known that in several other particulars the work can be done for a much less sum. Taking the very outside figures, however, the expense of both systems will not cost the town more than $18,000.

For this comparatively small sum, which is but slightly in advance of what has always been given as the cost of the water works alone, we furnish our town with improvements that will place her among the foremost in the province, and do more for her future growth, health and general prosperity than anything else that we know of.

—A new extradition treaty is about completed between the United States and Russia. It provides among other things that an attempt to assassinate the sovereign or chief magistrates of the state or any member of his family, as well as an attempt to participate in said crimes, shall not be considered an offence of a political character. Nihilists will now have to seek some other retreat when their misdeeds are discovered and it becomes necessary for them to escape the clutches of the law and Siberia and the terrible knout.

—It is asserted by the government press and denied by the opposition that Hon. Mr. Blake has resigned his position as leader of the Liberal party, and that Hon. Mr. Mowatt, premier of the Ontario legislature, has been called upon to take the vacant position. The people will not have long to wait to know which story is correct.

—We fully agree with the suggestion advanced by "Progress," in another column. Shade trees systematically and judiciously set out on our various streets will add materially to the appearance of the town. A determined effort, at all events, should be made to have the west side of Queen St., set out with a row corresponding with the east side, and two similar rows set out on Granville St.

Wreck on the Fundy Shore—Schr. "Flora B." Total Loss.

CREW ALL SAVED.

A Middleton despatch on Monday last, says "Schooner Flora B., of Parrsboro, Capt. P. Bently, lost her rudder while running down the Bay, and went ashore at Port George, at 2 p. m., on Saturday. The sea was running very high and the wind blowing a gale. Crew were saved with difficulty. A piece of lead was fastened to a small cord and thrown into the rigging, by means of which a large rope was drawn on board the schooner and the crew then were enabled to escape to the shore. The vessel is very badly damaged but possibly can be repaired. She had a cargo of potatoes on board, which were all washed away.

Another correspondent writes:—

Schr. "Flora B.," Thos. K. Bently, master, from Kingsport, with potatoes for Boston, went ashore about a mile west of Port George wharf, at 1.30 o'clock p. m., Saturday 26th inst. Following is an extract from the captain's log:—

"Sailed from Kingsport, Tuesday 22nd, bound for Boston, wind S. E., when we left, and at 12 o'clock, p. m., was off Petite passage, wind veered to W. S. W., blowing hard and weather being very thick, were driven back to Musquodoboit, laid there till Friday 25th, came out wind S. E., at 12 o'clock, noon, wind had veered more southwardly and westwardly, heavy cross seas running, unshipped rudder, and started rudderpost casings, and she began to leak badly, lost and split sails, and she became unmanageable. At 1.30 o'clock, p. m., Saturday 26th we went ashore, about one mile west of Port George wharf, lost small anchor and two warps trying to check her head way and get on the other tack but could not. She lays in a hard position on rocks, keel and keelson broken. Both bilges stove in and mainmast gone."

The inhabitants saw the vessel was in distress and there were crowds on the shore to witness the sad spectacle and lend a helping hand. It was with great difficulty the crew were rescued as they were nearly perished from exposure, but were cared for in a hospitable manner after they were rescued. Sails, running gear, cabin furniture, clothes and all the removables were saved in a damaged condition, but some miscreants, thieves from a distance, were prowling around in the night and committed such contemptible acts that they should be looked after to the fullest extent of the law.

The "Flora B." hails from Parrsboro, was built in 1884, and is 70 tons register. Capt. owns three quarters of her and has no insurance. Cargo owned by the Cornwallis Grange, and consisted of 3550 bushels of potatoes. Does not know whether it is insured or not.

—The gymnasium is now in active operation, and the membership is constantly increasing. Mr. King proves himself to be a competent instructor. Foster's Hall has been rented for the present, and meetings will be held at least three times a week. The interest shown is very general, and it is hoped to add more apparatus before long, in order that the exercises may be varied as much as possible. We hope 40 see very beneficial results flow from this institution. The exercises are all graduated to the strength and constitution of the members.

Granville Notes.

A social re-union held on Tuesday evening, March 15th, at the Baptist parsonage, Stony Beach, Granville, was a very enjoyable affair. Notwithstanding the bad state of the roads, the attendance was good and $54.00 was left for the benefit of the pastor, Rev. Frank Potter. Some special services have lately been held at Stony Beach and considerable interest manifested.

The lack of snow makes wood very scarce in Lower Granville, and those who looked for six weeks sledding in March have been bitterly disappointed.

Capt. Jos. Hall, has just taken the contract to finish the dyke in course of construction between Stony Beach and Granville Ferry, for $425.00. This will furnish about 30 days' work for 100 men, in April and May.

Lawrencetown Item.

Messrs. J. P. Mitchell & Co., are doing an immense lumber business this season. They have put in for their Nictaux and Albany mill, three and a half millions; and for the Port Medway mill, the same quantity. Their men and teams are now out of the woods. Messrs. M. & Co., paid off 182 men this week, distributing some thousands of dollars, cash. We need more men of this stamp.

Golden Wedding.

We copy the following from a Lawrence Mass., paper:—The fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Elias Grimes was observed at the residence of their daughter, Mrs. Moses D. Woodbury, 72 Bradford street, last evening. About seventy-five persons, including relatives and members of the Second Baptist church, were present. The worthy couple were the recipients of numerous gifts, including a purse of $55 in gold, parlor lamp, sugar spoon, ladies' breastpin, two towels, one dated 1837, and the other 1887, portraits of two great grandchildren, in a plush colored frame; a son and daughter of Avard L. Welton of Methuen. The presentation speech was made by Carlton Payson, a brother of Mrs. Grimes, and Rev. F. M. Gardner made remarks appropriate to the occasion, and offered prayer, Mr. Grimes feelingly responded in behalf of his wife and himself. Miss E. D. Woodbury read a poem appropriate to the occasion. Refreshments were served, after which there was music and social intercourse. A present by Elias P. Grimes, their youngest son, and wife, of Caribou, Me., was expected, but owing to a delay in the mail, it failed to arrive in season to be presented on the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Grimes were united in marriage, by Rev. I. E. Bill D. D., March 14th, 1837, at Wilmot, Nova Scotia, and have resided in Methuen during the past twenty years. Rev. Mr. Bill, who is 89 years of age, is still engaged in the ministry, but, owing to his advanced age, he was unable to attend the anniversary exercises last evening, but sent a photograph of himself to Mrs. Grimes, which they will cherish as a precious treasure. Mr. Grimes is 72 years of age, and his wife 68. They have had eleven children, of whom five are now living: S. A. and Albert Grimes, Emma, wife of Moses E. Woodbury; Cordelia, wife of Amasiah Welton, of Methuen, and Elias P. Grimes of Caribou, Maine.

Another item in the same paper says:—Mr. and Mrs. Elias Grimes received by post Tuesday evening, a registered package from their son Elias P. Grimes of Caribou, Me., containing $50 in gold coin included as one of the presents at the golden wedding of his parents which was celebrated on Monday evening.

[The son who thus kindly remembered his parents, started from this county when he was but nineteen years of age. He went into the far north Maine country and started in the cedar shingle business. Two years ago he added a grocery business, and is now doing a trade of at least a thousand dollars a month, so we are informed. He is now but twenty-six years of age and stands high in the community and church to which he belongs. So much for our Nova Scotia lads. Blood will tell.—ED. MON.]

—The Lynn Bee, of March 5th, says: The friends of Miss Ruth McKeown, surprised and presented her with a handsome hanging lamp, at her residence on Stewart street, Thursday evening. The presentation speech was made by Mr. A. A. Green at 9 o'clock, after which games were enjoyed, and all had a general good time. At 10.30 o'clock all retired to the spacious dining hall, where a beautiful ice cream supper was served. There was no lack of musical ability present, Prof. Walter B. Flagg acted as musical director, and Mr. Arthur Hodgkin as master of ceremonies.

Miss McKeown is a sister of Mrs. John McLean, of this town.—[ED. MON.

—Last Wednesday we had a call from Mr. E. G. Langley, formerly of this town, now engaged in the carriage business at Peticodiac, N. B. Mr. L. met with a very serious loss by fire on the 29th, of January last. His manufactory took fire in the night and was entirely burned up, together with all the tools and a large amount of finished work, including twenty finished waggons. His loss was heavy, as there was but a small insurance on the building and materials. Cause of fire unknown. He has commenced to rebuild, and we trust that he may have a greatly increased business and retrieve his losses.

A SAD AND FATAL ACCIDENT.—A despatch inform us that a fire broke out in the house of Mr. Albert Borden, postmaster, of Canning, at 3 o'clock in the morning, of Friday last. The neighbors quickly gathered to the scene, and succeeded in extinguished the flames, but not before three or four rooms were completely ruined. A sad discovery was made in one of these rooms. In one corner the dead body of Mr. Bordon was found. The theory is, that he accidentally knocked over a lamp, which set fire to the room, and in trying to extinguish the flames he stayed too long and became suffocated before he could escape. The deceased was a highly respected member of the community and leaves a wife and one child who are at present in Boston.

A correspondent of the Halifax Herald says:—

The late Mr. Bordon, started the first paper in Kings County, the Kings County Gazette, published at Canning, over 20 years ago. Canning was then the commercial metropolis of the County and the Gazette took an active part in the issues of that time when confederation and the fenian raid occupied public attention.

—The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto Mail, writing under date of March 17th, says:—

"Mr. Kenney, ex-M.P. for Yarmouth, N. S., is in the city completing arrangements with the government for a loan of half a million dollars to the Western Counties railway. This sum was promised to this company last fall for the purpose of constructing a line to connect the towns of Digby and Annapolis, twenty miles apart, thereby completing the Nova Scotia system of railways. The money will be loaned without interest, as it is a recompense to the company for the government's inability to hand over the Windsor branch of the Intercolonial railway; given by act of parliament to the Western Counties railway on completion of the latter branch, in the meantime the Mackenzie government having leased it form a long term of years to the Windsor and Annapolis road. This lease has yet some 28 years to run, consequently the loan will for a similar term, but Parliament will have to ratify it next session.

ARBOR DAY.

[To the Editor of the Monitor.]

What about having an arbor day in Bridgetown? There are many places in our streets where trees might be planted to advantage, and at the same time be an ornament to the locality. Who will deny that the row of trees on the east side of Queen street, are becoming more ornamental every year? Imagine a similar row on the other side and you can picture how handsome the street will be in ten or a dozen years, let alone the agreeable shade which the luxuriant foliage will afford in the sultry days of summer. Besides, why not set trees in the cross and rear streets of the town; it will improve those streets and tend also to the absorption of miasma, the germ of malaria, as it is now recognised that the foliage of trees absorb those gases which are detrimental to all humanity. Who will move in the matter as the season is approaching for planting? Shall we call a public meeting and discuss it? All I have to recommend is agitate! agitate! Yours, PROGRESS.
