including lobsters, oysters, salmon, smelts, clams and quahogs besides many other species. Fishing provides a livelihood for many residents of this constituency both in the commercial and sports fishing fields. I do not intend to present a history of the Miramichi fisheries but we have had problems and some of these problems still exist. These problems bring forth divergent views from the many different classes of fishermen and from the buyers, even within the scope of the production of one specie of fish. This divergence is most prominent among those engaged in the salmon fishing industry and particularly applies to the fishing season dates for drift net, set net and fly fishing. The matters of the protection of spawning areas for the spring fishing of black salmon, the hatchery spawning of the late run salmon against the spawning of the early run salmon are among the phases over which there is no general agreement as to the best course to follow.

The chief concern of the department and of the fishing industry in general is that of conservation to make sure that in future sufficient stocks are available as is essential and desirable in respect of this valuable food product and that our fisheries are preserved in order to provide a continuing livelihood for a large segment of our population.

I would like to say a word as to the effect of the budworm spray on the fish and animal life in my constituency, which has been the cause of much concern. An adverse effect is expected to be apparent in the fish population during 1960 and 1961. While the protection of our forests is important, it is the earnest hope of all concerned that an effective spray solution can be found which will not be injurious to fish. The department's estimate that spraying may be completed this year was most welcomed information.

In July the Minister of Fisheries announced the establishment of a federal-provincial Atlantic fisheries committee to consider fisheries problems common to the five Atlantic provinces. The personnel of that committee comprises the federal deputy minister of fisheries and the deputy ministers of the provincial departments of fisheries of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The committee will consider proposals and recommendations on fishery matters of common interest to all Atlantic provinces and will make recommendations to the respective governments for the implementation of programs and projects designed to assist in the development of methods and techniques and fishing equipment. It will study and report upon the economics of fisheries in order to ensure that any proposed program of development is based upon sound principles. In that respect I trust that the fishermen's organizations will make extensive studies of their particular problems and will present their findings and recommendations to the respective provincial deputy ministers for study and action by the federal-provincial Atlantic fisheries council.

I turn now to matters which directly affect the Miramichi fisheries. Oyster fishermen of Miramichi suffered a severe loss when disease became prevalent among their oysters. Action was taken by the department in re-seeding these beds with disease-resistant oysters which were transplanted from beds in Prince Edward Island. By natural processes this disease should eventually be eliminated, likely within 20 to 25 years. By re-seeding with disease-resistant oysters it is estimated that oyster fishing can be resumed in five to eight years. In the meantime it is essential that every care and protection be afforded these transplanted oysters and that the best men available be engaged.

The Miramichi salmon fisheries consists of three types of fishing—drift-net fishing, set-net fishing and angling. There is considerable difference of opinion among these groups and some difference of opinion within each group as to the most favourable fishing dates.

Combined meetings in the past failed to bring about a mutually agreed set of fishing dates. This situation should be the subject matter of a special inquiry by a committee comprised of officials of the federal and provincial departments of fisheries, representatives of the three groups and representatives of the buyers.

The view has been expressed that the erection of a causeway between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island across Northumberland strait will have an adverse effect on alewives fishing and will affect the fishing of some other species caught in the Miramichi waters. If the causeway is erected, every precaution should be taken to permit the natural flow of fish. Smelt fishing is a very important phase of Miramichi fisheries. These smelts rank the highest in quality. Here again there are divergent views as to the best fishing dates due to weather conditions and market conditions. Due to the change in climatic conditions over the years to milder winters, fishing off the ice has become hazardous. The ice is late in forming and after it has formed, unseasonable run-offs occur causing extensive loss and damage to nets and gear.

Requests over the years for the inclusion of smelt nets under the fishermen's indemnity insurance plan have not brought about the desired results. The department's study of the situation found that no practical way can be found to assess the losses and keep the insurance premium at a moderate rate. I make a further request for continued study by the department towards setting up insurance coverage against loss of smelt nets and gear similar to that in effect for fishing boats and lobster traps. As a measure to alleviate losses it is suggested that regular surveys of ice conditions be made by helicopter through arrangements with the R.C.A.F. station at Chatham, and that an adequate warning system of sudden break-ups and run-offs of ice be set up using the local radio station and other means to warn the fishermen.

Lobster fishing is another important phase of Miramichi fisheries. The catch varies from season to season, and the catch varies each season in the different lobster areas within the Miramichi estuary. The protection of this species has been a continuing problem to some degree. Many reports are heard about undersized and berried—mother—lobsters being landed. The department is urged to concentrate its program of conservation on lobster fishing.

There is a splendid film showing the life and habits of the lobster which should be made available for all lobster fishermen to see. I made a request three or four years ago when this film was documented to have it shown in the different lobster fishing areas of the Miramichi. To date to my knowledge this had not been done. The showing of this film would, in my opinion, do more towards the conservation of lobsters than many protective measures now in force. I request the minister to arrange for the showing of this film in the Miramichi area with both English and French commentaries available as required.

A practical change was made this year in lobster fishing district No. 8. The hour set for fishermen to leave shore to set their traps was advanced from 12 o'clock noon to 10 o'clock a.m. I have not seen a copy of the change in regulations. However, I trust the change will apply to district 7B next year.

In the field of fly fishing many reports are heard about wholesale slaughter of fish. Reports state that fishing parties go to the headwaters of the rivers and streams and illegally net fish on their way to the spawning grounds. It is alleged that fishing parties take canning outfits into the woods and can their illegal catches on the spot. If there is any truth in these reports—and it is claimed that fish and game protective associations have certain facts—then consideration should be given, following investigation, to closing off the spawning areas and other areas where this kind of illegal fishing is engaged in.

In the matter of salmon protection on the southwest and northwest branches of the Miramichi river and for certain other tributaries, opinions have been widely expressed that adequate protection is not provided, particularly at vulnerable periods. Protective measures are governed by the amount of money available, an economy restriction which is recognized. However, it might well be that this economy is defeating in no small measure the salmon conservation program. The Miramichi commercial salmon fishermen's association, the local fish and game protective association, and the Miramichi salmon angling association have raised this matter many times over the years. It is suggested that the minister have a complete investigation made at which time all data be collected, following which the whole field of protection can be re-assessed to ascertain if more protective measures are required for the Miramichi river and its branches to assist the Atlantic salmon conservation plan.

In the matter of providing facilities for commercial fishing, there has been much dissatisfaction expressed about the basis that is used in deciding if the construction of facilities are to be authorized. The decision is made by the economic study branch of the Department of Public Works. The decision is made solely on the amount and landed value of the fish taken at the respective area. The department of fisheries supplies the data on the fish catch and in most cases makes no further representations. It is my contention that other factors should be seriously considered and have a bearing on the decision to construct facilities such as wharves, breakwaters, small landings, extensions to existing facilities and also dredging. The reason why the landed value and size of the catch is not higher is due in large measure to the lack of facilities. These other factors concern the human energy that must be expended by the fishermen, due to lack of facilities to land their catches ashore, protection needed for boats and gear against storms, distance from existing facilities and distance from the fishermen's homes to the existing facilities.

Some of the smaller fishing areas of the Miramichi area are without facilities of any kind and catches must be man-handled to the shore and taken to the nearest access road or some considerable distances over water. The Department of Fisheries should make the decision as to the need of facilities for the fishermen, keeping in mind the hardships faced and the benefits that would be gained in preserving the quality of the fish and increasing the volume and landed value.

The selection of personnel as fisheries officers on a permanent basis comes under the civil service commission with veterans preference recognition. This same recognition should be standard procedure for non-civil service appointments, other qualifications being equal. For seasonal employment such as patrol service and guardians, experience should be the prime qualification. To build up an adequate protective and conservation service and as a reward for good services rendered in the past, personnel who satisfactorily performed past services should be re-engaged. With regard to salaries paid seasonal and part-time fisheries employees, an increase is warranted. They should be paid on a par with comparable work at the existing prevailing wage rate.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I again suggest that the Department of Fisheries should be raised to a higher level of importance among the departments of government and that a larger share of the public funds be allotted to carry out in a fuller measure the duties of this most important branch so necessary to our economy and vital to the livelihood of those Canadians who toil the hardest for the smallest remuneration.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, on an earlier occasion in this house I took the opportunity of expressing my views on the fishing industry in Newfoundland and the problems facing the industry in that province. It is not my intention to repeat those statements at this time. I do not wish to unduly delay the passage of the minister's estimates but I do wish to make a few brief remarks.

First of all, I should like to commend the minister for the excellent work that was carried out by him during the discussion of his estimates in the standing committee. I appreciate the fact that he was present at all meetings of the committee and gave of his knowledge in answering the questions that were put to him. I take that as a measure of his interest in the department which he heads, an interest which I believe augurs well for the future of the fishing industry in Canada. And while I wish to offer the minister my congratulations for his work and also to extend congratulations to the officials of his department and the chairman of the standing committee I wish also to extend my very personal congratulations to the minister for the honour which was conferred on him last Saturday by his own university, Mount Allison.

I believe that if the fishing industry of Newfoundland is to take a prominent place among the primary industries in Canada some price supports will be needed for the produce of the industry. I believe, too, that if we are going to maintain our markets for particular types of produce, such as light salt fish, or to provide a type of fish that is required by a certain market it may be necessary not only to provide further price supports but to provide a bonus for products that will be acceptable in the various markets of the world. I would suggest to the minister that very serious consideration be given to this problem.

Within the last few days we have heard that the exporting association responsible for exporting Newfoundland fish, an association commonly known as NAFEL, is reaching the end of its life and has only another year to operate. I would hope by the time the present year has expired and NAFEL is no longer an exporting association for Newfoundland fish there will be provided by the federal government some form of association, commission or board that will bring some order to the marketing of fisheries products in the province of Newfoundland. When I refer to the marketing of fisheries products I do not mean only the actual marketing process within the province itself but also the marketing processes that take place in the markets of the world. While I am not here making any plea for NAFEL I do indeed make a plea for some organization that will take its place when NAFEL no longer exists.

It is indeed somewhat difficult to discuss the fisheries industry in Newfoundland without discussing as well the facilities which aid the fishermen to carry on their work. I know the estimates of the Minister of Public Works have already been passed but I should like to make a brief reference to them and say that on the section of the coast which I represent we have some harbours that are large and some that are small and on straight shore. We still need a great many structures for the protection of fishing equipment such as small private wharves and fishing boats. I hope that in large areas where a considerable quantity of fish is produced such as in St. George's bay the time will not be too far distant when we can have those facilities that will enable the fishermen to carry on their work in the way in which they would like to carry it on.

Reference has been made a number of times today to a problem that exists in my province and it is so serious in the riding I have the honour to represent that I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without making a few brief comments concerning it.

I refer, of course, to the need for an expanded bait service. I appreciate that the minister and his officials have been making a very serious study of this problem in Newfoundland. I know, too, they have come up with a solution which they are hoping to conduct on an experimental basis. This bait service is of extreme importance to the fishermen who live along the coast. In the first place it enables them to get to work earlier in the year and it enables them to fish longer during the season with the result that their productivity is increased. It also enables them to increase their annual earnings so they can raise the level of their income to a status more comparable with wages earned in other industries. In addition to this it provides employment in Newfoundland at a time when in various other fields employment is not as plentiful as it was a year ago.

I hope the experiment which the minister intends to conduct in the province of Newfoundland shortly will be productive of worth-while results. I have already suggested to him several places where the bait service should be expanded and I shall now give him another list and suggest to him that bait depots should be provided for the following places: Codroy, St. George's bay, Port-au-Port bay, bay of Islands, Bonne Bay, Cow Head, Daniel's Harbour, the St. Barbe area and the Flower's Cove area. Along that coast it is a distance of 300 miles in a straight line but more nearly 1,000 miles by following the coastline and on that whole coastline there is but one bait depot in a distance of approximately 1,000 miles. It is not possible for these men to carry on their industry, an industry from which they could make a good living, without being able to obtain the bait so necessary to them. I hope that the minister will continue to give very serious consideration to this problem, as I know he has already.

During the proceedings of the standing committee the minister was not able to provide us with the number of freezing units that would be built nor was he in a position then to give us the locations of these units. When the particular item is before the committee later in the discussion I hope the minister will be able to give us that information. I have a number of questions but I shall present them to the minister when the various items are before the committee.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister is going to answer, I have a few observations I should like to make.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Batten.]

Mr. Pickersgill: If the committee so desires, we are quite prepared on our part to go on for some time after ten o'clock to facilitate the passing of the first item of the minister's estimates.

The Deputy Chairman: With the indulgence of the committee I will keep my eyes on my work and not on the clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I assure you I will try to keep my eyes on the clock and not let it move too far before I sit down. I am sure that will be a very great relief to some members of the committee who perhaps have not the same enthusiasm for my efforts as I have myself. I want to say, as so many others have said, as we embark upon the first presentation of the minister's estimates in this parliament, although he did present a few of his estimates in the last parliament and never got them all through, that all of us on this side of the house think that the minister has an excellent department with a fine staff of officials built up over the years by a succession of very able ministers, Mr. Mayhew and Mr. Sinclair, and from such indications as we have seen up to now, and in spite of the political differences we may have, we think we have a minister who is pretty seriously and conscientiously interested in the welfare of the fisheries.

I want to say, and in saying this I am going a long way, that I do think there was one committee during this session where some good work really was done and that was the committee on marine and fisheries where the estimates of this department were considered. I believe that the time of the house will be saved because of the work of that committee. We were interested only in the fisheries and in the welfare of the fishermen, as the minister himself has said. I still have my reservation about scattering the departments among a number of committees. I think the estimates of any department should go to the estimates committee, and not to other committees, but I do think that this is the kind of department it is much better to have considered before a committee, prior to its estimates being considered in the house, because of necessity it interests primarily a fairly small proportion of the total membership of the house.

But there are some things that all of us feel we want to say, particularly on the first item of the minister's estimates, because they are of very great interest to our constituents and in some cases of very great national interest. Certainly no one like myself and my colleagues from Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces can forget the fact that the fishery is the oldest of our industries. It was the industry that really started Canada, that brought the original settlers in the first place to what, though it is the newest province, is the oldest settled part of Canada, the province of Newfoundland.

Although the cod fishery is the oldest industry it is far indeed from being the most prosperous of our industries. At the present time it is going through a very serious crisis indeed, and that is particularly true of the salt fish industry. I know the resolution to which I am about to refer has been presented to the minister but I am going to take a minute or two to put it on record because I should like to have it on the records of parliament. It is a resolution adopted by the Newfoundland federation of fishermen and while I do not say I would give 100 per cent support to everything suggested in it, they do set out a program which I believe in the main, deserves very serious and sympathetic consideration, not merely on the part of those who are interested in the fisheries but by all Canadians who are interested in the welfare of one of our most important industries. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas Newfoundland has the world's largest group of specialized fishermen; and whereas fishing is to this province what farming is to the western provinces—

I draw this particularly to the attention of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

—and whereas shrinking employment opportunities are throwing more Newfoundlanders back to the fishery; and whereas these are in large part young men who moved from the fishing industry during its recent decline and now return with no alternative employment;
Be it resolved:

(1) That floor prices be established for codfish saltbulk and dry cure on a basis comparable to those provided by the federal government for wheat farmers—

I may say to the hon. member for Assiniboia that this is not my recommendation but that of the Newfoundland federation of fishermen. I may also say that if the Newfoundland fishermen could get as good a deal as the wheat farmers they would think that they were well off, but perhaps that is because they are a long way away from the prairies.

(2) That a system be devised for the storing of surplus salt fish production designed to preserve price levels from year to year.

(3) That the drying and packaging of salt fish be investigated and reorganized by the federal and provincial departments of fisheries with a view to ensuring fish production of the variety and standard needed to retain and expand markets.

(4) That transportation costs of fish in Newfoundland and to the points of export be covered by the provision of a more efficient shipping and rail service—

That does not mean selling all our ships to somebody else.

—and that an attempt be made to make such services available at reduced rates.

(5) That cold storage facilities be established at all Newfoundland shipping ports to serve the better handling and export of salt fish.

That would be something comparable to terminal elevators.

(6) That the federal subsidy on new boat construction be increased from $165 per gross ton to $200 per ton and that the subsidy be offered to fishing boats of 10 tons gross and over, and furthermore that consideration be given in the building of smaller types of fishing boats.

(7) That a committee of the federal and provincial governments and the fishermen be set up to study the salt codfishery industry—

Perhaps I need not go on with that last recommendation because the minister has told us that he has already done that and we are very glad he has. I commend these recommendations of the Newfoundland federation of fishermen to the careful consideration, not merely of the minister but of the government because, as I say, this is a great national industry. I also say that those of us on this side of the house, at any rate, and I suspect perhaps some of those who support the government have been rather disappointed that the high hopes held out by the Prime Minister to the people in the fishing communities of the Atlantic provinces, including the city of Charlottetown represented by the Minister of Fisheries, and which were put on the record this afternoon by one of the hon. members on this side of the house, have not been realized and that the last we heard from the Prime Minister about floor prices or price supports for the fisheries was heard before March 31.

We do feel that this is a problem because, of course, a large part of the codfish production of this country is sold in fresh or frozen form in the United States. We know this creates a complication in connection with price support. But I do suggest to the minister that the leader of the government should not go about all the fishing communities making promises just for the sake of getting votes. We will expect some action from the government to support these very large promises that were made in St. John's, Charlottetown, Yarmouth, Halifax and a good many other places by the Prime Minister.

The minister has said prices are reasonably good this year. Part of the reason for this fact, of course, unfortunately is that there is a poor crop. Again, I am trying to use language that will be understood in some other parts of the country. This year the fishery in Newfoundland has been largely a failure. It is my fear, and I think that fear is very widely shared, that in many parts of Newfoundland as well as some other parts of the Atlantic area, many of the fishermen are not going to get enough fish to qualify for unemployment insurance. What we are going to have a situation comparable in every way to the situation which is met by the government in western Canada through the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. It does seem to me some consideration should be given to putting fishermen on a basis of equality with the farmers of western Canada in that respect, because they certainly are not on that basis now.

I want to say just a word about the bait situation. I must say I was very pleased indeed by the announcement made by the minister concerning these improvements that he is hoping to effect in the bait distribution situation in Newfoundland. I do hope that when he is putting in all these bait depots in the riding of Humber-St. George's, he will not forget one or two for Bonavista-Twillingate. I should like to put forward a special word for Herring Neck.

The situation in Newfoundland this year is that if we had a lot of bait depots there would not be bait to put in many of them. I know the minister is doing his best in the circumstances to try to meet that situation, but the situation is really a desperate one. We have had a poor fishery up to now. If there is not bait available for the fall fishery, even if the fish are plentiful, then the fall fishery is going to be poorer because of the shortage of bait. I do urge the minister, in every possible way he can devise, to do what he can to meet this emergency situation. I appeal to him also to try to take steps to foresee it and to meet it ahead of time. I know there have been difficulties this year. I certainly do not want to suggest the government has any responsibility for them because they have not, but I do urge the greatest possible zeal, which I am sure there will be, in trying to meet this very serious problem.

There are just two other topics that I want to mention. One topic about which I want to say a word or two is the marketing situation. I know the minister could rise on a point of order and say that he is not responsible for marketing fish but that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is. I do not believe the minister will rise on any such point of order, and for this reason: We look to the Minister of Fisheries to look after the interests of the fishermen and the fishing industry. We look to him to urge his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and his other colleagues to consider that this industry more than any other, more than the pulp and paper industry, more than the wheat industry, is an industry that depends upon exports for its life. There is no other industry that exports as large a proportion of its product as the cod fishery of Canada. I do believe things could be done to increase the market in Canada. I have made suggestions to the minister in that respect which I am not going to repeat now.

We have been very upset indeed, not only in Newfoundland but all along the Atlantic coast, at the loss of the Jamaican market. It is a very serious blow indeed to have a substantial portion of our total lost to someone else who has never supplied it before, especially when we know that the Icelanders are selling fish that is subsidized to an inordinate degree. Yesterday or the day before we heard over the radio that the Russian government is lending the Icelandic authorities $3.5 million with which to build more fishing boats to compete to an even greater extent with our unsubsidized fishery. This is a problem that just cannot be allowed to drift. At the same time we know, as the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador pointed out earlier, that we provide a market for Jamaican goods which is two or three times as large as the market for Canadian goods in Jamaica. It is difficult to understand why it is not possible for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to do more than has been done to get this market back. We do hope the Minister of Fisheries will never let him rest, that he will be at him every day and at his officers.

I am going to say again that I am not going to trespass on your patience very much longer. I view with the gravest alarm this increase in the wool tariff, not so much the tariff against Britain in this respect as the threat of an increased tariff against Italy which is the best market we have in Europe for our fish. It is a very, very dangerous thing, even to be threatening to do. I do hope that all those members from fishing ridings who sit on the other side will make their views known to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister, and urge them on no account to proceed with this folly, because folly it would certainly be, and worse, for the fishing industry.

I do want to say, in that particular context, that I was rather astonished at the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a question the other day concerning what was to replace NAFEL. The question was asked by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception and the reply is found in Hansard for August 16, page 3650. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that this was not just a federal problem but was a provincial problem as well. I do not know where the Minister of Trade and Commerce got his constitutional advice, but I would suggest he read the British North America Act again. He will find that this is exclusively a federal responsibility, and it is an inescapable federal responsibility. It is not good enough to revoke the licence of NAFEL and put nothing in its place. If we go back to the cut-throat competition that existed before NAFEL, the whole fishing industry is going to be in chaos in a very short time. Something has got to be done, a lead has to be given by the government in this matter. I do not believe any steps will be taken unless the Minister of Fisheries takes the lead in the government. It is for this reason that I, like other members from Newfoundland, appeal to him so strongly to do something.

There is just one other point on which I should like to say a word. This is the one fly in the ointment so far as the minister is concerned. He would not expect, especially being the Minister of Fisheries, that there would not be a fly somewhere. There is one small fly in the ointment. I have here in my hand a copy of an editorial which appeared in the St. John's Evening Telegram of May 16, 1958, which is very appropriately entitled "Wrong Party". I am not going to read the whole of it, but I should like to read an extract as follows:

> A number of river wardens (or rather, a number of people who WERE river wardens) have been kicking like mules this spring because the federal government appointed a number of new wardens who are not natural-born Liberals. The ex-wardens who have been putting up the beef say that some of the wardens appointed this spring may actually be Conservative sympathizers, and they have been writing nasty letters about it to St. John's and Ottawa—
> Some of the ex-wardens have even written Mr. Pickersgill demanding their old jobs back. They obviously think the Liberals are still in power, and aren't aware of the fact that it is Mr. Jed Winter, the DEFEATED (Tory) candidate, who now appoints river wardens in the district of Bonavista-Twillingate, not Mr. Pickersgill, whom these people elected to sit in opposition. Talk about the Age of Innocence.

When the minister gets up to speak, I know that he is going to tell us that Mr. Winter has no more to do with the appointment of these river wardens or guardians than I have. I trust he will give them and me that assurance in a completely unqualified fashion. I am one of those innocents who would expect that to be the case. I have listened to the professions made by the house leader over and over again as he beat his breast, and I cannot believe there is any truth in this editorial. I must say I had a slight suspicion there might be when the official agent, not of Mr. Jed Winter but of the Tory candidate who ran against me in 1957, became a river warden. But I suppose that was a pure coincidence, and I understand that he has since resigned.

Speaking seriously, I believe there are two considerations that ought to be kept in mind about these river guardians, if they have done their jobs well. Most of them were people who, in the nature of things, were not very well qualified for other types of occupation or they would have had other jobs in the days of the full employment we had in Newfoundland when the Liberals were in office. I suggest that the minister should make a special effort to appoint as wardens or guardians, as I think is the correct term, men who are veterans and who are perhaps slightly disabled and therefore not able to do more strenuous work so well. But above all, I think he should give the preference to people who really cannot leave home to work and who badly need the work. If he does find a few Tories here and there in Bonavista-Twillingate, as long as that is not the prime qualification, it will be all right with me. I certainly never inquired of anyone who ever came to me asking for assistance and looking for work who he had voted for.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I imagine the minister has never done so either. I really feel that is all I have to say on this subject at this time, Mr. Chairman; and I want to give the minister some time in which to reply.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, if the committee is agreeable I should like to make brief replies to some of the questions that have been asked by various members of the committee as they went along. If I miss some of them, we will perhaps catch them on the later items. But before doing that, I want to thank the numerous hon. members who have congratulated me on having received an honorary doctor of laws degree last Saturday. However, I should like to make this observation. Whatever help an earned degree may be to a minister when trying to get his estimates through the committee, I want to point out that an honorary degree is absolutely useless in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister will give me credit for the fact that in my remarks I left out any mention of it.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): One question that has been uppermost in the minds of many of the members of the committee who spoke this afternoon and this evening is that of guaranteeing or seeing to it, if possible, that the primary producer in the fishing industry gets a reasonable return for his labours. Attempts are being made in that direction. One of them has already been referred to, the royal commission on price spreads. The item having to do with that was dealt with in the items under privy council this afternoon.

There is the question of price support. I should like to point out that there is in existence a Fisheries Prices Support Act that is functioning or is there to function whenever it is considered necessary that price support be provided. This act allows price support, using the term in a general sense, to be provided by various means such as mass purchases when there is overproduction, deficiency payments and other ways. I called together the fisheries price support board for a meeting not very long ago. They met here in Ottawa and adjourned to meet again on September 6, I believe in Halifax, and again two days later in St. John's, Newfoundland, for the purpose of considering the situation of the market for salt cod, because that is the only segment of the industry at the moment that has made a formal request for the consideration of price support.

As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out, there are in this matter complications or difficulties that make a floor price for fish even more difficult a matter than it is for some other products because, as has been pointed out by many members of the committee, a very large percentage of our fish is exported and our market depends on export for the great majority of our production. There is the danger that with anything that might be a subsidy or a price support, there is always a certain amount of risk of retaliatory tariff action by other countries or similar action.

The hon. member for Gloucester mentioned the inspection service. I want to say briefly that we are working hard at extending that service and making it more efficient. In the not too distant future we hope to have inspection compulsory for fresh fish and frozen fillets right throughout the country as is now the case with so many other products.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and I think the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo mentioned the necessity for something approaching a mother ship for fishing fleets, some ship provided at the taxpayers' expense which would be there to render assistance of any sort necessary to the fishing fleet in a given area. This is a suggestion that I welcome and this matter is being given study. An over-all fourth service such as that in the United States—a full-blown coastguard as such—would entail tremendous expense. However, I think there is progress that can be made in further co-ordination of the efforts of the services that are already available, such as the navy, the air force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and perhaps augmented, if we can afford it, by some special vessels of some sort which might be operated by the Department of Fisheries itself.

Then there is a matter that I think was mentioned by all the members from Newfoundland who spoke. It is one of great concern, namely the shortage of bait or bait service generally in Newfoundland. Over the last number of years the department has tended, in my opinion, to err somewhat in the direction of being too careful in their expenditures with regard to this service in one connection, namely carrying large quantities of herring bait as a reserve. In a good year, when the squid come in, the herring is not considered the best possible type of bait and the fishermen will not buy it. The department is then left with a large quantity of bait on its hands for which it can get little or nothing. It may recover something by reducing this bait to fish meal. But if it is in an isolated place, it is not even worth transporting it to a reduction plant and it is a complete waste. I think the department has perhaps been a little too zealous in this direction through fear of criticisms which might be made of the department on account of potential waste in this direction.

I take the attitude that there should always be a reasonable reserve in case the squid, which is the most desirable bait, does not migrate to the shores of Newfoundland in any particular season and I would be prepared if the squid did arrive to defend the loss, whatever it might be, that the taxpayers might suffer as a result of having to dump supplies of herring which were no longer useful for bait. I might say we have at present being delivered 125,000 pounds of herring and 50,000 pounds of mackerel for use as bait in Newfoundland, which we have procured in the maritimes, and that there will be further supplies. We hope that the situation will be further relieved if the squid show up.

Something has been said about exploratory fishing and the necessity for this type of project. I welcome the suggestions in this connection but I would like to say that the department is now making efforts in this connection and has been doing so for a number of years. For example, at the present time there is exploratory fishing for herring, scallops and shrimps in Newfoundland. In Prince Edward Island exploratory fishing is being done for quahaugs, a type of clam, and in Nova Scotia a demonstration of the Danish seining out of Cheticamp will commence very shortly, while at the present time in New Brunswick demonstration and experimental work of the mid-water trawl is now in progress and will continue as long as it is considered desirable for it to do so. In Quebec there is exploratory fishing for herring at the present time in co-operation with the government of Quebec and the mid-water trawl experiments in New Brunswick are also being carried out with the co-operation of the provincial government there. I might say in that connection that many of the most profitable scallop beds which are now being fished commercially on a large scale have been discovered by exploratory fishing and that the exploratory fishing for herring is a long-term program over a number of years. It is a process of elimination until we find the mother lode, as it were, of the great resources of herring available on the east coast generally.

The hon. member for Skeena made some remarks concerning the question of fish versus power. This expression does not particularly appeal to me because my hope is that it will never become a case of fish or power but that rather it will be a case of fish and power so far as that is feasible. His comments in this direction follow very closely the attitude of myself and of the department generally, which is one of developing power where such supplies exist and where they do not interfere with fish, and for as much research work to be done as possible to try to find the means of developing power and having fish even on fish streams and also conducting experimental work to provide artificial spawning beds besides any other program which has some hope of success.

The hon. member for Skeena also inquired about the north Pacific fisheries treaty and as to what is the position regarding this treaty which is in effect a treaty between the United States, Japan and ourselves. Furthermore, he inquired as to whether or not Canadian fish are being fished by the Japanese on the high seas. All I can say in that regard is that we have not one shred of evidence so far to indicate that fish originating in Canada are being caught on the high seas by the Japanese west of the parallel 175 degrees west, which is a provisional dividing line between the waters fished by the Japanese on the one side of the Pacific and the United States and ourselves on the other. Means of determining the migration of Pacific salmon are not limited to the tagging of salmon, although this is one of the important aspects. There are other aspects also; there is scientific research into parasites with which these salmon are infested, depending on where they come from, and it is possible scientifically to determine the origin of the fish from the type of parasite to which he happens to be host. There are minute differences in the structure of the fish originating on the opposite sides of the Pacific and there are oceanographic studies which indicate to a fairly accurate degree the distribution of salmon. As further research is done in this connection this may prove to be the main means of determining the distribution of this fish.

I want to refer very briefly to the fact that there is a co-ordinating committee, as has been mentioned, set up on the official level between the five Atlantic provinces and the federal government, especially having to do with the problems that affect fishing in that part of Canada. We also have a committee to deal with the question of subsidies to longliner and dragger types of vessels, and this method is being studied very carefully. It is a fairly complicated problem because the cost of the vessel does not go up in direct proportion to its tonnage. Costs generally have gone up and there have been requests on the one hand for a subsidy on sizes smaller than is presently the case and at the other end of the scale it has been recommended that a subsidy be paid on the larger sizes because they are more efficient and economical. However, this matter is under very careful study and there will be adjustments which we hope will make improvements in that connection.

The hon. member for Gloucester mentioned the question of the opening of the lobster season, and I am happy to advise him that it has already been moved ahead two hours from 12 o'clock noon to 10 o'clock, which we hope will solve the problem.

Mr. Robichaud: In all districts?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That in effect will be the case, yes, and this is especially important for these fishermen in the maritimes, the majority of whom are very careful Sabbath keepers and are faced with the situation that the season opens on a Monday and they have to put out their traps on the Saturday, whereas some of their neighbours can continue to do so all day Sunday to the detriment of those who keep the Sabbath. That is only by way of interjection, however, and the problem is in effect that unless the fishermen are allowed to put out their traps as early as possible in the day they may not finish their operations before dark, especially at this time of the year and later on when the days are shorter.

Some very good suggestions were made regarding consumer services and our advertising programs and other means of stimulating greater consumption of fish by the Canadian people. I might say that we are doing what we consider to be a very good job in this connection through advertising, movies, demonstrations, publications, through our dieticians, etc. I may say that our advertising budget is very limited, but we try to squeeze the last cent of benefit out of it in order to try to familiarize Canadians to a greater extent with the benefits of having more fish in their diets. This has been true of the department over the years, so much so that virtually not one cent of money is spent in blowing our own horn, or trying to bring the work that is being done by the ministry to the attention of the public generally. Maybe this is so to a fault.

There is a story in this connection which I think may have some bearing on this. It is said that at one time there was a poor widow in the maritimes who had two sons. One went to sea and the other became minister of fisheries, and neither one of them was ever heard of again.

Several members brought up the question of the importance of international trade as it relates to the fishing industry, and I want to say that this is something which I realize to be of primary importance, because it is of no use to produce fish efficiently if we cannot sell them. I will bring the suggestions which various members have made to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I will certainly keep a very careful watching brief.

Certain observations were made with regard to the selection of personnel. I just want to say that the majority of the employees of the department are civil servants selected under the Civil Service Commission Act. Those who are not are selected and remain in employment at the pleasure of the minister, and in that connection I take full responsibility for them. However, I do want to say to some hon. members who may have some misgivings in this regard that though there is no requirement to do so I try to weigh very carefully the humanitarian aspect, such as veterans preference, and many other things.

Item agreed to.

Special—

144. Canadian share of expenses of the international commissions, as detailed in the estimates, $860,620.

Mr. Howard: I was not here for the full time of the minister's comments and while he did make some reference to the remarks I had to make, for which I express my appreciation, he may not have covered these other two points. I hope he may be able to give us some enlightenment on them. The first was whether he is able to indicate what results, if any, have arisen out of the deliberations of the committee of the Pacific salmon fisheries commission which is meeting in Hawaii, or which began its meetings a couple of weeks ago, and whether he has any knowledge of what the committee discussed and decided. The other point was whether he is in a position to make any announcement with respect to the information garnered by our Canadian research vessels which are apparently going to cover areas in the Pacific which have not been covered before.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Regarding the first question, I want to say that the meeting in Hawaii is a meeting of an ad hoc subcommittee set up to study research information which is now available, prior to the regular meeting which will be held in Tokyo and which may go on into November.

With regard to the other question I may say that so far as the north Pacific salmon fisheries commission is concerned the three nations do not operate separately; their efforts are pooled and programs are allocated by the commission itself with regard to the areas in which they operate. The primary information which is gained is made available immediately to the parties concerned, but in a case where the scientists of one country happen to be doing research with regard to a particular topic which has been allocated to them they do not wish to make their conclusions known from the information which has been gained until they are as sure as they can be that their conclusions are valid.

Mr. Howard: There is another point bearing on that. Could the minister indicate from past experience of the operation of these research vessels how long it may take before this information is available? Would it be this year, or this season?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Most of it should be available for the October meeting. Of course, some of this research work being done at the present time, like the tagging of fish, will not produce results immediately since these fish may not be caught for a long time. But most of this information should be available very shortly.

146. To provide for the extension of educational work in co-operative producing and selling among fishermen, $90,000.

Mr. Robichaud: On this item I only want to take two minutes of the time of this committee. I want to take advantage of this opportunity to take very strong exception to certain comments and statements which were made during the committee stage by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. In commenting on the statement of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg asked why we should continue spending $90,000 to set up a service which apparently is more expensive than that provided by the private operators in this field.

I take very strong exception to these remarks made in connection with the grant to St. Francis Xavier University. I wish to express my appreciation to the adult education extension department of this university whose good work has been recognized all over the world. The work of its director, Msgr Cody has received world-wide appreciation in the field of adult education and the activities of this department have proved a blessing to hundreds of fishermen and to their families. I therefore strongly support this item and I hope the minister will give serious consideration to having this amount increased so that the work might be extended in other universities who are engaged in this field.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries Research Board of Canada—

152. Operation and maintenance, including an amount of $50,000 for contributions towards fisheries research and for scholarships, $3,631,785.

Mr. Fisher: This particular vote contains an item in connection with the attempt to discover means of combatting lampreys in the great lakes and to stamp them out, and since the minister is going to undertake to go after one of his colleagues I should like to give him another minister to go after in the interests of large numbers of fishermen on the north shore of lake Superior who are directly affected by this menace and at the present time, because of regulations under the unemployment insurance commission, are not able to take advantage of unemployment insurance benefits because they do not have face to face dealings but arms length dealings with their outlets in the United States and Montreal.

I would ask the minister in connection with this difficulty if he could not make some representations to the Minister of Labour, and if one of his officials or inspectors could not visit this area and get into the human side as it concerns the fishermen at Port Coldwell and Rossport, particularly, and also, to a certain extent at the lakehead. I have heard some comments tonight, especially from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, about the need for the Atlantic fishermen to get some of the things which have been given to the western farmers.

The Atlantic fishermen are getting a great deal more in terms of government support than are our great lakes fishermen. In addition to that, as far as I know, the cod is still running which is more than one can say for the lake trout in lake Superior. I wanted to ask the minister if he could not find out more about the problems of great lakes fishermen from the human side. I should also like to know what progress has been made in cleaning up the lamprey eel menace and beyond that what the program will be for restocking the fish in lake Superior?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the first question raised by the hon. member I shall certainly have the matter looked into and I shall also bring it to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Labour.

Regarding the progress in trying to find ways of eliminating the lamprey menace in the great lakes, as the committee knows this program is carried on by the international great lakes fisheries commission. The research board is Canada's agent for doing the research aspect of the work in this connection. Canada's contribution to that work this year in terms of dollars is $470,000 which is 31 per cent of the entire cost. The United States contributes the other 69 per cent.

All major lamprey streams on lake Superior on both the Canadian and United States sides have electric lamprey barriers in operation at the present time. There are larger numbers of lampreys being killed this year by this means than ever before. United States scientists have been able to discover a chemical which is a lamprecide or, in other words, a chemical that will kill lampreys. It will kill them in the larvae stage as well as at maturity. This has great promise but it will be an expensive proposition and is still in the experimental stage. However, it has the advantage of being able to kill lamprey back to the larvae stage whereas supposing you succeeded in killing all the mature lamprey, you would still have to go for five years until the larvae matured before you would have them all.

The restocking is not a major problem in lake superior because there are sufficient stocks remaining in the lakes and naturally they will rapidly multiply and re-establish the lake trout stock there providing the lampreys can be destroyed.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the minister's notice the feeling of fishermen in the area concerning the reduction in quantities of trout. I do not know if there is any real empirical basis to the idea they have but many people feel one of the factors that has not been considered yet in research into the disappearance of the lake trout and its great reduction in numbers is the tremendous growth of the smelt run in lake Superior and the competition this provides for the lake trout. I do not know whether there is any real basis for it or not and I should appreciate hearing whether any study has been made of this question and if the problem could be attacked from that angle because it is one of the factors which tends to contribute to the pessimism of the people engaged in fisheries in that area.

Item agreed to.

564. To provide for the destruction of dogfish and other predators, $250,000.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister could give us an indication, Mr. Chairman, of what efforts have been expended to attempt to eliminate dogfish or to decrease their numbers?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This is a considerable problem, Mr. Chairman. In past years there was a method devised which did not work out satisfactorily. Under this method a subsidy was paid on dogfish or dogfish livers. We are contemplating trying direct destruction of the dogfish, fishing for them directly and killing them, to see if this will give a reasonable return for the cost involved. In the meantime we are contemplating other possibilities as well. One of my senior officials is going out to British Columbia in the immediate future to make sure we are not missing a good bet in adopting some effective method which might be used. He will be talking to those engaged in the industry and fishermen to obtain their suggestions.

Mr. Howard: I believe it has been the suggestion of fishermen themselves that an attempt be made to deal with the dogfish as predators and to eliminate them by direct destruction. That was the only solution they could envisage as being practical. Is it the intention to have higher votes for conducting this program?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is our present intention. It will be done in an experimental way. It may prove too costly for the results that are obtained but that will be our initial approach to the problem.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair, I wish to express my appreciation to the committee for their working an extra hour to accommodate us. Thank you.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the house leader what the business is going to be for the rest of the week? Perhaps he could cast his mind forward to Monday and Tuesday. But before asking him to do so, perhaps I might be permitted to underline the fact that we have given great co-operation to the government tonight in getting through these estimates and I wish to express the hope that everyone will eat fish tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we are grateful even though the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate managed to get in a half-hour speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, 20 minutes.

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare and then take the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of National Revenue. On Saturday we shall take the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is returning to the city in order to take his estimates on that day.

On Monday and Tuesday we shall take legislation commencing with item No. 4 on today's order paper, the second reading of the broadcasting act; then item No. 3, second reading of the Customs Act; then item No. 10, a resolution concerning the South Saskatchewan river project; then the amendment to the Canadian Citizenship Act which appears in today's Votes and Proceedings; then, item No. 5 on today's order paper, a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lubec channel between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine; and then, item No. 6 having to do with supply.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, just for clarification, I understand external affairs will be taken on Saturday at the beginning regardless of what progress is made?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the intention.

It being three minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at eleven o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Fourteenth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McCleave.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—STATEMENT ON DEVELOPMENTS AT UN SPECIAL ASSEMBLY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report to the house on the emergency special session of the general assembly which last evening adopted by unanimous vote a draft resolution submitted yesterday by ten Arab delegations, including those of Lebanon, Jordan and the United Arab Republic. The resolution welcomes assurances given by the Arab states that they would respect each other's systems of government in accordance with provisions of the pact of the league of Arab states, and calls upon all member states to observe certain principles of international behaviour endorsed by the Afro-Asian conference at Bandung in 1955.

The Canadian government regards the outcome of the session that concluded last evening as satisfactory. The resolution in question follows very closely the text of the earlier seven-power draft resolution of which Canada was a co-sponsor. The Arab resolution requests the secretary general to make such practical arrangements as would adequately help in upholding the purposes and principles of the United Nations charter in relation to Lebanon and Jordan and thereby facilitate the early withdrawal of foreign troops from those two countries.

The new element in the Arab proposal is the reference to facilitating the withdrawal of troops. My understanding is that the formula employed is acceptable to the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States. The resolution, as in the case of the seven-power proposal, also invites the secretary general to continue with steps toward the establishment of an Arab development institution and to report to the general assembly not later than the last day of September of this year.

The Canadian government not only supported this resolution but agreed that it should have priority over the seven-power draft, which we regarded as a point of departure or basis for discussion for the accomplishment, under United Nations auspices, of an end to inter-Arab rivalries in a form to which all Arabs could subscribe, and in general as a reasonable formula to cover the question of withdrawal and a new approach to the economic problem of the Middle East.

While the resolution is a regional solution for a regional problem, its terms permit a continuing link between the United Nations and future economic and political developments in that area. It should ensure that the cordial relations now established among the Arab states will be carried forward into their individual and collective relations with non-Arab states of the region. The reference in the seven-power draft to a United Nations stand-by force, which received general support from all sections of the house, has been dropped, but I expect that this phase will be given further study at the next session of the general assembly.

To sum up, we have supported this resolution as meeting the essential requirements of a satisfactory conclusion of the discussions in the general assembly. We supported it because of the prospect it affords for peace in the Middle East. The resolution is good as far as it goes, but of course any success in carrying it out will depend upon the further co-operation of the interested countries themselves.

I think it will be generally agreed that once again the United Nations has shown its capacity to deal with crises by the process of reconciliation through negotiation. It is to be hoped that the same spirit will be apparent in the attitude of these states whose co-operation the secretary general will be seeking in the visit to the Middle East which he is about to undertake.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish at this time to add very much to what the Prime Minister has said about the termination of the work of the general assembly. I understand we will have an opportunity to debate this matter, when dealing with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, but I think we can share the Prime Minister's careful satisfaction at the unanimous passing of a resolution of this kind. It is, after all, satisfying and usually very surprising when any resolution at the United Nations passes unanimously.

I have not had the opportunity, nor have other members had the opportunity, to compare the Arab resolution which was passed unanimously with that of the seven powers, of which Canada was one. I gather that the main difference, however—and perhaps this is of some importance—is that the Arab resolution does make specific reference to the withdrawal of British and United States forces, while the seven-power resolution did not make that specific reference.

This resolution unanimously adopted by the assembly does present at least an opportunity for the finding of a solution to the problems in the Middle East, and we all welcome that. But as I said earlier, there will be an opportunity to discuss this whole question of the work of the general assembly when we have the privilege tomorrow of discussing his estimates with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, members of this group listened with great interest and certain satisfaction to the announcement just made by the Prime Minister in respect to recent events at the United Nations. We sincerely trust that this is the first hopeful step toward a co-operative and constructive solution to this very serious problem which is of concern to peace-seeking people everywhere.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DISCRIMINATION, REVOCATION OF CITIZENSHIP, ETC.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-58, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, the primary purpose of this bill is to remove certain discriminations which now exist against other than natural-born Canadian citizens in relation to loss of Canadian citizenship and, in addition, to make it clear that a person who does not take the oath of allegiance in good faith at the time of acquiring Canadian citizenship is liable to have his Canadian citizenship revoked, subject to the right of such person to a hearing before a commission or court as provided by the act. The bill also makes provision for obtaining a ruling from an independent tribunal if doubt exists as to whether a person has ceased to be a Canadian citizen under the act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Pearson.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BILL OF RIGHTS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister the intentions of the government with regard to the introduction of and action upon a bill of rights during this session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the government is unchanged. The introduction will be made this session, and my hope is that the legislation will receive the support of the house and of the other place.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Prime Minister if he will give us an opportunity at the earliest possible date to decide whether in fact we can support this bill, because we should like to have it before us before we debate it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED CRITICAL POSITION OF FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I sent to his office this morning. In view of reports that the unemployment insurance fund has reached a critically low point as a result of the heavy drain on its resources during recent months, would the minister advise the house what steps the government intends to take to place the fund on a sound basis so that it may continue to discharge its financial responsibilities in the future?

Mr. Speaker: That may be a matter of public interest, but it seems to me scarcely the kind of question which could be dealt with on the spur of the moment.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): With great respect, could there be anything much more urgent than this particular matter at this time; how to put this insurance fund in better condition than it is at present in view of the forthcoming winter?

Mr. Speaker: I am not persuaded that it is the kind of urgency which warrants a question before the orders of the day. Undoubtedly it raises an important issue, but it is not something which could be answered briefly, nor is it something which can be solved immediately. It involves a question of policy, assuming that the question had a sound foundation.

Mr. Robichaud: Then may I ask another question of the Minister of Finance which may be acceptable to the house. Is it the intention of the government to introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to take care of the present situation of the fund?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If any decision in that respect should be taken it would, of course, be communicated promptly to the house.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

DATE OF SALE OF VESSELS TO CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I address a question to the Minister of Transport. On August 12 last the minister announced the sale of the Canadian National Steamships vessels. While the date of the sale was not actually given, it did appear to have taken place on the day the announcement was made. I have now been informed that the actual sale took place some time in July. Will the minister say whether or not that information is correct?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I must thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. The information that the sale took place in July is not correct. The offer to purchase was accepted on August 11.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

231. Departmental administration, $1,441,494.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Chairman, before discussing the matter at hand I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to an event of great significance to the health of people throughout the world. I refer to the recent commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the founding of the world health organization. This historic milestone in international co-operation was marked by a special session of the world health assembly held in May of this year at Minneapolis. As Minister of National Health and Welfare I was privileged to represent Canada on this occasion, accompanied by a distinguished delegation of Canadian health experts.

Immediately following the commemorative session the eleventh regular world health assembly was convened. My deputy, Dr. G. D. W. Cameron, led the Canadian delegation at these meetings and was ably assisted by three other outstanding health experts, Dr. Arthur Kelly, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, Dr. Jules Gilbert, president of the Canadian Public Health Association, and Dr. R. D. Defries, recently retired director of the Connaught medical research laboratories.

The main task of this assembly was to approve WHO's program and budget for 1959, the latter calling for an expenditure of nearly $15 million. While this amount is three times the organization's first budget, I am sure the committee will agree that it is a modest sum in terms of the tremendous job to be done. It is obvious that in large areas of the world, climatic and economic factors have combined to render extremely difficult the attainment of health standards comparable to those we enjoy here in Canada. Yet despite the obstacles, significant progress has been made through the efforts of WHO in co-operation with other international and national agencies both public and private.

As examples of the advances made during the past ten years through the auspices of WHO the following might be mentioned: over half the estimated 50 million persons suffering from yaws have been treated and cured, with the stage now being set for the complete eradication of this disease in the next few years; several hundred thousand children have received B.C.G. vaccine as a protection against tuberculosis; substantial assistance has been given toward the training of doctors, nurses and other health personnel and opportunities provided for these individuals to go abroad for the study of the technical and administrative aspects of health service administration; and finally, WHO has recently embarked on its most ambitious project, the world-wide eradication of malaria over the next ten years.

These are but a few highlights of the work performed by WHO during its first decade. I am sure all hon. members recognize the importance of its activities not only in helping secure healthier, happier and more productive lives for millions of the world's peoples but also in furthering the cause of peace and understanding among nations. I feel that I spoke for Canadians everywhere when I told the tenth anniversary session that "as WHO enters its second decade, we pledge our continuing and wholehearted support to what we consider is one of the most outstanding experiments in international co-operation ever undertaken".

I want to turn now to the subject of our deliberations today, the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year 1958-59. In this period we are budgeting for a total outlay of $1,180,089,181, the highest level of expenditure in the department's history. Of this over-all amount no less than 92 per cent covers statutory items including some $555 million to be expended from the old age security fund. Only $93,272,181 or 8 per cent of the total estimated outlay represents items to be voted by the house.

As a whole, these estimates embody an increase of $184,004,297 over our expectations for the past fiscal year. A full 92.5 per cent of this increase is taken up by statutory items reflecting recent amendments to Canada's major welfare legislation. To be specific, a projected rise of $33,235,000 in family allowance payments is due to a general increase in population as well as to changes in rates of benefit which became effective last September; an increase of $117,464,000 in old age security payments stems chiefly from the new $55 a month level in benefits effective last November; a similarly increased level in maximum benefits largely accounts for the expected rise of $5,700,000 in old age assistance payments, $6,200,000 in disabled persons' allowances, and $700,000 in blind persons' allowances. Finally, an estimated increase of nearly $7 million in expenditures under the unemployment assistance program is due for the most part to the removal of the threshold on federal participation and the entry of Ontario and Nova Scotia into the scheme.

So much for the increase in so far as statutory items are concerned. The remaining 7.5 per cent of the increase in our over-all expenditures pertains to items to be voted by the house. A large proportion of this additional outlay of $13,830,297 relates to the national health program, and particularly to the recent changes in the hospital construction grant which I announced to the house last December.

In this connection, hon. members may recall that the grant basis of $1,000 per unit for active treatment beds or "bed equivalents" and $1,500 per unit for chronic, convalescent, mental and tuberculosis beds was raised to $2,000 per unit. In addition, the allowance for beds in nurses' residences was upped from $500 to $750 per unit, and the latter assistance applied for the first time to beds in internes' quarters. A further new departure under the hospital construction grant was the allotment of $4 million for major renovation projects.

Another significant increase in non-statutory items which I might mention is the additional $1,644,450 earmarked in the two votes for northern health services. This represents primarily provision for the completion of the new Whitehorse hospital and for its staffing and equipment. Also covered in the increment is the transfer to northern health services of 17 organized field units in the territories formerly operated by Indian health services, and the continuation of construction of a new departmental hospital at Aklavik.

Hon. members will note that the department's 1958-59 estimates do not include provision for federal contributions to provincial hospital insurance and diagnostic services programs. Projected figures in this connection were not available when the main estimates were drawn up, and it is not the custom to provide for statutory items in the supplementaries. While government expenditures with respect to provincial plans will be provided for in next year's main estimates, the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act lays down that federal payments are to be a direct charge on the consolidated revenue fund and can thus be made despite the lack of an estimates item.

I might say here that we expect federal outlays on the hospital insurance program to be something less than $70 million for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959. This will apply to the five provincial plans operating as of July 1, 1958, and those additional plans which it is hoped will get under way as of January 1, 1959.

These, then, are the main items of the projected expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I will, of course, be happy to answer questions which hon. members may have on the various items.

Before I take my seat, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank all members of the staff of my department for their loyal co-operation and assistance during the past year. I think it is appropriate that I should mention that it is exactly a year since I was sworn in as minister of this department.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, we listened with great interest to the remarks of the minister. I think the committee might expect there would be a pretty thorough discussion of these estimates at the present sitting, because I believe we have had no discussion of this very important and large department since 1956. It is true that at that time the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare were reviewed by the estimates committee.

I found, in endeavouring to keep up to date with the department's activities, that it was rather difficult because the last annual report seems to be dated March 31, 1956. I must suggest to the minister that it is not very helpful to the committee of supply when annual reports are so out of date. Perhaps he might just indicate to the committee when he thinks the annual report for the year ended March 31, 1957 might become available.

I join with the minister in his commendation of the activities of the world health organization. I think we as Canadians are particularly interested in the tenth anniversary activities of this organization because it is an outstanding Canadian and member of the Department of National Health and Welfare who has the honour of being president of this world organization this year. The minister has a great galaxy of talent around him.

We as Canadians are proud also of the fact that his deputy minister on the welfare side was honoured this year by being chosen to preside over the economic and social committee of the United Nations when it met in Geneva. Of course all of us are very familiar with the outstanding talents of the two fine people who are in front of the minister at the moment. One is a lady who has the honour of being the first lady to appear in this house in the role of adviser to the committee of supply and to her minister. As the minister has indicated, Dr. Cameron was head of the delegation that attended the world health organization this year, and his reputation is very wide indeed as an outstanding public health administrator.

The only item that has had any careful review by a committee of this house since 1956 is the item in this year's estimates with respect to civil defence, item No. 256. The minister was exceedingly cautious in giving the estimates committee very much information as to future plans in this respect. He always indicated that as General Graham was about—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): May I just point out that I propose to have something to say when we do come to the civil defence item.

Mr. Benidickson: That will be very welcome, Mr. Chairman, because we feel that we could learn so little about the future because of the fact that the minister repeatedly said that the subjects the committee on estimates was interested in were going to be referred to General Graham. I think we all look forward to General Graham's study. In the estimates committee I did urge the minister to impress on General Graham the desirability of not having one of those long drawn out investigations if it could be avoided, in view of the seriousness of the problem of civil defence and, as the committee on estimates pointed out, the necessity for co-ordination and co-operation among civil defence organizations, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of National Defence.

I hope when the minister does report to us with respect to civil defence he will report upon the information that was given to us by the Prime Minister concerning mass evacuation plans, as well as the plans for the erection of shelters and matters of that kind. This is something which I believe is probably foremost in the thinking of the people of Canada today when they regard the question of civil defence. We are all exceedingly alarmed about the consequences of these awful weapons that have been developed.

With respect to new planning for our defence, we have for some time heard largely from certain left-wing elements that probably did not get the attention they deserved. I think we can find a pretty universal feeling registered with respect to this matter, when we consider that no less than the Financial Post last week put as graphically as I think anybody has to date the seriousness of our defence planning.

In its lead editorial on August 16 the Financial Post had this to say, and I think it relates to the question of civil defence as it does to defence policy generally. I am only going to read some excerpts, but the heading of the editorial was "There is No Such Thing as Adequate Defence". It went on to say:

> It is absolute and utter folly for our leaders to try to make the public believe there is safety.
> We may have all the defence machinery we are willing to pay for. But that is about all we have. And not even doubling or tripling our defence expenditure will give us real security. Nor will gigantic defence and bomb shelter programs.

The article goes on to point out the awful havoc that resulted from the atom bombing of Japan. This certainly shook and impressed me very much indeed. It is reported that of 32,000 children born in Hiroshima not less than 5,000, almost one in six, were deformed or stillborn. This figure includes 1,100 with skeletal deficiencies or serious muscular weaknesses; almost 100 with deformed brains or without brains altogether; almost 200 without lips and the same number without sexual organs; 25 with one eye or no eyes and 4 lacking even eye-openings. This is a report from a recent investigation of atomic bomb fall-out in Japan. Today's bombs, as we all know, are about 1,000 times more deadly than those of Hiroshima. This is the caution of the Financial Post; that our planet could tolerate war as an instrument of national policy when war was a little thing like world war I or II, but it cannot do so any longer.

We, I think, are exceedingly proud to have in Canada at the moment the tenth annual conference of geneticists, who are meeting in Montreal. I was astounded to ascertain that these scientists will have read to them no less than 590 papers, some of which of course will relate to the problems and worries I have just described, this question of the effect of radiation on genetics, even the current effect of radiation from fall-out drift.

I believe that in 1955 the former minister of national health and welfare indicated to a conference of experts on this subject that the minister's department was giving careful consideration to all the elements connected with this ghastly problem. I wonder if later on in the debate the minister would give us some information about what has developed in the department since 1955 in keeping abreast with this problem of radiation. It is a subject that has had very considerable debate in the parliament of the United Kingdom. I think it is most appropriate that we in this house be brought up to date, not only on the effect of fall-out drift but also the best information that is available to the department to date with respect to the predicted effect on genetics as a whole.

As the minister has indicated, there has been a remarkable growth indeed in the importance of the role of the Department of National Health and Welfare across the country. I believe that in the parliament buildings at Fredericton, New Brunswick there is a cairn of which they are very proud because it honours the fact that New Brunswick appointed the first minister of health in the British Empire.

It is remarkable to note just within how many years health has become an important government function. I think the first public health laboratory in North America was developed in Ontario as recently as 1890. About that time I think the total expenditure of the province of Ontario with respect to all health functions was about $4,000, largely for a part-time secretary and some help to the secretary. In Ontario alone I would imagine that the health budget today exceeds $60 million, and I think the administration employs some 6,000 or 7,000 people.

In our own department, as the minister has indicated, there has been a terrific growth. He points out that the estimates before us today amount to $1,200 million. He of course has pointed out, as the Minister of Finance indicated in his budget, that it will be necessary to provide additionally about $70 million for our participation to the end of this fiscal year in the new hospitalization scheme. I had the honour to be one of the federal representatives attending the preliminary conferences with the provinces in 1955 and 1956, and on the basis of full participation it was calculated that the federal cost would be in the neighbourhood of $200 million.

As the minister has indicated, only five provinces to date have accepted this offer. My own province, the largest in the land, will become a participant from January 1, 1959. I am hoping that this scheme will have universal acceptance in the not too distant future. I think most of us are particularly concerned about the other large province, namely the province of Quebec; and perhaps the minister could indicate to us just what possibility there is of that province entering into the hospitalization scheme in the near future. The taxpayers of that province, of course, are obliged to contribute to federal taxation, and it seems a pity that that government is not moving very fast to provide to the people of that province the benefits of this additional advance in the health sphere which was introduced by the former administration and which the minister is proceeding with, I know, with great interest and support.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I believe we should like to have a little report from the minister with respect to our Salk vaccine program. I think we all realize that there have been remarkable results from the program that was introduced. Some statistics were tabled in this house, I think it was late last session, which indicated a remarkable decline in the incidence of this dread disease; and I think great credit is attributed to the vaccine that was developed. In fact progress has gone so far that those concerned with the very important campaign for the elimination of poliomyelitis in the United States, which raised tremendous sums of money from the public in the past, through the march of dimes and so on with which we are all familiar—I believe were of opinion that they had recently reached a point of correction and almost of control of this particular threat to health to the extent that they felt they could turn their efforts from polio to the other very dread health threat area, namely that of the arthritic and rheumatic sufferers.

I wonder whether the minister would also indicate to us during the course of our discussion in this committee something about the advances that have taken place in the field of cancer research since we last had the opportunity of examining his predecessor. I believe that under the health program the department, as well as concentrating on cancer research, is giving special concentration in the field of mental diseases. I think it is shocking to us all to be told, as I say, that there are perhaps more hospital beds today occupied by sufferers from mental disease than by sufferers in all the other general hospitals put together. It seems to me something that is growing at an alarming pace. I think the committee would be exceedingly interested in getting from the minister an up to date report upon the co-operative efforts of his department in association with the provinces in this particular field.

On the estimates before us there is, of course, an opportunity for almost unlimited discussion on matters in which all members of the house are particularly interested. Sometimes we have in committee of supply items with which only a limited number of our membership are familiar with or in which they have a particular interest. But when we realize that in committee this morning we are discussing such matters of wide public political and human interest as family allowances, health insurance, disability pensions, blind pensions and so on, I think we realize that at this stage it is difficult to confine oneself to inquiries that will simply bring out new information and not necessarily be repetitious.

With respect to health insurance, either now or on the item in the estimates I should like to obtain from the minister some information as to which of the provinces seem to be adopting a policy under which there will be, shall I say, a discouragement of putting in the hospitals people who could very well get laboratory X-ray and other services under this scheme without actual admittance to hospital. I feel that if this procedure is not encouraged, our hospitals will simply have a burden upon them of people who do not need to be actually in a hospital but who will demand from their physician admission to a hospital simply because of the free services and so on that might not otherwise be provided in consequence of this national plan.

I have been talking to some doctor friends of mine in the past. I know they at all times feel they must be conscientious, but I understand that the pressure upon them is something fearsome. One can understand that when one realizes that it is more or less left to them to decide. The doctor must recommend that a patient go to a hospital or otherwise in order to get the benefits of the insurance provisions that are now available. I think this is a very important matter, and we would like to know about the various provincial schemes in this regard. Naturally we would like to know whether or not there is any change in the position of the present administration with respect to including tuberculosis and mental hospitalization costs in the scheme.

My hon. friend's party was certainly very forthright on this subject in the 1957 election campaign, and in Winnipeg on May 14, 1957 the Prime Minister left no doubt as to the position of his party in this respect. He was quoted not only in the Winnipeg Free Press but also in the Tribune as saying the Conservatives would repair a very serious omission in the hospital scheme of the former administration and would include tuberculosis and mental institutions in the sharing arrangement with respect to hospital costs.

A short time later, he just happened to be speaking in Saskatoon at the time of the annual convention of the Canadian Hospital Association, and he repeated this commitment. We all know there was a meeting of the premiers during the following November, but from all we can read it has been indicated that while provincial costs in respect of tuberculosis and mental institutions might be shared by the federal government, if that were done then there would be an equivalent deduction from the general provision somewhere else under the dominion-provincial arrangements.

With respect to our senior citizens, an inquiry was made yesterday about when we might expect to receive the Clark report, which is the result of an investigation which we all know was designed to take a particular look at the United States social welfare provisions in respect of senior citizens. This report, of course, has been much longer delayed than was originally anticipated, and I will not press the minister further on that point because yesterday the hon. member for Welland got some information on the subject from the Prime Minister.

I do think, however, that when we come to the question of old age security we could very profitably discuss such matters as further advances in the development of low rental housing for our aged people. I am very disturbed to read that the governmental institution type of shelter for the aged is proving to be exceedingly expensive. There are a great many people, of course, who are unable to look after themselves or to live in accommodation under their own control, but on the other hand there are many who would probably prefer this class of shelter. It is certainly much more economical to assist and promote individual housing accommodation of better quality for our aged people than to accommodate such people in government sponsored institutions.

I read two or three years ago, for instance, that Lambert House in Toronto was calculated to operate at a cost of about $120 per month per patient, and the costs are probably a great deal higher today. We are all aware that the subsidy available on housing accommodation through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is certainly very modest indeed. I believe, therefore, that if there were an increase in the effort to co-operate with the provinces and the municipalities in this field this would have very widespread approval.

I wonder if the minister would tell us during his subsequent remarks something about the situation with respect to the training of nurses in Canada. There is a general feeling that nurses, as a group, bearing in mind the wonderful work they eventually do, probably have a harder time to get their training than any other group who have to have a long term of post-matriculation training before they can qualify in their profession. Could the minister give us some information in that respect?

In conclusion I simply want to say that I think we all agree in this committee that there has been great progress in the health field and indeed in the welfare field. As a result, most of us probably know that a lot more should be done in regard to health protection than we actually are doing. Perhaps the minister will just indicate to us later on whether there have been some new developments or increased efforts with respect to publicity in the promotion of good health in Canada through his department. Is the department today in a position to do very much in the way of advertising or promotional work, or can this only be done through the instrumentality of the provinces?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I have a few remarks to make at this stage. I would like to first compliment the minister and the government on the measures introduced to improve the various health plans and so forth which exist in Canada at the present time which, I might say, are very inadequate. Steps, however, have been taken in the right direction. We in this group do not feel that all the action has been taken which should have been taken, and certainly we feel that the steps which the Conservative party indicated on many occasions it would take, if given the opportunity, should now be taken.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who is the first member of the Liberal party to speak on this matter. One or two of his remarks were significant, first with respect to the increased costs in regard to admission to hospitals and so on, but I feel that this is possibly a matter which could be very well left to the discretion of our doctors and the medical profession generally. My personal experience with doctors has been that they are very responsible professional people, and I do not think there is any danger, certainly no great danger, that this plan is going to be abused by Canadian medical practitioners. In fact I believe that often in the past it has proved quite a burden to doctors when their patients needed hospital treatment and they realized the patients were not in a financial position to obtain it. I feel thoroughly satisfied, and I think I can speak on behalf of this group in this connection, that we should have confidence in the doctors of our country and that they will not abuse this plan when it comes into effect.

One thing that strikes me and this group is that we seem to have a false sense of values in this country today. We see a lot of propaganda—one could call it that—in the newspapers regarding the terrible burden of cost which any hospital plan or health plan would involve. But if we check the estimates of two very important departments, those of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of National Defence, we find that the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, including the statutory items, amount to just about 60 per cent of what we are expending on defence, and as had been pointed out on many occasions and as was pointed out by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River quoting from the Financial Post, most of this money being spent on defence is wasted because the defence material on which we are spending this money is obsolete before we get it.

Thus I fail to see why we should have such a spotlight on the legitimate costs involved in a matter so important as the nation's health, while at the same time the waste of money on obsolete weapons passes almost without comment. As a particular illustration of this point I might mention that at the present time the government is faced with a decision whether or not to put a certain type of aeroplane into production. If they decide to go ahead the cost involved will amount to $2 million for each plane. This in the aggregate would certainly represent much more than is presently being expended in looking after the health needs of the entire country.

One of the worst omissions of this government is that the vision which some departments seem to show has not been carried into this particular ministry. We see no such willingness on the part of the government to branch out into new fields in the Department of National Health and Welfare as there is, for example, in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. We do not find the drive which has been demonstrated in other fields.

I think this contention can be illustrated by its attitude toward the present hospital plan. All that has been done in the last year or year and a half since this government took over has been to bring in some very minor amendments to a plan which was originally very inadequate. Certainly there has been no sign to date that this government is showing any vision or initiative in developing and planning a health service for this country, although such a plan is badly needed. It is particularly difficult to understand this attitude when we look back over the past few years and note the stand which was taken by some of those who are now cabinet ministers.

This morning, in answer to a question with regard to a bill of rights, the Prime Minister made the statement that the stand of the government now is the same as it was before. I only wish the same thing was true with regard to health insurance and hospital insurance. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River mentioned one particular statement of the Prime Minister as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press. I should like to give another which was reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of May 28, 1957. It was reported from the Saskatoon meeting held on May 27:

> Mr. Diefenbaker reminded that the Conservative party had consistently advocated health insurance—

This is not only a hospitalization plan; it is complete health insurance, a complete hospital and health insurance plan. He went on to say that the Conservative party still believed that hospital insurance should cover patients in mental and tuberculosis institutions.

It has been said during this session that on occasion newspaper reports cannot be relied upon too heavily. But I think one thing we can rely on is our own record in Hansard as it appears from day to day, and we find that on February 16, 1956, at page 1233 of Hansard, the Prime Minister, then the hon. member for Prince Albert, asked the following question:

> I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the submission of the health plan to the various provinces, were tuberculosis and mental cases included? If not, why were they not included, and is consideration being given thereto?

The answer of the former prime minister was:

> They were not included. For many years they have been recognized as a provincial responsibility and the submission that was being made was for the provision of services additional to those already in existence.

Moreover, during the debate on the health insurance bill on April 10, 1957, as reported at page 3385 and subsequent pages of Hansard, again the present Prime Minister said:

> Our desire, while giving full support to the legislation as we have throughout, in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Eglinton, is to do our part even at this late hour to improve the legislation in order to make it more effective.

And a little later he said:

> The amendment moved by the hon. member would refer the bill to the committee of the whole for the purpose of considering this clause, thereby giving an opportunity, even at this late hour, of including within the ambit of the legislation sanatoria, tuberculosis hospitals and institutions and hospitals for the mentally ill. While tuberculosis is in recession, mental diseases are on the increase.

Further on in the debate the present Prime Minister had this to say:

> The goal that all of us have in mind will not be achieved until the two types of institutions to which I have made reference are included within the provisions of this legislation.

The Prime Minister was not alone in taking this stand. We find that many other members of the present government put themselves very clearly on record with regard to this matter. For example, as recorded on page 2657 of Hansard of March 25, 1957 the present Minister of Transport said:

> The Ontario government also feel that two very important categories of treatment today are those affecting mental and tubercular patients. They feel, and I think quite rightly, that those costs should be shared by the federal government.

And the present Minister of Fisheries had this to say:

> As far as the provinces are concerned there is very heavy expenditure in the fields of mental health and tuberculosis and most people feel, and I think correctly so, that these are illnesses which should not be differentiated from general illnesses and that those who suffer from these diseases should reap as much benefit from the scheme as anyone else.

And of course we have quotations from the late Dr. Blair, who at that time was the health expert of the opposition. I believe these quotations have been given before.

One of the most strongly worded statements on this subject was made by the present Minister of Finance, who has contributed many quotable statements to the debates of this house. He moved an amendment on that occasion, and as reported at page 3238 of Hansard of April 8, 1957 he said:

> My purpose is to ask the house to refer the bill back to the committee of the whole in order that this same clause which contains this unjustifiably narrow definition of the word 'hospital' may be reconsidered. I put before the house the ground that there can be no justification in good sense or in principle or in humanity or in the existing facts of life as applied to the financial difficulties of the provinces and municipalities of this country, for this government to try to drive a wedge between general hospitals on the one hand and tuberculosis hospitals and sanatoria and hospitals and institutions for the mentally ill on the other hand. It is only by changing the definition that the government proposes in clause 2(e) that this unworthy distinction can be eliminated. I ask the house, therefore, to send this back in order that this clause, unworthy of the Canadian parliament, unworthy of the pretensions of the government that this is a comprehensive scheme, should be reconsidered and that its shortcomings should be remedied and that the scheme should in fact be made what the minister improperly pretends it to be, a comprehensive scheme of hospital insurance.

Certainly the Minister of Finance, who usually expresses himself in definite language, did so on that occasion. At that time he pointed out very clearly the deficiencies in the plan. I am convinced that no one reading his remarks could have received any impression other than that as soon as he had any opportunity of doing something about it the minister would certainly do so. I wonder if the Minister of National Health and Welfare could inform us if by any chance the arguments and criticisms of the Minister of Finance are as strong today as they were then with regard to this matter.

On January 9, 1957 the C.C.F. moved an amendment in the following language:

—and by reason of their failure to announce legislation establishing a comprehensive and nation-wide program of health insurance, with provision for provincial participation.

The vote was recorded on January 16, 1957, and the amendment was supported by the present Prime Minister and all the Conservatives in the house on that occasion. The amendment, of course, was defeated by a vote of 135 to 69 as recorded at page 320 of Hansard of that date.

We also find that when the debate was concluded and the vote taken on April 10, 1957 on the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance with regard to this same measure, among the members of the present cabinet who voted for the amendment as reported at pages 3392 and 3393 of Hansard were the hon. member for Three Rivers, the present Solicitor General; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce; the present Prime Minister; the hon. member for Hamilton West, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration; the hon. member for Eglinton, the present Minister of Finance; the hon. member for Kamloops, the present Minister of Justice; the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, the present Minister of Public Works; the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, the present Postmaster General; the hon. member for Calgary North, the present Minister of Agriculture; the hon. member for Broadview, the present Minister of Transport; the hon. member for Greenwood, the present Minister without Portfolio; the hon. member for Queens, the present Minister of Fisheries; and the hon. member for Ontario, the present Minister of Labour. It is worth noting that these hon. gentlemen voted for the amendment on April 10, 1957, two short months before the election that brought them to office.

I wish to illustrate how inadequate the present plan is. I have some figures taken from the health and welfare division of the dominion bureau of statistics which show that patients in mental hospitals constitute 39 per cent of all bed patients in this country and patients in tuberculosis hospitals constitute 7.63 per cent of all bed patients in Canada at this time. Of course that 47 per cent is excluded under the plan at the present time, just as it was excluded by the previous government, when it was criticized so severely and justifiably by those who now sit on the government side of the house.

In 1950 and 1951 the Department of National Health and Welfare conducted a Canadian sickness survey which indicated that hospital patients in this country totalled about 1,350,000. With 47 per cent of the patients excluded from the plan this means that roughly only 700,000 will be covered by the federal contribution and a total of 650,000 will not be covered. But that is only one small part of the health picture in Canada. According to the same survey the number of people needing physicians' services that year was 5,950,000. The number of people requiring dental treatment was two million. The number of people requiring operations was 500,000. The number of people requiring eyeglass examinations was 450,000. The number requiring miscellaneous health care was 200,000. As far as that portion of the plan to which the federal government contributes is concerned we find that a total of only 700,000 patients out of a total of 10,450,000 patients will be covered, or in other words one out of every 15 patients.

Furthermore, an examination of statistics compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics indicates that the population of Canada has increased by 21.4 per cent since 1950. Applying this increase to the survey made in 1950 and 1951 brings the relationship to about one patient out of every 16. I believe that clearly illustrates the inadequacy of this plan. It demonstrates the need on the part of the department to display something of the vision this government is attempting to apply in other fields. There is nothing more important to a country than the health of its citizens.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River dealt with the increasingly important question of radiation poisoning. I too should like the minister to inform the committee just what measures his department is taking to study this matter and what the results of their investigations reveal. The hon. member also dealt briefly with the question of the United States social security plan, or as we preferred to call it when we have raised this subject on previous occasions, the portable pension plan. We feel this should be part of our social security in Canada. The plan has worked extremely well in the United States, so we are not trail blazing in this regard. We can take lessons from them; we can find out the errors and mistakes they have made over the years, and we can benefit from the experience they have had.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the need is very great for this department to show much more initiative than it has shown in the past. The country as a whole will be looking for some lead from this government, particularly from this department, which will indicate that the expectations which the people took from the remarks which were made by the members of the present government before it came into power will be realized.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I will not delay the committee very long, but I do wish to draw attention to certain other considerations which may have been overlooked by the hon. member for Timmins. I am sure he wants to maintain the fairness for which most members of his group are noted. In his comments concerning the lack of initiative and the lack of new ideas on the part of this department I do not think he took into consideration the rapid strides the department is making in advancing the cause of the health of individuals in the northern parts of Canada. I believe the department is developing very rapidly plans for mobile and quasi-mobile health units in those areas. Perhaps the minister might explain those plans to the members of the committee.

Just briefly in passing, Mr. Chairman, I might also point out that the trend which was followed by the previous administration in this matter of northern health was perhaps not directed along the proper lines. In this regard perhaps the minister might also explain briefly what the departmental plans are concerning the Whitehorse general hospital, its completion and its staffing, as I personally feel that here in this magnificent structure, this magnificent memorial to past Liberal administration, we have our own printing bureau in the Yukon. Perhaps the minister might explain what use is to be made of the buildings which have been constructed in connection with the main hospital facilities.

I would like to express my gratitude and appreciation on behalf of the people of the north for the vision which this government is displaying in its approach to northern health problems. The mobile health units are the only method by which permanent nursing, medical and hospital facilities can be made available to sparsely settled communities. This is a new, a novel idea, an idea which is being vigorously pursued by the present minister.

Knowing that the hon. member for Timmins wants to be fair in a matter of this kind I would suggest that perhaps he should temper the remarks he has just made in the light of this knowledge.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, since its reorganization in 1944 the department has grown very considerably both in size and in importance, as hon. members who have spoken have said. As a matter of fact, today we are being asked to pass estimates for over $1,735 million to be expended in the field of health and welfare in our country. I believe this is a commendable amount of money to be spent in such a good cause, since it represents roughly about one-third of our total budget. However, like most departments with increased responsibilities in recent years, the Department of National Health and Welfare has also become quite complicated and it has been difficult for members to keep up with all the activities that are taking place in the different divisions of the department.

Mr. Benidickson: A report would help.

Mr. Cardin: Exactly. With annual reports in the past hon. members were able to follow very closely the progress that was being made in the different divisions of the department, and were able to take part in the discussion of the estimates with a clearer understanding of what was going on. But, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has said, this year members do not have an annual report of the department before them. As a matter of fact, as my hon. friend said a moment ago, the last report of the department was tabled by the previous minister of national health and welfare for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956.

I can quite understand that perhaps we could not expect at this time to have the report for 1958, but I would rather imagine that the report for 1957 should surely be at the disposal of hon. members. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the fact that there is no annual report for 1957 is in direct contravention of section 10 of the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, which states that "the minister shall submit annually a report to parliament in such form as may be prescribed by the governor in council".

When the minister rose to speak a short time ago I expected that he would at least explain to the committee why we have not before us the annual report for 1957. I would have thought that perhaps the minister might have apologized to the house for having overlooked what not only has been customary in this house and in the Department of National Health and Welfare but for having overlooked something which is a statutory requirement. I submit that this is a very serious omission. It is very serious because the report was not brought down in the first place, and in the second place because neither the minister nor anyone on the government side thought it useful or necessary to advise or explain why there was no report for 1957.

This is a serious omission, but I submit that it becomes more alarming when we consider that in another important department of government it was decided that an annual report would no longer be published and, as a matter of fact, the usual white paper which accompanied the report of that department was completely disregarded.

Mr. Benidickson: Almost two-thirds of the expenditures come under those two departments.

Mr. Cardin: Yes. Therefore the very people who accused the previous administration of withholding information from the House of Commons in regard to confidential material are now not only unwilling to produce the confidential document in its 1958 version, but they are not even willing to put at the disposal of hon. members information which is not only useful but necessary, and which was at the disposal of hon. members during the regime of the previous administration when the department was headed by the previous minister of national health and welfare.

The fact that this and several other similar incidents have occurred within recent months is to my mind a far truer measure of the government's solicitude for the rights and privileges of parliament than is the Prime Minister's self-attributed qualification of defender of parliament. I feel it necessary to repeat that in the true interests of the dignity, rights and traditions of this house we have an obligation to look far more carefully at the actions of this government. We could, I feel sure, discredit a good many of the statements we hear concerning the rights of parliament.

In so far as legislation is concerned, I think one of the most remarkable amendments to legislation that was brought forward by this government was the increase from $46 to $55 in the old age pension. I feel quite sure that the increase was indeed welcomed by all citizens, and that the additional $9 was used to very good purpose by a great number of these recipients. However, I feel it would be wise and useful to at least stop and think about exactly where we are going in the field of social legislation. I am sure all hon. members realize that the natural law, the physical law and the moral law all indicate that no one really gets anything for nothing. It seems to me that we must be ready to pay for whatever we receive. The government's commitment on old age security, which amounts to about $555 million, and other fields of social legislation should be looked at in the light of the deficit of some $1 billion for this year.

Now, as hon. members know these commitments by government are not made on a yearly basis; they are made on a permanent basis. One does not have to be a prophet to forecast deficit budgets for some years to come. I believe, and I do not think anyone would disagree with me, that the national revenue within the next few years will not be sufficiently high to counterbalance the increases in commitments which the government are now making. Unless the government are willing to face very serious economic difficulties, then they will have to consider increasing taxes, no matter how many promises were made to the effect that it was possible to increase social benefits without increasing taxes.

Another thought which I believe is worthy of consideration is that it is not impossible that inflation, even at a time of recession such as we are now having, whether or not we like it, may cut very deeply into the purchasing power of the Canadian public. This may decrease substantially the benefits of the increase in old age security payments, with the result that the very purpose for which the increases were given would be defeated.

In spite of the increase of $9 in the old age security payments I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister did not fulfil the promises he made during the course of the election campaign. In the Toronto Daily Star of April 26, 1957 the following article appeared:

> Mr. Diefenbaker condemned the "mean and niggardly" pension increases offered by the Liberal government and said a Conservative administration would deal with the problem more fairly and adequately.
> Old age pensions, he promised, would be set "at a figure high enough to meet the needs of our older citizens" and would be adjusted from time to time in accordance with changes in living costs.

Surely the Prime Minister, as well as the hon. members who are now applauding, realizes that $55 a month is not sufficient to meet the needs of our older citizens, nor is the increase of $9 proportionate to the increase in the cost of living in the past few years. As a matter of fact, if the Prime Minister had fulfilled his promise he would have had to raise the old age security payment to $70 a month. No amount of oratory on the part of the Prime Minister can make the Canadian people believe that the Prime Minister and this government have actually fulfilled the promises made during the election campaign.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Don't be silly.

Mr. Small: The people were satisfied with it.

Mr. Cardin: It is quite obvious that you cannot make the people believe that, and this is the reason.

Mr. Small: We did at the last election.

Mr. Cardin: You wait until the next one. No matter how much we would like it to be otherwise, in the present stage of our economic development, old age security and other social measures cannot possibly be an end in themselves. They can, at this stage, be only an indefinite form of financial aid which the government may give to certain sectors of our society that need it most, based not on the cost of living, though we would like that to be the case, but based on the capacity of the Canadian economy to pay. I submit that anything above and beyond what the Canadian economy can pay is unrealistic, and is to my mind a dangerous practice which in the end defeats the very purpose for which these social measures were instituted.

I feel sure hon. members will criticize me severely for having said what I have. I shall be considered as rather brutal, but I am sincerely convinced that we must at least realize where we are going and I feel it is my duty to warn the committee of what is happening. I feel that what I say is true, and I feel that eloquent support is given to what I say by the $1 billion deficit for this current fiscal year.

A well balanced social security program also should try to cover as wide a field as possible, so far as our Canadian economy will permit. If it is just and fitting to help our senior citizens, I believe it is equally fitting and right that we should help our junior citizens. I think we, as Canadians and citizens of a new country, should pay particular attention to what we will make of our children. We should do all we can to help families give their children fundamental and minimum standards of food, clothing and schooling in order that they may be able to take part actively, and to the best possible extent, as citizens of this country.

I do not believe anyone will disagree with that principle. Yet, Mr. Chairman, there was a certain amount of objection, criticism and abuse heaped upon the previous administration when they introduced family allowances. Ever since that time the Conservatives have been extremely cold toward any movement to increase family allowances. At the convention which the Conservatives had some time ago someone in the hall asked the chairman of the resolutions committee to introduce a resolution stating that family allowances would be increased. That request was refused.

In the avalanche of promises that we heard in two general election campaigns not one word about the matter was spoken by members of the cabinet, the Prime Minister or those who control the party. Not one word was mentioned with regard to increasing family allowances. As a matter of fact there is no legislation on the statute books at the present time nor is there any indication from any speech made or any word spoken which would lead us to hope that there may be an increase in family allowances. But the fact that the Conservatives criticized the family allowance the fact that they have been cold toward it and the fact that there is no legislation on the statute books even today did not stop the Prime Minister or members of his party when in opposition from heaping scorn, criticism, ridicule and abuse on the previous administration for having increased the family allowance by $1. I say, Mr. Chairman, that increasing the family allowance by $1 is one hundred times more than has been done by the present government and one hundred times better than not doing anything at all.

Mr. Benidickson: It is $42 million in a full year.

Mr. Cardin: It is also far more condemnable for the government to sit in cold and stony silence whenever family allowances are mentioned. I wonder what qualification we can give to a political party which, amidst abuse and ridicule, condemns another political party when it has not the courage itself to do even as much. I have certain adjectives which I could use to describe that type of party, Mr. Chairman, but I feel quite sure that I would not be permitted to use them in this house.

Hon. members of the house sitting on the opposite side, including the Solicitor General severely condemned the previous government for increasing the family allowance by only $1 and urged the previous government to increase the family allowance so the children of Canada may be given all the opportunities they deserve. Surely the Solicitor General and hon. members opposite cannot now sit like dummies in their seats. Surely they cannot fail to rise at this time and ask the government to increase family allowances, and condemn it for having ignored family allowances ever since it has been in power. If they do not rise and make speeches of the same type as those they made during the administration of the previous government, Mr. Chairman, what else can we think than that they were not sincere at the time they were making the accusations and at the time they were asking for increases in family allowances?

Mr. Chown: Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. Bourque: That is your problem.

Mr. Cardin: Another essential requirement of social security legislation which is well founded is the fact that every Canadian who qualifies under the act should receive the benefits of the legislation regardless of religion, race or politics. I am happy to say that all social legislation which is administered by the federal government follows that principle religiously. Anyone who qualifies for any benefit under any type of social legislation administered by the federal government automatically receives it without any condition. But there are other pieces of legislation, and I am thinking in particular of the Old Age Assistance Act and the Disabled Persons Act, to which the federal government contributes in no small measure but which are administered by provincial governments.

I do not know what happens in the other provinces, Mr. Chairman, but I know that in Quebec both these acts have been utilized for political advantage on many occasions by persons who support the present provincial government in the province of Quebec, either as a threat or as an inducement, with respect to people who should normally receive the benefits of the act without any conditions whatsoever being imposed. I suggest that this type of activity is completely intolerable to members of this house. Because of the fact that the federal government contributes more than a little to the cost of this legislation, the government has a responsibility, as has the minister, to see that all people in Canada, including those in the province of Quebec, who qualify for a benefit under social security legislation should receive it without any conditions whatever attached to its receipt. If we do not do that I submit that we are not living in a democracy.

I am also happy, Mr. Chairman, to see that the hospital insurance plan will be coming into effect. I do not think anyone will deny me the right and the pleasure of saying that the previous Liberal administration worked very hard in order to implement a very complicated but very useful scheme. I can also say that the previous minister of national health and welfare also contributed greatly to bringing about this insurance scheme. This is not said to take anything away from the present minister. On the contrary, I think he is to be complimented, today being his first anniversary as Minister of National Health and Welfare. I think he has done a wonderful job. I think he deserves a good deal of credit. I sincerely wish him well in the continuation of his mandate as Minister of National Health and Welfare, which we feel will last about three more years. I am happy to see, Mr. Chairman, that as of January 1 British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Newfoundland have already entered into an agreement—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): July 1.

Mr. Cardin: That is right; July 1. I am happy to see that as of July 1 those provinces have already entered into an agreement with the federal government and that the plan is now operating; and that as of January 1, 1959, Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will likewise participate in the plan. However, I can also say that I am very sorry and I deplore the fact that once again the province of Quebec does not think it wise to enter into such a plan although, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said a while ago, it contributes to funds which are being utilized and from which benefits are being derived in the other provinces of Canada.

I feel very sorry that for reasons better known to himself the premier of the province of Quebec does not see fit to allow the population of Quebec to benefit from this wonderful legislation. Under a Liberal administration, of course, there was no question whatsoever that the province of Quebec might even conceivably come within that act. But with the change of government we are beginning to have a little bit of hope and confidence that Quebec may one day enter into the act. In the London Free Press of May 17, 1958 we read "Quebec Swing Now Seen Toward Hospital Plan". Furthermore, in the Montreal Star of June 7, 1958 there is the headline, "Duplessis Admits Quebec Preparing for Hospital Plan".

May I say that we are very happy indeed that the premier of Quebec should have had such a change of heart, and we are liberal enough to say that we do not care even though the fact that there is a Conservative government at Ottawa, is the reason the premier of Quebec has changed his mind. We are happy, and we hope he will in the very near future communicate with the minister to tell him that he is ready to take part in what I believe to be very beneficial legislation.

I would also urge the minister, because I understand so far he has not done so, to communicate with Premier Duplessis to see if through negotiation it would not be possible to have Quebec join the scheme as soon as possible.

I see that my time has pretty well expired. I may have been rather critical of the Department of National Health and Welfare, but may I say that if this is so I was not being critical of the minister personally or of anyone else in his department. I have brought forward matters about which I feel very strongly, and I hope the minister may be able to give me answers which will help me to understand if perhaps I am wrong.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I would like to compliment the minister on this, the anniversary of his first year in office, and to commend him for the wonderful job he has done. As a member of the medical profession, however, I do feel I should place before him some points of view during this discussion on the estimates of his department.

First, I was quite amazed at the speech made by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, which I think points up the dilemma of the Liberal party. They want to go one way but they have to go the other way, so they end up by stripping their gears. There is no doubt about what he has said in regard to social service in this country in that we have to be able to pay for it, but I think the important thing is for the government to decide on how the distribution of available funds will be effected; and that, of course, is where the former government badly fell down.

In our national Department of National Health and Welfare we have a great number of services having to do with the health of Canadians. The department itself looks after the health of our citizens in the north, the Indians and the Eskimos; it also looks after health matters with respect to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and provides other medical services. The Department of National Defence provides health service for members of our armed forces, and the Department of Veterans Affairs takes care of health service for our veterans. It might be useful if in future our federal departments could get together so as to provide uniform health service to cover those services now provided by the various departments. I think that is important for the future for several reasons; first with respect to civil defence, second in order to prevent waste of beds and personnel, and third with respect to medical education in Canada.

I will have a little more to say on that aspect of the matter later, but I would like to turn to our hospitalization scheme, which I am sure we are all happy to see put into effect. There are a great many problems to which we must give very serious consideration; and, as the previous speaker said, our social services depend upon the ability of Canada to pay. I think we should immediately recognize that this scheme is going to cost the country a considerable amount of money.

As the hon. member for Timmins pointed out, under this scheme the responsibility for the institution and operation of the service will rest upon the shoulders of the medical profession; I do not think there is any doubt about that. Although I am just a junior member of the profession I personally have no doubt that the medical profession as a whole will be able to accept this responsibility. If, however, we are asking it to accept this responsibility then surely we should give recognition to the profession, at least in the form of an advisory council. In that respect I feel that all parts of the profession should be represented.

Coming now to the hospital scheme itself, I think all members who have gone over the various provincial schemes will agree that with respect to all those provinces which have now entered the agreement or have signified their intention to do so, the main problem is the lack of uniformity as between the provinces in regard to such things as the drugs which are to be provided and the control which will be placed not only on the hospitals but upon the medical profession generally. For example, the arrangement with Saskatchewan contains quite definite restrictions on the drugs which practitioners are allowed to use and which are to be provided under this scheme.

That in itself is not so bad, but what is wrong is that the provincial governments are going to have control and perhaps will act in a deterrent way in respect of the physician practising his profession, in that it will have some say as to the drugs which may or may not be used. That, I can assure the house, is very wrong and very bad for the future of medical care in this country, because as soon as governments at any level become involved in the treatment of patients, then the standard of medical care will deteriorate.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that the Prime Minister wishes to make a statement. Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUSPENSION OF NUCLEAR TESTS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Has the right hon. Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that a further statement would be made on the question of nuclear tests. Today the President of the United States and the government of the United Kingdom have issued important announcements with regard to their policy in this field.

On behalf of the Canadian government I, and I think all hon. members, welcome unreservedly the decisions which have been reached by the United States and the United Kingdom governments. Indeed, I hope I can speak for all shades of opinion in the house and in the country in welcoming this major development announced this day, and especially to express the satisfaction of members of this house with the statesmanlike and specific nature of the proposals made by those two countries.

The house will recall that on several occasions since I became Prime Minister I have advocated the suspension of nuclear tests, but always providing there was adequate international control to ensure the observance of the undertakings made in that connection. The principal powers now have before them the result of the technical discussions at Geneva to which Canadian scientists have made an important contribution. These powers are therefore in a favourable position to proceed on a political plane to negotiate the specific terms of an agreement which I hope will be international in effect.

The readiness of the United States and the United Kingdom governments to suspend nuclear tests for a year is a contribution of the first magnitude toward the creation of a favourable atmosphere for negotiation. The conditions that the suspension agreement be extended year by year only if the inspection system is functioning effectively and progress continues to be made in the reaching of agreements on major substantive disarmament measures, are prudent foundations on which to build. Such understandings will provide a further incentive to creative efforts for the enlargement of mutual confidence and the assurance of the maintenance of peace, and they would emphasize the political significance of an agreement on the suspension of tests as a first step toward disarmament.

It is my profound hope that the Soviet union will shortly indicate its readiness to enter into negotiations for the general purposes set forth in the United States and United Kingdom statements. For our part I can give unqualified assurances that to the extent that the control arrangements which may be agreed upon might be applicable to Canadian territory, we are prepared to co-operate in setting up control stations and inspection of the kind outlined in the report of the experts. Indeed, on more than one occasion Canada has agreed unreservedly to her northern areas and Arctic regions being made available for inspection in order to ensure that surprise attacks will not take place.

At the proper stage of negotiations, which we hope will soon be begun by the powers engaged in active testing programs, the opportunity will come to put forward our detailed views on this matter and to offer constructive suggestions with respect to the location of stations and the administration of inspection teams within Canada.

Sir, after many years of fruitless discussions on the question of disarmament, and indeed the complete breakdown of the machinery of negotiation last year, the world at last has a prospect of agreement in one specific and important field. An agreement for the suspension of nuclear tests would be significant in itself, and might conceivably represent a concrete start on the arduous process of negotiating a disarmament program and agreements which would increase the security of all nations, diminish the danger and fear of war and lighten the burden of armaments.

I trust that in the near future a further round of talks at the expert level will be held on the problem of safeguards and the provision of the necessary means to ensure the maintenance of confidence in this connection.

What has been announced today will give new hope to all mankind. If the U.S.S.R. will now agree to enter into negotiations as suggested in the statements of the United Kingdom and the United States of America, we may this day be entering a new era for the achievement of world peace.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps I may be permitted to say a word in regard to the important statement which the Prime Minister has just made. I feel certain that all members of the house will have heard with great satisfaction the decision which has been reached by the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States to suspend nuclear tests for a period of one year. This does, I think, represent one step forward in the effort to bring nuclear weapons of mass destruction under control and, eventually, to abolish them. As such, I am sure we all support the progress which has now been made and which has been mentioned by the Prime Minister.

It remains now, as the Prime Minister has indicated, to work out international arrangements in the United Nations which would confirm and extend the national decisions which have been taken by the United Kingdom, the United States and, previously by the Soviet union. It remains now also to bring this international arrangement which can, I hope, be proceeded with under United Nations control so that public opinion in all countries can be assured that the obligations undertaken in any international arrangement will not be violated. The recent meeting of experts at Geneva which just concluded its work with a positive and constructive report shows that this can be done. It must not be forgotten that a Russian scientist was included in this meeting.

I wish to refer to two paragraphs of that report which certainly have a bearing on what might now be done and I hope will now be done. It is significant to note that these paragraphs were subscribed to by all the scientists there, including the Russian. A newspaper editorial commenting on that portion of the report stated:

> The conference of experts reached the conclusion that it is technically feasible to set up, with certain capabilities and limitations, a workable and effective control system for the detection of violations of a possible agreement on the world-wide cessation of nuclear weapons tests.
> It was established in this connection that a network of control posts which were equipped with all the necessary apparatus appropriate to the various methods of detection of nuclear explosions should be disposed on continents and on islands, as well as on a few ships in oceans.

I am sure the house will have heard not with surprise but with satisfaction the statement of the Prime Minister that the Canadian government will be happy to co-operate now as it has indicated its willingness to co-operate in the past in any system of control of this kind which requires Canada's co-operation. And so some progress has been achieved, but we must not forget that this is only one step. It is a step taken by nations individually, and it must be made international. There may be difficulties in the way, but I hope those difficulties will be overcome.

The secretary general of the United Nations sent a communication to the conference in Geneva commenting on the report, in which communication was included the following sentence:

> It will hereafter lie with the governments concerned and the United Nations to follow through the opening you have created. I have every hope that in due course they will indeed make the necessary constructive effort.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we must all join with the Prime Minister in the hope he has expressed that all nations will follow through in the effort which has begun and which may one day lift this shadow of fear that hangs over the world, the fear that these weapons that could destroy the world might one day be used. Because that fear has been to some extent lessened by what has happened at the Geneva meeting and by the decision announced today in the United Kingdom and the United States, we must rejoice and redouble our own efforts to make further progress.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, without doubt all hon. members of this house and the Canadian people as a whole will be heartened by the good news and the hope engendered by the Prime Minister's statement. As a peace-loving people we respond very quickly to the slightest indication of an improvement in the world situation. I know we all share the wish that the future will justify our hopes in this respect. We trust we may look upon this as a step in the painful progress toward world sanity.

Before concluding I wish to emphasize the fact, particularly on account of the criticism we hear at times of the value of the work of the United Nations, that this present development presents a tremendous opportunity for the United Nations to carry forward the ideas expressed in the Prime Minister's statement.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

231. Departmental administration, $1,441,494.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, at one o'clock I was in the process of making some remarks with regard to the national hospitalization scheme and the contracts which have already been entered into. I made the statement that it would be to the detriment of medical care in Canada if government became too involved in such care. I should like to make it quite clear that when I speak of government becoming too involved in matters of this kind I mean in terms of interference in the doctor-patient relationship.

There is no doubt that government has a very real responsibility with regard to hospitalization, and that has been shown by the introduction of the national hospitalization act. However, I feel that perhaps the government and the house have not given sufficient consideration to just what this act will entail and what responsibility we will have under the act. When I first came to Ottawa I was surprised to learn that there is not a standing committee of this house concerning national health and welfare. That is an omission which should be rectified in the near future in my opinion, having regard to the amount of money that is going to be spent by this department. In that connection I should like to point out to the committee some of the questions we will have to consider if we are going to make the scheme work as economically as possible.

First and foremost, of course, is the question of hospital beds. There is a shortage of hospital beds at this time, particularly in certain areas. It is not only a matter of making more beds available, but we must derive the best use possible from the beds we do have. Some of the previous speakers have noted that we have to assure that active treatment hospital beds are kept available for people requiring active treatment. We have a responsibility to see that our older people are provided accommodation so they may be released from hospital. We have an equal responsibility to ensure that veterans are cared for without having to remain in active treatment hospitals occupying essential hospital beds.

A second consideration in the responsibility of accommodation is that of making sure we supply the most modern equipment that is available, and make it available to all the people in Canada. I hope this will be taken care of.

The next big responsibility which the federal government has and to which we should be giving serious consideration is the matter of personnel to man the massive hospitalization program and to assure that the Canadian people are getting their money's worth from this expenditure. In that connection we must make sure that Canada maintains her present position in the field of medical education, post-graduate education and interne education. I wish to draw to the attention of hon. members of the committee that interne education is an important field. We are losing a great many internes, particularly to the United States, for various reasons. Certainly one reason is that they do not receive the necessary remuneration to permit them to remain in Canada. Governments all across Canada are spending vast sums of money subsidizing the education of internes at universities, but we must not stop there. We must assist them to continue to study in Canada and practise here.

There is also the problem of the shortage of nurses. As the hospitalization scheme is implemented across Canada the number of nurses required will be greatly increased. As hon. members know, there is a definite shortage at this time. I think the plea of the hon. member for Athabasca, made in the house some time ago, in regard to the federal government giving consideration to paying a subsidy to nurses, should be acted upon, and I would certainly commend it to the minister for his consideration.

Then there are the other personnel who in this modern day and age have charge of facilities in the hospitals. I refer to the various technicians in the laboratories, X-ray rooms, and so on. We have to take the lead in the education of those people. We have to do it now; we have to supply opportunities to be educated in Canada; we have to make sure that they are properly looked after when they graduate, so they will stay in Canada and help us in this job of hospitalization.

Because this hospitalization scheme is of such national importance and because, as I said previously, the responsibility for its efficient working is going to rest on the shoulders of the medical profession, I believe they should have some help in that regard. I believe the Department of National Health and Welfare has a responsibility to educate the boys and girls in our schools. They should make more material available than has been made available up to now. I commend the department for the books that have been put out, particularly the books on child care and more particularly on the book "Canadian Mother and Child", and also other books that have been put out over the years. They are excellent books. I think more could be done for the junior age group in our high schools. More literature should be available to them, because there is no doubt that an educated public is going to be required to make this hospitalization scheme work.

We can go on from there as far as education is concerned, but certainly the federal government has a serious responsibility in one regard. I refer to medical research. In the past, of course, we have had the Connaught laboratories, but it is going to be more important in the future in cancer research and all other medical research which have to be undertaken. I am sure the minister is quite aware of this, but I just mention it to bring it to his attention again.

There is just one other problem that I should like to bring to the attention of the committee at this time, namely the problem of the general practitioner in Canada. I feel that something should be done in this regard, because I feel very strongly that the general practitioner is the backbone of the medical service in Canada and will be the backbone of the hospitalization scheme if it is to work. It is vitally important that we do not relegate the general practitioner to the status of a file clerk, because if we do that the whole scheme will break down.

One other thing I should like to say in that regard has to do with civil defence. Probably most hon. members are aware that if—and I say "if"; from the announcement we just heard it becomes a little more remote—we are ever involved in a nuclear war our major medical centres would in all probability be involved in that war and would be of no use to us. We must keep in mind that the backbone of our civil defence in so far as the medical corps is concerned will be the country hospitals in rural areas and our general practitioners in those areas. If we are to make sure that we have the buildings and the people ready to take over that responsibility, then we have to guard very jealously the position of the general practitioner. I am happy to say that in Canada the general practitioners are very fortunate in that so far their position has been recognized.

If I may, I would like to say one other word in regard to the senior citizens of this country, our older people, our pioneers, and their housing accommodation. This has always been a very great problem in all communities in Canada, in that we have always had the problem of looking after our older citizens. Many governments have the idea that all they have to do is build some sort of marble hall and stick those people in there and forget about them. Many of our provincial governments are doing that right now. They are building 400-bed homes for the chronic aged in the cities.

I can tell the committee—and I am sure most hon. members will agree with me—that our old people do not want to go into those marble halls. They want to have some accommodation, yes, but they want to have that accommodation and maintain their independence, because after all they are Canadians. I am a little disappointed that some of the provinces of Canada have not taken advantage of the help which is available under the present legislation through Central Mortgage and Housing to provide the type of accommodation which our old people want and need. I trust we are not going to keep on building huge marble halls in cities or in other areas. Those people want to stay at home with their friends; they want to have some independence.

In conclusion I should like to commend the minister on his work in the past year. My remarks with regard to the hospitalization scheme I would like to be taken as concerning something which will happen and which we are going to have to take into consideration and fulfil as the rest of Canada becomes involved in the scheme.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter which is of concern to my constituency, and it is no doubt a condition which obtains in every other constituency in the country. I wish to speak briefly on pensions in relation to health. Under the present legislation an old age pension is not payable without a means test until a person has reached the age of 70, when he or she, by the way, is subject to failing health.

As everyone knows, in most industries now the normal retiring age is 65, and in most instances the employees are retired with no pension or with a very small pension. During the period 65 to 70 most citizens still have to meet fixed commitments such as mortgage or rental payments, which are proving increasingly more difficult with the reduced value of the dollar owing to rising costs; call it inflation, if you like. The fact remains that what was once considered a small pension has now shrunk to a totally inadequate and ridiculously low level, and is certainly not sufficient to meet doctors' bills.

Legislation should be introduced to eliminate the means test at 65. I should like to read a paragraph or two from a letter which I received from one of my constituents, which tells part of the story:

> I am a retired C.N.R. man, having been off now for over three years. I have, up until now, been fortunate enough to find work for part of the year but lately I have been unable to secure work. I thought I had a job lined up with the department of highways at Fort William but I now find I am too old. I want it understood that I have no complaint with the officials of the department of highways. They were very courteous and took my application but later informed me they had instructions not to hire anyone over 65 years of age. That in itself I think is all right as there are many younger people who cannot find jobs.

It is one of the tragedies of our times that retired men and women, most of whom devoted their lives to the public service, are now caught in a vicious cost-price squeeze. Twenty years ago a man could look forward to a fairly comfortable retirement on a few thousand dollars or on a guaranteed pension of say $25 or $30 per month. These people are now living on the ragged edge of abject poverty, and that is a condition which should not be tolerated in this great and wealthy country of Canada. Surely it is not too much to ask that pensions of civil servants, who have to pay for medical services, for instance, be brought under review and increased to the point where retirement after a lifetime of service means a peaceful rest from labour and worry.

I am aware that this particular matter was thoroughly discussed on Monday, December 16, 1957, as reported in Hansard, but unfortunately the resolution under discussion at that time was talked out. That resolution had been introduced by my predecessor, Rev. Dan McIvor. I have practically the same resolution on the order paper, but unfortunately it will go into oblivion so far as the present session of the house is concerned. This resolution reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to increase the pension of civil servants and Royal Canadian Mounted Police who were retired after long service when salaries were low, so as to bring their pensions in line with those of the present.

The question of pensions is one which should be considered and which should be under constant review in order to prevent the inequalities which now exist in so far as our retired civil servants and members of the R.C.M.P. are concerned. There are other categories, of course, which should receive consideration, not the least of which are the widows and unmarried women. These categories should receive pensions at the age of 60, and the reasons for that are obvious. Everyone knows that a single woman at the age of 60 cannot easily obtain employment, and unless she has independent means she is left to the mercy of charity or cast on the relief rolls of the municipality in which she lives.

I should like also to commend the hon. member for Carleton, who was in the house a few moments ago but is now out of the chamber, for the very creditable presentation he made last December on this question as reported in Hansard. I express the hope that his views on the matter have not changed since he made this statement:

> I say the government is not acting justly toward retired civil servants in not granting an increase in their superannuation.

The government has given an indication that they will consider this aspect of the situation, and it is to be hoped that they will do something about it soon.

All persons who require hospitalization, Mr. Chairman, will be taken care of under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, with the exception of those who are placed in nursing homes. They must bear this expense, and if the patient is an indigent such cost must be borne by the municipality. I say that today municipalities are charged with costs of all descriptions as a result of many demands made upon them, to which the provinces and the federal government do not contribute what I would consider to be a fair share. I believe some provision should be made in this health insurance measure to include nursing home care. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would give assurance that nursing home care will be included within the scope of this measure.

I do not want to make a lengthy speech. I realize there are many others who want to speak on this subject, and for that reason I shall make these remarks very brief indeed. However, I want to express my deep appreciation for the consideration which the department has given certain cases that have come within my knowledge. I sincerely trust the department will continue to give the maximum assurance to the people of Canada that their welfare is going to be taken care of, and that welfare benefits will be increased to meet conditions as they exist at this time.

We are moving quickly into a new era. What was good three or four years ago is no longer good. Some people are apt to condemn the former government for many omissions, but I do not believe such criticism is justified because what they did a few years ago perhaps met the conditions at that time. We are living now in a different time altogether. What we are doing today will not be good enough next year or five or ten years from now. I maintain, therefore, that we should keep these conditions under constant review.

Mr. Stinson: The matter which I should like to discuss for just a few minutes at this stage, Mr. Chairman, is civil defence. I am sure that all of us heard with satisfaction the statement made a few minutes ago by the Prime Minister to the effect that an agreement has been reached between the United States and the United Kingdom to suspend nuclear tests for one year. I know the details of this agreement have not yet been worked out and the precise control arrangements have not yet been completed; but, as the Prime Minister said and as the Leader of the Opposition repeated, this is probably the first significant step which has been made in recent years toward disarmament.

If we are successful in keeping the peace the measures which might be undertaken here to equip ourselves to try to withstand a nuclear war will not be necessary. But so long as the threat of such a catastrophe hangs over the world it behooves us to take every intelligent step we can to ensure that as far as possible we are protecting our people from the awful consequences of a nuclear attack.

I should like to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the very clear and helpful statement he made when introducing his estimates this afternoon. I should also like to congratulate him not only on the hard work he has put into the affairs of that department over the past year, but also on the excellent manner in which he has described the activities of his department to people in many communities of Canada. In the last day or two I had the opportunity of reading several speeches made by that hon. gentleman to community groups. I believe he is fulfilling in an admirable way the obligation he has to inform the Canadian public as to the important welfare activities of his department.

Just as there is no such thing as an adequate program of military preparedness, as was pointed out earlier by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, so there can be no really adequate program carried out in the field of civil defence. According to the estimates before us some $7 million are proposed to be appropriated for this purpose. On the other hand, some $1,680 million are to be used in equipping this country either to defend itself from attack or to retaliate against a power which may attack this country.

I am not going to suggest that there should be any ratio or relationship between money appropriated for defence purposes and money appropriated for civil defence purposes. Nor am I going to say that in view of this serious menace that confronts the world we should spend huge sums of money to provide shelter facilities and other means of protecting ourselves against the effects of a nuclear war.

What I do say, however, Mr. Chairman, is that this matter of civil defence is a national responsibility. It is the responsibility of the parliament of Canada. I realize that the work to be carried out in this field cannot be carried out exclusively by the national government. Some aspects of it, of course, must be delegated to the provincial authorities and the municipal governments. But what I do say is this. The time has come in this country for us to get down to the serious business of establishing a positive, definite and intelligent policy in this field. I must say that at the moment we have nothing of this kind. I realize that the minister, under whose jurisdiction this matter falls, has been fully occupied with work in other important fields. However, I hope that within a very few weeks' time he can direct his attention and that of the officials of his department in a serious way to this matter.

As I understand it, the duties of the civil defence co-ordinator are threefold. He has the duty first of all to co-ordinate federal planning and action; second, to co-ordinate and advise provincial and municipal authorities; and third to maintain liaison with corresponding agencies in the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries. Those are the broad and general spheres of his authority. Of course they will mean very little so far as the Canadian people are concerned unless something is done to implement them.

It seems to me that very little money is required to do the basic things that must be done in this field, and I think they should be done soon. First of all I think there is required to be set up and well publicized by the national government of this country an adequate warning system. I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that you could go out into the streets of Ottawa today and talk to the first 100 people you met and ask each of them what kind of warning he would expect to have should there be an attack of Russian jet bombers over this country, and you would not get a very satisfactory answer from anyone. I say this thing can be done rather simply, without the expenditure of a great deal of money, and that it is simply foolish to have different kinds of warning systems coming into being in the different municipalities across the country.

The second thing I think should be done right away in this matter, Mr. Chairman, is that the national authorities should make available to the people advice as to the simple activities they should undertake in the event that there is warning of such an attack. The other day I had the experience of going to the civil defence headquarters of this nation not many hundred yards away from this chamber. I went there at the request of an eminent Toronto architect who desired that I seek information with respect to the construction of a shelter under a private dwelling. I was told that the authorities really had not made up their minds as to what to recommend in this field. After a long time there was finally produced to me a single sheet of paper on which was sketched in very rough form a proposed shelter which had some kind of approval of the government of Canada. But when one sought to find out just what kind of approval this was, the answer was very evasive indeed.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is simply disgraceful that at this time a citizen can go to the civil defence authorities of Canada and be told that they have really no positive recommendations to make with respect to the kind of shelter one might build under his dwelling house so he might have some kind of chance of surviving an attack of the kind I have mentioned.

The other very few proposals I have in this matter, Mr. Chairman, are simple. It seems to me that the national government should undertake, with the assistance of well-qualified traffic engineers, rather extensive studies to work out the method by which people are to be evacuated from large centres of population. I also believe it would not be a costly thing to set up short training schools, of say two or three days' duration, for people who desire to learn the basic things necessary in order to conduct themselves in an intelligent way in their communities should war occur. I think training of this kind could be given at such places as county fairs, the central Canadian exhibition and the Canadian national exhibition. I believe people across the country would enrol in large numbers if they knew that by taking six, eight or ten hours of training they would gain the basic information which they need in order to do the best that could be done under the circumstances for themselves and their families should war break out.

Finally, I think the government should consider making use of the pilots of this country. I know they are prepared to co-operate with the Department of National Defence and the Department of National Health and Welfare by equipping themselves to assist the civilian population if necessary. I also know that in the United States there are some 80,000 civilian airmen enrolled in a voluntary organization, and that much has been done in this field.

Such pilots could be very useful indeed in the locating of areas of serious damage and in transporting medical and food supplies to isolated communities in the event of war. I am confident that if an approach were made to the flying clubs' association and to the Canadian owners' and pilots' association much could be done in this regard without the spending of very much money.

Mr. Deschatelets: I would like to say a few words in connection with three items covered by the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and I should like to deal first with the hospital insurance plan. I understand that this plan is now in operation in two provinces, namely in Alberta and British Columbia, and that from January 1 next it will operate in the province of Ontario. I also understand that supplementary estimates will be brought forward from time to time in order to cover the cost of the federal share of this plan.

I wish to remind the minister that Canadians as a whole are contributing to the operation of such plan and, speaking now as the representative of a Quebec riding, I would point out to the minister and his government how disturbed and disappointed we are at the prospect of paying for this plan yet not benefiting from it in our own province. We all know that the premier of Quebec must be blamed for the negative stand taken on this issue, but I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in the same boat, in view of his lack of imagination and initiative and for not having at least taken one step to induce or invite the authorities of Quebec to join in the plan.

To illustrate my point I wish to refer specifically to page 1432 of Hansard for June 19, 1958, where the hon. member for St. Denis asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare the following question:

> —does the minister not think that the premier of Quebec is rather late in trying to take advantage of this wonderful legislation?

The minister replied:

> I do not think it is for me to say what I think. All I can announce is that there has been no indication from the province of Quebec as to what their intentions may be.

The member for St. Denis then asked the following supplementary question:

> There was no letter, no telephone call, no correspondence between the premier of Quebec and the federal government?

To which the minister replied:

> No indication.

Next I would like to refer to page 3861 of Hansard for August 21, where I am recorded as having asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare the following question:

> Would the minister tell us if he has received recently an indication from the government of the province of Quebec as to their intention to join in the hospitalization insurance scheme?

The minister replied as follows:

> No, Mr. Speaker.

Whereupon I asked him the following supplementary question:

> Would the minister tell us if he has lately contacted the authorities of the province of Quebec, whether by telephone or telegram to that effect?

To which the minister replied:

> No, Mr. Speaker.

The admission by the minister that he has not even written, phoned or sent a telegram to the Quebec government inviting it to join in this plan is, in my view and in the view of most members on this side of the house, one of the most amazing features of this session. Does the minister believe that the citizens of the province of Quebec will willingly pay by way of taxes for a plan which is going to benefit all provinces except Quebec? I say now, and I think this is a principle which the minister cannot challenge, that this is a national plan which must operate on a national scale. Here again we can measure the tremendous need for a federal-provincial conference and the failure of this government to call such a conference as promised. This, in my view, is the reason the citizens of the province of Quebec will once again be the object of discrimination on the part of this government.

If the premier of the province of Quebec until now has refused to enter this plan he has a reason, and it is up to the minister to inquire as to that reason and find a formula to suit the exigencies of Mr. Duplessis, whatever they might be. If the minister is too shy to discuss the matter with Mr. Duplessis, why does he not ask the Prime Minister to pinch hit for him? The premier of Quebec and the Prime Minister are two good friends; they share the same views on many problems of the day, and they are using the same approach to many political issues.

We hope something will be done next session. We do hope that we will not have the same negative answers from the minister and that the minister will not deal with this issue as he has done so far. This is one of the first matters into which we are going to inquire at the opening of the next session.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I have something to say about family allowances. The country will always be grateful to the Liberal administration for having introduced them, and everyone will recall that the former leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Drew, had fought against them tooth and nail. However we did introduce them, and they are now on the statute books. Since 1945, various amendments have increased the amounts, and in the budget speech of 1957 the amount was set at $6 per month for children under 10, and $8 per month for children aged 10 to 16.

It is fitting to recall that at that time, in 1957, the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) criticized us because he claimed that the family allowances in 1957 did not have the same purchasing power as in 1945. I will, in fact, quote straight from the record. He is reported in Hansard of April 1956 (page 2829) as saying:

> From $5 that they were worth in 1949, they have gone down to $3.20; from $6 to $3.84 and from $8 to $5.10. If their rate of devaluation continues, 10 years from now, they will be worth only $2.05, $2.46 and $3.28.

During the last election campaign, the Solicitor General, who was the Conservative party spokesman in the province of Quebec, vehemently held out the promise that there would be an increase in family allowances. Let me now remind him of the promise he made; it has no doubt been forgotten by him, but not by the electorate in the province of Quebec. May I say also that if, as we were told by the Solicitor General, family allowances were to have gone up in 1957, there is all the more reason they should go up now, considering the marked rise in the cost of living since June 1957, as evidenced by the following figures, obtained from the bureau of statistics, relating to basic family necessities:

Food:	117.7	122.7
Shelter:	134.8	137.9
Clothing:	108.4	110.0

Mr. Chairman, I have shown what we have done regarding family allowances, and have quoted the promises in regard to family allowances made by the Solicitor General on behalf of the Conservative party—and which remain unfulfilled. I have, furthermore, shown that the very reasons which could have justified an increase in family allowances in 1957 are all the more impelling today. Let the Solicitor General, who was so vocal during the last election campaign, emerge from his silence and tell us of the government's plans in the matter.

(Text):

I should like to know from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when he comes to reply, what this government intends to do regarding an increase in family allowances, an increase which was promised by the Solicitor General and by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys during the last election.

Before ending my remarks I should like to say a few words concerning civil defence. Previous speakers on both sides have touched on this important question and in view of the announcement made by the Prime Minister yesterday that in the case of emergency there would be a plan based on the decentralization of government in this country, and in the light of the present international situation, I think this problem is more acute today than it has ever been in the past.

I remember very well that when the Conservative members were sitting on this side of the house they pressed us strongly for action with regard to civil defence. When we were responsible for the administration we made what we thought was a good start, but I remember that the present Postmaster General was on his feet on several occasions asking the government what they were planning to do for the city of Montreal in case of nuclear war. I do not want to go into detail here, because the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has covered the ground pretty well, but I say to the minister that if those contentions were true in 1957 they are even more true today. What we need in a city such as Montreal, which is on an island, is a third bridge in case a quick evacuation should be required. It is my intention to bring this matter up during discussion of the estimates of the Minister of Transport, but I wondered when I was listening to the remarks of some of the previous speakers if we should not put this item of civil defence under the Department of National Defence. Both subjects are close together, and should war break out we would all be in the front line.

Anyway, these are suggestions which I make in very good faith and in no way to embarrass the minister or the government. I hope the minister will be good enough to make a few comments on them when we reach the end of his estimates.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, when the debate began this morning I was more or less intrigued with the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins, likewise with those of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres and the other contributions which have been made, since these followed the same technique and pattern as was followed after we returned in 1957.

In June, 1957, the C.C.F. line of approach was that we had not done it soon enough, and the opposition at that time, the Liberals, said that we did not go far enough. The hon. member for Timmins spent considerable time this morning in repeating excerpts from speeches that were made by the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet and other hon. members of the government when they were in opposition. I would say that there is no intention to retract or retrace our steps from that particular time when we were advocating that certain things should take place.

I am speaking, now, with regard to the hospitalization bill which had been brought in by the previous minister of national health and welfare. We did, undoubtedly, advocate that certain advances should take place with regard to that particular policy, but when you start to make a resume of what has taken place prior to that you find that the policy of the Liberal party had been such that they had promised the people of Canada from 1919 onward that they were going to introduce a hospital scheme for this country, and election after election they had dished it up to the people that this was going to take place. But the promise was never fulfilled, and even with respect to the program they turned out for the 1919 election it turned out it was only a program formed on the basis of political expediency.

What had really taken place, of course, was that the people of Canada and particularly the people of the province of Ontario had become so fed up with the diet of empty excuses that had been dished out to them for years by the previous Liberal administration that they took the matter in hand. The people were faced with mounting bills for hospitalization. This imposed a heavy burden on them which they simply could not meet. The hospitals in the province of Ontario took it upon themselves to initiate a program under which the people of that province could prepay hospital bills. The idea was welcomed by the people of the province and over 49 per cent of the population subscribed to one program or another through which they could prepay hospital bills. The concept grew in popularity until a need was created for additional hospitals in the province. The demand for additional hospitals and the number of people seeking treatment reached such gigantic proportions that the province decided to take the situation in hand and do something about it. The situation was studied for two of three years and the province come up with a program which it was planned to have inaugurated in that province. They were required to do this on account of the dilatory and lackadaisical attitude on the part of the government of Mackenzie King and Mr. St. Laurent in approaching the problem.

Mr. Habel: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Small: Certainly.

Mr. Habel: Would the hon. gentleman care to remind the committee that in 1951 the Ontario provincial Liberal party included in its platform a scheme for hospital insurance and Premier Frost fought the issue and was violently opposed to it at that time.

Mr. Small: That does not alter the fact that such a scheme was included in the platform of your party in 1919 and still nothing had been done about it as late as 1953.

Mr. Habel: Why do we not have it in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Small: That has nothing to do with the policy followed by the previous Liberal administration and the constructive measures that have been introduced by the present government.

Mr. Pickersgill: This government has done nothing.

Mr. Small: May I remind hon. gentlemen that the only reason the previous Liberal administration brought this matter before the house when it did was because the premier of Ontario was going to inaugurate a hospitalization program of his own. To save your necks and in order to save face, you brought this scheme in yourselves.

Mr. Habel: Why was Premier Frost opposed to it in 1951?

Mr. Small: The fact is that it has been brought in and this action sent you scrambling in an effort to introduce a scheme which the people had been demanding for years.

Mr. Benidickson: We have not got it yet in this province. When did you bring it in?

Mr. Pickersgill: We have one in Newfoundland but not in Ontario.

Mr. Small: This was brought in because of conditions in the province of Ontario. It does not matter who brought it in. The people of Ontario determined the situation because so many of them had subscribed to Blue Cross and the Ontario hospitalization and physicians' program that it created a need for the construction of additional hospitals. The time came when it could be avoided no longer. The premier of Ontario announced that he would introduce a hospitalization scheme of his own. The previous Liberal administration had to act smartly in order to bring in a scheme to counteract it. Those are the circumstances surrounding the introduction of the hospitalization bill by the previous government.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are now saying that this government has not gone far enough or fast enough. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is to be complimented on the fact that he has undertaken to put this scheme into effect. It is quite true that we have not included tuberculosis sanatoria, hospitals for the mentally ill nor have we provided for depreciation of hospitals, but a great step forward has been taken. And let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that the Diefenbaker government inaugurated the things promised by the Prime Minister. We have not yet gone all the way but we are making progress. The Prime Minister has inaugurated many of the measures he promised to institute and has succeeded in instilling in the minds and hearts of the Canadian people a full measure of confidence in him and his government. The Canadian people feel that in their Prime Minister they have a man who is worthy of their confidence and who will do something for them. They know he will fulfil promise after promise and unlike his predecessors in office of the Liberal party he will not hold out empty promises. He has already made a splendid start toward implementing many of the programs to which he referred during the election campaign.

But hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to frustrate him. They opposed and balked him at every turn from October 1957 to January 1, 1958, until he said, "Let us go to the people and we shall see who they want". And so he went to the country and the people made their choice on March 31. The Prime Minister won their full confidence again. My hon. friends opposite say the Canadian people have no confidence or faith in the Prime Minister. He went to the people on March 31 this year and the people gave him their answer. He was returned with the largest majority there has ever been in this house.

Mr. Habel: And the people are paying for it now.

Mr. Small: And the people are fully satisfied with the performance of this government.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must remind the hon. member for Danforth not to launch into an election speech. We are considering the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for 1958-59.

Mr. Herridge: Not political warfare.

Mr. Small: I shall accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I was merely following the line of argument advanced this morning by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres in which he made the statement that the people of this country did not believe in the program being offered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He dealt with the question of old age pensions in his remarks and said we have gone too far, that the previous government had considered it unsound to increase pensions following an examination of the financial basis of the question. Like my good friend the hon. member for Cochrane did a moment ago in trying to distract me from the line of argument I was presenting, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres sought to obscure the issue and brought up the question of family allowances and said we had not done enough in that respect. But in the 1953 election we remember that the Liberals said our senior citizens had not been too well looked after but after four years the Liberal government failed to take action and still had done nothing for them. The situation pyramided because of the increased cost of living to the point where the people could stand it no longer.

The present government listened to the pleas of the people and gave them the increase they deserved and required. The previous administration offered them an insultingly paltry amount that did not begin to meet their needs. This government gave the people what they wanted with regard to old age pensions and that is why the present government is in office. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson commented on the fluctuating policy of the Liberals. The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres said they were following the right course. Yes, they followed the right course; the course that was the perfect one to result in their being relegated to sit on that side of the house. They are sitting where they are now because of the course they followed.

The present government increased old age pensions to an extent that enabled recipients of old age pensions to live in dignity. The Prime Minister promised that the pension would be increased from time to time as the requirement arose. Hon. gentlemen opposite can argue from now until doomsday about whether or not the people of Canada are satisfied with the performance of this government but they will be wasting their time because the Canadian people have absolute confidence in their Prime Minister and his government. The previous administration was so convinced of its own infallibility that it felt it was permanently entrenched on the government benches and could impose any policy it cared to on the Canadian people. That government failed to give the people what they wanted with respect to health and welfare.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must remind the hon. member again that this is not an election speech and I ask him to return to the subject of national health and welfare.

Mr. Pickersgill: Save it up for three or four years.

Mr. Small: Very well, Mr. Chairman. I believe I have covered the ground sufficiently in order to prove to the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres and the hon. member for Cochrane that the program inaugurated by this government perfectly satisfies the Canadian people. I must admit I really had no intention of speaking at this time but their remarks got me so worked up that I felt I had to rise and put them in their place.

I am perfectly satisfied with what has been done by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I am convinced he will do the right thing for the people in this country with respect to hospitalization and the other things hon. members are worrying about. I would tell them that they can trust to the honesty, fidelity and political sincerity of the Prime Minister of this country to ensure that the people will get what they require and everything they were promised. All promises will be lived up to.

I have taken a great personal interest in the question of civil defence to which reference was made by the hon. member for York Centre. In this field too the blame can be laid on the doorstep of the previous government which failed to take action. We now have a government that has taken the matter in hand. An investigation is being conducted concerning whether civil defence should be under civil authority or under the militia. What will be the result? You will find that it will be the same course and the same procedure that has been followed ever since the present Prime Minister took office, who will decide on the right policy for the people at the right time and give it to them as they want it.

Mr. Bourque: Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the minister that anything I may say today will not be directed at him personally. It is something I have to say, and I hope he will understand because if I had a wish to make it is that he remain the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the duration of the time of this government. Of course, after that it will be his affair to get elected, but if he gets elected I hope he will sit on this side of the house.

On May 20 of this year I made a speech in this house calling the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the serious inroads the drug habit was making on the youth of Canada. I also stated, based on police evidence submitted to me, the rapid spread noted in the use of goofballs, the first step to drug addiction among teenagers. Based on facts, as I have said, I asked in this house that the drugs in goofballs be placed under the narcotics act so as to facilitate the arrest and conviction of the drug pushers in order that our youth may be protected against the drug evil.

Following my speech in this house, a certain gentleman by the name of H. R. Hart, an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare, evidently gave an interview to a reporter of the Montreal Star, which interview appeared in that newspaper under date of Saturday, May 24, 1958. In this interview he stated that there was no goofball problem and therefore the statements that I had made in this house were not true. I believe this man Hart is an old employee of the department and, as such, he should have known that it is not proper for a menial employee of the department to give interviews to newspapers, thereby ignoring his minister who is supposed to answer for his department in this house.

Why this employee was so anxious to deny my statements I cannot understand. The facts I have placed on the record so far would seem to more than justify any statements I made and to show that Hart did not know what he was talking about. Hart not only denied what I had said in good faith in this house, based on sound facts, but he deliberately slandered a group of professional gentlemen without any basis whatever for his accusations. I would say that he is a very unreliable official, and he is also a dangerous man; for although he has deliberately slandered an outstanding group of professional men he has done nothing to repair the damage he did. I refer to the druggists of Outremont.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a copy of the July, 1958, issue of "Prevention", the official organ in the province of Quebec of the Quebec police and fire chiefs' association. On page 58 of this issue appears the following article in French concerning what "Prevention" called: "Un Mal Social", meaning in English "a social evil". In other words, they consider goofballs a social evil. I am sorry this is in French. There is no English version therefore I will have to read it in French.

CURSE OF DRUG SUBSTITUTES HANGS OVER OUR TEENAGERS

In an attempt to ward off a social evil which is preying on the adolescents of the province of Quebec, the federal Department of National Health and Welfare is calling upon all druggists to put an end to the sale of drug substitutes.

Last week-end alone, the R.C.M.P. received more than twenty complaints concerning adolescents who had taken those tranquillizers or barbiturates popularly known as "goofballs".

Similar representations have been received from people in several parts of the province, including several quarters in the Montreal area. Some of the representations have been made by parents who are concerned over the present conditions and the possible fate of their children if they become goofball addicts. Representations have also been made by various police departments.

It has been established beyond doubt that youngsters are getting into the habit of taking goofballs in such youth centres as colleges, high schools, recreation rooms and dance halls.

SOCIAL EVIL

An official spokesman of the Social Welfare Court told us: "This evil seems to be taking on increasingly alarming proportions. It seems to have started among our adolescents three years ago, along with the advent of 'leatherjackets' ".

With an eye on this social evil which plagues the physical and moral health of youngsters, the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare instituted judicial proceedings several weeks ago against 25 Montreal druggists who sold tranquillizers to adolescents without prescriptions. Similar proceedings were instituted against druggists in Quebec, Shawinigan, Grand-Mère, Three Rivers, Valleyfield and other parts of the province. All defendants were found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine.

The authorities take the most serious view of goofball addiction, because, with the black market in drugs at its lowest level for some years past, addicts can take goofballs as a substitute for drugs.

AT ST. VINCENT DE PAUL

Only a few days ago, two guards at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary were dismissed for having brought in goofballs for prisoners.

An inquiry was recently held in Bordeaux prison, where goofballs had been brought in at the time of arrival of two prisoners charged with hold-up. One of the men had been arrested by the detectives of the Hold-Up Squad of the Montreal Police Department, and at the time of his arrest, Detective Captain Joseph Bedard noted that the two accused "were in a total drug stupor when they were taken into custody—and were just about to rob a bank".

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY PER CENT

We are informed by the authorities that, in some areas, the number of teenagers using goofballs has gone up from 40 per cent to 250 per cent in three years.

Inspector Ovila Pelletier, chief of the Youth Welfare squad of the Montreal police, informed us that the matter is the most serious problem he has to cope with at this time. As an example he stated that last week-end a 20-year old girl was taken to Misericordia Hospital in a very critical condition after taking an overdose of goofballs at a teenage party.

The judicial proceedings taken against some druggists by the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare have brought praise from several social groups, authorities of the Social Welfare Court, young people's associations and other groups, in view of the very serious view they take of the problem.

A SCOURGE

Mr. Joseph Portius, special prosecutor in the matter for the federal Department of National Health and Welfare, stated: "We are finding it very difficult to apply the law, and if druggists do not observe the law more closely, a scourge will soon be upon us".

Mr. Joseph Saint-Onge, of the Department of National Health and Welfare, informs us that the government and the College of Pharmacy have advised all druggists of the problem, and reminded them that it is illegal to sell goofballs without a doctor's prescription.

Offenders can be fined from $500 to $5,000, and be sentenced to a prison term of three to six months.

Habitual use of goofballs by youngsters seeking new thrills can seriously harm their health, upset their nervous and digestive systems, and can even result in death.

Like narcotics, these capsules, which cost only three to six cents on the open market, fetch a much higher price on the black market.

Thus some of the drug pushers sell them at a dollar a piece.

(Text):

As I said previously, Mr. Chairman, I have just quoted from the official organ of the Quebec police and fire chiefs' association.

I have previously placed on the record a news item published in Time, the Canadian edition of March 31, 1958, entitled "Nova Scotia Goofball Crackdown". It is stated therein that a young school boy, 14 years of age, had died after absorbing goofballs. I also placed on the record another article published in the Montreal Star of March 25, 1958, under the heading "Goofballs Smuggled into Prison". On this occasion a serious mutiny occurred in the jail as a result of goofballs, causing serious and costly damage. I believe I have established that if Chief H. R. Hart of the inspection services of the Department of National Health and Welfare does not know a goofball problem exists, then it is high time he woke up. We are experiencing here a modern version of Rome burning while Nero fiddles. We have a most serious goofball problem in Canada and yet he, the chief, does not know it exists. The Montreal Star stated as follows in its edition of Saturday, May 24, 1958:

Mr. Hart conceded that there have been prosecutions of pharmacists in Outremont for illegal sales of medicinals which can only be sold on prescription, and that $100 fines were imposed, in spite of requests from the federal Department of National Health and Welfare for stiffer penalties.

This, Mr. Chairman, I absolutely deny. It is an outright lie and an unwarranted slander on the druggists of Outremont. As mayor of the city of Outremont, I am proud to be able to state in this house that never, and I repeat "never", has a druggist of the city of Outremont been arrested, brought to court or condemned for having infringed the drug act in any way. Outremont possesses the finest group of ethical druggists on the North American continent. Whatever Hart said about the Outremont druggists was, as I stated previously, an absolute lie. He deliberately slandered these professional gentlemen, and I should like to know what the minister intends to do about repairing the unwarranted damage that has been done to the reputation of these outstanding ethical druggists by the irresponsible official that Hart is.

Mr. Herridge: Owing to my position in the house over a period of 13 years, Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of this department were under consideration I used to face certain esteemed senior officials of the department. I must express my pleasure at having the opportunity, for the first time, to gaze upon the more attractive features of this department.

I want to again briefly urge the government to consider the early establishment of a complete national health insurance plan. I am not going to repeat the arguments made by previous speakers in this group today and on previous occasions. I just want to emphasize my interest in this matter and the interest of a large number of Canadians. In that connection, before passing on, I want to quote from today's Gazette in which there appears a little article entitled, "N.H.S. A Way of Life".

London, July 11—

Critics of the cradle-to-the-grave health service claim that far from being "free", it is costing plenty in taxes.

But surveys show that the man-in-the-street is solidly behind the plan.

"I'd rather pay as I go than run the risk of going broke over medical fees," is the typical reaction.

The national health service covers anything from psychiatric treatment to nose-straightening if it is recommended by a doctor.

The criterion is not "what can this patient afford?" but "what would be best for him?"

It is in that respect I want to emphasize my attitude towards this very important question. I do hope that in an early session of parliament we will see some response from the government to this demand for a complete national health insurance scheme.

Before proceeding, I also want to express my support for the representations made by this group and other members who have spoken today for further consideration of the needs of persons who have not reached 70 years of age to qualify for old age security as a matter of right. We have a long way to go in that direction. We have made some advances in recent years. A wealthy country like this can do better than it is doing at the moment to meet the needs and requirements of a large section of the elderly population. I refer to women from 60 to 70 and men from 65 to 70, who are not cared for properly under the present circumstances.

Having said that, and before proceeding, I do want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the importance of this department and the excellent work being done by the staff in Ottawa and throughout the country. I have had the opportunity of talking to civil servants and other senior persons from Great Britain who are interested in problems of national health and welfare

I hear nothing but admiration expressed for the officials of this department. I think we in Canada, generally speaking, have a right to be proud of our civil servants and I say that without any hesitation. I say it as a result of some 13 years experience in this house, which experience provided me with an opportunity to meet a good number of these people.

Having said that, I must say I was pondering this morning how, in order not to be repetitious as accused by the Globe and Mail or unnecessarily taking up the time of the house, I could do the greatest good for the greatest number in the shortest possible time during this debate. I have come to the conclusion that possibly I could do most in the few minutes I wish to take by saying that a good many people in Canada, I judge from the inquiries I have received, want to know the truth about royal queen bee jelly.

I find that this royal queen bee jelly is advertised in numerous periodicals across Canada and the United States. I have seen advertisements recommending it as a cosmetic. In fact, I met a lady today who uses it frequently and who says it is very good in that respect. I have met others who do not believe in it. I have seen it advertised as a skin food. I have seen it advertised as an antiseptic for open wounds. I have seen it advertised as a rejuvenator for old people. I find here in the Ottawa Citizen of August 20, 1958 the following:

Queen bee royal jelly capsules and royal jelly creme for wrinkles, loose and rough skin,—

That would not apply to me.

—now available Thuna Herbalist, 397 Bank, CE-2-6388.

The same advertisement is repeated in the Journal. Strangely enough, while I have made a search of the papers I can only find this type of advertisement with respect to royal jelly in the eastern periodicals and papers. Apparently it is not thought so necessary or required in western Canada. In any event, that has just been the result of my research to date. I have not with me at the present time one of the advertisements but I saw one in a United States paper advertising this royal queen bee jelly as an antiseptic for open wounds. However, I find that it is advertised widely as a rejuvenator for old age. I want to deal with this matter for a moment. This advertisement reads as follows:

Doctors report "Miracle" royal jelly may change your whole life.

I may say that this is a full page advertisement. It continues:

Here is the thrilling story of royal jelly . . . bringing new hope to countless thousands of men and women over 35 . . . by William Duval—

An amazing scientific discovery, just recently made available through the combined efforts of scientists who have, after years of testing in medical laboratories, developed this wonderful substance in combination with eight important and essential vitamins in an easy-to-take capsule form. The powers of royal jelly have been tested over many years. Each year has seen new developments, new proof, as men and women from many countries of the world have begun to feel the amazing benefits of this highly beneficial queen bee's food.

Judging from the amount that is being sold today, there must be a great many queen bees in Canada. The advertisement continues:

(The price of royal jelly was quoted as high as $5.00 per ounce in its initial introduction to the U.S.) Now, thanks to the tireless efforts of research scientists, a way has been found to make this wonder working miracle food of the queen bee available to the public in comparatively inexpensive, easy-to-take, oral capsule form.

Then to quote briefly again—it is a very long advertisement and I am not going to go into all of it—there is a paragraph which reads as follows:

Leading medical authorities in France, England and Germany attest that royal jelly contains vital nutritional factors necessary to the health and well-being of mammals. Royal jelly has been acclaimed as one of the richest natural sources of vigour and vitality.

Discoverer of insulin Dr. Frederick Banting—

This is the part to which I wish to direct attention. I wonder whether these statements are true. I am raising the matter because I want the department to go into it and to let us know the truth on this question.

The most complete scientific report on Royal Jelly was prepared under the direction of Dr. Frederick Banting, the discoverer of insulin, at the Banting Institute in Canada. Royal jelly was found to be rich in proteins and vitamins, with a particularly high concentration of pantothenic acid, the vitamin of the important B-Complex group, that has to do with increasing the life span in animals.

Then there is this statement:

"Texas A & M College has been conducting experiments on royal jelly—"

"Professor G. F. Townsend of Ontario agricultural college is resuming research on royal jelly—"

If I had known that, I would have taken the matter up under the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture as well. I just discovered it. This last paragraph to which I wish to direct attention reads as follows:

Royal Jelly may mean "new life" after 35.

Reports from Europe tell us of an 80 year old gentleman whose physical condition would make a 50 year old envious.

That is what strikes me.

The man regularly partakes of royal jelly. According to a book published in England, when Russian officials sent questionnaires to all the centenarians (people over 100 years old) in the Soviet union, more than half of them turned out to be beekeepers.

If this is true, not only is this matter of great importance to the Department of National Health and Welfare but it would be of great advantage to the Department of Agriculture and to the beekeepers in general. In any event, I am not going to read further from this advertisement, because the further I read the more I find that my years are dropping away like petals from a rose until I imagine I am returning to my budding youth and possibly going back to rompers again.

I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because these advertisements are increasing in number. I find only to a limited extent have the advertisements appeared in western papers or periodicals. This advertisement mentions a small quantity for $5 a bottle, a larger quantity for $10 and a little bit larger quantity for $15 and the full double strength size for $20 a bottle. I know people who are buying bottles of this preparation at $20 a bottle in the belief that it is doing their health a great deal of good. I do not know, nor did the people who have written to me and have inquired, whether or not this is a fraud and whether people are being taken advantage of or whether there is some scientific basis for the claims made in these advertisements that recommend it in some cases as a cosmetic, in other cases as a food for the skin, in other cases as an antiseptic for open wounds and, finally, in the majority of cases as a rejuvenator for older people. I think the public should know the truth.

I mention this matter because the administration of the Food and Drugs Act and the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act comes under a certain branch of the minister's department. I know that department does excellent work. It is concerned about the purity of drugs. It is concerned about adulteration, about poisons and things of that sort. I therefore presume that the Department of National Health and Welfare has a full knowledge of this royal jelly and possibly has thoroughly investigated it. I have raised the matter in the house, Mr. Chairman, in order that the people of Canada will have the opportunity to know the truth with respect to the advertised advantages of royal queen bee jelly.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of my remarks I want to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the manner in which he introduced his estimates. It is certainly not an easy task to follow the steps of a predecessor who was in charge of this department for nearly eleven years and who directed its activity with such a high degree of ability, devotion to duty and consideration for public welfare.

[Mr. Bourque.]

The hon. member for Essex East deserves the gratitude of the Canadian people on more than one count. He devoted his great energies as well as his wide knowledge in the field of public welfare to the establishment and improvement of social measures that affect directly all Canadians from sea to sea. I do not wish to imply that everything the Liberal government did was perfect. On the other hand, no one can deny that it was a Liberal government that laid the foundations for our present system of social security. The least we can ask of the present administration, it seems to me, is that they continue to improve upon it.

I do not wish to join the ranks of the prophets but it seems to me that everyone admits today that as we progress in other fields we must at the same time continue to extend our social legislations as our economic conditions warrant.

If the two historic parties of our country refuse to accept that fact I think, and I feel this very strongly, that our influence will be very greatly diminished in the future. Whether we like it or not and whether we share that point of view, there are those in our midst in Canada, as in other countries, who turn their capacities for demagogy to their own profit. The ideas which these people express eventually find their way into the minds of the public and unless they are taken into consideration, at least up to the limit of common sense, we could pay dearly for our refusal to treat them seriously. It is in this spirit that I do not hesitate to say that our Liberal charter for social security must be constantly reviewed to make sure that our social legislation takes into account the current needs of the Canadian people. As is stated in the latest declaration of Liberal policies, "with a basic charter which provides a solid basis for the security of all Canadians, we are now entering upon a new phase of welfare legislation." The social tragedies which still mar our society are difficult cases which cannot completely be eliminated. Nevertheless, we must never cease our efforts to remove these social problems.

For this reason I am very happy that five proivnces have agreed to participate in the national hospital insurance plan. It is, however, most regrettable that the present government decided against affording full protection to Canadians by including medical, dental and surgical expenses. If the government had included these categories it would have prevented many Canadians from suffering owing to the lack of financial means to obtain adequate treatment. I am astonished that the government did not very seriously consider the recommendations and suggestions along those lines which were made by certain Conservative members when they were on this side of the house. I would like also to express my disappointment that the province of Quebec has not yet indicated an interest in this matter. I raise these points in all sincerity and without political prejudice, because of the many thousands of Canadians in my province who are in such great need of assistance under this legislation. I am told that the authorities in Quebec are at the present time studying a plan which will be suitable for our needs, but time is passing and the citizens of Quebec are already helping through their taxes to pay for health insurance in other provinces, from which they themselves do not benefit.

I am not at all jealous of those who profit from this assistance, but I am anxious to see the money earned in my province to a certain extent benefit the people of Quebec. I am sure that all my fellow members from Quebec will have had the unfortunate experience of finding that many residents of Quebec are unable to secure hospital treatment. Unless a person is exceptionally well off, or exceptionally poor, he cannot afford the luxury of hospital treatment without mortgaging his salary for months and even years to come. This is a tragic situation which must be dealt with.

The province of Quebec should be in a position today to submit its plan to the federal government and to undertake preliminary discussions with a view to ending the uncertainty existing in many cases. I repeat that I am not making these remarks in a political partisan spirit, but simply to assist my fellow citizens of Quebec to use for their own advantage and their own welfare the money which they earn by their daily toil.

I wish to make a few suggestions to the minister concerning other social measures which I feel would be an immense service to thousands of Canadians. I think it is urgent to increase the flexibility of the definition of the words "disabled" and "invalid" when dealing with disabled persons seeking assistance. This should be done from a humanitarian point of view, having in mind that there are people who are unable to work more than a few weeks or months a year and who as a result are not able to earn even their bare subsistence. It is very difficult for them and for their families to understand that the strict application of the Disabled Persons Act prevents them from taking advantage of assistance which they need so greatly and to which, in my opinion, they are entitled. I certainly could not be accused of being in bad company in this respect for the Prime Minister, when he was on this side of the chamber, attacked this problem as recorded in Hansard of July 27, 1956 at page 6537 and page 6538:

> This act provides for dominion and provincial contributions; it provides for the payment of an allowance to those who are totally and permanently disabled as prescribed by the regulations. In my experience, this act is being altogether too rigidly administered. The joker in the act is the section that provides that the definition of total and permanent disablement shall be that definition determined by regulations.
> The situation today, in whatever cases have come to my attention, indicates that the basis of interpretation excludes many persons who should be qualified and who should receive the allowance.

If the minister makes these necessary changes he will certainly win the gratitude of those whom he would assist by such action and he would also carry out the wish expressed by the Prime Minister himself. It must be admitted that even if a person is capable of moving and able to take nourishment that does not automatically mean that he is able to earn a living.

Our blind persons' legislation should also be amended. First, the qualifying age should be lowered from 18 to 16 years. There is no excuse for not acceding to this request for these persons who are so terribly handicapped. The government stops paying family allowances when a child reaches the age of 16 and between the ages of 16 and 18, for two long years, blind persons find themselves without any assistance. I will go even further —it is not just a question of the period from age 16. The parents of blind persons need assistance from the very moment medical science establishes the blindness of a child. The educational training and care which must be given to a blind child are expensive in most cases, and it is in that difficult period that the parents are in the greatest need of government assistance.

It is true that blindness allowances are paid jointly by the federal and provincial governments, but it does not seem to me that it would be very difficult to agree on changes at a conference on social legislation.

I also suggest that it would be advisable to raise the exemption on earnings of blind persons without, however, entirely eliminating the means test. The government could, for instance, grant to blind persons the same exemption as is granted to single or married persons under the Income Tax Act. I am informed this would increase from 500 to 600 the number of persons qualifying for assistance under this legislation, and that the extra expense to the government would be a little less than $300,000.

I would also like to mention that the Canadian institute for the blind is of the opinion that we should grant special allowances to blind persons to assist them in meeting the expenses of a guide.

It does not seem to me that these are exorbitant demands, and I believe they deserve the serious and sympathetic consideration of the minister. Once again I cannot be accused of being in bad company in making this request, because the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, when speaking in this chamber on April 18, 1955, as recorded at page 2933 of Hansard for that date, is reported as having said the following words in connection with the qualifying age for blind persons:

> I cannot help thinking that the ages between 16 and 20 are ages of uncertainty. They are the time when boys and girls encounter great difficulties, and begin to wonder where they are going and what the future holds for them. Those are the years when their minds are in some state of turmoil. Surely if we can reduce the eligible age from 21 to 18 years we could reduce it to 16 and give those young persons a break, these children whose education is always more difficult and more expensive, these children who many times must travel long distances to get their education, and must be accompanied in their travels.

I offer these suggestions to the minister in the hope that he will give to these requests, which have the support of one of the most distinguished members of the government, careful consideration.

With regard to old age assistance, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could consider the possibility of making the benefits available from age 60 to widows and single women. In many cases, widows are not entitled to benefit from or cannot get the needy mothers' allowance, either because they have no children under 16, or because their husbands have left them the family house, and nothing else. The widow is then forced either to sell her house, in order to eat, or keep the house and look for a job. Many of them, however, are unable, for various reasons to take jobs. The only thing the widow can do is to sell her house, board somewhere, and in few years spend what little she has got out of property painfully acquired by her husband, and find herself in abject poverty.

While I am aware that the government has asked that a study be made of the pension scheme in force in the neighbouring republic, I should like to point out to the minister that right here in Canada very many people find it extremely hard to get by between their retirement at 65 and the age when they begin to receive the old age pension, at 70. In the first place, many companies have no pension plan, or persons retiring at 65 have not been employed long enough to be entitled to adequate pension. Since the general practice requires that all employees retire at 65, it is imperative that old age pension be payable from the age of retirement, at 65. The government is perfectly aware of the large number of pathetic cases throughout the country, and it is high time something were done to assist these people. Here again, I cannot be accused of keeping bad company for I am very happy to see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) is occupying his seat. I shall therefore now quote what the hon. member from Toronto (Broadview), who is today our distinguished Minister of Transport, was saying in this house in 1956, when dealing precisely with this same subject. As I open the official record of July 25, 1956, I see on page 6507 the following passage. I shall of course be unable to read it with the same feeling and eloquence for which our Minister of Transport is well known. This is what he said:

> —another very serious problem is that faced by workers who reach the age of 65 and are retired, and for whom no pension plan has been available to which they could contribute during their working years, and by which they could support themselves and their families when they are retired.
> Some firms have pension plans but unfortunately the great majority do not, and when most workers are retired at 65, they have only the savings which they have been able to lay aside during their working years, after meeting the many obligations which families encounter from time to time. Often a lingering illness or serious accident has reduced those savings to a point where there is little left to live on after the breadwinner of the family has retired. I think we all agree it is obvious that some better method must be found for bridging the gap between 65 and 70 years of age, and for bringing our old age pension more into line with the needs of the great majority of the people who receive it.

It is a pity that the genial Minister of Transport has not also been appointed assistant Minister of National Health and Welfare. And this grievance could be applied in several other fields. In the opposition, we used to see the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, (Mr. Green), who promised us a merchant navy; but he was appointed Minister of Public Works. The former official critic on financial matters is Minister without Portfolio today. And this is obviously the case of several other ministers.

I wish to conclude, to the great satisfaction of my hon. friends, by adding a few remarks on the unemployment assistance program set up by an act of parliament given royal assent on July 11, 1956. With the exception of Quebec, all provinces of Canada have now signed agreements with the federal government for participation in this plan. This unemployment assistance plan offers many advantages but there is one in particular which I would like to point out. I refer to assistance which should be given to people who do not or no longer receive unemployment insurance benefits either because they have not worked long enough to qualify under the act, or because they have used up the benefit period.

Considering the very difficult period we are going through, the least that can be said is that it is deplorable that so many unemployed who no longer qualiy for benefits are being deprived of assistance which is granted to thousands of other unemployed in the other provinces.

An even more difficult period is predicted for the coming winter, and I wonder how those who have not found any work before next winter will be able to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. It is precisely in hard times such as those we are going through that breadwinners really need assistance, and I cannot help repeating that they should not be deprived of an assistance granted to other Canadians and to which citizens of the province of Quebec have contributed by way of taxes. I wonder if the Minister of National Health and Welfare could not take this up with Quebec government authorities and see if it would not be possible to come to an agreement.

Finally, I merely wish to point out the regrettable fact that the government wilfully neglected to raise the amount of family allowances. When we consider that it has raised all other measures of social security, we wonder at the reasons for this regrettable omission.

In conclusion, may I repeat that all that social legislation was instituted under a Liberal government. I know that this program is not perfect but we must nevertheless recognize that the former administration did blaze the trail in the social field and open new vistas in this regard. Between May 14, 1948 when the Rt. Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King first introduced to the country his public health program, and 1957, the federal government paid over to the provinces close to $225,000,000 in national health assistance. Quebec received somewhat better than 68 millions of this amount. True, there has never been a great deal of noisy publicity in our province in this respect. I felt however that I should bring that fact to the attention of my hon. colleagues. I might add, quite objectively, that Quebec has made good use of those millions, and that we have made great strides in this field. There has been an enormous amount of work done in the field of public health in this country, though a great deal yet remains to be done.

In this regard the government must remain forever watchful since the issue is that of human resources, the most important of all resources in this country. Mr. Mackenzie King, who pioneered this system in Canada, understood the issue fully. He stated, as recorded in Hansard on May 14, 1948, as he introduced this new plan to the house:

> But of all the nation's resources, its human resources are unquestionably the most precious. The preservation in health and strength of its population is surely the best of all guarantees of the nation's power, of its progress and of its prosperity. Our greatest national asset is the health and well-being of our people.

The Liberal government has shown the way. This is a challenge to the Conservative government, at least for so long as it can maintain itself in power—

Mr. Martineau: That will be at least 50 years.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): It must widen the trail which has been broken. I am sure that nothing less is expected from the new administration both by the Liberal party and the Canadian people.

(Text):

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a very important problem for my constituency. Recently we have been told that the hospital of immigration, property of the federal government situated in my riding, is going to be closed.

I have lately received a resolution from the Quebec regional council of the Canadian federation of civil employees and also a telegram from the Quebec board of trade concerning this event. I take the liberty of reading a few of the numerous items of this resolution that will permit me to shorten my remarks:

> Whereas immigration hospital, 300 Boulevard Hamel, Quebec West, P.Q., is the only federal institution within the limits of Quebec West constituency,
> Whereas immigration hospital is still today as well as during the last years in a position to accept for general or specialized treatments some two hundred and twenty-five patients,

Whereas immigration hospital can supply the most up to date and medically advanced treatments,

Whereas the closing of immigration hospital cannot but bring disastrous effects, morally, economically, as well as socially, directly and immediately on the local and regional area and indirectly at the national level,

Whereas the closing of immigration hospital would deprive some one hundred and fifty actual employees of their jobs,

Whereas the salary paid to these one hundred and fifty employees represents the interesting sum of some four hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year,

Whereas the closing of immigration hospital would deprive our local merchants not only of the purchasing power represented by these employees but also the local purchases made by the hospital administration for the needs of the hospital itself,

Whereas these local purchases would mean to our local merchants a loss of business equal to some one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year,

Whereas the closing of immigration hospital would mean a total loss of some seven hundred thousand dollars a year to the local and regional business trade,

Whereas the closing of immigration hospital in Quebec West is not and cannot in any way be submitted and/or considered neither actually nor in any event as a logical and recommendable means to check the all-over Canada growing unemployment.

Be it resolved that:

To provide the best possible service to the welfare of Indians and Eskimos,

To maintain to the highest level of efficiency experienced services already existing and devoted to these patients of a different and special type, and this at nominal cost,

To maintain to some one hundred and fifty employees the security of a guaranteed job,

To maintain for the local industry and trade the income meant by some seven hundred thousand dollars a year,

Earnest entreaties be submitted to the minister so that:

Immigration hospital in Quebec West, P.Q., not only avoid closing but be guaranteed permanently its existence as the hospitalization and treatment center for eastern Canada Indians and Eskimos.

I inquired, Mr. Chairman, about the reasons to justify the closing of this hospital. The main reason given is the lack of patients among immigrants and Indians. I was advised that the number of patients would not be sufficient to justify the maintenance of this hospital. I want to agree with the reasons given but here I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to delay his decision and allow me to offer a few considerations and suggestions with a view to helping the settlement of this problem to the satisfaction of every one and keeping our hospital open.

The Quebec hospital of immigration is situated in my constituency the population of which comprises 85 per cent labourers and where the unemployment problem is an important one. Consequently this period of unemployment would not be a favourable time at which to execute such a decision. It would represent a loss in salaries and in all kinds of other benefits to the estimated total value of $700,000 a year. Therefore I urge the minister to take that important economical point of view into consideration.

Let me then offer the minister a few suggestions with the desire of helping him give to my constituency a favourable answer or at least to delay reaching a final decision. I suggest that the hospital of immigration could be used for the centralized treatment of all sick immigrants entering Canada through eastern harbours and of all the Indians of the numerous reserves in our eastern provinces. In doing so the minister could not consider closing the hospital but rather would have to consider enlarging it. I hope this suggestion will be taken into serious consideration but if it is impossible of realization allow me to offer the minister a further suggestion.

In Quebec city, according to a recent investigation, we require at least 1,200 additional hospital beds to satisfy our needs. The problem is particularly serious for our general practitioners and family doctors who can scarcely find beds for their patients in the general hospitals where the number of beds is insufficient for the medical staff of specialized doctors. Consequently, our family doctors often cannot be admitted to attend their patients in our hospitals and may be rather considered as ambulance drivers.

Mr. Chairman, our general practitioners, our family doctors, must still be considered the pillars of the medical profession, those who are always ready to render service day and night, seven days a week, and we should assist and encourage them to continue in the highly important medico-social role they play among our people. In the light of the present trend there is a great danger of seeing them disappear to follow their colleagues into specialized fields. The cost of medical treatment is prohibitive today because of over-specialization. Consequently I suggest to the minister that he keep open the Quebec hospital of immigration and put its unoccupied beds at the disposal of labouring peoples to facilitate their treatment by family doctors in this area.

I take pleasure in mentioning the sympathetic feelings of the premier of the province of Quebec toward family doctors and I dare to say that an agreement should be possible with our provincial government in that direction.

I am very happy to offer the Minister of National Health and Welfare my contribution as a general practitioner and a member of the government party to bring about such an agreement. In this connection we see on the one hand a lack of patients when compared with the great number of beds available and, on the other hand, there is a lack of hospital beds in comparison with the number of our patients. One should meet the other on the same ground. Is this not a peculiar position to be in when we are trying to take the first step to arrive at an agreement between the federal and Quebec provincial governments in regard to the problem of hospital insurance? We know that the realization of that goal depends upon hospital beds and it will be difficult to realize it when there is a lack of hospital beds. Therefore, I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to delay his decision to close this hospital and, in the meantime, let us hear a few words of hope and encouragement for the benefit of my constituents, the patients and the family doctors.

I would like to close my remarks by offering another suggestion to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The difficulty of reaching an agreement with the province of Quebec in so far as a hospitalization plan is concerned is brought about by a lack of hospital beds, as I said a minute ago. The number of hospital beds would be probably sufficient if the beds were occupied by those who need to be hospitalized. Consequently, a patient should not be admitted to a hospital unless the diagnosis is made by a medical practitioner, with the help of the diagnostic service. If we admit all cases then tiresome people will be admitted to the hospitals. According to investigations that have been made almost one-third of our hospital beds are occupied by people who have subscribed to Blue Cross hospital insurance plans or similar plans. The beds are occupied by people who should be treated at home by their family doctors. I suggest that at the next session of parliament we should study the possibility of amending the hospital insurance law to limit hospitalization to people who need to be hospitalized. If there is no control on the admittance of people to hospitals the cost of the hospitalization insurance plan will be fantastic. We will have to build an enormous number of hospitals to accommodate those who would like to be hospitalized for everything and nothing.

To those who are concerned about the position of Quebec in the hospital scheme may I say that I have talked to the premier of our province about the problem of hospitalization insurance under the federal plan. I believe the premier of our province is considering the possibility of Quebec entering into the federal plan. Everybody who knows our province knows that our premier is wise and prudent. As he said, no man can open a grocery store if he has nothing to put on his shelves. Therefore, we will be ready to enter the federal hospitalization insurance plan when we have beds to offer to the patients. At the present time the province of Quebec is following the policy of building hospitals, regional hospitals, in almost all of our constituencies so that very soon the premier will be in a position to enter the federal scheme. I am sure that the plan will cover not only general diseases but mental and tuberculosis diseases as well, also the infirm and the incurable. I hope that when that day comes our friends who are concerned about the intentions of our premier will be satisfied.

An hon. Member: Did you get that at one of his press conferences?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with my colleague from Lapointe in congratulating the minister on the very clear and lucid presentation which he gave us in introducing his estimates. We know from what the minister said that for the first time the estimates of this department have exceeded the $1 billion mark.

Since it is one minute to five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, will you call it five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, to leave the chair in order to allow the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former have precedence, pursuant to standing order 15, subsection 3.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: Since there are a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that they be referred for consideration of the committee of the whole in one motion?

Mr. Peters: No.

ADRIENNE MENARD HUOT

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-258, for the relief of Adrienne Menard Huot—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: For the past two days the committee on miscellaneous private bills has heard a number of divorce cases and has learned many disquieting facts.

One of these facts that has had a disquieting effect has been the use of investigators. In my opinion, the evidence disclosed in this particular divorce raises a question as to the credibility of the evidence given by private investigators in general. I should like to ask whether, in this case, private detectives were used in the obtaining of evidence?

Mr. McCleave: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. McCleave moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Before you leave the chair again, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might suggest that as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) has indicated he wishes to speak about a particular bill, if there are any other members who wish to do that we might ascertain their wishes and perhaps shorten proceedings by taking all the others in one group.

Mr. Speaker: To which bill does the hon. member desire to speak?

Mr. Biggs: I should like to speak to No. SD-289.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other bills that might be reserved from a general consideration?

Mr. McCleave: I should like to ask that Bill No. SD-293 be held out.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to ask that Bill No. SD-304 in this section be held out.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to ask that Bill No. SD-267 be held out.

Mr. Speaker: If these four bills mentioned are withheld from a general motion, is it the pleasure of the house that the remaining divorce bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole be taken in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MARTHA RATELLE HOLTKEN

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-267, for the relief of Martha Ratelle Holtken—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Drysdale: In rising to discuss this particular bill, Mr. Chairman, I do not need to emphasize the fact that the problem of divorce in parliament has been a problem for quite a length of time. In this case, I believe, the petitioner was domiciled in Montreal at the time of the marriage, and the respondent was an immigrant from Germany who had just recently come to Canada. In scanning the evidence quickly, some doubt was raised in my mind as to whether or not evidence had been given to establish the domicile of the respondent so, in a sense, the question of our jurisdiction in this particular matter is raised. I say that because apparently the respondent has not taken out Canadian citizenship papers, and so far as I can see no evidence has been adduced before the Senate committee as to his intention of staying in Canada or whether he is planning to return to Germany.

In my opinion, there has not been any evidence to establish whether or not he is actually domiciled in Canada or in Germany. With this particular doubt being raised in my mind, we are faced with the additional difficulty of whether or not parliament should be considering divorce at all in view of its already onerous schedule when we are already sitting every evening and on Saturday all day—

The Deputy Chairman: I must remind the hon. member that he must talk about Bill No. SD-267 and not about the hours of sitting.

Mr. Drysdale: When I was mentioning the hours of sitting, I was doing so in order to highlight the fact that the house has to devote its very valuable time to the discussion of matters of divorce. I feel that the divorce committee, although it is comprised of lawyers who have certain qualifications with regard to this matter, was not in a position to give full consideration to these facts that are before us. I feel that we should again consider this important question of whether or not these bills should be referred at all to parliament because—

The Deputy Chairman: I must tell the hon. member that we are discussing Bill No. SD-267, and we are not discussing the question of this procedure at all. I must ask him to confine his remarks to this bill.

Mr. Drysdale: In discussing Bill No. SD-267, may I say that unfortunately in my mind it brings out the difficulties that I am bringing forward. In Bill No. SD-267 we have the usual situation of the investigators this time going into an apartment building and finding the respondent and the woman named in certain, shall we say, unfortunate circumstances. To my own mind, without referring to this particular bill, there is a certain difficulty as to whether the situation is one that we can believe, in a sense; because to my mind it rather stretches the credulity of the average person living in the world when he considers the number of such situations.

We are faced with a situation in Canada where the divorce laws provide the basis, as in this particular case, of adultery, except in some of the other provinces such as British Columbia and the maritimes where the basis can be rape, sodomy or bestiality. Yet if we were to be honest and go behind the actual idea or the reason for the particular divorce we may find a situation where there is actual cruelty, desertion or some other equally logical sociological reason for a divorce. Yet because of the archaic ideas inflicted by the other provinces on parliament we are placed in the situation that two people desiring to get separated must say: What have we to do in order to get a divorce? The answer of the lawyer is adultery. The second question is: How are we able to get that evidence? The result then is that parliament, although it has complete flexibility as to what it could do in the matter of divorce,—because parliament can do anything—has adopted the basis of adultery. It could just as logically take as the basis perhaps the colour of the petitioner's eyes. In other words, if the petitioner's eyes were blue we could, I suggest, with the evidence placed before us and the opportunity we have to investigate it, grant a divorce just as logically. If parliament is going to adopt adultery as a basis, I would suggest that from the economic point of view I fail to see the necessity for two people who are anxious to get separated, and who are going to get separated regardless of any obstacles, having to do anything to simulate adultery if the basis suggested by parliament is adultery. In all seriousness I suggest that we should have a mimeographed form leaving blank a place for the name of the husband or wife, the age of the couple, when they were married, the marriage certificate and perhaps we could leave blank the name of the apartment, hotel or motel where the adultery was committed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We are not discussing the principle of the bill. We are discussing clause 1 which refers to a marriage between two people which it says is to be hereby dissolved and shall be henceforth null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever. I realize that there should be a little bit of latitude put I cannot allow the hon. member to discuss the principle of the whole divorce situation on a bill in the committee of the whole. I shall again have to ask him to confine his remarks to clause 1.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, I regret having deviated but I feel extremely strongly about these matters. Although we are dealing with a specific divorce bill, if the names of the parties were taken from the front page, by reading through the evidence I think you could almost fit the particular situation to any other one of the particular divorce bills being presented today. The type of evidence varies a little bit because in this situation we had a really unusual case as to the question of domicile.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I sympathize with the hon. member's thoughts perhaps, but we must stick to this particular clause in this particular bill. The principle can be discussed on second reading but not in committee of the whole. I do not want to be in the position of having to ask the hon. member to take his seat. However, I am going to ask him once more to try to confine his remarks to this particular bill.

Mr. Drysdale: Perhaps I can get at the matter in this way. If I may, I should like to ask the chairman of the divorce committee, the hon. member for Halifax, whether any attempt was made to establish exactly where the husband's domicile was in this particular case.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the evidence was that the husband was born in Germany, that he came to Canada five years ago, that he applied for Canadian citizenship and that he has lived, during all the time he has been in Canada, in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Drysdale: Is the husband still living in the province of Quebec?

Mr. McCleave: Yes; he is still living in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Drysdale: I thought that in the evidence there was some indication that the wife was not sure exactly as to the whereabouts of the husband and as to whether he intended to return to Germany.

[Mr. Drysdale.]

Mr. McCleave: If the hon. member would point out where in the evidence this point is raised I shall be glad to deal with it.

Mr. Drysdale: I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I was perusing this bill rather quickly and am unable to put my finger on the exact spot. But I wonder whether the chairman could answer, in connection with the matter of the actual problem of adultery, as to what there is in the evidence indicating that there actually was adultery or what corroboration there was on the part of the two detectives to establish this adultery?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, this was not a one-night stand by the respondent with some woman, as perhaps had been suggested in the remarks of the hon. member earlier. The evidence is that the couple were separated, that the husband had gone off to live with another woman and that the two investigators in this particular case had gone to the apartment where they were living in Montreal and verified these facts at a late hour in the evening. This is not the hotel or motel case which gives the committee its greatest difficulty. This is simply the case of a couple separating and one of them taking up another partner.

Mr. Drysdale: The only evidence of any adultery was the fact that the two people were in the same building at the same time. They were both clothed at the time, were they not?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the evidence as to the dress of the woman concerned is that she was in bed and was wearing blue and white pyjamas and that the man in question was wearing a kind of dark dressing gown and slippers when he answered the door when the two detectives knocked.

Mr. Drysdale: In your opinion, Mr. Chairman, does the fact that the woman was wearing blue and white pyjamas and that the man was wearing a dark dressing gown constitute adultery?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have been told about the birds and the bees as have the hon. member and all other hon. members of the house. The principles of law that are followed by the Senate committee and by the committee of the Commons are exactly those principles of law that are used in any court in the provinces where they have divorce jurisdiction or divorce practices. That principle is that when couples are found in a position which indicates that it is more probable that they are committing adultery than that they are not committing adultery, and you infer from the evidence that adultery has been committed. Then you can make a finding of adultery that will justify the dissolution of the marriage.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, would you not find in this particular situation, as in the majority of divorce cases you are reviewing, that apart from the fact that you are in the divorce committee the factors involved would, shall we say, stretch the credulity of a reasonable man as to the question of adultery? Does the hon. member believe that in the majority of these situations—as in this particular case—adultery was actually committed, or is the evidence of such nature that the committee feels that it is close enough so that they can give the couple a divorce, which of course is the objective? I would suggest that perhaps the question of whether or not they had blue eyes or brown hair would be equally as good from an evidentiary point of view.

Mr. McCleave: I would not think that the question of whether they had blue eyes or brown hair would have any particular bearing on the matter, but before the hon. member got to the latter part of his question he did make what I thought was a good point. That is, if you find a couple together in an apartment, motel or hotel on any occasion, you automatically assume that because one happens to be a man and the other happens to be a woman they are therefore going to commit adultery within the next few hours or have just done so before they were discovered. Then, I suppose, there is a fictional inference which has crept into the law, that if people are found living together over a period of time it may be assumed that they have committed adultery on any one occasion.

Mr. Drysdale: If the matter of the committing of adultery is fictional, then does the committee have discretion? I raised the point a moment ago as an amusing illustration of the ludicrous side of the matter when I spoke of the blue eyes and brown hair aspect but if two people do appear before the divorce committee would it not be useful to find out what is the true reason of their wish for a divorce—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but I must ask the hon. member to take his seat, because once again he is wandering all over the place.

ROBENA SARAH FLORENCE WORRELL DAY

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-289, for the relief of Robena Sarah Florence Worrell Day—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Bigg: This is the petition of Robena Sarah Florence Worrell Day for a bill of divorce from Warren Day. I did wish to speak on the principles involved, but I will confine my remarks to the evidence which came before the committee.

As has been outlined by other hon. members, the rule of evidence in divorce cases is the civic rule of probability, and I find it hard from reading the evidence in this case to be fully convinced purely on the grounds of probability that there was, in fact, adultery free of the three general requisites in matters of this kind. These requisites are firstly, that the adultery should be free of collusion; secondly, that it should be free of condonement; and, thirdly, that it should be free of connivance. I think we can rule out connivance, because I do not see any evidence or suggestion that these two persons ever got together and agreed to adultery on the part of either one. In view of the fact that the husband did not appear to defend this suit, I am led to believe that there was no connivance, because he would have appeared to try to make the case, shall we say, more binding if connivance had existed.

I think, however, that perhaps there was condonement. These two persons lived together, according to the evidence, for some 14 or 15 years, and although the wife claims the marriage was a happy one, I think the evidence shows clearly that it was not happy after the first four years. It is my opinion that moral lapses do not suddenly occur at the age of 40. If this man was continually drinking, was a night hawk and was running around with other women, I think that would have been evident years before this time. The wife is a nurse and she said that throughout her married life she had worked. It appears to me she was an independent woman and that she in fact never did make a home for this man. I would not say she drove him to drink, but he did drink from the early days of his marriage, and there is no evidence that she did anything to try to cure him of these habits. When he stayed out late at nights over a period of years, she apparently made no effort to resolve the differences between them.

The husband was a capable tradesman earning a good income, and the wife apparently never questioned him about his income except in so far as she said he drank too much. She kept on working and I would say she probably supported the home. They therefore lived apart in spirit for many years before they decided to dissolve the marriage.

For this reason I think there was probably condonement for a number of years. There is no evidence before the committee as to the moral record of the woman, which is relevant in a case of divorce, because I think it is against the wishes of the people of Canada to grant divorce where, in fact, people are living immoral lives and condoning it.

I say there is no evidence of connivance, or open connivance, but it does seem strange to me that after these years of married life action should suddenly be taken. They have a daughter 17 years of age who, incidentally, is herself married at that early age, which suggests lack of parental care. After 18 or 19 years of married life they have agreed to disagree.

They were married in New Brunswick and I would not contest the domicile in Quebec, for they have certainly lived in Quebec over a period of years, but here again the evidence is merely negative. I do not challenge the jurisdiction of the courts to try this case, because I understand that a federal statute being involved, it has been the practice to allow the Senate regardless of domicile to hear divorce cases. This is a question, of course, which would have to be decided on constitutional grounds, and perhaps some day we may have a case—and I think we should have—to clear up this problem, because, as all hon. members will realize, a divorce obtained in this manner leads to many domestic problems.

If these two people, having their divorce, were to argue about the future care of the children and the question of their support, this could not be decided in the federal courts. It has to go to the provinces but which province they should go to is a moot question. The fact that they had their divorce as residents of Quebec does not mean to say the Quebec court can necessarily solve those difficulties.

As to collusion—the intentional misleading of the court—I do not think there is evidence here to show that either of these parties intended to mislead the court by the evidence produced, but my objection to this particular case is that the evidence is very scanty, and we appear to be granting a divorce on the very minimum of evidence. I should like to have had some evidence on the living habits, the drinking habits and the moral habits of both these parties. It is difficult to argue about the right of granting these divorces unless we discuss principles, but I should like to suggest that we should be very careful about granting divorces on such slim grounds. The evidence in this case covers only some five pages, and here we are taking it upon ourselves to dissolve the most serious contract a man or a woman can enter into—that of marriage. And though it may seem a waste of the time of the committee or of the Senate or of this house, this is a very serious matter indeed to dissolve a marriage which was entered into, I trust, with all the hope and faith required to make a marriage good. I, for one, were I sitting on a bench, if this matter had been brought before me in a provincial court would, I am sure, have wished to have had more evidence on the grounds I have mentioned before I put my name to the dissolving of this contract.

Again, about condonement I should like to say that I think a woman can condone the adultery of her husband as well by keeping quiet as by giving consent. If she knows that her husband is running around with other women I think it is her duty as a wife and mother to complain on the first occasion she finds this going on. There is no need to wait until 2.30 in the morning before making some inquiries about her husband's habits. I do not think a woman could live with a man for 14 years and not know whether he was committing adultery or not. I do not know that refusing to make a man's home as pleasant as possible can be called condonement, but it is certainly driving a man to seek happiness elsewhere.

As to the evidence whether or not the respondent and the lady concerned actually committed adultery, again I am not convinced. When the private detectives came to the suite the lights were out at 11.30. They knocked on the door and they declared themselves. The husband came to the door. It was true he was barefooted, but that is not any evidence and I should like to suggest—and I think hon. members will agree with me—that the fact that he came to the door after the men rapped and said they were private detectives, and that he was caught in this compromising position, is not without significance because unless he wanted a divorce he would, I think, have got properly dressed. He had no need to come to the door and answer the call of a private detective unless he knew that by opening that door he would give his wife, for whom he probably had little regard for by then, the usual evidence necessary. So far as he was concerned he was providing the courts with the evidence with the least possible delay or trouble. I cannot believe anything else. I also doubt very much whether the lady in question was in fact there to commit adultery. There is no evidence at all that her dress was removed. She held the bed clothes up to her chin, I suggest, quite possibly to hide the fact that she was still properly dressed just as much as to indicate that she was improperly dressed. She knew that the detectives were coming in, and any young woman who would allow herself to be put into this compromising position need have no great modesty.

A man with the experience I have had in law enforcement knows that when you go into a brothel the young ladies are not at all modest. They are, in fact, generally proud of their profession. I cannot believe, from the limited evidence I have seen in this case, that there was in fact adultery, although I will say that there was certainly every opportunity for adultery. If there was anything to be gained by this man getting rid of a wife whom he had long since ceased to regard, I myself would believe that adultery had probably been committed. But the doubt arises from the fact that both the husband and the wife were anxious to be clear of each other, and this suggests to me that they either condoned adultery or that they were, in fact, behind the scenes in collusion.

The Senate committee has had a great deal of experience in these matters and they are up against a serious problem. I would not ask to have this divorce bill held up because I realize that the committee was not in this case breaking up a marriage in a true sense; we are merely allowing two people to separate legally where no real marriage has ever existed. Therefore, I would not ask to have this bill held up. I would ask, however, that we should take the greatest of care in seeing that we have the fullest evidence possible on every occasion.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. McCleave: Not yet. I am sorry to see facts brought out in this way, because this is the type of discussion which could more profitably go on in committee behind closed doors so that we do not hurt people, particularly the children involved. But several points have been raised by the hon. member and they are going to be dealt with.

First, the question of domicile. Domicile in the province of Quebec was clearly established for 16 years.

Secondly, the support of the children: the husband is paying $40 a month in respect of the child.

Thirdly, the question of the garb of the people found in the suite by the detectives. There was evidence of their underclothing being found under the bed.

I may add that the question of the home conditions and the husband's habits are clearly set forth in the evidence at the bottom of page 10 and the top of page 11.

Then, as to the matter of collusion or condonation, the fact is that the wife has signed and sworn to a petition presented to parliament which makes serious allegations, and the husband has not seen fit to come before the committee of the other place, or before the committee of this house to deny those allegations, and that is something which must properly be taken into account.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to disagree with anything said by the hon. member for Athabasca because of his experience in the fields of investigation and police work. But I believe he is requiring a standard of proof that is quite unwarranted. The circumstances in this particular case were certainly incriminating although not conclusive. We never find positive evidence in a divorce case. People do not engage in these questionable activities in public and they take due precautions to see that they do have some privacy. All we can hope for is some evidence from which we can draw a reasonable conclusion that adultery did in fact take place. I suggest there is more than sufficient evidence in this case to warrant that conclusion. I turn to the report of the committee of the other place. At page 14 I should like to read from the interrogation by Mr. Jacobs of the investigator, Mr. Brault:

> Q. I show you a photograph which has been filed as exhibit 2, can you identify the person?
> A. Mr. Warren Day.
> Q. Were you with Mr. Etheridge, on January 9, 1958, when you saw this person you have identified?

Incidentally, Mr. Etheridge was the accompanying investigator. I continue:

> A. Yes, I was on surveillance on January 9, 1958 at five o'clock with Mr. Etheridge in the vicinity of 1863 Dorchester west. At 6.15 Warren Day arrived in his car with a woman and parked his car at St. Mark street, and the woman was wearing a muskrat brown coat with kerchief, and he was wearing a brown coat and brown hat.

Warren Day is the respondent in the case. I continue:

> They went to 1863 Dorchester in apartment 11. At 7.45 Mr. Etheridge and I left the place to go on some other work, and we came back at 11.30. The car stood at the door, and the light was off, and we parked, and Mr. Etheridge and I went up, and Mr. Etheridge knocked on the door, and Mr. Warren Day opened the door, wearing gray pants only and a shirt, sport shirt open—we could see all his chest. Mr. Etheridge,—we walked in; and he asked him if he was Warren Day. He said, "Yes." He showed him the picture in our possession. He said, "That is my picture."

He admitted that which although not conclusive is suggestive at least. I continue:

And we walked to the side of the bed, and a woman was lying on the bed on the left hand side, and Mr. Etheridge asked her her name, and she said, "My name is Denise Lapointe." She was covered to the neck. Mr. Etheridge told Mr. Warren Day and her that they will both hear from his real wife's attorneys in the near future, and we left the place.

Q. How many beds were in the room?

A. One bed only.

Q. What was its condition?

A. It showed it was all disturbed, and on the left hand side where the woman was lying there was a brassiere, panty and slip; and on the other chair the man's long underwear.

There you have evidence not only of opportunity but the fact that this man was separated from his wife and had been separated from her for a long time would lead one to the conclusion that there was inclination too, and if you have a combination of opportunity and desire or inclination it is not too far-fetched, based on one's elementary acquaintance with human nature, to conclude that there was in fact adultery committed. I believe it was on that basis, which although not conclusive in my opinion is sufficient, that the other place made its report and I suggest it was perfectly in order.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, before this bill receives third reading I wish to say on behalf of this group we are pleased indeed to find that many hon. members of this house, some of them with only a short experience here, have come to the same conclusion we came to years ago that this divorce procedure should not impede the progress of other important business in this house.

I also wish to say that at the conclusion of this session and, shall I say, during the recess, hon. members of our group are going to give serious consideration to again introducing a bill for the house to consider that will have as its purpose the transplanting of the granting of divorces from parliament to the Exchequer Court of Canada which we believe is the proper place to give consideration to these serious matters.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Howard: No.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

231. Departmental administration, $1,441,494.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Carter: I had just had time, Mr. Chairman, to extend congratulations to the minister when the committee rose at five o'clock for the consideration of public and private bills. I had, I believe, observed that for the first time the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare had passed the $1 billion mark. I believe the minister gave the exact figure as $1,180,089,181 to which we must add approximately $70 million more for payments it is expected will be made under the health insurance and diagnostic services plan to those provinces who have put the plan into effect on July 1. Altogether, this makes a total expenditure of approximately $1.25 billion, actually, $1,250,089,181. The minister pointed out that 92 per cent of these expenditures are statutory, but nevertheless they are expenditures and the money must be found to cover them.

The bulk of these expenditures will be made on various forms of welfare services, health grants and so on. I should like to point out to the committee that the Department of National Health and Welfare is not the only department which spends money for these kinds of services. In our estimates we find that the Department of Veterans Affairs is also spending $291,882,345 for services which are very similar to those provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare. These services provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs cover health grants, health services, diagnostic services, welfare payments and pensions, which are very similar to those covered by the Department of National Health and Welfare. If we add the expenditures of these two departments together, we get approximately $1.5 billion which this federal government is spending on these kinds of services, services which we usually include within the term social security.

If we look at our estimates for national defence, we find that we are spending approximately $1.68 billion for national defence. Our expenditures for social security, therefore, are approximately equal to our expenditures for national security. There has been a great deal of concern expressed in various parts of Canada, and in the committee on estimates, as to the capacity of the Canadian economy to support this burden. I think if it is logical to express concern over the burden of national defence, it is equally logical to express concern over the burden of social security, which is approximately equal. Next year, when the full cost of health insurance and diagnostic services is felt, there will be very little difference between what we spend on social security and what we spend on national defence.

One of the large items under the Department of National Health and Welfare is the expenditure on old age assistance. Yesterday the minister, in replying to a question which I had on the order paper, supplied me with information which showed that from July, 1957, to July, 1958 inclusive the payments made under the old age assistance plan exceeded the revenue by $154,098,080. Now, if the royal jelly which our good friend from Kootenay West spoke about this afternoon becomes available to our old age pensioners and they get rejuvenated from 70 years down to 50 years, we are going to be faced with a financing problem of great magnitude to keep this fund solvent. The revenues for this old age security plan come from taxes which have been allocated for that special purpose, two per cent of the corporation tax, two per cent of the sales tax and two per cent of the income tax up to a maximum of $60. However, these revenues have not been sufficient to keep this fund solvent in times of recession. When the corporation taxes and sales taxes decline, the gap between revenue and payments is bound to widen. Some other method, therefore, must be found to keep this fund solvent.

In order to keep this fund solvent now the government has made loans. This cannot be continued indefinitely and the time is not far distant when some other method will have to be found to finance these old age payments. I should like to ask the minister what consideration is being given to providing the necessary funds in order to keep this fund solvent. I should like to suggest to him that this would be a first-rate time to consider the development of a national pension plan, a plan which would be developed through the co-operation of government labour and industry as well as other interested agencies, a plan which would be put on a sound financial basis and which would provide pensions based on contributions. These pensions could be transferred from one occupation to another or from one part of the country to another. I know there is a Professor Clark who is making a study of the old age pension plans which obtain in the United States, but that is not the same thing as I understand it. I think we must revise our thinking on the ways and means of keeping this fund solvent. The present is a very good time in which to set up the necessary machinery to get all the information we require and to see what can be done to bring in a national pension plan.

I should also like to say a few words about the disability pensions. I am going to be brief because they were covered fairly well this afternoon by my colleague the hon. member for Lapointe. However, there is a problem in connection with the administration of these pensions. There are three factors which must be taken into account. The first factor revolves around the interpretation of the term "totally and permanently disabled". That term is subject to a wide variety of opinions and interpretations which vary from board to board and from province to province. Another factor is the financial position of the province which is administering these pensions. As I understand it, the federal government pays only half and the other half must come out of the provincial treasury. If the province is having a difficult time financially and must retrench, then of course they are going to be restricted in the amount of money actually which can be allocated to these disability pensions; and that consideration in turn will restrict the number of people who can receive them.

I think the administration of these disability pensions should be taken out of the hands of the provincial government and should be administered completely by the federal government. I admit that whatever we do it cannot be perfect. We shall always have borderline cases from which we can never escape. Nevertheless, I think more can be done than has been done up until now to set up criteria which will enable uniform administration of these pensions. Otherwise we are going to be faced with a situation where a person who lives in one province might qualify for a disability pension whereas a person with exactly the same disability and living in another province cannot do so. I think that is something that all hon. members in this house would wish to avoid.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I should like to put to the minister two questions which I hope he will answer, in addition to those which I have already posed. This morning the minister mentioned a sum of money—I did not quite catch it as he read it out—or the expenditure which has been provided for in connection with unemployment assistance payments; I refer to those to able-bodied persons owing to the removal of the floor. When he replies, I should like the minister to tell us just how much money has been spent on that item up until now and how the money has been distributed among the ten provinces of Canada.

The minister also mentioned his attendance at the world health organization. We were very happy to learn that Canada is taking such a great interest and playing such an important part in the great work of this organization. The minister told us that the budget which had been prepared for the work of the world health organization was, I believe, $15 million. When he replies I should be glad if he would tell us just how much Canada has contributed to that $15 million budget.

Mr. Peters: There are only a few comments I should like to make. One of them is on a matter which has been discussed by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I refer to the matter of disability pensions. In the province of Ontario we have a good deal of difficulty in the administration of these pensions and the requirements that must be met before pension can be established. In Ontario it became an act from which very few people ever received any benefit. It is generally understood that in order to receive the disability pension in the province of Ontario you must be permanently and totally disabled. If you have one foot you can put on the floor, you are not classed as being permanently and totally disabled.

The other day a lady who is connected with welfare work in my riding brought to my attention the names of three young girls who are now graduated from school. One is an epileptic, another is a "polio" victim and the third is similarly disabled. These girls are not able to work. In my opinion, they always will be disabled and quite badly so. They are able to look after themselves; therefore they do not come under this disability pension. In a country as rich as Canada I think consideration can be given to persons of this type. They are not completely helpless. In this case two of the girls are quite capable of doing certain types of work, but those types of work are normally not available in the area in which they live. If they go some place else there is going to be the matter of looking after them for at least some time so far as money for living and becoming established is concerned. I think much more can be done in this field of helping the disabled people across Canada, particularly the young people who have no other means of support and who can look forward to 30 years, 40 years or 50 years of dependence on their parents or on welfare organizations for a livelihood. I think Canada is quite capable of financing a much better deal for disabled persons.

Another problem is in connection with those people 40 years or 50 years old—yes, and some much younger—who are afflicted with a heart ailment which leaves them, as far as investigators are concerned, in a very healthy condition and yet medical advice is to the effect that they are permanently and totally disabled. In many cases they are able to walk down town on good days and to get around and they look quite healthy but from a medical point of view they are completely disabled. In most cases these people do not meet the requirements laid down by the province of Ontario in the administration of this act. I think the requirements by the federal government, in the joint negotiations they hold in setting up the requirements for this act, could be made much more lenient so that more of the people who are deserving cases could see some future for themselves without depending strictly on welfare agencies.

Another problem that has been mentioned by many others—and I do not want to belabour the point—is the fact that we have not yet decided that we are going to keep our social security on a standard in keeping with today's cost of living. The family allowance, the old age pension, the disabled persons pension and the other social security measures that we enjoy in Canada I do not believe were granted before an election or with that event in view. They were developed over many years and have been granted as a fair and reasonable amount in each case. When the family allowance was introduced it was worth twice as much as it is today, and we have not seen fit to tie in our social security measures with the cost of living so that we may maintain the standard of living originally intended, which would be the only way in which the Canadian citizens could receive the benefits which the legislation was originally expected to provide.

The family allowance is limited to children under the age of 16 years, but all parents are well aware of the fact that rather than being able to do without this assistance when their children reach this age, more money is necessary at that time in order to provide for higher education. I think this government would be well advised to introduce legislation to extend family allowances for the benefit of those parents who wish to send their children to high school, even up to the age of 21 years, if they desire to continue their education. Such a measure would do much to alleviate the problems with which many families are faced when their children reach the age 16 or 17. They have to provide them with suitable clothing and all the other things which are necessary to ensure a background and environment in keeping with a desired standard of living.

I would also recommend that more research work be done by the department into such matters as industrial diseases. I mentioned this matter last year and I would emphasize the importance of this question, particularly in so far as mines are concerned. I have in mind those mines containing silica dust and now the mines in the new field of uranium. International organizations are finding that close proximity to uranium ore is causing genetic problems which we did not even realize existed a few years ago. I believe the government has an obligation to carry out research work and to implement recommendations along the lines suggested as a result of investigations. Precautions should be taken, particularly in the case of those companies which have so far not been too co-operative with respect to the welfare of their workers.

In the field of cancer, I think the department should spend a great deal more money on research. We read in the newspapers and in the medical journals that many investigators in this field believe they are now on the verge of solving some of the problems connected with this disease. The scientists are undertaking experiments which are disclosing developments believed to have significant effects upon cancer. In Canada scientists have developed certain protections, particularly at the research institute in Toronto. If more money and assistance could be made available to research scientists in this field by the federal government it is quite possible that this problem might be solved as were the problems of tuberculosis and other diseases. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the government will put its shoulder to the wheel in this respect.

One other matter I would like to raise at this time is a matter which I do not believe should come under the jurisdiction of this department, and that is the matter of civil defence. Unless there are some significant findings as a result of the investigations which I understand are now taking place, I would strongly recommend that the minister transfer the administration with respect to civil defence to the Department of National Defence. Adequate instruction has not been given to the Canadian people with respect to such matters as basic first aid training which will be vital in case of disaster. In the case of first aid training, of course, jurisdiction should remain with the Department of National Health and Welfare, and it will do so, but with respect to the other aspects of civil defence I feel that the administration should be returned to the Department of National Defence, particularly having regard to implications in the event of an atomic attack. The majority of the Canadian people are completely unaware of even the basic requirements for their protection in the case of atomic warfare. The government has seen fit in recent weeks to spend huge sums of money to popularize the idea of the conversion of one type of bond for another, but I believe that this money could be spent in a way more beneficial to our people if we were to give them the basic training for protection against radiation.

If we consider it important to consider such things as moving our national capital from one place to another, then surely we should consider the threat of this type of warfare. As long as this threat is with us we have an obligation to at least give the Canadian people the rudiments of first aid training so that they may have some chance of protecting themselves in an emergency.

Mr. Phillips: I wish to say a few words in this debate, both in a desire to obtain some information and to point out a few difficulties which I believe will arise in connection with our national hospital insurance plan. I very much regret that the province of Prince Edward Island seems to have lost all interest in health insurance, and I would like to inquire of the minister whether he has recently received any communication from the government of my province.

I would also like to draw the attention of the house to a condition which will affect many of our citizens after January 1, 1959, and that is with regard to those people who are carrying private hospitalization schemes as a supplement to provincial hospital plans. Perhaps we could take Ontario as an example. The Ontario plan provides public ward hospitalization, nursing care, operating room, X-ray, physiotherapy, laboratory and also covers most drugs, but many people find the idea of admission to a public ward rather disturbing, and they therefore attempt to cover the difference in cost by carrying an insurance policy.

As I understand it, if a semi-private patient or a private patient, when this plan comes into effect, goes into hospital, and if by reason of a shortage of beds he has to go into a public ward, he will receive no compensation whatever from his insurance company. Before the Ontario plan was in operation the difference between the public ward cost and private or semi-private ward cost was paid to the patient by the insurance company. For example, let us say a patient had an insurance policy providing $15 a day. If the patient was in a ward which cost $10 a day he would receive the difference between the $10 and the $15 from the insurance company. That is only fair, and it is hard to understand how anyone who has taken out these insurance policies finds that he will receive nothing from the insurance company despite the fact that he has paid the insurance premium could feel that his foresight had been justified.

Another point with regard to health insurance is that the rates vary from hospital to hospital within a province. A number of insurance companies have had plans paying a stated sum per day regardless of the hospital rate. This, I understand, must be discontinued after January 1, as the amount will be cut to the average between ward and semi-private and private rooms, that is, the provincial average, and it appears that some of the insurance companies are going out of this type of business. I do not think the government when it introduced national health insurance had the idea of forcing these insurance companies out of the business.

Several members have already pointed out that the hospital insurance scheme will result in an increased demand for hospital beds. In addition to that, we in Canada have approximately six million people under the age of 20, and a rapidly increasing population. The increased grants for hospital and construction, especially those for chronic care, are a step in the right direction, and I suggest to the minister that he keep a sharp eye on hospital construction costs with the idea that if they increased very much more a further increase will be required.

One matter which is a source of irritation to various hospital boards is the delay when an application is made for a construction grant. One small hospital in my constituency has had an application before the provincial government for almost two years and no action has been taken on it. After they have obtained approval from the provincial government they must obtain federal approval and I should like to suggest to the minister that a joint committee of the provincial and federal governments be set up to try to eliminate these delays.

The cost of hospital insurance for a full year will not be known for some time. I have fears that the final cost will be a bit of a financial shock to the taxpayers, and in order to keep the cost in line with reality it may be advisable to have a patient pay a small sum on admission, say $25 or the first three days toward the cost of hospitalization. This would prevent unnecessary admissions to hospital and would reduce the demand for hospital beds. In addition it would also be of great assistance to the practising physician as he would not be subject to undue pressure from patients who desire hospital treatment in cases where they could probably be treated equally well at home.

(Translation):

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, near though we are to the end of the session, with each member preparing to return to his constituency, I cannot miss this opportunity of expressing a few heartfelt views on civil defence and family allowances, while we are on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Regarding civil defence, Mr. Chairman, I know you will understand my placing special emphasis on the requirements of the Montrealers. As councillor for the city of Montreal—Canada's metropolis—I was in a first-hand position to witness what was done in this field by those then responsible, particularly from 1950 to 1954, when Brigadier Guy Gauvreau was co-ordinator.

As we all know, the world is going through frantic and distracting times as a result of scientific developments which give us Russian sputnik one day, an American rocket another day and today, they are talking of conquering the moon. What lies in store for us tomorrow? Heaven only knows. That is why today government departments must, at all costs, join and work with a common aim, so as to bring home to each and every Canadian the necessity of his making sacrifices in order to organize civil defence, forestall disaster, and save as many human lives as possible—for the enemy is looking for modern methods to annihilate us.

Montreal, with a population of over a million and a half, is entitled to federal aid to supplement its contribution. As I was saying a few minutes ago, some progress has already been made in this direction; in fact, Montreal municipal authorities placed a $100,000 fund at the disposal of the civil defence committee.

Unfortunately indeed, Mr. Chairman, I say this pointedly, between 1944 and 1957 a new administration took over in Montreal and deliberately abolished the civil defence committee under the pretense that $100,000 was not enough for a city like Montreal. I admit it was not very much but at least something was being done, citizens were learning how to evacuate homes, factories or public buildings in an orderly way and without panic.

The most simple definition of civil defence, which some find complicated, was given to us by Lieutenant R. Forand, co-ordinator for the city of Granby, in a talk he gave on February 8, 1954. Here is what he said about it: "Civil defence is the means whereby lives and property are safeguarded under atomic, biological or other attacks".

As you know, Mr. Chairman, Montreal is situated on an island. I therefore need not tell you that it would be a very attractive target for enemy air forces and you can imagine what would happen if Montrealers were not prepared to defend themselves, and what would be the responsibility of the federal government who would not have supplied Montreal citizens with the necessary and appropriate means of protection.

At the present time, the problem facing Montreal is the evacuation of the island. Present bridges are inadequate and this can easily be realized on week-ends when part of the population takes to the country to spend the two days of the week-end or to visit relatives. Bridges are crowded and you can only cross them by dint of patience, as traffic crawls along, when it is not altogether at a standstill.

Since 1957 Montreal has had an administration which has in mind a revival of a civil defence organization. Indeed, the appointment of a co-ordinator for the metropolis will no doubt be made soon.

Scientific developments brought about by nuclear warfare are such that the government should give civil defence an importance equal to that of national defence. I feel that if we are right in spending more than half of our national income for national defence, the government would certainly be well advised to spend in this regard more than the $7 million appearing in the estimates under the heading of civil defence.

A conference of municipalities will be held in the near future. This should provide the government with a fine opportunity to lay a civil defence plan before the municipalities. I must say at this point, speaking as a municipal councillor, that the minister may expect from the present mayor of Montreal co-operation of a kind which the former administration failed to receive from his predecessor.

This is a national program which should be financed by the federal government.

That is why I submit that all expenses incurred by the municipalities in the implementation of a civil defence plan, should be met entirely by the federal government.

Before passing on to the next subject, Mr. Chairman, may I express a few thoughts on family allowances.

I would not like to miss this opportunity of suggesting once more to the government, as I have already done more than once during the present session, the possibility of increasing the amount of the family allowances. The minister knows that it was the Liberal government which instituted family allowances in 1945 and that these were raised on various occasions since that time, the more recent increase having been made, in fact, in the 1957 budget. During the last campaign, the leader of the opposition had undertaken to extend payment of family allowances to children still attending school until such time as they have reached the age of 18.

It is the least that we could do for our families and I would like to ask the minister, in his comments, to tell us what the government intends to do about increasing family allowances.

We must bear in mind that the cost of living has increased considerably since June 1957, especially for the three items of food, clothing and housing.

As there is unemployment in my constituency, a raise in family allowances is absolutely necessary. It would moreover be most welcome by all the citizens of Canada.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has noted my suggestions and that he will at once take them into consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say a few words in this debate especially regarding the hospitalization insurance plan. The minister may well remember that on June 19 I asked him a question as reported at page 1432 of Hansard at which time the following exchange took place between the minister and me:

Mr. Denis: With respect to Quebec, can the minister say whether the province of Quebec has said no, yes or maybe? I know that when there was a Liberal government the premier of Quebec said no, but there was an election and the Tory party came into power. We have seen reports in the newspapers that maybe he will enter into an agreement. I saw in the newspapers recently that he was supposed to be preparing some kind of agreement to submit to the federal government. As the legislation before us will come into effect on July 1, does the minister not think that the premier of Quebec is rather late in trying to take advantage of this wonderful legislation?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I do not think it is for me to say what I think. All I can announce is that there has been no indication from the province of Quebec as to what their intentions may be.

[Mr. Loiselle.]

Mr. Denis: There was no letter, no telephone call, no correspondence between the premier of Quebec and the federal government?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No indication.

It seems that the situation is the same two months after that question was put in the House of Commons. I observe that yesterday the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont asked a similar question. I have in my hand Hansard of yesterday's date, at page 3861 of which the following exchange occurred between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont:

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare before we reach his estimates. Would the minister tell us if he has received recently an indication from the government of the province of Quebec as to their intention to join in the hospitalization insurance scheme?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the minister tell us if he has recently contacted the authorities of the province of Quebec, whether by telephone or telegram, to that effect?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Exactly.

Mr. Denis: It seems very clear there is no degree of relationship between the province of Quebec and the federal government.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, but there is a considerable amount of repetition over there. I have heard that statement before this afternoon.

Mr. Denis: Yes, but I think it is good to repeat that the federal government exists for the ten provinces, not only for nine. I find it very strange that with respect to legislation of this importance which will be helpful to every Canadian nothing has been done on the part of the present government to get in contact with the province of Quebec.

Mr. Ricard: What did you do in your time?

Mr. Denis: Always late, as the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot used to say.

Mr. Ricard: What did you do?

Mr. Denis: We knew something about the premier of Quebec and we knew about the Quebecers who are here tonight. The hon. member knows that every time good legislation is introduced by the federal government the provincial government of Quebec is always in the rear and the same thing is happening today as far as the hospitalization insurance scheme is concerned. The same situation was illustrated last week when we had before us legislation of which Quebec could not take advantage with respect to the free gift tax for husbands and wives. On two or three occasions since the present government came to office it has introduced measures of which Quebec could not take advantage. It happens every time nice legislation is introduced.

Mr. Ricard: How long did we wait for old age pensions?

Mr. Denis: The previous administration was always in contact with the premier of the province of Quebec.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member for St. Denis to come back to national health and welfare.

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I regret that I was interrupted by my friend the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I shall gladly abide by your ruling.

Mr. Ricard: That is what I wanted.

Mr. Denis: En résumé, I simply attempted to draw some kind of comparison. As you know, there are many comparisons we could make tonight. But as the Chairman has said, I should return to the subject under discussion and I will accept his ruling because he is usually right. I would point out, however, that the hon. member for Quebec West argued about this very same thing this afternoon. I rather liked the way he talked. If I understood him correctly he was serving as sort of a porte-parole from Quebec in order to tell the minister they were short of hospital beds but that they were prepared to accept his will. If the hon. member for Quebec West thinks it is a good way of running a province to be always late and to be not prepared to take advantage of good legislation, I regret I cannot agree with him. Mind you, this legislation was passed by the former Liberal government and I congratulate the minister for not doing away with it.

Mr. Ricard: But it was brought into force by the Conservative government.

Mr. Denis: It is easy to blame the Quebec provincial government for not being in touch with the federal government, but I wonder if the minister is not himself to blame for not doing anything about it. He appears to think the premier of that province does not exist. He treats him as a stranger. There has been no letter, no exchange of correspondence, no telegram. Nothing has been done. The result is that in the province of Quebec we pay taxes and do not get the advantage of the legislation, while the other provinces take advantage of it. The premier of Quebec, in the name of autonomy, is causing us to lose millions of dollars. We are going to pay for it and the province of Ontario and the other provinces will benefit from it.

Mr. Ricard: Did Quebec not get $19 million last year?

Mr. Denis: The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot gives me an idea. I remind him that the deputy minister of Quebec, Dr. Gregoire, said that 80 per cent of the population of Quebec could not take advantage of the hospitals in Quebec because they were too expensive and that there were only two types of people—

Mr. Ricard: It is no different from the other provinces.

Mr. Denis: —who could take advantage of them, namely those who had nothing and the rich. In the case of those who have nothing, their expenses are paid by the province and, of course, the ones who have money pay their own way.

According to the hon. member for Quebec West, the province is short of hospital beds and therefore cannot take advantage of this legislation. If the province is short of hospital beds it is because the hospitals are already full. If we take advantage of this legislation those who are already in the hospitals will also take advantage of it and besides that the hon. member's taxes will be used in his own province as well as in the province of Ontario. Therefore, I suggest to the minister that if they have no agreement or no contact with Quebec, let them put money aside as the former government did with respect to university grants. Before long we may have a new government in Quebec who will take charge of the province and accept the grants.

Mr. Kucherepa: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to say a few words on this very vitally important matter. First of all, I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the way he has directed this very important department of our government. I believe at the present time this department is the second highest spending department in the dominion, being superseded in this respect only by the Department of National Defence.

This department, Mr. Chairman, which is responsible for the welfare of so many of our citizens today, particularly the senior citizens of this country and the children, is now undertaking very great responsibility in the field of hospitalization. This is a major change which is taking place in our daily lives. Although the previous Liberal administration worked many years on this legislation it did not reach the point where the federal government became actively engaged in this field of endeavour. It was left for a Conservative government to expedite and to achieve this great social measure. In that regard the present minister has made a very important contribution, even toward advancing the effective date during this present session.

It is indeed regrettable that some members of the Liberal party saw fit to criticize this scheme which they themselves were promising for so many years—since 1919, I think—forgetting that the Liberals themselves were the architects of the present legislation and when they condemn it they merely add another nail to the coffin of the previous Liberal government and its inactivity and indifference toward this problem. The problem which the previous speaker mentioned is not a matter which has emanated from anything that has taken place in recent days; it is the result of something which was put on the statute books of this country by the previous Liberal administration, and the hon. member must realize that it was brought about by that regime.

As I said before, this is an excursion upon a new and untravelled road for the Canadian people. In the past there has been a state of affairs where people were content to obtain medical care in their own homes or by visiting their doctor's offices. Now the trend will be toward obtaining medical services in hospitals. I believe this is an important point because, in the past, many insurance companies, if not all, did not recognize the principle of hospitalization for investigation, a procedure which was undoubtedly responsible for keeping insurance premiums down to their present levels, although I must say that the medical profession was not altogether happy with this policy because undoubtedly there were many patients who required hospitalization for the purpose of finally and entirely ruling out the possibility of existing serious disease.

It is admitted that the hospital bed situation is not all that it could be, and just what the effect of including this extra service, this so-called investigation service, will have on the hospital facilities and on the insurance premiums only time will tell. Undoubtedly, there will be a great demand for the construction of more hospital facilities. These are problems which will become evident as time goes on and as the scheme is developed more fully. I believe the government is following a wise course in this regard, having in mind that some of the provinces have not as yet chosen to participate in the plan.

The Ontario scheme, which will become effective on January 1, 1959, includes all the hospital services necessary for the treatment of an insured person who is admitted to hospital as an in-patient or, in an emergency.

I was very pleased to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Jasper-Edson who touched on some vital problems dealing with the internal difficulties which face us in the hospitals across the country and to which I believe we must pay some attention lest the scheme should not function properly.

There is something else which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and of the committee, a matter which has given me some concern in the past. Over the years I have seen hospitals enlarged by additions of hundreds of beds to existing structures. Those buildings are located in what we might describe as the centrally populated areas of urban centres or they might be described in the field of civil defence as target areas. Although we were pleased with the developments in the last few days in international affairs, nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I feel that we should undertake a long-range planning policy of decentralization of our hospital facilities, especially in our larger urban areas.

In the future we should take into account the problems of modern living. Yesterday we heard of plans being formulated for the removal of our government from this centre at a time when developments might take place which would necessitate that. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this principle applies just as much to the vital service of hospitalization which may mean the difference of life or death for many of our Canadian citizens. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the possibility of looking into this matter of whether we can in some way or another control the location of those hospital facilities in the future, having in mind that in the older cities of this country where there is a large development of hospital buildings we find that industrialization has taken place in those areas which might be construed as so-called target areas in the event of any future disaster.

I should also like to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the problem which faces our people in the northern part of the country, especially the Eskimos. From what I can ascertain, the main problem in those areas which are so sparsely populated is to provide basic living conditions suitable to proper development of health measures. Our department does spend considerable funds in those areas. However, the results do not seem to be in keeping with the expenditures. It seems to me the basic problem here is to provide shelter for these people, especially for the children. The weather conditions there are severe, and thus housing becomes a major consideration, if we are to attain those standards which are desirable, and which have indeed been obtained in other countries with a similar climate.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words regarding the contribution which Canada is making to the world health organization. I was gratified to hear the minister's statement in this regard. I believe that in this field of international relations we are not only making marvellous strides but we are also creating the kind of understanding which will bring about greater respect between the various countries of the world.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to take a few minutes of the committee's time, Mr. Chairman, to bring to the attention of the minister a matter of extreme importance. I refer to the Disabled Persons Act. The administration of this act in the different provinces has rather confused me, especially in the province of Nova Scotia. It has been said that the regulations pertaining to this act are the same in all provinces, but from what I have seen and the information I have obtained, I feel this is incorrect. It appears that each province has its own idea of the definition of a permanently disabled person. It is quite true that there possibly would be some differences in the administration of the act because, as I understand it, each province has its own medical board which may interpret the clauses of the act in a different manner.

It seems that in some cases in the province of Nova Scotia the definition of permanently and totally disabled means that the individual concerned must be helpless or, in other words, practically a living log. A case in point comes to my mind at the moment. There was a person in my constituency who suffered a paralytic stroke about a year ago. He was confined to the hospital for a period of months, but eventually was discharged and returned to his home. There was not anything further that could be done for him so far as hospitalization or medication was concerned. The man was paralysed all down one side of his body, and his other arm was affected to the extent that he had to be fed. He was confined to bed in his own home. However, in spite of his condition, his application for a disabled person's pension was rejected. I still have his file, but it will not be necessary to give it any further consideration because unfortunately this poor man passed away a few weeks ago.

Just what is a disabled person? I have another case of a young man, 34 years of age, who suffered a severe accident with his father's mowing machine when he was four years old. He is unable to walk. Today he is able to crawl around with iron straps on his legs in order to support his ankles. The extent of his capability is that if he is carried out to the fields he can sit down and pull some weeds with his hands. This man has tried for two years to obtain a disabled person's pension without success, despite his tragic condition.

I do not wish to take up too much of the committee's time, but I should like to relate another very sad case. This concerns a man I have known since we were boys together. His left leg and arm have been withered since birth, so he has a difficult time in getting around. This is bad enough, but he is also subject to epileptic fits and has, on occasion, been found on the streets suffering from these fits. He has not any parents living and is surviving upon what sympathetic friends have been able to give him. His application for a disabled person's pension has been rejected on several occasions.

Since the cost of this pension is borne jointly by the provincial and federal governments, I feel that the instances which I have just related should be brought to the attention of the committee. I should like to ask the minister if it would not be possible to have a conference of provincial medical boards and his department with a view to having this act more uniformly and more leniently administered. In my opinion the act is interpreted too stringently in Nova Scotia so far as the definition of permanently and totally disabled is concerned. I think I have illustrated this fact in a small way. In closing, I would appeal to the minister for a relaxation of the regulations governing this act so that many people in these unfortunate circumstances such as I have mentioned would benefit thereby.

Mr. Rouleau: I want to say only a few words to bring to the attention of the committee, and of the minister in particular, the work done by the society for emotionally disturbed children. According to a pamphlet published by the society, until quite recently many of these children were considered mentally retarded because of their lack of response to people. However, medical science now diagnoses these children as suffering from a psychosis.

The society for emotionally disturbed children was formed in 1956 in Montreal by a small group of parents of such children. It has since grown to include many persons who have no personal interest but who do recognize that without the aid of public authorities these children would be doomed to a tragic fate. The society needs more funds to help fulfil its objectives. There are no quick cures or methods to help emotionally disturbed children. They usually require long term therapeutic treatment in a private environment. In order to provide these conditions special schools and specially trained personnel are needed, both of which are difficult to obtain. Because of the nature of this illness many of the children cannot fit into classes in the public schools and are, therefore, left without any schooling whatever.

I submit that the Department of National Health and Welfare should find the means to give financial support to this work of the society for emotionally disturbed children. I am sure the minister will take this request into consideration, and in the name of the society and the children involved I thank him.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I should like first of all, Mr. Chairman, to thank the many members who have spoken this afternoon and this evening for their helpful ideas and their kind words. I will admit that sometimes I have received congratulations, while at other times there have been differences of opinion expressed. I hope to answer satisfactorily those questions which have been asked of me, and I trust I do not answer them in too political a manner. If, when I am finished, I seem to have missed certain questions which members may have asked, I can only apologize for that. I trust that they will bring them up on the items to which they apply. I do feel, however, that there has been a good study of the department's estimates this afternoon. This shows that hon. members are interested in the department, and for that I am grateful.

May I say, first of all, that I am going to leave unanswered those questions having to do with civil defence until that item comes before us. I think I mentioned at the start of my remarks this morning that I did have a short statement to make on civil defence when that item is reached. As a consequence, I would prefer to get to that point before discussing civil defence any further, and at that time I will endeavour to answer the questions which were asked.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres —those two in particular—mentioned the fact that the annual report for my department had as yet not been tabled. That is quite true. That delay is accounted for by the simple fact that there are two unavoidable and unexpected vacancies on the senior staff of the information services division of my department. I fully expect that this report will be tabled within two or three weeks. It is my regret that it has not been done thus far, I might add that there were some difficulties also in having the report printed.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River spoke about Salk vaccine. I would point out that the government is now prepared to extend financial assistance in the provision of Salk vaccine to adults. As in the past, federal contributions would amount to one-half the cost of the vaccine, the remainder to be met by the province. Incidentally, I may say I have noticed a couple of newspaper reports recently which would seem to indicate that the provinces were possibly footing the full cost of this vaccine. That is not quite so. The government is sharing this cost 50-50. Since information on the number of children vaccinated is incomplete, particularly with respect to some of the larger provinces, it is difficult to specify a firm figure of those vaccinated. It is estimated, however, that more than 5,200,000 persons have received at least one or more doses of poliomyelitis vaccine by June 1, 1958. I think that is rather commendable.

The hon. member also inquired about cancer research. I would make a short reply in this respect. Prior to 1948-49 fundamental research on cancer was limited in Canada owing to lack of facilities, qualified research personnel and assured long term support. Although the national research council allocated grants for short term projects, applications received were not commensurate to the extent of the problem. I should like to point out that in 1957-58, 75 grants and 16 research fellowships were awarded totalling $630,000. For the current fiscal year 83 grants and 17 fellowships and associates have been awarded totalling some $820,000.

Hospital insurance has been in many members' thinking this afternoon and this evening. I think that during the discussion of amendments to the act some weeks ago this subject was covered fairly fully. I would express again my opinion as to the definite situation that exists. If all the provinces come in there will be ten different, distinct hospital schemes. As long as these schemes come within the context of the federal act, nothing else is required. As to the situation with regard to T.B. and mental hospitals—I was asked this question earlier—I have replied many times in the past. The situation is still unchanged. As far as the government is concerned, these ten schemes which would be in force if all ten provinces were within the hospital scheme would be different for special reasons. There are different forces in effect in different provinces. We do not wish to dictate to the provinces exactly what scheme they should institute. As long as their scheme is within the over-all context of our act, that is all that is required.

I would point out—I think hon. members on the opposite side of the house might realize this fact—that this act which is in force today is exactly the same act which was brought in by an administration which at that time was a Liberal administration in April, 1957. The only change that has been made since then is that we have moved forward the possible starting date from January 1, 1959 to July 1, 1958. In other words, this act is exactly the same in its approach to the problem of hospital insurance across Canada. As for myself, I feel that it would ill behoove us at this stage to try to dictate to the provinces exactly what they should have. We are leaving it open to them to present their scheme as they see fit provided it meets our over-all act.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: I indicated to the committee this morning that I was privileged to be one of the federal delegates with the then minister of national health and welfare —I was representing the finance department at the time, I think—when we were meeting with the provincial officials, I think the provincial treasurers and ministers of health, in 1955 and 1956 in two conferences. At that time we had certain maxima of costs in mind of which we would contribute 50 per cent. My recollection is that roughly the annual federal contribution, if all the provinces had adhered to the proposition that we were advancing, would be about $200 million. I have in mind certain increases in the costs of this, that and the other thing. Has the department from year to year escalated this thing? Would the minister care to say, if all the provinces take advantage of the situation that now exists, what the federal contribution on an annual basis might be.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I think our estimate at the moment is that if all the provinces were in the actual cost would be in the neighbourhood of $210 million. I may say quite frankly that we shall be able to tell you a great deal more closely after one year of operation. There is no doubt about that.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River inquired about nurses' training. I would just mention that under the national health grants federal assistance in an amount of over $900,000 annually is being provided in support of provincial programs for the trainning of nurses and nurses' aides, while 9,400 nurses and over 2,600 nurses' aides have received federal training assistance since the beginning of the grants program. The construction of over 12,800 nurses' beds has been approved for federal assistance since the beginning of the program.

Mr. Benidickson: But those grants, of course, do not necessarily apply to nurses in training, do they? They are graduate nurses in hospitals as well as trainees?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes; quite so, and the equipment and the instruction.

Schools of nursing in hospitals will receive support under the health insurance program. The cost of operations for these schools are shareable under the hospital insurance program. Health grant assistance is also being provided for post-graduate training and for selected studies on the methods of nurses' training. I would mention also that the dominion council of health, which meets twice a year, is being asked to consider nurses' training in the over-all picture at its next meetings.

Mr. Caron: Would the training for nurses be only in those provinces which accept the plan?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): This is under the health grants which go to every province. This is not necessarily under the hospital insurance plan.

Mr. Caron: Does it have to be accepted by the province itself?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Projects under all these health grants are proposed to us by the provinces and then we generally accept them. There are times when rejections take place, but they are very infrequent because only those are proposed which are logical.

Mr. Caron: Has it been requested by the province of Quebec?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Oh yes.

Mr. Benidickson: Is this in addition or part of the vocational training opportunities under the Department of Labour?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, it has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Benidickson: Is there a form of nursing training under the vocational training?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Under the Department of Labour?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Frankly, I have no idea.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the minister able to make that assertion?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, I am afraid not.

Mr. Benidickson: Does the minister believe they are all in his department?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River inquired about the advertising by our department, and I would point out that there is $550,000 in the primary for educational and informational materials. There were other comments this afternoon with respect to publications, particularly the child training booklets which are distributed mainly to hospitals and schools throughout the provinces. There is no active advertising campaign as such. This is purely an endeavour made in the form of booklets and other educational media.

The hon. member for Timmins said that in his view at least the department had no vision, and he appeared to think that this is illustrated by our hospital insurance plan. My approach, and that of the government, to this plan has been a very simple one. This act was brought into being as at April, 1957, and when I took office one year ago today, I said that it was my ambition to put this legislation into effect. This has materialized purely by the fact that five provinces now have it in force and we expect greater participation as of January 1, 1959. I wish to repeat a statement I have made on previous occasions to the effect that after this scheme has been in force for a year or two I will be very happy to consider whatever suggestions are made to me for possible amendments. I do not think any piece of legislation as complex as this one could be perfect as a result of our first effort, and I am convinced that amendments will have to be made. Some adjustments have already been made in the agreements between the provinces—not the agreements themselves but the regulations—in order to meet certain conditions. We will be quite happy to consider further amendments to the legislation when it is shown that there are weaknesses in the act as it presently exists.

Mr. Benidickson: Just on that point, my hon. friend and his associates some time ago made up their minds, of course, with respect to the desirability of including in the 50-50 share the cost of operating tubercular and mental institutions. Would the minister make some comment on that?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have said that the situation in that respect has been unchanged since the time when the amendment went through, at which time I made my last statement on the subject in this house. The advancement of the date of the possible starting from January 1, 1959 to July 1, 1958 was at that time and, as I said earlier this evening, the situation remains the same. Mental and tuberculosis hospitals are not under consideration at the moment. I think that answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Benidickson: Does the minister think that the fact that this matter has been shelved is in any way responsible for the fact that to date the province of Quebec does not appear to be very interested in participating in this scheme?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I do not think so, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for the Yukon mentioned the use of mobile health units in the north, which units are actually trailers. These are a new experiment and, despite the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins, I believe this experiment does show that there is some imagination in the department. It is proposed that these units be used at various spots and I believe in fact we are experimenting with one at Watson Lake shortly. I believe the hon. member also mentioned the Whitehorse hospital which I understand is going to be opened in November and which will give complete hospital service.

The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres spoke of the annual report, and I trust I explained the absence of this report satisfactorily when I spoke about the matter a little earlier. He seemed to suggest we were withholding information, which of course is not correct. There is no intention of so doing and, as mentioned, the report will be in the hands of members within two or three weeks. I found that hon. member's speech just a little bit political, and I think I am entitled to reply—

Mr. Benidickson: Remember the hon. member for Danforth—we were very patient with him.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): There was another political speech following that one, but I think I am entitled to reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres with respect to our party having increased the pension from $46 to $55, by simply saying that if his party had been re-elected the old age security pension would still be $46 per month, and I do not think the public would like that.

There has been quite a bit of discussion, and I am not dodging the issue, with respect to suggestions for increases in the family allowances made by members of the opposition—

Mr. Benidickson: No, it was the Solicitor General who was referred to.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I do not know who was referred to. All I know is who said it this afternoon, and in that respect I can simply say that those members had ample opportunity to mention it to their government when it was in power.

Mr. Caron: It was increased.

Mr. Benidickson: By $42 million in 1947.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): In connection with family allowances, I think it is well to note that these suggestions made on the floor of the house are sometimes made in what might be described as a rather carefree spirit; such as, "Well, what does it matter, we will just mention it", and that sort of thing. I should like to point out that there are at present 5,850,000 children whose parents are in receipt of family allowances. For every one dollar increase monthly there would be required an additional annual outlay of $70 million. I hope the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres can balance his request for increased family allowances with the suggestion that perhaps we had increased old age security benefits too much.

Another point which I thought was interesting from a financial standpoint was this: The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres spoke of paying family allowances on behalf of children 18 years of age and under but I point out that if this was done it would mean adding approximately 550,000 children to the rolls which would represent an additional annual expenditure of $52 million. He seemed very concerned about the extra amount which it was costing the Canadian people to pay pensions of $55 a month. I am just mentioning this extra amount which it would cost the taxpayers if family allowances were increased.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Jasper-Edson for his definite interest shown in the hospital insurance scheme. I welcome his remarks. We all accept the fact that the medical profession has accepted its responsibility in regard to the hospital scheme. The hon. member mentioned uniformity. Here again I mention that I do not feel that we should have complete uniformity across the country. I do not think we could have the same scheme in Newfoundland as in Manitoba or in Ontario; I think we have to make some allowance for situations as they arise in the various provinces.

I would point out that we have avoided any interference with the practice of medicine. I will be happy to talk with the hon. member personally if he has any particular situation in mind but I can assure him, as I have assured the public of Canada from the platform, that there is no interference with the doctor-patient relationship under this act.

Mr. Benidickson: The point was that you would only pay for certain drugs, and perhaps that was an interference with the doctor's judgment.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): That, again, is one of those decisions which are made at the provincial level and, as a consequence, the scheme in Alberta or in Saskatchewan might be different from Newfoundland.

We have spent a great deal of money in our grants for equipment in hospitals. We also have a professional training grant of $516,000. I thank the hon. member for his remarks concerning the pamphlets which are gotten out. I have taken note of his other suggestions. I would point out that our medical research budget under the grants program amounts to about $2 million a year.

The hon. member for Fort William was this afternoon, I think, a little out of order when he was discussing civil service pensions. These do not come under my department and as a consequence I think I am incapable of replying in that respect. However, I would point out that the Minister of Finance did announce an increase in civil service pensions fairly recently. I appreciate the hon. member's remarks about the hospital insurance scheme and the study he has given to it.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont made quite a political speech. I do not intend to reply to it in kind. He referred to my reply to questions yesterday. I gave an honest reply, and I can reply in one word. I do not think anything more need be said in this respect. The province of Quebec has been mentioned this afternoon, and some Quebec members seem to blame the federal government for the fact that so far that province has not seen fit to come into the hospital scheme. If I may put it this way—I have repeated this, and I have mentioned it before from the floor of this chamber—the province of Quebec has shown an interest. It has had observers at two technical conferences we have held in Ottawa. However, it has not as yet indicated a definite intention to us of coming into this scheme, but I do hope that this will come about.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Certainly.

Mr. Deschatelets: I gather from the minister's remarks the impression—and I think it is a fact—that there is no identical plan for all the provinces, that the plan varies according to local problems in each province?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The basic plan is the same; some of the details differ.

Mr. Deschatelets: Then why did the minister not at least get in touch with Quebec to discuss the problem? It may be that the authorities of the Quebec government have a special problem and perhaps if the minister would discuss it with them he could come to an arrangement which would permit Quebec to enter the plan. We do not ask the minister to force Quebec into this plan, but we blame the minister for not having made one telephone call, for not having sent one telegram—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The hon. member can blame the minister as much as he likes. I did not approach any other province, either. This has been a matter of co-operation. If and when a province has made up its mind that it is prepared and can afford and wishes to participate in this hospital scheme, all it has to do is say so. It does not fall upon me to go out and ask the provinces to come in. Who am I to tell the provinces what they must do or what they should do? They have every right to make up their own minds.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the minister permit a further question?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): If you do not make a second or third speech, yes.

Mr. Deschatelets: I will put a very good question to the minister, and I hope to have a good answer. I want to know if the minister has received from the 50 Conservative trained seals of the province of Quebec any representations—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): There was only one group of trained seals here and that was two years ago.

Getting back to my answers to the questions asked by various members I should like to refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Jasper-Edson. In replying to the hon. member's questions I neglected to point out to him that during all the preliminary talks leading up to the development of hospital insurance as it exists in Canada today there have been consultations in which I have participated with an advisory committee of the Canadian medical association. These consultations took place on several occasions and we remain in active contact with them to get their views just as we are in touch with the many hospitals and other associations that are vitally interested in this project.

I do not think I shall concern myself any further with the remarks of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont except to say—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I must advise him his time has expired.

[Mr. Monteith (Perth).]

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Oh dear; it has gone so quickly.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think he took his seat several times and we are perfectly happy that he is replying to the questions in some detail.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the minister continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Thank you very much. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River intimated earlier that he would like a rather extensive reply and I am trying to comply with that request.

I should like to reply to the hon. member for Kootenay West on the subject of royal jelly. It had been brought to my attention earlier that there might be some discussion of this during the course of the estimates and so I had a study made of it and have a reply which I should like to read.

Royal jelly is a natural product which is fed to the larvae of all bees for the first few days of life and continued feeding to a larvae will result in the development of the queen bee. There is undoubtedly some virtue in royal jelly for the development of bees. To date no satisfactory evidence has been received of any physiological or therapeutic effect on man. There have been many articles written on the subject which are contradictory. However, none of these stand up under critical review. Under the circumstances the food and drug directorate of my department has not accepted any claims and has required clinical evidence to support proposed schemes. To date no satisfactory evidence has been submitted. However, we are keeping an open mind on this subject and will continue to review the evidence.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the minister will appreciate the fact that I asked the question on a strictly non-partisan basis.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The hon. member for Lapointe spoke highly in praise of the hon. member for Essex East and, of course, I am entirely in accord. Apparently the hon. member wishes to see medical, dental and surgical services included in the hospitalization scheme. Possibly this might well have been thought of before the act was brought in by the previous Liberal administration in April 1957. The hon. member mentioned the interpretation of "disabled" as being at some odds with this. He quoted certain remarks made by the present Prime Minister in 1954. I would point out that an amendment was made in May 1957 and another in November 1957 in an effort to simplify and clarify the interpretation. By the way, I happened to be minister of the department in November 1957 and at that time I promised that full consideration would be given to these interpretations and definitions and I repeat that assurance now.

The hon. member for Quebec West inquired about the immigration hospital in his constituency. I have seen the resolution to which he referred. I am pleased to have his suggestions as set out in his remarks and in the resolution. The possibility of closing this hospital apparently has been discussed for more than two years in my department and I am aware of the question but I might point out that neither myself nor the government has made any decision or recommendation in this regard. We are postponing any decision and in any event no decision will be taken before next summer at the earliest. I agree with everything the hon. member said about the medical profession and I am extremely pleased to have his suggestions for consideration in connection with the hospital.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo referred to the world health organization budget. I understand that Canada's share of the budget for 1958-59 is $425,060. I believe he also asked if the old age security fund was solvent.

Mr. Carter: No. I referred to that because you had given me that information. What I did ask about was the unemployment assistance payments to able-bodied persons who are out of work.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Did you wish the total figure or a breakdown for the provinces?

Mr. Carter: I asked for the total payment and a breakdown by provinces.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): This information is rather lengthy, Mr. Chairman and I understand it has already been tabled and is available.

Mr. Benidickson: Was it tabled this session?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes. I might point out the total for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, for all provinces is $6,553,188.36.

Mr. Carter: That is for the end of the fiscal year. I was seeking a more up to date figure than that.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The figure I have given is a total figure. I would be glad to obtain the information the hon. member requests and give it to him at a convenient time.

Mr. Carter: I would be quite happy to receive it at a later date.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming who mentioned cancer research to which I have already replied. He also mentioned silica dust. He brought that up when my estimates were before the committee a year ago. I am keenly interested in the matter and will take it under consideration.

The hon. member for Prince mentioned hospital construction. Approval of hospital construction grants is purely a provincial matter. They do not require to ask for the full $2,000 per bed which we are making available. It is available if they wish to match it.

I have no knowledge concerning private insurance schemes which may be in effect over and above the basic hospital insurance protection which is being offered under the present act. I fully expect those private insurance schemes will be so worked out as to make protection available to the residents of Canada as a whole. I appreciate his remarks concerning hospital costs. I know there are going to be several adjustments in insurance company plans which are available to the public as a result of our entry into this field.

Again, I would point out that there was a speech which I felt was somewhat political. The hon. member for St. Denis I do not think particularly expects me to reply to his speech. I do not wish to get into a controversy.

Mr. Denis: On a point of order, I know that the minister seems to like me very much but I think I should have an answer to my remarks. The minister said it was a political speech. I think that is far from the truth because I talked about the health of our people and about the province of Quebec not having a chance to share in this legislation. I do not think that was a political speech. What I wanted was the minister to get in touch with the province of Quebec to try to come to some kind of an agreement so that Quebec would benefit from this legislation. That is all I said.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Very well. I am quite happy. It just occurred to me at the moment to be somewhat political. If the hon. member says it was not political I am quite happy to accept that. As a matter of fact, I think I dealt with the Quebec situation in previous remarks.

I hope I have covered practically all the questions. The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria mentioned the Disabled Persons Act and said maybe there were some inequities. Incidentally, a new disability evaluation manual was issued which had the prior approval of all the federal and provincial medical officers. There were two conferences at which those officers were present.

If he has any particular instances in mind where there has not been full and equitable treatment I would be very pleased to have him present them to me.

One member spoke this afternoon to whom I have not replied. I should like to say a word in this respect, and I refer to the hon. member for Outrement-St. Jean. I would point out that our department and he agree entirely as to the objective desired in respect of what he might call goofballs. First of all, I might mention that goofballs have quite a variety of interpretations. I have heard them described—and they have been described—as even being made of sugar and coca cola, and so on. I presume most anything can go into them. I am not denying the fact that other than innocent drugs are going into these things. I realize he feels—and I am sure we all feel—that we wish to protect young people in this country and as a consequence I am sure we are quite in accord in that approach. However, I should like to say that I cannot agree with him when he undertakes to criticize an employee of my department, a man who has been with our department for many years, and in whose ability, experience, and his integrity I have every faith. I am convinced that somewhere along the line there has been a misunderstanding as to how a certain write-up got into a certain Montreal paper and I do not lay any blame whatsoever on this particular employee for the interpretation, or for the quotations, whatever they may have been, that appeared in the Montreal Star. I am convinced that this man acted in the best of good faith. He is very understanding of the peculiar situation, one might say, in which a civil servant finds himself. His hands are tied; his tongue is tied and I am quite convinced that certain remarks apparently attributed to him were not uttered by him. I wish it to be understood completely that I have every faith in the way in which he conducted himself. Aside from that, I would also like the hon. member to understand that I am completely in accord with his over-all thinking concerning the problem.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I did not wish to interrupt the minister when he was about to refer to the solvency of the old age pension fund. I notice it is ten o'clock, and I know he is anxious to get this item passed but I would be grateful if he would refer to that when we come to the item in question.

Mr. Phillips: In my remarks I asked the minister whether Prince Edward Island had indicated any recent desire to come into the hospital insurance scheme.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I am sorry; the hon. member for Prince did ask me that question and I neglected to reply to it. I understand that for a considerable time Prince Edward Island has not indicated any desire to come into the hospital insurance scheme. They did indicate their intention, I think—using dates that are somewhat in people's minds—prior to June 10 last.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister not mean June 10 before last?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): June 10, 1957; the hon. member is quite right. I think they had indicated their desire to enter the scheme at that time but there has been no indication since as to if, as and when they do anticipate entering.

Item agreed to.

251. Grants to health and related organizations, as detailed in the estimates, $212,450.

Mr. Cooper: Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicate how much federal health grant assistance is being provided to the University of Saskatchewan for psychiatric research?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Chairman, I think my answer would be that during the fiscal year 1958-59 federal assistance under the national health grants, which is under way at the University of Saskatchewan under the supervision of Dr. Hoffer and his associates, has been approved in the amount of $75,100.

Dr. Hoffer and his associates are outstanding for their research in certain aspects of mental disease, particularly schizophrenia. I wish to say that my department is prepared to consider submissions of projects where federal assistance is required for desirable extensions to their work.

Item agreed to.

Welfare Branch—
Family Allowances and Old Age Security—
253. Administration, $3,031,361.

Mr. Carter: Under vote 253, can the minister now reply to the question I raised about the solvency of the fund?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I think I gave the hon. member some figures yesterday on that, did I not?

Mr. Carter: Yes, I am sorry.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Frankly, I do not believe the fund has ever been solvent because the consolidated revenue fund has to make up a deficit every year.

Mr. Carter: My point was that the gap is bound to widen or appears to be widening, and some other means of financing this fund will have to be found. What I asked the minister was whether or not any consideration had been given to alternate methods of financing.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Well, as a matter of fact, that is for the Minister of Finance to consider as to whether or not any different method of financing should be found.

Item agreed to.

255. Grant to Canadian Welfare Council, $32,000.

Mr. Carter: Would the minister undertake to table tomorrow the figures that I asked for, the up-to-date figures on this unemployment assistance?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, I would be happy to, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Civil Defence—

256. To provide for the civil defence program, $7,027,721.

Mr. Benidickson: Just on that item, when does the minister think General Graham will likely complete his report to the minister?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): He has informed me, Mr. Chairman, that his study should be completed somewhat earlier than we had originally expected. We had hoped for the end of the year. He is going to travel across Canada. I am of the opinion his report will be ready considerably earlier.

I do not wish to hold up the proceedings of the committee. As we all know, we would probably like to get through with this department this evening, but I did promise earlier to make a statement on civil defence. If it is felt desirable I still would be very happy to do so.

An hon. Member: Will it be a political speech?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Anything but.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee agreeable, then, if the chair keeps its eyes off the clock for a few moments?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Before vote 256 carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief statement on Canada's civil defence effort during the past fiscal year.

At the outset, I would remind hon. members that the dominion government has felt it advisable to take a new look at our plans and activities in this field in view primarily of recent changes in the nature of the threat confronting this and other countries of the world. As I announced to the house on June 11, Lieutenant-General Howard D. Graham has agreed to undertake a comprehensive survey of all aspects of Canada's civil defence policy and program with particular reference to the implications which intercontinental ballistic missiles may have on these arrangements.

As far as the fiscal year 1957-58 is concerned, I believe it is fair to say that steady progress has been made in civil defence planning and training. In the matter of overall policy we have continued to follow the previously established approach of developing and testing plans for the orderly evacuation, on short notice, of certain urban target areas in the event that a nuclear attack should appear imminent. At the same time, advances in space travel and missile techniques have been watched closely and their possible impact on civil defence preparations kept constantly under review. While our planning in this field is still based on meeting the present threat of the piloted bomber it has also looked forward to the time when the ICBM can be expected to alter the strategic pattern of enemy attack.

Turning to specific developments, I might mention the initiation of a national civil defence day which received substantial public support last October and which will again be observed on September 19 next.

Another advance worthy of note is the increased emphasis which has been given to armed service co-operation with civil defence authorities. As hon. members are aware, the training of the militia during the current year is being concentrated on civil defence. In this connection my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, has explained that this shift of emphasis does not mean that the militia will take over civil defence or that civil defence will take over the militia. It simply represents another step towards implementing the established policy that the armed services, co-ordinated by the army, will come to the aid of civil defence authorities in the event of a nuclear attack. Since civil defence is of necessity organized on a local basis of self-help, with few, if any, mobile reserves, the main tasks of the armed services will be to provide mobile support groups and assistance with technical units and equipment to local civilian effort, both during evacuation and for subsequent operations.

The problems associated with armed service-civil defence co-operation were discussed in March of this year when a special conference was held at the national civil defence college at Arnprior. The results of these meetings, which were attended by senior officers of the three armed services, officials of federal, provincial and municipal civil defence organizations, as well as by representatives from other federal departments, were most encouraging and are now under careful study.

A further indication of increasing armed service-civil defence co-operation can be found in the mounting numbers of military personnel being trained at the Arnprior college. As against some 200 attending courses in 1955, more than 800 members of the armed services have received some kind of training at the college during the first six months of 1958.

As far as other training is concerned, I might say that more than 3,500 instructors and key workers attended courses at Arnprior during the past fiscal year, bringing the total of such persons trained under federal auspices to over 17,000. These, in turn, have provided instruction to over 135,000 additional persons in the provinces or municipalities.

In the realm of financing of our civil defence program, I would draw the attention of hon. members to two points. First, of the $7,054,085 originally budgeted for 1957-58, only $5,885,738 was actually made available. This was due to the fact that in the absence of parliamentary appropriation the money had to be provided through governor general's warrants which were limited to estimated cash needs. This explains what might appear to be a substantial increase in our civil defence budget for 1958-59. While representing an increment of $1,141,983 over the estimated cash needs for last year, our current estimate of $7,027,721 is, in fact, $26,364 less than was originally budgeted for 1957-58.

A second point which should be mentioned in this connection is the lapsed balance of $1,896,134 of the $5,885,738 made available last year. This resulted largely from unliquidated commitments in the medical stockpiling program and from the fact that most of the provinces underspent their quotas under the financial assistance program. In budgeting again at the $7 million level, the government is hopeful that the provinces will be in a position in the current fiscal year to take full advantage of the federal funds available.

With respect to the financial assistance program—which at $2 million is the second largest item in the civil defence estimates—an important modification was introduced effective April 1, 1958. Prior to that date municipalities were reimbursed for only 25 per cent of their expenditures on approved civil defence projects if the province did not participate. As a result of the change the federal government may now contribute 50 per cent of municipal expenditures regardless of whether or not the province makes any contribution. In taking this step the government hopes to give new impetus to local civil defence efforts which, of course, form the underlying basis of all action in this field.

There have been two developments since the end of the last fiscal year which I should also like to mention. Early in May, a nation-wide exercise entitled "Co-operation II" was carried out with a good deal of success. Involving most of the provinces, many municipalities, the armed services, the R.C.M.P., as well as the United States civil defence headquarters at Battle Creek, Michigan, this project afforded an excellent opportunity to analyse much of our civil defence planning. It also brought to light situations requiring further study with a view to improving the effectiveness of organizations at all three levels of responsibility.

At the end of May, I had the pleasure of taking part, with Governor Leo A. Hoegh, head of the newly-formed United States office of defence and civilian mobilization, and other United States civil defence officials, in the sixth meeting of the joint United States-Canada civil defence committee. I found this a most satisfying session at which substantial progress was made in such matters as plans to ensure the continuation of government in the event of an international emergency, technical developments in the provision of shelter against radioactive fallout, and practical application of the "no border" policy.

Looking to the future, I have already mentioned Lieutenant General Graham's far-reaching survey of civil defence policies and programs. Another forthcoming development of note will be the meeting of the federal-provincial civil defence advisory committee which has not been convened since 1954. The dominion government is most anxious to revive this important body and feels that the session scheduled for next October should prove extremely useful, particularly in view of the fact that new ministers responsible for civil defence have recently been appointed at both federal and provincial levels. Co-operation between federal and provincial governments is, of course, one of the key elements in Canada's civil defence activities and we are convinced that this committee can play a really vital role in furthering progress in this regard.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "CITIZEN"

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the indulgence of the house to raise a brief question of privilege on behalf of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who cannot be here this evening.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to raise this question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: In tonight's Citizen there is an article by Charles King of the Southam news services which contains a passage which reads as follows:

> Mr. Chevrier, a former minister of transport who left politics in 1954 to head the St. Lawrence seaway authority, returned to the St. Laurent cabinet shortly before the 1957 election.
> Although he had no seat in parliament, he was given a $17,000 salary as a cabinet minister—without parliament's sanction—and proceeded to run for election in the Montreal riding of Laurier.
> He drew the minister's salary from April 25, the date of his appointment, until June 21,—

Press Reference to Mr. Chevrier

I will not read any more. Of course we all know in this house that that salary is provided for under the Salaries Act and that it was a perfectly proper situation from a legal point of view for the hon. member for Laurier to draw the salary of that office.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Except for one thing; it was not voted by the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. It is a statutory item and is never voted by the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the house leader what the business will be tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs and then we will take those of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The business for Monday will be as I announced last night.

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on August 4.

3. As of July 31, 1958 payments had exceeded tax revenues and temporary loans by $4,069.38.

COAL TENDERS, S.S. "BRANT"

Question No. 178—Mr. Robichaud:

2. If so, who submitted tenders, what was the amount of each tender and the grade of coal in each case?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1 and 2. Tenders were invited from the following potential suppliers in Charlottetown for the supply of 950 tons bunker coal for delivery as required during the fiscal year period from April 1, 1958, to March 31, 1959:

SAINT JOHN HARBOUR COLLISION

Question No. 188—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

1. Did a collision occur between the C.P.S. ferry Princess Helene and pilot boat No. 6 off Saint John harbour on August 8, 1958?
2. If so, what is the official report of the Department of Transport regarding responsibility and damage?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. A minor collision occurred in the approach channel to Saint John harbour on August 8, 1958, between the C.P.R. ferry Princess Helene and pilot boat No. 6.

2. Both vessels were proceeding with caution in dense fog so that contact and resulting damage were very light. Repairs are estimated to cost about $330 for pilot boat No. 6 and about $700 for Princess Helene. The seaworthiness of neither ship was affected.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Saturday, August 23, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARSON—FAILURE TO TABLE DEPARTMENTAL REPORT

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting this house. It arises from the proceedings of yesterday when we were discussing the estimates of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We discussed those estimates without having before us the report of the department which is required by statute, under the act setting up the department. It will be found in volume II of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, as section 10 of that act. The last report from this department is for the period 1955-56; hence the provisions of the statute were not complied with when we were discussing the work of this department.

Attention was called to that fact by two members on this side of the house. Certain explanations were given, Mr. Speaker, which were not impressive, especially the explanation as to lack of facilities for printing. As perhaps some hon. members will recall, in 1945 I think it was, the report on the public accounts was not printed but was tabled, as required by statute, in manuscript form by the minister concerned. Lest anyone should think this is just a minor matter and should not be raised at this time, may I quote, in support of the seriousness of this matter, a statement made in the House of Commons on November 7, 1949, in connection with the alleged failure of a member of the government at that time to produce a report as required by statute.

I quote the remarks of the then member for Lake Centre, as recorded at page 1504 of Hansard for November 7, 1949 as follows:

> Parliament has the right to expect that ministers of the crown shall live up to the provisions of statutes passed by parliament; for if these be not lived up to, parliamentary responsibility ends, and a contempt of parliament occurs which should not be permitted to pass uncensured.

Later on page 1505 the same hon. member said:

> The government's action in this matter cannot be laughed off. It strikes at the vitals of our democratic system; for if we cannot rely on ministers of the crown or on the government to do those things which, under law, they are required to do, we in the opposition, instead of being able to accept what ministers of the government say and to believe that they are carrying out their responsibilities under the law, are actually placed in a position where we must begin to wonder. I doubt whether we would have had the report yet if the commissioner had not resigned and brought the matter to a head.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the hon. member to what that reference was made?

Mr. Pearson: The reference was made to a report under the Combines Investigation Act, which is not analogous to this report, of course, nor were the circumstances analogous.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pearson: Because, as I explained, there was no breach of law in that case. If the hon. member for Lake Centre, who is now Prime Minister, took the view that the circumstances in that case were of such importance that they warranted the use of such strong language, I ask what attitude should be taken with respect to this particular matter wherein a report has not been produced as required by this law; indeed, a report has not been made on this department since March 31, 1956.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think it was Mr. Churchill who once said that nobody should generate more steam than he can conveniently contain, and I think this probably applies to the words used by the hon. member at this time. I do not have the document before me to which reference was made, but my recollection is that my remarks at that time were not made about an ordinary report of which production should be made to the house but rather to the fact that there was concealment on the part of the then government of a combines investigation report, concealment for such a length of time that when it was finally produced it was too late for prosecution in accordance with the recommendations in the report. And when the hon. gentleman generates this amount of steam over—

Mr. Pearson: A breach of the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —a report which in the nature of things is one which is required to be made, I can only leave it to the house to judge the difference between the concealment of a report which resulted in action through the courts being denied and the failure to table a report, for which failure no doubt an explanation has been given by the minister. In one case justice was defeated and in the other case—

Mr. Pickersgill: There was contempt of parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the other case it was one of those inadvertencies which should be brought to the attention of the house, but not in such extraordinarily exaggerated language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister's remarks make it necessary for me to add a word. The Prime Minister, of course, is an expert in concealed reports—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —but the circumstances with respect to the earlier concealed report were not as stated by him. The Prime Minister himself admitted that he did not have the record before him. In any event, my question of privilege concerned an obligation under a statute which should have been complied with before we were asked to discuss the estimates of the department concerned. I think the words of the Prime Minister which I have quoted from Hansard do outline the seriousness of that kind of obligation which was infringed upon on the occasion in question.

Therefore I thought it quite right to bring this matter to the attention of the house. The Prime Minister, who of course is a great authority on parliamentary privilege and parliamentary rights, on this occasion seems not to appreciate the importance of this particular matter.

IRELAND

REPORTED POTATO SHORTAGE—ASSISTANCE BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Prime Minister and the members of the house have read reports to the effect that in Ireland they are experiencing what is tantamount to a potato famine as the result of adverse climatic conditions, and that great distress is resulting. I ask the Prime Minister whether he has considered any way in which the government of Canada could help the Irish people, both in southern Ireland and northern Ireland, to meet the situation confronting them at the present time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Naturally there is every sympathetic feeling for the situation prevailing in Ireland. We recall that more than 100 years ago, when a similar situation was most serious, it resulted in mass migrations from that country to the great benefit of the countries to which those migrations took place.

May I say that there has been no consideration given as yet to this matter. No representations have been made, and indeed the matter had not been brought to my attention. But I can certainly say this: that having regard to the situation, if there are within our country, as I am sure there are, available supplies which will be acceptable to all of Ireland, whether north or south—and I am using that expression advisedly—I can say, and I know the hon. gentleman will join with me, that everything that can possibly be done by our country should be done and will be done.

TRADE

LEAD AND ZINC—REPORTED PRESSURE TO INCREASE UNITED STATES TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question either to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of a Canadian Press report this morning which states that with the defeat in congress of the bill to provide mineral subsidies, pressure is being increased on the President to raise tariffs on Canadian lead and zinc.

Could the minister say what representations are being made to Washington, and what progress Canada is making in preventing this undesirable step being taken?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the press report referred to, but as hon. members well know our relations with Washington are very good at this time, as instanced by the action taken by the President the other day in permitting seed grain from Canada to continue to enter the United States despite a suggestion by congress that it should be excluded.

We are confident that similar action with respect to other aspects of our trade with the United States will have the same type of considerate treatment. The people at Washington are thoroughly well informed on the Canadian point of view on all matters affecting trade between our two countries.

REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. COMMERCIAL ATTACHÉ

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement attributed to the commercial attaché of the United States embassy in Ottawa in an interview with the Canadian Press, to the effect that the Canadian manufacturers are missing many opportunities to sell in the United States market and that many Canadian businessmen just do not know how to make business connections in the United States and are losing a lot of business as a result; and in view of the number of officials of his department resident in the United States, can the minister inform the house if this state of affairs exists and if so what action is being taken to correct the situation?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of this question. I have read the press report attributed to the commercial attaché of the United States. I do not for one minute think Canadian businessmen are missing many opportunities in the United States. Our exports from Canada to the United States increased by 2 per cent and are at a total of $2.9 billion for last year, which is a very substantial amount of trade indeed, representing 60 per cent of our exports. That would not have come about unless Canadian businessmen were particularly enterprising in selling Canadian products abroad.

With regard to the number of officials of this department in the United States, I am glad the hon. member drew attention to that matter. We have 16 representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce located at various points in the United States; in Washington, four; New York, three; Boston, one; Chicago, two; Detroit, two; Los Angeles, one; New Orleans, one; San Francisco, one; and Seattle, one, making a total of 16. These representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce are constantly in touch with Canadian businessmen pointing out to them opportunities that exist for the sale of Canadian goods in the United States. Our Canadian businessmen are showing commendable enterprise in pushing the sale of Canadian products not only in the United States but elsewhere throughout the world.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour or, in his absence, to the acting minister. Has the minister or the government been asked to intervene in the longshoremen's strike in British Columbia and, if so, what reply was made to the request?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): In the absence of the Minister of Labour I think I had better take that question as notice. I am sure the minister will reply on Monday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VISITS TO NORTHERN DEFENCE INSTALLATIONS—REQUESTS FOR TABLING OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the Prime Minister said he would table the regulations governing visits to the D.E.W. line made under the agreement between Canada and the United States covering northern defence installations. May I ask him when we may expect the tabling of those regulations?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I shall have that looked into at once, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of prairie grain producers in the question of deficiency payments, I wonder if the Prime Minister can say when the long awaited legislation making up the agricultural program will be introduced in this house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that portion of the legislative program which will be brought forward for consideration at this session I would hope would be available by Tuesday or Wednesday.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Department and missions abroad—

85. Departmental administration (including the former passport office administration), $5,533,081.

The Deputy Chairman: We are considering the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. The first vote is No. 85, which will be found on page 17 of the blue book, with the details on page 177. Before the Secretary of State for External Affairs begins his remarks, I assume he will be speaking for more than 30 minutes. I wonder, if he should, whether the committee at this time would wish to give unanimous consent to extending his time beyond that period if he so wishes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to give to the members of the committee a report on the proceedings of the special emergency meeting of the general assembly of the United Nations which was adjourned on Thursday evening last.

I have prepared a statement for the information of the members of the committee. That statement will have to do with an account of the proceedings, and then I will attempt to offer some evaluation of what was achieved there, the part the Canadian delegation attempted to play, and some ideas about the immediate and long-term future that the unanimously adopted resolution may have for the peace and security of the world.

I would begin, Mr. Chairman, by recalling very briefly why the emergency special meeting of the general assembly was convened. As we all know, Mr. Chairman, the immediate reason for holding this special emergency meeting of the general assembly was the fact that the security council on August 7 had under consideration complaints that had been made to the security council by Lebanon and by the Hashemite kingdom of Jordan concerning interference by other countries in their domestic affairs.

It had, of course, been hoped in the period immediately prior to that meeting that some means of resolving the issue involved might be found through the calling of a security council meeting of a rather special character, at which heads of state might attend and at which heads of states, great powers and others, could get together, formally and informally to discuss problems of the Middle East. Many of us had in mind that at such a meeting at a high level other countries which were not members, which were not represented on the security council but which were directly concerned with the problems of the Middle East, would be given an opportunity to present their views concerning those problems.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that hon. members will recall the Canadian government advocated the holding of such a meeting within the framework of the security council; but when it became apparent that further action in the security council was no longer possible, having regard to the lack of unanimity among the permanent members of the security council and the use of the veto by the U.S.S.R., the questions at issue were transferred to the general assembly and there was called by the U.S.S.R. an emergency special session under the procedures envisaged in the uniting for peace resolution of November 3, 1950.

At that time the Canadian government took the stand that since a solution of the Middle East questions was still to be pursued within the United Nations framework, we were prepared to support efforts within the general assembly toward the finding of a solution of those problems.

Without going into detail of the underlying reasons for the transfer of those complaints from the security council to the general assembly, I will simply say that the Soviet union apparently decided that it might stand to gain by such a change of forum which would afford a better sounding board for propaganda steps; but I would remind the committee that the United States government had placed before the security council a proposal that a meeting of the general assembly should be held, provided that the discussions and deliberations within the security council broke down.

There were three main statements of position at the start of the general debate at the emergency session of the general assembly, and those three statements afford a background for what happened in the next 10 days. The first statement was made by the secretary general on August 8, and I would interpolate here that by that statement on August 8 at the so-called pro forma meeting of the general assembly the secretary general indeed set the tone for a constructive debate. He outlined on that occasion what he termed some of the basic needs for action in the region of the Middle East and suggested the desirability of finding a formula by which the affairs of the states of the region could be looked at very carefully and whereby they could take a more positive attitude with respect to the affairs of their neighbours.

Second, in that introductory statement he emphasized the need of finding a formula to permit a United Nations solution to the problems of Lebanon and Jordan. Third, he held forth on the need for a co-operative approach to the economic problems of the Arab Middle East. While he made no specific proposals, he succeeded on that occasion in drawing the attention of the 81 nations represented in the general assembly to the important truth that the key to the problems of the region rests largely in the hands of the states of the area themselves.

The second important contribution made to the opening discussions at the emergency session of the general assembly was made by the President of the United States of America. On August 13 he successfully attempted to translate some of the principles enunciated by the secretary general into positive proposals. Members of the house no doubt will recall having seen references to his six points in the press. He addressed himself in a positive fashion not only to the immediate but to the long term problems of the Middle East, and I would say here that in his address to the general assembly President Eisenhower insisted at all times that any remedy for the anxious situation there and any solutions to the problems must be put forward and carried out by the United Nations. He took great care to say that he was not suggesting that the United States alone should carry out these measures, but rather would promote solutions of short term and long term problems under the aegis of the United Nations.

I would mention in this context that the President emphasized, as did the secretary general on August 8, the need to recognize the right of the peoples of the Arab nations to determine their own destinies, and he stated positively that no one could ever envisage solutions to their problems which would be permanent if they were in any manner imposed on the nations of the Middle East.

The third statement to which I should like to refer is that made by Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom, who promptly endorsed President Eisenhower's remarks. That is the background which set the stage for the very constructive and profitable debate.

However, I have a fourth statement in mind to which I should like to refer. At an early stage of the meetings of the emergency session of the general assembly we had the draft resolution and supporting statements of the Soviet union. Far from attempting to broaden or build upon the constructive approach that had been made by the secretary general, the President of the United States and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom, the Soviet resolution was essentially negative, dwelling solely on the question of withdrawal of United States and United Kingdom forces from Lebanon and Jordan.

The Soviet resolution disregarded other Middle East issues, such as the economic issue and the political issue, that were directly involved in the deliberations of the security council and would have to be taken into consideration if anything constructive were to come out of the emergency session of the general assembly. Those were disregarded. The role assigned to the United Nations by the draft resolution of the U.S.S.R. would be that the secretary general would be given no opportunity to eliminate the underlying causes of tension in that area.

Furthermore, the accusing overtones of the statement by Mr. Gromyko when he presented the U.S.S.R. resolution, a statement which alleged aggression on the part of the United States and the United Kingdom, were clearly designed to be destructive, and held no hope or promise for reasonable and moderate discussion in the assembly free of propaganda of the cold war.

The Soviet resolution was the only one that at that time was before the emergency session of the general assembly, and may I also say here that it had no prospect of adoption because the majority of delegations recognized that this emergency session of the general assembly had been convened to do much more than simply arrange for the substitution of United Nations action for national action in Lebanon and Jordan.

That was the only resolution. By reason of that fact, the narrow and negative basis of the Soviet resolution, several countries wondered whether they could not offer to the general assembly a resolution that would be more constructive, one that would be much more satisfactory, than the one that had been proposed by the U.S.S.R.; a resolution that would lay the ground work for a comprehensive consideration of the problems of the Middle East; a resolution that would use the secretary general as its instrument, the instrument of the United Nations in this particular field of trouble and excitement; a resolution that would lay the foundations for durable peace and stability in the area.

So, as so often happens, it fell to certain middle powers to undertake the difficult task of devising a resolution which would seek to attain this objective, while at the same time taking into consideration the many widely divergent points of view and conflicting interests. So Canada and Norway found themselves playing a leading role in presenting to the general assembly a type of resolution that would be constructive and comprehensive as compared with the essentially negative one that had been presented by Mr. Gromyko of the U.S.S.R.

I seize this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to pay a tribute to the devotion and the vision of the Norwegian delegation, and I single out among that delegation the Norwegian deputy foreign minister, Mr. Hans Engen, for his hard work, his tact, and his vision with respect to the formulating of a resolution that would accomplish those objectives to which I have referred. While that was going on and we were formulating this Canadian-Norwegian resolution there were other representatives, particularly in the Afro-Asian group, who were active in drafting their own resolution which reflected their overriding reoccupation with the question of troop withdrawal. The Norwegian and Canadian delegations, on the other hand, were striving, as I have indicated previously, for something much broader both in terms of assembly support and of what would enable the United Nations to attempt something by way of a permanent settlement; a resolution that would enable the United Nations, through the secretary general and otherwise, to get at the basic roots of the Middle East problem and not to deal only with the symptoms of that situation.

For our part we in the Canadian delegation kept certain principles and objectives clearly before us throughout the whole period of intense negotiation which led up to the introduction of the Canadian-Norwegian resolution, with which were associated five other sponsors. In the first place—and I dwell on this point, Mr. Chairman—we in the Canadian delegation wanted something which would command the support of the Arabs themselves; for it seemed obvious that there could be no durable settlement in the Middle East without not only the consent of the Arab countries but their active co-operation. It might have been possible—I think it would have been possible—for the Canadian-Norwegian resolution to carry the required two-thirds majority vote; but if the Arabs were opposed to that resolution, we could not look forward to any success in seeking to solve the problems of the Middle East.

The second principle that the Canadian delegation had in mind always—and I say again throughout the intensive negotiations—was that regional support alone, the support of the Arab countries, would not be enough or would not suffice without the complementary support and co-operation of the great powers, all of whom are committed in various ways in the disputes of the Middle East.

Third, the Canadian delegation was intent upon finding a reasonable solution satisfactory to all the principal states concerned to cover the problem that had been brought forward on many occasions, the problem of troop withdrawal. This would have to be something which would give to the United Nations and particularly to the secretary general a central role without, however, confining the mandate to the narrow issue of troop withdrawal.

It would at the same time—I refer to the draft resolution—we hoped create a situation by which the United Nations would be enabled to exert a benevolent and constructive influence not only in the present but in the future in the Middle East, through helping to establish an economic institution for the collective benefit of the Arab states and to provide perhaps an economic undergirding —economics and politics are closely interlocked and intertwined—that would make for a new and happier basis for the relations not only among themselves but with the neighbouring states in the area. I say "among themselves". I am, of course, referring to the Arab nations; and I reiterate, not only to provide a new and happier basis for relations among themselves but also with the neighbouring states in the area.

We did not expect necessarily to have all these principles and objectives set forth in detail in the resolution. But what the Canadian delegation wanted was to find a starting point from which the objectives which I have endeavoured to describe here today could be pursued.

We were aware at the outset that we would have to rely on the ability and good offices of the secretary general to carry out both the letter and the spirit of the draft resolution. I will not attempt to recount in detail the long and intensive negotiations which went into the formulation of the seven power draft presented on August 18. We will look at the draft for a moment, but in a general way.

May I say that the draft was revised at least seven times as to context, which will indicate the care given to the particular views advanced by the various countries and groups of countries from time to time. At one time we believed we had a workable resolution, but then the attitude of the distinguished delegate from Jordan certainly surprised us and seemed to make it impossible for us to carry out the design which we had prepared for our resolution. Members of the committee may recall that the representative of Jordan in his statement to the general assembly appeared to reject any substantial role for the United Nations within Jordan, and he seemed to oppose on behalf of his government the presence of any United Nations representatives or any United Nations instrumentality within the territorial boundaries of his country with one possible exception, and one had to look through a magnifying glass to discern that exception. However, that roadblock was removed within 24 hours, when the Jordanian representative subsequently modified his position.

The essential elements of the resolution which we co-sponsored may be described in these words. It reaffirmed that all member states of the United Nations should refrain from action which might impair the freedom, independence or integrity of any state, which might cause civil strife or subvert the will of the people in any state; and it called upon all member states to observe these obligations especially in the area in question. It requested the secretary general to make such practical arrangements after consultation with the governments concerned as were deemed necessary, and who could do this better than the secretary general? But he would have to do it on the spot.

May I refer for the moment to the U.S.S.R. resolution in this context. That resolution instructed the secretary general to go to Lebanon and Jordan for the purpose of supervising the withdrawal of troops, and nothing more. But our resolution, and I am not giving away any secrets when I say this, met with the entire satisfaction of the secretary general, although it imposed a great load upon him. In our final resolution the secretary general was to make such practical arrangements as he, in consultation with the governments concerned, might find would adequately serve to help in upholding the purposes and principles of the charter in relation to Lebanon and Jordan in the circumstances obtaining at the time in those countries.

In our resolution the question of withdrawal of the troops of the United States and the United Kingdom was not the subject of a specific provision, but in the preambular clause it was noted by the general assembly that declarations were addressed to the president of the general assembly in the letters written to him on August 18 by the representatives of the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, in which they stated their willingness and desire to withdraw from Lebanon and Jordan respectively when the United Nations could take effective action to ensure, without regard to any regime or political party, stability and security in those countries.

Therefore the resolution sponsored by Norway, Canada and the five other countries did not, as I have said, expressly refer to withdrawals but implicitly made provision for the withdrawal of those forces by ensuring the mandate of the secretary general in the light of the United States and United Kingdom declarations as contained in the letters to which I have referred.

Finally, the seven power draft resolution —the Canada-Norway resolution—invited the secretary general to continue his studies with respect to the feasibility of establishing a stand-by United Nations peace force. Hon. members will recall that in this house during the earlier discussion on external affairs I expressed the view of the government in that regard, and we welcomed the insertion of a reference to a stand-by force.

In the seven power resolution there was also a statement to the effect that careful study would be given to the question of economic development in the countries of the Middle East, and it urged the Arab countries in explicit terms to study the representations made to them by the secretary general, which were endorsed by the President of the United States. It also requested the member states to co-operate fully in the carrying out of those studies and to assist in implementing the more positive and operative parts of the resolution. Finally, it invited the secretary general to report on his activities in trying to establish agreement among the Arab countries, the first of such reports being required to be made to the general assembly by not later than September 30, 1958.

While the seven power draft does conform to the principles and does meet the main objectives which had governed the Canadian approach, we were at the same time conscious of the shortcomings of that resolution. I endeavoured to make it clear, on behalf not only of Canada but of the other co-sponsors, in my statement in support of the resolution on August 19, 1958 that we were open to constructive suggestions with respect to its improvement. I stated particularly and at once that if it were to serve to secure great power and regional support we immediately conceded that the resolution could not be considered by any country or group of countries as perfect. In the atmosphere which prevailed on Tuesday of this week however, this resolution undoubtedly offered the only common denominator which would warrant broad support as a formula for the reconciliation of conflicting interests.

I referred once again at that stage to the negative aspect of the other resolution which had been tabled by the U.S.S.R. I stated on behalf of Canada that our resolution could serve as a point of departure to reconcile some of the conflicting interests, and expressed the hope that it would serve as a basis for discussion. It must be remembered that we had been negotiating for nearly a week and nothing positive had been put before the assembly in terms of a resolution. There was nothing of that kind on which to centre the attention of the general assembly other than the unsatisfactory and negative Soviet resolution.

There was a general and intense will—we could sense it—in the meetings of the general assemby to study anything which seemed to carry with it a plan for the future and not just a consideration of past events. This resolution gave a new focal point on Tuesday afternoon for the attention of the representatives of the nations who were in that hall on that occasion. In my statement in support of the resolution I frankly admitted—and I say this for the third time in words other than those I have already used—the shortcomings of the text which was presented in the resolution, but I say without any conceit and without any lack of modesty that I have reason to believe that these observations by Canada's delegation gave some hope for a common point of view coming out of the Arab ranks.

While the debate on the Canadian-Norwegian resolution was taking place on Wednesday there occurred what was indeed a dramatic and sudden reappraisal from the Arab ranks as a whole, though I would say it was not entirely a surprise to some of us. This led to the submission of a new draft resolution to the assembly by all ten Arab states, and this new development altered the whole basis on which the assembly's discussion had been proceeding and led rapidly, on Thursday evening, to a unanimous vote in favour of the Arab resolution.

Canada, and indeed all the sponsors, and the United States, the United Kingdom, France and other great powers immediately expressed their willingness and happiness to join with us, the co-sponsors of the Canadian-Norwegian resolution, in this new development. Therefore it was particularly fitting, in the light of the article in the charter regarding the regional settlement of disputes, that it should have been the Arabs themselves who came up with this formula and provided a starting point for working out a solution to the issues which have wracked the Arab world and on more than one occasion have threatened the peace of the whole world. I am satisfied that the resolution meets most of the main objectives which the co-sponsors of the seven power resolution had in mind and, in fact, it draws heavily on the letter and the spirit of the seven power resolution which we had co-sponsored.

The Arab resolution contains three main elements. First, it reaffirms pledges already given by the Arab states that they will respect the systems of government established in the Arab states, and it calls on all members of the United Nations to conform with the principles of mutual respect for each other's integrity and non-interference in each other's affairs. This passage corresponds very closely in meaning to a similar passage of the seven-power resolution, but it expresses itself in terms which are more precise and which have a more particular relevance to the Arab and Asian world.

Second, the Arab resolution requests the secretary general to make such practical arrangements as would adequately help in upholding the purposes of the charter in relation to Lebanon and Jordan in the present circumstances. These are the exact words of the seven power resolution. But the Arab resolution, unlike the Norwegian-Canadian formula on withdrawal, refers expressly and exclusively to withdrawal in the text of the resolution in the words "and thereby facilitate the early withdrawal of foreign troops from the two countries". This is a more direct formula for dealing with the crucial question of troop withdrawals than had been attempted in the seven power draft, and I would remind those who might wish to scrutinize too carefully the wording of this section—"and thereby facilitate the early withdrawal of foreign troops from the two countries"—that this formula was accepted willingly by the United States and by the United Kingdom.

May I quote to the committee the words of the secretary of state of the United States when he said they would heartily endorse the Arab resolution. These are his words:

> The United States rejoices at the prospective assumption by the United Nations of the responsibility which we reluctantly assumed in an emergency and are eager to lay down.

He was followed immediately by the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom who stated, in effect, that the quicker the practical arrangements contemplated in the resolution could be made on a realistic basis, and here I quote, "the sooner it will be possible for us to withdraw our troops". The Lebanese and the Jordanians accepted this Arab resolution voluntarily, and the United Arab Republic pledged its earnest support for the fulfilment of the engagements which were set out in the resolution relating to this matter. I shall return to this point in a moment.

The third element in the resolution consists of a repetition of the provision in the seven power resolution inviting the secretary-general to continue his study with a view to possible assistance regarding an Arab development institution in the economic field, and to provide for this under amicable political arrangements.

I say frankly that there are two elements which I would like to have seen included in the Arab resolution. In my statement in the general assembly in support of the Canadian-Norwegian resolution I expressed the hope that there might be concluded an interlocking network of non-aggression agreements which would guarantee the independence and integrity of each and all of the Middle East states. I had in mind particularly the relations of the Arab states with their non-Arab neighbours.

That is not in the resolution. Members of this committee will be glad to hear, however, that from the remarks of some of the Arab leaders representing several of the Arab countries, made in support of their resolution, there is reason to hope that the cordial relations now established among the Arab states will be carried forward into their individual and collective relations with non-Arab states of the region. I look upon this as a result which can logically flow—and in some measure I expect it—from the activities which the United Nations through its secretary general will shortly be undertaking in this area.

The only feature of the seven-power resolution which failed to reappear in the Arab resolution was the reference to the United Nations peace force. That is not in the Arab resolution, whereas it was in our resolution. The text of that part of our resolution urged the secretary general to continue his studies with respect to the establishment of a peace force under the flag of the United Nations, and our purpose was to insist that this item be on the agenda of the thirteenth regular session of the general assembly which will begin on September 16.

I must admit, however, that in a resolution dealing with the Middle East situation it is hardly relevant to put in a paragraph that refers to a United Nations agency that could operate not only in the Middle East but throughout the world. I assure hon. gentlemen of this committee, however, that this omission need not be regarded as significant. It has been definitely stated that it will be on the agenda of the thirteenth regular session of the general assembly to which I have referred. To have pressed it at that time which I should like to have done on behalf of the Canadian delegation, would have revived widespread anxieties concerning the use of force for the settlement of international disputes, even though that force would operate under the United Nations flag. Bringing in that extraneous matter might have delayed a solution which holds out the promise of a settlement of disputes in relation to a particular area. But I say this very carefully, Mr. Chairman; it is a matter which deserves extremely careful study.

I should warn hon. members of the committee that I was conscious of a deep division of opinion within the assembly on this whole question of a stand-by force, a division that grew deeper and deeper during the succeeding days of the debate. There are many practical problems to be faced, not the least of which will be a decision as to who should be the final arbiter of when political or military circumstances would justify the use of a United Nations armed force. This was impressed upon me as the debate proceeded. But I say again it is now under study by officials of the United Nations, and there will be an opportunity to consider this more carefully in the meetings of the assembly that will begin next month. It is the armed aspect, the police aspect, of any proposal that would carry with it the suggestion that it should operate under the flag of the United Nations that worries many of the nations, small and great.

I look upon the Arab resolution as an evolution from and fulfilment of the seven power resolution with which Canada had been associated and one, moreover, which holds out better prospects for peace in the Middle East. Why? Because this formula and this resolution have come out of and were proposed by the Arab states themselves, and have won the unanimous support of all members of the United Nations including—and I would emphasize the importance of this—the approval of all the great powers. Mr. Gromyko expressed his intention to vote for the Arab resolution. He could not afford to do otherwise. He could not afford to vote against the Arab resolution; yet at the same time he fell back on propaganda and said, "This is really what we were after when we called for the emergency session of the general assembly". And so we have regional support, indeed a regional genesis, of the Arab resolution and we have the approval of the great powers. It was a unanimous decision. That is one of the principles we in the Canadian delegation had in mind when we began, in association with the Norwegians, to formulate a positive, creative and comprehensive resolution to present to the assembly.

The secretary general will be leaving for the Middle East on Monday afternoon. I saw him yesterday at a luncheon, and I could say that despite the inherent modesty of the man he has a certain self-confidence with respect to the success of the role that he will play in the next one or two weeks in the Middle East that will be of assistance to him in translating into practical and successful action the mandate he has received from the assembly. In accepting that mandate the secretary general is adding to the already heavy burden of responsibility which he has been called upon to assume in recent weeks, and none of us should underestimate the difficulties or delicacy of the new tasks we are asking him to assume. This is related to the solution of these problems.

The fact that his mandate is a broad one, leaving him wide discretion to consult and act on his own initiative as circumstances may require, is a tribute indeed to the confidence which the assembly, speaking with a unanimous voice, reposes in his skill and integrity. I am sure I reflect the opinion of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this house when I say Canada shares in that confidence in the secretary general. We must now hope most earnestly that the unanimity that was found in New York will be fully reflected in a co-operative attitude on the part of all states concerned in order that the United Nations, which the secretary general so wonderfully symbolizes, will be successful in bringing about a new era of peace and stability in the Middle East.

The unanimous adoption of the Arab resolution has been eminently satisfactory, but we now need deeds. I am not discounting my hope and indeed my expectation when I say that now is the time for deeds on the part of the states concerned to achieve a practical realization of that resolution. As the secretary general leaves New York on Monday afternoon I hope he will carry with him the thoughts and prayers of everyone who voted for that resolution.

I have referred to certain documents, resolutions and a declaration of intention, and for the benefit of hon. members of the committee I now propose to table them.

I have one further reference to the present international situation. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that there were two events yesterday in many ways of equal significance to the unanimous adoption by the emergency session of the general assembly of the Arab resolution. Those two events were the announcements on the part of the United States and the United Kingdom to the effect that they would be willing on October 31 to begin negotiations with the U.S.S.R. for an agreement that would provide for the cessation of nuclear tests. That would be a tripartite agreement or two bilateral agreements. I have expressed the hope that those agreements could be sealed under the United Nations.

I would remind the members of the committee, Mr. Chairman, that for several months the Canadian government has urged that such an agreement should be entered into, and that is why we urged the holding of a meeting of nuclear scientists at Geneva. We had hoped that in a cool atmosphere the scientists could find a satisfactory arrangement with respect to the detection of nuclear tests which would lead and indeed point the way to a political agreement in that regard. No doubt Canada, geographically speaking, must be used to station the equipment or instruments or whatever techniques have been suggested by the scientists at Geneva, but as the Prime Minister said yesterday Canada will be eager and willing to do her part in implementing such an agreement. That is not disarmament, Mr. Chairman, but it points the way to disarmament. It prevents further armament, if you allow me to put it that way.

We had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that within the next few months it will be possible to convene a group of experts, such as those who met at Geneva in the last few months, who would study control techniques and control devices that would prevent the possibility of surprise attack. With that hope and the statements yesterday of the United States and the United Kingdom with respect to their proposals to the U.S.S.R. and the unanimous decision of the emergency general session of the general assembly, I feel better about the international situation than I have felt since I became a member of this house. But words will not be enough.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, my first words must be those of appreciation to the minister for the statement he has just given us, and words of welcome home to him from the United Nations special assembly which has just completed its work. I know how hard he must have been working there in recent days. I know what it involves in terms of preparation of public statements, and I know what it involves in terms of working behind the scenes. I suspect that last week-end he did a good deal of that, not only working behind the scenes but constructing scenes behind which to work, plugging loopholes in the scenes as he got them constructed, and trying to get people to work with him behind those scenes.

The result of all that activity was the introduction of a resolution in the assembly later in the week by the delegation of Norway, headed by a very distinguished man with whom I have had the privilege of working in the past. It must have been, I think, in a way disappointing to my hon. friend and to the other sponsor of that resolution that at the last moment, it was replaced by the Arab resolution which, to my way of thinking, was not as effective for the purpose for which it was designed as the seven power resolution but which for other reasons was perhaps inevitable. I shall have something to say about that later.

I know also that the minister in his work in the United Nations, indeed in his work in the department, has had the advantage of the services of a highly skilled body of experts. This, Mr. Chairman, gives me the opportunity to pay my tribute to the work of the Department of External Affairs both at home and abroad, and to the work of the officials in that department at all levels of official activity. I know from the records of the committee on external affairs—indeed, from the meetings I attended—that the work of the department is continuing to expand. Important new offices are being opened and I am sure that is all necessary; and if it is necessary it is desirable. I do remember, however, that not so many years ago the expansion of the activities of the Department of External Affairs in the opening of embassies abroad was greeted in some quarters in this house with some hesitation as unnecessary extravagance.

I am quite certain that no governmental work is more important to the people of Canada than that of the Department of External Affairs, dealing as it does with our relations with other countries in this difficult and critical time in the world's history. I know we are very fortunate in this country —and I am sure the minister will agree with me—in having a foreign service second to none in the world to help him in that work.

We have built up over the years in that department a great body of professional help. One reason, I may suggest, why the department does operate effectively as I think it does, is that it has been made clear from the beginning that the headship of every post in the foreign service of Canada from the most junior, from the least important mission abroad to the most important mission, is open to any member of that service who may qualify for that position; and that there has been no interference of any kind in the work and in the legitimate ambitions of the members of the service. I hope, and I know, it will continue that way.

The minister quite rightly has confined his remarks largely to the work of the special assembly and I shall have something to say about that. I should also like, however, to take advantage of this opportunity—it may be the last opportunity that we shall have—to discuss some other aspects of external affairs and deal with one or two other matters. But first, Mr. Chairman, let me deal with the work of the special assembly which the minister has covered.

I continue to believe, and I suspect that the minister would not be in too violent disagreement with me, that the best method of dealing with what has been called the Middle East crisis, which arose out of events in Iraq, Lebanon and later in Jordan, would have been a small, informal, confidential conference at the summit, to use the expression we have come to use now; a conference which in its representation would consist of those most concerned, a conference which might possibly have elaborated policies which would have prevented this kind of thing and which would prevent a recurrence of it in the future. When I have advocated that machinery for dealing with this crisis I have not had in mind, of course, that this involved in any way the by-passing of the states most directly concerned, the Arab states and Israel, or the by-passing of smaller states generally. Nevertheless it will not be possible at the United Nations or elsewhere to work out policies which will result in stability, progress and peace in this part of the world unless the major powers can get together and try to co-ordinate their policies in that region.

I thought and I continue to think that the head of the Soviet government, Mr. Khrushchev, gave us a remarkably good opportunity to make or at least attempt to make some progress in that direction when he invited the heads of the governments of the United Kingdom, the United States, France and India and the secretary general of the United Nations to join him in that kind of conference. I still think this invitation should have been seized upon as preliminary to the kind of discussion that would later take place in the general assembly of the United Nations. As we all know, that invitation bogged down through a complicated exchange of diplomatic notes, a maze of correspondence, and eventually Mr. Khrushchev escaped from what I believe was an increasingly embarrassing situation for him, after he had second thoughts as to the kind of meeting he had invited, consisting of representatives of the three western powers, a friendly member of the commonwealth and the secretary general, by switching the invitation, because of the delay on all sides in doing anything about his first proposal, to a meeting of the general assembly which as the minister pointed out, had already been put forward from other quarters.

The minister said in his observations that perhaps Mr. Khrushchev thought he might have something to gain from transferring the discussions to the general assembly. I am inclined to think that Mr. Khrushchev might not have had, on the other hand, a completely free hand in his action at that time because it took place, as the committee knows, shortly after the visit he paid to Mao Tse-tung in Peking. It might well have been that at that meeting the Chinese communist leader, recognizing that Mohammed could not go to the mountain and the mountain could not go to Mohammed, decided that there would not be a mountain at all so instead of a summit conference, an emergency meeting of the 81-nation general assembly was held, on which the minister has reported. The London Economist, a magazine from which some of us often quote and which a good many of us read, had this to say in the first paragraph of its leading article on August 9: the summiteers face the prospect of plodding through the vast and dusty expanse of the 81-member United Nations assembly. To come down to earth so abruptly and land in this field full of folk is enough to make anybody feel flat; and it is hardly surprising that all concerned are scouring the plain for scapegoats.

> The summit seems to have vanished like a Middle East mirage. Instead of scaling exhilarating peaks

As the minister has pointed out, the results of this meeting on the plain were better than that. Indeed some of the things that many people, myself among them I confess, feared from a meeting of this kind, that it would degenerate into an exchange of propaganda insults and be completely negative in character, did not, thank goodness, materialize. Perhaps we owe a debt of gratitude for that result especially to the President of the United States, who in his opening statement set the tone of the meeting on a pretty high level. Therefore the results, although they may not have been all that we hoped for or, indeed, that the minister and the government hoped for, were certainly not those which might have been feared.

It is perfectly true that as a result of the emergency session of the United Nations assembly the sense of crisis which we had a few weeks ago has diminished. In my view, however, it is also true that the underlying problems which served to produce the crisis have not been dealt with. What the United Nations assembly has done is give the governments concerned another chance to deal with these problems.

The minister, speaking from the United Nations in New York, was quoted in the press last night—I think he used the same expression this morning—as saying that the Arab resolution is regarded as eminently satisfactory, and according to this report he went on to say, although I do not think he went so far this morning:

All delegations will feel a sense of gratification at the respect for the charter that has been demonstrated—

I think we can all subscribe to that.

—and at the happier era now lying before the Arab states in their mutual relations.

I hope he is right. If the wording of the Arab resolution is carried into action, and the minister was careful to make this condition, then perhaps we can look forward to that result. I am quoting this statement because I have the text of it and perhaps will be more accurate in my references to it than I would be if I were to try to remember the exact words the minister used this morning. The minister went on to say:

All of these—

Certain considerations he had mentioned.

—are adequately met by the Arab resolution. It provides a satisfactory code to govern the mutual relations of the Arab states.

[Mr. Pearson.]

From my reading of the resolution I think that is correct, but I would point out to the minister, undoubtedly he does not need to have it pointed out to him, that this satisfactory code which is embodied in the resolution, at least in paragraph (a) of the resolution, the code to which he was referring, is taken from a previous pact setting up the league of Arab states and in its second paragraph, if I am not wrong, from the Bandung resolution. Therefore this particular code which is now embodied in the resolution in this form has already been in existence for some years. So we can only hope that putting it in a United Nations resolution which has been accepted by every member of the United Nations will in fact provide a better opportunity for using it to govern relations between these states than has been the case in recent years. To that extent I think we can all take a good deal of satisfaction from the resolution.

But, Mr. Chairman, the fact remains, as I said a moment ago, that the underlying problems which brought about this trouble in the first place are still there. The United Nations activitiy in this regard has been beneficial. There is no doubt about that. But I am not sure that the United Nations assembly on this occasion is not in about the same situation as it was a couple of years ago over Suez, when we were I think able down there to resolve an immediate crisis but did not take advantage of the atmosphere of crisis to get down to the problems that brought about the crisis.

And so we find ourselves in the same situation on this occasion. This Arab resolution was essential perhaps to resolve the immediate crisis, and perhaps it has done that. However, it will not be successful unless these basic problems are dealt with. As the minister and other members of the government must know, in these international matters once the immediate crisis passes we are inclined to forget the situation which brought it about, and to do nothing about it until we have another crisis. I hope that will not happen on this occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What the hon. gentleman has been saying is very interesting. Would the hon. gentleman say what these basic issues are? I am very much interested in hearing whether they are a continuation of those that existed two years ago. I have been following the hon. member very closely.

Mr. Pearson: Yes; in a sense I think they are a continuation of those which were in existence two years ago. Some of them perhaps are new, but certainly some of them were in existence then. I will mention one or two of them. The first one that occurs to my mind is the inability—and I make no criticism of anybody or any country in this regard—the demonstrated inability in this crisis to take any action that would improve relations between Israel and her Arab neighbours. It does not seem that we are going to escape from this dangerous situation in the Middle East unless something is done about that matter. When I say that, I have no illusions about the difficulty in that regard.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): Did the hon. member appreciate my reference to that particular problem?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I did appreciate it. As I said, in making these particular references and giving these illustrations I am not attempting to be critical in any way of what the government did or did not do at the United Nations assembly. I am quite aware of the fact that this matter could not have been dealt with at this special assembly at the United Nations, and I am quite aware of the fact that the minister referred to it. I read his speech in regard to that matter. He made reference to it in a way which I thought was helpful.

Nevertheless, until the international assembly and the governments most concerned are able to do something in a constructive and practical way about this matter, I am afraid we shall continue to move from critical situation to critical situation. While this is not easy of accomplishment, I hope that perhaps we shall soon be able to make progress in this particular issue of the relations between Israel and its neighbours because, as I say, it is rather basic to the whole situation out there.

Then there is the economic situation as mentioned in this Arab resolution. It was mentioned more effectively, I think, in the seven power resolution. I do not see how the nations of the Middle East area can really work together on these economic matters which are so important unless some recognition is given to the position of Israel in this regard. So here is another example of the interrelationship of politics and economics.

Then there is the question—the minister mentioned it this morning, and he certainly tried to do something about it in New York—of United Nations machinery. I am not now thinking of economic machinery, but of United Nations political machinery. He does not like the word "police" and I know why. It arouses the wrong kind of feeling in certain quarters. My reference is to the recognition of the importance of some United Nations political machinery which will be available to be moved into areas of difficulty. The minister pointed out that this is a complicated and difficult business, and that there are nations represented at New York who are worried about the principle involved, namely that of putting force behind the United Nations. No doubt some smaller countries are afraid that, if that is done, the force could be used against their interests.

But while there are difficulties, and I appreciate them, surely they are not of a kind to prevent us from trying to bring about a situation in which we shall have some permanent stand-by United Nations police machinery. I am not thinking of a United Nations force of the type we discussed in 1945, 1946 and 1947, in which would be included contingents from the great powers. That is an impossibility in the present situation. I am not even thinking about Trygve Lie's United Nations police force, his legion or whatever he called it. I am thinking now—and I have mentioned this many times previously, as have other members—of the desirability of setting up a central headquarters in New York of the kind which we were obliged to set up so quickly for the Suez operation, and the desirability of governments making available on request to that headquarters of the United Nations a force which might be required for a particular operation.

The minister said that one of the difficulties was as to who would make the decision, and how it would be made, which would bring this kind of machinery into action. Of course that is a difficulty. But I have in mind only having those forces available when that decision has been made. We have now had two or three illustrations of how it can be done, and also some of the jurisdictional problems of a force of this kind, and of the agency governing the force, have been worked out in practice. It is now fairly clear that you cannot use a force of this kind for any purpose whatever except by agreement at the United Nations and by agreement with the country in which the force operates. Although it has difficulties and although it has handicaps, it is an important thing to do. The minister himself has underlined the importance of this.

I was glad to hear him say that while in this Arab resolution there is no reference to a force of that kind, although there was a reference in the seven power resolution, nevertheless this matter is to come up for consideration at the next assembly. That will be meeting in two or three weeks. I would hope that this matter will be considered as one of the priority items on the agenda, and that we shall be able to make some effective progress in that regard. The fact that it is not mentioned in the Arab resolution is a little disappointing, in my opinion, but perhaps not too important in view of the fact that it will be discussed.

The Arab resolution, which I have before me and which I think is not as good a resolution as the seven power one but which I recognize had a certain advantage in the fact that it obtained unanimous support, which I doubt the seven power resolution would have obtained, does, as the minister pointed out, lay down this pledge of non-interference. This pledge has already been given previously but it is good to have it repeated in a resolution which was passed unanimously by the United Nations assembly.

It is a strange clause, if I may say so, to an outsider who has not been concerned with drafting it. I know what goes on down there in the drafting of resolutions, and the changes that have to be made until the final resolution sometimes is understandable only to those who have been in from the beginning. The first operative paragraph of this resolution, or the part of it which I shall read, is as follows: The United Nations assembly—

> —welcomes the renewed assurances given by the Arab states to observe the provisions of article 8 of the pact of the league of Arab states that "each member state shall respect the systems of government established in the other member states and regard them as exclusive concerns of those states" and that—

> —each shall pledge to abstain from any action calculated to change established systems of government.

The normal and obvious interpretation of this is that they pledge themselves not to change even their own form of government, but I take it that is not what is meant by the resolution. Then in paragraph 2 there is a very interesting phrase which could be used to facilitate the development of the economies of the Arab states and to facilitate what surely is essential if there is to be stability in that area in some form namely the equalization of resources and income and wealth among the various states. There is a reference in this agreement which might be used for that purpose, and that is the one calling upon all Arab states to act strictly in accordance with the principle—I am leaving out some of the words—"of equal and mutual benefit." If that were to be put into effect among the Arab states some very important changes indeed would be required.

In the Arab resolution, as the minister pointed out—and this is in contrast to the seven power resolution—there is in a rather complicated and ambiguous fashion a reference to early withdrawal of foreign troops from the two countries, Lebanon and Jordan. No one should take exception to that, because that is the declared policy of the two countries whose forces are presently stationed in these countries.

I think we can hope that this withdrawal will be brought about as quickly as possible. I wish to return, however, to the desirability of pressing ahead in the United Nations to set up the machinery so that if we face this kind of problem in the future, or something similar to it, that there will be something upon which the United Nations can count for quick action.

The President of the United States had something to say on this matter at a press conference two days ago. I was a little discouraged, perhaps unnecessarily so, by his remarks when he was questioned about it. He is reported in the New York Times of August 21, 1958 as saying the following with reference to a United Nations stand-by force:

> —it is one of those things that I think has to develop and to come about with the growth of common sense and a little bit greater spirit of tolerance among nations.
> I think it is a very fine thing. I think it is one of those things that probably will not be done exactly at this moment.

I agree that it will not be done exactly at this moment, but I do hope it will not be delayed too long, because I think it would serve a very useful purpose, if only as a foundation for the effort to put force behind our law and establish a more effective way of dealing with these matters in the future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member permit a question? Having regard to his experience in 1945, 1946 and 1947, to which he made reference, I am sure he will agree that at that time we felt there should be set up some international force. Would he consider it amiss if I ask him what actually happened to deny the achievement of those hopes which were so apparent at San Francisco? What was the reason no action was taken?

Mr. Pearson: I attended the meeting of the committee at San Francisco dealing with this aspect of the charter. When the charter was drafted at San Francisco it was felt that the countries having the greatest responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security were the permanent members of the security council. Any force behind the charter would therefore have to come primarily, though not exclusively, from those permanent members of the security council. If they could agree on the development of an international peace force of this type, with British, United States, Russian and Chinese forces, there would indeed be something which could keep the peace.

Such a force, however, could not go into operation without a decision of the security council, not the assembly. As each security council member had a veto, no decision could be taken unless they were all in agreement. It became clear that they would not be in agreement shortly after the charter was drafted and therefore the machinery which was set up, as I said in the last debate in this house on external affairs, is still formally in existence; the military committee of representatives of the permanent members of the council, this machinery was never able to operate, not even to the point where a plan could be produced for an international police force. There was a Russian member on that committee.

As the futility of the security council as an agency for putting force behind the law became more and more apparent, we had to fall back upon the assembly, where the veto does not operate. As hon. members know, recognition of the necessity for that change was given when we passed the uniting for peace resolution in the assembly, in 1950, and any action that has been taken since that time in this field has been under that resolution through the general assembly, where only a two thirds majority is required. Action is therefore limited, because without the cooperation of the great powers it is idle to talk about any large force to maintain peace.

No United Nations police force of the kind I have mentioned could do that, of course. But what it could do, this is something which has been recommended many times in this house by many hon. members, including the Prime Minister himself, is move into disputed areas under the flag of the United Nations, to represent the international communities in those areas of disturbance, those areas which are uneasy under an armistice settlement agreed upon by governments, in order to make sure that those settlements are observed and that the disturbances do not erupt into violence.

This has been done in the Suez area during the last year and a half. The United Nations observers are not doing the same kind of work, though not working under the same circumstances as outlined above but those observers have been effective in another way in Lebanon. The same kind of thing is being done, though again in a different way, on the borders between Pakistan, and India and though not immediately under the United Nations but still representing the international community, a very effective job has been done in Indo-China.

This, however, is not the kind of thing we had in mind at San Francisco when, hoping that the great powers would work together to prevent any outbreak such as that through which we had just passed during world war II, we thought at least we would have enough force behind a United Nations organization not only to prevent small skirmishes growing, if there were small skirmishes, but also to enforce law by an overwhelming force which would be at the disposal of the international organization. As has been said by a justice of the United States supreme court, this is still a gleaming dream of peace, but it is not even within the bounds of realization at the present time. So we have to fall back on the kind of thing the minister is talking about and which is going to be discussed at the next assembly, which I hope will result in some progress.

There was one other aspect of the assembly deliberations which caused some uneasiness to me which was perhaps also felt by other hon. members of this house. That was the tendency in certain quarters to assume that it is the function, the duty and the obligation of the United Nations to do something about indirect aggression, and that if we could not deal with indirect aggression we would not be able to deal with direct aggression. Indeed, we are not so likely to have direct aggression but are much more likely to have trouble arising out of indirect aggression,—the interference of one country in the affairs of another country in order to bring about a change in the status of that country.

I know that we all realize that this is the way the communists operate, and it is quite likely that we may not be faced in the near future with the dropping of hydrogen bombs but with infiltrations across borders, economic, political and social. It is important to try to do something about this, but I think we are on pretty dubious ground when we try to have discussions of the kind we had in the United Nations special assembly in this crisis in the Middle East on the necessity of dealing with indirect aggression through some form of the United Nations machinery. We might as well be frank about it; every great power does use its influence across the borders of other countries to bring about in those countries a state of affairs which will make those other countries more friendly to the power whose aim it is to aggress in this indirect way.

Russia and other communist states make this a major instrument of their national policy; there is no doubt about that. But when we accuse them—and we have every right to accuse them—and when we ask the United Nations to do something about that kind of aggression, we invite the kind of retaliation which we undoubtedly will get in the United Nations assembly. Nobody is guiltless, and I do not think it will get us anywhere in terms of United Nations resolutions.

Yesterday I read in the press that the United States congress had appropriated another $10 million for the "Voice of America" to increase the effectiveness of its broadcasts to other countries, perhaps to the Arab world and behind the iron curtain. No doubt this is desirable if we can get to the people of those countries, but the governments of those countries perhaps consider it, quite unjustly from our point of view, a form of indirect aggression. Therefore any effort to make too much out of this at the United Nations merely involves charges and countercharges and does not get us very far.

There are two or three other matters I want to discuss, and perhaps the minister will be able to deal with some of the points I venture to raise. The first is the situation with regard to NATO. The United Nations has at the present time once again shown its indisputable value under the leadership of its secretary general. I was going to say "under the leadership of its indispensable secretary general". We have learned over the last two or three years that there are no indispensable men, but if there is any man who is near to being indispensable, however, it is, I suggest, the secretary general of the United Nations; and the value of his leadership has been well demonstrated. However, we must not forget that another of our defences—and I am talking now of military, not political, defence—is the North Atlantic treaty organization. Anything which weakens that organization weakens our defences until we can do away with that organization entirely and bring defence under the United Nations, and we are a long way from that.

All members of this committee are, I am sure, worried about disputes within the North Atlantic treaty organization. The minister said on another occasion, and I was glad to hear him say it, that political consultation within the NATO council was closer and more constructive today than perhaps it had ever been before. That is all to the good, and there is a blueprint in the report of a NATO committee which does, I think, lay down the lines on which such consultation can be effected. We have to develop this kind of consultation, both political and economic, or NATO will not ultimately survive.

But against these more hopeful signs of the development of consultation must be set the fact that within the NATO circle there are dangerous disputes between NATO members. I note one major dispute, over Cyprus, in which three members of NATO are involved, perhaps more than three. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom has recently been making imaginative efforts to bring this conflict to an end. It is a little depressing to realize that there are so many British troops required in Cyprus and that this might be one of the reasons, though not the only one, of course, why Britain has had to cut down her forces on the continent of Europe.

That is one dispute. Another concerns Algeria. Algeria is geographically inside the NATO area and an attack on Algeria, we might remind ourselves, is an attack on Canada within the terms of the North Atlantic pact. Therefore it is a matter of immediate concern that we should do all we can to help find a solution to this problem. I think all members of this committee must have been struck by the imaginative, constructive, and liberal—spelled with a small "l"—approach to this question by General De Gaulle. Let us hope he will be successful in solving this dispute. It is not a NATO dispute in the sense that two NATO countries are involved, but it is to the extent that one country which is an important member of NATO has had to bring most of its troops from the NATO line and send them across the Mediterranean. It is a dispute which involves NATO in that sense.

Then unfortunately there has developed in the last few weeks a dispute between two NATO countries, Iceland and the United Kingdom, which cannot do anything but cause distress among other NATO members and, indeed, in other countries as well. The origin of this affair arises out of a decision of the Icelandic government made under an Icelandic act to assert control of the continental shelf, something which was agreed to at the recent Geneva conference in so far as the exploitation of the resources under the sea is concerned.

Operating under this act the government of Iceland has extended its territorial waters to 12 miles from shore and in doing so has come into conflict—according to the reports, bitter conflict—with the United Kingdom, which historically has claimed fishing and other rights on the high seas up to the three mile limit. The press tells us that a United Kingdom trawler fleet is going off in a few days to its fishing grounds which are now, under Icelandic law, within the territorial waters of Iceland, and we also read in the press that if there should be any interference with the British trawlers the necessary naval protection will be given to the British vessels. That is unhappy reading for any member of the North Atlantic treaty organization which values its relationships with both Britain and Iceland.

As is inevitable in a situation of this kind, the Soviet union has rushed in to exploit it. I read in the press the other day that not only have they showed their sympathy with Iceland in this dispute, but that they have offered Soviet credits to help build an Icelandic trawler fleet which would be of great help to Iceland in the same way as the Soviet offer to help buy the fishing output of Iceland has been of help to her.

It would be a tragedy, I think, if anything developed which would force Iceland out of NATO, and we must all hope that nothing of that kind will happen. I appreciate the British difficulties in this regard, because this is a very important matter to them in view of the value of this fishing ground, but the situation has been made even more difficult for Britain by the fact that the Soviet union has for many years—perhaps going back as far as the establishment of the Soviet state; I am not sure—maintained its claim to a 12-mile territorial water zone. There has been no effort on anybody's part, as far as I know, to challenge that claim. Hon. members will therefore be able to appreciate the difficulty in which the United Kingdom government is placed.

I am suggesting, before we call it one o'clock, that because of our very close relationship to Iceland—I have been there myself and talked to the government and the people, and I think it is true to say that there is no country with which Iceland has a closer relationship than Canada—having regard to that fact and, perhaps, to our even closer relationship with the mother country, perhaps this is a situation in which Canada could offer her good offices for mediation which could be helpful in this case and prevent this dispute coming to a clash.

We must all hope that nothing like this will happen, but some of the reports in the last few days have indicated that if something is not done we may be in serious trouble, not only inside NATO but in trouble which would affect the whole north Atlantic defense position of which Iceland is a key base.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee met at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, before lunch in commenting on the minister's interesting statement of this morning I had attempted to deal with some aspects of the crisis in the Middle East and had also ventured to bring to the attention of the committee an unfortunate and what might be a damaging dispute between the United Kingdom on the one hand and Iceland on the other concerning the jurisdiction of Iceland over the 12-mile limit which she now claims and which conflicts with the United Kingdom law and practice in this field of territorial waters. I expressed the hope and I repeat it now that perhaps the good offices of the Canadian government might be useful in this matter in preventing this dispute which has been a long standing one and which came up in NATO over two years ago from deteriorating, and which will help to prove the reports of impending trouble to be without validity.

I was going on from there to discuss what is probably as important an aspect of our foreign relations as there is, our relations with the United States of America. One element in that relationship is our desire to co-operate with the United States in all aspects of foreign policy including policy in the Far East. I mention this matter which before one o'clock I did not intend to raise because of reports which have come over the air during the luncheon recess and which the minister may have heard to the effect that thousands of shells are being thrown on the little island of Quemoy and Matsu off the China mainland by the Chinese communist forces. There is some anxiety that this might be the prelude to an attack on these two islands which are now occupied by the government of Chiang Kai-shek and which are so close to the mainland of China which is under communist control that they have for several years constituted a threat to peace and stability in that area.

The secretary of state of the United States is reported as having said this morning that if this action should be the prelude to an effort on the part of the Chinese communist government to take and occupy these two offshore islands that would create a dangerous situation and, if I may quote from the words attributed to him, "Any such action." said Mr. Dulles, "would be a threat to the peace of the area." Indeed, this is the attitude that was adopted by the United States and expressed as such some time ago when there was a threat to these islands. I shall not quote his exact words but certainly the burden of his remarks at that time which are reported to have been repeated today was that those concerned could not count on the United States remaining aloof from an attack.

This does involve problems of peace and security in the area with which we are all concerned. I can only express the hope that no such development as has been indicated in this report will occur but if it does I think we in this house should know where the Canadian government stands in the matter.

Perhaps, as an indication of the position adopted by the previous government and which I should like to confirm at this time as being the position which I think should be adopted in this matter by Canada, I may quote from Hansard of Tuesday, March 29, 1955, where at page 2477 the then private hon. member for Prince Albert who is now the Prime Minister asked me in my capacity as the then secretary of state for external affairs a question in these terms:

> Is there any foundation for the general statement that is being made in the press of the United States that an imminent attack on Quemoy and Matsu by Red China is anticipated? Would the minister say whether he has any information that would confirm or deny this statement. Would he also give a general résumé of the present situation relative to those two islands.

I replied to that question as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have seen the reports to which my hon. friend refers and I have no information from any official quarter which would confirm them or that an attack on these islands is imminent.

I went on to say:

> Of course, in the present situation it always remains a dangerous possibility.

Perhaps I may interpolate that it seems to remain a dangerous possibility at this moment. I then concluded my reply by saying as an indication of the policy we had adopted at that time and on which the minister might care to comment during the course of this debate:

> As far as our policy—

That is, Canadian policy.

> —in respect to this matter is concerned it has already been made clear, and I do not think I need repeat it here, that if an attack were made on these offshore islands it would not involve the intervention of the Canadian government.

That seems to me to be the right position for Canada to adopt in respect of this matter. In that sense it separates us to an important extent from the position that has been adopted and, according to reports, repeated by the secretary of state of the United States today. In so far as this represents a difference in policy between the two countries that is unfortunate. I think all hon. members of this committee and all Canadians desire to keep to a minimum these differences between the two countries that share this continent but there are times when we may have to differ with the United States and in respect of the attitude toward these offshore islands which has once again been very forcefully brought to our attention this seems to me to be such an occasion.

This brings me then to the more general subject of our relations with the United States. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, those relationships should be as close and friendly as possible. We should consider it a privilege in this country as they should across the line to co-operate with each other in the economic defence and all other phases of foreign policy. I said in this house as recently as July 18, and I repeat it now because it is something that has been misinterpreted and I believe misconstrued, that there may not be between our two countries that close and continuous co-operation—and, yes, I might use the word "unity"—on defence matters which is desirable if we have economic conflicts.

That is why we must all be happy for reasons other than trade to take part in steps which may be taken to remove economic conflicts between the two countries, because those two things, economic conflict and defence co-operation, do not go together.

In this relationship between our two countries, any Canadian government, any Canadian representative, has to stand up for the rights of his own country as he conceives them, always having regard to what he can do to maintain unity inside the coalition and unity inside the continent which we all accept as essential. But that does not mean—in fact, it should never mean—that we should indulge in unfair criticism, unnecessary criticism, of the policies of our neighbour, that we should show an oversensitiveness, that we should go in for what you might call pinpricks, disturbing by small talk which sometimes causes the trouble that small talk can cause, disturbing the good relationship, the good day-to-day relationship which is essential.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, as an important aspect of our foreign policy I want to say something about the relationship between our two countries as I conceive it in the Arctic. A few days ago in this house one of the members on the treasury benches had some observations to make on this subject, in which he expressed chagrin and a sense of shame at some of the difficulties that Canadians were encountering, including members of the Canadian government, in their own north country, arising out of the fact there are United States facilities and installations in that part of Canada, which are there as a result of an agreement between Canada and the United States. When the Prime Minister cleared this matter up on August 16, he said, as reported at page 3652 of Hansard:

> I have felt that in the northern defences of Canada there were in existence situations that could conceivably derogate from Canada's sovereignty.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that there should not be situations which derogate from our sovereignty in this part of Canada, and if those situations arise out of the arrangements which were made between the Canadian and the United States governments for the construction of defence facilities in that part of Canada, more particularly the D.E.W. line, then I think it is desirable, and I think it will be wise, to put on the record in Hansard the agreement, or some parts of the agreement reached between our two countries for the establishment of the distant early warning system. This agreement was effected by an exchange of notes, which were signed at Washington on May 5, 1955. Under that agreement, Mr. Chairman—and it would certainly be unfortunate if it were otherwise—it seems to me that there is complete and necessary protection of the Canadian sovereign rights in the areas which are concerned, namely the Artic areas, where the D.E.W. line would be established. In the annex to the exchange of notes the arrangements are given which I think are pretty adequate for the protection of those rights of sovereignty. For instance, in paragraph 1 of the annex under the heading of "Sites" there is this:

Canada will acquire and retain title to all lands required for the system.

That is the D.E.W. line system.

Canada grants and assures the United States, without charge, such rights as access, use, and occupancy as may be required for the construction, equipment and operation of the system.

Then, section 6, under the heading "Canadian law", we find this:

Nothing in this agreement shall derogate from the application of Canadian law in Canada, provided that,—

And this is a proviso which I think in all fairness I should read:

—if in unusual circumstances its application may lead to unreasonable delay or difficulty in construction or operation, the United States authorities concerned may request the assistance of Canadian authorities in seeking appropriate alleviation.

Then section 7, under "Operation and Manning" we have these words:

It is understood that, in any event, Canada reserves the right, on reasonable notice, to take over the operation and manning of any or all of the installations.

Then, again, in section 15, under the heading "Use of Airstrips" we have this:

The airstrip shall be available for use by the R.C.A.F. as required. The airstrip shall also be available for use by Canadian civil air carriers operating into or through the area, whenever such use would not conflict with military requirements,—

This is a reasonable condition. I continue:

—and subject to the understanding that the United States air force will not be responsible for the provision of accommodation, fuel, or servicing facilities of any kind. Proposals and arrangements for such use of U.S.A.F.-operated airstrips by Canadian air carriers shall be submitted to the R.C.A.F., which shall consult the U.S.A.F. before granting any such permission.

Then, section 16 under "Landing Facilities":

Landing facilities at any of the stations on tidewater will be available for use by Canadian government ships and ships employed on Canadian government business.

Then, under section 20, "Status of Forces" there is this:

The "Agreement between the parties to the North Atlantic Treaty regarding the status of their forces", signed in London on June 19, 1951, shall apply.

That means, in a word, that the rights under that agreement, under that NATO agreement, to which the United States forces are entitled, are available to any Canadian forces that might be on United States territory. Then, section 21 has this to say:

Supplementary arrangements or administrative agreements between authorized agencies of the two governments may be made from time to time for the purpose of carrying out the intent of this agreement.

Mr. Chairman, this agreement which was signed in 1955 does seem to me to protect Canadian rights and Canadian sovereignty in that area. When the Prime Minister indicated that there had been, as he thought, some derogation from that sovereignty, I asked him whether he would table the regulations made under this agreement which, according to the Prime Minister, cleared up those difficulties and were undoubtedly made under section 21, which I think—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman also asked for more than that.

Mr. Pearson: I asked for all the regulations based on the agreement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And, I may say the compilation is being undertaken. As a matter of fact, there are a great many, and my understanding is, that it will take some time. I think it will be ready in three or four days but the file includes a lengthy series of regulations.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I can help the Prime Minister by telling him that the regulations that seem to me to be of the most importance in respect of this matter are those which were made since the time that he and his government took over, because the Prime Minister did say—and I quoted his words from Hansard—that when he took office he found an unsatisfactory situation. Therefore it would be of great interest to the committee to ascertain the regulations which were passed since that time to clear up this situation. In any event, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the agreement in question does protect our sovereign rights and I also point out the fact, of which the Prime Minister undoubtedly is aware, that under the exchange of notes to which this document was attached, the Canadian government has full authority at any time to take over, to operate, to man and to maintain the D.E.W. line.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if this type of operation in the north is going to cause the kind of suspicion we sometimes see in the press and in other places, if there is going to be this kind of difficulty, if we feel, and I think it is a reasonable feeling, that it is necessary for us to increase our occupation of our own northern territories in order to establish beyond question our title to those territories by right of occupation, then perhaps the time is coming when Canada should exercise its option and take over, man and maintain the D.E.W. line, the weather stations and other Arctic installations now either jointly operated and maintained or operated and maintained by the United States.

There is now one reason and there may be more than one reason for so doing. Certainly there was some doubt when these installations were considered in the first place whether this would be a desirable thing for Canada to do. The construction of them involved great expense and it also involved the use of skilled manpower which perhaps was not available in Canada at that time. But if these difficulties have now been overcome, and they certainly have been so far as construction is concerned because construction is completed, and if there is now sufficient skilled manpower to take over the operation then I think serious consideration should be given to that action. I feel quite certain that the United States would welcome such action on our part. As I said in the last debate on external affairs, perhaps it is now at least worthy of consideration whether some of our obligations outside of Canada might not be reduced if that is necessary to make it possible for us to take over all these Arctic operations which are not only so important for defence but have a real value in the opening up and developing of the country for other purposes.

There is only one other matter I want to mention and I do so because the minister quite rightly had something to say about it this morning. I refer to the recent announcement, I think made yesterday, by the United States and the United Kingdom that under certain circumstances—there were some conditions attached to it—they would be willing to suspend nuclear tests for a period of one year. As I ventured to say in the house yesterday and as the Prime Minister emphasized in his statement, this was an important decision and it was an encouraging one as far as it went. It remains now, as the minister pointed out this morning, for those countries which have in the past made these nuclear tests to get together as a result of the discussions now visualized in the United States and British statements, and try to come to some international agreement under the auspices of the United Nations, I would hope, which would formalize this important move on their part and perhaps extend it in terms of time and countries.

It is not only important that the three nuclear powers do this now but surely it is also important, as I have said before, that other powers which do not now manufacture nuclear weapons should associate themselves with this kind of agreement so that they will not in the future become manufacturers of nuclear weapons. Possibly at least the first step in that direction can be taken at the forthcoming assembly of the United Nations so that we not only can put an end to nuclear tests on the part of the powers which possess nuclear weapons of mass destruction but also can prevent the extension of the manufacture of these weapons to countries which do not now possess them.

When I advocate that I do not want to be misunderstood because I have at the same time suggested, and I repeat the statement now, that while the abolition not only of such tests but of nuclear weapons themselves is the first objective we should all seek there is a very great difference indeed between a megaton hydrogen bomb and a warhead for a ground to air defensive missile such as the Bomarc which cannot be used for any offensive purpose but which might be invaluable for defence against aggression. As soon as the warhead of the Bomarc is equipped with a nuclear tip it becomes a nuclear weapon, and as long as these tactical weapons for defence are used—I do not think this is inconsistent with the position I have taken regarding the abolition of nuclear tests—I think it is not a tolerable proposition that a Canadian squadron serving with a United States squadron on Canadian soil, perhaps under joint United States-Canadian command, should be armed in the future with Bomarc weapons without nuclear warheads while at the same time the United States squadron operating from the same field should have them.

That is why I ventured to ask the minister previously, and perhaps he may have something to say about this when he replies, whether any negotiations are under way in Washington now to put Canada on exactly the same basis of exchange with regard to nuclear weapons as the United Kingdom. I know that this requires an agreement under the United States atomic energy act, but I suggest that in the present situation and because of the close relationship we have with the United States in defence such an agreement should be sought and that we should not be expected to work out our continental defence arrangements with the United States under a continental defence command with this difference as to weapons existing between us. I do not consider this inconsistent with my view on the abolition of nuclear weapons. So I hope that as long as this situation persists we will be put on a basis of equality with the United States so far as exchange of information and tactical defensive air weapons are concerned. Surely that is a reasonable request to make to the United States, and I cannot believe for a minute that they would refuse to make that kind of an arrangement with a country so close to them in so many ways if the approach is made to them.

Mr. Jones: Would the Leader of the Opposition permit a question? Did I understand him correctly a few moments ago that he was advocating that we should reduce our international obligations in favour of spending that money towards occupation of the north country?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Chairman, what I said was this. If we find that it is necessary to extend our obligations on Canadian soil by taking over some of the facilities and installations now operated and manned by the United States, and if we find that this is impossible because of the extent of our defence obligations abroad, involving as they do responsibilities outside Canada which I think we were very wise in undertaking, that if we cannot do both, then we should at least give consideration to the possibility of reducing some of these obligations abroad if that means we can take over these activities at home which are now being undertaken for us by agreement with the United States. There is nothing wrong about having this kind of operation in Canada performed by the United States because we are doing it in Europe, but in view of the fact that the whole strategy of defence is changing, in view of the fact that the importance of our north country for defence is much greater than it was when we signed the NATO pact 10 years ago, in view of the fact that other NATO countries in Europe itself have found it necessary to reduce some of their NATO obligations, I see nothing wrong in giving consideration to such a reduction on the part of Canada if that is required in order to undertake these additional responsibilities on our own soil.

I certainly would not advocate for one minute that we should withdraw from our NATO obligations in Europe. For political reasons I think it is most desirable to maintain a Canadian contribution to the western European NATO defence forces which are defending Canada as well, but I think consideration should be given to the extension of our acceptance of obligations in the north country which are being undertaken by the United States. If that means reconsideration of our responsibilities elsewhere, then I think we should not hesitate to give that reconsideration. That is as far as I go but I think that is going some distance in view of the changing nature of defence and strategy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question? I want to be perfectly clear as to how far he goes in this direction. I am only asking the question for the purpose of information. I am following him very carefully. Does he suggest that Canada should be assured within this country, in so far as the equipment of our aircraft is concerned, of nuclear weapons supplied by the United States, under whatever arrangement might be achieved?

Mr. Pearson: I want to make this matter as clear as I can. What I am suggesting is this. I used the Bomarc illustration because I thought it was pertinent. If there are two squadrons on a Canadian base, one a United States squadron and one a Canadian squadron and if they are under a joint command—a United States-Canadian NORAD command—then I suggest that there should be nothing in United States legislation which would prevent that Canadian squadron from using the kind of defensive tactical weapon—and I used the Bomarc as illustration—which the United States squadron would be automatically using and which presumably would not be available to the Canadian squadron because under United States law, as it stands at the present time, that cannot be done.

When we discussed this matter in the committee on external affairs the Secretary of State for External Affairs said there was no intention of storing these weapons in Canada. He went on to say, however, that if an emergency arose they could be made available at a moment's notice. What I suspect is this. If they are not being stored in Canada—this kind of tactical weapon—I suspect that it might be more than a moment's notice that would be required to make them available for a Canadian squadron.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Would the hon. member yield the floor?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): What I said in the deliberations in the committee on external affairs was that at the present time the storing of nuclear weapons was not being considered. I do not recall using the word "does not intend".

Mr. Pearson: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I accept the minister's correction. I have the record of the committee before me and as soon as I sit down I will check on the matter and before this committee is over I shall be able to read to him what the record actually says. If it does not say what I said, I withdraw it, of course, and apologize to him, because I do not wish to misunderstand or to misinterpret his remarks in this important matter in any way. I am suggesting—and I urge the suggestion on the government—that the government should now take into consideration the possibility of Canada being put in exactly the same position with regard to the availability of this weapon with the United States—because these are not weapons of mass destruction—as she is in regard to the exchange of other weapons for aerial defence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman mentioned the Bomarc. I hope that he realizes that that is not a weapon carried by aircraft; it is a ground-to-air weapon. What I was asking the hon. gentleman was this. Is it his contention that Canadian aircraft operating in Canada for the defence of North America should be equipped by the only means by which they could be equipped, namely by the United States, with nuclear weapons. That is the question on which I was trying to be clear.

Mr. Pearson: I will try to make the matter clear. I know that the Bomarc is a ground-to-air-missile. I also know that plans—and the Minister of National Defence can correct me if I am wrong when I say that I know; I think I know—have been made and consideration has been given to arming air defence squadrons being placed in these particular squadrons of aircraft with Bomarc ground-to-air missiles. It is undoubtedly possible, perhaps it is true now—and the minister can correct me if I am wrong—that there are also air-to-air missiles which can be fitted with nuclear tips. All I am suggesting is that in that kind of situation a Canadian squadron should be placed on exactly the same basis as a United States squadron in so far as intergovernmental arrangements between the two countries can make it so. At the present time that cannot be done because of legislation of the United States Congress. As the minister has pointed out—and I hope I am reporting him correctly on this—there are in these amendments which were passed in Washington, clauses which authorize the negotiation of an agreement which would make this possible. I am therefore suggesting to the government that they give consideration now to that kind of agreement.

Those are my concluding words, Mr. Chairman. Surely this is important. If there is going to be continental defence of this kind under a continental command, surely it is important that there should be complete unity, complete co-operation and complete equality with regard to the facilities for defence which are available. I know I have detained the committee for a long time and I apologize. Perhaps as we go on to the consideration of the various estimates there may be detailed points which I may wish to bring to the minister's attention. I shall certainly want to bring to his attention the exact words he used in connection with storing of missiles and in which he believes I have misquoted him. I certainly would not wish to do that.

Mr. Herridge: We in this group, Mr. Chairman, welcome the Secretary of State for External Affairs on his return from the special assembly of the United Nations. Before proceeding further I might say that while we do not agree on some questions or on some details of policy, we wish him well in all he undertakes with a view to improving international understanding and obtaining international agreement in his efforts working towards international peace.

I listened with a great deal of interest to his report on the Arab resolution and the details surrounding it. I am not going to repeat his words or take the time of the committee to go into details. I must say that from our point of view it was a most interesting development and, I repeat, a most heartening one.

We in this group are glad that this was a unanimous vote and that it appears that the United States in this vote recognized the realities of the Arab situation and, shall I say, the peculiarities of the Arab situation and also to a great extent western world opinion, and also, in supporting this resolution, the responsibility of the United Nations for dealing with this problem over the long run.

Before proceeding I might say that it is well known that this group strongly opposes unilateral action on the part of any country in attempting to deal with a situation like this. I might say that we are not alone in Canada in that respect. Prominent Conservative papers, prominent Liberal papers, other prominent periodicals and a good number of prominent people that support all of the parties in this country or the various parties in this house have expressed opinions similar to ours in that respect.

I was very much interested in the minister's statement that there were deep divisions in the general assembly as to the value or function of an international police force. However, I was very pleased to hear him say that this matter is going to be given further study and consideration. We are very much interested in that aspect of the protective forces of the United Nations. In any event, Mr. Chairman, this unanimous support for the Arab resolution and the spirit that appeared to surround it creates great hope in all of us, I think, and offers a great opportunity to the United Nations, possibly the greatest opportunity it has had to deal with the basic problem that surrounds this Middle East situation that it has had for many years. It gives what I would call a breathing spell. It gives us a cause for cautious optimism.

We were all pleased to hear the minister's remarks with respect to the suspension of nuclear tests by the United Kingdom and the United States for a period of one year. This gives further cause for relief and gives another opportunity to go further and to try to get wider agreement even with other nations in the western world and we hope, finally, with the Soviet union.

I am sure we all feel that the minister was justified in feeling better over the international situation than he has at any time since he became a member of this house. I listened as usual with a great deal of interest to the Leader of the Opposition. We must all recognize the fact that with his knowledge and his long experience as secretary of state for external affairs he has a great advantage over a simple backwoodsman like myself. He knows the majority of the leading figures, and he possibly knows the physical features of most of the countries with which he has had to deal and on that account he would know the circumstances surrounding all these problems. I always listen to him with great interest, although I thought this afternoon that the text of his speech was rather pointless in some directions. I expected him to be a little more emphatic in some instances.

However, I and the other members of this group were very pleased to hear him speak of the need for building up an international police force. While we all recognize the difficulties, nations being what they are, I do not think we should ever lose sight of this objective that we should eventually replace regional and other pacts with an international police force having the authority to maintain world law and order. Other members of this group will have a few words to say on various aspects of this question, so I am not going to deal with it further at this time but will turn to other matters.

As a member of the committee on external affairs, I have had the opportunity to attend meetings of the committee again this session. I have found them to be of great interest and somewhat profitable. The estimates of this department total some $69,484,506, which sounds like a lot of money to many Canadians but I think we must realize first of all that approximately half of that amount goes for expenditures under the Colombo plan or grants to the various United Nations agencies. In reality, therefore, we spend, I would judge, about $35 million on the administration of the Department of External Affairs. That still sounds like a lot of money but, as I view them, our expenditures in this department have increased in ratio to the increase in Canada's responsibility in international affairs and I am sure that no one possessing a knowledge of the world situation today and the responsibilities which Canada must be willing to accept in respect of international affairs would begrudge $35 million out of a budget of over $6 billion as Canada's contribution to the furthering of international understanding and agreement. We in this group consider that our expenditures on external affairs are a first rate investment in the cause of understanding between nations.

The committee examined the estimates in detail and gathered a lot of information from the senior officials of the department and from General McNaughton, the chairman of the international joint commission. Before proceeding, I must say that the members of this group recognize, as I am sure other hon. members recognize, the high calibre and the devoted service of the officials of the Department of External Affairs. I, for one, have noticed since I have been a member of this house that with the expansion of the department there has been even an improvement, shall I say, in the calibre of many members of the staff, and naturally with the developments which have occurred during the last ten years there has been a much broader base of understanding of world problems and Canada's relationship thereto.

I would like to refer briefly to the report of the committee and to bring three or four matters to the attention of this committee, but before doing so I should express the appreciation of the members of that committee for the very fair way in which the chairman arranged sittings sometimes to meet the convenience of members who were sitting on other committees at the same time. We appreciated that consideration very much indeed.

The first paragraph of the report to which I would like to refer is the following:

The announcement by the Prime Minister of the preliminary step toward the establishment of a parliamentary committee to meet with a United States congressional committee, to examine problems common to both countries and to exchange views and interpret developments to their respective governments was welcomed by your committee. Such a joint committee, it is felt, could be invaluable in the promotion of a greater degree of understanding between the two legislative bodies.

I must say that we in this group give wholehearted support to that opinion of the committee because we believe that not only would it promote a greater understanding between the two legislative bodies but that a committee of this sort, if it is established and is permitted to function regularly and continually, will do a great deal to promote a better understanding on the part of United States legislators and the people of the United States with respect to the particular problems which concern us in Canada. I do hope that the Prime Minister will make arrangements for the establishment of that committee at the earliest possible date, at least so far as this parliament is concerned.

The next paragraph to which I would like to refer is the following:

With regard to the recent report of the United Nations scientific committee on the effect of atomic radiation, your committee expresses a hope that the government will keep under constant review its policy on the suspension of nuclear tests, taking into account the results of the current meetings of scientists at Geneva on the methods of detecting nuclear explosions.

We all heard the very welcome announcement made by the Prime Minister yesterday, since this report was drafted, with respect to the suspension of nuclear tests for one year by agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States. That is a step in the right direction but this paragraph was inserted in the report as a reflection of the committee's concern with respect to this problem and its anxiety that the government should keep under constant review its policy on the suspension of these tests.

The third paragraph to which I wish to draw the attention of the committee reads as follows:

The continuation of studies on the possible establishment of a permanent United Nations force to ensure peace and deter aggression, is considered of great importance.

I might say that the committee's report was adopted unanimously, so that that is an expression of the opinion of all members of the committee. We do hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will strongly support the final necessity for some form of United Nations police force coming into being.

We know the road will be a difficult, rocky and slow one, but we feel that we should not lose sight of this objective. The final paragraph of the committee's report, which I believe is very interesting, is as follows:

In order to assist your committee in its work, it recommends that, at future sessions of parliament it should commence its sittings within one month of the meeting of the house. Consideration should also be given to the broadening of the role of the committee.

It is those last words in which I am particularly interested "the broadening of the role of the committee". That recommendation indicates a certain feeling on the part of committee members, regardless of party, that the committee could perform a greater function rather than being entirely limited to examination of estimates and the questioning of officials. While such activities are very useful and very necessary the committee members felt that the government should give consideration to the broadening of the role of the committee. While the government is responsible for policy, we do feel that the committee could serve an even more useful purpose by having certain problems referred to it, maybe problems of a technical nature such as the testing of nuclear weapons, or the problems surrounding disarmament and other matters which might arise as a result of immediate situations. We feel the role of the committee could be extended to the great advantage of this House of Commons in general while, as I have said before, the government accepts the responsibility for policy on external affairs. That is why the committee unanimously adopted that last recommendation in its report.

Mr. Chairman, I see that the Prime Minister is looking this way and I am sure he will be interested to hear what is the foreign policy of the C.C.F. party. We held a national convention on April 23, 24 and 25 in Montreal attended by several hundred delegates from all across Canada. Those delegates had given consideration at the local level to the question of a foreign policy for Canada. The resolutions on foreign policy which were brought to the convention in abundance, were thoroughly discussed for a period of one day and finally sublimated, if I may use that word, in one resolution which was accepted by the convention and adopted. I wish to place on record what the foreign policy of the C.C.F. is at the present time. I will read the resolution and make a comment or two on it.

Foreign Policy

The race between the United States and the Soviet union to achieve superiority in the production and stockpiling of nuclear and thermo-nuclear weapons is creating a fearful atmosphere throughout the world. New and more powerful weapons, with a capacity to destroy that confounds the imagination, are being developed at an alarming rate. The C.C.F. warns that this situation cannot continue without a great risk of a world conflagration that could lead to the extinction of life on this planet.

Since that preamble was included in that resolution the Prime Minister has made an announcement which is a heartening step in the right direction.

Believing that it is urgent that greater emphasis be placed on positive means to ease international tensions and further the cause of peace, the convention urges:

1. That the testing of nuclear weapons be immediately abandoned and banned by all countries.

We hope we are all working toward that end.

2. That distribution of nuclear weapons to NATO and Warsaw pact countries be discontinued.

Very strong emphasis was placed on that point at our national conference.

3. That as soon as the testing and distribution of nuclear weapons has been stopped, a concerted effort be made to move forward to a policy of progressive disarmament involving both nuclear and conventional weapons, subject to adequate international inspection and control through the United Nations.

We in this group hope that events in recent days have provided some further opportunity for developments in that direction.

4. That advantage be taken of every opportunity for negotiation between the western powers and the U.S.S.R. with a view to establishing a neutralized zone in central Europe, and finding a solution to other political problems.

Though on account of recent events our eyes have been directed to the Middle East, we still have the core of the international situation situated, as it were, in the heart of Europe. For that reason the C.C.F. included that paragraph in its foreign policy declaration.

We also urge:

5. That a permanent international police force be established under the United Nations for use in critical situations as the occasion arises.

I made a few remarks on that subject earlier.

6. That, pending a large general settlement between eastern and western powers which will make it possible to dispense with regional alliances such as NATO, every policy be promoted which strengthens economic co-operation among NATO countries.

I do not think anyone would fail to recognize the fact that we have done very little to date to give effect to article 2 of the North Atlantic treaty.

7. That much greater emphasis be placed on economic aid through the United Nations, and to this end Canada should offer to contribute at least one per cent of its national income to a world plan of economic aid and development.

We have taken some steps in that direction, but we in this group believe we could do more and should do more. And finally:

The C.C.F. believes that Canada, in advancing these policies, should seek at all times to develop her own foreign policy and not allow herself to become compromised by views abroad which do not effectively promote world peace.

On that point, Mr. Chairman, I want to say on behalf of this group that while we realize there has been some progress we should like to see this government speak with a stronger voice on certain issues. We notice that the courage of our government is in ratio, shall I say, to the settlement of any international situation; we wait for other governments to act; we become brave after the problem has been met by the announcements of governments of greater nations. We do urge the government to speak with a stronger voice as far as Canada is concerned, and to use its prestige and influence in the world to give a lead on important issues and to indicate that Canada has a foreign policy which is not entirely dependent on Mr. Dulles or anybody of his mind.

We believe this could be done by standing up at this time and giving recognition to the government of China. When we find people like Mr. Muir going over there, to investigate conditions and when the Royal Bank of Canada prints his address in its monthly pamphlet entitled: "The Challenge of China"; when we find industrialists in British Columbia, large mining and smelting concerns and leaders of other industries in British Columbia, urging this action, then surely the government must realize that such a move would receive the support of the vast majority of the Canadian people.

We urge the government of Canada to take this step and show we are not waiting for the United States to take action first. The United States will recognize China at some future time, and if our government continues its present policy we can look forward to the recognition of China the day after the United States does so. We ask this government to take the lead.

To indicate British opinion on this matter I want to quote from a very reputable paper, the Christian Science Monitor of August 15, 1958. The article is headed "Bevan Rips Dulles on Red China Snub", and this is what Mr. Bevan, as reported in this newspaper, had to say:

If they persist in their present policies, then the smaller powers should concert among themselves to defy a leadership so myopic, so smugly self-satisfied, so dangerous and so unequal to the imperious needs of the times.

The article goes on:

Unfortunately for the smooth-running of Anglo-American relations, the majority of British people agree with Mr. Bevan in his deploring of American non-recognition of communist China.

It is one of the very few matters of which the nation as a whole does agree with Mr. Bevan.

I urge on behalf of this group that the government indicate that we do have an independent foreign policy. Let the government speak with a strong voice for Canada and recognize the government of China; let it speak with a stronger voice for the development of international agreement for the abandonment of nuclear tests; let it speak with a stronger voice in drawing attention to the economic injustice suffered by multitudes of people, because we know that there can be no peace in the world until economic injustice is removed from the Middle East, or from the Far East, or wherever it is found. And let it speak with a stronger voice with respect to the need for speeding up negotiations on disarmament as a result of an international agreement on inspection.

In conclusion I may say that the contribution of this group to the debate is a plea to the government of Canada to speak up with a stronger voice on the subjects I have mentioned.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I rise only to clear up a point concerning an exchange between the minister and myself regarding what he actually said in the committee on external affairs. I have the record before me; indeed, the hon. gentleman was good enough to send it over to me himself. On the bottom of page 103 the following appears:

> Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I just reiterate; I am not unhappy about the United Kingdom-United States arrangement.

That was the arrangement for the exchange of information on nuclear weapons.

> Mr. Pearson: We are not unhappy about it either, but that is not the point. The point is that surely the Americans can send us up a Bomarc for a Canadian squadron and say "fine; it is your own, if you pay for it". But when they send us up a nuclear warhead for the Bomarc for a Canadian squadron they say, "you can use it if we permit you to use it. You can store it on your station, but you cannot use it until we permit you to use it."
> Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): There is no question about storing nuclear warheads in Canada.

Terminable services—
104. Colombo plan, $35,000,000.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on item 104 regarding the Colombo plan.

Since I entered the house in 1953, we have been asked, at each session, to vote funds for capital and technical assistance to peoples struggling for the survival of their material and moral values within a democratic framework. What has struck me most is that, every time there has been a vote on this item, not a single member has ever opposed it. Furthermore, this attitude of all parties has been endorsed by the Canadian clergy of all denominations. But let me state for the record that some members of the present government have not always been in favour of our granting financial and technical assistance under the Colombo plan—especially to countries in South-East Asia.

Indeed, members on this side of the house —especially those from the province of Quebec—will recall that on several occasions, the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) denounced the Liberal government of the time in this connection. Among other things, they will recall that in a television program from Hull, he criticized the Liberal government for its aid, under the Colombo plan, to under-developed countries.

During the last two election campaigns, the Conservative party offered the rather ludicrous spectacle of denouncing the Liberal party in the province of Quebec for the Liberals' aid to under-developed countries, while proclaiming, in other provinces, that they were in favour of aid under the Colombo plan.

This can be seen from a political eyecatcher in the newspaper Le Droit of April 7, 1956:

> Mr. Lapalme and his Liberal buddies in Ottawa, deeply moved by the deplorable living conditions on the other side of the world are making an outright gift of $491,400,000 to countries of South-East Asia—

I want to quote another political eyecatcher for the record. It appeared in Le Droit of March 31, 1956:

> Mr. Lapalme and his Liberal buddies in Ottawa, who show much more concern for the problems of the Middle East and the Far East than they do for the problems of Quebec farmers, are heaping $4,198,293,000 upon foreigners . . . including red Russia, China and Czechoslovakia and other iron curtain countries.

Now, it is unnecessary to point out that this is utter nonsense, because we all know that we have made no presents to red Russia, China or Czechoslovakia.

I wish to conclude this part of my remarks by drawing your attention to an article in the Globe and Mail of June 1st 1956. In it the author protests against the trend launched by certain politicians in the province of Quebec, because of our contribution to the Colombo plan. The article reads as follows:

(Text):

Truth First Casualty—Verbal Violence Flares in Quebec Campaign . . . On the government side—

Which means the authorities of the province of Quebec—

—second place for irresponsibility goes to another advertisement (the gist of which is frequently used in the campaign speeches) attacking Canada's contributions to such international aid programs as the Colombo plan. This again is aimed at federal Liberals: Ottawa gives to those foreigners, the line runs; Duplessis gives to Quebec.

Mr. Ricard: You are completely out of order.

Mr. Denis: We have a new chairman. Do you not like this?

Mr. Ricard: He is a small man; he is very little.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, now that the government has 50 Quebec members to support it in this house, and that these gentlemen have no doubt acquired some sense of responsibility since the last elections, I hope that they will side with their government in respect of the Colombo plan and of the help to be given to under-developed countries. I hope that we will be spared this myth which was circulated in recent election campaigns, a myth fostered by reactionaries more concerned with demagogic advantage than with finding a solution to the great problems with which humanity is faced at this time.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who sit on this side of the house are proud to see that this year the government has increased assistance to under-developed countries under the Colombo plan. I do not think there is any greater challenge to western countries than to help raise the living standards of those countries situated along the borders of Russia and China and whose political organization has been developing along democratic lines.

I have the feeling that, at times, our political analysts and commentators overemphasize the few errors that Canada has possibly made in the international field; for they were errors made in good faith. On the other hand, I believe our successes are being underplayed. Indeed I do not know of anything we could have done that has been more practical, more human, and more likely to bring dividends than the assistance we have been giving for the last two years under the Colombo Plan. And the Liberals are very proud of their leadership in that regard because those countries badly need that assistance.

In the whole history of mankind, I do not know of any similar example, or precedent, where countries, for the sake of the survival of democracy on earth, shared their surpluses with needy nations. And we are not the poorer for it; we are as rich as we were a few years ago. Yet if, so far, we have been favoured and protected by providence, it is true that, even in Canada, people have, from time to time, to face hardship, and I know of none more cruel than that which has been visited upon us since March 31st last. However, Mr. Chairman, we are quite resigned to it, knowing that it is only temporary.

Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to make that point clear. I do not want to hold up the estimates of the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith), but I know that truth has its own rights. That is why I have spoken into the record facts which nobody can deny. If, however, some of my hon. Conservative friends from the province of Quebec want to refute them, I suggest they do so when I sit down.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, I would like a recorded vote on this item.

Item agreed to; yeas, 78; nays, nil.

A—Department and missions abroad

542. Departmental administration—further amount required, $259,230.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, on this item, which is a further item for departmental administration, I want to raise a particular matter. During this session all members in this house have expressed their concern regarding, and their unaltered opposition to, the Soviet union whenever it has done something that we felt should rightly be condemned, and in the case of Imre Nagy it was said in all parts of this house that his execution was an international tragedy. I think it is our duty to raise anything that we feel is wrong and should not take place, and perhaps more particularly if this possible occurrence should be within the boundaries of a friendly nation. I think Canadians in all walks of life have been deeply disturbed by the report of the pending execution, because of a sentence in the courts of Alabama, of a man by the name of Jimmie Wilson for having stolen $1.95 from a white woman.

In our discussion of external affairs it is possible for members in this house to refer to actions in any other nation of the world even though, as is always the case, we have no direct control and no direct responsibility over what may happen. The nation to the south of us is a friendly nation, a nation of people with whom we get along exceedingly well and a nation which has a particular place in my own heart because my mother happened to be born in the United States and did not come to Canada until she was an adult woman. I may say that my early recollections of discussions in our home as to the relative advantage of the Canadian type of parliamentary constitution and the United States type I had it impressed upon me very vigorously by my mother that the United States system in some particulars had some very distinct advantages. Therefore, I am not in any way anti-United States; if anything, I am pro-United States. Because of that, it disturbs me even more to think that under their law such a sentence may be carried out, and within the next few days.

As I understand it, the jurisdiction over clemency is under the governor of the state of Alabama, James E. Folsom. I have read reports—in fact, I have them in front of me—saying that the governor of that state very frequently has taken a lenient and humanitarian approach to such problems. I would express the hope that in this case the lenient, humanitarian aspects of the governor's character would prevail and that this execution may be prevented and will not take place.

President Eisenhower of the United States has taken a very stalwart attitude in opposition to discrimination within his nation because of race, colour or creed. Parliamentarians in all parties in Canada take that same attitude. I express the hope in the parliament of Canada that humanitarian aspects and attitudes and the deep generosity of the United States people will prevail and that this execution will not take place. I have said that I make this request on humanitarian grounds. There are other grounds. I think it would be an international calamity if the leaders of the communist world were given this ready-made club with which to continue their nefarious and troublesome course in the world.

I am not asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make a public pronouncement. I am not even asking him to say whether the Canadian government has given any thought to the matter but as a fellow member of parliament I do say to him that it is my hope that he and the government will use what I believe to be Canada's very great influence at all levels in the United States to see if we can assist in preventing this very disastrous thing from taking place on September 5.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to enter into a general discussion of a matter concerning another country, for gratuitous advice coming from this country respecting the administration of the criminal law of another country would be improper. In his opening words the hon. member referred to the strong stand taken when the premier of Hungary was murdered, in a totally tyrannical and unjustified manner. I do not take second place to anybody in humanitarian feelings respecting the need in these days of the rigours of the criminal law not being applied in the manner in which they were a little more than 100 years ago, but it would indeed be most improper for this government to take any action along the lines suggested, although not directly requested, by the hon. gentleman.

As I understand it, under the law of Alabama robbery is an offence punishable with death, and the fact that the convicted man is of one colour or another does not enter into the equation. I can still remember one of my forebears, who lived not to such a great age, telling me as a boy of executions taking place in what is now this province for the theft of two or three shillings. The general trend in all countries has been towards amelioration of the terrible penalties that used to be imposed, and having regard to the situation in the case in question and the fact that there is the right of appeal available to the state supreme court, in addition to the right of commutation of sentence in the governor, I am sure that the fears of the hon. gentleman may well be expected to be dissolved in the light of the reaction of the people within that country without other countries making known their views, based on the deep and abiding necessity of assuring the humanitarian ideals and emotions that move us all.

Mr. Pearson: I have just one word to say on the matter raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia. If and when one incident violates or appears to violate principles of law and justice, whether in our own country or in a neighbouring and friendly country, if and when that happens we do harm to ourselves and we do harm to the principles which we proclaim. Those systems which are not founded on our concept of law and justice seize on such violations and magnify and distort them in a way that harms the cause of freedom and free people everywhere.

I do not know all the facts in this particular case. If they are as reported in the press it would appear to be a tragic matter. But the United States, our friendly neighbour, is a land of law and justice, a land where people can right wrongs and correct injustices, and if there is wrong or injustice in this case I have confidence that the people of that state and that country will correct it.

Mr. Argue: I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his contribution to this discussion. I trust that the hope expressed by the Prime Minister in the concluding words of his statement will be borne out in subsequent days. The Prime Minister has said that the sentence imposed under the law of the state of Alabama is based entirely on a conviction for robbery and that colour has nothing to do with it whatsoever. That may be a correct statement of the written law but I am fearful, as I think many informed people are, that the application of the law is much more severe and rigorous in the case of a coloured man who is found guilty of robbing a white woman than in a similar case if a white person is found guilty. I am certain that a great many thinking people would question the assumption made by the Prime Minister but even if he were correct it is just as regrettable that this conviction should be hanging over a man who, according to the reports we read, has been found guilty of an offence involving the stealing of $1.95.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Pearson: If I am not out of order, I should like to say for the record that we were able to get through our work as quickly as we did because of the fact that these estimates were given very careful consideration by the standing committee on external affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

58. Departmental administration, $706,492.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. lady going to favour us with a statement?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Chairman, it occurred to me that in the interests of orderly discussion it might be well if I made a few remarks on the first division in these estimates, namely the citizenship registration branch and the citizenship branch, and reserved any further comments which I might make on immigration or on Indian affairs to their respective divisions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. lady would permit me to intervene. I think it has always been customary, on the departmental administration item which is the item which has been called, to permit a certain amount of general discussion. Of course I would not want to usurp the place of the hon. lady if she wished to go first on that item, but I think it might help, as it might possibly be unnecessary to have much discussion on the other items if we had a rather general discussion on the first item.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member misunderstood me. I intend to make a few remarks here on the citizenship registration branch and the citizenship branch but anything further that is to be said on immigration or on Indian affairs I propose to deal with on votes 62 and 66 respectively.

The Canadian citizenship registration branch is charged, as hon. members know, with the determination of the status of persons claiming Canadian citizenship, the examination of applications under the act of persons applying for Canadian citizenship and the preparation of certificates. The branch is also responsible for the procedures involving revocation or loss of Canadian citizenship and the procedures pertaining to the registration of births of Canadian citizens outside of Canada.

During 1957 more than 151,000 applications under the Canadian Citizenship Act were received by the branch compared with approximately 100,000 in 1956. As a result of these applications approximately 142,000 certificates were prepared, 95,000 of which were granted to persons acquiring Canadian citizenship in 1957. In 1956 a total of almost 80,000 certificates were prepared, 55,000 of which were granted to applicants for citizenship. Citizenship was granted in 1957 to 8,650 British subjects, and 86,812 aliens, while in 1956, 5,812 British subjects and 49,590 aliens were granted Canadian citizenship. There were more than 39,000 miniature certificates issued during 1957. This is an increase of more than 21,000 over 1956.

In this connection I should like to refer to remarks made early this session by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, and I quote from page 15 of the English translation of the speech he delivered in French on May 26, 1958:

> It is a well known and incontrovertible fact that, at this time, Canadian citizens are unable to produce an efficient means of identification. Yet everybody knows that the introduction of legislation designed to remedy this situation would be highly advantageous.

Then later in his speech he went on to say this:

> What does the Canadian citizen have today by way of identification? We have nothing but secondary documents: a driver's licence, a pass, a credit card, all of which can be stolen by someone else and used fraudulently. In my opinion, it is absolutely necessary that people have a real identification card, so made that it could not be imitated.

The hon. member submitted that this responsibility should be entrusted to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. It is unfortunate that the hon. member did not take time to check his facts. Had he done so, he would have learned that since October 1954 the Canadian citizenship registration branch of this department has been issuing pocket size certificates of citizenship laminated in plastic, carrying a photograph and a specimen signature of the bearer, together with pertinent descriptive information. Since October 1954, more than 65,000 of these miniature certificates have been issued to Canadian citizens and the demand for them is greater each year.

As the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville apparently needs a proper identification document, if he will fill in the appropriate form which he can obtain from my office, and return it accompanied by two photographs of himself, I will see that he gets a miniature citizenship certificate, without payment of the regular fee, as a gift from the minister.

To return to registration, 86 per cent of the applicants for citizenship in 1957 resided in urban areas, while 14 per cent resided in rural districts. For applicants in rural areas residing some distance from a court special procedures are available under the act, whereby they may file their applications directly with the registrar. In order to deal with these applications from remote areas, 24 persons were appointed under the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1957 to act as courts for citizenship purposes. These apointments brought to 65 the number of courts so appointed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin by pointing out to the committee or, perhaps I should say, reminding those members of the committee who were in a similar committee in the last brief parliament that when the hon. lady presented the estimates of another department at that time I predicted that she would soon advance in the cabinet. My prediction turns out to have been right. The hon. lady began her career as minister by occupying the portfolio that was entrusted to me when I began my career as minister. She has now succeeded to the other portfolio I held while I was a minister. The highest hope I can express for the hon. lady is that after the next election she may find herself where I am now.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not much of a hope.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, it may well be that in spite of that I will do what I can before that time comes to see that the hon. lady is not even here at all. However, that is not meant to be a threat. I think there are other ministers whom I would sooner take on in verbal combat than the hon. lady because I imagine she could rally to her support quite considerable numbers not only of the members of her own sex but perhaps even more of the other.

I want to say that it has been my view—and I was rather proud of this fact when I occupied the position which the hon. lady now occupies—that this department, namely the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, through its activities has contributed greatly to that quite extraordinary development of our country that has taken place in the years since immigration was resumed after the second world war. I must say that I very much appreciated a tribute that was paid the other day to what had happened to this country in those years, so much so that I should like to recall to the minds of members of the committee this statement:

> Canada's future promises tremendous expansion and, in my opinion, greater than any other nation in the world in the next quarter century.

Those words I wish particularly to commend to the committee.

> Behind us is a record of nation-building unmatched in history;

That tribute to the work of the St. Laurent government by the present Prime Minister when he opened the exhibition in Toronto two days ago is very much appreciated on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do think that the work of the hon. lady's department has greatly contributed to this end, but I must say I was not able to find quite the same encouragement in another part of the Prime Minister's speech on that occasion, when he said the following:

> The employment situation is improving and in July 1958, Canadians with jobs numbered 5,934,000—

Mark these words:

> —only 15,000 below the high level in 1957, and 145,000 more than in July 1956. There has been an upturn in employment this spring and summer—a good deal more than seasonal.

I think we can take only very limited satisfaction from these statistics. We have half a million more people in this country than we had when the present administration came into office and it is not much of a boast for the Prime Minister to make, that there are 15,000 fewer of them working. I have no doubt, of course, that that is the reason why the department is continuing to follow the policy which was the first change in policy from that followed by the previous administration, the policy of severely restricted immigration. I am afraid it is very unlikely that if things go on the way they are going now the hon. lady will be able to boast, when she comes to the end of her career as minister of immigration, that she brought immigration to the highest point which had been reached since 1913, which was the record of the Liberal government.

Nothing I have heard during this parliament has moved me more than the words used by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort in his maiden speech in this house, and I make no apology for trespassing for a moment on the time of the committee to recall a few of those words at this time because they are strictly relevant to the work of the hon. lady's department. The hon. member talked about his arrival in Ottawa, and as reported at page 476 of Hansard for May 26, 1958, he said:

> When I arrived here in Ottawa for the first time and walked across from Union station to parliament hill I was all eyes, and my heart was filled with emotion when I saw the graceful parliament buildings, the statues and the other historic sites. The first statue that I walked up to was that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the great French-Canadian statesman, and as I looked up I could almost see a twinkle in his eyes. I thought I could hear him say these words: "What are you, a little immigrant of just 29 years residence, here in Ottawa for? Didn't I hear you say that all you wanted from life was to come to Canada and to make a home for yourself and your family? I thought you were very content when Canada had given you this opportunity and your life's ambition was achieved, but now I see you are here as the new member for Humboldt-Melfort to represent this great constituency in the 24th parliament. As this is the case, go on then, and do the job assigned to you for the glory of Canada and your constituency." These are the words I thought I heard this great statesman say to me, and as I walked slowly away a vision appeared before my eyes depicting the last 29 years spent in this wonderful country of my adoption.

I do not think even the most stony-hearted of us could help but be moved by that statement. In the world in which we are now living there are very few countries about which such words could be used, and I am not seeking to make any particular point of this. I could not help but think that it was a good thing that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort came to Canada in 1929, when the government was a Liberal government, because in 1930 the doors were closed and in the years after, from 1930 until 1935, we actually had a net emigration from this country. It does seem to me, sir, that this was one of those bad turns which we have taken in the course of our development, and I do hope we are not going to take another one now.

I am not suggesting, of course, that we have taken such a turn; I do not blame the present administration for not bringing to Canada people who cannot find any work here. The position we took when in office and the position I would take if I were still in office is that it would be a great mistake —the greatest mistake we could possibly make so far as the future of immigration is concerned—if we encouraged people to come here to settle in this country when there were no opportunities for them to get jobs fairly quickly. My experience as a minister, and I am sure this is the experience of the hon. lady, is that one dissatisfied immigrant can do more harm to Canada's reputation abroad than one hundred do good. We cannot, of course, help having a few dissatisfied people, but we certainly do not want to bring immigrants to this country to be dissatisfied. I have no criticism of the fact, in itself, that at the present time because of limited employment opportunities the department is not bringing people here.

I do hope, and we all hope, that the conditions now prevailing will soon change and that the Prime Minister was right when he said there has been an upturn in employment this spring and summer, "a good deal more than seasonal". No one will rejoice at this more than those of us who believe that there is a great future in this country and that there is going to be room in it for even more people than those we can produce at home, and there is no reason for not producing at home all we reasonably can produce. My thoughts on that subject are very well known and I have never made any apology for them.

I was very pleased indeed when the hon. lady's department announced the other day that, in order to complete the liquidation of the situation created in the free world by the tragic events two years ago in Hungary, the Canadian government had undertaken to receive, if I remember the figure correctly, 1,100 more Hungarian refugees. On the day I read that announcement I asked a question in this house and was given some information which I do not have at hand but which is of the most encouraging and reassuring nature. I am sure that most Canadians will agree with these remarks if they are possessed of any breadth of view at all.

Here were people who had left their country with nothing but what they were wearing and who could not go back to their country for fear at least of imprisonment and possibly of death, who had none of the advantages of most immigrants but who, after one and a half years in Canada at the most, had made their way to such an extent that of the 35,000 who came here less than 1,000 were receiving support from the department. As a matter of fact I think the figure was a great deal less than that. Those who had thrown up the sponge and had gone back to Hungary numbered less than 500. I apologize for quoting these figures from memory, but I do not think my recollection is very far out and, if anything, I have given a high figure for those receiving assistance. What this means is that these people who had no intention or thought of ever coming to Canada until these tragic events took place, had made no preparation for what they would find here. Let us not forget that most of them were young people who lived for 15 years under a communist regime with all that that implies, are for the most part adapting themselves to the new and difficult conditions of a new country, establishing themselves, and that most of them are already self-supporting.

I would think that that is something in which we can take some satisfaction. I make no apology for saying that I am not ashamed of my part in it, and I want to say without any hesitation whatsoever that I am very appreciative of the fact that the present administration under the hon. lady and under the Minister of Justice who preceded her in charge of the department have followed precisely the policies that were followed by the previous administration, and that there has been no political controversy whatsoever about this very important migration.

Perhaps I might not have said this if we were not following immediately after the consideration of the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, but I want to say that I believe that if the Canadian government, with the unanimous support of the Canadian parliament, had not shown the vigour which we showed in December of 1956, this problem of the free world would not have been solved. We Canadians did far more in relation to our size and resources than any other country in the world. In fact we have taken almost as many Hungarian refugees as the United States which has ten times our population and much more than ten times our wealth, and if we had not done what we did in the way we did it and with the vigour with which it was done—I am not seeking any special credit for myself, because we were all unanimous about it—this problem might not have been solved; and if tens of thousands of these Hungarians had gone back behind the iron curtain the moral effect on the whole world is something I should not like to be contemplating now. Therefore, I think we, as Canadians, regardless of party, can take some satisfaction in this one particular achievement of the hon. lady's department.

I have no other general observations to make at this stage about immigration but I do want to say one very brief word about citizenship, and only one very brief word at this time. I noticed the other day—in fact, on June 30—a report in the Toronto Star of a meeting of the Czechoslovak Canadians in Toronto which was addressed by a predecessor of the hon. lady and of myself, the first minister of citizenship and immigration in the history of Canada, Hon. Walter Harris. During this meeting, Mr. Harris took exception to statements which had been made by one of the county judges. I am not going to give his name or the part of the country from which he comes because I have no desire to pillory anyone; it is just the sentiment that was expressed to which I want to take exception here, as Mr. Harris took exception to it on that occasion. This judge was reported to have said that many new Canadians are unwilling to renounce their countries of origin, and cited instances of Russian Canadians and Dutch Canadians turning out in national costume to greet visiting fellow countrymen. Mr. Harris' comment on this, which I want to make my own, was as follows:

> I disagree with the judge. It is a proper thing to honour the visiting head of an allied state. If there was a free president of the state of Czechoslovakia I would expect you to honour him if he visited Canada.

Mr. Harris went on to point out that there was no need to lose one's pride in one's origin and to lose one's pride in one's heritage and one's past because one has become a Canadian citizen.

It seems to me that one of the reasons we have for having a greater pride in our citizenship than almost any other people in the world is that to as great an extent as any other country in the world, once we have admitted people to this country we do generally accept them, as fellow citizens on a basis of equality and I hope that may always be the case.

I want also to say a word, before I conclude these remarks, about the future of those original inhabitants of this country who were here before any of our ancestors or any of us came to this country. I feel, and I have always felt, that the supreme responsibility of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—the most important responsibility of all—is that responsibility which appertains to another office which the hon. lady holds, the office of superintendent general of Indian affairs, which is the oldest office in the public service of Canada, an office which, like some of our ancestors, was transported across the Niagara river from the state of New York into Canada after the American revolution, an office which has persisted ever since.

It does seem to me that it should be our ambition in Canada to make that office obsolete, and that the supreme duty of anyone charged with the responsibility for Indian affairs should be to see that the day will come as soon as possible when there will no longer be any Indian affairs in Canada, but not in the way, of course, in which that, unhappily, happened in the province in which I was elected.

We do know, of course, that in the last generation the Indian population of this country, far from decreasing as had been the case for a long time, has been increasing and that today it is increasing more rapidly than the rest of the population though it has no additions through immigration. We do know that the policy of segregation, whatever there may have been to say for it when it was adopted a century ago, is certainly no answer to the problem as it exists today. Not that anybody, least of all the superintendent general, should ever think of forcible desegregation, because there are so many of the Indians who fear that, as the minister has no doubt discovered and as I discovered on more than one occasion. But I do think it should be our aim to the greatest possible extent that it can be done by voluntary means and by persuasion to encourage, support and help the Indians to move away from segregation and to become ordinary members of the Canadian community.

Of course, I believe that the most effective way to achieve that, as soon as it can be done in an ordinary fashion without outraging people's feelings and without upsetting existing arrangements to which people have devoted their lives and energies until something better can replace them, would be to end segregation in education, and I hope the hon. lady, even if we are at the stage of trying to end the session as soon as we can and we do not want to take undue time on the estimates of her department, will tell us what progress is being made in the field of joint education.

By that I mean an arrangement for bringing the Indians into the same schools as other citizens so that they are brought up together from the beginning because there is no substitute for that, none whatever. I know a great many improvements have been made in the last ten years in the field of Indian education. Every year some new improvements are made. I do not expect the hon. lady has had very much time since she assumed her portfolio, and she has been sitting in the house most of the time since then, to make any great reforms herself but I would be interested if she would tell us what progress is being made particularly with the scholarship scheme that was instituted a year or two ago and what progress is being made in having more and more Indians take vocational training and in encouraging some of the most promising of them to go to the universities.

There is another aspect of Indian integration which was very close to my heart when I was the minister and that is what was called economic development. Since the minister was not present last January when I last discussed the subject I shall make no apology for repeating very briefly what I said then about the useful things that were being done in this field. I remember the first time an approach was made to the gold mines to persuade them to take some Indians into their employ. I was approached by a representative of the mining association to see if I would not try to find immigrants to go into the mines. In reply I said, "You have labour right at your door, labour that has always been here. Will you not try Indians?" I must say that when I first suggested it the suggestion was considered startling. They seemed almost horrified at the idea but I persuaded them to make an attempt and I was greatly gratified by the reports I received of those experiences. I was also greatly pleased by the last report I heard of what was being done, particularly at Pickle Crow. I daresay the hon. lady may not herself have become familiar with that yet, but it is one of the more successful attempts to find really useful employment for the Indians in the area in which they live, a locality where perhaps it would not be too easy to persuade newcomers to the country to go in the first instance.

At the time I was in the department and in direct touch with this work we had a gentleman, Mr. Mel Jack, who has now moved on to other fields. I make no apology for mentioning his name. I had a little something to do with Mr. Jack coming into the department in the first place. I thought he brought to this work an imagination, an energy and sometimes an unorthodox approach that was not characteristic of all civil servants. Perhaps he was more the kind of civil servant I was than some other civil servants are but—

Mr. McGee: You are too modest.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but I will not carry that analogy any further. What I am concerned about and my reason for mentioning this is that I want to be assured that the work Mr. Jack was doing in the department is being carried out in the same spirit in which he was doing it because his conception about what should be done about the problem, and it was also mine, was that we must not mollycoddle the Indians. The thing to do, in his view, was to try to find work for these people and encourage them to stand on their own feet, look after themselves, and become self-respecting and independent members of society. It seemed to me that Mr. Jack enjoyed the most extraordinary success in interesting employers and other people in this activity and all hon. gentlemen know how much all these activities depend upon the devotion and initiative of those who have direct charge of them.

I do hope this work is provided for adequately as I hope all the activities of the department are provided for adequately. It is because these two aspects of Indian affairs, education and economic development, seem to me to be the road to the future that I make no apology for having made special reference to them. That is in no sense meant to disparage the other very necessary activities of the department.

I am sure the hon. lady has been criticized, as I was criticized, for the unfortunate aspect of the department; that is, the necessity and obligation we as a people are under to see that the welfare of the Indians is looked after even though—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry if I am trespassing—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to give unanimous consent to permitting the hon. member to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had just a thought or two to express before concluding and I am grateful for the indulgence of the committee for permitting me to underline the following points. I believe we must not forget the Indians are not to blame for the state in which too many of them still find themselves and that we have an inescapable obligation to see that the Indians who are not able to look after themselves are looked after in an adequate fashion. But we must also always keep before us the real objective to put them in a position where they feel they can compete with others on an equal basis. There is no doubt whatever that Indians have just as much intelligence on the average as the rest of us but what they do lack in so many cases is that feeling of confidence that comes from a certain measure of independence and above everything else this is what we must seek to give them.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a comment before someone else speaks. If he would permit a comment I would say that I have noted a vast difference in the ex-minister since his association with Mel Jack began.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, of all the numerous departments of our government the one over which the hon. lady presides with such grace and distinction is to my mind one of the most important. I wish to congratulate the charming minister for the diligence and prompt attention she gives to inquiries with respect to matters under her jurisdiction which even I as a new member have been able to observe in the short few months I have had the privilege of sitting in this chamber. I have had occasion to contact the minister on several occasions, mostly by mail, and I have always received courteous and immediate attention. I have no doubt that all hon. members of this committee in their experience with it have gained the impression that this is an efficient, well-run department.

The Gordon report on Canada's economic prospects—and by the way, it is not a secret document—states that a substantial flow of immigrants is needed during the next seven or eight years to compensate for the relative scarcity of native-born entrants into the labour force. It also makes reference to the Department of Labour's estimates that in the absence of immigration in the nine years between 1946 and 1955 the labour force would have declined with a resultant retarding of our economic development.

I realize that there are arguments against immigration. One is that immigrants take jobs from the native-born and the other is that they work for less pay. I disagree with both of these opinions. Immigration creates new consumer markets and in some cases it has brought considerable capital investment and has been responsible for the establishment of new industry. And, as pointed out by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, it has been responsible for bringing in people who have made a notable contribution to the development of the country.

As for wages, immigrants from the British Isles and from Europe are not unfamiliar with trade unions. As a matter of fact, those immigrants came to us because of a desire to better their standard of living, as is the desire of any Canadian, and are therefore not a deterrent to well developed trade unions. On the contrary, they are for the most part the trade union's greatest supporters.

It should not be forgotten that the whole of Canada's prosperity has been brought about by immigration. It can be said that the development of our natural resources and the prosperity of our country as a whole are a direct result of population. Since 1939, as the Gordon report shows:

> The development has been rippling across many sectors of the economy. According to a publication known as the "Population Reference Bureau" which has been doing research work on Canada, the high ratio of resources to people places Canada in the most favourable position in the world.

Canadians are wont to compare Canada with the United States, the income, the production and the number of consumers. The Gordon report states that the United States produced 16 times as much as Canada did. There is no question that the relative position of the Canadian people will improve as the population grows. Canada has 4.3 persons per square mile in comparison with 58 per square mile in the United States; therefore, no one can say that we are overcrowded.

It is rather significant that during most of those years immigration has been averaging 120,000 a year. Now, immigration is practically at a standstill. It seems to me we should be looking forward and beyond the present setback in unemployment, which appears to be a deterrent to immigration.

Where are the plans for the development of the north? Surely this government can direct the economy to full employment and adopt a long-term policy on immigration and give immediate consideration to the lifting of the present restrictions.

Speaking of restrictions, I may say it appears to me that a more generous attitude toward immigrants from Asiatic countries should be considered, especially where there is a distinct hardship imposed on Canadian citizens of Chinese and Japanese origin, when individuals are seeking admission of certain categories of relatives which section 20(d) of the act seems to exclude, such as an older brother, a nephew, a married daughter and her family, an adopted son, a widowed sister, and so on.

My experience with people of Asiatic origin has been most happy. In Fort William we have several hundred people of Japanese and Chinese extraction, and they are the most industrious and law-abiding citizens that we have. If we broaden the ethnic origins by immigration from any and all countries it will not harm us. On the contrary, it will be beneficial. Canada's transition to a multiracial society can make only for new strength and stability. But what is even more important than the conditions of entry to Canada is the way we treat immigrants once they are admitted for permanent residence in our country. We want to make sure that all Canadians, whatever their origin, have complete equality in letter and in spirit in this nation of Canada.

Since the end of world war II more than 1½ million immigrants have arrived in Canada. They have settled in all parts of the country, in large cities, in small towns, and in rural areas. Once they have arrived in Canada their new homeland their great and overwhelming ambition is to become Canadian citizens. The story of how these new Canadians are finally and formally inducted into the fabric of Canadian citizenship and into the responsibilities which Canadian citizenship entails is not one to which we can point with pride.

I have before me a copy of a survey of some naturalization court ceremonies held in some communities throughout the country. They more or less follow a pattern. Usually they are held in a courthouse in an uninspiring setting, with a judge saying a few words of caution, followed by a short address by some elected or appointed official, maybe the mayor or a member of parliament, or the president of the chamber of commerce. Were it not for the interest shown by members of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire, who are usually represented and who do try to emphasize the patriotic motive of the event by handing out a booklet on Canada, there is little to indicate the tremendous importance of the ceremony, not only to the recipient but to every Canadian.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is a lady of perception and well-versed in the activities of that wonderful organization, the I.O.D.E., which I have already mentioned. I express the hope that the government will consider the establishment of a uniform program, with suitable publicity provided for. The book which I hold in my hand, issued by the Canadian citizenship council, contains several good suggestions and from it I wish to read one or two paragraphs which indicate the study and care which went into the preparation of this book:

> Could we have a ceremony ritual incorporated in the citizenship act? This could leave room for local variations, but the main items would be part of the act, simply establishing that the granting of certificates shall be by award in public, each recipient shall be accompanied by his sponsors, and the presiding judge shall follow the procedure laid down in schedule X. Representatives of local, civic and provincial authorities and organizations interested in citizenship shall be invited to attend and, where convenient, be given part in the ceremony. All of this should be set out in the act in legal phraseology.

I express the hope that the hon. lady will give serious consideration to a new approach to the reception of new Canadian citizens and a long range plan of immigration.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I well realize, Mr. Chairman, that possibly the patience of the committee is getting rather limited at this point. However, I should like to take a few minutes to bring to the attention of the minister a very important matter. I am rising on a matter of extreme urgency and I should like to appeal to the minister for immediate attention to this problem if at all possible.

It concerns the adequacy of fresh drinking water for the Indian people who live on the Eskasoni reservation in my constituency. Since 1956, two years ago, the chief of the Eskasoni band, Mr. Wilfred Prosper, has been seeking improved water facilities for his people. To illustrate this point may I read from a letter dated October 30, 1957, signed by Chief Prosper and bringing the matter to my attention. At that time he said:

> Many of our people are drinking water from our brooks and marshes and many of our children have in the past been adversely affected.

May I add here that I have personally seen these people dipping water out of roadside drains. That, you will agree, is a very startling statement. Equally startling is his next statement:

> Since our agent has been unsuccessful we are asking you to intercede for us as correction has been promised over a year ago.

For more than a year these Indian people have been forced to endanger their health and perhaps their lives by having to resort to drainage water after their drilled wells ceased to yield a sufficient supply or became grossly contaminated. Fortunately new sources of water have been found for them but at a considerable distance from their homes.

I brought this matter to the attention of the former minister and it is my information that the regional superintendent of Indian agencies for the maritimes conducted a full investigation. In his recommendation he stated that the only logical course of action now open to the department is to instal a proper pressure system in preference to a system of drilled wells which, in the past, has proven to be unsatisfactory.

I am cognizant of the fact that installation of such a system is not without engineering problems. I appeal to the present minister, knowing her interest in the welfare of the Indian people, to take this case under immediate advisement. The cost of extending pipe line facilities to the reservation may, I fully understand, constitute a rather expensive proposition, but I have no hesitation in recommending it to the minister's attention for two very important reasons. First, we should always be mindful of our obligations to care for our Indian people in all parts of Canada. Second, the cost of pipe lines would be an extremely modest investment if used as a means of warding off a horrible epidemic brought about by further governmental neglect of this problem which, may I say, has been inherited by the present administration.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have a considerable number of questions I want to ask the minister later regarding the public archives and the national gallery but I should like to make a few remarks now and ask some questions on the citizenship and immigration part of the minister's responsibilities.

I asked a question some time ago on the order paper about the backlog of immigration applications in Italy. My question stemmed from questions asked in the house during the last session of the then minister. In essence, I interpreted what the former minister told us as meaning that one of the reasons for the backlog in Italy, which he said could not be relieved by establishing additional offices, was that there was a lack of co-operation on the part of the Italian authorities. That seemed to me to be implicit in his answer although not there in actual words.

I have spoken to a number of people of Italian background in my community and they still insist to me that one of the best things that could be done to improve Canada's immigration service in Italy would be the establishment of one or more offices in the field. I made this point the last time I had the opportunity and the minister turned it down, as I interpret it, because there was a lack of Italian co-operation. I should like to have the opinion of the present minister in this regard. I should also like to know how big the backlog is at the present time and whether it is continuing to grow.

One other factor has come to my attention affecting several Italian immigrants who have come to Canada, obtained Canadian citizenship, have then wanted to go to the United States and have sought to be placed on the quota list. Until these cases were drawn to my attention I did not know that despite the fact they are American citizens they are not treated as such by the United States government which places people on their quotas, I understand, according to national origin.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member made a slip of the tongue. He said "despite the fact they are American citizens". He meant Canadian citizens.

Mr. Fisher: Canadian citizens. I know that the minister, because of her statements, is as anxious as I am that these people should have full Canadian rights with regard to moving to another country, but they do not have full Canadian rights. I know that the answer is, what can Canada do about it, but I wonder whether representations have been made and discussions held with the United States authorities on this point and what reply they have made.

Another matter in connection with immigration that interests me has to do with whether there has been any recent improvement in the handling of people in Poland who desire to come to Canada. From the difficulties that people in this country have who are anxious to bring out relatives from Poland, it is obvious that while the Polish government is co-operating it is not doing so as fully as it might. It is also obvious that there is quite a load on the Canadian officers in Warsaw in this regard. I should like to have a statement on what the situation is at the present time in terms of difficulty and whether there has been any recent improvement.

On the topic of our Indians I was interested that the former minister under the Liberal regime should have mentioned the Pickle Crow experience. I am not surprised. I was interested to note that is one place where good work has been done because my first full time job was in the Pickle Crow area working underground. I remember that the biggest shock I ever had as a Canadian occurred at the Central Patricia mine when I walked over from the bunkhouse to the cookhouse for my first dinner. I may say that the meals were very good and there was a whole line of garbage cans outside with a considerable amount of waste. At each garbage can there were three or four Indian children and women fishing around in them. I will always remember that at the first garbage can there was a quite attractive Indian girl of about 16. A couple of cantaloup rinds and some blueberries were floating on top of the garbage and this young girl was fishing them out as if they were prizes.

It is a shock that has never left me and I have been very curious and pleased to discover just in the last six or seven months the attempts that have been made in that area to get work for some of the Indians. I know from some of the inquiries that have come in from the mine property that it is almost a mine philanthropy in a sense in that some of the miners and some of the management officers are trying to look after the aged Indians, trying to find out such things as their date of birth, and this is an especially good example.

One of the difficulties in connection with Indians doing any permanent work in the pulp and paper operations in my area is that there has been a switch in the pulp and paper operations to the use of the chain saw. The difficulty is that the chain saws are quite expensive and the Indians do not seem to have the aptitude towards taking care of those chain saws and the general equipment that other people have. While they are good workers while they are working and can quite often turn out a pretty high cordage, it seems very difficult to give them an incentive to work steadily. The tendency is that after they cut 15 cords or 20 cords they come in and get paid for it and then they lounge around, taking it easy. It is very hard to get them to integrate into the bunkhouse set up or the dormitory set up that one has in pulp and paper operations.

In the area from Sioux Lookout east along the north line of the C.N.R. and down towards the lakehead where a great deal of pulpwood is cut, I think much more use could be made of Indians. I think it is a challenge to the Indian affairs branch to try to get them working for more companies and with greater co-operation. I think in a sense it will be a philanthropy for some time on the part of these companies doing this; it may be some time before they begin to get a real return from the Indians. I know I talked to one woods manager who told me that the only place they had really been able to get a full return from the Indians happened to be in connection with where they were cutting up some burned pulp wood stands right handy to an Indian reservation. Because there was a little bit of stability in the Indian community they turned out very good work. From my knowledge of the Indian agents in the particular region from which I come, I do not feel that they in themselves have the scope or the imagination to carry out this sort of work. In other words, I am suggesting an expansion of a kind of work that I do not believe the department has tackled up till now in any consistent way.

One of the other comments I wanted to make I received from two chiefs in that particular area. I am not going to name them or the band because they were quite specific about that; but they both feel that the Indian agents have their interest at heart, that they are in many ways kind and considerate men but that they definitely take the attitude "We know best". In the case of one chief and his band in particular, this is a fairly consistent aggravation. The minister may know from her dealings now with the Indians how hard it is to get them to give you concrete proposals that you can present to remedy things. I suppose it is just something that has to move along and grow and develop. The only suggestion I can make in this regard is that she try as best she can to get her Indian agents to subdue that attitude "We know what is best for you" and to see if they can move further along the line of encouraging the Indians to take more responsibility for their own affairs.

I do not know whether or not the minister has read the book by a young lad who came out from England and worked as an agent at the Gull Bay Indian reserve. It is a sort of a lark. I think it is very pleasing to read. I think he stretched a long bow in certain places; but contained within the book, I think, is a fairly good indication of the Indian character, at least as it is manifested in northwestern Ontario.

I should like to see some of the best minds in the country, especially in the sociological sense, turned loose on that particular problem to see what we can do. I will not say to alter the Indian character but to get into the Indian life some of the incentives that the rest of the Canadian community accepts and at present the Indian does not. That is about all of the questions and remarks I have for now until we come to the archives.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on citizenship and immigration estimates. The city of Kitchener which is in my riding of Waterloo North is probably the greatest cosmopolitan centre of its size in Canada. Kitchener has over 500 Jewish people, 500 Polish people, 4,000 Germans and many others from foreign countries. My correspondence, as you can well understand, is made up of about 40 per cent of citizenship and immigration problems. I should like to take this opportunity of extending my sincere thanks to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration for the wonderful co-operation I have received from her during this session and from those in her department. Through her efforts many families have been brought together after many years of separation. These people are becoming fine citizens of this great Canada of ours. On their behalf I again say to the minister: Thanks a million for your co-operation and that of your department.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): My remarks at this time, Mr. Chairman, at this time will be rather brief. However, I should just like to say a few words on behalf of the hundreds of people who are spread throughout Europe, families that were broken up during the war and for different reasons wives and children have been unable to get to this country to join their husbands. I know that most of those people are behind the iron curtain. On their behalf I should like to make a strong appeal to the minister and use every influence she has with the Russian embassy in trying to see if we cannot get some of these people out here and get those families united again.

Like my friend the hon. member for Waterloo North, in my county, which is a good place to live, we have a great many people who come in and a great many people who would like to come in. In my dealings with the immigration department I find that we run across a great many problems which you might say were borderline problems. You might say that I was a bit of a border problem myself when I came into this country and I realize what it is all about. I recall that when I came to this country two things were necessary. You had to be vaccinated. You had to have $15. I was vaccinated, all right, but I did not have the $15. However, my brother was with us. He went into the immigration shed first, showed his vaccination, showed his $15 and came around and pushed it through the slats to me. I then went in and we both entered for the same price. I hope the minister will not look back too much at my record or she might want to deport me.

There is another matter that I should like to raise at this time. It has to do with British subjects from Hong Kong. A number of them are trying all the time to get into this country. I think we are just a little bit hard in that respect. For one thing, they must be less than 21 years of age. I think the age limit could be raised somewhat, which would certainly help in many cases. It is rather unfortunate that a British subject should find it so hard to get into Canada when he can get into other parts of the British commonwealth quite easily.

There is another matter which I would like to bring forward and that is in connection with those immigrants who have come to Canada who are elderly people. A great many of them try from time to time to get their citizenship papers but they find that they are unable to do so because they have not been able to learn to speak the English language. I think when we are dealing with people who are getting up in years, say 60 or 70 years of age, they should have the privilege of becoming Canadian citizens before they pass on. In special cases I think the fact that they do not speak English should be overlooked.

I have not prepared a speech because I did not expect to speak at this time but I would like the minister to look into the situation with respect to families behind the iron curtain. I have in mind particularly the Chinese people who wish to bring their children and in some cases their wives or other relatives to join them in Canada but find that there is a great problem in getting them out here. I also wish to mention the problem of those people who have come to Canada from Hong Kong and I would ask that consideration be given to this whole problem of making it easier for Asiatic people to come to Canada. I do not mean we should open the door and let them all come in but I do feel that in special cases where there is a real reason for relaxing the regulations we should not stick to technicalities.

59. Citizenship registration branch, $511,513.

Mrs. Fairclough: Before proceeding, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one or two remarks in reference to comments made in this debate. First, on the question raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with respect to the remarks of a judge at a citizenship proceeding, I am sure we all regretted that these remarks should have been made. Whether they were actually made in the form in which they appeared in the press is, of course, open to question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had the same idea and that is why I did not mention the name of the judge.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure there is no hon. member of this house who has not had some of his remarks misinterpreted or the wrong impression taken from them but, be that as it may, I think we might well be guided in our thinking by the words of a famous English poet who probably was not thinking of immigration when he penned those memorable lines "that man's the true cosmopolite who loves his native country best."

The hon. member for Fort William said, among other things, that there should be equality for all Canadians, and I might say that that is the motive behind the presentation of the amendment to the Citizenship Act, which I think we will be considering in this house next week.

With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Lincoln in regard to applicants for citizenship who are unable to convince the court of their knowledge of the English language, may I say that this is a matter within the discretion of the court. A judge may, if he thinks it proper, give citizenship status to these people after they have a residence of 20 years, even though they do not have what he considers to be adequate knowledge of one of the two languages of Canada.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I might suggest that that information be passed along to a great many judges who do not seem to be aware of that practice.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to make one observation and ask one or two questions of the minister. The hon. lady quoted the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. I am sure she did not intentionally misinterpret the hon. gentleman, but since she quoted his remarks I have looked at his speech and it seems to me quite clear that what he was advocating was a compulsory citizenship certificate for everyone. While I am not endorsing the hon. gentleman's remarks, I do think they make the observations of the minister beside the point.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I just say in that regard that the hon. member is quite right. I did misconstrue the remarks of the hon. gentleman but my offer still holds.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh yes, I am sure that if the hon. lady would like a little advertising for these cards—

Mrs. Fairclough: I have one myself.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have one of my own, signed by myself, and I have often wondered whether it might not confuse the people at the border if I ever used it, but there are very few of us who can have that distinction—the hon. lady, Mr. Harris and myself.

The first question I wanted to ask was whether the hon. lady could say whether there are any communities in Canada other than Toronto and Montreal—that is to say large urban areas—where it would appear to be advisable to establish federal courts. I know there are outlying places where federal courts are established but I am wondering if, for instance, in Vancouver, Hamilton, Winnipeg and Edmonton—which I suppose would be the most congested places, and there may be others—the ordinary courts are adequately coping with the load of citizenship applications.

The other question I wish to ask was whether the hon. lady would indicate, because I think this would be of interest to the country, the revenue of the citizenship registration branch? I have the impression that it is really rather too bad that we should advertise the fact that we are spending half a million dollars on this branch when in fact I doubt if we are spending very much at all.

Mrs. Fairclough: In reply to the first question of the hon. member, I am personally of the opinion that this is a matter which needs great consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is to say the urban centres?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, and I have already embarked upon a study of the problem. I hope to come up with some sort of reasonable solution during my tenure of office.

With regard to the revenue of the branch, in 1956-57 it was $419,085 and in 1957-58 it was $368,624, which, as the hon. member says, bears some relation to the outlay.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

60. Citizenship branch, $921,305.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just one question on this matter; I think this is the vote which includes language classes, although I am speaking from memory.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. lady can say whether there has been any further development. There are some parts of Canada from which we have perhaps not received as much co-operation in this regard as we would have wished, and I wonder if perhaps the hon. lady had attempted to exercise her wiles on her friends in the province of Quebec, for example, to see if perhaps a little more co-operation could be obtained from the Quebec government?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I do not normally go about my work in that fashion. I find that the latest estimate of yearly enrolment in language classes is close to 50,000 students, and the federal share of conducting those classes last year increased by 15 per cent to some $240,000. The branch has been promoting, more particularly, the establishment of new types of classes for housewives, night shift workers and immigrants awaiting job placement. The branch has also begun, with the co-operation of the various departments of education, a series of regional training seminaries for teachers in order to improve the effectiveness of instruction methods.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was one other question. I believe one of the last actions of which I have much recollection was to authorize a research project in which the University of Toronto was interested, and I wonder if the hon. lady has any information about that.

Mrs. Fairclough: We do not have that report just yet. When we do receive it I will be glad to let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister answer the question about the Canadian writers' foundation and the reason for ending the grant?

Mrs. Fairclough: The jurisdiction for that has changed. It is now under the Canada Council.

Immigration branch—

62. Administration of the Immigration Act, $1,235,232.

Mr. Pickersgill: On item 62, if the hon. lady would like to have my questions before she answers the other ones—

Mrs. Fairclough: Very well.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked a question on the order paper and the hon. lady answered it the other day. It was about Chinese immigration, whether there have been any changes in the procedure. The hon. lady said there had not been any changes since the present administration came into office. I understand that the hon. lady recently received a memorandum from the Chinese benevolent association making certain representations to the department and I wondered whether consideration of that had been completed, and if any changes were in contemplation in consequence.

I wondered also whether, now that the British West Indies Federation has been established, any steps had been taken toward reaching some kind of agreement with that federation similar to the agreements we have with India, Pakistan and Ceylon. I do not know, of course, whether it is the intention to proceed in that way. I know it had been my intention, which I discussed with my colleagues when I was in office, to take up this matter as soon as the federation was established if I was in a position to do so. I do think it would be a very good thing to do because there is a real problem here, a problem which in my opinion is not easy of solution.

Like the hon. member for Port Arthur, I am very much interested in what it is possible now to do in Poland. I do know that in the last few months I was minister because of certain things that had happened it was becoming a good deal easier for people with relatives here in Canada to get out of Poland and we were doing our utmost in the department to facilitate their entry to Canada in cases where they came within the category of relatives admitted from other European countries.

I am sure the hon. lady would not expect me to let this opportunity pass without asking her to bring me up to date on the interesting history of Mr. George Christian Hanna, the gentleman who was of great interest to the hon. lady's party and party organization, in one part of the country at least, not so very long ago.

I should also like to know in more general terms whether any change whatsoever has been made in deportation procedures since the present administration took office on June 21, and if any change has been made in the procedures for appeals in cases of deportation.

These are some questions that occur to me, though it is possible that the hon. lady will raise more by her answers.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have a few comments I wanted to make on immigration, but I think that most of these will be covered by questions. However, there is one question which has been raised by the hon. member on which I did want to make a statement. I am sure he will find that interesting, also.

I might say with regard to all these problems—Chinese immigration, people from behind the iron curtain, those who have left iron curtain countries and are in other countries but not in Canada, and the situation in Italy—we have been grappling with all these problems. We have been handicapped, of course, by the fact that the house has been sitting during the whole time that this minister has been in charge of the administration. We have discussed some of these problems, and we have come to some sort of agreement among ourselves, but we have not yet been able to put them into effect or to present them for the consideration of the government as a whole. However, on this one problem of non-immigrants in Canada we have come to a decision, and on that matter I should like to say a few words.

An increased number of non-immigrants have, after entry, applied for permanent residence in Canada. Many of them have obtained employment. A good number are from countries where, if they had applied in that country for an immigrant visa, this would have been refused.

In order to dispose of the applications now on hand, which number over 700, it has been decided to review each case. If the case appears to have merit and if the applicant can readily be absorbed into our economy, consideration will be given to recommending to the governor in council that the non-immigrant be exempted from the operation of the immigration regulations relating to admissibility for permanent residence.

Non-immigrants now in Canada who wish to remain permanently and have not yet applied will have until March 1, 1959, to submit their applications. Those who submit their applications before that date will be dealt with exactly the same as those who, as of today, have applied for permanent residence. This procedure however will not apply to persons who are now under order of deportation and whose cases have been reviewed on appeal and the appeal dismissed.

The non-immigrants who will enter Canada after today or who are now in Canada and will apply after the first of March, 1959, will be dealt with according to the Immigration Act and regulations.

It is expected this action will permit the admission of the major portion of those applying and will eliminate misunderstandings which have created difficulties in the past. This new procedure respecting non-immigrants is a very important result of the extensive review of immigration policy and procedures begun by the government shortly after June 21, 1957, and will be a major step in the government's promise to strengthen, stabilize, and put more human understanding into this country's immigration program.

As I said before, this is a matter which has been under consideration for some time, and I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will view it sympathetically because he knows from experience the tremendous number of problems that arise in immigration. We have still a great deal to do, but I hope we will get most of these problems solved.

I feel I must say a word or two about some statements which have been made, and while I have agreed up to now with most of the things which have been said by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I think I must remind him, as the acting minister reminded him last year, that the slowdown in immigration was instituted by the hon. gentleman himself when he was minister of citizenship and immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might mention that the hon. lady has slowed down the passage of her estimates by making that observation.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not intend this to be controversial, but the actual cut-off date was April 12, 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady like me to clear that up right now?

Mrs. Fairclough: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been some considerable misunderstanding of this matter. I cleared it up on the day we took interim supply last October, and I cleared it up again in January, but it seems to be necessary to repeat these things a good number of times before they are understood. On April 12, 1957 I gave a direction to the department that no visas were to be issued that would be valid after July 31. As some hon. members will recall I expected to be somewhat preoccupied elsewhere than in the department between April 12 and June 10 and in fact I was. At that time I said the whole question would be reviewed after June 10. Although I was minister for 12 days after June 10 I felt this was a proper matter for review by my successor; but there was nothing which restricted immigration up to the time the former administration went out of office.

It was apparent by April 12 that there was going to be an unprecedently large immigration in the year 1957 and, as I said earlier, it turned out to be the biggest year since 1913. I believe I was properly apprehensive that we might find in the autumn more people than could obtain work. I thought it was wise at that time to indicate that visas should not be granted for travel to Canada after July 31 but that, of course, would have been subject to review in the light of conditions that existed in the latter part of June. As I say, circumstances developed which made it seem to me improper for me to review that matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman has been misunderstood there has been no more misunderstanding of his action than his interpretation of the actions of former governments in the thirties. On this point the hon. member for Fort William described immigration as being practically at a standstill. I believe those were his words. I should like to say this is a misconception of the actual conditions. Up until June 30 of this year there were 67,744 immigrants received into Canada. I would scarcely call that a standstill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady give the corresponding figure for 1957?

Mrs. Fairclough: Surely, Mr. Chairman. The year 1957 was exceptional. There were 282,164 immigrants admitted during the entire year, 182,000 of them during the first six months. But going back to 1956 only 69,900 were admitted in the first six months, only about 2,000 more than were admitted in the first six months of this year. Approximately 58,000 entered in the first six months of 1955, nearly 10,000 less than were admitted during the first half of the current year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, doubtless the hon. lady will recall that that was the year she and her colleague on this side of the house were putting on a big campaign about unemployment.

Mrs. Fairclough: That was not the reason, Mr. Chairman. In fact, it does not make much difference what the reason is and if the hon. gentleman wishes to cite reasons for these developments we could go back a long way but I have one eye on the clock and would like to get these estimates through if possible. We admitted to Canada approximately 10,000 more immigrants in the first six months of 1958 than were admitted during the first six months of 1955.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if these applications were approved this year?

Mrs. Fairclough: These immigrants actually entered this year.

Mr. Badanai: Actual entries, not applications?

Mrs. Fairclough: They actually landed in Canada in the first six months of this year.

Mr. Badanai: My question is were these applications approved this year?

Mrs. Fairclough: Well, some of them, I presume, would have been approved last year and it takes a while for them to be processed and for the immigrants to journey to Canada.

Mr. Badanai: Yes, that is the point. How many months will it take for applications to be processed and approved?

Mrs. Fairclough: It depends on where they come from. For instance, in the case of Italy it takes some time and we have a backlog from Italy of nearly 60,000.

Mr. Badanai: That is precisely the point I was making, Mr. Chairman. Applications are not being approved at the present time. Many who entered this year would have had their applications approved last year.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. I asked the hon. lady a considerable number of questions and I expect answers to them.

Mrs. Fairclough: I was under the impression that I had answered all the questions on immigration problems although I grant you I grouped several together.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. For example, the hon. lady did not give me the latest chapter in the history of Mr. Hanna.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize for that oversight. I had that notation on a separate piece of paper. Mr. Hanna, as hon. gentlemen know, was tried for an offence and as is the case with all persons tried in Canada he had the right of appeal. We extended his stay, I believe until August 15. Finally, in the last few days before he would have been due to depart, he entered an appeal. I understand he had some difficulty trying to secure legal support for his appeal and having failed to do so he filed the appeal himself. It is my understanding that the matter comes up for review in September and of course until that time it is before the courts.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am going to ask the hon. lady if she will appeal to her colleague and supporter in the house, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard who was so very anxious to give Mr. Hanna legal help at a time when he was seeking illegal entry to Canada, and suggest that it is certainly a moral obligation upon that hon. member to offer his services as a lawyer to Mr. Hanna in this appeal. I also asked the hon. lady about deportation procedures generally and if there had been any change since last year.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman, not since last year. It is one of many problems with which we are grappling at the present time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should now like to make a comment or two about the announcement made by the hon. lady. What her announcement amounted to when stripped of all its verbiage is that instead of considering each application individually as has been the case in the past she is attempting to establish a cut-off date so as to consider all these cases at once and then apply all the full rigours of the law after March 1. Having dealt with those cases as they arose over a period of some three years, I can understand why any minister would seek to formalize the procedure and reduce the amount of agony connected with it, but I would not like the hon. lady to get away with the impression that this represents any liberalization of the policy of the department because it is in fact the precise reverse. I do not think she will be successful in maintaining her cut-off date but, of course, I do not blame her for trying. We all have to try these things and learn from experience.

There is one other question I should like to ask the hon. lady that occurred to me as she was talking and it is this. Is she satisfied with the efficiency of the immigration branch and of the employees in the branch, speaking generally? I ask that question because when the hon. lady was on this side of the house—I do not know that she did herself but a considerable number of her colleagues on this side of the house and a considerable number of their supporters outside the house—spent a great deal of their time talking about the heartless bureaucracy and the soulless officials in the immigration branch. I always thought this was the most unfair and unwarranted kind of criticism. I never minded the criticism of the heartlessness of the minister because I could reply to that, but I thought the attack on the immigration branch as being composed of a particularly soulless lot of bureaucrats was most unfair because I do not know any more devoted group of public servants anywhere in the public service of Canada than those who work in the immigration branch. I wish to pay them this tribute as their former minister. I wondered if on closer acquaintance with the department the minister did not find that in this respect at least I was right?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I never said a word of that kind on this subject in this house. I think the hon. member's remarks are out of place but in any event he answered himself.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not interested in answering myself. I would like the hon. lady's answer.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to turn the discussion of these estimates into a court of inquiry into the activities of the employees of the immigration branch.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. lady must be forgetting where she is. We are the elected representatives of the people. The hon. lady is one of Her Majesty's advisors charged with carrying out the functions of a particular department of the federal government. She is here craving supply to carry on her department. It is the duty especially of those elected to oppose the government to carry on an inquisition into the efficiency of every department. That is what we are elected for and what we intend to do.

This is an example of arrogance which I had not expected from the hon. lady; this is a display such as we never had from the gentleman who used to sit in the seat in which she is sitting at this very moment. In all my experience in this house I can never remember that gentleman saying that other members of the house were not entitled to ask questions about the administration of his department. It is true that he occasionally became a little impatient with the constant repetition of questions but he never suggested that the opposition did not have the right to ask him questions. I can assure you, sir, that just so long as there are members to interrupt me, and spell me off and just so long as I have questions to ask about the immigration branch—and I do not care whether they are called an inquisition or anything else—I will go on carrying out the duty for which I was elected and ask those questions. I repeat my question. I ask the honourable lady whether she is satisfied with the efficiency of the employees of the immigration branch, and I feel I am entitled to an answer.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I submit to hon. members that that is not a fair question. I have answered all the hon. member's questions to the best of my ability, but when he groups a large number of people, 2,000 people, and asks me whether I am completely satisfied with each and every one of them, it is a question which I could not possibly answer.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Idiotic.

Mrs. Fairclough: I can assure the hon. member that if I find there are people in my department who are inefficient I will take appropriate action. The fact that they are there means one of two things, either that I am satisfied with their activities or that I have not heard about them yet.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that the hon. lady has given a very clever and very effective reply and I give her full marks. But still she would not expect me to let her put words in my mouth. I did not ask her whether she was completely satisfied with every employee. I will phrase my question in the way I meant it to be understood. Perhaps I was a little sloppy in phrasing it. But I ask her, is she satisfied after—the months go on; is it three months, the hon. lady would know how long she has been the minister—three months and more with the efficiency of the immigration branch?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, it is very hard to answer that question without going into the whole field of immigration policy. Let me say I am not satisfied with the policy generally. If I were, I would not have been taking part in the various discussions and investigations on which I reported a few minutes ago. There are a great many things that still need to be done. In so far as the efficiency of the civil service is concerned, I think by and large most of our civil servants are extremely efficient individuals.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the answer I expected.

Mr. Fisher: I would like to ask the minister to answer the questions I put in connection with one immigration office in Italy and also with regard to the attitude towards naturalized Canadians, also the situation in Poland and in Finland.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thought I had answered the questions with regard to Poland. They are all a part of the over-all immigration policy which we are considering very carefully. The manner of the entry of naturalized Canadians into the United States is not properly a problem of this department. If the question were put to any department of government it should be put to external affairs.

With regard to the question on Italy, last year in round figures we had a backlog of about 45,000. This year we have a backlog of 60,000 in the one office. One of the difficulties of opening other offices is that we fear it would just create a larger and larger backlog because of the greater facilities to receive applications. We hope that because of the considerations of policy which are under way at the present time we may find a solution to this great problem.

Mr. Fisher: I hope the minister does. I think she will recognize the contribution the hon. member for Fort William made. the more people we get out from that fine country the better. Since we have the legal opportunities for them to come to this country or, at least, the openings, as a result of government policies, it is a pity that some of them cannot take advantage of it.

On the question of the United States quota system, the minister has expressed her interest in making the naturalized Canadian citizenship as good as the full Canadian, that is, the Canadian who was born here. I think that is the intent of her legislation. Well, surely, citizenship is something that you can carry abroad with you, and in that sense could this question of the United States quota not be something that she could consider? I mean, follow it up and ask external affairs to take up the matter. I was curious as to whether there had ever been any discussion with the United States on this particular point.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, it would seem to be not quite proper for us to try to dictate the immigration policy of another country but I am quite willing to explore the matter with the Department of External Affairs to see whether they can make representations in that regard. But, as the hon. member said himself, the United States policy is based on a different conception from ours, and they go on the country of origin, as the hon. member has said.

Mr. Fisher: It still remains, Mr. Chairman, a fact that I would like the minister to look into it.

I would like to raise another important point, which is a matter of keen interest to me. Two Canadians are living side by side; one a native-born and the other is a naturalized Canadian. They decide to go to the United States. The minister must recognize that one is in a much better position to get in. Surely, that impinges upon the worth of our citizenship.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked the minister some questions with regard to the brief submitted by the Chinese benevolent association, dated July 25, 1958. I just want to speak for a few minutes. I am not in any hurry. This is a brief of some 13 pages, which is very well prepared by the persons in this excellent benevolent association. I have very carefully read it and I do not intend to read it completely this afternoon, but I do urge the minister to give very serious consideration to their representations for some extension of the regulations wtih respect to the admission of relatives. I have one other matter, and I mention it purely because of the fact that when the minister was in opposition several of her colleagues supported briefs similar to this when they were brought to the attention of the government of the day. I wish to say that in my experience I find that these Chinese people are very popular with the population in general. There were early settlers in our district and had a lot to do with early gold mining; they were cooks in labour camps; they were in steam-boating, laundries, vegetable gardening and things of that sort. I do not know of any group that is more popular as a long-time residence group than the older Chinese in my constituency. I do hope the minister will give very serious consideration to their representations. I say that because the present Minister without Portfolio was one of the ministers who spoke very favourably of their representations and the present Minister of National Defence also supported their representations. The present Minister of Justice was very sympathetic towards the views of these people.

But I do want to bring to the minister's attention one thing that struck me. I think they have to go at the present time to some territory under the control of the nationalist Chinese government and they are not accepted in Hong Kong. I cannot find the reference just now but they made some representations with respect to the place of application. Then they mention that the number of officers in Hong Kong is too small to deal with the applications and that prospective immigrants have had to wait from 5 months to more than a year before being examined. The brief goes on to propose that the number of immigration officials be substantially increased. Would the minister inform the house if the government is giving serious consideration to the representations of the Chinese benevolent association and if she has any opinion with respect to the shortage of officers in her department's office in Hong Kong?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, when I answered a few minutes ago with regard to the general problems of immigration I meant it to be understood that this was one of the very trying problems we are trying to solve. We have had representations not only from the Chinese benevolent association but also from other groups of Chinese and Japanese. The department is very carefully considering all of the representations that have been made and, as I said, it is one of the problems we are trying to solve at the present time.

Mr. Herridge: I want to bring to the minister's attention a letter written to me which I think suggests somewhat of a compromise with regard to the more or less emphatic views expressed by the former minister of citizenship and immigration with respect to Canadian born immigrants and latecomers. I think there is an idea in this letter in view of the fact that there are numbers of these children who should be cared for. The letter was written to me by Mr. Charles H. Bebbington, a very well known person in Kootenay West. In it he says:

> Having been in the position to observe Canadian immigration policies over a period of 60 years I would like to submit the following impressions and suggestions.
> In the early days we were chiefly concerned with getting immigrants who could do heavy physical work such as building our railroads, clearing our forests, etc. Now, owing to the great advances in mechanical production methods, this class of immigrant is not so necessary. But Canada still has plenty of room for good immigrants and I think that a method that has not been tried would avoid some of the errors of past systems.
> Why could we not select orphan children from European countries, build boarding schools in which to keep and educate them and bring them up to a natural Canadian citizenship? When old enough to start work they would be able to give Canada 40 to 50 years, their best years, before becoming a charge on the country because of old age. Unlike the adult immigrant they would not have to change from their native methods of work or living conditions and the language barrier would be eliminated through their childhood environment.
> Canada can afford to take time to do this now as we are not desperately in need of adult immigrants. In fact it has been suggested in many quarters that the brakes be put on mainly because of the adverse effect on our labour market. By the scheme I am suggesting we would still be getting immigrants who would in due course fit perfectly into our social set-up and would automatically assume all the rights and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship.
> This would appear to be a better way to help unfortunate children of the world than by sending money out of Canada to help them. We are proud of Canadian-made goods; these children would be Canadian-made citizens and, if carefully selected, should give strength to the country of their adoption.
> Some will say that we are having difficulty educating our own children. If more stress were to be put on training these children for work in useful trades we would have little difficulty in finding places for well trained artisans. We want young citizens for a young country.

I mention that because I have had the very same idea brought to my attention by a number of other persons. I am not sure to what extent such a policy could be pursued but in view of the fact that there are these orphans in Europe and in view of the suggestion in this letter would the minister inform the house if such a policy has ever been given consideration or would be given consideration?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid that is much too broad a suggestion to discuss without very serious consideration. It is a new suggestion to me. I will be very glad to think about it but I could not consider discussing it right now.

Item agreed to.

65. To provide, subject to the approval of treasury board, for trans-oceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers including care en route and while awaiting employment; and to provide further for payments to the provinces pursuant to agreements entered into, with the approval of the governor in council, in respect of expenses incurred by the provinces for indigent immigrants, $8,180,000.

Mr. Herridge: I have been asked to ask the minister a number of questions and I think this is the right item. Could the minister tell the house the number of Hungarians who have been educated at public expense at the University of British Columbia, what was the cost per immigrant, what the total cost has been and who provided the accommodation? I should like any information she has so that I can reply to my inquirers.

Mrs. Fairclough: This, of course, is a rather broad subject. I have a wealth of information on it. We have not paid for the education of these students. We have supplied subsistence for them.

Mr. Herridge: That is what I mean, the amount per day or per month.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I can give that. While the officials are looking up the figures for me, I might say that if the hon. member would care to put his questions on paper I would be glad to give him factual answers to all of them next week or whenever he wishes to write to me.

Mr. Herridge: I will do that. I will write a letter to the minister.

Mrs. Fairclough: I will give this figure now. For accommodation for 9 months at Vancouver the amount is $178,425.

Mr. Herridge: Who provided the quarters for them?

Mrs. Fairclough: They moved around. First of all they went to Powell River and then they moved into town at a later date. I will also be able to give that information to the hon. member, unless he wishes me to pursue the matter now.

Mr. Herridge: Were there quarters supplied by the Royal Canadian Air Force?

Mrs. Fairclough: I believe that some R.C.A.F. property on Sea island, not being used at that time for other purposes, was made available for a very short time.

Mr. Herridge: I will take the opportunity to write the minister a letter giving the details.

Mrs. Fairclough: We will be very glad to give the member any information we have on the subject.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

COLOMBO PLAN PROJECTS, NON-COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

Question No. 130—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Have any projects for non-commonwealth countries in the Colombo plan been approved by the Canadian government in the last twelve months?
2. If so, how many and with what countries?

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Fifteenth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McCleave.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—MESSAGE OF CONDOLENCE ON DEATH OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that hon. members would wish to associate themselves with a message of condolence which I sent to his colleagues on learning of the death yesterday of the Prime Minister of South Africa, Hon. Johannes Gerhardus Strijdom.

Mr. Strijdom long struggled against serious illness, and until a short time ago continued against odds the service he had so long given to his country. Born in 1893 in what was then Cape Colony, Mr. Strijdom became a farmer, a civil servant, a lawyer and a journalist. Throughout his life he continued to be interested in agriculture and journalism. In 1929 he was elected a member of parliament for Waterberg in the Transvaal, a seat he continued to hold. In 1934 he became joint leader of the National party in the Transvaal. When in 1948 the National party took office he was appointed minister of lands and irrigation, and in 1954 succeeded Dr. Malan as prime minister and leader in chief of the National party.

In an active political career lasting through a generation, Mr. Strijdom spared no effort in the public service of his country. I am sure I speak for the house in extending the sympathy of Canada to his widow, the government, and the people of South Africa.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we in our party would like to associate ourselves with the message of sympathy which the Prime Minister has sent on behalf of the government to the government of South Africa in the loss of their Prime Minister, a man who has served his country for many years sincerely and with integrity.

COMMUNIST CHINA—REPORTED ATTACKS ON NATIONALIST ISLANDS

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As hon. members are well aware, there have been disturbing reports of increased communist Chinese activity against the nationalist-held islands in Taiwan straits. Since the cessation of the attacks of 1955 it had been hoped that the Peking regime, while disputing jurisdiction over these islands, would not again threaten the peace in this area. At this time I have in mind the concern which I am sure all of us share regarding the grave consequences which may ensue if the Chinese communists resort to force to settle issues in the Taiwan straits.

The United States has a mutual defence treaty with the nationalist Chinese government, and it would of course be for the United States government to decide the nature of its obligations in case of an attempt by the communist Chinese government to alter the status quo in the coastal islands of Formosa strait or of Formosa itself.

I take this occasion to assure the house that the Canadian government has no commitment to involve itself in a dispute over this territory between the two Chinese authorities.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF UNIFICATION OF MEDICAL SERVICES

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members will be interested to hear that a decision has been reached to combine the medical services of the navy, army and air force into one unified medical service. This decision has been taken after careful study extending over many months, and is in line with the recommendations of the estimates committee.

The unification will commence on the 1st of January, 1959, and it is intended to include in the plan all medical officers, nursing sisters and non-medical administrative officers. Planning to this end is now proceeding at national defence headquarters, care being taken that the interest of all three armed forces is protected.

The new armed forces medical service will be placed under the direction of a surgeon general, who will be assisted by a single medical headquarters in Ottawa in place of four such medical headquarters as previously existed. Similarly, there will be subordinate regional medical headquarters appropriately located in relation to armed forces requirements both in Canada and abroad. The total number of regional headquarters will be, as a result of their unified character, considerably less than has been the case in the past.

In reaching this decision I have had the advice of the Canadian armed forces medical council, which body includes prominent members of the civilian medical profession. I am satisfied that this move will result in more efficient and economical provision of medical services for the armed forces. As a result of unification, the professional development and career prospects of medical officers will be greatly improved.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

NATIONAL PRINTING BUREAU

Motion No. 37—Mr. Carter:

For a copy of all memoranda and other documents prepared and submitted to the Minister of Public Works by the deputy minister and other officials of the department, since June 21, 1957, regarding the national printing bureau.

Mr. Green: Stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo does not wish to press this motion.

Mr. Carter: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would like to have this presented today if at all possible.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is not going to allow the motion to stand, I will put the motion.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the request contained in this motion is out of order, because it is not proper for confidential documents circulating within a department to be produced.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I take it that the minister is refusing to table these documents. My purpose in rising on a question of privilege is to state that in the meetings of the committee on public accounts there has been a pretty free and general use of this kind of information relating to the former administration. I had thought—

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: I have risen on a question of privilege—

Mr. Green: I am rising on a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I have already risen on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will have to hear the hon. member for Laurier on his question of privilege. We cannot have two interventions at the same time.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I submit that the hon. member in rising on a question of privilege—

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. Chevrier: My point of privilege has priority over the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I was stating that it would seem to me there should be the same free use of documents relating to the present administration as there has been with those relating to the former administration in the committee on public accounts. And, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must not allow a debate on this motion before it has been decided whether or not the motion is to be put. The hon. member's question of privilege is really an argument in favour of the motion. Do I understand the minister to take the position that this motion is not properly brought before the house?

Mr. Green: Yes, Your Honour. This is a motion demanding the production of confidential memoranda circulating within a department, and as such there is no right to have such a motion made.

Mr. Chevrier: And my point, sir, was that similar documents having been produced relating to the former administration, these documents should be produced now with respect to the present administration.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, whatever happens in committee has nothing to do with what happens in this house. Certainly I cannot be responsible for what takes place in a committee of this house.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: It is open to the government to object to any motion of this kind on the grounds that the documents should not be produced and to ask the house to vote against it, but the motion is properly brought before the house for its decision and I will now read it unless the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo wishes to allow it to stand.

Mr. Carter: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY UNIONS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question either to the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour. Would either minister care to inform the house as to the state of affairs in regard to the dispute between the railway unions and the two major railways? Does the government intend to discuss with the parties concerned a possible solution and, in particular, is the government prepared to discuss with the railways the possibility of the railways accepting the federal conciliation board majority report?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have received a communication from the unions accepting the majority report of the conciliation board. So far we have not received any word from the railways, but from all indications we expect that such a communication will be received some time this week. A decision will then be made as to the next step in this dispute, which will depend, of course, upon the answer received from the railways.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Would the Minister of Labour advise the house as to what steps are being taken by the federal government to solve the current dispute between the British Columbia shipping federation and the 1,500 members of the international longshoremen's and warehousemen's union involving the ports of Vancouver, New Westminster, Chemainus and Port Alberni?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I notice that in my absence on Saturday, August 23, the hon. member for Megantic asked a similar question, and I hope that in my reply I can answer both questions.

The government interceded in this dispute at the request of both parties as of March 25 of this year. A conciliation officer was appointed at that time, and when he was unable to bring both parties together in respect of a settlement a conciliation board was appointed. This took place on April 15, and on July 25 the majority report of the conciliation board was received but was rejected.

At the moment the representative of the Department of Labour on the west coast, Mr. Currie, is in constant touch with both parties on an almost hourly basis, and we are hopeful that this intervention will result in bringing both parties together in a settlement of this dispute.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT WINTER PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if he would care to comment on a Canadian Press dispatch in this morning's newspapers to the effect that informed federal sources believe that unemployment next winter will reach new heights? Could the minister inform the house as to what action the government is planning to prevent this increase in winter unemployment?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member does not expect an answer to a question of that breadth to be given on orders of the day.

Mr. Argue: If I might ask a supplementary question, could the minister inform the house when he can make a statement on the conference which was held in Ottawa and the report which he informed the house a few days ago was being dealt with by his department? Can the minister say what steps are being taken to act on the basis of that report?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I expect to make the report available to the government in a very few days so the government may have an opportunity to study the recommendations that have been made.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED INVITATION TO PERFORM MUSICAL RIDE AT LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Justice perhaps I might address this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I regret that I was not able to give him notice, but this matter has just been drawn to my attention. Is it true that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been invited to stage their musical ride at Little Rock, Arkansas, and, if so, what attitude does the government intend to take toward this invitation?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I have no knowledge of this situation, but I must remark that I find this type of question most interesting and intriguing.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ROBERT BOUDREAU AND AUBREY BLADES—REQUEST FOR COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): In the absence of the Minister of Justice, might I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Is it not possible for an immediate decision to be made with relation to the commutation of the death sentence to life imprisonment for Robert Boudreau, age 16, and Aubrey Blades, age 17, who are both due to face the hangman in a few days, namely on September 4 next?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the ordinary course of events this application will come before the governor in council within a day or so, and the decision of the governor in council will be announced thereafter.

[Mr. Argue.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF RECEIPT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Labour on what date the government received the report of the advisory committee of the unemployment insurance commission which was tabled in the house the other day?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I do not have that information at the moment and I do not want to reply from memory, but I will check into the matter and give the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask as a supplementary question if it was received before the minister's estimates were completed in the house?

Mr. Starr: My reply to that question is the same as my reply to the first question.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—SITUATION RESPECTING UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister of external affairs. The United States congress has now adjourned its session. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs any information on the fate of the bill which would have provided for the diversion of additional water from lake Michigan at Chicago?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am happy to inform the house that I received information only this morning from our ambassador in Washington that this bill relating to the diversion of water at Chicago was not passed at this session of congress.

BROADCASTING

ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS—CONTINUANCE OF C.B.C.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-55, to establish a board of broadcast governors and to provide for the continuance of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to move the second reading of this bill, which is of great importance, I could perhaps be forgiven if I spoke at considerable length. Certainly the subject matter warrants it. But in view of the fact that I have already spoken on three previous occasions this session on the matter of broadcasting generally, I am sure the house will understand—and will even appreciate it—if I speak very briefly on this occasion.

There are one or two preliminary remarks I should like to make before referring to the bill itself. The Leader of the Opposition, in speaking on the resolution the other night, as did the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and, I think, other hon. members, suggested that the bill be introduced and allowed to stand until another session. The government cannot accept that suggestion, and proposes to go forward with this legislation, in the hope that it will meet with the approval of the parliament of Canada, and to enact it in due course.

There are various reasons for this. One, I think, is very obvious. It was in 1955 that a royal commission was appointed to consider broadcasting in Canada, and there had been much discussion prior to that date regarding the attitude which the government of that day would take toward broadcasting. Therefore, from at least 1955 down to the present time there has been an atmosphere of uncertainty with respect to broadcasting generally and in particular with reference to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and I do not think it would be fair to the staff of that organization, the people who are heading it and the thousands who are engaged in it to continue this atmosphere any longer.

I think Canada owes a great debt to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, its officials and its personnel, for the work they have done, and it is certainly a tribute to their morale that they have been able to carry on as they have during these uncertain days. For that reason, if for no others, I think it will commend itself to the house that the bill be enacted and the situation clarified so that both the C.B.C. and the private stations may know what is ahead of them and what will be done. We therefore propose to proceed with this legislation in due course.

One other remark should be made at this time. At the opening of parliament this government undertook to have a committee appointed to deal with this legislation. That was an undertaking given on behalf of the government and, of course, we are prepared to carry it out. If the house requests it a committee will be appointed after the bill has received second reading, and the measure will go to that committee. The spokesmen for the C.C.F. group indicated the other day that the opinion of their group was that it was not advisable to have a committee at this time. As I say, with regard to that matter the government is in the hands of the house, but I would point out that the legislation creates a framework and nothing else; it establishes a board of broadcast governors; it reconstitutes and reaffirms the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and lays down certain broad general principles. The details have to be filled in by regulation and, frankly, I do not know just what a committee could do at this stage in dealing with this bill.

If there were obvious objections to the bill in principle and there was a possibility of having those objections at least aired, if not corrected, in committee, I could understand why the bill should go there. But I think on the whole, if I may be forgiven for saying so, this bill has met with general acceptance across the country. We can see that from the editorials and the general comment in the press. If the bill were to go to a committee today or tomorrow, just what could be done about the details? We could not ask about the regulations, because the regulations are going to be prepared by a body which has not yet been constituted; and if we were asked as to the personnel, I can say this quite frankly. This government has given no consideration whatsoever to the appointment of the personnel of the board of broadcast governors and/or the board of directors of the C.B.C. We have been dealing with broad general principles, and we have not given consideration to the personnel thus if a committee were constituted and were to ask who was going to be on the board, I should have to say frankly that we had no idea at all.

I have received several hundred letters, I may say, from persons suggesting that they have all the qualifications necessary for such appointments, and I have received as many letters from people suggesting names which they consider to be highly suitable.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister table them?

Mr. Nowlan: It would amount to a whole volume.

As far as the regulations are concerned, they are to be promulgated by the board itself, and neither I nor anyone else can say, except in very broad outline, what they are going to be. So, frankly, I do not know what purpose would be served by a committee at this time. However, if the house wants a committee it will get one. I might, however, point out that this house will probably close, we hope, this week, next week, or some time in the relatively near future. I suspect there will be a certain amount of breath taking and a little relief from pressure, and that the government will then be dealing with the backlog of matters which hon. gentlemen know always accumulate during a session. Then it will give consideration to the personnel of these two boards.

When they will be appointed I cannot say, but knowing something of how governments work and the time it takes with respect to a broad national board to select personnel representative of this whole country, taking into consideration its vast geographic areas and all the rest of it, it is obvious the board is not going to be appointed too soon after parliament rises. I would think, as a matter of fact, the board would just nicely be in operation and have begun drafting regulations and so on when this parliament again reconvenes.

On behalf of the government, Mr. Speaker, I would say that if it is requested at the next session of parliament, we will shortly after the session begins set up a special committee of the house to deal with radio and broadcasting generally. All these matters can be referred to that committee, and perhaps the committee can watch the organization take shape and form and grow during the session rather than speculate, which is all we can do now concerning the operation of the bill.

As to the bill itself, there are two broad general principles laid down. The Prime Minister before the election, as did other hon. members of this party in years gone by, stated that he felt it was inadvisable to have the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation acting in a dual capacity in, both passing and operating regulations and passing judgment on broadcasting. One of the fundamental principles this government wanted to see was the divorcing of those two functions, the operating and the regulatory. This bill does that. Through the medium of this bill we will have established the legislative framework for a broad national board of 15 members, three full time and the others part time, who will be entrusted with the various duties laid down by this bill. The principle set forth in clause 10 of the bill is, I think, worthy of repeating here:

> The board shall, for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system and the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard that is basically Canadian in content and character, regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the situation. You cannot legislate good broadcasting; that is impossible. You can have the best act in the world, and if the right personnel are not appointed to these boards then the act will be a failure. On the other hand you can have a poor act and obtain the very best results because of the personnel who are selected. As I see it, Mr. Speaker, that is the core of this matter.

Incidentally, as a side note, I wish to relate an incident that occurred the other day. I was speaking to a former member of the original board governing broadcasting who told me that when the broadcasting bill was brought down by the Bennett government, I think in 1932, the government had spent weeks and months drafting the bill. It was discussed in parliament at great length and went through a committee where it was carefully examined. Everything was done in connection with the bill. Before the board held its first meeting it was found that the bill contained one clause which made it practically inoperative. Despite that flaw in the legislation they carried on with their work.

That is one thing that is established by the present bill, the board of broadcast governors, which will have general supervision over private and public broadcasting in Canada. I wish to pay my tribute here to those involved in the C.B.C. and public broadcasting generally, and to the private broadcasters as well. There are varying records of performance in those groups, but on the whole a great deal has been done and this country has been extremely fortunate in its public and private broadcasting and the co-operation that has existed between private broadcasters and the C.B.C. I am sure this co-operation will continue in the future.

It will be the policy of this government in selecting personnel to select no one who is associated with broadcasting in any way. There may be obvious defects in that policy, but there are also obvious advantages. Also, no one who is not a Canadian citizen can be selected. The thought is that this board, wisely chosen as I trust and believe it will be, will develop, strengthen and maintain broadcasting in Canada in an integrated system, both public and private.

The other phase of this bill, of course, concerns the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is continued. The name "board of governors" has been dropped for obvious reasons. We will now have a board of broadcast governors and the name "director" has been chosen in its place. This corporation will be continued and will have the operative—and only the operative—factors of the broadcasting system under its responsibility and control.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the broad general outlines of this bill, coupled with the fact that to the board shall be given the power to make regulations on a broad basis; and on those regulations and their enforcement will depend the success or failure of the future of broadcasting in this country.

I will not anticipate the debate, but I know there are certain comments which could be made to which I will probably have the opportunity of replying. It is not for me to express the hope as to when the bill will be passed, but I believe I have said sufficient for the time being to sketch the broad outlines of this bill, and I commend it to this house for its favourable consideration.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister and I hope the house will forgive me if I spend a great deal more time on the second reading of this bill than the minister did at this stage in the debate. The minister will also perhaps not be surprised if I do not share the satisfaction he has expressed about this bill, or if I attribute a great deal more importance to it than he has indicated in his remarks that he attaches to it at the present time.

The minister said the bill was more or less in the nature of a framework which would have to be filled in by administration and operation. I believe it is much more than that, and I shall endeavour to indicate as I go along why I take that view. As a matter of fact, it is because we consider this bill so important and indeed so complicated that we condemn the government for introducing it along with two other bills of major importance, one on customs procedures and one on human rights, in the dying days of a long and exhausting session. We consider that this procedure in regard to a bill of this importance is indefensible.

The minister said that if we requested a parliamentary committee to be set up this session the government would accept that suggestion, because it saw fit to include such a reference in the speech from the throne. But the minister also indicated, and it is a hope shared by a great many people, that this session will be brought to an end within a short period of time. If that is the case, much as we would like to see a committee deal with this bill in this session, there certainly would be no opportunity at this time for such a committee to give the kind of consideration to this bill which is required. The committee should have an opportunity of calling witnesses and receiving submissions and views of interested parties affected by this bill. There would be, I fear, through a committee set up this session no opportunity now of giving this bill the careful, complete and unhurried committee examination which its importance certainly warrants.

On behalf of the government the minister has rejected the other suggestion I ventured to make when we were discussing the resolution before the introduction of this bill, namely that it should be held over until the next session when it could be considered as a bill, not as an act, by a committee of the house which would be set up at that time. The reason the minister seems to object to this is that it would leave the whole situation in an uncertain position; that it would prolong the uncertainty which now exists in regard to broadcasting in this country, and that it is desirable to get this matter cleared up at once by the passage of this bill. But the minister also said, and I think he was right in saying it, that it is going to take quite a long time to appoint all the members of those two boards. If I heard him correctly, he indicated it might take almost the whole of the intervening period between now and the calling of the next session to make the appointments.

If that is true, and it may well be true because, as the minister says, it takes a lot of time to make appointments of this kind—and there are 25 to be made under this bill—then that uncertainty which he talked about will be prolonged, whether we pass this bill or not, until even the next session. Therefore that argument, it seems to me, against submitting this bill to a committee next session for the kind of consideration which it should get, falls to the ground.

Apparently the government has decided to rush this bill through at the end, or just before the end, of this session. That procedure is to be condemned all the more because we on this side brought the necessity of an early declaration of legislative policy on this matter to the attention of the government six weeks ago; I think it was six weeks ago today. Well, apparently this procedure which we suggested as the most sensible, the most democratic form of procedure to take, of submitting this bill to a committee at the next session of parliament after it has been given preliminary consideration at this session, is not to be adopted. We regret that, because it seems to us a procedure which would respect both the rights and the responsibilities of parliament and of the public. Even now, in spite of what the minister has said, I plead with the government to reconsider the matter and perhaps adopt this course.

I rest my case for that plea on the fact that this is an important and complicated bill, indeed a bill of the highest importance in the national development of this country. It is not a bill which is easy to understand in all its details. However, we are now on second reading, and I assure the minister that we on this side will do our best to bring the weaknesses of this bill to the attention of the government. We shall give it the detailed consideration, in so far as we are able, which it deserves when it reaches the committee stage. Certainly, as I have just said, its importance in our view can hardly be exaggerated.

In no sector of our national life more than in the field of broadcasting is there a greater and more continuing need for strong and independent public service and public control. This sentiment has been expressed more than once in this house, and by the minister himself, that to strengthen and preserve our cultural life and ultimately perhaps develop and preserve our national identity, broadcasting should be brought and maintained under strong public control. Canadian ownership and control of our material heritage, of our natural resources, of our means of production is, of course, as necessary as it is desirable; but that control would lose a great deal of its significance in our continued development as a nation if we lost public control over this important aspect of our non-material life, of our cultural life.

This was certainly appreciated in the earliest days of parliamentary consideration of broadcasting legislation, Mr. Speaker. Certainly earlier statutes—I propose to mention two of them—were not rushed through parliament. I go back to 1932, when the first basic broadcasting legislation in this country was introduced by Right Hon. R. B. Bennett in a bill in that year. Before that bill was introduced—and I commend this precedent to my hon. friend—the Aird royal commission had been discussing broadcasting for many, many months, I think perhaps for as long a period of time, though I may not be accurate in this, as the Fowler commission. Indeed, the Aird commission was set up, I think, in 1929 and Mr. Bennett brought in his bill in 1932.

But in spite of the consideration given to the matter by that commission a parliamentary committee was set up at once, consisting of nine members of the House of Commons. That committee gave very careful and non-partisan consideration to the report of the Aird commission. The committee met 26 times over a period of six weeks and received 53 briefs and submissions. It then made a unanimous report to the house. It was on the report of that parliamentary committee that the 1932 legislation was based.

Again, in 1936 new broadcasting legislation—there had been some amendments to the earlier act before this—was brought in by the Liberal government. Again a parliamentary committee was set up before that legislation was considered in this house, consisting of 23 members who met for two months and gave very careful study to the whole matter. Twenty-five meetings were held and 37 witnesses were heard. That report, as hon. members will recall, recommended the repeal of the 1932 act and the setting up of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as it has existed since that time.

In those days, Mr. Speaker, we had careful, exhaustive parliamentary examination before legislation was passed. That procedure reflected the concern about public and parliamentary control of this vital national service, concern which was felt not only by members of parliament but by the people of Canada, and concern which they still feel today, concern over the necessity of doing nothing by legislation to interfere with a strong and independent national broadcasting system.

At the first stage of public and parliamentary consideration of this matter, the first stage of Canadian radio history was that perhaps initiated by the Aird report in which, remember, it was proposed to establish a public broadcasting agency in Canada which would take over and absorb all the private stations operating at that time. It was felt that broadcasting should be exclusively a public service.

The second stage began with the act of 1932, when it was decided to have a single national broadcasting system which would be operated basically as a public service; but private stations would be permitted to function, I emphasize, under the control and regulation of the public agency as an integrated part of a national system to complement on a local and regional basis the public element which was to remain in any case the heart and backbone of the national system.

When private stations were given this complementary and important role at that time under the direct supervision of the public broadcasting agency, that meant that we did have indeed a single national broadcasting system operating primarily as a public service. Experience since that time has shown that the private stations, under the conditions I have mentioned, could and did render very useful services and in a manner very profitable to themselves.

We must bear in mind, however, that an essential and clearly recognizable feature of that system was that these private stations had no special rights of their own. They had a privilege granted to them by the government, and it was a profitable one, of being part of a national system. In a sense they had, rights of course, but only rights as part of that national system. If they were granted more rights it was feared that the national system might suffer, that pressures on government might develop which would be too strong for the independence of the public element of the national system.

The minister may remember that the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was one who warned against that possibility in the 1930's. It is interesting to note that he argued strenuously against the 1936 bill because he thought that placing the licensing authority under the Department of Transport would put the C.B.C. "completely under the power of the government and expose it to pressures and influences which would weaken its national character." Mr. Bennett was particularly worried that the government would not be able to withstand pressures from private broadcasters who, he warned the Commons of that day, as found on page 3710 of Hansard for June 15, 1936, "have been watchful of their own interests and have determined that if it is within their power this facility"—radio broadcasting—"is not to function as a public enterprise."

These direct pressures may have been resisted and I think were resisted more effectively than Mr. Bennett thought would happen but, of course, they have not ceased, and none of us needs to be surprised at this. The fact that they have not ceased was shown by the presentation of a brief to the Fowler commission by the Canadian association of radio and television broadcasters, Exhibit 312, in which they proposed that in principle the burden of providing broadcasting facilities to the nation should be largely shifted from the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayers to Canadian industry. The implication of that statement is clear and it arouses all the more anxiety in us because over the years we have perhaps begun to lose sight of the initially accepted doctrine of public control through a national system and of the vital necessity of maintaining and strengthening that system.

What was at once, for instance, as I have stated, a privilege for private broadcasters has gradually become a vested interest and eventually has been invoked as a right. As soon as this privilege could be put forward in public discussion as a right, which of course it was not, then the position of the C.B.C., the public corporation, could be attacked on the ground that the public agency was at the same time a judge and a competitor. Under our system of broadcasting over the years since 1936 the C.B.C. in one sense, and perhaps it was an undesirable sense, was a judge controlling, appraising and supervising certain aspects of the operations of private stations. But that was always done within the framework of the essential features of our national system. Strictly speaking the C.B.C. was not a competitor with the private stations, as those stations did not have separate rights to claim but rights which were merely an extension and complement of the national system.

I have dwelt on this matter at some length because it seems to me it is quite important for us to bear in mind the historical background and these essential features of our present broadcasting system as we consider the proposed legislation which, it may be argued, makes only superficial framework changes in our set-up, changes designed merely to eliminate—and I am not objecting to this—the so-called incompatibility of functions of the C.B.C., and to assure just and fair treatment to the private stations. While the bill may appear to be doing only that, if it is studied carefully and analysed in all its possible implications I suggest it may be found to change in a substantial way the very basis of our broadcasting system. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that it is a sanctioning by law of changes which had been creeping in.

Members of the house and the Canadian public should be very clear as to what the government is proposing to do in the bill, because once a decision has been made with regard to it, it will be very difficult indeed to reverse any undesirable consequences of that decision and change again the broadcasting set-up we are now being asked to approve. On second reading, of course, the criticisms I propose to put forward will be general in character, because we will have an opportunity in committee to deal with the specific clauses of the bill.

As I see it, however, there are certain major defects in the legislation. First, in my view it goes a long way toward creating two national broadcasting systems. Second, it weakens the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in some undesirable ways. Third, it provides for an undesirable and cumbersome administrative setup. There are, of course, some good features in the bill, but it is not my purpose to dwell on them. I thought the minister would have spent a little time on the good features of the bill when he spoke.

Mr. Green: How are you going to vote on it?

Mr. Pearson: I will come to that. If my hon. friend has any doubt on that matter that doubt will very soon be clearly removed. There are, of course, some good features in the bill which may improve the national system, and by facilitating the extension of that system in its private and public elements may give viewers more and varied television and radio enjoyment. This will depend, as the minister has pointed out in other contexts, on how it is set up and administered. If that can be done through private as well as public stations without weakening the national system as a whole, that will be fine. The viewer and the listener are certainly entitled to every reasonable and practicable consideration in this matter.

On the other hand, and it is the other hand about which I am concerned at the moment, there are provisions in this bill which I consider to be harmful and perhaps retrogressive. This might not worry us so much if the provisions of this bill when it becomes law were to be implemented and enforced by a government composed of persons who in the past had shown that they really believed in a strong, independent Canadian broadcasting corporation as the mainspring, the essential part, of our national system, and who could be counted upon to use the provisions of this bill for that purpose. However, the opinions of some of the members of the government as recorded in Hansard do not give us too much confidence in that regard.

My first criticism then, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to dwell on this at some length because I think it is a very important criticism, is that this bill might weaken the principle of one national system. We have been told by the minister on more than one occasion that this bill is based on the recommendations of the Fowler commission. This commission, in its report, warns us more than once against any action which might lead to the creation of two systems of broadcasting in this country, one public and one private. It is my submission that this bill could lead to just that.

I know, of course, that section 10 of the bill, to which I think the minister referred a few minutes ago, mentions the continued existence and efficient operation of the national broadcasting system as an aim and objective of the new regulatory body. But in fact, as I see it this bill, whether intentionally or not, may have the opposite effect. Under it the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation complies with regulations imposed by the proposed board of broadcast governors, and will conduct its activities separately. It will have its own responsible minister through whom it will report to parliament, and not through the board of broadcast governors.

On their part the private stations, whether they operate separately or as a part of a network, will be now entirely apart from the C.B.C. Certainly this bill, as I interpret it, gives the C.B.C. no special position, no predominance which would enable it to discharge more effectively its national responsibility. Both the private and public sectors of broadcasting would, as I read the bill, appear as equals before the new board which would regulate their separate activities and their relationship. This board would report to parliament through its minister independently of the C.B.C. board. There are some who may approve of this, but I am not one of them because I feel that this provision may well lead for all practical purposes to the serious weakening, with all the consequences that may follow from that weakening, of the single national system, something we have always considered to be essential and which indeed is put forward as a main objective of the bill itself.

This seems to me a very important change from the concept of broadcasting in Canada which we have held in the past. First, as I have said, the private stations were to disappear. Then it was realized, and quite rightly, that they could be of value on the local and regional level. It was decided therefore, as I tried to point out, that they should operate in that way, complementing the public service. Now under this legislation the private stations would secure equal rights with the C.B.C. before the new board.

While it may appear that the two elements in the system, private and public, have equal rights before this new board of broadcast governors, in fact it is clear that their position before that board will not be the same. The private broadcasters, while rendering a valuable service—and we on this side have always admitted the value of that service—have to make a profit to survive. They must continually keep that necessity in mind when they appear before the new board. Such things as more advertising, lower costs through minimum regulations and standards, the Canadian content of programs, and so on, would naturally be their main preoccupation when they appear before this new board.

I know, and the Fowler commission confirms it, that the C.B.C. did not always exercise adequate control over private stations in their programming. I ask, will the new board do better, especially in the face of the new and more independent status achieved by the private stations? Will the new board not have as a major consideration the financial problems and costs in determining the program standards and advertising control? Its regulations, however, cannot discriminate between public and private stations. These regulations will have to be the same for everybody, and as a result it may well be that the uniform standards which will have to be adopted by the new board will have to fit the financial situation of the weakest private station, even if it is part of a C.B.C. network and is subsidized in the same way as now happens by the C.B.C. Will there not be a danger that the standards which will be laid down as of uniform application will be too low? I suggest that this is a danger, even though in practice those standards applied by the C.B.C. will be, as I certainly hope they will be, higher than those prescribed by the board for all stations.

In short, Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to point out is the danger that under this legislation broadcasting in Canada may cease to be conducted by a single national system, mainly as a public service, and we may come to have two systems, one public and one private, becoming more and more independent of each other and having equal rights and status. They will tend then to develop along parallel lines, meeting before the new board only when operating licences are discussed or disputes decided. Therefore, instead of clarifying and strengthening the present situation this bill is likely to create confusion and uncertainty. It certainly raises many doubts and some anxieties.

This new board of broadcast governors, because the C.B.C. program standards will likely be above the minimum prescribed, will tend to become a regulatory body for private stations only, influenced increasingly by the financial situation of those private stations. More and more, then, this board may be concerned with private stations rather than the control and regulation of a national system. I submit, Mr. Speaker, there is a very real danger in this to that system. Surely in the light of this possibility, and it is a real possibility, this bill with all it involves and with all it implies should have been reserved for the most careful and critical examination of a parliamentary committee before it was either adopted or rejected.

Another basic weakness of this new bill which bears on the dangers to the national system which I have mentioned is that it provides for two boards of a generally comparable character. If these two boards do not get into each other's way, or indeed into each other's hair, with resulting confusion and conflict it will be because one of them—more likely perhaps the C.B.C. board—will become more or less useless. The Fowler commission report has been put forward as the basis of the legislation which the government should adopt, but let us see what that report had to say on this very important point of two boards. I read from page 134 of the report:

> But suppose . . . we had the two boards set up today;

And that is what is being proposed.

> —one, a board to supervise the operations of C.B.C., the other a board to regulate and control the operations of both C.B.C. and private stations and to deal with licensing matters.

The report goes on:

> The two boards, composed of people of similar background and qualifications, operating in many of the same fields and necessarily in close contact with each other either would draw together or pull apart. If all were harmonious between them, if they generally thought alike and agreed with each other, the situation would quickly become indistinguishable from that existing today; except that it would be more cumbersome to have a double review of many issues and more expensive to the taxpayer. Alternatively, if the two bodies (as is probably more likely) pulled apart, one or other would be bound to assert dominance, through the skill and strength of personality of its members, especially of its chairman. If the C.B.C. board became dominant, the regulatory body would tend to become a cipher; it would be an extra expense and formality to approve, generally, what the C.B.C. wanted. On the other hand, if the regulatory board became dominant, and the real centre of power, the C.B.C. board would become unimportant, and real control would be exercised by the regulatory body over both the C.B.C. and the private stations as well. As far as management of C.B.C. was concerned it would be frustrated; as far as control was concerned it would probably become a more active and onerous regulation of private stations by the body interested in and dominating the C.B.C.—the very basis of the present complaint.

This excerpt from the report concludes:

> As a practical matter, we do not believe you can have two administrative bodies, appointed by the same government and with similar personnel involved in the regulation of broadcasting, without having duplication of expense and effort, undesirable friction between the two, and a loss of efficiency.

This leads me to our second criticism of this bill, which is indeed implicit in what I have been saying; namely that this bill might lead to the weakening of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I have already implied that this might happen and if it does happen it will be very unfortunate indeed. But having said that, I would like to make it perfectly clear that if we on this side of the house are opposed—as we are opposed—to any measure which in our view tends to reduce the independence and efficiency of the C.B.C., we would also be opposed to anything which would result in unfair treatment of the private sector of broadcasting.

I cheerfully admit that there are some provisions in this bill which from the point of view of the private broadcasters might perhaps give them fairer treatment in some matters. We have always said and we still believe that the private broadcasters up to today have rendered a very useful service to Canada. In certain instances they could no doubt have improved their standards, as pointed out by the Fowler commission, but we on this side of the house believe that in spite of some deficiencies—and the C.B.C. has also shown evidence of some deficiencies—the private broadcasters now constitute an integral and valuable part of our national system.

Having said this I wish to emphasize once again, because I think it requires repeated emphasis, that we in this party still believe that broadcasting in Canada should remain, in the interests of national development if for no other reason, basically a public service. Furthermore we believe that the expansion and the independence of the C.B.C. as an agency indispensable to our national system should continue to be preserved, guaranteed and strengthened. We do not find any satisfactory guarantee in that respect in this proposed bill. On the contrary we believe that the status of the C.B.C. is weakened by it in several ways, and whether or not one approves of that weakening, I think it is important to know the facts of the matter.

In the first place this bill does not give the C.B.C. clear control of its own networks. That control, as I read it, is not clearly assured in this bill. In the second place, in this bill—and perhaps there are those who would approve of this—the C.B.C. loses its power to recommend the issuance of new licences, which power is transferred to the new board of broadcasting governors. This could prevent the C.B.C. from expanding when it is required, and could interfere with its competitive position vs-à-vis the private broadcasters.

Whether this will happen will largely depend, of course, on the personnel of that board, and I fully agree with the minister that this is a vitally important feature of this legislation. The minister said the other night that any piece of legislation in the world can operate only as well as those who are appointed to administer it, and perhaps no legislation which has come before this house for a long time has made this fact more apparent and indeed obvious; because in this legislation 25 men are to be appointed to administer it. Nevertheless, while it is true that so much does depend upon the administration and upon the calibre of the men appointed for that purpose, the possibility I have mentioned with respect to the weakening of the C.B.C. is, in my opinion, more likely to be realized under this bill if the new board operates in some of the ways I have mentioned. If the minister when he replies could assure me on this point I would be most grateful.

A third danger to the C.B.C. as a result of this bill is, as I see it, that the new administrative set-up of the corporation will become more cumbersome, and its independence will be somewhat less than that which now exists. It will have its own board, but its activities will be subject also to regulation, at least in principle, by the new board of broadcast governors. It will also have to submit its activities for approval to the responsible minister each year—also to the Minister of Finance, and I will come back to that in a moment,—and to the governor in council and finally to parliament. It will readily be seen that in this procedure there will be opportunities to restrict the C.B.C.'s activities, to discourage leadership and enterprise within the C.B.C., and to tamper with its independence which is so essential to the corporation.

I would like to support that statement by reference to some of the provisions of the bill in question. The C.B.C. will now not only be shorn of its former power and influence in the maintenance and development of the national system but will, I think, now be more exposed than it has been to the possibility of political interference. It was this operating phase of the C.B.C. that the Fowler commission wanted to protect against the ever-present threat of government interference, and that was one of the primary reasons why the commission recommended a single board of governors.

I suggest that the bill before us does not safeguard the C.B.C. sufficiently against this danger. Under existing legislation the operating personnel of the C.B.C. from the general manager down are insulated, if I may use that word, from direct political pressure and political interference by the presence of a board of governors and a full time chairman of that board. That particular form of insulation has now been removed.

Perhaps the minister will say that something else has been put in its place, but I suggest that the new insulation is not going to be as effective as the old. The senior executive of the corporation now will be the president, who will also function as chairman of the board of governors of the corporation, which means that the responsible minister will now deal directly with the senior operating officer of the corporation—the president—instead of with an officer removed from day to day operation, the chairman. The new board will no longer be able to act, as it did formerly, as a protective shield for those concerned with the development, production and broadcasting of programs.

I am coming to the end of my criticisms, the minister will be glad to learn. However, there is a fourth and, I think, very important consideration, and one which makes us critical of this bill. It has a bearing on this matter of political interference which I have just mentioned, and it concerns the financial provisions of the bill which, we think, are such as to weaken rather than strengthen the independence of the C.B.C. from government. At the present time, as the minister knows, parliament has earmarked specific sources of revenue to the C.B.C. which, together with the income derived from commercial operations, ensures at least a degree of financial independence. During some years it allowed a very high degree of financial independence, though I agree that in recent years the gap between those revenues and the needs of the C.B.C., especially in the field of television, has been increasing and has had to be filled by annual appropriations by parliament.

As the minister knows, the Fowler commission devoted a great deal of time to this financial problem. In fact that was the main reason why this commission was set up in the first place. And the conclusion of the Fowler commission which, I think, is rejected in this bill, was that a very high degree of financial independence had to be maintained in order to prevent unwarranted governmental interference with operations and to permit sound planning. The commission put forward what were, in its consideration, three possible methods of financing designed to preserve the prerogatives of parliament, to maintain the independence of the C.B.C. and to meet the need of the corporation for funds, a need which was bound to grow in the years ahead. In that connection the commission said on page 256:

> The greatest financial weakness of the C.B.C. has been the lack of an assured and definite basis of current financing.

I do not intend at this stage to discuss the merits of the various suggestions which were put forward by the Fowler commission or, indeed, of other suggestions which have been put forward to ensure that the weakness referred to by the commission might be removed. At the present moment, during this debate on second reading, I am more interested in the very important principle which is involved here of establishing, in so far as it can be established, the reasonable financial independence of the corporation so it can plan ahead. I am quite confident that a practical solution safeguarding this principle, and also safeguarding the principle of parliamentary control, could be found if the government desired to find one, but it seems to me that the present bill neglects both these principles and the recommendations of the Fowler report concerning them. This is one of the things that worry us most about this legislation, and it is one of the reasons we do not find it acceptable.

If the proposed legislation is approved the C.B.C. will have no independent source of revenue whatever except the revenue it derives from its commercial operations. Not the listener, nor the viewer, but the taxpayer will pay everything else, and its financing will therefore depend to a much greater degree than formerly on the discretion of the Minister of Finance, whose views on the C.B.C. are well known, and on the minister responsible, and on the governor in council.

That, as I have said, is one of the disturbing features of this legislation which we cannot accept. We fear that using this system of annual appropriations and nothing else under a government not too enthusiastic about the C.B.C.—and we have no reason to believe the present government is too enthusiastic about it—the activities and the necessary expansion of the corporation could be prejudiced and the power of the purse used annually could impose the views of government in a field where this kind of interference could be damaging to the right of the people to be informed objectively.

I am not stating, Mr. Speaker, that this will happen, but I do state that it could more easily happen under this legislation than it could under the previous legislation.

This proposed method of financing also hampers the management with regard to planning its operations ahead over a reasonable period of time. I agree that in the bill before us, clause 35, subclause 2, the corporation is required every five years to submit to the minister to whom it is responsible, and to the Minister of Finance, a capital expenditure program covering a five-year period, but there is nothing in this provision which stipulates that this program must be submitted to parliament for consideration, or even made public. If a government chose, that report could become merely an accounting exercise.

It is interesting to recall that while the Fowler commission insisted that the C.B.C. should be given a reasonable assurance of funds over a reasonable period of time for operational purposes, the commission opposed extending that period of time for capital development purposes. The minister must remember that in the report the commission says that the capital program of the C.B.C. can only be determined year by year, while the operating programs should be formulated four or five years ahead. This bill completely reverses that principle, and it is laid down that the capital program shall be considered for five years but the operating expenses covered by appropriations through parliament each year for one year only. And the corporation would have no other source of revenue except that derived through its commercial operations.

Then there is one final criticism which the minister would certainly expect me to make, and on which I have already touched in reference to other aspects of the bill. That is that this measure sets up a cumbersome and undesirably complicated machinery. I suggest to the minister that he and his colleagues have soon forgotten what they used to say in opposition about a multiplicity of boards and commissions as a solution for every government problem.

In the first place, as I have already said, these two boards and the way they will be reporting independently of each other to the minister may easily lead to conflict, confusion and duplication. As I have tried to point out, the Fowler commission warned specifically against that. The creation of these two boards is unnecessary, unwise and costly. Moreover—this will be the minister's problem; he has already indicated that it is a problem, as indeed it is—it may not be too easy to find 25 or 26 first-class people in Canada who are not connected with broadcasting, who are competent to deal with this highly complex field, and who are willing as unpaid members, except for expenses, to serve on these boards, except, of course, for the permanent members of the boards. That difficulty may be the more serious when we realize that with the type of legislation that is now proposed so much will depend on the kind of people who will compose these boards, as the minister himself has said.

The composition of these boards and especially that of the new board of broadcast governors raises certain other questions. The new board, as I understand it, will have two quite different functions to perform. The first and by far the most important will be to decide questions of policy and regulation and to hold hearings for that purpose. The second function will be to supervise broadcasting stations and to make sure that the regulations drafted by the board are being followed. In the opinion of the Fowler commission the first function would not be too burdensome, especially after the initial period, and would not take too much time of the board; while the second task, that of policing, could be quite effectively accomplished under the directives of the board by a competent and strong secretariat.

That is why the Fowler commission did not recommend that any member of the board should be full time. But the provisions of this bill are different from the recommendations contained in the report of the commission. Under clause 2 of the bill it is in fact being proposed that we have two distinct types of membership on the proposed board of broadcast governors. Three of them would be full time and ex-officio members of the executive committee, while the others would be part time and paid only when attending meetings of the board. Surely that will mean for practical purposes, and even if wide and skilled representation is provided, that the three full time members, one of whom has no special position, are likely to become the czars of broadcasting in Canada, and will be in a special and privileged position to influence the decisions of the full board. The other members may not always, by the very nature of their relationship to the full time members, be in a position to prevent undesirable developments; because even with a large board three full time men who will be carefully selected by the government could exercise a profound influence on the future of broadcasting in this country.

In so far as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is concerned the manner of the appointment of the new president and vice-president in my view is a backward step, and it raises again the danger of political interference. Under the present act, and the minister will correct me if I am wrong, the chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation holds office during good behaviour for a period of ten years, and he can be removed only by the governor in council for cause. In the proposed bill, and unlike the provisions governing the appointment of members of the board of broadcast governors, the president and vice-president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation shall be appointed, and I quote from the bill——to hold office during pleasure for a period of seven years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, they could be removed for reasons other than cause and without an address of the House of Commons and the other place. That applies to the president and vice president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation under the proposed bill, but the minister will realize that also under this bill the other members of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation board can be removed only by an address of parliament. Why protect the security of tenure of the other directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation more carefully than that of the president and the vice president? Surely a sense of frustration and insecurity could quite easily develop because of this anomaly, which would affect the whole corporation in the knowledge that the two senior executives could be subject to the whims of a cabinet. That feeling of frustration and insecurity in the whole corporation could be increased by the knowledge that these two executives were appointed directly by the government, while today the general manager and the assistant general manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are appointed by the government but only on the recommendation of the board of governors.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this bill is an uneasy and uncertain compromise between two points of view and, as is often the case, the effort to satisfy both points of view has resulted in proposals that are not likely in the long run to satisfy either but might only weaken the essential principles on which a national broadcasting system has been built up in this country over the years. There is too much in this bill that is unclear. Above all, it is the kind of bill which should be given the most careful, complete and expert examination by a parliamentary committee, where experts from the varied interests concerned could appear and give their views not merely on the general principles involved but on the details of the bill itself; how it is likely to work out in practice; what are its defects; what are its advantages; what changes should be made to improve it.

This is a vitally important national question, that of broadcasting. The way to deal with it is not by a bill rushed through the house during the dying days of a long and exhausting session. This procedure, Mr. Speaker, is surely no recognition of those parliamentary rights or of that devotion to parliament which my hon. friends opposite talk about so often and at such length. For the benefit of the leader of the house, I may assure him that we will not support the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we felt considerable disappointment today at the brevity of the statement made by the Minister of National Revenue in introducing this bill. We felt that he failed to spell out government policy as fully as we thought we were entitled to have it on a bill as important as this. We feel, too, that the board of broadcast governors, when it is appointed as a result of this bill, will be looking to this debate, to statements by the minister and by other ministers, to learn what is the direction it should go in carrying out the very general outline of policies enumerated in the bill. If they cannot get it from this particular debate and from the statements of government ministers, it seems to me they will have to get it in discussions with the governor in council or with certain members of the government, and we wonder whether that will be the proper way in which the board of broadcast governors should decide what direction their policy is to take.

The bill states that the broadcasting regulations, as they now exist, will continue until changed by the board of broadcast governors. Well, if they are to change them, and I suggest the regulations do need changing, in what way are they to be changed? It does not seem to me that we get any indication of that from the minister's statement. We all have misgivings about the question of whether the regulations are going to be pro or anti private broadcasting or, if you wish to put it the other way, pro or anti C.B.C. We would like as a matter of fact—we cannot demand it, Mr. Speaker—to have a statement from the Prime Minister and from the Minister of Finance on their particular interest in this bill and what they conceive it to be.

We would not like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we do not have trust and confidence in the minister who has brought the measure before the house, but I think the whole atmosphere is filled with misgivings; I would suggest misgivings not only as expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, and expressed very well, but also misgivings among many of the members of the government party. We would like to know whether this bill is designed to improve and extend the national broadcasting system, or is it designed to lead to a gradual withering away of public broadcasting and the gradual taking over of broadcasting by the private broadcasters? Could we have a clear-cut statement on this particular point?

It seems to us that the whole speech of the Leader of the Opposition reflected misgivings as to the government's intentions. Maybe that is as it should be, since it is the duty of the opposition to express that misgiving, but we believe it is more than that. The central point of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, as I understood it, was that a strong, independent public control of broadcasting is essential. Further than that, we cannot afford to lose control of this vital, cultural and non-material aspect of our life. For the C.C.F. I would say, in slang terms, you can double it in spades. We agree with that very strongly.

It was noticeable that in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition there were very few accolades for the private broadcasters. There was a certain amount of amusement there. We wondered what the Leader of the Opposition's alter egoes on the Winnipeg Free Press will think about that shortcoming in his speech. Of course we do not look upon it as a shortcoming.

We have had two fairly recent royal commissions looking into the whole broadcasting situation, and each of those commissions has found the private broadcasters wanting; each of those commissions has dynamited the main contention of the private broadcasters that they are supposedly hamstrung by the C.B.C. Those royal commissions have dynamited the whole idea fostered by the private stations and by those newspapers that are intimately connected with them, some of them in ownership terms, that there is an analogy between freedom of the press and freedom of the air. Each of the commissions has pointed out quite clearly that there is no logical support for this because of the limitations of the number of channels. Those royal commissions have pointed out that the private broadcasters have not been struggling against economic adversity; that when you look at the statistics as they were revealed in the chapter on private broadcasters I think any free enterpriser in the house will soon see what a wonderful investment those private stations have been. They have made a terrific amount of money and their net income after expenditure is, I would say, as high as in any kind of commercial operation we have in this country.

One of the other things the royal commissions have pointed out is that those private enterprisers are really neither free nor very enterprising. I ask the minister whether he subscribes to this comment, which is found at page 154 of the Fowler royal commission report:

> We recommend that the board should insist on the improvement of the programming of some private stations. We recommend further that the board should discharge its statutory duty of promoting and ensuring the greater use of Canadian talent by private stations with greater vigour than the board of governors has shown in the past.

Is that what the government wants this new board of broadcast governors to do? It is projected here. We would very much like to know. It is all very well for the private broadcasters to go around hollering that the C.B.C. provides unfair competition, and it is especially unfair because the C.B.C. is the taxpayers' agent. Where do they stand on competition? Well, as hon. members who followed the C.B.C. hearings know, we do not know of a single case where any private applicant came seeking a licence and was not opposed by private broadcasters who already had a licence in that particular field. Surely that very attitude shows how much they want competition.

One of the other things the Fowler royal commission brought out very clearly was whether the private broadcasters could afford to do much original programming. The report says at page 153:

> It was suggested in evidence, and we believe it is generally assumed, that private broadcasters cannot afford to do much original programming or use much Canadian talent because the cost cannot be spread over several stations. Indeed this argument was advanced in one of the documents filed by the C.A.R.T.B., although not discussed in evidence during the hearings. This assumption is, we believe, incorrect on two grounds. First, the financial results of a great many private radio and television stations, which we have examined, are quite good enough to permit these operators to do more original programming and to use more Canadian talent than they have done.

It is very clear that the Fowler commission did not trust the private stations and the private broadcasters. They did not go down the line with the private broadcasters; they turned them down. We want to know, and we still do not know from this government, whether it agrees with these general criticisms of the private broadcasters' position. If the government will state that it expects the board of broadcast governors to do something about the talent situation, to do something about getting higher standards on private stations, I think many of the misgivings we have would just evaporate, and we could assume that the government's intentions are the very best. We would like to know whether this bill is the augury of the victory of the private broadcasters. Does the government see it in that light, or is the bill a compromise designed to avoid making a hard decision? At several places in the bill there are provisions that the Canadian outlook should be supreme and that there should be high standards, but we wonder whether that is enough. Is this bill part of a real Canadian vision? We do not know. That is why we would like the Prime Minister and after him or almost co-equal with him, I suppose, the Minister of Finance to give us their views on the bill; because if there are misgivings I think that is where they generally settle at the present time.

As the Leader of the Opposition showed this morning, all the historical evidence, all reports of parliamentary committees and all reports of royal commissions that have studied the problem are in favour of a strong public system and public control of broadcasting. It is for that reason that a few of us feel, no matter what the intent may be, that when the board of broadcast governors is appointed the very same logic that led Mr. Fowler and his associates to take the position they did will lead the board of broadcast governors to recognize the strong need for control of the private broadcasters. A few of us feel that will likely happen, and we would like to know more about the government's intentions.

The Leader of the Opposition emphasized that we are now going to have two very clumsy boards. I think his suggestion, which is in line with the Fowler report, is very good; that we should cut down the membership of the C.B.C. board and have it report to the board of broadcast governors. What is going to happen to the old C.B.C. board of governors? I should like the minister to tell us whether there is any thought of transferring some of its members to the board of broadcast governors in order to give some sort of continuity of ideas.

So far as the C.B.C. itself is concerned, we would like to know what is going to happen to the audience research section and the regulations section. We wonder how the board of broadcast governors can really carry out regulations, exercise control and have some idea of the standards of the private stations unless it does have an audience research section and a fairly substantial regulating section. The bill is not definitive enough to tell us what is going to happen.

A question has already been posed to the minister with respect to the conflict between the two boards. Which is going to win out? Which is going to wither away? Which is going to atrophy? As has been suggested, a lot will depend on the personnel. It would be quite possible to select as the three permanent members of the board of broadcast governors men of great drive and intent who could soon overshadow completely the directors of the C.B.C. Therefore it seems to me that the suggestion that the bill might be altered to have the C.B.C. report to the board of broadcast governors and thus dispense in a sense with the C.B.C. board of directors is worth considering, especially because of that conflict.

At the beginning of the minister's remarks he said that if necessary, if the opposition requested it, a committee would consider the bill at this session. We have not changed our attitude in that regard. We do not want a committee on this bill at this session, for somewhat the same reasons as the Leader of the Opposition advanced. We do not think the committee would have the time to do a very good job. I might also say that some of us wonder what the attitude of the large Conservative majority on such a committee would be, because we are not convinced that they know where the bill is leading.

The minister also went on to say that if it was requested a committee would be set up in the 1959 session to deal with this matter. We would then be considering an act rather than a bill. I would assume that we would have the opportunity to have the board of broadcast governors appear before us, and could consider the regulations they had spelled out up to that time. We think we would like to take advantage of that suggestion, but we would like to push it further and suggest that such a committee should meet every two years. Some people might even think it should meet every year, but in the past the general practice has been for such a committee to be set up every second year, on the average. We think there should be an undertaking in that regard so we will be able to follow fairly closely just what line the board is taking.

I should like to make one suggestion to the minister which is not covered by the bill in detail, yet must involve one of the most difficult problems the government must face and certainly the board of broadcast governors will have to face when looking for advice from the government. What are we going to do about the licencing of other television stations in the real plum market areas? One thinks of Toronto and of Mr. Bassett of the Telegram, Mr. Sedgwick of CFRB, Mr. Jack Kent Cooke of CKEY or some of the other people in that area who want television stations, and one wonders how the matter is going to be settled fairly.

I wonder whether the government has thought of suggesting to the board of broadcast governors anything like the independent television authority in England, where a corporation has been set up to provide programs, and advertisers go to that corporation to buy their programs rather than purchasing them through their own advertising agencies. One thing such an independent television authority would do would be to end the pressure which I am sure the government is under at the present time and which the board of broadcast governors will be under, as to who is going to get the plum.

Dissatisfaction with the financing aspects of the bill was revealed at least partially in an editorial this morning by a Toronto newspaper that usually strongly supports the government. The suggestion they make is one that we feel is good, that the financing should be put on a better long-term basis. I notice that there is provision in the bill for the capital program of the corporation to be submitted to the government once every five years. I cannot see why plans could not be made for a five-year period and brought up to date at the end of every year. We would then always have a five-year projection before us. That may be too often, but it is pretty difficult to go along with the once every five years provision.

One reason why many of us in remote constituencies are interested in this matter is that we would like to get some sort of timetable with respect to when the C.B.C. is going to establish radio relay and television satellite stations in our constituencies which will provide coverage for the people on the fringe who at the present time are not getting either radio or television broadcasts. A financing set-up based upon a five-year program that would be projected each year would be much better than the set-up now suggested.

Fears were expressed by the Leader of the Opposition about the role of the Minister of Finance with respect to financing, and the fact that he would have a power and authority which perhaps would be unfortunate for the steady growth of the C.B.C. Again we have the very same misgivings about that particular gentleman, though perhaps they are based more upon the particular gentleman than would be the case if someone else were holding the office.

There is one point that always comes up in any discussion of broadcasting. We are told by newspaper people and particularly radio people that the private stations are giving the people what they want. I think it has been decided by some of the best people in the country who have looked into the problem closely that what the thinking people of the country want is a public system that has a national bias and a national interest, something that extends right across the country.

The point, which was well made in this debate, that private broadcasters tend to concentrate upon local and regional rather than national interests is quite obvious. We know where the rich market areas are and we know where the poor market areas are. You can be sure it is not the intention of the private broadcasters to ever get themselves trapped into the kind of national network broadcasts that will have them doing work in those areas from which they cannot get a good financial return. The whole question is, are they to be allowed to concentrate networks in those rich market areas to the disadvantage of our public organization, in this case the C.B.C.?

We do not know what the government's intentions are. There could very well be a kind of regional network, composed of private broadcasting stations, set up under this legislation which would siphon off all the cream from national advertising revenues and leave the C.B.C. with a fantastically expensive role which would give poor coverage to the less attractive areas. Before this group votes either for or against this bill we want more information as to the intent of the government with regard to this particular measure. We reiterate our trust in the minister's attitude, especially as that trust has been reinforced by the three forthright statements he has made in this house. We have further misgivings, however, in connection with this bill. Before this debate closes let us hear from the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister as to what vision they have for our national broadcasting set-up. If that is done we will be able to make our decision on the vote on second reading in a much more intelligent fashion.

We trust that when the bill goes to committee the minister will be agreeable to certain minor amendments, or that he may be interested in having some minor amendments made in the bill and especially in those clauses relating to the C.B.C. The attitude of this party has always been strongly in favour of the C.B.C.; as a matter of fact sometimes I have thought so strongly in favour that we have allowed ourselves to miss some of the weaknesses of the C.B.C. I believe the primary weakness we have missed has been that the C.B.C. did not really regulate the private broadcasters in regard to advertising to even the standards that could be applied without any qualitative judgment.

Our position is essentially the same. We believe in a very strong public broadcasting set-up, and that it is in our national interests. We suspect we will never get anything like that from the private broadcasters of this country. We feel that the whole position of the private broadcasters has been exploded by two royal commissions. We would like assurance from the government at this time, in this debate, that they agree the bill is not a victory for the private broadcasters but that it represents a victory for national broadcasting in the public interest.

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this is a most important debate. It deals not only with the informing and educating of the public, but also with cultural matters in general.

I therefore trust that it will not be considered out of place for a member with quite a lot of experience in education to take part in this debate. I do so in a completely non-partisan spirit for I believe it would be wrong to rouse sectional differences in a matter which calls for respect of principles and utter impartiality.

I am delighted that this new legislation on broadcasting has been introduced. It is what most people wanted. It gives expression to the representations of various undertakings, bodies and public organizations of every nature which have probed into the broadcasting question from a national point of view and which have made their opinions known. Thus, in introducing this bill, the government shows the importance it attaches to popular opinion. After having aroused public interest and questioned people from all walks of life, the government is today introducing a bill based on excellent recommendations from all sides, especially the Fowler commission; but it is the government which initiated the bill. It will not come as a surprise, therefore, if I express my satisfaction to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan).

The problem of Canadian broadcasting has been in the limelight for a long time, and several commissions have gone into the matter on different occasions. Various systems have been tried out, and an attempt was made to set up a regulatory body which would allow of government-controlled broadcasting side by side with private station networks. What was necessary was, on the one hand, to make sure that there would be no invasion by the influential American broadcasting organizations—this by setting up a government-controlled national network—and, on the other hand, to still extend a welcoming hand to private enterprise. That is how Canada has come to have government-controlled radio operating side by side with numerous independent stations.

I do not think the coming of television has altered the basic elements of the problem; it has simply magnified the problem and made it more intricate. All that has happened is that the difficulties encountered by our national broadcasting system have continued, but on a larger scale. What we have to do now is to devise, for the former problems, solutions which allow for the new factors. And these solutions must be based on the principle which, from the very start, guided those who built up our broadcasting system: I mean the balance that must be struck between a government broadcasting agency and broadcasting by private stations.

I do not intend to retrace the stages of development of our national broadcasting system which resulted in the setting up of the C.B.C. mechanism entrusted with supervision of both government-controlled and privately-owned broadcasting. Suffice it to emphasize that it was eventually felt to be difficult for the C.B.C. to be both judge and litigant in some matters involving the interests of both government-controlled broadcasting and broadcasting by private stations. It was purely and simply a matter of devising a solution which would satisfy those who asked for more independence for private networks, hand in hand with closer supervision by the C.B.C.

When all is said and done, the object of all those who put pressure on the government was not to introduce a completely new look in the broadcasting system obtaining up to now, but to modernize it so that it will change with the times, and to widen the scope it offers to private enterprise.

Even a cursory study of the bill will show that it involves no aggressive designs. The whole essence of this act is that it should perfect our broadcasting system. It is an attempt at an answer, a solution (subject to oher improvements) to the problem of supervision.

That is just where the state comes in—to ensure that supervision. Nobody denies it that right. Whether you consider radio and television as a source of information, whether you turn it into an instrument of education or culture, you must necessarily concede that its activities call for supervision.

For a long time, it has been recognized that it would not be good for the government—that is to say, the Canadian parliament—to directly control broadcasting. Political interference could pave the way to certain abuses on which I need not dwell. However, no one can imagine a regulatory body absolutely independent of parliament and in no way answerable for its administration. We must also take into consideration the twofold problem of state broadcasting and broadcasting by private stations. The experience of the C.B.C. proves that it is not easy for such an agency to control both its own operations and those of similar agencies whose interests conflict with its own. Moreover, state-controlled radio broadcasting cannot be absolutely independent of parliament; it cannot provide its own regulations, nor can it rely to that end on private stations.

It is therefore necessary to set up, at the intermediate level, a regulatory body distinct from but answerable to parliament, an agency independent of both a public agency and private radio and T.V. stations. A body such as this has been advocated in virtually all various recommendations submitted to the Canadian government for quite some time.

Through this bill, the Minister of National Revenue is setting up that regulatory body. The bill, which sets out all the legal aspects of that new institution, emphasizes the need for a balance between a state agency and private stations for the broadcasting of radio and television.

As will have been noted, the bill also provides for the reorganization of the C.B.C. It has been emphasized, and rightly, that the government has no intention, as shown by the terms of the act, to revamp the C.B.C. from top to bottom.

To put it simply, it will be governed by the new board of broadcast governors. An administrative body is being established, similar to the previous one, except that its functions are limited to the operations of the corporation for which it is designed.

The fact that the government does not radically change the C.B.C. has been favourably commented upon by the press in general. At most, a very few cautious remarks have been made about the fate of the present management of the corporation. The thing to do in this case, Mr. Speaker, is to trust the government, as should be done in the case of all our democratic institutions, which are based above all, on the confidence given those who are entrusted with the responsibility of government, at any level.

Besides, the legislation clearly defines the duties of the C.B.C.'s high officials. On the other hand, it is based on the general principle of serving, in all respects, the common good. It is in such a context that it is important to judge the actions of all those who will take part in the operations of government-sponsored broadcasting. There is absolutely nothing ambiguous in such an attitude. We would be ill-advised to charge anyone with malevolent intentions.

In the final analysis, only those who feel guilty in some way would have any reasons to fear. It is in this sense that, speaking of the Liberals, a journalist of Le Droit wrote, last Saturday, and I quote:

> They begin to realize that there is such a thing as C.B.C. "monopoly" over the broadcasting of news, as well as over the broadcasting of national and international news on television; that this monopoly places present C.B.C. officials in a delicate position with regard to the new leaders of the federal government; that freedom of speech will become a sinister farce unless there is a change in the present system and unless private television stations in the larger cities are granted the right to use commentators other than those picked by ministers, by ministers' representatives, or representatives of ministers' representatives of today or of yesterday.

The government's intention therefore consists in meeting the wishes of the taxpayers by providing the country with an adequate broadcasting system. The government thinks that the popular will has sufficiently expressed itself in this regard to believe that it is necessary to satisfy its legitimate requests. I do not see why the adoption of some legislation which would meet the views of the great majority of our citizens should be postponed. There is talk of creating a committee, and all kinds of reasons are given to postpone the passage of this bill.

The political intention of such tactics will fool no one. The problem of broadcasting is not new, and members of the opposition have had sufficient time to think ahead of the changes which they might wish to suggest about this new legislation. All their speeches show that they are merely marking time, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) showed it this morning. He has developed a lengthy theory—not a novel one either—which can be interpreted as an indirect encroachment upon the rights of private radio and television broadcasting.

I insisted on the problem of regulation, Mr. Speaker, as an essential factor of this bill. I kept strictly to the general principle and to its concrete juridical formulation. I would now like to speak briefly on some aspects of the current procedure to be followed in administering this legislation.

Broadcasting regulations call for some standards of action and clear basic principles, besides those aiming at the common welfare of this country and its citizens. I shall leave the care of discussing the technical aspects of C.B.C. financing to other hon. members, Mr. Speaker. I shall merely discuss the regulations, in so far as they affect the general administration of broadcasting and programs.

The necessity to be aware of exactly how considerable a part broadcasting plays in the field of public information and general education cannot be stressed enough. It may be said today that a citizen may very well be what broadcasting makes him. His political and social attitude will be conditioned by everything that comes out of this marvellous gadget, which has become an indispensable companion in each home. The television screen is at the same time the mirror of the world and an intimate counsellor. It has to provide recreation. It is also asked to give directions. It is expected to have the answers to all sorts of questions. In any case, it brings the latest concepts in our minds and is largely a guide to our way of life.

We certainly remember the apprehension once caused to educators and politicians by the appearance of radio and the development of American networks. People feared the worst for our Canadian civilization. This healthy fright gave us our national network and our government-controlled broadcasting.

I think the promoters of that movement should be commended. They have tried in good faith to preserve us from a too strong influence of United States civilization. At the same time they created a government body of a quality we can hardly praise too highly.

It is however important to keep in mind today the principles that have inspired the creators of our national broadcasting.

It was first of all intended to provide public information. Thus we may hear and observe the world by radio and television, as a means of communication. It tends to inform citizens about the way of life of mankind in the world and in the community of which we are a part. It does fulfil a task of the highest importance which calls for the strictest honesty and complete impartiality.

On the other hand broadcasting indirectly plays another and quite as essential part as educator in the social, civic, political, religious, artistic and other fields. In this respect, its leading principles must be perfectly adjusted. They must be based on an accurate awareness of natural law which clearly defines good and evil, truth and untruth. They have to reflect the philosophy of our western and Christian civilization.

Furthermore, I cannot see that radio or television shed a single one of these fundamental responsibilities just because they are providing people with fun and amusement. Radio and T.V. must avoid, like the plague, anything which could totally or only partially detract from the morals of viewers or listeners, or anything which would end up by impairing their intellectual and moral standards and which would prevent them from being men in the most perfect sense of the word, and—above all—from being public-minded citizens.

Those are the sort of principles which must lie at the basis of any properly inspired working of our national radio and television programs.

In this connection we must remember the original intent of the promoters of radio broadcasting.

I would like to return to this matter at a time when, through new legislative action, Canadian broadcasting is being reorganized. It must not be forgotten that radio and television are instruments placed at the disposal of society with a view to serving its needs. That is their purpose. Their only object is to assist the citizens of the country in their individual or community life. It is not superfluous to insist on that point at a time when we are often tempted to forget that technical progress is not an end in itself, but that it must serve to improve man's living conditions and personal standards.

A moment ago I mentioned the importance which the new legislation ascribes to private enterprise in the field of radio and T.V. broadcasting. This implies a survey of the particular conditions of broadcasting. Every effort must be made to ensure both the development of independent radio and television stations and to raise the average standard on those networks. It would be regrettable if private networks multiplied programs which would not be up to the standards of those carried by the government-owned network. True, the position of private stations is often made difficult by the fact that they must rely very heavily on "commercials". It is all the more to their credit that they nevertheless manage to broadcast programs which provide the listener with wholesome entertainment, and full factual information, although there is room for a great deal of improvement in this regard. I wish to insist upon this point that a very special effort should be made to restore to an even degree the Canadian character of private station broadcasting, too often a replica of American broadcasting. In fact, with all due regard to circumstances, we should require from private stations the same standard of broadcasting required at this time from the government-owned system.

Let me emphasize that I am not attempting to pillory anyone. These are merely personal observations with regard to the position of private broadcasting. I am merely pointing out some weaknesses which must not be allowed to develop further but which, on the contrary, must disappear as private networks are extended. I know most of the private stations in our province. I am convinced that their broadcasts are of a fairly high standard. May I be allowed in this connection to point to the excellent work performed by the stations at Roberval, Alma, Jonquiere and Chicoutimi which have done everything possible to produce high quality programs. I believe that the same must hold true of all the other private stations in our province.

It would be well, at this point, to refer to the problem of personnel in radio and T.V. stations. While I know that technical employees are selected with the greatest care,—I refer here to those who are charged with the responsibility of handling radio and T.V. transmission equipment,—I fail to see why equal care should not be taken with regard to selecting the people actually in charge of programs, programming and presentation. It is high time our radio and T.V. stations shut their doors on those people, neither technically nor professionally trained, who have been performing duties requiring wide general knowledge, a reasonable amount of culture and a definite sense of taste, for which they are utterly unprepared. I realize that, at the beginning, it was not easy to decide or to enact laws on the professional ability of radio and television producers and performers. This experimental stage had to be gone through.

Broadcasting

I believe the time has come to require from radio and television professionals what could be called a certificate of ability or proficiency, that is to say an official recognition in the form of a certificate issued by an institution, a conservatory or a university, the recognition of a certain amount of knowledge, of technological training for an immediate career in this field. Some institutions have begun to offer courses to that end. They seek a formula for a training course for announcers, newscasters, or radio and T.V. commentators. Also considered are courses in language and composition, for radio and television script writers. Our broadcasting system is old enough, has given enough proof of its vitality, for us to demand high standards for admission into professional radio and television, especially as there is no shortage of applicants.

Many young people are attracted by a career which in itself is highly interesting and fairly well paid. They are often motivated by a desire for easy success without the necessity of much training. I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not saying that most radio and television professionals are lacking in culture. But I believe that some of them lack immediate and specific training. We have the pleasure of seeing and hearing, especially on the government network, professional performers who give the best example of careful training and concern for perfection which make them outstanding stars. Those are the qualifications that should be required from the majority of people who aspire to a career in that field. I hope that radio and television schools will be established, and also institutions to train people for the careers of announcer, reporter or commentator. Then, it would be possible to lay down rules and require a certificate of proficiency, just as a certificate is required from school teachers. Of course, this problem would have to be studied and left to the consideration of experts who could determine regulations to that effect.

In the same line of thought, I should like to point out one provision of section XI of the new bill whereby the board may make regulations:

—for promoting and ensuring the greater use of Canadian talent by broadcasting stations.

This provision is not unnecessary. Not that Canadian artists have been refused access to radio and television broadcasting, but I believe that there is room for improvement in that respect. Our radio and television stations are to be commended for inviting, on occasion, foreign performers of international reputation. On the other hand, they should not make a practice of offering refuge to third-rate performers, discredited in their own country or who have not managed to reach a high level of artistic achievement. We have in Canada many high-grade performers. We also have many young people of great promise in this field. Our radio and television broadcasting should serve to encourage this young talent. I know that this has been done, as witness the well-known programs of Singing Stars of Tomorrow, Futures étoiles and, more recently, of the Couronne d'or.

To avoid too many a flower being "born to blush unseen," to avoid some artists monopolizing program time, to avoid favouritism, there should be competitions to determine the candidates' suitability for television and radio. Here again, through competitions, experts should act as judges.

To remain in the field of Canadian talent, the C.B.C. is known to make abundant use of the resources of Canadian writers, except perhaps that it displays towards some of them a sympathy which somewhat transforms them into permanent employees of the C.B.C. I refer to writers of serial stories which for 10, 15 and even 20 years, have been featured over the C.B.C. I believe this is encouraging a form of facility which is fatal to writing talent, and stifling wholesome rivalry or emulation which would be beneficial to the writers themselves if they were obliged to break new ground, under competition from younger writers. It may be argued that the listeners and viewers are clamouring for programs which have become fixtures on our national broadcasting network. It seems to me that those requests could be satisfied just the same if programs were varied from time to time. In addition to giving other writers a chance of showing what they can do, it would prevent some programs, which were undoubtedly very popular at the start, to stretch themselves into vacuity or vapid repetition.

There would be room too, in this field, for a process of competition or contests. Greater interest would be thus stimulated which would promote and foster artistic endeavour.

The danger which threatens this type of institution is monopoly, unconscious monopoly appearing as a result of certain circumstances and which finally becomes glaringly obvious to detached observers. In this connection, it might perhaps be appropriate, in this appraisal of our national broadcasting system, to recall certain standards that the C.B.C. had established for itself, and that Mr. Raymond David, of the C.B.C., emphasized at the meeting of the 34th Social Week of Canada.

Speaking of public information, Mr. David said the following:

In this important sector of public affairs too, the program division had, since its inception, to comply with the principles set down in the white paper of the corporation and to continue operating according to the following principles:

1. The airwaves belong to the people, who have the right to hear the main points of view on all questions of importance.

2. The airwaves should not be controlled by individuals or influential groups by reason of their material resources or their particular position.

3. The right of rejoinder is inherent to the democratic rule of freedom of speech.

4. Freedom of speech and the free exchange of opinions are the two guardian principles of institutional freedom.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the true code defining the proper ethics of information and of the exchange of ideas which are so frequently broadcast. It is proper briefly to review each of those points.

1. The airwaves belong to the people who have the right to hear the main points of view on all questions of importance.

This rule prohibits any controlled one-sided information, which does not leave full liberty of judgment to the listener, because he has only been told one angle of the issue and only been shown one aspect of the picture. It would moreover suggest a dialogue, a free exchange of opinions. Because, if an audience has to be informed, it must be given the means to get an accurate and complete knowledge of the facts.

2. The airwaves should not be controlled by individuals or influential groups, by reason of their resources or their particular position.

What was intended by that was the elimination of monopolies based on financial or political power.

3. The right of rejoinder is inherent in the democratic doctrine of freedom of speech.

This aspect is very important. It deals with the right of citizens and institutions of not being convicted without trial. It involves the easy and efficient use of the right of attack and rejoinder. This excludes trials without evidence and convictions in absentia.

4. Freedom of speech and the free exchange of opinions are the two basic guarantees of freedom of institutions.

This fourth point summarizes all the others. It is a kind of charter of freedom of expression.

Without any pretense at instituting a trial in due form, one may ask if radio and television have respected the provisions of this charter in our country.

We are led to believe that there may be some reason to reconsider the whole question in the light of principles formerly laid down by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in view of the absence of dialogue in the very field of criticism of our institutions, of some form of controlled information in the field of politics, of an apparent set purpose of disparagement of particular groups of citizens, of the too negative aspect of some claims, of ungracious insistence upon stressing the real or fancied wrongs and foibles of the political administration.

There are all sorts of ways of intruding upon consciences. Not the least dangerous is that which would consist in remaining silent in the face of the positive achievements of a particular system while, at the same time, laying stress on all its possible weaknesses. There is no justification either for making a permanent comparison between social, economic and educational conditions in one particular province, as compared to those of another province, to the detriment of the former.

I am reminded here of the very appropriate remarks of Monseigneur Paul-Emile Gosselin of Quebec city who, speaking of the government owned broadcasting system at the 34th Social Week of Canada, stated:

We do not believe however that state-owned radio and television give total or faithful expression to national feeling in French Canada. Perfection is difficult of attainment in a field such as this. Without entering into discussions which would appear to be pointless, let us merely express the hope that each and every school of national thought may find some means of expressing itself through these official media. To achieve this result, those entrusted with programming should be broad-minded enough to admit that some people may not share their own particular views on controversial matters and that there are sincere patriots, with a knowledge of present day issues, outside the small select circles they frequent.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most difficult problems we have to deal with in respect of broadcasting in this country. Any form of intellectual monopoly is odious and contrary to the right of the people to hear "all main points of view on any important issue", to quote a phrase formerly employed by the responsible people in the C.B.C. Under cover of a mission of intellectual, social or political liberation, no one has the right to attempt to enforce his own views on others nor to make a national system of his own peculiar beliefs or convictions in any particular area. A fundamental right rooted in natural law is thus violated. It is especially wrong to misuse the public system in an attempt to force individuals to accept one's particular faith, intellectual, social, political, or religious. Mr. Raymond David, whom I quoted a moment ago, expressed that same conviction when he said:

—radio and television are not and must not become a forum for the propagandists of a given school of thought, but must remain open to all opinions held acceptable by our democratic society in general. They must, and that is their main task, allow listeners to become familiar, on any topic, with the various trends of opinion which, together, make up what is called public opinion.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the new board of governors will uphold that essential freedom of thought and expression when assuming its regulatory functions over broadcasting by both public and private stations. We are confident that it will discharge this duty so as to preserve the present high standards of public broadcasting and so as to correct what must be corrected and improve what must be improved in the fields of both public and private broadcasting. It must exercise over the C.B.C. as well as over private stations a discreet but firm supervision so as to prevent any form of monopoly. As far as the C.B.C. is concerned, it seems to us that the emphasis must be laid on decentralizing and on favouring all public radio and television stations in all areas of this country.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation, which will soon be enacted, is perhaps not complete nor perfect but, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, we must have confidence in the government whose sole aim is to provide for the good functioning of our institutions and which, by this bill on Canadian broadcasting, is implementing the recommendations put forward by various commissions and by organizations that have been dealing for a very long time with problems connected with broadcasting. To delay the adoption of this legislation would deprive our citizens of their right to a continuing improvement of our Canadian radio and television system.

(Text):

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that the government has waited until almost the last minute of this session to introduce this very important bill. It is unfair to parliament and to the people of Canada. In the speech from the throne the government promised to set up a select committee on broadcasting, which it did not do. It would have been the proper course to follow. This committee would have studied carefully all aspects of the legislation on broadcasting; it would have called witnesses and informed the members of all aspects of radio and television, and today we would have been in a better position to deal with this bill. Instead of doing that the government decided to put before us at the very end of the session Bill C-55, respecting broadcasting. I want to take a few moments, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the merits of this bill. At the end of my remarks I propose to move an amendment.

In past years I have expressed my opinion in this house as to the advisability of setting up a regulatory body. What I had in mind at that time was a body similar to the one proposed by the Fowler commission, nothing more, and I am still in favour of it. Instead of doing that the government brings forward a major change in the structure of our broadcasting system in Canada. The bill before us today provides for the creation of broadcasting governors, whose objects and purposes are set out in section 10 of the bill, and I quote:

The board shall, for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system and the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard that is basically Canadian in content and character, regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

There will be two distinct boards, and if we read carefully sections 10, 29 and 36, we see that the powers given to each board may overlap one another. The two bodies will be responsible to parliament, to a member of the cabinet. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this arrangement will be very difficult to work out. Instead of doing that the government should have followed the Fowler commission's recommendations to the effect that there should be only one Canadian broadcasting governing board to which the C.B.C. would be required to report.

If this bill is accepted it will mean the end of the long-accepted principle that the Canadian broadcasting system is a single system made up of both privately-owned and publicly-owned stations under the control of a single agency responsible to parliament. The proposed bill only seems to add to the confusion, while the aim of the Fowler commission was to clarify the responsibility and eliminate the confusion which had come to exist under the present legislation. As stated in an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal on August 21:

> The responsibility for a national service should be clearly enumerated by the government. Otherwise there is danger of overlapping, misunderstanding and inefficiency.

The bill before us rejects the Fowler commission's advice that:

> In broadcasting it is of primary importance that the operating agency be independent of control and interference from the government of the day.

The commission goes on to say:

> Since in our constitutional practice, money bills must originate from the government, annual votes give to the executive an almost constant vehicle for influence, or the appearance of influence on broadcasting agency.

In an article in the Ottawa Citizen on August 22 by Mr. Frank Swanson, the following appeared:

> Parliament and the government will now hold the control of the C.B.C.'s purse-strings which in the eyes of many people, could be a threat to the independence of thought and action by the C.B.C.

This brings me to the method of financing the C.B.C. under the new bill. Here is what the Globe and Mail has to say about it, and I quote from an editorial which appeared on August 25:

> But how hesitant these measures are, and how vague! They ask the C.B.C. to plan five years in advance and to get its plans approved, but offer no assurance that approval, once given, will be backed up by cash. They do not even specify that the annual budgets be drawn up or considered within the framework of the five-year plans. They do nothing, really, but perpetuate the unsatisfactory arrangement whereby the C.B.C. goes to Ottawa every year, cap in hand, asking for money—an arrangement which not only invites inefficiency in its operations, but begs political interference in its affairs.

The method of financing the C.B.C., as proposed in the bill, is an open invitation to political interference. It was the operating phase of the C.B.C. which the Fowler commission wanted to protect against the ever-present threat of government interference. That was one of the primary reasons why the commission recommended a single board of governors and that the C.B.C. be responsible to parliament for its finances as well as its activities through the board of broadcast governors.

Under the existing legislation the operating personnel of the C.B.C., the general manager and below, are insulated from direct political pressure and interference by the presence of the board of governors and a full-time chairman. Now that insulation will be removed. The minister will now deal directly with the senior officers of the corporation instead of with an officer removed from day-to-day operations.

I do not want to imply that the present minister to whom the C.B.C. now reports will personally interfere in the business of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, but after listening in this house not so very long ago to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I feel that the matter has to be brought up at this time. In his speech delivered on July 14, the hon. member said, as reported at page 2228 of Hansard:

> A clean-up job is necessary in the C.B.C.

Mr. Robert Rumilly, a well-known Union Nationale active supporter, has been asking for a clean-up regularly in the Union Nationale paper, Nouvelles Illustrées; so has the Union Nationale official daily, the Montreal Matin, in an editorial which appeared on July 19. Knowing for a fact what the Union Nationale people have in mind when they talk about a clean-up, I am afraid that if there were any possibility for them to do so they would fire all those who do not share their political views in order to replace them by political supporters. It would be terrible if the fascists like Robert Rumilly, Adrien Arcand and others like them played important parts in the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I know that since the election of the Progressive Conservative party pressure has been put on the C.B.C. by Union Nationale supporters to fire certain people in the C.B.C. Even the member to whom I referred earlier has suggested in the house that at least three people be fired on the alleged accusation that they were leftists. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has never given us a definition of what he calls a leftist. As far as I know, all those who do not share Mr. Duplessis' views are leftists. I know for a fact that at least one person mentioned by the hon. member on that occasion is a strong supporter of the Liberal party and I do not think that that reason would be sufficient to fire him in order to replace him by Mr. Rumilly or Mr. Arcand. This is the kind of political interference which should never exist in a corporation like the C.B.C.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a public service paid for by the Canadian people and nothing should prevent the corporation from discharging its responsibilities to the satisfaction of the Canadian public. There should never be interference such as I referred to a few moments ago. The C.B.C. should never be an instrument in the hands of politicians. I am sure that neither the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) would tolerate that the French C.B.C. networks at least should be controlled by the premier of Quebec and his friends. I am sure that the Minister of National Revenue and the Prime Minister want the C.B.C. to be free of any political interference. That is why I submit respectfully to the minister that any section in the bill which would bring about an opening for political interference should be amended. I respectfully submit to the minister that the C.B.C., instead of having to report to parliament, should report to the board of broadcast governors which in turn would report to parliament.

Section 10 of the bill gives power to the Board of broadcast governors to regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for a final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto. How can the board of broadcast governors regulate all these matters and provide for their final determination when it has nothing to do with the financing of the C.B.C. and is not able to check on the financial operations of the corporation? Again I submit that the corporation should report through the board of governors and that, radio broadcasting being part of the public domain, private broadcasters should equally report to the board of governors.

I want to stress the fact that the two boards described by the bill will certainly get in each other's hair and in a case of conflict it would seem to me that the C.B.C. board would be placed in an inferior position. The C.B.C. now becomes an agent of the crown in such a manner that it will not be able to maintain its independence. If the bill is adopted without amendment it is my view that it will be very difficult for the C.B.C. to operate.

Not only should there have been provision, as I said earlier in my remarks, for the C.B.C. to report to the board of broadcast governors but the C.B.C. should have had assurance of long range financing. The Fowler commission recommended annual grants to the corporation with a review after five years. Instead, section 35 provides for the corporation to lay annually before parliament through its minister a capital budget and an operating budget which means, in other words, that the corporation will have to come each year to parliament and beg for its financing.

The proposed method of financing hampers the management of the corporation in planning its operations over a reasonable period of time. While the government may argue that the bill provides for the corporation to have working capital in the amount of $6 million and that its debt to the government in excess of that amount will be extinguished, this money cannot be spent on operating expenses.

The failure to provide the corporation with an assured income for operating expenses places the future growth and development of the corporation in jeopardy. If expenditures increase, as they most certainly will, and the corporation requests ever-increasing sums from the government, the government could conceivably reject the requests on the grounds that the federal treasury could not afford it in view of other, more urgent expenditures. The public might accept the government's view without too great protest, regardless of how valid the corporation's claims were. In other words, the government may now, without any public protest, starve the C.B.C. financially. This is an unfair burden to place upon management.

I should like to deal briefly with another aspect of the bill. Section 19 provides for the board of broadcast governors to report to parliament through a member of the cabinet designated by the governor in council. Section 36, on the other hand, provides for the C.B.C. to report to parliament through a minister designated again by the governor in council.

It can happen that the two bodies will have to report to two different cabinet ministers. What will happen then in case of conflict? There can be cause for ministerial conflict which would hamper the work of the C.B.C. and of the board of broadcast governors. If the two boards are going to be established by the government, the bill should contain a clause by which the two boards should be responsible to the same minister. If the government is going to rush this legislation through, it should be very careful as to who is going to be appointed to the two boards.

In studying the present legislation Mr. Frank Swanson, in the Ottawa Citizen of August 22 last, asked the question, "how will it work", and gave this answer:

> In the end, it probably will depend primarily on the quality and abilities of the men who will make up the new board of broadcast governors.

In my own judgment the bill will not satisfy anyone. In an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star on August 20 last I find the following:

> Canadians have a right to expect that federal broadcasting legislation will, so far as possible, guarantee three things: (1) A strong national broadcasting system; (2) freedom of this system from political interference; (3) responsible use of the channels and frequencies which private broadcasters are privileged to occupy.

The bill which the Diefenbaker government has just put before parliament guarantees none of these things.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I allowed the hon. member to read an editorial from the Globe and Mail a while ago, which strictly speaking was contrary to the rules. Editorials which comment on what is before the house are not in order. Members are free to use ideas from editorials in their own words but it is not strictly in order to quote editorials which reflect on what is going on in the house at the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether Your Honour would permit an observation? Is it not in order to quote an editorial if one states that he embraces the views expressed therein?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I did not understand the hon. member's last words.

Mr. Pickersgill: If one says he embraces and endorses the views expressed therein, is it not in order?

Mr. Speaker: I would rather put it this way, that editorials which express opinions about a matter which is before this house have been refused, and I think properly. Hon. members should express their own thoughts. There is nothing to prevent them from adopting the opinions of others, but it is not good parliamentary practice to quote editorials that reflect, either pro or con, on a matter with which the members of the house are currently dealing.

Mr. Rouleau: Thank you very much; I shall abide by your ruling. For these reasons, and the one I mentioned in my remarks, I am of the opinion that the passage of this bill should be deferred until we have had an opportunity of carefully studying the matter in a parliamentary committee set up for that purpose. Accordingly, I respectfully submit we should defer passage of this very important piece of legislation until the next session of parliament. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell):

That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months" added at the end of the question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I was wondering if the minister wished to reply to this amendment? In that case, since there seems to be no one else who wishes to speak at the moment, there are a few observations on the amendment itself I should like to make, and a few on the bill, which I think justify the presentation of the amendment which the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) has just presented. He has, of course, simply done in a formal way what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) did informally in his appeal to the government this morning, which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition expected would have been accepted without a formal vote of the house. The hon. member has moved that this bill be not proceeded with at this session, but that it be presented at the next session or a better bill introduced on another occasion.

It does seem to me that the arguments which we made on this side of the house at the resolution stage, that this bill should be given first reading and should be left for study by hon. members during the recess and for study by the public generally, are amply justified by our examination of the bill itself. In the first place, the bill does not live up to the advance notice which, I admit, was in rather vague terms. I am not accusing the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) of misleading the house deliberately, but I must admit that he misled me, and I think he misled a good many others in the country into thinking what the government was going to do was substantially to implement the recommendations of the Fowler report. It is true, and I want to be quite fair about this, that the minister did indicate, in response to a specific question I asked at the resolution stage, that the financial scheme would not be what was recommended in the Fowler report. I must say, from that moment on, I began to have very grave doubts about what we were likely to see in the bill. When we got the bill we saw it was a great deal worse than anything I had feared.

I want to make the same points as the Leader of the Opposition has about some of the respects in which the bill seems to me to be worse. While I really do not think I have any new points to add to those made by the Leader of the Opposition, there are some aspects of those points that he made so comprehensively this morning which I do believe deserve to be underlined. Before doing that, I should like to take up the challenge of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), and say that I am more interested in the views expressed by the Free Press in its great days than I am in its later expressions of opinion on this subject. I assure Your Honour, lest there be any doubt about this, that the editorial I now propose to quote has been quoted many times before in parliament and has no relationship to the present bill or proceedings before the house, although it has a direct bearing on the subject matter of the present bill. The most recent occasion on which this article was quoted in this house was July 14, 1958. It has to do, of course, with that great stage in the history of broadcasting in Canada when Mr. Bennett introduced the Canadian radio commission legislation in 1932. At that time, the editor of the Free Press had this to say:

> The radio issue now being decided at Ottawa is quite simple and very easily grasped. There is a choice between a national system and the handing over of the radio-supporting public of Canada to the radio monopolies of the United States. All the pleas put forth on behalf of private control of radio in Canada, no matter how plausibly presented, nor how strongly backed by eminent figures in the world of finance, are in support of a system which, in its practical working out will make Canada a subordinate annex of the United States radio-land and give the final (if concealed) voice in the decisions of how radio is to be operated in Canada to purely commercial interests, American in character.
> The day of the small detached and supposedly independent radio station is about over in Canada. If the field is left to private enterprise, there will be rapid consolidation of these stations into a combination. We shall have a privately-owned monopoly of the air, and this monopoly will operate in harmony with the great radio monopoly of the United States—the harmony that always exists between the boss that gives orders and the dependent subordinate who obeys them.

I knew the late Mr. Dafoe very well, and that, of course, is just the way he talked. I think Mr. Dafoe was fundamentally right in the first paragraph he wrote but in the light of experience in the recent past, I do not believe I would say he was entirely right in the first sentence of the second paragraph. He said:

> The day of the small detached and supposedly independent radio station is about over in Canada.

I think it is a very happy and fortunate circumstance that he has been proved to be wrong about that one point. I think the small, detached and independent radio station owned by someone in a local community in Canada has performed an increasingly useful service over the years. There are a few stations in the great metropolitan centres that do not seem to perform a service that appeals very much to many of us in this house, but I suppose they must be performing some kind of service or the people would not pay for the advertising. The stations in the smaller places, catering to local needs, supporting local causes and giving a greater sense of community to those localities, have proven to be a very valuable addition to our Canadian patrimony.

I, for my part, feel that anything we do which would have the effect of weakening the detached and independent character of these stations would be most unfortunate. I have never favoured the idea of having them linked up in great chains, although economies might be effected in some ways by having local networks for limited purposes. I feel, however, that the greater the independence of the private stations and the greater the local character they can have, the better. I do believe that every Canadian today who has given any serious, detached and objective thought to this matter—even the most ardent socialists—now feels this way or at any rate so express themselves.

There is no doubt that there is a problem, although I have always thought it was rather more psychological than really practical. With respect to the situation between the private stations and the C.B.C., a psychological situation has been created in the last few years supported by very respectable organizations and very respectable arguments, arguments which, on the face of them, appeal at first blush to any liberal minded person. These arguments are to the effect that there is something wrong about the regulation of these private stations by the operating officials of the public service. This was one, although I do not think by any means the most important, of the problems which were submitted to the Fowler commission, and I thought that commission had suggested the happiest possible solution of that problem. I agree that there was a genuine grievance on the part of the private stations with respect to the actual operating personnel of the C.B.C. carrying out this regulatory function as opposed to the board of governors. I believe it is a good thing to have individual C.B.C. stations competing with private stations for listeners. I see nothing wrong with that, in fact I think it is a very good thing but, at the same time, we did not wish to see a situation created wherein there would be two systems in this country; we wanted only one, and we, in our party, have always taken that view.

Of course that is not the view which was taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, or some of them, when they sat over here and I exempt the Minister of National Revenue from that charge. I just looked at the record at random this afternoon—because one does not have much time these days to do any continuous research—and when the hon. gentlemen who were then sitting on this side of the house were trying, very ineffectually, to reply to one of the most brilliant speeches made in this house, namely a speech made the previous day on this subject by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), who was then the member for Stormont and the minister of transport. I found, as one would expect to find, that the clearest and most precise statement on the position of the Tory party was made by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), who was then the private member for Kamloops. I think, in view of what we have in this bill it is perhaps fitting that I should now place on record what the member for Kamloops had to say at page 3040 of Hansard for March 17, 1953, which reads as follows:

The system we want to see is a parallel system to that which prevails in our railway communications, which are still governed by the national policy laid down by a Conservative government—

These departures from history I will just ignore as I go along.

—and to which the Minister of Transport today paid tribute. We want to see the same system as prevails in air transport, to which the Minister of Transport also paid tribute.

The hon. member did not quite have the gall to suggest that that was also done by a Conservative government.

We want to see that policy prevail in the field of television broadcasting particularly, because we believe that policy would preserve the right of parliament through the regulatory body to lay down conditions and regulations under which television programs might be presented, and to prescribe the Canadian content of the programs. These stations would, nevertheless, be allowed freedom of operation and competition within those limits, under a policy which would serve the interests of the Canadian people with respect to building up a television system, and consistent with the building up of Canadian talent and Canadian programs, but without the dead hand which is now holding back that development as is the case under the misguided government television policy.

That is what the Minister of Justice had to say when he was on this side of the house; but the Minister of National Revenue took a rather different view of what we had done when he spoke in this house on June 3 of this year, and I feel I should recall to hon. members the words used by that minister as recorded at page 812 of Hansard for that date:

This year, under the aegis of this government—

That is to say the government of which he is a member.

—I am not speaking politically now at all because other governments gave the C.B.C. financial support, too—

Mr. McIlraith: We did a good job with it.

Mr. Nowlan: You did a good job with it; there is no question about that, but we are going to do a better one with it.

It was precisely those words used by the Minister of National Revenue, more than anything else said during this session, that lulled some of us on this side of the house into what I can only now describe as a false sense of security, and of course we were the more disillusioned when we saw what it was that the Minister of National Revenue, whose heart was shown to be in the right place last June, had been compelled by the exigencies of cabinet solidarity to accept in late August.

I am sure that all of us feel that the minister must have tried to put up a very strong rearguard action because, after all, it took him from June 3—which would have been approximately a reasonable date at which to bring in this legislation if any consideration was given to parliament or to the rights of parliament instead of taking until I believe a week ago today, August 18, to get his colleagues to go even one-quarter of the way. I say, like the Leader of the Opposition, that one-quarter of the way is just not good enough. We are far better off with the law as it is than we would be if this bill were passed, far better off.

If there were any hope of defeating the bill of course that would be the best thing to do with it. We could then start all over again, but of course the government can prevent that. It does, however, seem to me that the government might have a sober second thought as a result of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Dollard and might consider whether it should not accept his amendment and allow this matter to rest. While the government was itself resting a little during the recess, it could give the matter some further consideration and could also allow the rest of us to give some further consideration to this very important problem, because this bill does attempt to alter fundamentally the whole structure of broadcasting in Canada. We had hoped it was going to be altered for the better, along the lines of the report of the Fowler commission. I do not accept, and I do not think anyone accepts, that report in its entirety but, speaking generally, I do feel it is the most useful guide we could have at the present time to legislation of this nature.

In order to illustrate a little further how widely and how fundamentally this bill does differ from what the Fowler commission recommended, I should like, as the Leader of the Opposition did, to read one or two passages from the report and I do not wish to trespass on the time of the house by repeating the reading of any of those parts which were read by the Leader of the Opposition. I should like to read, first of all, from the chapter entitled "The regulation of broadcasting", on page 90, beginning at the last paragraph:

We think there have in fact been two public elements involved in radio and television broadcasting. This factual separation of powers should be more precisely defined in law. One of these elements should be an operating agency, engaged in the operation of publicly owned stations and national networks and in the production and distribution of a national program service throughout Canada. We think that the phrase "national program service" should, if possible, have a more detailed definition as to its geographical scope and intended purpose than has been given up to the present time. If this agency is given precise responsibilities it should also be given powers sufficient to discharge those responsibilities, and financial resources, on an assured basis, adequate to do the job that parliament intends it to do. A crown company seems to be the simplest and most familiar form for this agency to take. The existing Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with minor changes in its statutory powers and organization, can be this agency. Many of the subsequent chapters of this report will deal in detail with the powers, organization, operation and finances of the C.B.C.

The other public agency in the Canadian broadcasting field should be a board created and authorized to act for parliament, and responsible to parliament, for the direction and supervision of the Canadian Broadcasting system. This board should have responsibility for all elements in Canadian broadcasting. It should not, we suggest, be part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its members should not, as in the present statute, comprise the corporation. The provision in section 3 of the Broadcasting Act of 1936, whereby the corporation is made to consist of the board of 11 governors was no doubt a familiar form of statutory provision and a natural method of applying the concepts of private company law to a crown corporation. In other crown companies it may not matter, but in broadcasting it has probably contributed to some public confusion as to the nature of relations between the governing board and the operating corporation.

This board is not part of the C.B.C.—

That is the board they are now recommending.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what we have made plain.

Mr. Pickersgill: I admit the minister's point there. That is what he has made plain, but there is something else which he has made anything but plain, and that is what I am coming to in a moment.

This board is not part of the C.B.C. and should not be referred to as "the board of governors of C.B.C.". We suggest that a new board, differently named, should be created by statute. The name we use in speaking of this agency is "The board of broadcast governors".

I do not think I will read the next few lines because it would be just a waste of time, but the beginning of the next paragraph is very important.

The C.B.C. is responsible to the board and is answerable to it for its performance and efficiency.

That is the critical point, it seems to me, about this bill; that is the real difference, expressed in that one sentence, between the bill before us now and the Fowler commission's recommendations.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the substance of your criticism, is that it?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the most substantial part of our criticism on the one point and, of course, the minister is very familiar with my other criticism that the power of the purse is the power to destroy.

The report goes on:

Similarly, private broadcasters are responsible to the board for their performance. The degree of supervision and control by the board may vary as between the public and private elements in the single Canadian broadcasting system, and may vary from time to time as between different units in the system, but the basic relationship between the broadcasters and the board is the same for all stations. They are responsible to the board, which in turn is responsible to parliament for the whole Canadian broadcasting system.

In the following sub-headings of this chapter—

I do not think there is any point in reading further in that paragraph, but there are two final paragraphs in this chapter on the regulation of broadcasting from which I should like to read a few sentences. The last paragraph on page 135 reads:

It may be that some of the misapprehensions of the private broadcasters concerning Canadian broadcasting controls and the apprehensions of the public will be met at least partially by some of the suggestions we have made for clarification and re-definition of present arrangements. For example, the amendment to the act which makes it clear that the proposed board of broadcast governors does not comprise the C.B.C., may confirm the independent nature of the board. Such independence, we believe, has in fact—

And this is very important, it seems to me.

—characterized the actual operations of the board of governors in the past. The suggestion as to procedure for hearing licence applications for new public or private stations may avoid some public apprehension that there was some conflict of interest and duty in the exercise of the board's licensing authority; this also we think was more apparent than real. The separation of the C.B.C. activities of station relations and broadcasting regulation may remove one source of confusion and misunderstanding in relations between the C.B.C. and private stations.

Now I should like to read just the last sentence of all in this chapter.

If and when, after public discussion of our recommendations and parliamentary debate on their implementation—

I emphasize that again—"parliamentary debate". Surely that is something more than even the best of us could be expected to do effectively at this stage of the session.

—the suggested changes are made, it is to be hoped that this long and frequently bitter argument about a separate regulatory body will come to an end, and private broadcasters will accept their true role as valued and essential partners with the C.B.C. in the single Canadian broadcasting system.

As compared with those recommendations, what in fact have we here? When I read the bill first, sitting here in my place after it was distributed, I turned to someone sitting beside me and said: "This bill reminds me of nothing so much as the Austro-Hungarian empire before 1914; there is an uneasy kind of duality; no one knows where any of the responsibility lies; it is an utterly ramshackle structure which is almost certain to fall to pieces if it does not result in some kind of civil war."

It is obvious that you cannot have any clarity with diffused responsibilities. Our great pride in our system of government as compared with any other rests on the fact that the line of responsibility under our system is clear—you always know who to blame and where the blame should rest. It seems to me that it is not desirable to get into this mixed system where nobody is to blame and where nobody has clear responsibility. Who is going to govern the C.B.C. if this bill is adopted; the board of broadcast governors, as Fowler recommended; or this board of directors which has been conjured up like a rabbit out of a hat; or the minister to whom the board of directors of the C.B.C. would be responsible, and responsible in a fashion that I never expected to find in any broadcasting legislation?

I am surprised at the minister framing legislation containing such a phrase as "during pleasure for seven years". I do not know who invented that phrase. I am not a lawyer, and I may never become one, but I have read a lot of statutes in my time. It may be that the minister can produce some precedents for this, and it may be that some of those precedents might apparently prove embarrassing, but I must say that if there are precedents they are probably bad precedents. You either are there during pleasure or you are there during a term of years. It seems to me it is a plain contradiction in terms. A term of years during good behaviour is included in the provision respecting the board of broadcast governors. That is an understandable, normal provision. There is also a normal provision for the determination by some one of what is good behaviour. I do not know if the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) has been giving consideration to this matter but I would be rather interested to hear his views on the phrase, "during pleasure for seven years."

The only construction I could put upon it is that they can stay there for seven years if they keep on pleasing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for seven years and that is precisely the thing of which we were afraid. That is precisely what we were afraid of, as I said at the committee stage on the resolution, when the minister hinted to us that the government was not following any of the recommendations of the Fowler commission about the financing of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. At that time I believe I used the phrase they would have to go on bended knee to the Minister of Finance but, unless the Minister of Finance is to be the minister responsible, it looks to me as though they will have to bend one knee to the Minister of Finance and one knee to some other minister and try to please them both. That may be possible. It may be there is such harmony in the cabinet that if you please one minister you please them all but perhaps one may be permitted to be a trifle sceptical about the clear lines of responsibility about which I was speaking a few moments ago in a situation like that.

It seems to me there should be no one whatever in the new C.B.C. set-up reporting to a minister. If we are to follow the broad scheme that the Minister of National Revenue is asking us to follow in his bill, the C.B.C. should report to the board of broadcast governors in exactly the same way as the management of the C.B.C. in the past and up to the present has reported to the board of governors of the C.B.C. and the government's relations and parliament's relations should be with the board of governors and with no one else.

Here we are going to have a situation, as was pointed out by my friend the hon. member for Dollard, where we will have the board of broadcast governors perhaps reporting to one minister, and the C.B.C. reporting to another, and in addition the C.B.C. having to go to the Minister of Finance for its funds. It is a preposterous kind of arrangement. As the Leader of the Opposition so very well pointed out this morning, it is just inconceivable that it could ever work.

What is even more serious, in my view, is that it opens the door wide to political interference. Here you have the president and the vice president of this great broadcasting organization appointed during pleasure. They can be fired at any time without explanation by the governor in council. They are the people who will be in charge of the operations of the corporation and they will be reporting to a minister. In some vague way they also have over them this entity, the board of broadcast governors. Where are the lines of responsibility going to be drawn? There is no clarity and there is no certainty but there is every opportunity and every incentive—and one would have to be almost more than human to resist the pressure that there is bound to be—for political interference. I suggested the other day and I still think it is true that perhaps the government would not be so crude as to threaten to cut down the appropriation if they did not behave. But the carrot will often accomplish much more than the stick, as we well know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The suggestion is, with regard to the Minister of Finance, if they are good boys, if they present his victory bonds in the right sort of way, if they give him a good break on the budget, if they do not say too much about the deficit and if they are just as careful as can be about these things—

Mr. Hodgson: Do not tell all your secrets.

Mr. Pickersgill: —they will get a little more next year so they will be able to increase the salaries and generally have a cozier time. This is the most insidious aspect of the matter.

One can pick up the report of the Fowler commission and almost at random find quotations about the supreme importance—and I come back to this as the most important thing of all—of having a certain budget for a period of years for operating expenses, because it is in the operating expenses and not in the capital development that the opportunities for this kind of pressure are obviously present.

When all is said and done, if you are going to start a big new station somewhere it represents a large new project and is something that perhaps ought to be considered as a single individual item by parliament. It is certainly something I would have thought would not lend itself to any degree to five year plans. But what seems to me is very essential is that by one device or another the C.B.C. should have a certainty as to a minimum amount of revenue. For my own part I again express the feeling that they also should have a certainty as to a maximum, because I do believe the methods of financing of the C.B.C. up to now—and here I agree with what the Minister of National Revenue said earlier this session—are no longer satisfactory. Indeed, I doubt if they have ever been completely satisfactory or if the problem was ever wholly solved, and that is the principal reason why Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Harris asked their colleagues to join with them in recommending to His Excellency that this royal commission be set up. It was precisely to solve this problem in a more satisfactory way.

In order to have political independence of the government it is essential that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should have a certain minimum income, but equally, in order to protect the treasury, which is a consideration of which we must never lose sight, there should also be a maximum, in my view. Since the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not subject to those commercial pressures which commercial operators have to meet—that is to say their balance sheet—and because, of course, it does not have the same kind of objective measures of service that the railways and organizations of that kind have, it seems to me that by imposing a maximum you do enforce economy upon the organization. There may be three or four things they would like to do, all of which would be desirable, but there will not be enough money to do them all, and they must make a choice among them and cut their coat according to their cloth. I believe that is a good thing for any public agency. An ordinary government department is financially controlled through the treasury board and other devices and also through the annual appropriations in parliament. But, as I say, annual appropriations are most undesirable in this case for two reasons; first, because there would be a lack of the certainty needed to give the corporation independence and, second, because it would open the door wide to political interference or the suspicion of political interference.

I am not making any accusation to the effect that there is any member of the government who presently has any such design. I am not saying that at all. Perhaps I would not have complete confidence in all of them but I am not making any such suggestion. I do say, however, that insensibly these things can happen, if the opportunity is there, and it is our duty as a parliament not to have the opportunity there. It is not necessary and it is not desirable.

It seems to me that what is necessary and desirable is that there should be a period of years long enough to provide a reasonable degree of stability or, if possible, some mechanical formula such as the formula—I just give it by way of illustration—for calculating university grants, where again we have been very anxious in this parliament to make it abundantly clear that there was no interference with provincial rights; some mechanical formula depending on the growth of the population and the value of money, or something of that kind, something which could not be changed at the whim of the Minister of Finance or of the governor in council, to determine what these C.B.C. revenues should be.

It does seem to me that what is suggested here is wholly and utterly unsatisfactory. It is made worse by this provision that the operating agency, the C.B.C., should be responsible in some respects, which are not defined, to the board of broadcast governors and in other respects, which are also not defined, to a minister, and that the operating heads of the C.B.C., the two chief executive officers, should be employed during pleasure. That, sir, is something which I hope the government, if they persist with this bill, which I sincerely hope they will not, will take out of the bill in committee.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to speak on the shortcomings of the bill since they have already been very ably dealt with. However, I do wish to speak on one aspect of broadcasting and on television in particular. I am concerned with certain programs which are approved for television presentation. I would like the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) to tell the house who is responsible for some of the atrocious productions such as the one which appeared on Saturday, August 16, which inspired the editor of the Fort William Times Journal to write an editorial which I trust you will allow me to read, Mr. Speaker. This is an editorial which describes a condition rather than offering an opinion. I quote:

Last week the world president of Rotary visited Fort William. He is an American from Milwaukee, an idealist who heads an international organization devoted to the cause of building good will between peoples of all nations. Warmly received here, the distinguished gentleman radiated friendship.

At the same time he was being welcomed in the city, labourers in the vineyard of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at Toronto were putting the finishing touches on a production—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I must draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that on second reading we refer to the principle of the bill; we do not go into individual programs.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am merely describing what the broadcasting corporation did produce on that particular day. I am not going to read the editorial; I am merely summarizing what the editorial said. The production was put on by Duffy. It was supposed to be some kind of comedy and the supporting actors staged a scene—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I will have to remind the hon. member again that on second reading we cannot discuss individual programs. We must discuss only the principle of the bill.

Mr. Badanai: I wish to say this, behind the direction of C.B.C. productions—and I refer particularly to this one—there seems to lie an enormous dislike of the United States and of Americans because this refers particularly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I do not want to have to ask the hon. member to take his seat, but once again I certainly ask him to refrain from discussing individual programs and stick to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Badanai: I will wait until the committee stage comes up but nevertheless I cannot refrain from saying this. As intimated by the contents of this particular editorial, the president of Rotary International, an organization with clubs established in more than 100 countries or geographical areas of the world, is the president of a movement one of whose objects is the promotion of understanding, good will and peace with all nations, and while visiting the cities at the lakehead, on the screen of the television set in his hotel suite, scenes as described in the editorial I have mentioned, which were objectionable, were portrayed.

Surely, the responsible minister should take effective measures and without delay to see that such objectionable programs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I am afraid I am going to have to ask the hon. member to take his seat. Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, before the amendment is called I should say a few words, I think, in reply to some things which have been said today. On the whole the debate has been on a high level, and I appreciate the comments which were made. I must say it has been rather difficult to follow all the arguments which have been advanced. I was particularly intrigued with the speech of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, (Mr. Pickersgill) who had such great apprehensions about the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and about the powers which are given under this bill.

This bill simply carries out one of the main fundamental recommendations of the Fowler commission, and a fundamental policy of this party throughout the years, namely that there should be an independent regulatory board controlling regulations of both public and private stations. That is a matter to which we have been committed; that is a matter which the Fowler commission report recommended and that is what we have carried out in this legislation.

It is all right for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to talk about devious lines and where the authority lies and we do not know just how this is going to work. It is easy to say that. As I said earlier, many of these things have to develop with practice. Under this board of governors the C.B.C. is in exactly the same position in so far as applying for a licence is concerned, or regulation, as any other private station. We have done nothing whatsoever to interfere with the C.B.C. as an operating unit. Let us not have any nonsense on that score whatsoever. The C.B.C. still has its own network; the C.B.C. still operates that network and the C.B.C. will continue to do so.

If anyone has any question as to the attitude of this government towards public operation of radio, and in general, I refer him again to section 10 of the bill, Mr. Speaker, which says:

> The board shall, for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system and the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard that is basically Canadian in content and character, regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations—

And so on. The powers given to the C.B.C., Mr. Speaker, by this bill are exactly the same, with minor technical changes, as the powers given the C.B.C. under the act of 1952, chapter 32, which again was a re-enactment of the act of 1936, except in so far as the power to make regulations is concerned. Otherwise, the powers given in sections of the old bill are virtually the same, with the one exception of regulation, as are the powers conferred by this bill today.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to ask the minister a question in order to clarify one point. In quoting section 10 he quoted the general part containing the statement of the purpose of the C.B.C. but when he came to the actual powers granted by section 10 he omitted dealing with them and, I presume because we are at the second reading stage, referred to them only as "and so on and so on." It is those very powers in section 10 now given to the board of broadcast governors that are causing us concern.

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly did not leave that out deliberately. I read the first part of section 10 as an enunciation of policy and what may be causing trouble to hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to the rest of section 10 I do not know unless it is the fact that it refers to regulation of networks in the plural. Although no one opposite has mentioned it and I thought someone would, hon. gentlemen well know that that section is in the old act too. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's board of governors has the power to inaugurate various networks and from time to time they did establish temporary networks on special occasions for such things as hockey games, games of other kinds and so on. Therefore there is no difference there whatsover—

Mr. Pickersgill: No one said there was.

Mr. Nowlan: —although some of our editors across the country apparently misunderstood it and thought we were going to create something new by starting to establish networks for the first time when it has been the law of the country since at least 1936.

As I said earlier, I think the matter of personnel is more important than anything else. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said he was disappointed because I had not enunciated what government policy was going to be and what instructions we were going to issue to the board of broadcast governors with respect to regulation. That is the last thing in the world I will do as long as I am the minister in charge of the C.B.C., and I am sure that applies to every other member of the government. That is why we are appointing a board of broadcast governors. You cannot in one breath say that you want an independent board and in the next breath criticize the spokesman for the government at the moment because he has not set down what the board has got to do. The board itself will lay down its own regulations within the framework of the act and particularly within the policy enunciated by section 10, and far be it from me or any member of the government to enunciate policies to them other than what are contained in the bill itself.

As far as I can see, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), in an able and careful speech this morning could not point to one specific matter in the bill at which he took offence. He had forebodings. They have had forebodings about this party for a long while but most of them have been dissipated. They have had forebodings throughout the years. There were forebodings that we could not even form a government and that if we did we would not be able to carry on. There were forebodings about what we were going to do to the C.B.C. and all the rest of it. These things have been pretty well dissipated.

The Leader of the Opposition said in his speech that this might happen or this could be done and he had fears as to the future, about which it is his responsibility to have fears, but there is nothing in the bill itself to suggest this in any way, shape or form. The only material point I can see in the criticism, and I hope I am fair to hon. gentlemen opposite, is the fact that the C.B.C. will report to parliament instead of to the board of broadcast governors. What is the point in that, Mr. Speaker? Does it make any great difference whether the C.B.C. reports to the board or whether it reports to parliament? It is true that the Fowler commission recommended that it should report to the board. I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite know very well that if they wanted to have a debate on the C.B.C. or to criticize the C.B.C. the mere fact that the C.B.C. reported to the board rather than to parliament would not prevent that for one moment. Hon. gentlemen opposite, or whoever sat in this house, as would be their right, could take the report of the board of broadcast governors and use that as a basis for talking about or criticizing the C.B.C.

Frankly, I can see no merit whatsoever in the suggestion that the bill changes something fundamental because we have the C.B.C. reporting to parliament rather than to the board. Bear this in mind, Mr. Speaker, that this year the C.B.C. will be spending over $41 million, not commercial moneys but public moneys, which is voted by parliament. Surely an organization which is spending that amount of money should be required to come to parliament and to report to parliament. Surely parliament should exercise at least some scrutiny over the way in which these moneys are spent. That was my feeling anyway, I think it was the feeling of my colleagues and substantially I think it is the feeling of the house. I cannot believe that hon. gentlemen were serious when they raised that point.

There is another matter which may have some merit. I could see that an argument could be developed but with all due respect it is one which I think has no merit in substance. The point was made that the president and vice president of the C.B.C. are to be appointed to hold office during pleasure for a period of seven years. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made a great point of that. I have not got the documentation here but I am told that that principle occurs in other statutes enacted before this government came into office. I am not certain; I simply say I have been told that.

Frankly, I questioned that point and wondered about the phraseology. We discussed the matter with the draftsmen, law officers and others and, while you can debate the point, the justification for it is that under this legislation the president and the vice-president are managerial. They are executive officers responsible for the management and managerial and executive officers generally are supposed to be at pleasure because if they do not do a job their superior officer has to exercise some control over them. That is the justification or argument, call it what you will. I must say it is a point to which I had not paid much attention one way or another until I heard the matter put so forcibly a while ago as undermining the whole structure of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I do not think my hon. friend intended it that way. However, that is the justification and as I say I am told that it is not original with this government. The other directors of the board are appointed to hold office during good behaviour because they exercise a semi-judicial function whereas the president and vice-president are executives as well as directors of the board.

A great deal has been said this afternoon about the Minister of Finance and the fact that he exercises power in some way over expenditures. You would think that there was something new in this. No one knows better than the hon. members who have spoken today, at least two of them who were of the privy council, that the estimates of departments and the estimates of the C.B.C. during all the years that they were in office—

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Nowlan: —were submitted to the treasury board after having been recommended and approved by the Minister of Finance. They were discussed and reviewed by treasury board. That is the advice I get from the senior officers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Only in the last two years.

Mr. Nowlan: I know it was done and hon. gentlemen opposite know that when they went out of office a year ago treasury board had only approved six months' estimates and that these estimates had been approved heretofore by treasury board. I heard the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate say that it has only been done in the last two years. I think I know the argument on that and I should like to deal with it right now. We have been told that the C.B.C. is now going to have to come cap in hand to the government, treasury board or parliament for money. What has the C.B.C. had to do during the last few years, in fact, pretty well throughout all the years of its existence?

In the old days, of course, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was a relatively minor corporation so far as expenditure was concerned. Radio was not expensive. It had its commercial revenues, its licence fees and its own budget and it had to live within that budget. When it exceeded its budget it had to fire someone or discontinue a program. That was the situation in the earlier days. Along came television, and what have we had? We have had increasing expenditures. The government made the excise tax available to the corporation, which had no reference whatsoever to the needs of the C.B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: But which was certain and not under the control of the government.

Mr. Nowlan: They received extra money from that source. As for the later years, I have the figures here. In 1957 my hon. friend was sitting on the treasury benches and the Leader of the Opposition was sitting on the treasury benches.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely why we appointed a royal commission.

Mr. Nowlan: What happened in 1957? You had an annual grant voted by parliament of $18,250,000. You also had a loan, but this is a euphemistic expression, as the hon. gentleman well knows. What was the difference between a loan to the C.B.C. by the government, which would never be paid back, and a grant? You covered it up by calling it a loan. In 1957, in addition to the $18 million, you had $18,500,000 as a loan. You could say it was for capital, and it probably was. In 1954 you lent $4,350,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Surely.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it not true that over the years, until very recently, those loans to the C.B.C. have all been repaid?

Mr. Nowlan: I have not the balance sheets here, but I do not think so. The Fowler commission recommended they be wiped out. As they said, it was a foolish thing to be getting money from the government with one hand and paying back the interest on these loans with another. I have not the figures in front of me, but I think the hon. member will find that the amounts are still very substantial. If they were repaid, then they were paid back with moneys parliament voted; that is about the size of it. I say, therefore, that at least since 1954, there was a grant voted of $6,500,000 by parliament to be paid in three years, and even before that parliament granted moneys to the C.B.C. In 1957 there was $18,250,000 granted in addition to the revenue from the excise tax. In 1958, on the estimates the hon. gentlemen opposite prepared and tabled in this house before their government went out, there was an annual grant of $24,343,000 submitted to parliament. There is, therefore, absolutely nothing new in this situation of getting money from parliament. It is true that from a philosophical or theoretical point of view a good argument could be made out that they should have their own funds. It would be a good thing if the C.B.C. did not have to get any money from parliament at all.

However, this party believes in the supremacy of parliament, and I think the country generally does. I think hon. gentlemen opposite expect, when you are dealing with moneys to the extent that we are here today, then it is time that parliament expressed its judgment on that. Parliament would do that anyway. There is no possibility in the world of dealing with $40 million or $50 million and avoiding a discussion on it, even if any government wanted to avoid a discussion on it which I do not think any government would. This bill faces that situation realistically and says that the C.B.C. shall come to parliament for annual grants.

Look at the sections of the old act, and what do you find? You find the same provisions exactly. Section 17 says that the governor in council may authorize certain things and provide money for them on application. Then section 18 says that the corporation shall deal with the Minister of Finance. All of these sections here refer to the governor in council and refer to the Minister of Finance. What is the situation with respect to the C.B.C. now? It cannot get more than $25,000 without going, cap in hand, as my friends say, to the minister who, at the moment, happens to be me, and have the minister recommend to the cabinet this expenditure of $25,000, whether it is for a radio tower or for a program.

You will notice that nothing has been said about one important aspect of the bill, Mr. Speaker. We have heard a lot of talk about this terrible thing which is being done to the C.B.C., threatening its integrity, and so on. That is sheer nonsense. I have not heard a word today about the fact that under this measure the C.B.C. can spend up to $100,000 without going to the minister. We increased this ceiling largely because electronic equipment is so expensive today that when you are in the realm of $25,000 you are only buying relatively cheap material.

There is another thing in that section which has not been mentioned in this debate today, and that is that this limitation of $100,000 has no reference whatever to programming. Under the present act, which I am administering today, the C.B.C. has to come to me, and through me to cabinet, for approval to spend $25,000 on a program. There are very few programs today that do not cost more than $25,000. Under the bill which we have introduced, and which I am asking this house to pass, there is no limitation whatever on programming. A criticism could be made that there is a danger of the C.B.C. overspending; I prefer to deal with that criticism rather than be open to the other one. Now, and in the future, the C.B.C. can spend money for programs, program material and anything necessary in connection with programs, without any limitation whatever in so far as the government is concerned but subject, of course, to living within the general financial framework within which it has to operate. If that is not a substantial improvement over the existing system, I should like to know what is. Amidst all these dire forebodings and rumblings of doom I should have liked to have heard some discussion of those things which have been done for the C.B.C.

I do not believe it is essential or advisable that I should take up much more time. There is, of course, one other matter which is very important and that is the section providing for the five-year program. The Leader of the Opposition said he did not think that would be very effective. I feel it is, at least, a distinct step in the right direction. I think it is something that will be effective. It is true there is nothing in there that says it shall be binding; it does not have to be submitted to parliament. However, I am sure if the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate gets up at the opening of the session and asks for the provision of the budget, I do not see how it could be denied, and I do not think it should be.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have been denied a lot this year.

Mr. Nowlan: It is a five-year program. The hon. member for Port Arthur said he thought it should be a longer one, and it might be. You cannot chop off a five-year item just like that. In general, it gives a picture of the capital commitments for the next five years. The C.B.C. has the commitment of the government, at any rate, that these moneys will be provided and, subject to some unforeseen disaster such as a change of government which is something that would be an unmitigated disaster, there can be no question but that the C.B.C. knows they have this capital framework within which they may operate. They need to come to parliament for current operations. It is true that Fowler recommended the reverse. However, he said he only used the capital item as something for which they had to go to parliament in order to give parliament an opportunity for discussion. If hon. gentlemen get involved in a discussion of programs they may be called out of order by the Speaker, but in any discussion of capital, such as recommended by Fowler, there is no hon. gentleman who would not be able to carry on a discussion in a very wide field. It is immaterial, so far as I can see, and so far as the discussion is concerned, whether the discussion takes place on a capital item or current operations.

Something has been said about the two boards getting in each other's hair—I think that was the expression used by the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate quoted at some length from Fowler in connection with this matter who pointed out that two boards were not necessary. If one looks at page 135 of the Fowler report, one finds that he was referring to two boards of similar personnel involved in the regulation of broadcasting. This bill was designed so that regulation will be carried out by the board of broadcast governors and the financial and other administration of the C.B.C. as an operating unit will be carried on by the board of directors of the C.B.C. It is true that you may get a conflict. I know what has been said about one strong one and one weak one, or something of that kind, but I doubt if that follows. There are two different views but the board of broadcast governors is the overriding agency which is going to lay down the regulations and to enforce them, I hope and believe, and under which regulations all operations will be carried out in the future. The board of directors will administer the C.B.C. as the business and operating unit. There is no thought whatsoever of destroying the single system, or anything of that kind.

This, I believe, is going to make it better for the private broadcasting stations in that they can go to an independent body. Some of the criticisms levelled at the C.B.C. were probably not justified but the psychological problem is there. The fact that the private broadcaster had to go to the C.B.C., which was operating networks and perhaps operating a competing station in some communities to make application to the C.B.C., caused frictions and difficulties and I believe interferred with the efficiency and the public relations of the C.B.C. to a marked extent.

I am confident that when this bill is passed, the C.B.C. will find itself in a stronger position than ever before because that criticism will be removed, and it will be able to carry on as an operating unit and an absolutely independent body will administer the applications and will deal with these matters from both a public and private point of view. I believe that when the bill goes through and becomes law it will be found that we have solved this fundamental problem which has bedevilled broadcasting for 15 years because of the ambiguity of the situation and the criticisms in connection with it. This government has tried to clear up this problem and I believe we have succeeded in doing so. The future of broadcasting will, as I say, depend upon the personnel of the board of broadcast governors but I am confident that men and women will be found in this country who will man those positions and will give good administration to Canadian broadcasting in the future, making it even stronger and better than it has been in the past.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make for the fact that I am taking advantage of the amendment moved in order to say a few words—and they will only be a few words—on this bill for the second time. After all, we have been debating this matter only since 11.30 this morning and we are now perhaps on the point of voting on second reading at five o'clock this afternoon. As has been pointed out by more than one speaker, we are dealing with a matter of the most fundamental importance and I would have hoped that in view of that fact we would have heard some statements about this bill, its purposes, objectives and principles, from members opposite.

Although it may be arguable, broadcasting is now perhaps the most important agency for the formation of public opinion and the dissemination of information which exists. Whether this is true or not, no one can deny that there can hardly be anything more important in a democratic society than broadcasting by radio and television. We in Canada know—although perhaps not so definitely or so tragically as is known in some other countries —what can happen to public opinion and what can happen to a country if this agency gets into the wrong hands or goes the wrong way. I am not suggesting that anything like that is going to happen in Canada; of course it is not. But this is a special problem for us in another respect because there is perhaps no country in the world where its own broadcasting agency can be more influenced or where its public opinion can be more influenced by the operations in this field of a neighbouring and friendly country. Therefore we have a duty to ourselves and to this parliament fully to discuss the principles of this bill in the light of that important fact.

While the debate on second reading may be coming to a close, we hope to have an opportunity to go through this bill in committee, section by section, and at that time to be able to point out to the minister the significance of some of these provisions as we see them and the way in which they do differ from the recommendations made by a royal commission set up to deal with this matter; a royal commission which did deal with it very effectively and in great detail and has made its report. If we keep on referring to that royal commission and to its report it is because the impression has been created that this bill is based on the report of the Fowler commission; I think it has already been made clear, although perhaps we can make it even clearer in our discussions in committee, that there are some very important differences between the provisions of this bill and the recommendations of that committee.

The minister has said that we really have not pointed out very many weaknesses in the bill; that we on this side of the house have expressed forebodings which no doubt will be removed after we have had some experience of the working of this bill if it is passed. I will leave it to the record to indicate whether we have or have not pointed out specific and concrete weaknesses in the bill as we see them; I believe some of the arguments we have advanced against it have not been met by the minister although, as I say, we will perhaps have a chance to deal with those matters in committee. So far as our forebodings are concerned—and like other speakers I do not include the minister in this particular foreboding—I particularly have in mind the views expressed by some hon. members opposite in years gone by as to the functions of the government in respect of broadcasting. These forebodings have been increased by the fact that we are discussing this bill in the house, not in June when it could have been sent to a committee, but on August 25, at the end of this session.

I will just take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to itemize the more important criticisms we have already made. We do feel that this bill could weaken the national system of broadcasting and could make it possible—although I am not going any further than that because I want to be fair and we do not know exactly how this bill is going to work out—its provisions do make it easier than was previously the case to develop two systems of broadcasting. Our worries in that regard are increased by the fact that under section 10, which outlines the objectives and purposes—

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he point out how it does make it easier to do this other than by the fact, of course, that under the existing act the board of governors of the C.B.C. has the right to grant licences whereas now it is to be done by an independent body. Is that what the hon. member meant?

Mr. Pearson: I thought I had gone into this in some detail this morning but not, apparently, in a way that made any impression on the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: I heard of the forebodings but I did not see any justification therefor.

Mr. Pearson: As I have said, I did not appear to leave any concrete impression in his mind, but I hope perhaps to do so and to raise some forebodings even in that mind when we go through this bill section by section in committee. I hope we will have a chance to deal with the details at that time.

However, section 10 of the bill does state formally—and this is the governing section of this bill—the objects and purposes of this board of broadcasting governors as appointed. But there is no reference in that section to the maintenance or strengthening of the national system or to the paramount importance of the public service aspect as the purpose of broadcasting. I do not mean to say that this could not be developed as the bill operates, but some of these forebodings about which we have been talking do arise out of the fact that no mention is made in this section, indeed no mention is made in any part of the bill, of this matter, this purpose. Yet, if one reads the Fowler report, as the minister must have more than once, one will see that in practically every chapter of that report the commissioners stressed the vital importance of one national system of broadcasting, primarily carried on as a public service.

My second criticism, which the minister says is not justified, is that this bill seems not to strengthen but to weaken the position of the C.B.C. Perhaps we will also be able to establish that point a little more clearly when we deal with the detailed provisions of the bill. Surely the fact that we now have two boards of a comparable character, two boards reporting to the government, two boards reporting to parliament through the same minister or two different ministers; surely the fact that two boards have to make two reports through two ministers does emphasize that there has in some way been created a division of responsibility and, perhaps, a division of broadcasting. I cannot, myself, believe that this kind of division in the channel, in the line of responsibility is not going to have a bad effect on the C.B.C. It runs absolutely against the report of the Fowler commission. Were I to read page 135 and following paragraphs of the report I think I could prove to the hon. gentleman that that is true, and that the Fowler commission did not recommend this kind of relationship between the regulatory board and the C.B.C.

One other specific criticism is directed against the cumbersome nature of the organization. We cannot for one moment accept the minister's statement that this bill will clear up the present situation and clarify confusion and remove, as the minister said a minute or two ago, ambiguity. We think it will have the opposite effect, especially when the two managerial heads of the C.B.C. are to be appointed at pleasure and can, therefore, be removed, if necessary, at pleasure.

The minister explained this by saying the government proposed to appoint them at pleasure because they were managerial personnel of the C.B.C. That is the very reason why they should be given increased protection and increased security. It would have been much less damaging, I think, to the C.B.C. if the other members of the board had been appointed at pleasure.

Finally, there are the financial provisions. The minister has dealt with these at some length. It is perfectly true that the C.B.C. in the last few years, because of increasing expenditures,—the reasons for which we all understand—in the development of its national broadcasting system has had to go to the government for increased grants. There is no doubt about that. It is also perfectly true that during all these years the C.B.C. also had access to certain sources of revenue in addition to commercial revenue. It had licence fees in the early days, and it has had excise tax revenue since that time.

Mr. Nowlan: That was an indirect one, the excise tax.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps that is right, but the corporation did have access to certain sources of revenue and to that extent, at least, it was made independent of the government. During one or two years—the minister has the figures and I have not—I think he will agree that there were periods when these revenues were sufficient; in one year, I think they were more than sufficient to cover the expenditure of the corporation. But now, for all the corporation's expenses except those which can be met by commerical incomes, the C.B.C. must rely on the government and it has no other source of assured revenue.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the hon. gentleman wants to be fair. He should qualify that statement about the excise tax by noting that it is now falling so rapidly that the effect on the C.B.C.'s revenue from this source is almost negligible.

Mr. Pearson: It is true it is falling in relation to the costs of the C.B.C.—

Mr. Nowlan: And very rapidly.

Mr. Pearson: —but the fact remains that the previous government, aware of the necessity for increasing expenditures by the corporation and the increasing charge on the public purse, and aware, also, of the falling off in revenue from excise tax which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, did appoint a royal commission to look into the operations of the C.B.C. That royal commission found that the C.B.C. had been well run and well administered. After giving as much consideration to this financial aspect of broadcasting as to any other phase, this royal commission made a report.

I do not propose to read this chapter on financing into the record, but I will make a reference to it—pages 274 to page 279—in which it dealt with the provision of operating funds. The commission, in this chapter, emphasizes the importance of giving the C.B.C. some assurance of a continuing income for this purpose and of giving it as much independence as possible subject to parliamentary control—we all accept that—and an assurance of a certain income over a period of years ahead. The royal commission put forward certain specific plans for that purpose. It also stated that this could be accomplished without any infringement of the right of parliamentary control. Perhaps I should emphasize that again. One way in which the royal commission said that parliamentary control could be insured was by having the corporation go to the house every year, whatever procedure might be in effect with respect of operating expenses, for its capital budget.

This particular bill, Mr. Speaker, as I said this morning and as the minister has admitted this afternoon, is exactly the reverse of that recommendation. The Fowler report says on page 271—this is the reason why they suggested the corporation should go to parliament every year for its capital budget—that there is a practical difficulty with regard to forecasting capital cost over a six-year period.

The report went on to say:

> These developments of physical plant and equipment of a publicly owned broadcasting enterprise ought to be considered by the government and parliament at regular and frequent intervals. These are the things that really determine the course of future activities. This is where the policy can be effectively determined rather than in the sporadic examination of programs or other operating details. This is the surest way, we believe, to carry out the intent that the broadcasting system should be directly subject to parliamentary control and supervision.

That particular recommendation of the committee was not accepted. But now the corporation must go to parliament every year for an appropriation for all its operating expenses. We continue to believe that the recommendation of the Fowler commission in regard to financing will be more effective, will not impair parliamentary control in any way but will be more efficient with respect to the future conduct of broadcasting in Canada. I do not think the minister should dismiss these differences between us in respect of this bill as a small matter. They seem to us to be almost fundamental—the fact that the C.B.C. is to go to parliament for all its income, except that which it derives from commercial sources, every year; the fact that the president and the vice president are to be appointed, not on the recommendation of the board but directly by the government; the fact that they would hold office at pleasure for seven years; and the fact that the board of the C.B.C. reports directly through a minister to the government and not through a regulatory board.

Surely I have said enough to indicate that there are important differences of opinion between us and those who drew up this bill. We continue, notwithstanding what the minister has said, to hold the view that this bill if it becomes law will not advance the cause of national broadcasting in this country, will not strengthen public control of national broadcasting and will not emphasize, as it should be emphasized, that broadcasting is a national service for national development. We believe, on the other hand, that this bill will leave broadcasting in Canada in a weaker position, from the public point of view—and that is of paramount importance—than it was before it was introduced.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my associates in this group I feel I should explain why we are going to vote with the government against the amendment brought in by the Liberal party. Perhaps the most important factor—and at first glance it appears to be a short range one—is that a six-month hoist coming at this time when we so badly need regulations will be far too damaging to a situation that is very nebulous. We in this group believe that this would open up just another six or eight months of propaganda and warfare especially on the part of the agencies we fear the most in their efforts to hamstring the national broadcasting setup, and I refer generally to the C.A.R.T.B. and the private broadcasters. It seems to me this would do nothing more than play into the hands of these people.

Our misgivings about the bill have by no means been completely allayed by the minister's statement. We would still very much like to have a statement on the bill and on the government's intention from the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). That may go begging, but we would still very much like to have that statement.

Everything depends on the board of broadcast governors; but who has the choice of picking the board? There is almost an innocence in the reliance of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) on the appointment of the board: wait until the board is selected; everything will depend on it; instructions cannot be given to the board; detailed policy cannot be threshed out because that would restrain the board. But who is going to appoint the board? I believe we all have a good idea who will be the key person appointing that board and he is now sitting in the front benches on the government side of the house. We would all like to hear some words from him as to the direction the board might go. What is the kind of person he feels should be chosen for the board? That is one of many questions to which we would like to have an answer.

Clause 10 of the bill has been read into the record four or five times today and it does sound pretty good. It is rather difficult to quarrel with it. However, it is not as detailed or specific as the draft bill contained in the report of the Fowler commission. That is why so much is going to be left in an uncertain condition. If the bill goes through without any more detail I can anticipate that we are going to have a dandy guessing game for the next several months. Everyone will be speculating; it will all depend on whom the government appoints; whom does the Prime Minister have in mind; who has been visiting his office lately; thus the speculation will grow.

I wish the government would go a little further in stipulating the kind of things it wants the board of broadcast governors to do. I cannot believe that the government by its choice of personnel is not going to influence the direction of future policy of broadcasting in Canada. That is why we will continue to have our misgivings about this.

The minister indicated earlier that he was giving a complete assurance that a committee on broadcasting would be established at the next session of the house. I should like to put a question to the minister at this time. Will the minister give us his complete assurance now that at the next session of the house a committee will be established and have before it the three permanent members of the board of broadcast governors so an opportunity will be provided to question them as well as anyone else attached to radio including people in the C.B.C. in order to see what the status is early in 1959?

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, when the minister introduced the resolution on which the bill is based a few days ago he was reported by the press as having said that the bill brought about only one major change. To some extent that is correct, but I think that most of us are concerned about the many other changes which will flow from this major change of setting up a separate regulatory body. Radio and broadcast policies have been well established by parliament down through the years and they were summarized in the committee report of 1942-43. Perhaps it would be worth while to put on record in this debate the findings of that committee. In its report on Canadian broadcasting made during the session of 1942-43 the committee had this to say:

> Your committee would like to preface its recommendations by stating its confidence in the framework provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936. In the reports as well as in debates in parliament, a number of principles governing national broadcasting in Canada were enunciated and emphasized. Your committee now desires to reaffirm these principles as stated in the reports of the committees for the years mentioned in brackets:
> (a) The paramount importance of a single national authority to control all broadcasting in the public interest; (1932).
> (b) The public ownership of all high powered stations under a national system of broadcasting, with low power stations individually operated or co-ordinated in relation to the dominant system; (1932).
> (c) The co-ordination of all broadcasting in Canada through exclusive control being vested in the nationally-owned system of:
> (i) The character of all programs, political or otherwise, broadcast by all stations and of the advertising content thereof; and
> (ii) All wireline networks used for carrying broadcast programs; (1936).
> (d) The independence and flexibility of administration of the national broadcasting authority to be assured by its constitution as a public corporation. Under this constitution decisions as to policy are to be made by its board of governors while administration is to be unified under a general manager, and an assistant general manager, responsible to the board for the conduct of all business of the corporation;—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member does not propose to read the entire report. It seems to me that what we are dealing with now is a change in the law as it was at the time that report was made and it would be more appropriate to discuss the principles of the bill before us. If he wishes to apply some principles from that report to this bill, well and good, but just to read it seems to me to be making no contribution.

Mr. Carter: That is exactly what I am doing because this report actually summarizes the principles.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member do that instead of just reading the report.

Mr. Hodgson: Get on the right line.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, the summary of all these principles amounted to a partnership between the national system and the private system, each to be operated and managed in such a way as to complement each other in the public interest. The reason I put these principles on the record is to show that the present bill departs from principles which have been established all through the years and have been approved by every parliament and every committee since 1932. The bill destroys that concept of partnership completely because under the bill the private stations and networks will no longer be junior partners in a single system but will be competitors. They have been made competitors under the bill and both the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the public system, and the private system are now to be under the control of another body.

That brings up another question as to the exact status of the public system under the new set-up. In the past the C.B.C. has been completely responsible to its board of governors and that board of governors in turn has been responsible to parliament. Now we have a divided authority because the public system will be responsible to this supra-body that is being set up and also to parliament. I think that is a matter of concern because the public system can certainly no longer function with the freedom that it did before.

I should like to say here that we in Newfoundland are very fortunate with respect to our private stations. I think they are second to none in any part of Canada. I would say that they are a splendid example of the private system and the public system complementing each other. I should like to take a moment to pay tribute to the extent to which these private stations go in developing local talent. This is particularly true of station CJON, which has developed a glee club and put on local plays. This station carries many live programs, on both radio and television, which provide a fine opportunity for the development of our local talent. The C.B.C. has done its share, too, in this regard. We have had plays performed written by our own Ted Russell, one of our prominent Newfoundland playwrights, who is making quite a name for himself. A couple of Sundays ago we heard a program which was devoted to Newfoundland folklore. I hope I can get a copy of what Uncle Mose said on that occasion because I want to read it to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) so they will know what Uncle Mose had to say about the post office and the Canadian National Telegraphs in Newfoundland. I hope I can get that before the minister's estimates come before the house.

I believe this is a perfect example of the two systems complementing each other, but we are doing away with that under this bill. There will not be the same compulsion now to complement each other. Under the previous system the private stations had no rights of their own, and that was understandable because the airwaves are limited. They are part of the public domain and no single person could have any vested right in them. Consequently they must be allocated year after year by the state. Under this bill, the private stations have acquired rights which they did not have before. They now find themselves on an equal footing with the public system. It does not take a great deal of imagination to see that this is not going to work out. I think a system of partnership is ideally suited to conditions in Canada, in our present stage of development. I believe that in 50 or 80 years time, whatever it is, when we have doubled our population and when we do not have as many sparsely populated localities as we have today, there will be a necessity for a change in our system. However, I cannot visualize any conditions under which a competitive system will be superior to a partnership.

On several occasions I have brought to the attention of this house the needs of my own riding and the fact that those needs are not being met by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation today.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member does not intend to bring those needs to the attention of the house again, as he will be out of order.

Mr. Carter: No, I will have the opportunity to do that when the estimates are before the house. What I do want to point out is that the gap in the coverage which cannot be filled by the public system is being filled by the private system. If we alter this setup now the situation must develop, as our leader explained this afternoon, whereby a private station must of necessity become interested in profit because without profit it cannot operate. These stations, therefore, must be interested in those localities which have the densest population and the best market. I do not see how anybody could administer fairly on a basis that will, on the one hand, give the private station a market in which to make sufficient profit to make their operation worthwhile, and at the same time give the public system a chance to earn its way so that it will not be such a severe drain on our taxpayers.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that even yet the government will take another look at this bill and not force it through the house at this time, but withdraw it and let everybody have an opportunity to see what is in it, formulate their ideas and then at the next session of parliament set up a committee so that all those ideas could be heard. This procedure, I am sure, would result in a much better bill than we have at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker. May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I was not very happy about this bill when I spoke this afternoon on the amendment and appealed to the government to put off this legislation and to take a sober second look at it. I very much regret that the government did not see fit to adopt the motion which would have made that possible.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) has said, in the circumstances we on this side of the house have no alternative but to vote against the measure, and I must say that the minister's defence of the measure made me all the more convinced that this was the right and proper course to take.

The minister made a statement which I cannot allow to go unchallenged. The Leader of the Opposition referred to it, but said he would spare the house quotations from the Fowler report on this point. I am afraid that being less forbearing than the Leader of the Opposition I do not intend to do so. I am not going to quote at length what the Leader of the Opposition quoted earlier today, but I am going to read one or two short sentences which seem to me to demonstrate completely the fallacy of the statement made by the minister. Indeed, I would say that if the minister did not comprehend this part of the Fowler report any better than he seems to have done the others, then it is perhaps not surprising that the rest of the bill bears so little relation to what is recommended in that report.

The minister stated—and if I am not stating his position absolutely correctly I would be very happy to be interrupted and corrected—that this bill was doing precisely what the Fowler commission had recommended, namely setting up a separate regulatory body. The Fowler commission recommended nothing of the kind, and in fact it condemned in the most specific and categorical language the establishment of a separate regulatory board. I read the first sentences on page 134 of the report as follows:

> The real objection to the proposal for a "separate regulatory board" is a practical one. It is likely to prove unworkable and is certain to be cumbersome and inefficient.

In other words, the Fowler commission in the most categorical language, using the very words used by the minister, recommended against and not for a separate regulatory board. Again, at the bottom of that page and at the top of page 135, appear these words:

> As a practical matter, we do not believe you can have two administrative bodies, appointed by the same government and with similar personnel involved in the regulation of broadcasting, without having duplication of expense and effort, undesirable friction between the two, and a loss of efficiency.

It seems to me that that disposes of the minister's claim in regard to what he, I think, described as the fundamental recommendation of the commission being followed by the government. The government has moved in a direction diametrically opposed to the recommendation of the commission, but this fact is at least camouflaged by the use of the language employed by the Fowler commission. The board which the government proposes to set up is described as a board of broadcast governors but it is quite clear that this board of broadcast governors is not going to have exclusive jurisdiction over broadcasting and that is, as I said earlier and as I repeat now, one of the fundamental objections, though perhaps not the most serious one, that we have to this bill.

I think the Leader of the Opposition was not just fearing something intangible when he talked about the dangers in this legislation with respect to our arriving at two different and perhaps competing and conflicting broadcasting systems in this country, and I call as a witness to the fact that this is not a purely theoretical danger the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). The Minister of Finance when he sat on this side of the house was an expert on many things, but on no subject did he pontificate more frequently or with greater apparent authority than on the subject of broadcasting. I have before me Hansard for June 4, 1954 and at page 5521 the estimates of the then minister of national revenue were being discussed and the present Minister of Finance had this to say about the C.B.C.:

> But the fact of the matter is that as long as it is government policy to attempt to confine people to one source in this rapidly developing means of communication, television, the effects and influence of which on the minds and lives of people are simply incalculable, we are courting a danger to the very fundamentals of our whole conception of freedom.

Hon. members will note that the minister was talking about freedom, and he continues:

> I do urge upon the house that the house address itself to the imminent, pressing perils for Canadians of a policy of monopoly which this government has deliberately followed, has deliberately fostered and to which it still unrepentantly adheres. This policy must be put aside. The government must cease to impose monopoly upon the people. Encouragement should be given, with all the safeguards that are available under law, to permitting people to have alternative sources of communication in this important and rapidly expanding field. The time has come, Mr. Chairman, for a drastic change in our policy in relation to regulation in this field.

And I think that is, of course, what the Minister of Finance thinks he is getting now.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) made a good deal of the fact that, in the last year or two, when we were in office we had been obliged by reason of rising costs, particularly those of television broadcasting, and declining revenue from the excise tax, to make temporary and interim appropriations to the C.B.C. That is true; but those were, if my memory correctly serves me, the only appropriations of that character which were made. In all previous cases the financing of the C.B.C. was done on a basis which did not depend upon annual appropriations, and when these annual appropriations were brought in during the last year or two, the minister of finance of that day and the minister reporting to parliament for the C.B.C. were both very apologetic about having to do this kind of thing. It was primarily for that reason and not to settle the question of a separate regulatory body that Mr. Harris and the former prime minister were so anxious to have a royal commission set up so that this dangerous policy, which we indeed recognized as a dangerous policy—this policy of annual appropriations, which brought the C.B.C. in our opinion too directly under the control of government—could be done away with and something put in its place.

Every device suggested for that purpose was opposed by hon. gentlemen who are now sitting on the treasury benches. I have in my hand Hansard for 1952-53, volume V, and I note that on May 4, 1953, the present Minister of Finance was speaking on the bill to amend the Canadian Broadcasting Act, which was introduced by Mr. Abbott for the purpose of earmarking the excise taxes on radio and television for the use of the C.B.C.

Perhaps some of the newer members will not recall why that was done. It was done because those taxes were fixed at a definite rate; the government could not control the revenue from them, and the C.B.C. got all that was raised from them. It was a period when people were buying television sets in large numbers; a period, also, when great numbers of Canadians could not have television because they were too remote from the broadcasting stations. The government decided —and I think it was a very wise decision —that the people who were getting the benefit of television should, in the main, pay for it. This was a very neat way of doing it and one which kept control of the C.B.C. out of the government, because this money went automatically to the C.B.C.

The present Minister of Finance took the most violent exception to this proposal, and here is a small part of what he had to say on that occasion. I would not think of inflicting on the house more than a small part of it.

We are expected, as a sovereign parliament, to trust the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the extent—

Mark those words—"to trust the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation", that is the attitude, that is the state of mind—of the Minister of Finance.

—to the extent that in the one case we make provision in their behalf for a five-year annual grant in advance totalling $31¼ million.

That is the Massey grant.

Now we are being asked to turn additional revenue over to them without any future control on the part of parliament over it. Why cannot the alternative and sound principle apply, namely that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation trust parliament to make whatever provision is needed year by year in order to meet the known needs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

In other words, bring it under the thumb of the government. The hon. member for Eglinton continued:

That is the issue, Mr. Chairman, which is presented by this section and which can be overcome only by an amendment of the type that I have proposed.

Mr. Abbott, who had a great deal of commonsense and who had an extraordinary capacity for replying to pompous arguments with rather earthy statements, had this to say as recorded on page 4720:

As to this nonsense about having no opportunity to discuss the affairs of the C.B.C.—

I must say that this is very like the language used by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) this afternoon—

As to this nonsense about having no opportunity to discuss the affairs of the C.B.C., may I say I have been in the house for 13 years, and with the possible exception of wheat—

I draw that to the attention of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue).

—I do not believe any other subject has received such a thorough airing in the house as the affairs of the C.B.C. To use a slang phrase it is pure eyewash to say the House of Commons has not the fullest opportunity to dig into what the C.B.C. is doing and to find out how much money it is spending and to find out how it is spending that money.

We all know that that is perfectly true. We know it is quite unnecessary to have annual appropriations in order to make that true, because there were never any annual appropriations up to the time Mr. Abbott was speaking in 1953. In fact, it has been more true at that time than it has been since the present administration came to office, because although they have made appropriations, up to now they have made those appropriations only by governor general's warrant. Thus there has not been, in the year and two months during which this administration has been in office, much opportunity to consider the finances of the C.B.C.

But there is no doubt that we have the opportunity, and there is no doubt whatsoever that if a scheme of appropriations over a period of years, with minima and maxima set as suggested in various ways by the Fowler commission, for the operating expenses of the C.B.C. there would have to be a bill or a provision in a bill to enable that to be done, and there would be an opportunity at that time of considering it. There would be an annual debate to consider it and, as the Fowler commission very properly suggested, for the capital expenditures, which would be relatively big items about which there might be differences in parliament, there would be annual appropriations and, as the minister very wisely said, if these capital items came before parliament surely some of us would have ingenuity enough to figure out ways for relating arguments on current operations to capital outlays of that sort. If any hon. members should want help as to how to do that I would be willing to offer them a little free advice at any time.

I come back again to this question of financial control. No one on this side of the house is objecting at all to financial control by parliament of the C.B.C. What we are objecting to is financial control by the government of the C.B.C., and that distinction does not yet seem to have penetrated the minds of the occupants of the treasury benches. I will tell the house one reason for our attitude in this regard. The Minister of Finance had something else to say when he was on this side of the house as recently as 1955. I did not get very far in my researches or, no doubt, I would have found a great many more illustrations. But in that year he was talking about the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue. I am only going to quote a little of what he said, but it is very revealing. We all know how flexible the minister is, and how apt to change his mind, but these are his words:

I simply conclude with this. This system, by reason of its developed weaknesses, its inherent unsoundness, its suppression of freedom, its suppression of competition in favour of monopoly and the colossal cost to the Canadian taxpayer, as my colleague, the hon. member for Perth will show, has brought us to the point now in Canada that in this house we are requesting a fundamental revision in policy in relation to radio and television broadcasting.

So much for the Minister of Finance. I think that before this parliament agrees to make this fundamental change in broadcasting in Canada, a change which affects so intimately the lives of at least 80 per cent of the population of this country, the Minister of Finance, who after all is going to have more control over broadcasting under this set-up than anyone else except the Prime Minister, should come into the house and tell us what his views are and what his feelings are about this matter. It seems to me those quotations I have read give us strong grounds for feeling that to put this corporation and to put the whole broadcasting system of this country at the mercy of the Minister of Finance is not the kind of thing which the Fowler commission had in mind, or the kind of thing which the majority of the people of Canada want.

I said something a moment or two ago about the difference between financial control by parliament and financial control by government. The minister talked almost as though we on this side wanted to prevent debate in this house concerning the C.B.C. We certainly do not. I do not think there is anything healthier than debate about the C.B.C. and I do not see any reason why we should not criticize the C.B.C. in this house if we feel inclined to do so, openly and frankly. What we do not want, and what no person who cares about having a free country wants is to have the ministers in their closets able to control this great agency for the dissemination of objective information. That is what we do not want. It is our duty as a parliament and it is the duty of hon. members in this house not in the government but sitting supporting the government to see that that ideal is upheld.

I appeal at this time, as I used to listen so often to appeals made from this side of the house when I sat on the other side, to the private members in this house to get up and say what they feel about this. Do they feel they want this broadcasting system, the operating part of it, brought under the direct control of the minister administered by two executives who can be fired without notice by the governor in council at any time he pleases? Is that their idea of having an independent broadcasting system in this country?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not mine and I do not believe it is the conception of any person who has any real understanding of freedom, and that, it seems to me, is the fundamental issue here.

So long as we have these annual appropriations, so long as we have these clauses in this legislation enabling the government to dispense with the executives of this corporation during pleasure, I do not care how pure the government is, human beings being what they are there will be a suspicion. We should not have legislation of that sort. We should remove that suspicion and bring this bill above reproach so these things could not happen.

What is at stake, in my opinion, is one of our essential freedoms. I am not going to transgress the rules of the house but we have been told that before this session ends we are to be asked to consider legislation to guarantee our freedoms. Here is a piece of legislation dealing with one of the fundamental and one of the most important freedoms of all. What do we find? At the present time we have legislation which ensures independence from the government and we are asked to scrap that legislation and substitute for it a measure that will bring the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation under the direct and immediate control of the government in two most objectionable ways. I say that this legislation should not pass and that no one who really cares about freedom should vote for this legislation.

I must say I am not too surprised that this legislation has been introduced. I am a little disappointed that the Minister of National Revenue has been taken in by his colleagues as I believe he has, but I am not too surprised at this legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: It is the reverse.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh no. The minister did rather a good job of attempting to give us the impression that he had put one over on his colleagues, but after we see how closely the bill corresponds with the prognostications of the Minister of Finance it becomes obvious to us who the real author of this bill is, and it is not the Minister of National Revenue.

I have not often been guilty of quoting myself in this house and as a general practice I do not think it is a very laudable one but it did so happen that on October 19 of last year I made a speech in Winnipeg which I am sure no hon. member heard and in it I had something to say about the subject which is now under consideration. I am not going to apologize for repeating now what I said then because I believe it is completely relevant to this measure before the house. What I said on that occasion was that it was a matter of pride to me that after 22 years of Liberal rule one could travel the face of the globe without finding any other country in which the individual has greater freedom than he enjoys in Canada. I went on to say that this Liberal achievement of freedom for the ordinary citizen—and it has been a Liberal achievement—is now taken so much for granted in Canada that we have other parties claiming that they are really more liberal than the Liberal party, and we had a demonstration of that, of course, in some of the observations made by the Minister of National Revenue with respect to this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member intend to relate this particular speech to the bill before us?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh yes, Mr. Speaker. As you will see, sir, it is very directly related to it. I will spare you the reading of a paragraph that is not related to it although, since it refers to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), I am sure that most hon. members on the other side of the house would be very pleased to hear it.

An hon. Member: Oh no.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I said was that in some of his campaign speeches the Prime Minister deliberately played down the name of his own party and played up his so-called liberalism, and we of the Liberal party can only take that as a compliment. And then I went on to say that the proof of that pudding would be in the eating. I suggested that we Liberals—and I did not mean just the Liberals but all Canadians—had better keep our eyes on what the Prime Minister does without being distracted too much by what he says, and I believe that is very good advice for every one in this country.

An hon. Member: What about March 31?

Mr. Pickersgill: To show you that I am not taking too long to come to the subject, I said one of the first places we Liberals had better watch for attacks on freedom was in the field of radio broadcasting. I was censured for making that statement. The Ottawa Journal picked up a report of this address and said there was nothing to this suggestion, that it could never happen; but it is happening right now. I went on to point out that so great has been the freedom of speech and the freedom to criticize in this country that in recent years our national broadcasting system has given more time and more scope to critics of the government than to defenders of the government.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): There were a lot more of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said that we as a government never tried to change that and I indicated that I made no complaint about that then. But, I said, we Liberals must be vigilant to see that the same freedom to broadcast is maintained under the Tories as prevailed under a Liberal government and today we see that it is not being done.

I might say, sir, that the next paragraph refers to freedom of trade and gives the same warning. Considering the legislation that is to be called after this bill it will be seen I was not very wide of the mark last October.

There is one respect in which I quite agree with the Minister of National Revenue and with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). I thought at the resolution stage, as did my leader, that we ought to have this legislation go to a special committee. I thought we ought to call witnesses and give them an opportunity to present their points of view. But, sir, I did not expect this kind of bill. I expected a bill roughly in accord with the recommendations of the Fowler commission. I expected we would have something in the package to resemble the advertisement on the cover but we have something that is entirely and completely different, even in the one respect which the minister called fundamental and with respect to which he said the government had followed the recommendation of the Fowler commission report but which I have shown to be the exact opposite. It seems to me this bill is so far beyond redemption that it would certainly not be practical in the time that any special committee could meet in this session to call the witnesses that would be necessary.

I suppose, in the circumstances, if we cannot persuade the government even at this late stage to stop this folly, to arrest this measure where it is now, to go on to the next item of business and to come back to this next year—this fundamental change, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) has said, in one of the most important measures for the national development of this country—we can be outvoted. We know that and we expect we will be. We will do our best in committee to have a few ameliorations to this bill but ameliorations will not make it satisfactory. It is fundamentally wrong in the three respects pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition. It is fundamentally wrong because it has two boards instead of one and thereby threatens to establish two systems instead of one. It is also fundamentally wrong because it brings the corporation directly under the control of a member of the government instead of under the board which always in the past insulated the operating side of radio from direct intervention by the government. In the third place it is wrong because of the financial structure that is suggested.

It seems to me that with legislation of this kind—if the majority insist on putting it through—the only thing to do is to take the issue to the eventual arbiters, and I predict that the day will come when this wrong turning will be regretted on the other side of the house as well as on this side, and we shall all want to go back to a system where there is genuine independence and genuine freedom and the guarantee of it in broadcasting.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think in deference to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who has just given an exhibition of histrionics that we would expect from him on this occasion, I at least should pay him the compliment of replying very briefly.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Nowlan: The trouble with the former minister, the spokesman of the Liberal party, is that he certainly is disappointed. He is disappointed because, as he pointed out in Winnipeg, this was one of those foreboding experiences. He has been foreboding so long that he is just foreboden now and he is ready to explode. He expected a bad bill—

An hon. Member: And got it.

Mr. Nowlan: —and the bill is so good that he just cannot control himself; that is the whole thing. You know, the children of Israel we are told in the Bible many years ago that when they were in captivity in Egypt they had to make bricks without straw. Well, my hon. friend over there has been trying to make bricks without straw in connection with this bill and did not as well as is told us in the Bible.

Of course, anybody can quote from the Fowler commission report. You could probably take any sentence out of context, but he attempted at the beginning to say that this board of governors was something which was not recommended or contemplated by the Fowler commission. I read this excerpt from the report the other day but in view of the histrionic display just put on I think I should read it again. I am reading now from page 91 of the Fowler commission report:

> The other public agency in the Canadian broadcasting field should be a board created and authorized to act for parliament, and responsible to parliament, for the direction and supervision of the Canadian broadcasting system. This board should have responsibility for all elements in Canadian broadcasting. It should not, we suggest, be part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its members should not, as in the present statute, comprise the corporation.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

That is the statute under which we have been operating up to the present.

> This board is not part of the C.B.C. and should not be referred to "as the board of governors of C.B.C.". We suggest that a new board, differently named, should be created by statute. The name we use in speaking of this agency is "the board of broadcast governors".

That contemplation, that vision, if you call it that, a term bandied around here a great deal lately, that recommendation of the Fowler commission has been accepted entirely by this government except for the fact that we have full-term personnel, three out of 15, instead of voluntary ones. I doubt whether there are any hon. members in this house who were prepared to go down the line of that phase of the Fowler commission report.

Reference was made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), or by someone else, to an article in the Journal by I. Norman Smith. No one would ever suggest that he was a critic of the C.B.C. or opposed to it. Mr. Norman Smith said that you could not accept that recommendation of the Fowler commission in so far as part-time officials were concerned. It is a great prospect. I do not think it would work. We put full-time men in there, three out of 15; we have 12 part-time men.

The absolute bankruptcy of any criticism of this bill on the part of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is illustrated by what he did. He did not discuss the bill; he tried to try the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on statements he made three or four years ago; he tried to put the Minister of Finance on trial. If that is the only criticism he could level against this bill, then it is a better bill than the other government brought in when they were sitting on the treasury benches. This bill is commended by both the radio league and officials of private broadcasting as well. It does not please everyone in every detail; it does not please me in every detail. No bill will ever please everyone; but it is a direct and honest effort made by this government to try to solve this problem which has been hanging over broadcasting for 15 years. It is not perfect; there will be mistakes in it. Undoubtedly, defects will be found, as I said the other night.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I think earlier in the day, referred to the history of the 1932 bill, or was it the Leader of the Opposition? He said that a royal commission had made studies and had held 45 meetings, and so on. I happened to be speaking to the gentleman who happened to be the vice-chairman of the board after it was appointed and he said that at their first meeting, despite all that time—and time should be spent; time is always desirable—they found two sections of the act which were absolutely unworkable, and they had to improvise something in their place.

This afternoon the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate referred to something he had said when he read the bill. I did not catch exactly what he said, but he said it reminded him of the Austria-Hungary empire; in other words, two parts, I presume, which could hardly function together, but that empire functioned for more or less a century. I would also remind him of the very distinguished member of the ancient Liberal party, one Goldwyn Smith, who said at one time that the federation of Canada was like a walnut; that it could not work, could not function. But Canada has functioned; Canada has worked; Canada is a nation. Anyone looking at the British commonwealth or at our system of government would say that it would not work. They would say that it was impossible, but it has worked. We know it has worked and we are proud of it. It is the same with this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pearson: Impossible, but it will work.

Mr. Nowlan: It will develop. Undoubtedly there will be faults in it. I am not suggesting for one moment that it is perfect legislation, or anything of that kind; but I do resent any suggestion that it is bringing the C.B.C. under government control or that it is attempting to make a political football out of the C.B.C., or anything of that kind.

We had a great deal of talk about those two men who are to be appointed at pleasure, but there is also a seven-year term, which is a fairly good indication that barring something absolutely inefficient, the seven years apply.

We have heard a great deal of talk about the absolute independence of this board of the C.B.C. I happened to look at the old act and I found that the general chairman of the board of governors of the C.B.C. was appointed for good behaviour, but it also says he shall be paid such annual salary as this nefarious creature, the governor in council, shall determine. He was appointed for a period of years. In other words, under the system of which we have heard so much boasting this afternoon the chairman of the board of governors of the C.B.C. was appointed at an annual salary that could be cut to $1 if the governor in council saw fit so to do. And yet they say we are trying to exercise some control. I am not suggesting that they did but I have heard it suggested. Certainly, no valid suggestion can be made against this government that it is attempting to exercise political control because of the fact that two men happened to be appointed for a period of years; but if there is inefficiency, then they can be removed. That is, I think, a sound business principle which should apply to any organization and I am quite sure that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is prepared and expects to measure up to that and if they fail then they would expect to be dismissed.

I have just one more reference and I am through. The Minister of Finance was put on trial by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I want to tell him through you, Mr. Speaker, that this year this Minister of Finance has provided more money for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation than any of his predecessors who are now sitting on the other side of the house provided when they were over here. That is the answer in so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned. He has provided millions of dollars more this year than have ever been provided before.

As I said, they are disappointed because they expected something would be done to impair the C.B.C. seriously but instead they find that steps have been taken to strengthen and develop it. This afternoon and this evening we have had an exhibition of partisan histrionics not worthy of this bill at this time. I say again that it is a good bill, a bill far from perfect but which will be improved as time goes on, a bill which given good personnel—and it is the determination of the government to appoint good personnel—will result in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the private broadcasters going along together. This great public agency, whose worth and the need and necessity for whose independence I appreciate just as much as any man sitting on the other side of the house or any man in Canada, will be preserved and maintained. Members who take part in the passing of the bill now should feel that they have contributed materially towards the development of broadcasting in Canada.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, this is a very small matter but I notice the minister has dropped the word "Canadian" out of the name of the act. What is the significance of that?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: There is no significance. The other act, of course, dealt with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and this is dealing with broadcasting in general. Therefore, the name was changed so that the act may be cited as the Broadcasting Act. There is no significance to the change.

Mr. McIlraith: The other act deals with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as does this one, and it seems to me a much better way of doing it would be to call this act the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1958, so that there would be some way of distinguishing the two acts.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course, Mr. Chairman, there is also the fact that the same policies continue and that the Radio Act is also maintained, and there are some questions of conflict between the various statutes. That was the reason why it was thought by the draftsmen, in which view I certainly concur, that there should be a differentiation.

Mr. Crestohl: I would like to ask the minister what prejudice he can possibly see, since we are dealing with broadcasting in Canada, against the title being the Canadian Broadcasting Act? Is there any such prejudice and, if there is none, would not the title Canadian Broadcasting Act abundantly cover the fact that it deals with broadcasting in Canada?

Mr. Badanai: When I rose to speak on this subject this afternoon I wanted to speak about certain television programs, and I very much regret that I was prevented—

The Deputy Chairman: I must remind the hon. member once more than he cannot go into programs.

Mr. McIlraith: With what are we dealing?

Mr. Badanai: Would the Chairman advise me when I may speak on programs, because I think this is very important?

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member may discuss the mechanics of the programs but not the individual programs.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order. Does the chair not think that since we are discussing an act dealing with a board of broadcast governors we are therefore authorized to discuss matters under the jurisdiction of those governors and that programs would come under clause 1? It seems to me that this is the place where programs could be discussed, otherwise the hon. member is ruled out from discussing a matter which is of extreme importance to him and to the house.

The Deputy Chairman: I would remind the hon. member that he may just discuss the mechanics of the programs. I do not see how we could go into a discussion of individual programs. This covers the over-all field of programming, and the mechanics that go with it.

Mr. Crestohl: On the point of order. The hon. member attempted to discuss this subject on second reading of the bill, Mr. Chairman; you then told him he could not do so, and he is now attempting to discuss the matter on the first clause of the bill, but you have again ruled that he cannot do so. Would you please point out under what clause he will be able to discuss the subject in the way he wishes to?

An hon. Member: At the resolution stage.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not think the chair should be put in the position of having to say when hon. members may discuss things. There are discussions which come up, of course, as all hon. members know, and I can only refer the house to Standing Order 59 (2), which I am sure all members know pretty well by heart:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

We are discussing a bill entitled the Broadcasting Act, which does not go into individual programs. It goes into the mechanics, I grant that, but does not go into the individual programs, and that is the point I am making.

Mr. Crestohl: May I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to section 11 (b)? Would you be kind enough to look at that?

An hon. Member: We are not on that.

Mr. Crestohl: While I am not asking you to prejudge the situation—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crestohl: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I see only one chairman in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crestohl: While I am not asking you to prejudge the matter, I would like to know whether you think under section 11 (b) the hon. member will be able to discuss the subject of programming itself?

Mr. Badanai: I am quite willing to accept your decision, Mr. Chairman, and I will speak on item 11 (b) when I come to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might make an observation on this point?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would invoke what used to be called behind the curtain the "Howard Green rule." For years when the leader of the house sat on this side of the house he argued, generally very successfully, with Your Honour's predecessors that anything remotely connected with a bill could be discussed under clause 1. While I have not had the opportunity to look up the numerous quotations, I think you could look at almost any committee stage on any bill in which the hon. member was interested—and as he was a tenacious fellow there were lots of them—and it will be found that he maintained his position. I am sure he will support the hon. member for Fort William in relating his remarks to this clause.

Mr. Green: I always had a much better case to argue.

The Deputy Chairman: I think all hon. members will realize that the last thing the chair wants to do is to stop anything from being said on a subject about which hon. members may speak, but we could not get into a discussion of all the individual programs right down the line. The hon. member can talk on the mechanics of programming or on the standards of broadcasting, but cannot go into the individual programs. He can talk about standards, I grant that, but those are just regulations, that is all.

Mr. Crestohl: How about the standards of the programs?

The Deputy Chairman: That is under regulations.

Mr. Badanai: It is quite evident that I will be prevented from reading the editorial which is based on the program I wished to discuss, and which is of the utmost importance to my constituents. Am I to be prevented—

Mr. Crestohl: No, go on.

An hon. Member: Are you the Chairman?

Mr. Badanai: I would like to ask the minister to tell the house who is responsible for some of the atrocious productions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Badanai: —such as the one which appeared on Saturday, August 16, and which inspired the editor of the Fort William Times Journal to write an editorial which I sincerely trust you will allow me to read:

> Last week the world president of Rotary visited Fort William. He is an American from Milwaukee, an idealist who heads an international organization devoted to the cause of building goodwill between peoples of all nations. Warmly received here, the distinguished gentleman radiated friendship.
> At the same time he was being welcomed in the city, labourers in the vineyard of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at Toronto were putting the finishing touches on a production which was waved into the living rooms of Canadians from coast to coast on Saturday evening.
> In the name of comedy—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Badanai: I continue:

—Duffy and his supporting actors staged a scene in which a cigar-smoking "smart" American from Milwaukee browbeats an innocent Canadian. The latter comes out of a supermarket, arms loaded with parcels, to discover that the Milwaukee man has crashed into his parked car. The American, abetted by a brassy wife, is shown—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: I would like to know how the hon. member intends to relate this to the bill. He is talking about the context of programs and I do not think I can allow him to continue along these lines.

Mr. Badanai: I thank the Chairman and I shall abide by his ruling. In any event, the editorial says that the standard of some programs, though not all of them, is very low indeed. Surely the responsible minister should take effective measures without delay to ensure that such objectionable programs are not forced on the people of the country who are paying the bills, because such presentations should not be tolerated.

If this, even though it may be rare, is a sample of what the C.B.C. is going to approve in the name of art and entertainment, then I say that the advent of television, instead of being a blessing to humanity has turned out to be a monster. If we are to tame this monster for the benefit of Canadians then it appears reasonable to suggest that we should give serious and deep study to the programming of this powerful medium of communication, entertainment and education.

With respect to present radio and television programs serving my constituency, I find that they are adequate and meet the needs of our people. As far as I am concerned, I am quite satisfied with the one channel available at the lakehead, and with its management who are always ready and willing to co-operate with organizations in the promotion of worthy causes which are beneficial to the people of the lakehead district. However, we are concerned about certain types of programs, and I think it is the duty and responsibility of the minister who is answerable for this corporation to see that a certain standard is maintained.

That is the point I wanted to bring to the attention of the committee and I wish to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for having been given the opportunity to make it.

Mr. Benidickson: I refrained from speaking on second reading for a very deliberate reason. In some of the remote areas of Canada we are particularly interested in the future of television. I felt that the minister would at this stage have some of his advisers before him, as is customary; I do not expect that the minister, with his study of the broad questions which are involved will be able to answer in a specific way questions about Kenora-Rainy River.

However, this is a typical section of Canada which is very concerned about television. The Prime Minister spoke in Kenora during the election campaign and I think he used Kenora as a platform for an address which received national attention. At that time he indicated his interest in new stations in areas not now served by television but which yet had populations that deserved attention. I wonder whether the minister, in the absence of his officials, could indicate to this committee and to myself whether or not there is a program intended for Kenora-Rainy River in the near future with respect to television, largely on the satellite basis and largely on the basis of the report of the royal commission with which I think he is well acquainted, the page reference being 221 of the report?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not want this to be taken as a precedent, because I am not prepared to answer too many specific questions, but I happen to know something of this case because I was interested in the satellite expansion program, and I can tell the hon. member that this is included in the C.B.C. budget for this year. I am not sure whether the work will be completed during the year or not, but at least the hon. member has the satisfaction of knowing that the Kenora-Rainy River area is one in which there is to be immediate construction of a satellite television station.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to follow up the point made by the hon. member for Ottawa West. I am not quite satisfied with the explanation which the minister has given concerning the dropping of the word "Canadian" before "Broadcasting Corporation" and I want to appeal to him to give this matter consideration. I am almost inclined to think it has been forgotten in the act. After all, if one looks at the old act, the act of 1936, one sees that it is entitled "The Canadian Broadcasting Act" and there are, in the pages that contain the act, a large number of references to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as well as to the act, using the word "Canadian". I am almost tempted to move an amendment to clause 1, but I do not want to divide the committee; I do not want at this time to delay the proceedings and the discussion of this bill. I simply put it to the minister in this way: will he not give consderation to implementing the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Ottawa West by inserting the word "Canadian" before the words "Broadcasting Act" and adding the year, 1958, so that the citation would read: "This act may be cited as the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1958"?

It seems to me that this would not affect the terms of the act at all but on the contrary it would simply carry on the name which this corporation has had for many, many years.

Mr. Nowlan: I must say that the suggestion is one which, naturally, would appeal to anyone, the inclusion of the word "Canadian". Of course, all acts are Canadian. The reason for its omission is the fact that we have now two corporations under this statute. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is carried on as heretofore; in other words, there is no change in that. The name is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. But there is also a board of broadcast governors, and this bill deals with both. There was one thing which I was anxious to show, and it is something which the committee will, I am sure, appreciate. I wanted to show that this board of broadcast governors was independent, and not merely a part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Therefore we kept the name "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" but we did omit the word "Canadian" from the title, and it was done for that reason. This is an act respecting broadcasting. Had we done otherwise we might have had the same confusion as there has been in the past and we want to avoid that.

I am certainly prepared to give this point consideration and it may be, after this thing has developed, and after the practice has grown up, that we can have the word reincorporated, but I do think that at the moment, because of the separation of the two boards, it would be unfortunate if we called this a Canadian broadcasting act; it would simply be assumed that it dealt with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Pearson: On this point, the minister will not have forgotten that the Fowler royal commission, in appendix 11 of its report, did draft an act respecting broadcasting and that this act was based on the recommendations of the report. Those recommendations dealt not only with the C.B.C. but with the proposed board of broadcast governors, and in this draft the Fowler commission chose as title for the bill "The Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1957".

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, just one comment arising out of the minister's remarks. As I understood him he said this is what the Fowler commission recommended.

Mr. Nowlan: No, Mr. Chairman, if I stated that I certainly did not intend to do so. I believe I said the Fowler commission recommended that the board be separate from the C.B.C.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. I just wanted to draw to the minister's attention the quotation he used in his closing remarks on second reading as found at page 91 of the Fowler commission report. That was preceded by a sentence and I think I should read it while we are dealing with this point:

> The existing Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with minor changes in its statutory powers and organization, can be this agency.

And then he went on with other remarks.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to obtain an explanation as to the proper procedure in discussing this bill. I have several matters to bring to the attention of the minister concerning relay stations, television, licensing and other matters. I have endless questions waiting for him. I understood we were discussing the principle of this bill and the matters within the compass of this bill. If we are going to have a general discussion on matters such as I mentioned and as commenced by the hon. member for Fort William, we will all have a go at it. But I am restraining myself with great difficulty in the hope I will have an opportunity of bringing these matters before the minister when his estimates come up.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what I would prefer because when my estimates come up I will have the officials of the corporation here and it will then be easier to deal with questions concerning such things as the licensing of relay stations. If we get through this bill I hope my estimates will be up by Wednesday or Thursday of this week and I shall gladly deal with those questions at that time.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members will realize that when the estimates are before us they will have an opportunity to bring up these matters and receive an explanation from the minister. That would be the proper occasion on which to raise such questions.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister inform me about a point in connection with this clause. I am not a lawyer and I trust he will appreciate my difficulty in this respect. The word "licensee" is defined to mean a person licensed under the Radio Act to establish a broadcasting station. Under the terms of this act would the definition of "licensee" include the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. Speaking offhand, Mr. Chairman, I would say so. I would think the C.B.C. has had to receive a licence from the board of governors. I am not sure what the practice was in the early days when stations were licensed but I presume the corporation would be a licensee according to the terms of the act and that the licence was granted, as it still is, under the Radio Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the part of the bill having to do with the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, there is a clause covering it but I see nothing in the definition to indicate that the minister with reference to the rest of the act is the Minister of National Revenue. Is it the intention of the government that television and broadcasting, save and except that part having to do with radio, will be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. Nowlan: There was no decision made with respect to that whatsoever, Mr. Chairman. The Radio Act has not been amended, as the hon. member will notice. The draftsmen felt if they started to amend the Radio Act there might be many consequential amendments and so the Radio Act has been left intact. It may be that as time goes on and perhaps at some future session amendments will be made to the Radio Act. Under the Radio Act, as the hon. member for Laurier well knows, it is the Minister of Transport who recommends an applicant for a licence and that is why the Minister of Transport is specifically named in so far as the granting of a licence is concerned, because there has been no amendment to that act. There may be at the next session, I am not too sure about that. The minister in charge of part I of the bill, that is the board of broadcast governors, and the minister responsible for the C.B.C., are ministers designated by the governor in council.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it so indicated in the bill?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, it is set out specifically in each clause. You will find a clause to that effect in each part of the bill.

Mr. McIlraith: Does the C.B.C. now require a licence for each station it opens?

Mr. Nowlan: Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question. I will have to obtain the information. I assume it does. It will have to get a licence for new stations under the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder why it was necessary to repeat in clause 21 some of the interpretations found in clause 2? Why is there not just one interpretation clause incorporating all definitions?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Nowlan: As hon. members know, Mr. Chairman, lawyers are a very cautious race of people and particularly those who have spent many years in drafting legislation. As a matter of fact, there are two distinct parts to the bill. If one wanted to do so he could cut the bill in two and have two separate acts. The draftsmen thought it was better to have absolute repetition of the definitions in both parts of the bill and that is how it was drafted.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Board established.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, would the minister be good enough to explain the reasons behind the fact that the permanent members will be appointed for seven years and the other members will be appointed for lesser periods without the precise term being stipulated? Although five years is mentioned, further on in this clause it is indicated that the appointment may be for a term of less than five years.

Mr. Nowlan: The purpose of having the term of less than five years is to provide for the original, initial appointments so that you could stagger them and not have all the members retiring at the same time. A member could be appointed for two, three, four or five years. You will notice there is a provision that a member may be appointed for an additional term. It would then enable them to be appointed for a full term. This provides a continuity of officers. If all members had to be appointed for a period of five years you would have them all retiring on the one date. As the hon. member will appreciate the practice has grown up of staggering or rotating appointments and retirements.

As to the term of seven years, I suppose you could put your hand in a hat and draw out some other number. We wanted something to go on. We felt it should be more than five years. Men in the prime of life, or in middle life, coming here and giving up their occupations whatever they might be and accepting a position in Ottawa for a five-year term with one repeat and having to retire at age 70—they have to retire then anyway—might not be attracted by such a proposal. We thought it might not be too inviting and so it was decided to make a little longer term for the permanent officers with the thought and hope that it would perhaps assist in providing the type of personnel you might not get on the basis of a five-year term.

Mr. Crestohl: Would the minister explain why the non-permanent members are not eligible for re-appointment? I wondered if it was merely to make it possible to distribute the kudos a little more widely?

Mr. Nowlan: That is another of the recommendations of the Fowler commission which we have adopted. I believe it is simply to provide that there will not be too much permanence on the board, that members will not continue forever, as it were. In this way we will be able to reach out and bring in Canadians from across Canada. That is why the appointments are staggered and why they will not all be retired at the same time.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask two questions. In the first place, it is easy to understand that two of the full-time members will have positions, but what is in mind for the third full-time person who will not have a position? We will have to imagine him or her in some kind of administrative set-up. We would assume that either the chairman or the vice-chairman would be a French Canadian, and the other an English-speaking Canadian. What about the third person? Why was an extra one selected?

The other question I want to ask relates to subclause 9 of clause 3. Does this rule out the possibility of any members of the present C.B.C. board of governors becoming members of the board of broadcast governors under the act?

Mr. Nowlan: Subclause 9?

Mr. Fisher: Subclause 9.

Mr. Nowlan: I will have to look into that before giving a definite answer. As to the reason for the three, it was felt that this national board representing, as the hon. member says, the nation as a whole, groups and various divisions, should consist of three full-time members here to sit on that board. Although it is true that one can be chairman and the other vice-chairman, the third would simply be a permanent member representing some of the areas of Canada. Also, of course, on the executive committee there are the three permanent and four part-time members.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, this particular provision which has been referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur has caused some of us a good deal of worry. The minister will recall, of course, that the Fowler commission did recommend that there should be 15 part-time members for periods of five years. All members of the board under that commission recommendation would be part-time members. I am not quarrelling with the decision of the government to depart in principle from that recommendation, but I am worried about the way in which that departure has been made. If this bill becomes law we will have on this board of broadcast governors 12 part-time and three full-time members. They will also differ in their tenure of office, as has been pointed out. The full-time members are appointed for seven years and the part-time members for five. There is another difference. The part-time members may serve only two consecutive terms, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Cartier, and then may not be re-appointed before a lapse of 12 months, while the three full-time members may serve as many terms as the government wishes. There is no requirement as I read the bill for a period of time to elapse before re-appointment.

What worries us in regard to this particular matter is the development inside this board of a—and I say this without offence—hierarchy of full-time members who will in fact be the dominating influence inside the board and who have been distinguished from the other members of the board in the ways which I have mentioned. This worry of ours is increased by the fact—and the minister mentioned that these three full-time members will serve on the executive committee which will be the day to day governing body for broadcasting in Canada, and the quorum of the executive committee is fixed at five.

Mr. Nowlan: Not the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Pearson: The executive committee.

Mr. Nowlan: Of the C.B.C.

Mr. Pearson: Of the board of broadcast governors. If the minister will look up his bill I think he will find that is so.

Mr. Nowlan: Clause 9?

Mr. McIlraith: It is at the top of page 4.

Mr. Nowlan: I beg your pardon; that refers to the quorum.

Mr. Pearson: The quorum of the executive committee is five, and since there are three full-time members of the board they could constitute a majority of the executive committee.

I can understand the chairman being appointed as a full-time member but I am worried about the appointment of three as full-time members. You might even make a case for the vice-chairman because he would have definite functions to perform as vice-chairman of the board, but this third member of which my hon. friend has spoken does seem to me to be in an anomalous position. He is one of this group of three who will have very great influence in directing this board but he seems to have no particular duties to perform. I suppose he is the third force among the permanent members of the board.

We feel that if there is to be this distinction between part-time and full-time members—I can see the desirability of the distinction, perhaps, for the chairman,—it should not be brought any farther than is necessary. That is why we regret very much these other provisions which seem to emphasize and broaden the distinction between the full-time and part-time members. It does underline the danger which was mentioned this afternoon of this trio, the chairman, vice-chairman and the third member, becoming in fact a kind of hierarchy inside the board. I wonder whether the minister can reassure us on that point.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know just how much my assurances will reassure the Leader of the Opposition. I can understand that he would have some concern over that clause. It is an obvious one and one which I think quite justifies his raising the question which he has. He will notice to start with that the executive committee consists of seven. That was inserted deliberately so that the three—if there was to be any suspicion of them—would not have a majority on the executive committee. I misunderstood him a few moments ago because I thought he had referred to the executive committee. He is perfectly right in saying that the quorum can be five.

Now that is the situation. I think the only answer there, Mr. Chairman, is that if we select the people who should be selected for this executive committee—and I am assuming, although this does not necessarily follow; it is not limited in the legislation—they will be selected from this area, Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa; in other words, adjacent to Ottawa, and I would think that they should and usually would be in attendance at all meetings of the executive committee. That provision for seven was put in there deliberately so that there would be a majority of part-time men and women, if they came to the meeting.

The Leader of the Opposition says that these people will become a hierarchy. I hope not. I do not think they will if the right personnel are appointed. But I ask him, what is the alternative? If we had accepted in full the Fowler recommendations and had all part-time people on the board, I ask him, what would have been the result? I think it is a fair estimate—one can only assume things—that the secretariat, the permanent officials of the board, would have been the hierarchy and would have run the board and the part-time people coming in and going out would have been more or less, we will not say under the control but very strongly influenced by the permanent secretariat, the bureaucrats, to use perhaps an unfortunate phrase, of the board. That we want to avoid at all costs.

[Mr. Pearson.]

With all due respect to the secretariat, we think that the board should be run by Canadians who are selected for the purpose, rather than by officials who happen to be passed by the civil service commission and come to that board. As between the two, the secretariat which might even become the hierarchy and the three members of the board, I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree that perhaps this was the better alternative, although here again it depends on your personnel. It depends on experience, and there can be no guarantee of perfection whatever system is chosen.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the minister at some time clear up the point as to whether or not the existing members of the board of governors of the C.B.C. are eligible for appointment to the board of broadcast governors under this bill?

Mr. Nowlan: I would have to get the advice of the Department of Justice on that. I will do that.

Mr. McIlraith: It is a fairly important point which should not be left hanging in the air. I appreciate the fact that the minister may not be able to answer it at the moment.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the point I brought up before, it was subclause 6 I wanted the minister to look at rather than subclause 9. It seems to me that the second part of that subclause may rule out a member of the C.B.C. board of governors from becoming a member of the board of broadcast governors. I refer to the words "partner or otherwise". Take the case of a member of the staff of a university which owns a radio station. If you wanted to take a very narrow interpretation you could rule out such a person from becoming a member of the board of broadcast governors. I can think of several people who might be ideally suited and who would be ruled out on that ground. Could that not be made more specific?

Mr. Nowlan: On that score I am quite sure that a university professor who was associated with a university which operated a broadcasting station would not come within the definition "engaged in the business of broadcasting or has any pecuniary or proprietary interest". Therefore I do not think you need to worry at all about the university professor. The question raised about the broadcast governors is exactly the same question as was raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West. I have my own opinion on it but it is not my opinion that will govern and, as I said, I will get a ruling from justice with respect to that point and give it either on the bill or on the estimates, depending on the progress we make with the bill.

Mr. Fisher: Does the minister mean he has his own legal opinion on it or simply his own opinion as to the rightness of it?

Mr. Nowlan: My own legal opinion but you are not interested in that.

Mr. McIlraith: There is one other question I want to raise. I take it it is quite clear that a member of the board of broadcast governors could not also be a director of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or is that clear?

Mr. Nowlan: I would hope so. If it is not, I can assure the hon. member that it will never happen as long as I am minister. I assume it is clear because there has to be an absolute divorce of the two.

Mr. McIlraith: I hope the minister will not misunderstand me if I tell him that in reading the bill before us I find some difficulty in understanding it in relation to his remarks. It seems to me that the bill is much broader than anything he indicated in his remarks, and that is what is bothering me.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I tell the minister at once that while not convinced I was impressed by his observation a few minutes ago on the composition of the board. He asked what we would have done. If I had had any authority in the matter I think I would have preferred to have a full-time chairman and the others all part-time. He suggests that if there were no full-time members or perhaps only one there would be a danger of the board falling into the hands of a secretariat of bureaucrats, as he called them without offence. But I suggest to him that when people are appointed for seven years and given a salary they are bureaucrats or will perhaps soon become bureaucrats in the best sense of the word.

I would also point out to the minister that in this clause all members of the board are appointed to hold office during good behaviour and that under subclause 7 no member of the board can be removed except on address of the Senate and House of Commons. That seems to me to be a very desirable provision in the legislation and is one reason why we are worried about the non-application of these two provisions—we will come to that later—to the board of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

While I am on my feet may I ask one further question about subclause 6 which has already been touched on by other hon. members. Under this provision a person who owns shares in a film company, perhaps a Canadian subsidiary of a United States film company, which happens to own a broadcasting station in Canada would, I take it, be disqualified from serving on this board. Would anybody who owned shares in a press association or chain of newspapers also be disqualified by ownership of shares in that press chain from sitting on this board if that press chain or corporation also ran a broadcasting station?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not prepared to give a legal opinion on such a set of facts. As my hon. friend knows, every set of facts varies slightly one from another. All lawyers know that. I think a person would be very reckless to attempt to give a legal opinion today which would be of no avail anyway because if this matter were dealt with administratively it would have to be dealt with by justice and if it went further it would have to be dealt with by the courts. But I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that the words "directly or indirectly, as owner, shareholder, director, officer, partner or otherwise"—

Mr. McIlraith: It is the "otherwise".

Mr. Nowlan: —are very broad and will preclude many people from taking a position on the board. There can be no question about that. I do not want to try to give a legal definition of the area as to who is going to be excluded and who is going to be included.

Mr. Pickersgill: But either the minister or some other minister or the Prime Minister is going to have to recommend certain names to the governor in council and the governor in council is going to have to appoint these people. Therefore it does seem to me that since parliament is being asked to make this enactment we should know precisely what this provision is supposed to mean. Would, for example, a shareholder in Canadian General Electric, which probably makes and sells parts of radio apparatus, be excluded or would somebody owning shares in Canadian Investment Fund, which might happen in turn to own some shares in Canadian General Electric, be thereby excluded? It seems to me that this is very vague and very far-reaching indeed and that perhaps it would be worth while to take another look at it for it might turn out that about the only people who will be eligible in the country will be farmers, fishermen and the unemployed.

Mr. McIlraith: What about people engaged in the distribution of radio apparatus? Chain stores distribute radio apparatus. Would this apply to employees of chain stores? You can reduce this clause to an absurdity to illustrate the point I am seeking to make. It does not seem to be precisely or carefully worded. Perhaps the minister would give us what help he can. The clause causes me concern because taking certain illustrations one can see how easy it is to reduce it to an absurdity.

Mr. Crestohl: I think the minister as a lawyer is very sound and wise when he says that he will submit this discussion to the Department of Justice for a legal opinion. That is indeed very desirable. May I also suggest that when he does so he point out that it would be desirable that members of the present C.B.C. board should not be excluded from becoming members of the new board in order to retain the continuity he spoke about a few moments ago.

Mr. Chevrier: May I bring clause 8 to the minister's attention? It seems to me to be so clear that I bring it to his attention in a particular way. The marginal note reads "duties of full-time members" and the clause reads as follows:

A full-time member shall devote the whole of his time to the performance of his duties under this part.

You might just as well have said that a full-time member shall work full-time. Is it necessary to include that clause? Does the minister not think that rather the duties of the members should be outlined and explained because there is not a word said about their duties other than that they are to work full time?

Mr. Nowlan: The clause is put in there, of course, to make it plain that they shall not have any other occupation which is taking any of their time but shall devote their full time to the board. It can be expressed in various ways but the purpose is to make sure of that one salient fact. I think these men are going to be very busy at least for the first two or three years with meetings of the board, drafting regulations and dealing with licence applications, particularly if the government should determine as a matter of policy at some future time to restrict the present one channel outlets. I can see where there is going to be a great deal of business both for the full-time and the part-time members. You will notice somewhere else they are authorized to travel and hold meetings in other places. I certainly do not want them doing anything else, anyway.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there any definition other than that contained in this subclause 8 of the duties of the members of the board? I should like to say a word in connection with that.

Mr. Nowlan: Clause 10, of course, relates to the general powers of the board. I have referred to that several times today. Then, clause 11 enumerates all the regulations which the members of the board shall consider, debate, enact, promulgate and carry into effect.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to discuss these clauses before we come to them. Are the duties of the board going to be pretty much the same as they are now?

Mr. Nowlan: So far as the C.B.C. board is concerned; that is the regulatory powers.

Mr. Chevrier: What I have in mind at the moment is an application for a radio station or a television broadcasting station. I presume the application will be made to the Minister of Transport in the usual course. It will be cleared by the Department of Transport in so far as the technical aspects are concerned, and then it will be forwarded to the board of broadcast governors who will consider this application and any others that may come before it at a public meeting?

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has just occurred to me to wonder, since the hon. member for Laurier referred to this subsection providing that a full-time member shall be a full-time member, if I may abbreviate it, whether or not that would preclude these full-time members from being directors of any corporations. It does seem to me that is a point that ought to be made clear in this legislation one way or the other. Of course, some of the part-time members would be the kind of people who would be directors in other corporations. I would think there would be nothing improper in that. However, I wonder if any of them should be directors in advertising agencies. This might be just as serious a disqualification, perhaps more serious, than connection with a radio apparatus distribution firm such as Canadian General Electric or some other company that is rather remote from broadcasting.

In view of some of the debates we have had in previous sessions, it would be a good idea to determine whether or not these full-time members can be directors of any company, especially any company from which they receive any remuneration and for which, I presume, they are expected to provide some service.

Mr. Herridge: Does this subclause 8, in effect, prohibit any form of moonlighting?

Mr. Nowlan: Absolutely.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Chairman chief executive officer.

Mr. Pearson: On clause 5, I return to the question of the chairman, vice-chairman and third member of the board on this executive committee. This clause says:

> The board may authorize one or more of its members to act as chairman for the time being in the event that the chairman and vice-chairman are absent or unable to act or the offices are vacant.

Surely it would be normal, and should have been included in the bill, to state that if the chairman or vice-chairman are away the third full-time member of the board would act as the chairman. Under this clause any other members of the board, even a part-time member, could be authorized to be chairman of the board for the time being, overlooking the third full-time member of the board.

Mr. Nowlan: I think that is true; it could happen. I do not believe it would, but after all this board will know these people. They are sitting on the board and working together, not just today but for months and years. I think it is safe to leave it to the board to designate, in the expectional circumstances which are recognized here, the member who is to act as chairman. They may want to choose somebody else. It may be the third full-time man may be ill or away. This clause does not prohibit him from being chairman. I would think in almost any circumstances which we could reasonably foresee they would be apt to name the third man to act as chairman during the time the others were ill or away.

Mr. Crestohl: I understand the chairman is to be appointed by order in council, and it would seem this clause would mean that the order in council could only be passed once because you leave it to the board of governors to appoint a chairman after that. Am I correct in my reading of the section that you only appoint a chairman by order in council the first time and after that the board can appoint a chairman if the chairman should pass away?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister had better allow this clause to stand.

Mr. Nowlan: That is another legal question we will let justice answer.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I do not want to make this observation in any critical sense, but it has been the custom in the past when legislation of this character is being discussed for the minister to be assisted by officers from the Department of Justice to enable him to clear up these points. We are being asked to legislate here and we are not getting answers to questions such as the one just asked by the hon. member for Cartier. It is a proper question and the answer should not be left in an ambiguous state if there is any way of resolving it. It does seem to me the minister could ask that this clause stand until he can get advice on it and make a reply.

Mr. Pearson: All of this shows how much better it would have been if we had been able to send this bill to a committee.

Mr. Nowlan: I thought the hon. member for Cartier was facetious, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure he was. The clause says "for the time being". Of course, you do not need a ruling from justice on that. Under these circumstances the board may authorize one or more of its members to act as chairman for the time being, in the event that the chairman and vice-chairman are absent or unable to act or the offices are vacant.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister dealt with subclause 3, but what about subclause 2 which says:

> If the chairman is absent or is unable to act or the office is vacant, the vice-chairman has and may exercise all the powers and functions of the chairman.

Mr. Nowlan: That is a normal provision, I would think, that the vice-chairman acts in the absence of the chairman or in case the office becomes vacant and, for the time being, exercises the duties and responsibilities of the chairman until such time as a chairman would be nominated to succeed him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, we shall continue with this debate, then take item No. 1 on today's order paper, the house in committee on the amendments to the Railway Act; then, order No. 7, second reading of the bill to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act; then, item No. 5, second reading of a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lubec channel between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine; then we will take item No. 11, the resolution respecting the South Saskatchewan river project; and then item No. 3, second reading of a bill to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. Chevrier: And on Wednesday?

Mr. Green: I am not yet in position to say what we will do on Wednesday; it depends on what progress we make tomorrow. The plan is that the first estimates to be considered this week will be those of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Chevrier: Will that be on Wednesday or Thursday?

Mr. Green: It may be on Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Hon. members had better be prepared for both days.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, August 26, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Sixteenth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McCleave.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION FOR RESTORATION OF PRIVATE BILL TO ORDER PAPER

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.) moved:

That Bill No. SD-231 entitled: "An act for the relief of Kenneth Herbert Gregory", the preamble of which has been reported as not proven, be placed on the order paper for consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Motion agreed to.

BILL OF RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the bill of rights is to be dealt with at this session, he can give the house an assurance that this bill will be in our possession in adequate time to permit of its examination before that consideration begins?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is yes.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT MEETING OF COPPER, LEAD AND ZINC PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell the house if our country will be represented at the United Nations-sponsored meeting of copper, lead and zinc producers to take place at the beginning of next month?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving to me a copy of his question before I came into the house. My answer is yes, Canada will be represented. There will be Canadian officials and industrial representatives in attendance. The meetings will start on September 8, and as intimated by the hon. member, at those meetings questions related to copper, lead and zinc will be considered.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the government of Canada participate in the United Nations sponsored meeting of copper, lead and zinc producers to be held early next month and, if so, will the government's representatives be persons who have a knowledge of the development, production and marketing aspects of the base metal mining industry?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is a fine spirit of co-operation among hon. gentlemen on the opposition benches. That question was just asked and answered.

Mr. Speaker: The first part of the question was just asked and answered but the second part struck me as adding something to the question, and it might be treated as supplementary.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, could the minister give an answer to the second part of the question? I did not hear the first part on account of noise from the government side of the house.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the reply to the second part of the question of course is yes. We would send only experienced people to a conference of this nature.

FRUIT

NIAGARA PENINSULA—SUPPORT PRICES FOR PEACHES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Owing to the fact that over 1,000 tons of sour cherries were left to rot on the trees in the Niagara district because of the lack of a market, and the peach growers are faced with the same predicament, I would appreciate it if the Minister of Agriculture would say if there is any truth in the Canadian Press report that federal government price supports invoked under the price stabilization act will be instituted this year to protect peach growers and canners.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think there is considerable misapprehension as far as the cherry situation, which was mentioned here, is concerned. My information is that a thousand tons of cherries which growers were unable to market were put into frozen form at their own cost, and they are holding them at the present time rather than a thousand tons having been left on the trees to rot. I might say also that no request was ever received from the cherry growers for support or assistance under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

As far as the peach situation is concerned, on Wednesday last representatives of the Ontario peach growers' marketing board and processors met the stabilization board and requested assistance for 1958 processed peaches in the province of Ontario. Various proposals were considered which the growers' representatives wished to discuss with their organization. The two groups—the Ontario peach growers' marketing board and the processors—have requested a further meeting with the stabilization board on Thursday.

In other words, during the past week there have been a series of meetings and negotiations going on with the stabilization board, the peach producers' marketing board and the canners, in which I might say the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Smith) has been taking a very active part.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—LLOYD'S INSPECTION OF COASTAL BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the government or of the C.N.R. management to dispense with Lloyd's inspection with respect to coastal boats which are operated by the Newfoundland division of the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. The management of the Canadian National advise me that they have dispensed with Lloyd's inspection, as it is considered that compliance with the regulations of the board of steamship inspection and operation under Canadian government certificate of inspection adequately provide for safe operation.

I might say that a substantial saving will be thereby effected.

[Mr. Houck.]

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—FIRST RUN OF FERRY "WILLIAM CARSON" INTO PORT AUX BASQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister tell the house when the ferry William Carson is expected to make her first run into Port aux Basques?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. The motor vessel William Carson left North Sydney Monday night for Port aux Basques with cargo on a trial run. If the tests are successful it is hoped to have a regular service go into effect about October 1.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COPY OF AGREEMENT IN FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell the house whether a copy of the agreement on the South Saskatchewan river dam project will be available to us in French?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this agreement, of course, was signed in English and I tabled the agreement which was signed in English. There were no French copies of the agreement because the people of Saskatchewan are not too familiar with that language.

Mr. Dumas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can we have a French copy? It can be translated.

Mr. Harkness: I think, Mr. Speaker, the translation staff of the house can quite readily translate it into French, and I believe that can be done under the direction of the Clerk.

Mr. Dumas: A further supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether a French copy of the agreement will be available before the discussion of the resolution?

Mr. Harkness: I expect the discussion of that resolution will come on today. I do not know whether it is possible to translate it into French before that is done.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): On that point, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for some of us on this side of the house that there be an adequate translation of the agreement and that it be made available to the house before the resolution is discussed. Since the agreement was signed some time ago it would seem to me that there has been ample time. Perhaps the matter has been overlooked, and if it has I suggest to the minister that the translation be made available before the discussion takes place.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I may say that the agreement was tabled over three weeks ago, I believe. It was tabled as it was signed, and if the hon. member for Laurier and other hon. members on the other side of the house had wished to have it translated into French they should have made their request long before now.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it does not matter whether the agreement was signed 12 months ago; surely the house is entitled to have that kind of service. There seems to me no reason why we should not have the translation of the agreement before we proceed with the discussion. There are members on this side of the house and on the other side as well who understand and read the French language much more freely than English, and it would appear to me that this should be done before we proceed with the discussion of the resolution.

Mr. Harkness: As I have indicated, we are anxious to do the best we can to meet the wishes of hon. members in that regard. The translation will be made as soon as it can be done. I am merely pointing out that the hon. member should have raised this point long before this because the resolution has been on the order paper now for several days, and it was announced by the leader of the house that the matter would be discussed.

Mr. Chevrier: It should have been done without the point being raised.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The document is in the possession of the house as one of its papers tabled in the house, and the house simply has to give the direction that it be translated. I take it that the house wishes this document to be translated forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED EXTENSION OF U.S. IMPORT QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a report that commerce secretary Weeks of the United States is preparing a new schedule of oil import quotas for next month that will likely lead to reduced imports of oil into that country. Can the minister say what action the Canadian government is now taking to maintain this very valuable market for Canadian oil and, if possible, increase it?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the article to which the hon. member refers. I would prefer to take his question as notice and reply tomorrow.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the pending end of the session, can the Prime Minister advise whether the government has given active consideration to implementing any of its policies on federal aid to education?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the final supplementary estimates are tabled—it is pointed out that I should have said "further supplementary estimates"—the hon. gentleman will have his answer in that regard.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the same general field but not on the same subject. I am sure the Prime Minister is aware of the many representations we are getting from small business people as to the government's intentions with regard to small businesses. Can the Prime Minister say whether any steps will be taken soon under special legislation to make money available to small businesses by way of loans?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The same answer applies that I made to the hon. member for Port Arthur. Provision will be made for the setting up of a small business bureau, as undertaken in the speech from the throne.

Mr. Argue: Is the Prime Minister able to say whether it is anticipated that this bureau will have moneys available for lending to small businesses? What is the answer to that question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When the further supplementary estimates are tabled, government policy in this regard will be shown.

Broadcasting

BROADCASTING

ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS—CONTINUANCE OF C.B.C.

The house resumed, from Monday, August 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-55, to establish a board of broadcast governors and to provide for the continuance of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Mr. Nowlan—Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 5—Chairman chief executive officer.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last night, we were considering clause 5 of this bill. Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Salaries and fees.

Mr. Pearson: Clause 6, Mr. Chairman, deals with the remuneration of the members of the proposed board. It is quite obvious from this clause that the board is going to be a considerable cost to the taxpayers, and that the remuneration of the members of this board will be considerably in excess of that which the board members of the corporation now receive. I believe I am right in saying that under the present legislation governing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or regulations made under that legislation, there is a ceiling on the remuneration of the executive committee of the C.B.C. of $1,000; that other members of the board of the present corporation receive $50 per meeting and expenses while they are in Ottawa, and there is a ceiling on their remuneration of $500.

The minister will probably recall that the Fowler commission recommended that remuneration of the members of the proposed board should not exceed $30,000 per annum exclusive of travelling expenses. But no such limitation, as we had on the remuneration of the members of the previous board has been included in this bill. I should think, Mr. Chairman, in view of that fact and that the remuneration of members of this proposed board has been doubled, the cost to the taxpayers might be at least $100,000 per year or even a good deal more than that.

I was wondering whether the minister or the Minister of Finance had made any estimate of the annual cost of this proposed board. It seems to me this is a very important item, as the board will be holding public meetings, which in some cases would be protracted, and extend over many days, and would be very expensive. Has the minister given any consideration to this, and could he indicate why the remuneration of the members of this board has been doubled without any limit having been imposed on it, as was done under the previous act?

Mr. Nowlan: In so far as the part-time members are concerned, the remuneration was doubled because we were advised by officers of the corporation that from their experience it was very difficult to get former members, except at great sacrifice, to come to the meetings. There was increasing difficulty during the last few years because of rising costs and so on, and members came at a real sacrifice. It was not fair to expect that to continue, and in fact some change would have been made in the remuneration payable to members of the old board if that had continued.

In so far as the ceiling itself is concerned, the Leader of the Opposition appreciates that we differed from the Fowler report, as he pointed out yesterday. We now have three full-time members who will be paid a salary fixed by the governor in council. I can say no consideration has been given to the amount which should be paid. We anticipate that we shall have to pay substantial amounts to attract the men who will be asked to fill these positions. Hence I am not in a position to give an estimate of the overall expenditure which will be made.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister's last observation, namely that no consideration has yet been given to the salaries that will be paid these gentlemen, raises a point in my mind. This board is to have a judicial character. It has always been a well understood principle of our constitution that the salary of judges is fixed by parliament and is never left in any way under the control of the executive. It seems to me that this is another way in which—again I am not insinuating that it would be done—it would be possible to bring pressure to bear in certain cases. It seems to me that it should be a statutory provision and not a provision made by the governor in council. I would ask the minister whether he would not consider allowing this particular clause to stand and with his colleagues give some consideration to that point.

Mr. Nowlan: I am prepared to give consideration to all the suggestions which are made, Mr. Chairman. As I said, this bill is not finality in itself. It will be changed from time to time. But I would point out to the hon. member that the chairman of the board of governors of the C.B.C. is paid such salary as the governor in council may determine and that the legislation which is now before us provides that the chairman of the new board shall be paid such annual salary as the governor in council shall determine.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite so.

Mr. Nowlan: There is therefore no change at all in the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; but the minister will recall that what he was asserting as a great virtue of this new set-up was that it was going to be judicial, that it was going to replace the former situation where it was alleged that one competitor had jurisdiction over another. It seems to me that if, in fact, we take seriously this judicial aspect, we should follow the practice which has always been accepted, namely that any body having judicial functions should have the maximum independence that it is possible for parliament to give it. I wonder whether the minister would not allow this item to stand until after lunch, when he could have a chance to discuss it with some of his colleagues.

Mr. Nowlan: I am in the hands of the committee, Mr. Chairman. But as far as my colleagues are concerned, may I say that we have discussed this matter and we have deliberately left it open until we had an opportunity to see how the board operates, and also what will have to be done with regard to attracting the type of people here that we want and expect. I agree with everything the hon. member says about a judicial body, but may I point out to him that the pension commission is a judicial body, and the government of which he was a member changed the salaries of the members and chairman of that board, despite the fact that it was fixed; and it was done by order in council.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are also other examples.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, but I would recall to my hon. friend's mind that we did it over the very strenuous objections of the opposition. I think it was done before I was a member of the government, but I remember the debates very well. The most violent objections were taken by many hon. members on the other side of the house on precisely the ground that I am suggesting here. I might also point out that although the pension commission does have a semi-judicial function in some respects, at any rate, it is not the kind of body on which there would really be any suspicion that any government might wish to exert any kind of pressure. The government never appears before it as a litigant, as it does before the courts. The government would have no motive that is very easily discernible for seeking by this indirect means to bring pressure to bear on that commission.

But I suggest that this is precisely what we on this side of the house are most concerned about, and what I understood the minister to say on behalf of the government they were most concerned about, namely to make this body highly judicial in its character. It seemed to me that to remove any suspicion that the government was using the remuneration to bring pressure on the board, it would be better for parliament to set the remuneration.

Mr. Pearson: All we are doing is trying to give the government an opportunity to follow the course which they so strongly advocated when they were on this side with respect to a body the judicial character of which they have continually emphasized.

Mr. Nowlan: I have pointed out that in the case of 12 of the 15 members the remuneration is fixed by the statute before us. The remuneration of the other three members is not fixed, and cannot be fixed at the moment because of the reasons I have mentioned. The government has to take responsibility for the choice of these men, and I can assure the committee that this government—and I think any other government, as far as that is concerned—is not going to exercise pressure on the men chosen for this board through any alteration whatsoever in the inducement respecting salaries.

Mr. McIlraith: This is another example of those things which would have been dealt with by the committee if the bill had been introduced in time to enable that to be done.

Mr. Nowlan: No, because the bill would have stood the way it is.

Mr. Fisher: Will the three members have the same salary scale, or will there be a higher salary for the chairman, a lower salary for the vice-chairman, and so on?

Mr. Nowlan: No decision has been made on that point. Possibly the chairman will be paid a little more.

Mr. Crestohl: I wonder if the minister can assure the committee that once the salary has been fixed by order in council there will be no move to modify that salary during their term of office.

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly can give no such assurance. It would only be in an unusual situation that that would have to be done, but I can imagine a situation where a person has been appointed and performs very valuable service, and is then given an opportunity to enter some other field at a much higher rate of salary. In such a situation it is possible that the government might consider increasing the salary to keep that incumbent there. Again, the term of office is seven years, and the holder might be reappointed for a further seven years. That is a long time, and I should not care to give such a commitment as has been suggested. I do not think any responsible minister could.

Mr. Crestohl: I only had in mind a reduction in salary being made.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think there will be a reduction.

Mr. Caron: I see there are three full-time members, and that in order to sit the board will need a quorum of five. Thus they will have to ask at least two of the part-time members to sit with them, and the remuneration paid to them is $100 a day. As it is now, the board may sit every day, month after month, and in this way part-time members may become more highly paid than those who are full-time members. Has this point been considered by the cabinet?

Mr. Nowlan: No; consideration has not been given to that.

Mr. Pearson: That is a very important point, because one of the purposes of this board would be to hold hearings, and these hearings might be prolonged. At $100 a day plus expenses it would not be hard for part time members to reach a salary of $15,000 or $20,000. Surely that is an argument for placing a maximum on the remuneration of part-time members, as was done in the case of the C.B.C.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Staff.

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice that the staff of the board are to be appointed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I would imagine that certain of the functions of the board of broadcast governors are now being performed by certain of the staff of the C.B.C. who are not civil servants under the Civil Service Act.

I have no objection whatsoever to any new employees being appointed under the provisions of that act, but I wonder if there is any provision made for the incorporation of such employees as I have mentioned, or whether any consideration has been given to that point; because I am sure the minister does not intend to terminate the employment of people who would have no function under the reorganized C.B.C. but who, because of their experience, might I think be invaluable to the new board. I think it would be very unfortunate if persons who had been employed for a very long time should be made subject to competitive examination.

I recognize, of course, that the governor in council under the Civil Service Act has authority to appoint civil servants and to dispense with certain normal requirements of the Civil Service Act, but I should not have thought the minister would wish to proceed in that way, and I wonder whether some other provision should not be made in respect of such persons as I have mentioned.

Mr. Nowlan: The problem of transferring individuals who, perhaps, are older and who may not wish to take examinations which could be prejudicial to them is something which will have to be dealt with. As the hon. member has said, there is provision for exemption from this requirement, and I imagine this mechanism will be used. Then if the hon. gentleman will turn to clause 41 of the bill he will see that provision is made there preserving the rights of all the employees of the C.B.C. who are under the public service act; and the intention is, if and when these employees are transferred to the civil service, by examination or by exemption or whatever method is used, that their rights will be preserved. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there will be no trouble whatsoever in dealing with this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister give us an assurance that there is no intention whatsoever to use this as an indirect means of getting rid of some employees?

Mr. Nowlan: If the government should decide to get rid of some employees it would not have to use indirect means; it would use direct means.

Mr. Fisher: In connection with the staff situation, I wonder if the minister has any idea of the number of staff now with the C.B.C. who would be transferred to the new board in order to make its work more effective. I am thinking particularly of audience research work, which might be very useful to the board of broadcast governors. Or there might be a possibility that the present audience research group now with the C.B.C. could do work for the board of governors on request. There is also the question of the regulation group which the C.B.C. now has in existence. Is it planned to transfer this group to the control of the board of broadcast governors?

Mr. Nowlan: The regulatory duties now performed by the C.B.C. would be turned over to the new board, and I should think some of that staff—I am not sure of the exact division—would naturally be used by the board of broadcast governors whenever possible.

In so far as the great majority of the employees are concerned, they are of course engaged in the operating end. We have under the C.B.C. directly over 6,000 employees at the moment, and only a very small proportion of these are engaged in the regulatory work or in the program research work to which the hon. member has referred. The great majority would be staying with the C.B.C., under the control of that corporation.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is another question which occurs to me. The quasi-judicial functions which will be performed by this board will obviously require it to have almost constant and continuous legal advice. Is it intended that the Department of Justice should provide legal advisers to the board in the way it does to government departments, or is it intended that the board should have a legal department of its own?

Mr. Nowlan: That is a matter which I think will have to be left to be decided in the light of experience and the judgment of the board. No decision has yet been made, and until a decision is reached, or a change is made, the officers of the Department of Justice are being used by the government and will be used, initially at least, by the board.

Mr. Crestohl: I wonder if the minister has made an estimate with respect to the staff, regardless of where it will be recruited, from the standpoint of the cost to the country of this new set-up. Of course the money will have to be voted. Can the minister give the committee an estimate of what that is likely to cost?

Mr. Nowlan: At the moment I am not in a position to give that estimate, Mr. Chairman. We are starting here afresh with a completely new organization. One could take the salaries and wages paid in the C.B.C. to those engaged in regulation, I suppose, and get a rough estimate, but it could only be a rough one. I would prefer not to venture a figure. We will have the responsibility of providing estimates for this body at the next session. At that time the board will be appointed. The board will make a survey and estimate what staff is required, and then we will be able to give an estimate that is an accurate appreciation of the problem for the first year, but at this stage I am not in a position to do that.

Mr. Crestohl: It is rather difficult to reach conclusions and decisions because the minister is asking parliament to give him a blank cheque, so to speak, to carry out this project. I believe it would have been advisable for the committee to be given some idea as to what this new venture is likely to cost the country.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Executive committee.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, clause 9 is a very important clause of this bill. It deals with the executive committee which, as I said last evening, will be the committee responsible, I would think, for the day to day work of this board. Three of its members will be the full-time members of the board. While I agree that in this clause the powers of the executive committee are limited in certain respects, and quite rightly so, and that this limitation will prevent it from promulgating regulations which would have to be passed by the full board in dealing with certain important matters, nevertheless the executive committee would, I assume, have the power to interpret regulations passed by the full board. That perhaps will be just as important in a body of this kind as the regulations themselves.

I take it that under this clause the executive committee can also draft proposals and regulations for consideration by the board. That is why I want to emphasize the importance of this smaller group, especially the three full-time members within it. Subclause 3 of clause 9, which as I said limits the powers of the executive committee, reads as follows:

> (3) The executive committee shall exercise such of the powers and functions of the board as are delegated to it by the board, except the powers and functions of the board under sections 11 and 12 and the provisions of section 13 other than paragraph (b) of subsection (4) thereof.

Excluded from that limitation is paragraph (b) of subsection 4 of section 13. I wonder if the minister could explain why that exception was made.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. When hon. gentlemen look at paragraph (b) they will see it provides power to grant or revoke permission to a licensee to operate the broadcasting station in respect of which his licence was issued as part of any network for the broadcasting of a particular program or a series of programs extending over a period not exceeding one month. In other words there will have to be two different decisions made. Perhaps arrangements will be made for establishing a network for a hockey game, or perhaps a temporary network will be established for a series of hockey or football games over a period not exceeding one month. That is the type of network you could safely leave to a small executive committee without any suggestion of impropriety, and it would be most unfortunate if some of these things were delayed because you could not get the executive or the whole board together to provide for them.

We had an embarrassing situation with respect to the football game last Saturday night, as hon. members know. After a great deal of delay and changes made in network programs the game was telecast and the reception was terrible; you could not see it.

Mr. McIlraith: What was wrong?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Objects and purposes.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would not do well to explain exactly what are the objects and purposes of this clause. I have in mind now particularly the latter part of this clause, which states:

> The board shall . . . regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations——and so on. What is meant by "regulation" and what is meant by "operation"? Those are the two questions I would direct to the minister now, leaving two others for later consideration.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest this simply means that the board shall regulate pursuant to clause 11, which gives it the power to make regulations. In other words the board shall have the power to establish regulations for the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations which, as the hon. member knows, is a phrase borrowed almost word for word from the existing act under which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation operates.

Clause 10 is not an operative clause. As the hon. member will appreciate, this is a general statement of powers and objects. They are defined and set forth in the following clauses, Nos. 11, 12 and 13. I believe hon. gentlemen will find that everything in clause 10 would be generally subject to the specific powers set forth in those clauses.

Mr. Chevrier: Do I take it, then, that the regulation and operation will be in the same manner as carried on heretofore?

Mr. Nowlan: That will be a decision the new board will have to make.

Mr. Chevrier: Dealing with the latter part of clause 10, which states that the board shall regulate the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them, could the minister indicate to the committee in what way the regulation of those activities is going to be conducted in so far as (a) the C.B.C. itself is concerned and (b) private broadcasting stations are concerned?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am not certain that I follow the hon. member of fully understand the meaning of his question. The regulations, of course, will be generally for both private stations and the corporation as is spelled out in the act. In future the corporation will have to appear before the board if it wants a licence for a new station and be treated in the same way as any other person in that field. That wording is put there specifically to show that this board is going to have general supervision over all broadcasting in Canada, which I take it is the intention and design of this government. As I said yesterday, this is a provision that is eminently desirable so as to avoid any criticism of the C.B.C. in future for being in an invidious position vis-a-vis the private broadcasting stations. We have tried to rectify that, and that is why we have spelled out here "over private and public stations".

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I believe this clause of the bill which spells out the general purposes of the board is the most controversial clause in the bill, because it really does not give us too much to put our teeth into. The bulk of the purpose is contained in a long clause that is stuck in the middle of the paragraph. Because we feel it is not sufficiently definite, at this time I move seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia:

> That this clause be struck out in its entirety and the following substituted:
> The board is charged with the supervision, regulation, and control of all broadcasting in Canada in the public interest. The board is to ensure the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service, on a national basis and with a high standard and a basically Canadian content and character; and it is to examine the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and to determine the relationship between the private and public stations.

As the minister will note, there are not too many changes from the present clause 10 except to take the first sentence from the draft act of the Fowler commission and put it in here, and then to emphasize the power of the board of broadcast governors to regulate completely, or control completely, the relationship between the public and private stations. We think this amendment will help assure those of us who are concerned about the possibility of the board of broadcast governors not carrying out the intent of this legislation in the public interest, perhaps leading to the withering away of the public broadcasting system we have. We would be much encouraged if this particular clause, which we have suggested as an amendment, were accepted in place of the one that is now in the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the intention expressed by the hon. member is concerned, I could have no quarrel with that whatsoever, and I think generally there is intent not to materially alter the section, perhaps, but to emphasize certain features of it. I must point out, Mr. Chairman, that this section, as was the case with all other sections but particularly with this one, engaged the attention of the chief draftsman of the Department of Justice, and a great deal of careful consideration was given to it in view of the legal questions generally involved.

I would not want to take, and I cannot take, the responsibility of accepting an amendment such as this without further consideration and without experience of operation. I think the intention is all right, but I would point out for instance that in the draft amendment which I have in my hand, which the hon. gentleman has just moved, hon. members will see that the board is charged with supervision, regulation and control of all broadcasting in Canada in the public interest. We have deliberately included in the first line or two of section 10 the words:

> The board shall, for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system—

We wanted to make it clear that we were going to continue something. Maybe there is not a material difference between the two, but we have given some importance to that point so as to see that the existing corporation and everything else are to be continued and operated. Then again, there is another clause which could be very important, because the last line but one of section 10 of the bill before us says:

> —and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

That also does not appear in the draft amendment which was submitted to us. It is true that provisions for appeal except on questions of law are excluded from the bill; but all lawyers know—everyone knows—that there are means which can be taken such as certiorari or mandamus, or something of that kind, if members of the board are involved in legal matters. These words "final determination" were deliberately included in the section so that this board of broadcast governors would be able to make adjudication without having to worry too much about technical matters of a purely delaying nature which may arise.

Provision for appeal to the courts is safeguarded, as I said, on questions of law. For these reasons, and because primarily the section was, as I said, considered very carefully by the justice department draftsmen, I cannot accept the amendment moved by the hon. member.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the remarks I wished to make on section 10 and the point of view I had wished to put forward are very well embodied in the wording of this amendment which we are happy to support.

Section 10 is, I think the minister will agree, perhaps the most important section in the whole bill, and all the more important because it declares certain objects and purposes of this legislation which override anything which appears in part II of the bill dealing with the C.B.C. Indeed, I think section 29, subsection 2 of part II specifically provides that the corporation is bound by the provisions of part I. Therefore everything in part II is subject to part I and would be subject to section 10, which declares the objects and purposes of this board.

While I am quite willing to accept the statement of the minister as to these objects and purposes however they may be expressed in this section and as he has indicated in his statement, I do think it would be advisable to strengthen the language of this section, as is done in this amendment, to emphasize the importance of a national broadcasting system conducted as a public service in the public interest; something that has been emphasized by everyone concerned with this matter from Sir John Aird and Right Hon. R. B. Bennett on down. Indeed, it is also emphasized on more than one occasion in the reports of the Massey commission and the Fowler commission. But section 10, though it may be implicit, is silent in respect of that particular emphasis.

I should perhaps take advantage of this opportunity to apologize to the minister for a statement I made last night which was quite inaccurate. I think I said in one of my interventions that there was no reference to a national broadcasting system in section 10. Of course there is a reference to it, and I am sorry I was inaccurate in that sense; but reference to the national broadcasting system is not in the emphatic terms that I think it should be.

The minister has indicated that the language used here was chosen deliberately to emphasize the continued existence of a national system; but if he goes back to the C.B.C. legislation he will find that the language used there—and I will come back to the language in another section of the report—charges the C.B.C. with continuing a national broadcasting system in the public interest. It puts a definite obligation on the C.B.C. to do that in stronger terms than I suggest are used in section 10 in relation to this new board.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, we think this amendment should be supported. I believe it realizes some of the objectives that we have in mind; it strengthens those objectives, and I think would make this a better bill in the public interest, improving the public service character of broadcasting.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to say a word or two in support of the amendment. My method of supporting it is to examine very carefully the present clause, because it seems to me if you read the present clause without the phrase to which the minister referred, if you read the operative part of it, you will find that the board has the power to regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for the final determination of all matters, and so on. It will be seen there that all the powers the board is given are the powers to regulate; there are no powers to initiate.

Now, it is true it is said here that the board must have this purpose in mind under those regulations; but what the Fowler commission recommended and what the hon. member for Port Arthur has, I think, imported into his amendment is the power to initiate, and that is precisely what we think there ought to be. It is not good enough just to be able to regulate. It seems to me the whole concept of this clause is too negative, and for that reason it would be far better to put something in it that would be a direction, which as the Leader of the Opposition has said exists in the C.B.C. legislation now on the statute books, to initiate, that is to be the fountainhead, the inspiration of broadcasting activities, both public and private.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I find some difficulty in reconciling clause 10 as it appears in the bill with the statements of the minister. My difficulty in that respect is added to by the minister's statement a moment ago that he found no quarrel with the intention expressed by the mover of the amendment. I should like to take clause 10 and see if I can get some help from the minister on it. I want to read it and isolate certain words in doing so. It reads as follows. The board shall——for the purpose of ensuring the continued existence and efficient operation of a national broadcasting system and the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard that is basically Canadian in content and character—

If you take that group of words you can see that they might well have been put in the preamble to the bill. They are a separate statement of purpose, and probably should be in the preamble. One can express different points of view about them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They would not be effective if they were in the preamble.

Mr. McIlraith: That is the point I am making. The Prime Minister has interjected that they are not effective here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If they were in the preamble they would not be effective.

Mr. McIlraith: One might say that they contain a pious hope somewhat badly expressed. We all, of course, want a basically Canadian content and character; that is the purpose of the whole thing. We all want the continued existence of the national broadcasting system, its efficient operation and so on. The point I am getting at is that this group of words deals separately with one aspect of the matter, whether they are in a separate clause or in this one; but leaving these words aside, and I respectfully submit that is the way the clause must be read if we are to get its legal meaning, the operative part of the clause reads as follows. The board shall——regulate the establishment and operation of networks of broadcasting stations, the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

It will be seen that there are five separate matters dealt with in this one clause, and for some strange reason they are all grouped together in this rather unusual form. The first one I dealt with, embodying a laudable statement of objectives, might well be in the preamble; but the effective and operative ones are, first, that the board shall regulate the establishment and operation of networks. That is fairly clear. Second, the board shall regulate the activities of public and private stations. I want to draw the attention of the minister to that point particularly. That means all individual stations. It is perhaps clear enough with respect to the privately owned stations, but in the case of the C.B.C. it means that the board can regulate the activities of an individual station in the network operated by the C.B.C. From anything said by the minister I do not think that was intended. I do not think that is the purpose of the bill.

Third, the board can regulate the relationship between individual stations, so the board can regulate the relationship between two individual stations operated by the publicly owned organization, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There has been no suggestion that this is what was intended.

Then there is the other provision to which the minister referred a minute ago. In the fourth place it should be noted that the board can provide, not regulate, for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto. I take it that "in relation thereto" relates to any of the matters previously mentioned. Therefore the board can provide for the final determination of all matters in relation to individual stations.

That is the point that is causing me concern. I think I intimated last night that I understood the minister's objectives and what he was seeking to do, but I find myself in great difficulty in dealing with this clause. Notwithstanding what the minister said about the draftmanship of clause 10, I respectfully submit that it does not do the things that he has expressed himself as wishing to do. Indeed, it causes considerable alarm because the board is given the power to meddle in detailed matters concerning individual stations. That is the point I wish to make and which is concerning me. If it does that, then it comes immediately and directly into conflict with the C.B.C. which is operating the publicly owned stations. It is not the part about regulating networks that is bothering me at all, but rather the power to interfere in matters concerning individual stations as such. I should like to have the minister's comment on that point.

Mr. Herridge: I am tempted to rise, Mr. Chairman, because in looking at the minister I have come to the conclusion that he is almost persuaded. I wish to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur and his explanation in regard thereto. I am not going to repeat what he said. We fully realize that if the amendment is accepted by the minister, and I see us getting closer to our objective as the minutes go by, there will have to be one or two other amendments in part II to give effect to this amendment, but we can deal with them later provided we can persuade the minister that this amendment is necessary.

In that connection I want to read one paragraph from a press release issued yesterday by the Canadian broadcasting league. The minister knows that this organization is composed of people who have taken a very serious interest in Canadian broadcasting policy over a long period of time. This is what they have to say:

> The Canadian broadcasting league has carefully considered the new broadcasting bill. The league welcomes the government's statements on the intention of the new legislation. It welcomes also the fact that the bill preserves the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and appears to provide for a single national broadcasting system under the control of a large representative board of broadcast governors. The league believes, however, the bill should make this principle absolutely clear by two additional provisions: First, the board of broadcast governors should be explicitly charged with the duty of reporting on the whole of broadcasting in Canada, public and private. Second, the C.B.C., as part of the single national system, should report to the board of broadcast governors. We hope these points will be cleared up during the debate.

I am not going to take any more time. I wanted to bring that paragraph to the attention of the minister and the committee. In view of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the proposals made by members of the official opposition I would urge the minister to give further consideration to the amendment of this clause to give effect to the wishes of those who are seriously concerned with making certain that the minister attains his own objectives with respect to the purposes of the bill.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister is letting a number of questions accumulate and will answer them together. I am concerned about the phrase in line 20, "for the final determination of all matters". I draw the minister's attention to the fact that clause 10, consisting of about 9 lines, is all one sentence. It is an unusually long sentence, and I have some apprehension when that long sentence is wound up with the words that the board shall "provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto".

I wonder whether the minister, who is a well known solicitor, thinks that under this clause, if there is dissatisfaction it might be difficult for that person to refer the matter, as is the inherent right of everyone, to the courts. Does he not think those words "for final determination of all matters" would be difficult to overcome unless some provision is made to allow any citizen who is displeased with any part whatever of that long sentence to have full recourse to the courts?

Mr. Nowlan: The general intention indicated by all those who have spoken in favour of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is in agreement with the attitude of the government. There is no question whatever but that it is intended to operate this board and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the public interest, and that surely does not have to be spelled out. It is implicit in every section of the bill and in everything I and the other members of the government have said on this bill.

As I said earlier, I am not prepared to accept the responsibility for changing the clause at this time, a clause on which a good deal of time was spent by a very, shall we say, careful draftsman. I could go further than that, as the hon. member for Ottawa West well knows. The government cannot accept this amendment, although it certainly accepts the intention implicit in it.

In so far as the hon. member for Ottawa West analysed the clause, I am inclined to accept his analysis, at any rate the first part. In so far as objects and powers are concerned, I am not sure where objects leave off and powers begin. This is a general statement. I would not want to go as far as he did in his description of it, and he could not expect me to accept that. However, this is a general statement of intention. I cannot accept at all the statement of the Leader of the Opposition that it is purely negative, because after all you have to read this general statement with the powers set forth in clauses 11, 12 and 13. There is certainly nothing negative in those. There are powers to initiate and all sorts of powers. When you spell out those powers and take them in addition to clause 10, I think you will have everything this committee requires in so far as protective measures are concerned.

As I said yesterday, and as is axiomatic, it does not make very much difference what words you have in these clauses so long as you have personnel appointed who are going to see that the measure is administered in accordance with the intentions. If they are going to administer this in the national interest, then the public is going to be protected. You can have all the safeguarding sections in the world, but if you have administrators who take a careless attitude it will not do any good. I believe, and the government believes, that this clause 10 does spell out, in general terms followed by succeeding clauses, that broadcasting will be in the national interests of Canada. We have to ask the committee to accept clause 10 as it is presently drafted.

Mr. McIlraith: The last question I raised related to the fifth power given to the board under this clause, that the board shall provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto. Bearing in mind that the board can deal with individual stations, I wonder if the minister would address himself to that point; because as I see it, the board is given the power to go into activities and the determination of questions in relation to individual stations. That would be directly in conflict with matters which would be regarded as normal and proper activities of the C.B.C. I wonder if the minister would address himself to just that aspect of the matter.

Mr. Nowlan: It may be that these words are capable of the wide interpretation the hon. member has given them, but it is certainly not the intention of the government. I point out to him, as he undoubtedly knows, that when he speaks of a network operated by the C.B.C. you have first the publicly owned stations, which are owned by the C.B.C., and then you have various classes of affiliates, some who asked to be affiliated and some who have been ordered, shall we say, to be affiliated. There are various categories there, the details of which I have not got but which I will have when we come to the second section of the bill.

Reverting to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ottawa West, I may say I thought it was improper to have the officers of the C.B.C. sitting in front of me to deal with this part of the bill so far as the board of broadcast governors is concerned because they are strangers, so to speak, to it. So far as the C.B.C. is concerned, when we come to the second part dealing with it, then with the committee's consent I intend to have officers of the C.B.C. here so that any questions dealing with the corporation can be answered at that time. If there is the implication that the hon. member reads into that section, it is because of the various classes of stations which are affiliated with the C.B.C. The hon. member will also notice that the board has the power, at the request of a station and after a public hearing of which the C.B.C. has been given notice, to permit the station to withdraw from that affiliation.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I could clarify my point for the minister. My concern was not with this power as it concerns networks or groups of stations, but as it concerns individual stations. That was my concern.

Mr. Nowlan: There are individual stations within a network, and various categories of stations. A subsequent clause gives them the right, if they wish, to withdraw. There has to be some control over these stations.

Mr. Pearson: Incidentally, may I mention a small matter. I do not think I used the word "negative" in my description of this paragraph at all. Someone else may have done so. The clause says that the board shall regulate the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them. I do not know whether or not this point was brought up in the previous discussion, but my non-legal mind was not able to follow all its ramifications. Does this clause mean that the board shall regulate the relationship between separate private broadcasting stations and not merely the relationships between private and public stations, that is the relationship between stations within each category?

Mr. Nowlan: I think the intention is to regulate public and private stations and their relationship to each other. I do not believe the board would, except in so far as there was an infringement or a matter affecting a particular regulation, act as a judge or adjudicator on matters affecting two private stations, unless it came within the scope of the next three sections.

While I appreciate the attention which has been given to clause 10, because it is a general statement, frankly I think most lawyers in this house would agree privately that clause 10 is not operative except as it is interpreted by the three succeeding clauses, which in my opinion are the heart of the bill from an operative standpoint.

Mr. Pearson: The minister is satisfied that the language in clause 10 could not be used for the purpose of regulation as between separate private stations?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister is quite sure about that, because an example of one kind of situation which does arise between private stations has been drawn to the minister's attention, I believe, in this house. This case concerned stations, somewhat remote geographically from one another, which had almost the same wave length, and this resulted in a real conflict between the private stations. I would apprehend that the board would have power to deal with that; or would it come within the purview of the Department of Transport?

Mr. Nowlan: Without any question I would think that would come within the purview of the board. As I explained to the Leader of the Opposition, I was very careful to say "subject to the specific powers set forth in the next three sections". Anything which arises in the following sections generally—I will not say "anything" but generally—would come within the purview of the board for adjudication. All these matters, I would think, would be dealt with generally by the board.

Mr. McIlraith: Bearing in mind the minister's answer to the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, if you look at line 18 you find this language. The board shall—> —regulate . . . the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them.

He will note that from the way in which it is now drafted, "between them" relates to "stations". If he wanted to do what he just expressed to the Leader of the Opposition, should he not repeat the words "broadcasting stations" after the word "public" and before the word "and" in line 18, so it would read:

> The board shall . . . regulate . . . the activities of public broadcasting stations and private broadcasting stations in Canada and the relationship between them.

"Between them" would obviously then relate to the two groups of stations as opposed to the individual. That was one of the difficulties that concerned us.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur moves—

Mr. Caron: Before the question is put to the committee, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question of the minister. Is this clause 10 to be prepared just for those who have legal training? It is hard to understand for one who has not such training. In my opinion the amendment seems to be easier to understand for those who have not legal training. The discussion between the hon. member for Ottawa West and the minister, both of whom are good lawyers, seems to be comprehensible; but when we come to read it, those who have not the training do not seem to understand this clause 10 as clearly as we understand the amendment which appears to accomplish the same purpose.

This is why I do not understand why the amendment was not accepted. It does not seem to have any very important change in it, but it seems to be much clearer for the balance of the people in Canada when they come to read it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nowlan: I accept the statement that the intention is the same, either with respect to the other amendments or the one that is now before us, except that the clause provides for final determination and also provides what I think is more important for ensuring the continued existence of the system. The difference between them may not be so very great. The hon. member for Hull says this is a legal argument. The hon. member for Ottawa West refers to this as a sort of platitude. I therefore do not think that perhaps legal questions are so much involved in any event.

In any case, I stand on the explanation I gave at the beginning. This is a section which has been very carefully drafted and has been reviewed over and over again by the draftsman. I am not prepared to take responsibility myself for accepting an amendment to it, even though I think the amendment is of the same tenor and the same spirit. Nevertheless the legal implications, as the hon. member for Ottawa West and others know, can be different. We therefore must ask the committee to accept the section as it is now before it.

The Chairman: Order. The question is as follows: The hon. member for Port Arthur moves:

That clause 10 be struck out in its entirety and the following substituted:

The board is charged with the supervision, regulation and control of all broadcasting in Canada in the public interest. The board is to ensure the provision of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service, on a national basis and with a high standard and a basically Canadian content and character; and it is to examine the activities of public and private broadcasting stations in Canada and to determine the relationship between the private and public stations.

Before I put the question I should inform the committee that it is the opinion of the Chair that the proposed amendment is irregular in this sense, that you cannot delete a clause by means of an amendment. This clause should be negatived before inserting a new one. In support of this proposition I believe that Beauchesne should be read, citations 402, 404 and 408. In clause 402, subparagraph (1) we find the following:

(1) In committee all the clauses of the bill are considered before any new clauses are brought up and added to the bill. But this practice is not rigorously followed and the committee is generally guided by what is most convenient in each particular case.

In this particular case I believe that for the sake of expediency the question should be put to the committee.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 28; nays, 86.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Regulations.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, we shall have some specific proposals with regard to the subsection and perhaps some amendments. However, there are one or two general observations on the whole section that I should like to make to the minister, and perhaps he will be able to enlighten me on one or two of the points I am going to raise.

This section, with the following section 12, I take it is the one which will implement section 10 which has relation to the objects and purposes of the bill. As I understand it—and the minister will correct me if I am wrong—this section, indeed the bill itself, does not provide—as have all previous broadcasting bills and as various commissions dealing with broadcasting have recommended—that the C.B.C. shall have control over the operation of even its own network. I take it that this section takes away from the C.B.C. and gives to the new board the power to determine the amount of time affiliated stations should be required to use in broadcasting C.B.C. network programs.

The Fowler commission had something to say on this very important point on page 120 of its report, and I quote from this report because it has a very definite bearing on this clause. The report reads:

Once a network has been established and the affiliation of private stations with it has been approved, the operation of that network should be the exclusive responsibility of the C.B.C., subject only to the general supervision of the board of broadcast governors. The C.B.C. should have the power to prescribe the periods to be reserved by any private affiliated station for the broadcasting of programs produced or obtained by the C.B.C. The C.B.C. should have full authority to get programs forming part of the national broadcasting service out across Canada, over both C.B.C. and affiliated private stations.

And further:

We think that, as in the past, the C.B.C. should have the necessary authority to operate the national television and radio networks it has been authorized to establish.

As I read it, this clause takes away from the C.B.C. authority over its own network. The Fowler commission, also I think on page 120, recommended that the C.B.C. should have power—and someone has to have that power—to decide when a program is of such national importance that it should be carried by all the private stations, and I should like to ask the minister whether that has been changed also by clause 11.

Mr. Nowlan: Clause 11, the power to make regulations, includes, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, power to determine the minimum broadcasting time to be reserved for network programs by any broadcasting station operating as part of a network. The board of governors undoubtedly has power to make regulations in such a matter, and generally to prescribe the terms and conditions for the operation of broadcasting stations as part of a network, and all the rest of it.

We shall come to the network in a short time, I hope, and there the powers are specifically spelled out. No change can be made in any network in which the C.B.C. is interested, or to which it is affiliated, without a public hearing to which the C.B.C. is invited and at which the corporation is given an opportunity to be present. There are three powers with respect to networks: first, compelling a station to come into a network, making it a condition of getting a licence that it shall become part of a network; second, taking a station in operation and compelling it to become part of the network; and third, providing that the board may at any time upon the application of a licensee revoke or amend the condition after a hearing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Subclause (d) of clause 11 provides that the board may make regulations:

—respecting the proportion of time that may be devoted to the broadcasting of programs, advertisements or announcements of a partisan political character.

I should like to say at once, in order that the question may be before the committee, that I wish to move an amendment to this clause which would read as follows:

That section 11 (d) be amended by deleting all the words after "progress" and adding: "of a partisan political character, the same regulations to apply to each individual station, whether privately or publicly owned."

I should like at this point to say a word or two about this proposed amendment, because I want hon. members to be well aware of what I intend the effect should be. It would mean that the same regulations with respect to compulsory broadcasting for political purposes would apply to private stations as apply to public stations.

It seems to me the justification for this is that the whole of the broadcast area is a public domain. The private stations have franchises but they do not have any absolute property, as the minister knows; and it does seem to me that it is in the public interest, particularly in the television field, in view of the fact that there are public stations only in five or six places in Canada and private stations elsewhere, that the same rules should apply in both.

That is not the case now. It has not been the case during the last two elections, and that situation has led to some very bizarre results. I am not going to waste the time of the committee by enumerating them. However, there is another and more serious problem in this field. I think every member of parliament of whatever party must be concerned about the growing cost of elections in this country, the growing sums that political parties and candidates have to raise by one means or another—and I am not going into that—in order to get themselves elected. And it does seem to me, further, that here we have a part of the public domain, something which belongs to the whole of the people of Canada, and one over which this parliament has jurisdiction.

While I have never been completely satisfied with the apportionment of the time allotted by broadcasting and television stations—I do not think any political party has been completely satisfied—I have never thought that it was grossly out of proportion. However, if we were to apply the same rules to both public and private stations that would eliminate the undesirable competition which now goes on during election periods to buy up great quantities of time, boring the listeners in many cases and increasing, to no one's real advantage, the already far too high cost of elections.

An hon. Member: Don't you take well?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told there are people who are worse. I really do not fear this competition myself. All I am worried about are the bills that come in afterwards, and I think that is a common experience in this house. If we had one set of rules applying to both public and private stations there would be a great and immediate reduction in the cost of elections, a reduction which would be very much in the public interest and which would not be contrary to the interests of the stations, either, because my experience is that many of these radio stations do not like to have their normal programs disturbed to the extent they are disturbed during election campaigns by these competitive political programs.

I do not know too much about it, but I am told the stations charge much higher rates on that account than they charge to other clients, because it is temporary business; and I think we would all say "thank God for that". But here is something we could do in a completely non-partisan way which it seems to me would be good for parliament and good for the country.

I am putting this forward in as non-contentious a way as I can. It may be that the minister would prefer to have stand this amendment for a little while, and that in the meantime he would wish us to go on to consider other aspects of this bill, because I admit no advance notice of it has been given, and this is a very important subject. Nevertheless, it does seem to me that no one in any part of the committee would suffer any disability, that the broadcasting interests both public and private, would suffer no injury, and that it would conduce to a better atmosphere and a better standard of public life.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps in fairness to the hon. member I had better say something. This matter received a great deal of consideration by the various people who were working on this bill over a period of months. The hon. member knows pretty well who many of those were. Personally I think that it is unfortunate it is in here at all. I do not think the board of broadcast governors should be responsible for the allocation of political time. Consideration was given to various amendments.

I do not know how many hon. members know this, but under the C.B.C. regulations as they apply today if there happens to be a town council by-election in Wolfville or Port Alberni, then the C.B.C. is not supposed to broadcast political programs for three days prior to that by-election although there may be a provincial general election in Ontario. That is the existing regulation which has application to federal, provincial or municipal elections. The thing is just silly.

I do not believe the board of broadcast governors should be saddled with dividing or allocating this time any more than the C.B.C. should have been in the past. After a great deal of discussion we felt it might be allowed to stand this way; the elections committee of the House of Commons would be set up in the relatively near future, and that would be a much better forum in which to discuss this question and arrive at some solution with respect to political broadcasts and so on, rather than attempting to deal with it by way of amendments or by a board outside the control of parliament. That is why the regulation is as it is at the moment. I would suggest that the hon. member withdraw his amendment and allow the matter to stand over until next year, when something really has to be done about the whole problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before I make any decision on that point I should like to ask the minister a question. As I read this, and it may be in the same language as the act—

Mr. Nowlan: It is; at least, I am told that it is.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I have not checked it and I do not know either. Perhaps I should have checked it before I got up. As I read the clause it says nothing about allocation. I had the impression, which may be quite wrong, that under the Canadian Broadcasting Act the board was expressly charged with the responsibility of allocating time as well. It may be that was done simply by the extension of a phrase such as that contained in this clause; I do not know. It would hardly appear to me that this language by itself would give the board of broadcast governors power to allocate time as between parties, for example.

I am a little perturbed as to whether we are going to leave a gap in the law here in this statute, because we are repealing the Canadian Broadcasting Act which gives that body the power to allocate time, and in this bill we do not seem to make such a provision. I can find nothing in the bill to that effect, although the minister may point out that I am wrong. We are repealing that provision of the existing law and in this bill we have put nothing in its place. That would be a very serious step for this parliament to take, because it would mean no one would have that power until there was further legislation. I do not think any of us anticipates a federal general election between now and the next session of parliament, and much as I would like to see a change of government I do not feel I would be in favour of a general election at this time.

Mr. Green: You might lose your seat.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You might be decimated.

Mr. Pickersgill: However, it might very well be that before the next session of parliament a general election would take place in one of the provinces. I would think we would be acting in a rather irresponsible fashion in this chamber if we were to repeal the present law respecting the allocation of time and put nothing whatever in its place. I wonder if the minister would give some consideration to that point.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to take a second look at that. We will let it stand for the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to have my amendment stand for the time being, until we see what is the situation.

Mr. Nowlan: Under the existing law the power concerning allocation of time is contained in section 21, subsection 1 (e) of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, which reads as follows:

> The corporation may make regulations—
> (e) to prescribe the proportion of time that may be devoted to political broadcasts by the stations of the corporation and by private stations, and to assign such time on an equitable basis to all parties and rival candidates.

I know there was a great deal of discussion while the drafting was going on about the unpleasant task of allocating time as among the parties. They wanted to avoid that, and that portion was struck out. I will check with the officials on that score.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an unpleasant task, Mr. Chairman, but someone has to do it; and until parliament prescribes some other method I feel we should put back the language that is in the Canadian Broadcasting Act. Perhaps the whole clause could stand for the moment.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, it could stand until after one o'clock, and in the meantime I will speak to the officials.

Mr. Fisher: If things are as the minister stated in regard to Port Alberni and Wolfville, why did he leave clause 17 (d) as it stands? As to his suggestion that this be considered by the committee on elections, I believe that could be quite unfair from the point of view that we have C.B.C. provincial networks. As the minister may be aware, our committees represent the general proportion of the house so far as parties are concerned but there may be some places in Canada where the C.B.C. has provincial networks where this proportion would not exist at all, reflecting the provincial set-up. If the committee of this house has the power to do things of this sort, it would have the power to work against the political situation in a province that is not reflected in this house at all. I wonder how much the minister has thought about turning over to the committee on elections of this house the determination of both the character of political programs and the amount of time and the allocation of time?

Mr. Nowlan: The thinking was more negative than positive. The thought was that we did not want to start fundamentally changing the law with respect to political broadcasting in this bill because we might be tied up for a week on a discussion of all sorts of suspect motives which might be alleged. The thought came to us that probably referring it to the committee would provide a better medium, although frankly I never thought of the point the hon. member just raised, at least in so far as federal broadcasting is concerned. Referring it to the elections committee was a very good excuse for not trying to cope with those clauses at the moment but to bring forward the sections from the old act into the new bill for the time being.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if I could direct a question to the hon. member who moved the amendment. Is it his intention that the amendment should put the private stations in exactly the same sort of situation at election time as exists in the C.B.C.; that is, that there will be a division made by some central place of the amount of time the private stations shall allocate to the various candidates? If that is so, how does he propose to reconcile the fact that the C.B.C. divides the time roughly in proportion to the number of candidates, the number of votes and that sort of thing, whereas in a private station you get the amount of time for which you are able to pay? It seems to me you have two things in conflict there, and I am wondering about the intent of the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know if this is a regular proceeding, Mr. Chairman, but since the question interests all of us I might reply in part. The hon. member put his finger on it at the very end of his statement; it is the amount which you pay. In moving this amendment my thought was that there should be nothing more paid for time on private stations than could be paid for time on public stations, and that whatever regulations apply would apply uniformly to public and private stations. There are certain areas in this country where we have only public stations, and where local broadcasts are given during election time. There would obviously have to be different regulations for the broadcasts of the national political parties and of the individual candidates; that is quite obvious.

I have not worked out a scheme in any great detail, though I have given an enormous amount of consideration to the subject. I am not going to trespass on the time of the committee by giving my views on it at the present time. I feel that this is the public domain and that it should not be necessary for members of parliament or political parties to pay any more for time on private stations than on public stations.

Mr. Fisher: I quite agree with the latter part of the hon. member's remarks, Mr. Chairman, but 1962 is an election year which this particular group is looking forward to with a great deal of anticipation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: We feel that for the first time in that election we shall have the money to play an equal part in buying time on private stations.

Mr. Hees: Where are you going to get it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this what the hon. member means by his championship of small business?

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the proposed amendment has been allowed to stand. If that is so, I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on paragraph (b) of section 11, dealing with standards of programs. It is a serious matter and the hon. member for Port Arthur, for example, attempted to illustrate it. What yardstick will the board of governors use to establish those standards? Will there be a board of censors created; will there be a board on morals; will there be a board of artists and musicians? I would appreciate it if the minister will inform the committee what yardstick, what basis, will be used for establishing the standards of programs as envisaged in section 11, paragraph (b).

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot answer that question, Mr. Chairman, except to say, as has been said time and time again, that we propose and hope to choose Canadians, men and women across this country, representing the nation as a whole, and it will be left to their judgment as to what standards will be set. I certainly would not think we would ever reach the time when there would be censorship imposed except that which is imposed by the good taste and good judgment of relatively average Canadian citizens across this country, though it is always a threat, as I gathered an offer was made last night which was stopped because of the violation of the rules.

I thought it was rather a unique situation that the Leader of the Opposition and the others who were here were very ably contending that we may be threatening to interfere with the C.B.C. in some way, and another hon. member followed by attacking me because I had not imposed censorship on the C.B.C. This is a problem you always have when people who feel it is justified are looking for censorship. Perhaps it is justified. Once you accept that for one thing which you think is right, somebody else may come along and ask for something which you think is wrong, and freedom is gone completely.

I do not think censorship should ever be imposed, and I am quite certain that any board which this government chooses would not be one which would want to impose censorship in the language which the hon. member used.

Mr. Pearson: I do not think anyone on this side last night or on any other occasion ever advocated censorship of the C.B.C. One member, the hon. member for Port Arthur, did advocate in very strong terms that the C.B.C. itself should use better judgment in the selection of a particular program in the interests of better relations between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: If I followed him, he criticized me.

Mr. Pearson: He criticized the C.B.C. for a particular program. I want to make it quite clear that no one on this side would advocate any kind of censorship on the C.B.C., of the kind mentioned by my hon. friend. The point, however, is a very valid and very important one. What are the standards which are to apply? I know the difficulty the minister is in, and we too would be in were it our responsibility.

Before I sit down I wish to go back to the minister's reply to my earlier statement. I want to be quite certain in my own mind that I understand exactly what he said. Perhaps he will tell me whether I am right in my understanding of what he did say. My understanding is that the minister has now said that the exclusive responsibility of the C.B.C. for its own networks, something which was recommended by the Fowler commission, has now been altered and it is now subject to the control of the board of broadcast governors. At least in some respects that exclusive responsibility of the C.B.C. for its own networks has been altered.

I also understood the minister to say—it did not deal with my questions specifically, but I think it was implied in what he said—that it will now be the board of broadcast governors and not the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation who will decide that a program is of such national importance as to be carried by any private station. I take it that is a correct understanding of what the minister said in reply to me some time ago.

Mr. Nowlan: Subject to the sections to which I referred, I think that is a correct statement, Mr. Chairman. The C.B.C. comes under the general powers as enumerated in part I of the bill; but it should also be pointed out to start with that the C.B.C. takes over the new corporation, call it the board of directors if you like. It takes over, shall we say, holus bolus all the regulations, all the networks, everything which was established by the C.B.C. prior to the proclamation of this legislation. That will be taken over by the C.B.C. in its entirety and then changes may be made afterwards, if at all. They start with everything I have promulgated and everything which is a part of their system.

Mr. Pearson: I would like to ask the minister another question which I think is of considerable importance. It represents, as I understand it, an exact reversal of the situation we have been discussing and have been asking the minister about. I refer to a situation where the C.B.C. did have certain powers which the proposed board of governors does not have. I can find nothing in this section, or indeed in the bill, which would give the proposed board the power which I think the C.B.C. now has to prevent stations from becoming members of networks operated by persons or governments outside Canada. As I read this bill, it will be possible under it, and I do not think it is possible at present, for a private station or a group of private stations to associate itself or themselves with networks or stations in the United States and broadcast—if I may use the expression—on the cheap by the use of United States program material. If that is the situation under this bill, and if this bill does not provide in section 11 or in some other section adequate guarantees in that respect, then we propose to move an amendment; but before we do that I would like to hear whether my understanding is right. Perhaps after 2.30 the minister might enlighten us on this point.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister given any further consideration, not so much to the amendment I moved to clause 11 (d) as to the gap in the legislation?

Mr. Nowlan: I discussed the so-called gap in the legislation with some of the C.B.C. officials during the lunch hour. The gap to which the hon. member refers is found in the words "and to assign such time on an equitable basis". I am told that as a matter of practice that has not been done for some years by the C.B.C., and that it has been impossible to enforce it. I am told that they have brought those concerned together and tried to work out some agreement, but there is the difficulty of political parties and the difficulty of political groups, some of which may be parties and some of which may have had substantial representation but have now lost it. Altogether it was felt that it would place an intolerable burden on these officials to attempt to assign the time. I have no objection at all to the amendment in principle, but I simply say that as a matter of practice it has not been done for some years and the officials frankly think that it cannot be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is speaking from hearsay but I can speak from something more than that, because I took part in the negotiations respecting the 1957 election on behalf of the Liberal party. I can say not from hearsay but from my personal knowledge that it was not possible to reach complete agreement on that occasion, as it was not possible before the 1957 election, and in fact the C.B.C. did eventually assign the time. I do not say they would need to use the power, but it seems to me that the power should be there in case it should be necessary to use it. Therefore I think the minister should consider putting back in for the time being the words that were in the previous statute, until parliament can do something else about it.

Mr. Nowlan: I am prepared to accept that, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Pickersgill that section 11 (d) be amended by adding the following words: "the same regulations to apply to each individual station, whether privately or publicly owned."

Mr. Pickersgill: On this point, Mr. Chairman, in view of what the minister has just said and in view of the opportunity we have had to air the matter, if the minister were prepared to give the assurance that at the next session of parliament the whole question of political broadcasting would, on the initiative of a member of the government, be remitted to the committee on privileges and elections for study with a view to making recommendations as to suitable legislation, because this is not the kind of legislation the government should design—

Mr. Nowlan: I am perfectly prepared to do that. I felt that I could not accept the amendment in the words in which it was phrased.

Mr. Pickersgill: I recognize that. I should like to finish what I was saying. As far as my personal convictions are concerned, I believe this is a sound amendment; but I do think I would be subjecting myself and any of my friends who voted for it to the same kind of criticism to which we are subjecting the government over this bill if I were to press it at this stage. It does seem to me that this is a very big and complicated subject which should be properly studied by a committee before the law is changed.

Having accomplished the purpose I had in mind of having the subject aired, I would be quite prepared, if the committee is agreeable to my doing so, to withdraw my amendment on the understanding the minister has already given us, that he or some other member of the administration will take the initiative at the beginning of the next session of parliament, and not in its dying days, to bring the whole question of political broadcasting before the committee on privileges and elections for study and report, and on the further understanding that the minister will move an amendment to this clause to put back the provision for the assignment of time.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. I will have one of my colleagues move that the words "and to assign such time on an equitable basis to all parties and rival candidates" be added to subsection (d).

The Deputy Chairman: May we get rid of the first amendment? Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. member be permitted to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

The Deputy Chairman: May we have the minister's amendment in writing?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I move:

That the following words be added to clause 11, subsection (d): "and to assign such time on an equitable basis to all parties and rival candidates."

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 11 as amended carry?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether the minister has had an opportunity to look into the matter I brought up just before lunch hour, when I tried to point out that the power which I understood the C.B.C. has to prevent private stations affiliating with United States networks or stations, except for a special program, has not been transferred to the board of broadcast governors. I understand that there were certain stations, before the C.B.C. came into existence, which did have such an association or affiliation, and that was not interfered with; but when the C.B.C. came into existence it did not permit that kind of association with United States networks, except for single programs of national interest. I certainly would hate to do anything that would prevent, for instance, broadcasts of the world series.

However, I do not find anything of that kind in this clause or any other clause of the bill, which transfers that particular authority of the C.B.C. to the proposed board of broadcast governors; therefore presumably that kind of association or affiliation could take place.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not found the particular clause to which the hon. member refers. I think it was done by regulation under the C.B.C. and those same powers of regulation are transferred to the board of broadcast governors today. When we go on through clauses 11, 12 and 13, particularly 13 dealing with network programs, you will find that no network, in any way, shape or form can be operated, and no station can join a network, without specific approval of the board of broadcast governors. Although the C.B.C. will not have that power in the future, it will be vested completely in the board and will be exercised by that board.

Mr. Pearson: So that in a sense the new board will have exactly the same authority as the C.B.C., if not in law then at least in practice?

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Carter: Paragraph (f) gives the board the power to compel licensees to broadcast network programs of public interest or significance. Does that mean that the board can compel private stations to incur a loss in carrying these programs, or are they recompensed from public funds?

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Nowlan: The board will have the power to compel stations to carry programs of public interest.

Mr. Carter: Yes; but at a loss, or is the loss made up in some way?

Mr. Nowlan: That would depend upon the facts of each case. The board is given the power under this clause to do things on terms and conditions, so it would be possible for the board, if they thought the circumstances warranted it, to make such an order under certain terms or certain conditions. In other words, perhaps the station could be paid if the circumstances justified it.

Mr. Crestohl: Subclause 2 again refers to a licensee. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked the minister whether or not the definition of licensee was complete. I wonder whether the minister could tell us if a licence will be required other than under the Radio Act, because this is the Broadcasting Act. If the word "licensee" is intended to cover both acts, it should be stated that a "licensee" means a person licensed under the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act, that is unless no licences are required under the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Nowlan: The licence procedure is set forth in clause 12, which says that "the Minister of Transport shall, before dealing with an application under the Radio Act", so it is under the Radio Act that the licence is granted and that is why that definition is used in the interpretation section. This clause means a person licensed under the Radio Act. There is no change whatever, in that procedure, I understand, except that under this clause the licence shall be authorized on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors rather than the board of governors of the C.B.C. Of course the hon. gentleman will appreciate also that there are many other licences such as those to the police and those who operate short wave stations,—that is why we were very chary about dealing with this matter—and all those things are under the Radio Act. We have left the Radio Act intact so far as this bill is concerned.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Applications for licences to be referred to the board.

Mr. Forgie: Prior to the last election I was in communication with the chairman of the board of governors of the C.B.C. regarding the television situation in Pembroke, where the reception is very poor. I would like to ask the Minister of National Revenue, because I noticed that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River asked a question about this matter yesterday, whether it would not be possible for us to secure a satellite in the Pembroke area. Reception in the territory from Codben west is exceptionally poor. I saw the warning of the minister that he is not prepared to deal with many of these questions, but I would ask for his sympathetic consideration in respect to this matter.

Mr. Nowlan: In the past the decision has been made by the board of governors of the C.B.C., and it will be made by the board of broadcast governors in the future. I said I had the advantage of knowing something about the satellite expansion program, and so was able to answer the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. However, if the hon. member will defer his question until my estimates are before the committee I shall deal with it specifically then.

Mr. Fisher: There is a point in connection with licensing in general, and I suppose it involves policy, which I should like to mention. I wonder if the minister could tell us anything about it. There has been a suggestion that a private television station at Port Arthur may establish its own satellite, somewhat in the same way the Timmins station has established its particular satellite. I believe the people of the area generally would be very pleased with this, but not if that particular satellite, by taking care of one part of the nodal population, will mean that the whole population will not get television service through the C.B.C.

This brings up the point as to who is to make the decision when the C.B.C. should move into a certain area. If this particular station in Port Arthur puts up a satellite down along the north shore it is quite possible, given the power that it could set up in that very good location, that it will take care of the nodal population to the extent of 5,000, which was the standard set by the Fowler commission as being the least number practical from the point of view of setting up a transmitter. However, if the fringe area of this new satellite were to be included in another nodal area to the north, it would give more than a population of 5,000. I just wondered if the minister had any ideas as to how this very difficult matter could be handled.

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot give the hon. member a solution, but I can tell him the mechanics of it. If he looks at subclauses 3 and 4 of the present clause, he will find that we start off with the fact that no recommendation shall be made by the board on any matter unless it has held a public hearing at which the applicant, the corporation and other interested licensees have been given an opportunity to be heard. The first thing is that you have to have a public hearing before you can come to a decision.

Then I draw attention particularly to subclause 4. I believe it was the Leader of the Opposition yesterday who asked me if there was a reference somewhere to the public interest. If you read subsection 4 of this section you find this provision:

> (4) No recommendation to issue a licence shall be made unless, in the opinion of the board, it would be consistent with the purposes of this part and in the public interest to do so.

So in the particular case to which my hon. friend refers the board, after hearing all the parties, will have to decide on the merits wherein lay the obligation in the public interest, and the decision would have to be made accordingly.

Mr. Fisher: In this particular case as to the announcement the minister made a few weeks ago on the C.B.C. plans, they will have to come before this board of broadcast governors before any action is taken. Is that right?

Mr. Nowlan: I would not want to say definitely on that matter. Those plans are in process of fruition now, as I told the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. It would depend to some extent when the personnel are appointed and when the board is ready to take over. It may be in October or in November. In the meantime the plans for the C.B.C. for this summer I hope will be fairly well advanced. The new board will, of course, have to take this matter into consideration.

Mr. Fisher: We hope those plans will go ahead. We would hate to see Kenora-Rainy River without its television station, but even there a problem arises. How are communities around Kenora-Rainy River, such as Sioux Lookout or Dryden and places like that, going to be informed or understand the fact that they could make certain presentations which would suggest that the station might be located a little closer to them or have a little more power? Now all we can do in line with that situation is just accept the fact that the C.B.C. in its wisdom and with the advice of its engineers is going to do the best possible chore. It seems to me that the establishment of any of these stations needs to call upon a fairly informed, let us say, public reaction in the area. I am just wondering how that can be done under the present set-up without hearings.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know how it can be done without hearings. There will be hearings in future under the bill. At the present time I think registered notices go out, and so on. You will see in section 11, which we just passed, provision that every meeting of the board shall be advertised in the Canada Gazette and giving the reason therefor. I certainly realize that the Canada Gazette is not the most widely published journal in Canada, but at least it is usually read by newspaper editors and people generally who are interested in public matters. Certainly if a notice appears in the Canada Gazette I would assume that all local and weekly papers in the area concerned will make very plain that this hearing is going to take place, and give notice of it.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has called our attention to subsection 4, which provides as follows:

(4) No recommendation to issue a licence shall be made unless, in the opinion of the board, it would be consistent with the purposes of this part and in the public interest to do so.

I should like to ask who can appear at a hearing of the board in order to protect or advance the public interest in respect of this matter. Under section 3 only licensees, as I understand this section, can appear at a public hearing. Licensees are the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or private stations. Under that section there is no provision for anyone else appearing at a hearing of the board except licensees. Therefore if some association—the radio broadcasting league or some organization of that kind—wished to make sure that its concept of the public interest was voiced at a hearing of the board, how could it be sure under this section?

Mr. Nowlan: There is more than one licensee. You have applicants, whoever they may be, for licences. You have existing licensees. It is not limited to the corporation; it is all existing licensees across Canada and the corporation, which is the C.B.C. This is a public hearing. It will have to be advertised in the Canada Gazette.

Frankly I am not sure, but I think there is another section somewhere in which provision is made for the public to be present. Certainly if any decision has to be made in the light of the public interest I think it would follow automatically that a board of this nature conducting such an inquiry would give ample opportunity to be heard to the radio leagues, boards of trade, town councils and everything of that nature. That is why we inserted the clause "in the Canada Gazette". Naturally licensees and the C.B.C. could be notified by registered letter, but we wanted to have it on a broader basis than that in order to meet the very point raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: That is true; but under the old act while there was no provision, as I remember it, made for the public to be represented at a hearing in the way you have suggested, there was also under the old act no limitation on those who could appear at public hearings. If I read this section aright, however, such a limitation has been definitely included, because under this section the hearing will be limited to the corporation and other interested licensees. But section 2 defines "licensee" as meaning only "a person licensed under the Radio Act to establish a broadcasting station". No matter how many licensees there are there is no provision for any others than licensees appearing; therefore there is a limitation on the right of the public interested to be represented before the board, a limitation which was not included in the old broadcasting act.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not before me the similar section in the old act, but I can find it. I think the answer to the thought expressed by the Leader of the Opposition is contained in the first clause:

(3) No recommendation shall be made by the board on any matter referred to it under subsection (1) unless it has held a public hearing—

I direct attention to the words "a public hearing". I think it would follow as a matter of law, and it certainly would follow as a matter of practice and common sense, that a public hearing would not be limited to just one, two, three or four parties. Certainly it is the intention, and I have no hesitation whatever in saying this, to include any interested party, and that is the whole basis of it. Perhaps if we had 500 crackpots or something like that, coming in to stall for a month of two, the board naturally would have to use a little reason, but any responsible organization or individuals will be given full opportunity to appear at a hearing of the board before any licence is granted.

Mr. Chevrier: This section is one which falls to the determination of the Minister of Transport. It authorizes the issue of licences under the conditions set out in the section. I am concerned at the moment about two matters. I wonder whether the minister would not give them consideration, or tell me whether they are covered by this section. The first is the assurance that in granting these licences, either for broadcasting or for television, there be a Canadian content in the program. I am sure that is a matter that will commend itself favourably to the minister, but in view of the discussions that took place during consideration of the resolution and prior thereto I think there should be no hesitation in giving the house the assurance that, in so far as licences are concerned, either those which will be granted or those that have already been granted, the programs shall have a certain Canadian content.

The other point I want to bring to the attention of the minister is that which has to do with association by new stations with networks outside of Canada. The tendency might well be, as I have put it in the house on more than one occasion, for a station that is not operating profitably or for a station that wants to operate more profitably to enter into an agreement with a network outside of Canada whereby it can pipe into this country canned programs which would be deterimental to the culture of our country. I have in mind now particularly stations in the province of Quebec where, because of the particular culture of the people, it would be easy for a station that was not being operated profitably to bring in canned programs from the United States or elsewhere, for that matter, which would have a content which would be detrimental to the tradition and culture of that province.

I am sure the minister would be the last person who would want to see a condition such as that exist, so I summarize what I have to say with reference to these points by asking him if it would not be possible in the granting of licences to add a condition which would provide, first for the assurance of Canadian content in the program, and next for the assurance that no station or network other than the C.B.C. might associate itself with a station outside Canada except in certain circumstances, for instance where a single program is the national interest.

Mr. Nowlan: As far as Canadian content is concerned, the board is given power to deal with the Canadian content of any program, and in clause 10 it is also laid down that the whole object and purpose of the board is to establish a service of high quality which is basically Canadian in content and character. Under the provisions of clauses to which we shall come in a minute or two the board has such power to control the establishment of networks as might be necessary as far as the Canadian content of programs is concerned.

I am not quite sure what the hon. gentleman meant by "having programs piped in", but as he knows there are many stations, not only in Quebec, which carry, shall we say, canned programs of recordings having a minimum Canadian content. I hope this situation can be improved as time goes on. But whether they are recordings or whether they come in by wire, I am sure the hon. gentleman believes, as I do, that the Canadian content should be increased and that we should not allow such things as he has described to happen.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the situation now with reference to the Canadian content so far as the C.B.C. is concerned?

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps the hon. gentleman could address that question to me when the officials are here, or when my estimates are before the committee. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is already familiar with this, but the study made by the Fowler commission a year ago shows that the amount of Canadian content is basically unsatisfactory in many situations where many dollars have been made. Sometimes it is in reverse proportion, the more dollars the less the Canadian program content.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the minister given any consideration to making either of these two matters which I have brought up a condition precedent to the granting of a licence?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I have not, except that the board has that power, of course, and I have no doubt that the board will exercise it. Again, this is a matter which I think we will have to leave for the board to decide in its judgment.

Mr. McIlraith: There is one thing I should like to add to the minister's answer with regard to the C.B.C. When applications for new licences are considered the board are quite firm about the content of the program; they examine programming very carefully, and they are very strict about the Canadian content.

Mr. Nowlan: It is difficult to police it.

Mr. McIlraith: They are very thorough, though, concerning new applications. I am not able to say what happens after the stations are in existence, with regard to the content of programs then, but the question is dealt with specifically and firmly when application is made.

Mr. Fisher: The many provisions which have been included on the subject of licences might have indicated what the government thought about the problem which would be facing the board of governors in connection with the establishment of television stations in the richer markets. This will raise many difficulties. I wonder—and here I admit I am fishing for information—why it was not thought fit to put in something more definite as to who should get a licence for a station say in the Toronto area. It seems to me that without any clear instructions the board of broadcast governors is going to be in the devil's own position in determining who should get it. Maybe that is as it should be, and maybe the board is so constituted that it can handle this problem, but I should like the minister's views because this is one of the crucial questions dealt with by the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member said he was on a fishing expedition, but I think the fishing season in Ontario has closed. The procedure is laid down here, but again I think the hon. member and I are at cross purposes to some extent, because he referred before to instructions to the board with respect to regulations and now he has mentioned instructions with respect to the granting of these licences. Certainly the last thing I should want to do would be to take any responsibility with respect to the granting of these licences in any circumstances. That is a matter which will be determined by the board in accordance with the machinery laid down here, and decisions will have to be made by the board in accordance with what they consider to be the public interest.

Here I hope the hon. member is not unwittingly confusing two things. Certain areas are restricted. That has nothing to do with the C.B.C. at all; that is a matter of policy which was decided by the previous government and which has been unchanged by this government. If any change should be made there will be an announcement to that effect.

Mr. Fisher: That announcement would be made by the government?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said he would be the last person who would want to have anything to do with the granting of licences. Of course under this legislation he will not have as much to do with it as the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Nowlan: I will not have anything to do with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: But if I read the subclause right, it leaves the final approval to the governor in council, of which the hon. gentleman is a distinguished member. In other words the final decision as to the granting of licences rests with the government. That is quite in accord with the recommendation of the Fowler commission, and I have no criticism to make of that.

However, my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo, who is detained elsewhere by a meeting I should like to say something about if the rules of the committee permitted it, did raise a question which I think is rather important. We all know that under the present law—and, I assume from my reading of clause 12, under this bill—it is competent for the governor in council to reject a recommendation of the board of broadcast governors. The question the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo asked me to raise is one which the minister may perhaps be inclined to dismiss as academic, but I am not sure that it is academic; I am not sure there is not a loophole here which should be filled in. Let us assume that a licence has been applied for and that the board has considered the application and recommended against it. Could the governor in council, under this legislation, grant that licence if it wished?

Mr. Nowlan: No. My understanding is that the governor in council could not grant a licence unless there was a recommendation by the board. I think that is the practice, and I think that is what was done under the previous board, with one exception of which the former minister is probably aware.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister could remind me of the exception, because I confess I do not recall it.

Mr. Nowlan: Possibly the hon. gentleman was away in Newfoundland at that time. It was in connection with one licence which was granted, I understand, against the recommendation of the board.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the minister is quite satisfied that this would not be legally possible? I am not saying that the governor in council would be likely to do it, and I did not know that such a thing had ever happened. But if it could happen we should surely guard against it.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the machinery is well established that the licence is granted on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors. I do not think it necessarily follows that the governor in council is obliged to accept that recommendation. He might exercise a veto and say, "Go back and make another recommendation".

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not questioning that at all. What the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was concerned about was this. These licences are applied for through the Department of Transport. Presumably they go from there to the board of broadcast governors and back to the department. I imagine the Minister of Transport does not bring them to the governor in council at all if the board does not recommend them, but I am still not quite convinced from reading the clause that it would not be competent for the Minister of Transport to bring them to the governor in council and for the governor in council to approve them if it saw fit to do so. I would think that would be an undesirable possibility to leave in the statute.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Affiliation with C.B.C. network at time of issue of licence.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the minister said in regard to the issue of a licence that he did not like the idea of laying down conditions precedent in a bill. I am not quarrelling with that, but I notice that in subclause 1 of clause 13 the board may recommend that a licence be issued subject to the condition that the licensee shall operate the broadcasting station to which the licence relates as part of a network operated by the corporation. I am not objecting to that condition, but somewhere in this bill I would like to see—and I have raised this question before, as have other hon. members on this side of the house—a condition of that kind in reverse; in other words, that there be a similar condition either in this paragraph or some other place in the bill which would be to the effect that the licensee shall not operate a broadcasting station to which the licence relates as part of a network operated outside Canada. If we can lay down a condition to the effect that it must operate as part of a network in Canada, surely as a means of protection we can lay down a similar condition that a licence shall not be granted except on condition that the broadcasting station will not be operated as part of a network owned outside Canada. Does the minister not agree that it would be desirable somewhere in this bill to state that it would include this condition precedent, just as we now have the one contained in this clause?

Mr. Nowlan: I think that is desirable, but I believe it is covered by the bill. I do not like to be leapfrogging ahead but clause 14, though it does not specifically say it must be in Canada, specifically spells out the fact that a licence can be granted for a network or a station only to a person who is a Canadian citizen.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 14—Applicant to be Canadian citizen, etc.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, when I first read paragraph (b) of this clause I thought there must have been a printer's error.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, it looks that way at first glance.

Mr. Pearson: It now reads:

(b) a person lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence who, since being so admitted, has been ordinarily resident in Canada for a period of not more than six years.

If that person, not a Canadian, resides in this country for five years, or even four, three, two years or one year, he qualifies for the issue of a licence; but if that foreigner in this country resides here for longer than six years he will not qualify. Is that not the situation?

Mr. Nowlan: No, Mr. Chairman. With respect, I believe the Leader of the Opposition has misconstrued it. The applicant has to be a Canadian citizen. I admit that when I first saw this clause I thought it was a typographical error, but this is an indirect approach without spelling something out. That is what it amounts to, to be perfectly frank. I believe the former minister of citizenship and immigration knows exactly what is involved in this. The paragraph reads:

(b) a person lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence who, since being so admitted, has been ordinarily resident in Canada for a period of not more than six years.

In other words he has to be here six years but not one, two or three years as the Leader of the Opposition suggested. The theory of that is this. Under the law a person lawfully admitted can become a Canadian citizen. He has to be a resident of Canada lawfully admitted for five years; the former minister of citizenship and immigration can correct me if I am wrong. Then he may become a Canadian citizen. We have added one more year and said, "If you are here six years and have not become a Canadian citizen, you do not deserve a licence. You should take out your citizenship." That is why the indirect language is used. It is to prevent people from getting licences who have been residing in Canada long enough to become naturalized Canadians, and we give them one year in addition.

Mr. Pearson: I understand that now, Mr. Chairman, but surely it still means what I said it means, that an American here for one year can qualify for a licence, but if he has been here for six years and has not become a Canadian citizen he does not qualify. This means however, that a foreign licensee or corporation operating a station in Canada could continue the foreign operation of that station by changing its owner every five years.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not wish to argue about the legal interpretation. I am quite certain the Leader of the Opposition is wrong, and certainly if he is right the lawyers are not. From the language of the clause which I have already read into the record I think the intention is that they cannot grant a licence to someone who has been here for only a year.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would appear to me that once a person is lawfully admitted for permanent residence—that is to say as an immigrant, not a visitor to this country—under this provision he could apply for a licence. The board could do what it pleased about his application, but it would be perfectly proper for the board to grant it up to the sixth anniversary of his landing or the sixth anniversary of the time he became ordinarily resident, which is not always quite the same thing. When I read this I wondered if it were directed specifically against Mr. Hal Banks, but I might be wrong about that.

I can see why it has been put in. I suppose it would be somewhat unreasonable to say that a British immigrant who had been here for four years could not get a licence because he had not been here for five years, or that a United States citizen who had been here four years and who had every intention of becoming a Canadian citizen as soon as our laws allowed him to do so could not go into the broadcasting business. I do not know that I would disagree with that.

I believe this is a new provision. I believe the Canadian broadcasting legislation provides that a licensee must be a British subject or a Canadian citizen. What troubles me about this is that once having got the licence, could you keep it if you went on after the six years without becoming a citizen. I mean, you may get the licence before you have been here six years, but if you do not take out your citizenship, can you keep it? It seems to me it is the keeping of the licence rather than the getting it that is the substantial thing and that would be more offensive to what the Leader of the Opposition was talking about. Under this bill you might have some way of getting a licence before you were here six years and of remaining a foreigner and continuing to hold the licence, because there is no specific provision for cancelling a licence.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no provision for automatic suspension or cancellation of a licence. Once a licence has been obtained proper steps would have to be taken to cancel it. It would have to go on if none were taken. It does not say it automatically lapses.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely the point, Mr. Chairman, and the minister is creating a discrimination here. If you get the licence just before the six years are up you can keep it indefinitely, whereas if you do not apply for it until after the six years you cannot get it. Perhaps the minister would allow me to give an illustration. Let us take two United States citizens who have both been in Canada for seven years. One applied for a licence just before he was here for six years, and he would go right on having it. The other, because he did not apply until he was here for seven years, could not get a licence at all. That does not seem to me to be fair and reasonable.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Nowlan: I am intrigued. I was in error in answering the Leader of the Opposition. It is, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out, possible to get out a licence in that interregnum. You cannot get it after six years, whereas you could previously. I think perhaps some attention should be paid to that point so there will be some provision preventing someone carrying on indefinitely.

Mr. Pearson: Would it not be better if we merely returned to the provision which restricts the application to Canadian citizens? I have not the text before me.

Mr. Nowlan: Have you the section there?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps we can let this stand, Mr. Chairman, because as the minister has pointed out it does seem to be anomalous.

Mr. Nowlan: I suggest that we let it stand.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 14 be allowed to stand?

Mr. Fisher: I have one more question. I have difficulty in understanding this, perhaps because of my lack of legal training. Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (c) reads:

> A corporation other than a corporation controlled directly or indirectly by citizens or subjects of a country other than Canada.

I am thinking of a company such as Famous Players Canadian Corporation, which owns what amounts to a controlling interest in one of our television stations. Would it be affected, as a matter of fact, by this as being itself a subsidiary of an American organization?

Mr. Nowlan: The subparagraph says:

> A corporation other than a corporation controlled directly or indirectly by citizens or subjects of a country other than Canada.

I would not want to make a specific decision on any named company, but that is the intention.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 14 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 15—Board may order suspension of licence.

Mr. Caron: Subclause 3 of clause 15 grants the right to appeal against an order of the board on a question of law; but if a licence has been taken away or has been refused on a question of fact instead of on a question of law there is no appeal.

Mr. Nowlan: That is so.

Mr. Caron: Oftentimes the reason for taking away a licence will not be on a question of law but because the station has not been administered according to the rules laid down by the board. There is no appeal whatsoever in that case, even though the station owners may have spent $400,000 to $500,000 on the station. Everything would be lost, because the station owners will not have the right to appeal.

Mr. Nowlan: This does not cover cancellations; it covers suspensions, as the hon. member says. It would have to be a drastic violation, or a flagrant violation of the rules and regulations, and then it has to be referred to the Minister of Transport. They have to wait 10 days to give him time to enter an appeal. Of course, also, the board is given power, if it wants to, to do things on certain terms and conditions and it could, if it saw fit, order the suspension on certain terms and conditions; therefore I think the licencee is protected. I think this is taken from the other act almost verbatim. It is a subparagraph which I do not think was ever exercised. It is a good one to have in the act to assure some compliance with the regulations which will be laid down.

Mr. McIlraith: It is similar to the right of appeal given to the pipe-line companies.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, it is comparable.

Mr. Crestohl: I agree that it is a very wise provision to give a party the right to appeal when the licence is cancelled. Is there also the right of appeal from a decision of the board when it refuses to grant a licence?

Mr. Nowlan: No.

Mr. Crestohl: I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that such right of appeal should exist. I do not think that right of appeal should be denied to anyone who has complied with all the regulations and formalities and requests the issuance of a licence. If the board refuses the licence the applicant should have the right that is given to everyone under normal circumstances and by the rule of law to seek redress from the courts, to have his day in court, because I do not think any board could possibly be considered as a board of final jurisdiction.

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot agree with the hon. member on that. There are scores of boards of this nature where appeals are not allowed, including the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The legislation has been in effect throughout the years. An applicant appeals to the board and the board exercises discretion, in its wisdom. It refuses the licence, and there has been no appeal to the courts from that decision. The hon. member would undermine the whole basis of the independence of the board if appeals to the courts were allowed in each case.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat at sea with respect to this section, because when I look at section 18 I find that it reads:

> Every person who violates any of the provisions of this part or the regulations is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction as provided in the Criminal Code.

It seems to me that anyone who has his licence suspended must have violated the regulations. I just wonder how you equate the two things. It does seem to me that anyone who breaks the regulations is liable to have his licence suspended and also to conviction under the Criminal Code. I bring up this point because I notice that the Fowler commission in the draft act put these two items very close together in their suggested sections 27 and 28, and they specify the fine. Can the minister clear up my turmoil in this regard?

Mr. Nowlan: The Fowler commission also points out in the report that it would probably be impossible to get a conviction. I think that is true. Let us take, for instance, the standard of programs. How are you going to convict someone for failing to maintain a standard? I think any lawyer in the house would welcome the opportunity of defending rather than prosecuting, but there might be some violations which could be prosecuted in the courts. This is a relatively simple provision that is included in most acts. It is simply a summary conviction. In other words, you cannot prosecute by indictment.

These are the two regulatory or enforcing provisions in the whole of this bill. One deals with suspension. As I said, it would only be used in the most flagrant case. The second deals with the right to prosecute, under which the prosecuting counsel would have the court deal with the advertising content or what regulation it was. How are you going to measure it? It is a good thing to have in there. It has a salutary effect. Frankly, that is the purpose of it.

Mr. Caron: Subclause 3 of clause 15 brings a question to my mind. A while ago the minister said it would have to be a very serious infringement of the regulations that would bring about the suspension of a station's licence, but there is nothing in this section or in the legislation anywhere which states that. It is left to the board, and the board may, depending on how they look at it, be severe in some instances and less severe in others. Does the minister not think it would be a lot more democratic to permit an appeal on a question of fact so it could be proven in court whether the board was right in suspending the licence or whether it was wrong? The licensee would be satisfied if he had the right to appeal from the board to a court which could overrule the decision of the board.

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot accept that. I do not think this danger which the hon. member for Hull sees will arise. I go back to the fundamental statement I have made 50 times in this debate. If you have the right personnel you are not going to run into the difficulty which the hon. member envisages. If you have the wrong people the act fails anyway and there is nothing we can do.

Mr. Caron: The minister refers to having the right people or the wrong people and he may be right but these people may have different views on various matters. They might act severely against some people and less severely against others. There is no recourse whatsoever to protect the rights of these people.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Operation of station as part of a network.

Mr. Pearson: Clause 16, as I understand it, gives the government a very good opportunity if they desire to take advantage of it, and I think that they agree with this in principle, to provide for the contingency I have mentioned two or three times, that a Canadian station may affiliate itself with a foreign broadcasting network. I put this point to the minister because I should like to get an opinion on it from him before I decide whether to move a formal amendment. The clause now reads:

(1) A licensee shall not operate a broadcasting station as part of a network unless—

I suggest to the minister that there might be a new condition which would be first in order and would read as follows: "A licensee shall not operate a broadcasting station as part of a network unless (a) it is a Canadian network."

Mr. Nowlan: According to my understanding, under clause 14 there has got to be Canadian control in any event. I cannot see any objection to the suggestion made. On the other hand, I do not want to accept it at the moment because there may be peculiar circumstances. There may be times when Canadian stations are connected with foreign networks for the purpose of carrying service programs such as presidential addresses or election returns in Washington. There are scores of such programs where Canadian stations operate as part of such a network for a relatively short time, and an absolute prohibition such as the Leader of the Opposition suggests might interfere with that. With the intention that the network should be Canadian, I would rather see the matter left to the judgment of the board for the moment and more consideration given to the technical problems which might arise if you had an absolute prohibition as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point, I do not wish to repeat what I said earlier but I think such an amendment would meet the two conditions to which I suggested the minister should give consideration, having to do with the granting of a licence for a broadcasting station or a television station. If this amendment were accepted by the minister it certainly would meet any difficulties I found myself in with respect to the point I raised earlier. Surely at first blush it would seem that there should be no objection to this condition because this is the clause under which a licensee shall not operate until and unless certain conditions obtain. Therefore I am going to press the minister respectfully to allow the clause to stand and give it consideration in the meantime.

Mr. Nowlan: I want to get through with the bill some time. As the hon. member points out, a licensee shall not operate a broadcasting station as part of a network unless (a) it is a condition to the licence issued in respect of the station that he do so. In other words, he has to apply to the board of broadcast governors for permission to operate, shall we say, as part of a United States network. That procedure has to be followed, everybody has to be notified and the machinery gone through to which I referred a few moments ago. I cannot believe that the board will be granting licences of that nature, certainly not in the immediate future. What conditions may be as to affiliations and networks in this rapidly changing industry I do not know. As I have said, we do have temporary networks. I think the clause should be allowed to stand as it is. It is pretty specific and certainly more definite than the old act. Undoubtedly it was covered to some extent in the old act but it was not spelled out as directly as it is here. You just cannot get permission at all to join such a network unless that condition is specifically endorsed on the licence that you have the right to do so and so. I should think it would be very difficult to obtain endorsement of such a condition.

As I have said, this is a technical field and I do not feel free to make commitments, although I agree entirely in principle and I feel sure that the principle will be maintained in the foreseeable future. Nevertheless I do not want to agree to something which in the end might prove embarrassing and difficult to administer and perhaps might reflect on the conditions here.

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate what the minister has said and I am not pressing him—

Mr. Nowlan: Bring it up in January before the committee.

Mr. Pearson: —to amend the bill in a hasty way which might have results that we do not contemplate.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Pearson: I am also pleased to hear him say that this kind of condition would in fact be attached by the board to the issuing of a licence and that the board would have no intention of issuing licences to stations which would operate as part of a United States network, which is something different from being associated with such a network for a particular program.

In addition to ensuring that Canadian networks and stations remain Canadian, we also had in mind the protection of the board against the kind of pressure that might be exerted on it to sanction this kind of affiliation and if the words I have suggested were included in the bill they would be a protection for the board. However, I think the minister has stated the policy of the government very clearly in this regard. He has, I understand, said that this is a matter which should have consideration as one of primary importance by the committee when it is set up next session. In the light of this assurance by the minister, perhaps we can let the matter stand.

Mr. Nowlan: That is why I am anxious to see the committee set up at the next session, so that we can deal with some of these things having had a little more experience than we have had now.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17—Political programs.

Mr. Pickersgill: This, of course, is the famous Mr. Sage clause that some of the older members of the committee will recall.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not so old and I remember it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume it is in precisely the same form as it is in the present broadcasting act. I have not checked it word for word but I would not have thought that the minister would lay profane hands on it without telling us. It is, of course, a travesty in its present form. I am very familiar with the legal opinion that Mr. Dunton got from the Department of Justice about this matter. It did not satisfy me and I do not think it would satisfy anyone else who had any regard for the English language, but it was probably good law just the same. In its present form, apart altogether from the question in the minds of some of us whether or not "dramatized" is a verb at all, we do know that all kinds of practices go on at the present time that can only be described as dramatized performances.

One of my colleagues mentioned to me a moment ago that in one constituency in the last election a hockey game was paid for by a candidate not a member of this party and every so often the candidate appeared to put in a plug for himself. I do not know whether or not a hockey game is a dramatized performance but I would think it was certainly not the kind of political broadcasting contemplated when clause 17 was put into the present act. I am not going to suggest any amendment but I should like to have the assurance from the minister that clause 17 will be specifically remitted to the committee on privileges and elections for study during the next session.

Mr. Nowlan: It was the understanding when we inserted it here rather reluctantly that this was not the place to include it but as this certainly was not the time to engage, as I said before, in a prolonged political discussion about advertising and programs it was put here, shall we say, as a temporary resting place until the elections committee could meet.

Mr. Pearson: The minister must have considered the fact that under the provisions of this clause he is putting the Prime Minister in danger of violating the law because the Prime Minister, on more than one occasion, has broadcast, in a highly dramatic form, programs, advertising and announcements of partisan political matter.

Mr. Nowlan: That type of program would not be banned.

Mr. Herridge: Following the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with respect to clause 17 (1) (a) which does not permit a dramatized form of political program, I may say that I have not much criticism of that because in my constituency they have mostly been tragedies.

I do want to refer for a moment to this paragraph (b) which says:

No licensee shall

(b) broadcast a program, advertisement or announcement of a partisan political character on any day that an election is held for the election of a member of the House of Commons, the legislature of a province or the council of a municipal corporation, or on the two days immediately preceding any such day.

I want to bring an incident to the attention of the minister and ask him if he does not think this clause requires amendment, and whether it might be one of the things to be studied by that committee which he suggested. In the last election political candidates would go across to the United States and give addresses over United States television stations which would be received in Canada and re-broadcast in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, by people who have licences to pipe in television or something of that sort. Would this clause not require amendment? The candidate or some person goes outside of Canada and uses United States television facilities, then that program is picked up in Canada by a Canadian who has made an arrangement with the corporation and has a licence from the board to broadcast piped-in television. How are we going to avoid that? It does not affect our party because I am told it costs about $100 a minute and about 15 minutes would exhaust our funds. Would the minister say whether or not he considers there should be some change?

Mr. Nowlan: Obviously that is a violation of this clause. Obviously the clause should be repealed and a new one substituted therefor, after discussion with this committee.

Mr. Caron: I do not quite understand the wording of paragraph (b) and the wording in subclause (2). Paragraph (b) says:

No licensee shall

(b) broadcast a program, advertisement or announcement of a partisan political character on any day that an election is held for the election of a member of the House of Commons, the legislature of a province or the council of a municipal corporation, or on the two days immediately preceding any such day.

Then, subclause (2) says:

A licensee shall immediately preceding and immediately after broadcasting a program, advertisement or announcement of a partisan political character, identify the sponsor and the political party, if any, upon whose behalf the program, advertisement or announcement was broadcast.

If a station has not the right to broadcast such a program, why should they identify the sponsor?

Mr. Nowlan: That means any program, whether it is one week or two weeks before election day. Then you have to say that this program is sponsored by such and such a party, and so forth. The clause is identical with the one that has been in the act for 15 years. However it works, it is there.

Mr. Caron: Even if it was there, it may be dangerous.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister know how most of the municipal candidates describe themselves partywise in carrying out this provision of the act?

Mr. Caron: In Quebec we have school boards and they have been forgotten.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

On clause 19—Report to parliament.

Mr. Argue: This clause requires the board of broadcast governors to report within three months after the termination of each fiscal year to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the governor in council for the purpose. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reports to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Nowlan: He happens to be the minister designated.

Mr. Argue: Yes. There is a further provision in part II that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will report to the minister. It is possible that the board of broadcast governors will report to one minister and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will report to another. As has been stated a number of times in this debate, there is a good deal of misgiving that this very thing might happen and might tend to divide the Canadian broadcasting system into two parts, and that this is opposed to the one system concept of the people who have the public interest at heart.

We should like to see this section amended so it would specifically provide that the report should be made to the Minister of National Revenue. We do that because that is the minister to whom the C.B.C. has been reporting. We also do it because of the occupant of the portfolio at this time. We say that the Canadian people generally, while they may in various degrees question the government's attitude towards the national broadcasting system in this country, do have a good deal of faith in the present Minister of National Revenue. It has been said, in any public speculation as to the differences that might have existed within the Conservative party at one time on this issue, that the Minister of National Revenue could usually be counted upon to champion the cause of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and a national broadcasting system. It could be argued, of course, that the present minister will not always occupy that portfolio. If there is a cabinet post in the government that is considered more important, more of a plum, we would wish him well as he goes up the ladder.

However, we are willing that the board of broadcast governors should report to him, and in view of the long history of the C.B.C. reporting to the Minister of National Revenue we feel that should be made an operating part of this measure. If these suggestions were adopted we would then endeavour to have part II designate that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation shall also report to the same minister. Our group believes that this clause should be amended in order that the report might be made to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Pearson: I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia. I have some hesitation in supporting an amendment which would change a bill because of, shall I say, personal considerations for the occupant of a particular post in the government. If we were to carry this too far we would perhaps cause the minister to lose his job. I do suggest it is a bad principle to change legislation for these considerations.

However, we have other objections to this clause, Mr. Chairman, which perhaps I should mention. This clause 19 fails to require the board to report on broadcasting in general and on the performance of the component parts of the broadcasting system in particular. It merely requires the board to report on its activities. If this particular clause remains as it is at present all that the board will be required to do under it is to make an arithmetical recital of its activities, the number of meetings, what was dealt with, and that kind of thing.

On the other hand, under section 36 of the bill the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is required to report on its operations. That introduces a distinction of the kind we are so worried about, namely a distinction between the privately owned and publicly owned parts of the system. Therefore, in order to avoid that distinction we think that this section should be amended. Earlier I had thought that perhaps this amendment could be introduced to section 11 having to do with regulations but perhaps this is the best place to do it, namely section 19 which deals with reports to parliament. I should therefore like to move:

That section 19 be amended as follow:

By deleting the words: "on the activities of the board under this part for that fiscal year", and substituting: "under this part for that fiscal year on the performance and financial affairs of privately and publicly owned stations and networks.

I think this amendment would improve the bill. It would ensure that parliament each year would get a report from this board, not merely on its activities but on the operations of broadcasting in Canada, both on the part of public and private stations. It would be a far better basis for consideration by any parliamentary committee than would the kind of report which seems to be visualized in section 19. I would commend this change at least to the sympathetic consideration of the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I could not accept this amendment in the words in which it is moved. A report under this part for that fiscal year on the performance of privately and publicly owned stations and networks is something to which one might give very careful consideration. But the amendment also requires a report on the financial affairs of privately owned and publicly owned stations and networks. Of course the financial affairs of publicly owned stations and networks are public property anyway, I presume; that is the corporation and its affairs are controlled by this parliament. But I do not know how far you can spell out, to use a slang expression, the financial affairs of a privately owned station. You will recall that Mr. Fowler in his report said that there should be but very sketchy information given by the board on the financial affairs of privately owned stations; that they should collect it and perhaps use it for purposes of program evaluation and so on but that nothing more than a balance sheet, I think he suggested, should be published, if that, so that rival stations and competitors would not be given access to the private affairs of the private stations. Certainly I do not think the committee would want to accept this amendment in the way in which it is worded.

As to the word "activities", I suppose there will be a report at the end of this fiscal year for part of it; if the board gets operating this fall, it will have to submit a report next spring. If there is some objection to that word "activities" or if there is some significance to it or something else is thought better, I am prepared to consider it. But I cannot consider the wording of the amendment as it is before us.

Mr. Pearson: Would it meet the minister's objection to the wording if I made this suggestion? I appreciated his objection. Suppose the word "operations" be substituted for "performance and financial affairs" so that the amendment would read "a report under this part for that fiscal year on the operations of privately and publicly owned stations and networks". I am sure the minister will appreciate that there is a report. The C.B.C. has to report on its operations under this bill. The board has only to report on its activities. The House of Commons, when it is considering broadcasting matters, whether in committee or in the house, will have before it as the basis for that consideration a report which will be required on the operations of the publicly owned system but no report on the operations of the private element of the broadcasting system. I appreciate what the minister has said about the inadvisability of those particular words. I am asking him whether this amendment would meet the situation:

A report under this part for that fiscal year on the operations of privately and publicly owned stations and networks.

Would that meet the point raised by the minister?

Mr. Argue: Before the minister replies, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I think the amendment that has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition is a very good one. I am talking about the general purport of the amendment. I think what has been said is completely true, namely that the board of broadcast governors should be asked to report on the whole broadcasting system of this government and all aspects of it and should not be confined to a report of its own activities. I have no quarrel at all with the word "activities". However, I think the type of report which the board is to make should be clear. I think it would be a mistake to make it possible for the board to overlook completely, if it wished to do so, in reporting on its activities the question of the privately owned as well as the publicly owned stations and networks.

I might say to the Leader of the Opposition that before he suggested his own subamendment to the amendment I had already written into the copy that I have the same word "operations" but I had deleted a little bit less from his amendment than had the Leader of the Opposition. I had deleted only the words "financial affairs" so that it would read:

And substituting: "a report under this part for that fiscal year on the performance and operations of privately and publicly owned stations and networks.

I appreciate the very fair way in which the minister has considered this suggested amendment. With the further suggestion as to how the amendment that was moved might be further amended, the minister might consider the question whether he himself could amend this section or accept an amendment which would spell out the type of broad general report that parliament would like to see the board of governors make on an annual basis.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McIlraith: It seems to me that we probably are to get a report on the activities of the board which is very limited or very narrow. But what we really want is something much larger. Do we not want a report on broadcasting in Canada? Is that not the thing we are seeking to get at? I wonder whether the minister would consider another suggestion, keeping in "the activities of the board" and inserting after that "and broadcasting in Canada" or some similar phraseology that would get us the fuller report on the whole subject of broadcasting which seems to be what everybody desires.

Mr. Nowlan: One other difficulty about this matter, in addition to the financial one, is the fact that by this amendment, if it were adopted, we are telling the board of broadcast governors just what it is to do. In other words, we are defining the regulations for them and saying "you must do so and so" under the regulations in order that you may report to parliament. Personally, I feel that the report of the board of governors should be along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Ottawa West, a report on its activities in such detail as parliament might require to make sure that it is performing its duties, spending its money wisely and so on and so forth. Certainly I think there should be included in it a general statement on broadcasting in Canada, on the stations and so on. I do not know what the machinery of this board is going to be, and I do not know how long it is going to take to set this board up. I do not want to insert into this an instruction that the board should report, say, on April 15 when, obviously, the board may not have had time to receive reports on the operations of radio and telecasting stations across Canada.

I suggest that this is a matter which is worthy of careful consideration, and I think it could be left to the committee on radio this winter, when we shall have the regulations before us, to consider whether these regulations are wide enough and to ensure that we do get an adequate report on broadcasting in Canada.

Mr. Pearson: I just want to comment on what the minister has said. He said he had some difficulty in including in this bill a provision whereby the board would be required to report on its operations. What we are trying to insure in this and in other parts of the bill is that the corporation should not be placed at a disadvantage before this board. The minister has agreed it would be unfortunate if the corporation has to produce this kind of report to parliament while the private broadcasting stations have to make no such report to anybody.

Mr. Nowlan: Is that correct? After all, the corporation is a crown corporation. We have to provide the money for it. Its whole financial affairs are, so to speak, naked before us. That is not true of the private stations.

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate that, and the minister was quite right when a moment ago he took exception to the wording of this amendment because it might be interpreted as prying into the private affairs of private radio stations, which we have no right to do.

The minister has suggested once again that this is the kind of thing which could be considered in the committee on radio and perhaps, in the light of what he has said, we should be content with that. But I would point out this is the third or fourth time we have moved amendments and the minister has said: let us refer this to the committee. This confirms our feeling that had this bill been brought in a month ago all these things could have been discussed in committee and we should have had a much better bill in consequence.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, let us not disturb this atmosphere of peace and kindliness. The Leader of the Opposition knows very well that that statement is incorrect. The reason I am asking that this be referred to the committee is, of course, because the board has not been appointed and the regulations have not yet been drawn. If this bill had appeared six weeks ago the regulations would still not have been drafted. In other words, there is nothing that the committee could have done in connection with this bill except, possibly, to ask the minister: who are you going to appoint? That is about all that could have been done. Do not let us be under any misapprehension that this is due to the bill coming in late. It is due to the fact that under the ordinary processes of government, whether this had come down in January or August, action would not have been taken until the government and the ministers had had time to draw a deep breath and give the matter more consideration than is possible during a hectic session. Thus there is no substance in the suggestion which has been made that this could have been dealt with in a committee.

Mr. Pearson: To continue in an atmosphere of peace and kindliness, may I say that I still feel that if we had had this bill before us and considered it in a committee of this house it might have been returned as a much better bill than it is now. The minister has suggested that this can all be done next session. But by then we will have a new act before us, and the board of broadcast governors will just have been set up—there will not have been much time—and the committee will probably be confronted with just those difficulties which confront us at the present time. In so far as a comparison is concerned between the kind of consideration here in the house and consideration in a committee, the minister must realize that every time we now reach a clause here we are confronted with cries of "carried" as soon as we begin to discuss it. We are doing our best to point out what we consider to be weaknesses of the bill, as is our duty, even though we are not unduly pressing our viewpoint, because obviously that would not be desirable. However, in the spirit of peace and kindliness I am willing to withdraw my amendment, especially in view of the fact, that as the minister has pointed out the original wording was not very good.

The Chairman: Has the hon. gentleman leave to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate the attitude of the minister that the substance of this amendment could be considered next session and that the amendment has a good deal of merit in it. However, at this time I wish to revert to the point I made when I first stood up to discuss clause 19. We do not like the possibility —indeed, I may say, the probability—that the board of broadcast governors and the C.B.C. will be reporting to separate ministers. We feel that this could lead to a great deal of conflict. We feel it could lead to a minimizing of the effectiveness of the operations of the C.B.C. We have confidence in the attitude of the Minister of National Revenue, and this group has confidence as far as the national system of broadcasting is concerned, but this confidence does not extend to certain other ministers of the government particularly in the light of their clear history in this house. For that reason, and also because although the minister was very generous in his attitude to other suggestions he did not seem to show the same leniency toward this amendment —perhaps he is just modest because he is named in it—I should like to move:

That clause 19 be amended by deleting the words "member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the Governor in Council for the purpose" and by substituting therefor the following words "The Minister of National Revenue".

Mr. Pickersgill: We are not able to support this amendment for several reasons. Perhaps, having served in governments, we have not the same faith in political immortality as the hon. member for Assiniboia seems to have. That would be one reason. The second reason is that we do not think the purpose which the hon. member has in mind will be served by this amendment, although I have no doubt he is thinking of moving a similar amendment later on when he comes to the C.B.C.

The position we take is that there should be no minister to whom the C.B.C. reports; that the C.B.C. should, as the Fowler commission recommended, report to the board of broadcast governors and that the board of broadcast governors in turn should report to the government, analagously with the existing situation under the existing act. The principle in this legislation is wrong and we think it will be made even worse if the government is foolish enough to have two ministers. I do not think any more than the Leader of the Opposition does that it is wise. There is no connection between the duties of a minister of national revenue—not the minister but a minister of national revenue —and the particular responsibilities under this act. It is possible that the Prime Minister even before this act is proclaimed will recognize the undoubted merits of the present Minister of National Revenue and promote him to a more responsible sphere and if for example we were to find in his place the Minister of Finance, then where would the hon. member for Assiniboia have taken us?

I would rather leave this as it is and trust to the good sense and the good judgment and perhaps even a bit to the fear of ridicule of the Prime Minister in this matter. But as for the question of this resolving any conflict between the two ministers, we do not think it would have that effect. In the circumstances we do not believe it is a good amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should say a word or two at this time so that if a vote is taken my colleagues will not feel they are hurting my feelings by voting against the amendment. I appreciate all the kindly things that have been said and I accept them. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out a few moments ago, there is no relationship between the C.B.C. as such or the board of broadcast governors and the Minister of National Revenue, and whatever the future of the present Minister of National Revenue may be—whether he attains a more exalted status or whatever may happen—the fact is that one should not definitely commit the administration of the C.B.C. to a specific minister.

Reference was made to continuity over a long period of time. Dr. McCann was the minister reporting for the Department of National Revenue—

Mr. Pickersgill: Previously he was the minister of national war services.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. I believe it is much better to permit the flexibility which is now provided for and enable the governor in council to nominate a minister to administer the board of broadcast governors. That minister may be the Minister of National Revenue or he may be the Minister of Finance. Of course, it may even be the Minister of Public Works; who knows?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate spoke about our perhaps feeling that there may be political immortality when we are asking that a particular minister be named. Then he went on to say that if we named the Minister of National Revenue, we might be horrified at a later date to find that the Prime Minister had switched ministers and the new Minister of National Revenue could be the present Minister of Finance. That would be a development that would give us great cause for reconsidering the moving of this amendment. But our fear is that without it being stated in this clause it just might be the Minister of Finance and that fear has been bolstered by the words of the Minister of National Revenue who said there is one of three possibilities—

Mr. Nowlan: One of two; I was just giving an illustration.

Mr. Argue: Now it is getting worse. We want to see the clause amended so that possibility would not exist. I believe it is not a wise thing to have this board reporting to an unnamed minister of the crown, a minister who can be changed from time to time. I believe it is far more in keeping with having a board of governors doing an effective job to have stated in the legislation the minister to whom the board will report. The looseness and ambiguity of this bill of which the official opposition has made so much for so long a period is going to be supported by them in voting against this amendment because they will in effect be asking that this free wheeling rein be given to the government.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate also took it upon himself to put words in my mouth by saying that no doubt we had in mind a certain amendment to part II. The hon. member is a very congenial fellow. He is a very good and valuable member of the House of Commons and, if I may say so, I believe he is improving. However, by engaging in the type of forecasting that has preoccupied him this afternoon his conduct leads one to wonder whether he may not be reverting to the status he enjoyed some time before he began to show the improvement to which I referred. Even if the hon. member is a lawyer I could prove to him, as I could prove to any one who is a lawyer, from the evidence I have on my desk that it is not the intention of this group to move the amendment he suggested.

We believe it is in keeping with the building of a national system of broadcasting to have a specific minister named in this clause, to move an appropriate amendment to a further clause in the bill and to make it abundantly clear if these amendments are carried that parliament wants a single national system with certain components rather than a dual system such as could flow from this bill providing as it now does for these two bodies to report to separate ministers.

The Chairman: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 131.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, there is another point about which I wish to ask the minister. He will observe that in part II of the bill the word "minister" is defined in clause 21, paragraph (d) as follows:

(d) "minister" means the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada who is designated by the governor in council as the minister through whom the corporation is to be accountable to parliament for the conduct of its affairs.

There is no definition of the word "minister" in the definition clause in part I of the bill but there is a limited or partial definition of the word in clause 19 in part I which says:

19. The board shall, within three months after the termination of each fiscal year, submit to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the governor in council for the purpose a report on the activities of the board under this part for that fiscal year.

That is the operative part of the clause.

The reference to a minister is found in the words:

—submit to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the governor in council for the purpose—

Presumably, the purpose is receiving the report on its activities. The significance of that, as I read it, and the way in which it is drafted, is that the minister can only be designated under the act for the purpose of receiving the report. He cannot be designated for any other purposes and if I am right in that it leads us to the position that there is no minister answerable in the house for the activities of the board, and no minister to whom we can direct questions, and who will otherwise be responsible in the house for the activities of the board. I am sure that was not intended. Perhaps there is an answer to it, and I would like the minister to give me the answer if he can.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not sure but what that is not virtually the answer to it, Mr. Chairman. It is roughly or approximately the same situation as applies now to the minister for the C.B.C. I am the minister designated under the act for the purpose of the C.B.C. and I have two functions at the moment: one, to recommend payments over $25,000; and, two, to report to parliament for the C.B.C. I have forgotten all the detailed discussion that went into the drafting of this, as my hon. friend will appreciate. Perhaps I should have used it yesterday in reply to the Leader of the Opposition. This goes a long way to meet the charge that the board of broadcast governors is under the control of the government, or something of that kind. This section was phrased very carefully to avoid such a suggestion. They report to the minister but the board is pretty well—in fact, I would say I hope entirely—divorced and removed from control. It has to report to parliament and parliament, I suppose, can exercise control, I do not know; parliament can take such action as it sees fit. That is the way the thing is defined in the act.

Mr. McIlraith: My point is this. Under the C.B.C. part of the bill the minister is the minister through whom the corporation is accountable to parliament. In the first part of the bill the minister is not defined at all other than as contained in section 19. He may merely be designated for the day to receive the report and turn it over to parliament. There is no minister accountable to parliament so far as I know. Under all other legislation, through one method or another, there is a minister accountable to parliament and to whom parliament may look for information and the like from day to day. It is this point which concerns me. It seems to me there is an omission there. The minister should be accountable to parliament and he is not accountable. There must be someone to whom parliament can direct inquiries. There must be someone, for instance, who will present the estimates to obtain the money to sustain the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Nowlan: That follows automatically in section 20 which says:

All expenditures for the purposes of this part shall be paid out of money appropriated by parliament therefor.

There has to be someone—

Mr. McIlraith: That is just my point; someone has to do it, but there is no minister responsible. Therefore, when we have supplementary estimates pertaining to this board of broadcast governors we have no minister to whom we may direct questions. There is no minister answerable to parliament. That is the point. I wonder whether the minister would give some attention to that point. I appreciate his remarks about the other aspect of it, namely independence from direction by a minister, but that does not answer the part as to the responsibility to parliament.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

On clause 21—Definitions. "Broadcasting".

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there is a feeling among some of us that there would be advantages to having the C.B.C. report to the board of broadcast governors. So that there will be no question at all about the control that the board of broadcast governors should have over broadcasting and to clear up certain divisiveness in the way in which it is set up, I should like to move:

That clause 21 be amended by deleting the present subparagraph (d) thereof and by substituting therefor a new subparagraph (d) to read as follows: "Board of broadcast governors means the board of broadcast governors as set forth in part I of this act and is the board to which the C.B.C. shall report."

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this amendment; in fact, I approve of it. But would it not be desirable to let any change in the definitions part of this bill be held until we see what is going to happen to clause 22, because the definitions will surely depend on whether any amendment is to be made to the substantive clauses. While we may propose amendments to clause 22, surely it would be unwise to change the definitions until we see whether there are amendments to the bill. I suggest the definition amendments be held over until we see what happens to clause 22.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister agree to the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that we let clause 21, the interpretation clause, stand and go on with the other clauses because some of us have some suggestions to make on the other clauses, and while they probably will not be acceptable to the minister, they might be. If he is agreeable and if the hon. member for Port Arthur will be agreeable to allowing his amendment to stand until we dispose of the substantive clauses we could come back to the interpretation clause.

Mr. Nowlan: Will we get through by five o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: It might help in getting it through more quickly.

Mr. Nowlan: That is perfectly satisfactory.

The Chairman: Is it agreeable to let the amendment stand?

Mr. Argue: My colleague has no objection to this clause standing, apart from the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition. He may have a point. The only thing we had in mind was that clause 21 comes before clause 22, and if you let clause 21 go by, which is the definition clause you will really get into a flap in the committee when you wish to look at it afterwards. I think this is probably the best way to proceed, namely let this clause stand and deal with the other one. After we have been successful with clause 22 we can come back to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to let clause 21 stand?

Clause 21 stands.

On clause 22—Corporation established.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, this is the clause of the bill to which we are most definitely opposed and which gives us the greatest anxiety. It establishes, or re-establishes, perhaps, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in a form which we consider unwise. We have some objection to take to the details of the various subclauses, but our main objection—and the minister will not be surprised to hear this—is that the corporation should be set up in this way with a board of directors comparable in nature and composition to the board of broadcast governors. We also object—and this objection has been voiced before—to the corporation reporting separately to the minister and through the minister to parliament rather than through the board of broadcast governors.

The first amendment we would move to this clause would be to subclause 1 which now reads:

There shall be a corporation to be known as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation consisting of a president, a vice-president and nine other directors to be appointed by the governor in council.

Incidentally, the president and vice-president are appointed in a different way and for a different period of time than the other directors. We are opposing this kind of board of directors for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We do not think there should be this kind of board along with the board of broadcast governors. That is our basic objection. If it is not accepted as embodied in the amendment which we will move, we will have other objections to raise and perhaps other amendments to move to other subsections of this clause. But in connection with this basic objection, I am going to ask my colleague, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to move an amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That section 22, subsection 1, be amended to strike out all the words after the word "vice-president" and substitute therefor the words "and a secretary to be appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors."

Subsection 1 would then read:

There shall be a corporation to be known as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation consisting of a president, a vice-president and a secretary to be appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors.

I might say in support of this amendment that it will bring the whole structure of the bill into conformity with the recommendations of the Fowler commission. The corporation will not be a corporation sole; the corporation will consist of three persons. I think it is desirable that it should consist of three persons. There seems to be no useful purpose in having these nine directors whose functions will be entirely redundant if the board of broadcast governors does the things that the Fowler commission recommended that it should do. If it does not do those things, we do not think there is any place for the board of broadcast governors, but the position we took on second reading, the position we took before the bill was ever introduced and the position we are still taking is that the structure recommended by the Fowler commission is not a sound structure for broadcasting in Canada and by this amendment we would be going a long way toward putting the bill back on the rails.

Mr. Nowlan: I just want to say that the government cannot accept this amendment. It makes a fundamental change in the whole concept of the bill to which a great deal of time and consideration have been given. I know the arguments pro and con and I could repeat them ad infinitum. I have weighed them in my own mind for a good many weeks and in the end the government decided that this approach was the better approach in setting up the organization. You can say that it is redundant, you can say a lot of things, but it appealed to the government as the best way in which we could inaugurate this system, by only making a change in name and instead of the board of governors the C.B.C. has had given it a board of directors corresponding in other ways.

As to the argument that the directors should be removed and that the corporation should be reduced to a corporation sole or corporation three, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has just mentioned, I was thinking yesterday, as all these arguments were being used about political pressure and all the rest of it, how much greater the pressure would be if there were no board of directors and if it was simply a corporation consisting of three executive officers. As the bill stands, the president and the vice-president are members of the board of directors. They have their associates there and, to use an expression used yesterday, they are insulated as far as it is humanly possible to do so. At least it is a much better approach than if there were no insulation at all. That is why I wanted to see a board of directors set up, and I think it will work. I know the experience in Australia and I realize the difficulty expressed in the old cliches about one being stronger than the other, getting in each other's hair and so on. But after all this is Canada. We have solved our problems in the past. We have adopted unique approaches time and time again, very often involving compromises with those followed somewhere else. We have made them work and we will make this work. I at least want the committee to give us an opportunity to try it and see how it works. We can then change it if it should be necessary.

Mr. Pearson: Before the vote is taken I should like to point out to the minister that so far as his preoccupation with protecting the officers of the corporation from political pressure is concerned, a preoccupation which we share, surely the insulation he talks about and which he suggests would be removed if the nine other directors were abolished, would be supplied, and I would hope very effectively supplied, by the board of broadcast governors. I am not suggesting that the directors be removed and that the executive officers of the corporation be left defenceless in the face of political pressure. We would substitute the more effective insulation provided by the new board of broadcast governors for the kind of insulation they would get from this board.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 72.

The Chairman: Shall clause 22 carry?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, now that we have failed to secure a fundamental change in this section we are going to try to improve it in its present form. For that purpose I should like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that while the president and vice-president of the corporation are appointed for seven years the other directors are appointed for three years.

These other directors are appointed, as the minister knows, during good behaviour and that gives them some security against pressure. The president and vice-president, contrary to the position of the chairman of the board of the present corporation, are appointed to hold office during pleasure, whereas the directors are appointed to hold office during good behaviour. Under subclause 4 a director may be removed at any time by the governor general on address of the Senate and the House of Commons, and only in that way. The president and vice-president, holding office during pleasure, can be removed without that procedure being followed. We believe that this is a fundamental weakness of this particular clause and a danger to the corporation.

Without saying any more, because the minister knows our position on this, I should like to move:

That section 22, subsection (2) be amended by deletion of the words "during pleasure" and by substitution of the following, "during good behaviour".

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to take up much time, Mr. Chairman. I simply say again today what I said yesterday on second reading, that the government cannot accept that amendment. I recognize the arguments that have been made, but this procedure appears in other government corporations as well. It is done because these particular officers, as I said yesterday, are executive officers charged with the responsibility of doing executive work. I think it is only reasonable that if they should happen to fail in doing that executive work, if they should be inefficient or anything of that kind, then the president and vice-president could be removed. It is a contingency against which one should guard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister has made the thing even worse than it appeared from the simple language of the clause. As I understand it, and I would be glad to be corrected if I am wrong because I have not looked at the statute on this particular point, the general manager and assistant general manager of the corporation are appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the board of governors of the C.B.C. and not by the governor in council direct. They have a certain security of tenure which protects them from the government. Now we are going to make a radical departure by having direct appointments by the governor in council without the intervention of any other body. If I read the bill correctly, the governor in council can remove these people, as the minister says, if they become inefficient.

It is not the board of the C.B.C. that is going to determine whether they are inefficient; it is not the board of governors, it is the governor in council.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is quite clear that the power to remove is inherent only in the governor in council. It is the pleasure of the governor in council.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Nowlan: It certainly is not on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors, but of the directors of the C.B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly is not, and wherever they may pick up the gossip about inefficiency, it is only the governor in council who can exercise that power because it is his pleasure about which we are talking. The government is doing exactly what the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, and is putting a couple of its creatures in the two principal offices and saying that the moment they displease the governor in council they may be removed. Otherwise, what does this language mean?

I must say I challenged the minister yesterday and he has had 24 hours to produce any other statutes in which this incredible language occurs. I say "incredible" because it does seem to me it is a contradiction in terms when you say you are appointed for seven years and that you are appointed during pleasure. I can quite understand a person being appointed for seven years during good behaviour, but what does the seven years mean if it is during pleasure? It means nothing. It is just nonsense. It may be that there is some poorly drafted statute somewhere else that got through parliament, as this one has not yet, without anyone noticing this fact, but this one has been noticed. It does seem to me that, since it has been noticed, and after all the professions we have heard from the government of their desire to keep broadcasting independent of the government, here they are insisting on putting two of their creatures in office and saying that they can be removed any time that they decide, in their own way, in the closet, that these people are inefficient. Perhaps they just do not like them. They have to give no reasons to anybody. It does seem to me that this is the very negation of independence. It is impossible to imagine that even the purest government in the world would not, sometime or other, do that. Of course, this government may not always be here. It may be that some day some other hon. gentleman or some other hon. lady may be occupying their position.

It is just conceivable that there may be some minister who would not like the looks of the president or the vice-president. It does seem to me the minister ought to give some further consideration before he advocates this step which really legally destroys the slightest independence of this corporation.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course, that is nonsense, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member talks about a closet, but there is no area of the government service upon which the spotlight of publicity will beat down with a greater intensity than on this matter of the C.B.C. When someone stretches his imagination to the point where he starts talking about dealings in a closet, and so on, he is stretching it pretty far. I can say that I can see some merit in this argument, that the appointment itself made by the governor in council could be one thing in which there could be political influence or almost anything, subject to whatever the judgment of the governor in council happened to be at that time. But once you make the appointment, believe you me any government that would change this appointment, particularly in the light of the qualification of seven years in there, and in addition to pleasure, would be going a long way. I cannot conceive of circumstances in which it would not be done on the recommendation of the board of directors.

My hon. friends have made a very strong and telling case on the use of the words, but I think they are very far removed from the practical aspects. I do not want to spend more time on it.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister give us any case where this device has been used in legislation before, the appointment during pleasure for a fixed period, of officials who are, in the first instance, appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of nobody else? He said there were other cases and I wonder if he can give the committee the benefit of his knowledge?

Mr. Nowlan: I was told that, but I have not the other cases here.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not suggest for a minute that the minister has any intention of doing anything of this sort; I never suggested that. However, we are not making laws for this minister, we are making laws for sometime in the future. The minister spoke about the letter of the law. My understanding is that the law is all letters and that when you go into the courts, the courts do not construe the mind of the governor in council, they construe the words in the statute. Now, the terms "good behaviour" and "pleasure" are very ancient terms in the law and they are very well known to the constitution. They have been used throughout this statute, except in this one place. It does seem to me if there is ever one place they should be used it is here. I would have had much less quarrel with this bill if "pleasure" had been used in connection with most of the other appointments and "good behaviour" in connection with this one. Here are the two operating executives, the very two people that we depend upon the most to keep this organization independent, and they are going to be discriminated against by having this stain put against them.

All the Leader of the Opposition is saying is that the words "during good behaviour" should be put in here. He is not saying that there should have to be an address of both houses. All he is saying is that the governor in council should appoint them "during good behaviour" for a period of seven years; and if the governor in council has any cause such as that which the minister suggested—I am sure inefficiency is not good behaviour—or if the government finds any cause for their removal which is inconsistent with good behaviour, there would be no bar to that removal in the amendment moved by my friend the Leader of the Opposition. But it seems to me that we should not easily allow the government to put this kind of legislation on the statute books.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether it is the intention—I have not been able to find it in the provisions of this bill although it may be there—to provide that the president of the corporation should be the chairman of the board and preside over the meetings of the board? The minister has referred to him merely as the executive officer. But is he not also the chairman of the board and the one who presides over the board of directors?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think there is a section spelling that matter out in detail in the bill. But I think it was taken for granted that where someone was not named chairman or if there was not a definite designation, the chairman would be the president.

Mr. Pearson: That is true with regard to the board of governors; he is designated.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: There is nothing in this bill to designate any member of the board of the corporation as chairman of the board?

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Crestohl: The minister may be noble in his intention as to whether or not the president or vice-president will be dismissed during the tenure of office of seven years. The question is this. Can they be dismissed if they incur the displeasure of the government? That is really the test. If that is the test and if they can be dismissed if they incur the displeasure of the government, then I think we are defeating our objective for this reason. We are not insulating them and giving the corporation the independence that we intend to give it. There is that difference. The president and the vice-president can hold office during pleasure and the others can do so during good behaviour. Why is there that difference? I wonder whether the minister can explain to the house why the two principal officers can hold office at pleasure and the others can do so only during good behaviour? There must be a reason for that difference. I should like to hear from the minister an explanation for that difference.

Mr. Nowlan: I gave it previously.

Amendment (Mr. Pearson) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 75.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 22 carry?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, undismayed by the lack of success of our previous effort to amend this section and for reasons which have been made sufficiently clear in the statements which have already been made on this section, I would move:

That section 22 (2) be amended by inserting the words, "on the recommendation of the directors of the corporation", after the word, "appointed" on line 3.

With this amendment, subsection 2 of section 22 would read:

(2) The president and vice-president shall be appointed on the recommendation of the directors of the corporation to hold office—

And so on.

PRIVATE BILLS

KENNETH HERBERT GREGORY

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could obtain the consent of the house to make a motion in relation to Bill No. SD-231, for the relief of Kenneth Herbert Gregory which was restored to the order paper this morning?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to make a motion as he has suggested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McPhillips: I move:

That Bill No. SD-231 entitled "An act for the relief of Kenneth Herbert Gregory" be recommitted to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, for the purpose of hearing evidence on paragraphs 11 and 13 of the petition.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: As there are a number of private bills standing for consideration in the committee of the whole, is it agreed that they be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

JOHN SHAW MACNEILL CARSON

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-293, for the relief of John Shaw Macneill Carson—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McCleave: By way of explanation, I held up the bill the last day we considered it because one of the members of the House of Commons pointed out that documents relating to the divorce of the respondent wife on a previous occasion were not available. The Senate committee had waived the formal placing of documents before it, but since an hon. member raised an objection, rather than spend time on it I wrote immediately to the lawyer acting for the petitioner and he has forwarded to me a German court order showing that a divorce had been granted to the wife on a previous occasion and, secondly, a translation by a man competent to do this sort of work. We have both those documents in the file now.

FREDA LEVINE SCHUBERT

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-304, for the relief of Freda Levine Schubert—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, while I will say right at the outset that I will not oppose this particular bill, I should like to draw the attention of members of this committee to certain facts in connection with it. This is a contested divorce and I feel that on that basis closer attention must be paid to the evidence which was before the Senate subcommittees, and that we should give it as close a look as possible.

First of all may I comment that this case appeared before the Senate subcommittees on two occasions and that finally the matter was referred to the full committee. On the first sitting the subcommittee consisted of five members of the Senate, and on the second sitting, of four. Those four had been members of the original committee. However, at the sitting of the second subcommittee, the hearing was adjourned sine die, and there was a final meeting of the subcommittee composed of six members, two only of whom were in attendance and heard evidence at the prior meetings. I would submit—

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member give me the page reference for his last reference about six, please?

Mr. Lambert: Page 11 of the report. In those circumstances I feel the members of this committee are quite entitled to review the evidence, being in the same position as the final meeting of the subcommittee which made the recommendation to the committee of the whole on divorce.

I must admit, and draw to the attention of the committee, that the subcommittees which heard the evidence in the original instance had the benefit of observing the demeanour of witnesses and that, in a matter of this kind, is of considerable importance. However, I should like to go into the evidence a little bit to indicate that while, possibly, the conclusion of the Senate committee in this instance might have been correct, I have some very grave reservations as to the full weight of the evidence.

First of all, we are concerned with an incident in a small restaurant in Montreal on September 11, 1955, which is approximately three years ago. I had some difficulty in assessing the precise accuracy of the evidence of the numerous witnesses concerning what happened on that particular morning. For instance, three witnesses were called who do not profess to know French and they commented on a so-called admission of misconduct by an alleged co-respondent, the admission and conversation leading up to it having been spoken in French. There was one witness who understood French and there was some suggestion that he translated as the conversation transpired.

If we look at the evidence of the witness Strober which appears at page 31 of the committee report we find the man admits he does not know French. He testified that the co-respondent who was a waitress in his employ was an hour late. She gave as her reason that she had been in a car with the respondent. She apparently used the word "coucher" which the witness said he understood to mean "sleep in a bed". It was in this language she described her relationship on that occasion with the respondent. However, the witness also said she had been away in a car. There is some doubt as to precisely what was said and what happened.

I might point out that a great deal of the evidence of all the witnesses was as to what happened prior to the respondent being present. That is why I have considerable reservations concerning just how much validity should be attached to the evidence of these witnesses. It is difficult to know how much of the evidence was based on fact and how much of it was hearsay evidence. A considerable amount of hearsay evidence appeared to enter the case. I should like to draw the attention of this committee to these considerations.

The evidence of the witness Morin appears at page 35. At no time did he identify the date on which the adultery is alleged. He was extremely vague as to when he had heard the conversation referred to and there was no corroboration that he had acted as translator. He appeared to draw conclusions from words that were alleged to have been said in that he states, in effect, "it must have meant this" or "it must have meant that". He prefaced many of his statements with comments of that kind and there is little evidence of direct statements.

The evidence given by the witness Rittmer which appears on page 37, I would submit, contains a great deal of hearsay. This man clearly admits he does not know French. As a matter of fact, there is some suggestion that he is not too familiar with the English language either and so it is rather difficult to know precisely what he might have stated if he had fully understood either or both languages.

I wish also to make reference to an unhappy event that occurred. The plaintiff closed her case. The respondent who was under escort since he was serving a sentence in a Quebec prison met the case against him under advice of counsel by denying the allegations made. He denied his presence at the restaurant where these statements were alleged to have been made and he denied knowing the co-respondent. Following the close of the case the committee adjourned its hearings and subsequently the plaintiff presented another witness, Marafino apparently in rebuttal to the evidence given by the respondent to the effect that he was not present or did not know the named participant. The committee had reservations about hearing this evidence. However, it was heard and subsequently there appears in the record of the proceedings a statement to the effect that the committee decided to disregard the evidence of that witness. I would remind hon. gentlemen that we are all human beings. Regardless of whether the committee felt it should disregard the evidence of the last witness called, the members of that committee heard the evidence and their minds may have been conditioned or influenced by that testimony. They should not have heard the evidence of the witness Marafino.

These are the reservations I have about the evidence in this case notwithstanding the fact that many witnesses appeared before the committee. On the basis of their demeanour the committee may have preferred to give weight to the witnesses appearing on behalf of the petitioner and to have disregarded the evidence given by the respondent. I feel, as an hon. member of this committee who is asked to pass on a bill of this kind and as a practising lawyer, that I must indicate my reservations as to the type of evidence which was allowed to be presented in this case and as to the manner in which it was presented. I believe great care should be exercised in these matters. As I said, I will not oppose this motion but I wish to draw these salient facts to the attention of this committee.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West has brought out in a striking manner a point which should be of interest to all hon. members when we deal with these divorce cases. This is not an easy case; indeed, it is an extremely difficult one. Those hon. members who have read the evidence will recall the circumstances under which the husband and wife lived together. They will recall her constant difficulty in obtaining any support whatever from her husband and also the fact that a large part of his life has been spent in certain institutions in the province of Quebec. There was also the circumstance that when he appeared before the subcommittee on July 8 he did not have a lawyer. Statements were made by the witnesses concerning the restaurant incident and he did not cross-examine the people who made those statements. Subsequently when the case was closed it was decided to reopen it and the moneys paid by the wife to have the case brought before the other place were used to help counsel, who had been appointed by the subcommittee, in an effort to find the key witness in the case, the co-respondent, the waitress with whom he is alleged to have committed adultery. It was a difficult case from start to finish and I suppose any lawyer would have his reservations about it.

[Mr. Lambert.]

I know that in my own particular case, for instance, I have read it some four or five times. Perhaps they had little precedent to guide them but what did guide that committee of the Senate, I am convinced, was their desire to be fair to the respondent, a man who does not enjoy the normal freedom of other members of society.

The hon. member for Edmonton West brought forth facts which—after the house heard his eloquent speech setting forth the matters—may cause some doubts as to whether we should consider it. I would point out that this matter has received the most careful scrutiny over a period of days. As a matter of fact, the first hearing started on July 8, and it went on until August 6 before the Senate heard the final witness. As the hon. member has pointed out, the Senate decided to disregard the evidence of that witness because, I presume, he could properly have been before the subcommittee on a previous occasion.

The committees of the other house of parliament are charged with this onerous duty of listening to the witnesses in the first instance, assessing their evidence and determining the reliability and the credibility of witnesses. If ever there was a case in which everything turned on the credibility and reliability of witnesses and perhaps very little on the printed record that is available, I would think it would be this case.

Unfortunately, the practice of asking leading questions of the witness was used, such as, "What were you doing on September 11, 1955?" the date of the offence. This, of course, was direct prompting which would not ordinarily happen in a court of law. Apart from circumstances such as that I think the respondent was given every opportunity and the fairest of treatment over there. I think that the subcommittee of the other place, acting on its impressions of the witnesses they had before them and the witnesses they saw there, came to a conclusion. My hon. friend did point out that the case was contested there. It was contested there, but it was not contested before us.

STANMOUNT PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-14, respecting Stanmount Pipe Line Company—Mr. Morton—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the sponsor of the bill can inform the committee whether the minutes and proceedings of the standing committee dealing with this pipe line are available to members of the committee of the whole. My understanding is that the evidence has not yet been printed. I do not think it is required by the rules of the house that the minutes be available by the time any bill gets back to the House of Commons, but I would think it is the sensible thing for members of the committee of the whole to insist that before they discuss the particulars of any given bill after it is reported back to the committee the report from the committee should be in their hands. Surely that is the whole purpose of sending a bill such as this to a committee.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I cannot tell the hon. member. Perhaps the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Peterborough, could tell whether the minutes are available. I have not been confronted with this point before because usually we have representatives from all groups in the house on the committee. At that time they raise their objections and they have the right to examine and cross-examine the various members of the firm who are there for that purpose. I think the purpose of the committee is to give everyone who has a question to ask the opportunity to get first-hand information. If I recall correctly, there was not a member from the group led by the hon. member for Assiniboia at the meeting. However, I will ask the chairman of the committee whether the minutes are available.

Mr. Fraser: We did not have a reporter in the committee at that time to take evidence. It is very seldom that there is a reporter present to report evidence on bills of this kind, because the committee counts on the members being present to get the information.

Mr. Argue: All the members of the house cannot be members of the committee. Therefore, we are at a disadvantage if the evidence is not taken.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Evidence was taken.

Mr. Argue: Excuse me, the evidence was not reported so that it could be placed in the hands of members of parliament. Evidence was heard but was not recorded.

We are opposed to this bill. I am not going to try to block the house in dealing with it today; I merely wish to register a continued opposition to the passage of this bill.

As has already been said on a previous occasion, the Stanmount Pipe Line Company is wholly owned by the Imperial Oil Limited. Imperial Oil Limited is part of an international cartel. Imperial Oil Limited itself is a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, and I do not think it is wise for parliament to increase the power of this international cartel as represented by the Imperial Oil Limited. I think the stand of the Imperial Oil Limited has been in complete opposition to the building of a trans-Canada oil pipe line to supply to the Montreal area oil from Saskatchewan and Alberta. I suggest the stand taken by the Imperial Oil Limited has been a narrow one and has been governed solely by the financial interests of the Imperial Oil, and it is an endeavour by this international oil cartel to maintain the Montreal market for oil from Imperial Oil and its associates.

The independent companies in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are most concerned that a pipe line be provided to the Montreal area. If passage of this bill might result in such a line being built that would be a strong reason why members should support it, but I think the very fact that Imperial Oil wants this kind of authority when it is opposed to the building of such a line shows that the passage of the bill will not mean that the result I have suggested will be achieved.

Another reason we are opposed to the passage of the bill at this time is the pending report of the Borden energy commission. We are hopeful that the report will deal, in fact we are certain it will, in a comprehensive manner with the oil and gas problems of the nation. We think that in the light of whatever report is made members would be in a much better position to judge whether or not the passage of this bill is in the public interest. On the basis of the evidence I have now I suggest its passage is not in the public interest.

According to an Ottawa Journal report of last Saturday, which report was subsequently picked up by the Canadian Press, the interim report of the Borden royal commission on energy is likely to favour a pipe line to the Montreal area estimated to cost $375 million. This is a proposition which will receive the full support of the people of western Canada who are looking for markets at this time for their very important oil production. As a result of a reduction in the United States market for Canadian oil there has been a substantial cut in the production of oil on the prairies and this has had adverse economic results on the revenues of two provincial governments and the welfare of the people of those provinces.

I notice that the hon. member for Calgary South is in his seat. He is an authority on this whole question. He has taken a great deal of interest in the problem and I am certain that he supports the opening up of the Montreal market for Canadian oil. If passage of the bill would bring that day closer I would certainly give it my support but I do not think its passage would in any way solve the pressing problems of the oil industry at this time.

There is another reason why I am opposed to the course being followed by Imperial Oil in seeking to obtain the power through the passage of this bill to build a trans-Canada pipe line to Montreal. I have in mind the report that the United States government, instead of moving in the direction of easing the restrictions against importation of Canadian oil, may in fact increase those restrictions and lower the quotas for Canadian oil entering that market. It has been reported in the press that secretary of commerce Weeks of the United States government has asked for a further survey of the oil situation in the United States and that new quotas are likely to be posted within the next 30 days. According to press reports in all probability this will mean a reduction of import quotas on oil allowed into that country. I express the hope that these reports are not well founded, that the United States will not take this action and that in a short time restrictions on Canadian oil entering that market will be removed.

But with this present and perhaps growing danger I feel that parliament should be directing its attention to solving the oil problems facing the nation and not giving further strength and powers to Imperial Oil Limited, part of an international cartel which in my judgment, so far as Canadian markets are concerned, is operating and acting in a manner detrimental to the welfare of the nation. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, we in the C.C.F. are still opposed to the passage of the bill.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say only a word or two because I recognize any lengthy observations on my part would only tend to satisfy the purpose of our good friends in the C.C.F. in that we would talk out the bill.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, I think I made it quite clear that while we were opposing the bill we had no intention of blocking it at this or any other stage in the debate.

[Mr. Argue.]

I hope that the hon. member will understand that if he and other members should continue to debate the bill until six o'clock it will not indicate, as far as we are concerned, a deliberate effort to block the bill. We are opposed to it but we are prepared to accept the decision of the house.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): I was honestly mistaken and I make the necessary apology. I should like to make two comments on the remarks made not only in this but in the previous discussion by the hon. member for Assiniboia. First, I think some reference should be made to the status of Imperial Oil Limited who, through the bill before us, are requesting the authority at some point to construct a pipe line. While Imperial Oil has on a number of occasions registered its protest against the eventual imposition of any controls which might effect a restriction of foreign crudes coming into Canada, I think most members of the industry and most members of the house, I hope, will agree that Imperial Oil is itself concerned with the marketing problems of Canadian oil.

The second point I should like to make is that while it is quite true that I disagree in some respects with their arguments that have been presented to the Borden commission and while I certainly continue to support moving more oil out of western Canada to Eastern Canada because of the absolutely essential necessity of providing assistance to the independent operators, until the Borden commission has reported I do not here challenge the evidence submitted to it. That is the responsibility of the commission.

To deal specifically with the bill, I feel that all the protection necessary is vested in the board of transport commissioners to give consideration to the economic merits of such a project, and there is no doubt in my mind that when the Borden commission makes its findings and gives consideration to the future establishment of an energy commission it will make some reference to the over-all programming of the development of oil and natural gas. This is their purpose under their terms of reference.

However, all this bill provides is the right of this company to appear before the board of transport commissioners. If we found that we were, today, becoming involved in the economics of this problem, then I would agree with the member for Assiniboia that the facts are not all before us. Certainly by the time the company concerned with this particular bill is in a position to move ahead with it, assuming they do, then it would become the responsibility of the proper officials, whether it be an energy commission or the present facilities of the transport board, and they would have to make a decision. I am quite certain that the rights of both the oil producers and the people of Canada will be taken into consideration at that time.

Before I sit down I should like to close with the comment that I think the hon. member for Assiniboia is perhaps being a little unkind to the sponsors of the bill. I have not any particular reason to have sympathy for them, but he referred to the fact that parliament should not give Imperial Oil this further control over the oil resources of Canada. He says that the powers of this company would not be used really to develop the resources of this company but to further impede the development. Then, he said, too, that Imperial Oil is a cartel and that Imperial Oil had been blocking resource developments for years. I would remind him, as I am certain he knows, that it was this same company that drilled 107 dry wells, and some at a cost of $1 million, before the Leduc No. 1 was discovered and brought a good gravity crude into this country. I think it should be kept in mind that this is a company which employs Canadians almost throughout; it has developed many secondary industries from its refinery centres, and it has produced substantial prosperity throughout very large sections of Canada. They together with independent companies have brought Canada's petroleum industry to the peak at which it is today. I feel that this should be said in their defence. This is not a private cartel and the passage of this bill will not impede future development of oil or gas in Canada. The purpose of this measure is merely to give the company the right to appear before a properly appointed board to give consideration, at the appropriate time, to whether or not it is economically advisable to build a pipe line.

For these reasons, I think the people of western Canada and in particular the independent operators would have no objection to proceeding with this bill.

Mr. Argue: I am sure the hon. member for Calgary South did not mean to say that I had said anything unkind about the sponsor of the bill because the hon. member for Davenport is a good friend of mine.

Mr. Pallett: Does he admit it?

Mr. Argue: He can amend that statement if he cares to, but from my point of view he is a good friend. I do not think the hon. member would suggest I have said anything unkind about him. I may have said some rather unkind things about Imperial Oil, but being a very large company with world-wide interests and being part of a well-known international cartel, I do not suppose my small voice raised in the House of Commons will affect Imperial Oil to any real extent.

It has been argued that we do not need to be concerned unduly in passing this bill because before any pipe line is proceeded with there must be approval by the board of transport commissioners and that board will take care of the public interest. Even if that were the case, and the board could be relied upon to take care of the public interest, I do not feel that removes from parliament the overriding responsibility to see to it that charters which are given to companies are, in themselves, in the public interest. One of the reasons I have opposed the passage of this legislation at this time is not only the pending report of the Borden energy commission, but the weight of evidence which suggests that there is anything but a certainty that this company will need the powers in this bill before the next session of parliament. In other words, this is not emergency legislation required by this company in order that it may continue its development. This is merely a standby authority that the company wishes to have believing that it might, at some future date, need it.

There is no certainty at all; in fact, there is a likelihood the company will not be building the pipe line before the next session of parliament. I suggest, therefore, there is no ground for hurry and there is a real reason, in view of the pending report of the energy commission, why parliament should delay approval of this bill until a further session.

BARBARA JANET DILLANE BARR

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-247, for the relief of Barbara Janet Dillane Barr—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Some question arises as to residence qualifications in connection with this bill. Would the sponsor of the bill care to comment on that?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, certainly. The reason this bill comes to us out of order in so far as the other bills are concerned is precisely the point raised by the hon. member. It was a point upon which the committee experienced some difficulty, and upon which we had to consult with the law officer of parliament, Dr. Maurice Ollivier.

The circumstances are, Mr. Chairman, that the respondent is a native of Ontario. He did move for a brief period to the province of Quebec. The couple, when married, lived for a while in the province of Quebec. About 11 months ago, the wife was deserted and apparently the respondent returned to the province of Ontario, living in the city of Ottawa. The evidence on that point is not conclusive. Certainly his parents live in the city of Ottawa and certainly the petition and other papers in the case were served upon him there.

Those members who looked into this matter pointed out that in Beauchesne's volume the matter of petitions received a great deal of consideration. Dr. Beauchesne clearly states that petitions should not be presented to parliament here or at Westminster unless the petitioner has exhausted all other remedies and has no other place to go. Obviously that is the old practice. In this case it appears, at least on the face of it, that the petitioner —and it is the domicile of the husband which governs; the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife—should not have brought her case before parliament but rather should have taken it first to the supreme court of Ontario.

As the committee can readily appreciate, this was a matter of extremely important principle. For that reason we spent some time the other day discussing it with Dr. Ollivier. It is competent for parliament to act in divorce petitions from any province of Canada. But in recent years it has been the practice, since provincial divorce courts were established, to consider only the cases from Newfoundland and Quebec. When this matter came up for consideration, since it was uncontested, nobody had raised the point except a few hon. members. I wrote to the solicitor for the petitioner in the city of Montreal and asked him if he would submit a brief on this point. We also had the benefit of a brief from Dr. Ollivier and his assistant Mr. Batt. In the brief of the petitioner's solicitor there was some argument to the effect that there was evidence from which you could gather that the domicile of the husband had shifted to the city of Montreal. Personally as I know the evidence, I may say that the wife said that they had established a home in Montreal; but the home turned out to be an apartment and the purchase of a building as such was not involved.

As can be seen, the committee was obliged to labour under a goodly number of difficulties in connection with this matter. We finally resolved it by deciding to report the bill back without amendment. I think perhaps I can fairly state that the members of the committee, on looking at this evidence, felt that the Senate committee might have been justified in drawing the inference that there was domicile in the province of Quebec, or again that this was one of those borderline cases of a man shuttling back and forth over the boundaries; and that the wife might have gone to the supreme court of Ontario only to find that the supreme court might have told her to go to parliament. Whichever course she took might have been the wrong one, as you can appreciate. Hence, Mr. Chairman, that is the position in which we found ourselves. But the recommendation of the committee was unanimous that the bill go back before the house. I think the hon. members raised a very useful question and I hope that this report will go down to the bar of the city of Montreal so that the lawyers there will know that we are looking into this matter and were concerned about it in this case. I hope they will govern themselves accordingly in the future and at least present much stronger evidence than was presented in this case if they are going to rely on domicile in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion.

Mr. Herridge: Could we have from the sponsor a brief explanation of the purpose of this bill?

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the sum total of this bill is that the company is asking for permission to increase its number of directors up to 15 so that it may have a better representation of its directorship across Canada and also to enable it to have an executive committee to carry on its day by day work.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, from the point of view of this group that seems to be a very reasonable request and provision. After listening to the explanation given by the sponsor, we have nothing further to say.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private bills having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

BROADCASTING

ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS— CONTINUANCE OF C.B.C.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-55, to establish a board of broadcast governors and to provide for the continuance of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Mr. Nowlan—Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: We were discussing clause 21. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On clause 21—Interpretation.

The Chairman: Order. We have passed clause 22 and we have reverted to clause 21. Shall clause 21 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there is an amendment to clause 21 which has not been disposed of. The hon. member who moved the amendment does not appear to be here at the moment.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment? The amendment reads:

That clause 21 be amended by deleting the present sub-paragraph (d) thereof and by substituting therefor a new sub-paragraph (d) to read as follows: "Board of Broadcast Governors means the Board of Broadcast Governors as set forth in Part I of this act and is the board to which the C.B.C. shall report."

Mr. Nowlan: We let this clause stand. Quite frankly, I have forgotten the reason at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can recall it. The purpose of the amendment as I recollect it, was to substitute for the minister the board of broadcast governors in this clause, but as our amendment on clause 22 was turned down, it would seem to me that it would make sheer nonsense of the bill to pass this amendment now. We were in favour of the amendment in itself, on the assumption that the government would see reason about the substantive clause, but I do not think we should make ourselves ridiculous by voting for this in view of the decision of the committee on the substantive clause.

Mr. Nowlan: As the hon. gentleman indicates, I could not accept this. If we were to make this change it would certainly not fit in with the pattern which has been established here, and it would be a rather ridiculous procedure. The mover is not here, and I do not want to take advantage of him in his absence—

Mr. Pickersgill: Why should we not vote on it and dispose of it?

Mr. Nowlan: —but perhaps we had better deal with it now.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that we call yeas and nays?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the definition of broadcasting still follow in all detail the former definition?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: No new methods have been discovered since the last time this was enacted?

Mr. Nowlan: There are sufficient technical words used here, I think, to cover anything.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 23 agreed to.

On clause 24—President and vice-president.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just a moment. You are going very fast. I think there was some exception taken to the third subsection of this clause or to a similar clause by the hon. member for Cartier, if I remember correctly. I do not know whether he has looked at this again and satisfied himself about it.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the objection to which the hon. member has referred was raised by the hon. member for Cartier last night and referred to temporary appointments made when the chairman and vice-chairman were both absent. We were then dealing with the board of broadcast governors. The same arrangement would apply here, and there could be a temporary appointment in the case of the unfortunate absence or death of a president or a vice-president.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 25—Remuneration.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to suggest any amendment to this clause because I do not think I have anything appropriate to suggest, and I question whether I would have power to move an amendment if I did because the only kind of an amendment I could move would be to fix a specific amount, which it might not be competent for a member on this side of the committee to do. But I just want to point out that this once again underlines the shocking change in the character of this legislation. Not only are the president and vice-president to be appointed at the pleasure—at the whim—of the governor in council, but they are to be paid any salary which the governor in council pleases. This underlines the extent to which in the future the corporation will be a mere creature in the hands of the government.

Mr. Nowlan: I should not like to allow that to go unanswered. The hon. gentleman always says these things so forcibly and with such apparent venom, or—I do not want to say "insincerity" because I know that neither term is quite appropriate—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister upon reflection—I do not object to the word "venom" in the least—will appreciate that when he questions my sincerity he is imputing motives, or so it would seem to me.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not imputing motives, but in this atmosphere one does not want to become too emphatic, even as emphatic as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate sometimes allows himself to be. When he talks about "creatures of the government", "closets", "pressure" and all the rest, I suppose these things are possible—

Mr. Pickersgill: I trust the minister does not object to the word "closet". It is, of course, just a synonym for cabinet.

Mr. Nowlan: That, of course, is the historical background and I think, that as he goes on, the hon. member's earlier training may suggest some things which went on in the closets which certainly do not go on in this government. When one speaks of creatures of the government and of the safeguards which were always invoked in former legislation and which are now disregarded, I would recall that the hon. gentleman has stressed time and time again the great contribution which was made by the Bennett government—it is one of the few things he recognizes—in the establishment of the old board of broadcast governors and of the safeguards which were included in that act. I should also like to suggest to the hon. gentleman—and this may be one reason why he is so unduly suspicious today of other governments—that there was a gentleman named Hector Charlesworth who was named director of the board of broadcast governors in 1932 by the Bennett government. He was appointed for good behaviour and he was given a 10-year contract. What greater safeguards could you have than that?

Then the prime minister, from whose closet the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was not too far removed, saw fit to remove Hector Charlesworth despite the fact that he had seven years to go. So the mechanism of an act does not necessarily guarantee protection if the intention is there to get rid of someone, and that happened on that occasion. That is the record of one of the earlier chairmen of this board, the—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Canadian radio commission.

Mr. Nowlan: The Canadian radio commission, yes, afterwards the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That is why the hon. member is somewhat suspicious of what may be contained even in an act which perhaps superficially does not contain the same safeguards as the former act did, and yet that result was achieved.

Again all I can say is that I am quite sure the hon. member will be satisfied and if he is not, as I said, we have a committee coming up next winter. He will see this in operation and I am quite sure the officers will not suffer the dire penalty that the hon. member apparently fears they will incur.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the minister does not expect me to allow his peculiarly coloured version of history to be left on the record unchallenged. What happened, of course, was not what the minister suggested at all. The parliament of 1936 saw fit to pass new legislation to create a new body called the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which was to supplant the Canadian radio commission and they saw fit to repeal the act which created the Canadian radio commission. It was done in the open in parliament after a parliamentary debate and there was no question of any firing or anything of that sort. That was the action of parliament. What parliament does is one thing, but what I am objecting to is the opportunity this bill provides to have things done in secret, and since the minister does not like the word I used before I will say in the secret of the cabinet.

When the minister and his colleagues sat on this side of the house we listened hour after hour to the most eloquent speeches about the days when the Tories were going to come back into power and throw open the windows of the privy council so the people of this country would know what was going on, and now we have legislation like this.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, the minister will recall that when we discussed a similar clause earlier in the bill I expressed an apprehension that the salaries might be modified after having been fixed by the privy council. I asked the minister to give the committee some assurance that the salaries would not be modified. We are hoping that the directors will be completely independent but if it will be possible by order in council to move the salaries and reduce them to $1 of course these officers will be constantly fearful. I would therefore ask the minister again to give the committee his assurance that once the salaries are fixed they will not be reduced.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course, Mr. Chairman, no government can bind another government. That is recognized by all. But subject to that I can assure the hon. member and the committee there will be no reduction in salaries as I outlined last night and as anticipated by the hon. member.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this discussion I pointed out that there were three permanent salaried directors. To sit they need a quorum of five. They are entitled to have seven on the board. They are to be given a remuneration of $100 for each sitting day. This could amount in the course of a year to a salary higher than that paid to the Prime Minister if they were to sit almost every day and there is nothing to prevent their doing so. Why should the minister not place a ceiling on the maximum allowed? Once they are in they can do whatever they like.

Mr. Nowlan: As I said last night, Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to fix a ceiling on this matter. This is an easier question to deal with than the board of broadcast governors which is entirely new. I would anticipate that the meetings of the directors of the C.B.C. would roughly correspond to those of the board of governors of the C.B.C. I believe they were paid $50 a day and usually they meet for three days, so one could work out an analogy based on that. I can assure the hon. member that if any director sits so long or so frequently that he draws a salary equivalent to that of the Prime Minister on the basis of $100 a day it might be a matter for "cause" rather than "pleasure". That is certainly not going to happen but they will have meetings to oversee the affairs of the corporation. The advice we received from the senior officials of the C.B.C. was that the remuneration heretofore was not sufficient and great difficulties had been encountered in holding the meetings. It was on their advice we accepted the figure of $100. Of course we accept full responsibility for it but I want it to be known it was decided on after careful consultation.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I believe the danger which the hon. member for Hull pointed out might be obviated if we were to follow the honorarium that is fixed by the present legislation. The executive committee members are paid an honorarium of $1,000 a year. If we were to fix a flat honorarium per annum we would not run into the possible risk pointed out by the hon. member for Hull.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, it is a risk that can be averted and it will be taken care of by the corporation. I cannot go any further on the matter at the moment.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 26—Employment of staff.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if he would give us a general explanation of this clause. It closely follows the wording of the old act but I wonder if there is any different intention in subclause 1 which I do not find in the existing act. I just wondered what was the reason for its inclusion. Is there anything implicit in it that is new?

Mr. Nowlan: I think the only reason it may be a little different from the old act is this. Hon. members will remember that employees of the board of broadcast governors will be appointed by the civil service commission. If they were employed by the corporation they will continue to be employed by the corporation. It is spelled out in the first few lines to distinguish from those appointed to the board by the commission.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, could the minister explain something that has always been a mystery to me. I am inclined to become a bit mystified at times. Why is it that the servants of a crown corporation are not servants of Her Majesty?

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the hon. member does not want me to become involved in an explanation of a constitutional legal question on which I frankly could not fully satisfy the hon. member unless I had the precedents of some of the old decisions before me but there are legal and technical reasons for this and some time the hon. member and I can go down to the parliamentary library and I will endeavour to satisfy his curiosity in that respect.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before this clause passes I should like to say it is one clause which does seem to be quite satisfactory and I say that for this reason. It bears a marked contrast to the kind of legislation we considered the other day when the national capital planning commission was under discussion. The minister in this case does seem to have no intention of using a back-door method of getting rid of members of the staff he does not want and he does seem to have safeguarded the rights of the staff and I congratulate him for doing that.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 27—Agent for Her Majesty.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of questions that come to my mind on this clause. Is it a new clause? What schedule under the Financial Administration Act does the C.B.C. follow? As the hon. minister knows, there are a number of schedules in the Financial Administration Act which make a distinction between various crown companies. For instance, the Canadian National Railways have powers, in so far as administration and the expenditure of money are concerned, which the national harbours board has not. While the Canadian National Railways must come to parliament each year for an appropriation of funds, the position concerning the national harbours board is somewhat different. It also is another agency of the crown. It approves of certain expenditures and they go to the treasury board and receive concurrence there. Will the minister tell us in what schedule of the Financial Administration Act this falls and, for instance, what are the differences financially between the new crown corporation and the one which existed heretofore?

Mr. Nowlan: I did not have the category in mind, but I did have the classification. I am advised by the officials that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation falls in schedule D and, as the hon. member will recall, that is the one under which the greatest freedom is exercised in any of the crown corporations. I have that particularly in mind because a question arose with respect to insurance, whether it came under the insurance act under which crown property is insured or whether it did not. It was suggested that we should move into another category in order to get the benefit of that act, and I registered objection to the C.B.C. moving to another one because I wanted to maintain it in the highest classification of all and that, I am told, is schedule D. That is where it has been throughout the years when the hon. gentleman was responsible for administration as one of those on the treasury benches.

The other question he asked was as to the moneys. As he knows, the financial situation is this. Under the present act, under which we are operating, the minister must recommend all expenditures to treasury board and thereafter to cabinet, if it should go to cabinet, involving more than $25,000. Under this bill, if adopted, that ceiling is raised from $25,000 to $100,000, so that in the future the minister responsible for reporting for the C.B.C. will have to recommend expenditures only over $100,000. From that has been excluded any moneys to be paid for programming or program material, so that there will not be any suggestion of any influence by the government or the minister on funds for programming on program material although, of course, the C.B.C. will have to operate within the over-all budget which is provided for it by parliament.

Mr. Chevrier: The first question I asked was, is it a new section?

Mr. Nowlan: No, this actually is not a new section. There may be a slight redrafting. The hon. member understands there are some implications, perhaps, in this section on various problems which could arise, which we are anticipating in this, but essentially it is exactly the same section as heretofore. The corporation was an agency of Her Majesty and it is today.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 28.—Executive committee.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I see some danger in clause 28 where it speaks of the delegation to an executive committee of all or any of its powers. If the corporation can appoint an executive committee from amongst the directors, it can appoint a committee of part-time directors. It can take three or five part-time directors and even exclude the president, the vice-president and the third permanent director, and those part-time directors can be constituted as an executive committee and as such can be given all the powers of the corporation, if they so desire. I can understand that it is necessary at times to delegate powers to an executive or to some officers to do certain things, but I should like to caution the minister that this clause as it reads now makes it possible for five of the part-time directors to receive the delegation of all the powers of the corporation, which is somewhat dangerous. If such a thing theoretically were to take place, then five part-time directors would be serving continuously at the rate of $100 a day, as provided by the act. I therefore point out this possible danger to the minister and ask him whether that is really the intention. I cannot read the clause in any other way except that it is possible to take five of the part-time directors and delegate powers to them and they could sit continuously at the rate of $100 per day, which is certainly far beyond what I am sure the minister anticipates. Therefore, I suggest to him that he re-read this clause and study it once more very carefully in the light of the observations which I have made.

Mr. Nowlan: I would refer the hon. member to section 31 which gives the corporation power to make bylaws respecting the calling of meetings of the corporation, the conduct of business thereat, the duties and conduct of the directors, officers and employees of the corporation, and generally for the management of the affairs of the corporation. In other words, the executive committee will, if appointed—and I presume one would be appointed—be subject to the bylaws which will be passed not by two or three directors but by the directors as a whole. I can assure the hon. member that there is going to be no danger that three or four part-time members on this executive committee will be sitting here in Ottawa drawing $100 a day or anything of that kind. The whole matter will be controlled by the bylaws of the corporation which actually is what has happened in the past. They will be bylaws under which the board of governors can set up committees and delegate authority, and we have taken the provision of the existing act almost word for word.

Mr. Crestohl: Does the minister not think he could avoid it if he simply said that the executive committee should consist of at least a certain number of permanent directors and, say, only two of the part-time directors, if necessary? If it is left wide open as the clause now reads, the minister can easily see that five part-time directors could be appointed as an executive committee, which I know the minister does not intend to happen.

Mr. McIlraith: Section 9 of part I of the bill has to do with the executive committee of the board of broadcast governors consisting of three full-time members and four part-time members appointed by the board. This is not followed with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which has a board of directors of which two are full-time personnel and the rest are part-time personnel. There does seem to be some real difficulty with the clause as it now stands.

Mr. Nowlan: There is a difference there. In the section dealing with the C.B.C. we are following pretty well the existing C.B.C. legislation. Bear in mind, these are directors who are going to be responsible for the business administration. Primarily the thinking of the government in appointing this board of directors is that they will be responsible for the business administration and the details, and so on, of the financial operations primarily of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Now, my hon. friend refers to the board of broadcast governors. There you are dealing with a national body engaged in great questions of policy, shall we say, and the government wanted to make it abundantly plain that there would be a majority of non-permanent members there so as to avoid any suggestion that this was going to become a narrow, small group controlled, shall we say, by the permanent officials in Ottawa. Really, it is because of that, because of the difference in the function, that I think the board of directors who will be businessmen primarily appointed to look after the affairs of the C.B.C. can be trusted to lay down regulations and bylaws which will cover meetings of directors. The government had it spelled out in the legislation that with respect to the board of broadcast governors there ought to be a quorum consisting of non-permanent members, and so on.

Mr. McIlraith: But in the clause dealing with the executive committee of the board of broadcast governors the government spelled out therein that the three full-time members must be on that executive committee. It has not done that with the executive committee for the C.B.C. and you can see all sorts of difficulties. If the government appoints seven new directors and they come to a meeting and, because they did not get the permanent appointments, promptly appoint themselves to the executive committee, it is not a very fitting way to direct the management of this operation.

Mr. Fisher: There is a rather discomforting tenor to the minister's last remarks about the board of directors being a group of businessmen designed to see that the corporation operates efficiently. From the minister's comments I took that to be the general purpose of the group of directors. We would expect that but surely one of the main functions of the board of governors of the C.B.C. in the past has been to be an advisory group as far as programming is concerned and to put forward the point of view the minister mentioned earlier about programs being in good taste and of a good level. I am wondering whether that aspect of the work of the board of governors is going to be played down as far as the directors are concerned or are they still to have that general role?

Mr. Nowlan: They will have that general role subject, of course, to the general oversight of the board of broadcast governors with respect to programming as set forth in part I.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 29—Objects and powers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be much happier about this clause if the minister could tell us explicitly in what respects it differs from the objects and powers set out in the existing legislation. I simply have not had time to go through it and examine it in detail.

Mr. Nowlan: I have both pieces of legislation here and if the hon. gentleman wants to pursue this matter further I can tell him that the powers set forth here are contained almost entirely in the present Canadian Broadcasting Act. Of course, there has been removed from these powers the power to make regulations, and that is the essential difference between the two sections.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume there are some changes in detail and, after all, this is the clause that gives the corporation its powers to do things. It is the operative section and I really think something a little more specific than a general answer should be given to the committee with respect to this clause. We should know precisely what the changes are.

Mr. Nowlan: There is a long column of a page and a half. Subclause (a) is identical, maintain and operate broadcasting stations. I would say that subclause (b), establish, subject to the approval of the governor in council, broadcasting stations, is identical, although perhaps one or two words have been left out. In the present clause the words are "such broadcasting stations as the corporation considers necessary or desirable" and in the old act there are the words "from time to time."

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister a question about that? That would appear to me to conflict with the powers of the board of broadcast governors. Perhaps he would like to clear that up.

Mr. Nowlan: That is exactly what I said. I told the draftsmen that they had pulled a boner and they pointed out to me the fact that this whole thing is subject to part I of the act and therefore subject to the board of broadcast governors. That applies also to regulations, although they have to be approved by the governor in council.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what part II means, is it? In other words, the corporation may decide to establish a station but before it can do so it must go to the board of broadcast governors and get their approval and also the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. gentleman will look at subclause 2 of clause 29 he will see that the corporation is bound by the provisions of part I.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not being a lawyer, I must confess that I was puzzled by subclause 2.

Mr. McIlraith: Does not the essential difference in clause 29 lie in the fact that the corporation is not charged with any responsibility? The clause now reads:

(1) The corporation is established for the purpose of operating a national broadcasting service, and in particular, but without restricting the generality of the foregoing, has power to—

The powers then enumerated are largely similar to those in the present act with the exception of the power to make regulations. But the old act had a wholly different approach to the question. The act now in existence reads as follows:

The corporation shall—

I emphasize the word "shall".

—carry on a national broadcasting service within Canada and for that purpose may—

Then the section went on to enumerate the powers the corporation had for that purpose. There is a basic and fundamental difference here and I should like to get some explanation of it. The former legislation charged the corporation with a definite responsibility and gave it a duty to perform. The new legislation now before us does no such thing at all. The corporation does not need to do anything under the new legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not going to enter into a legal argument with my learned and hon. friend on that score. He may see a fundamental difference from the old act. The old act says "the corporation shall carry on a national broadcasting service within Canada and for that purpose may—". This bill says that "the corporation is established for the purpose of operating a national broadcasting service, and in particular, but without restricting the generality of the foregoing, has power to". The difference there, of course, is between may do something or has power to. There is no doubt in the world that when the new act is proclaimed the corporation created by this part will take over the functions and activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which will have been carried on up to that moment and will operate them in pursuance of clause 29.

Mr. McIlraith: But the difference is very real. It is much deeper than the minister indicates. The difference is that the act now in force compels the corporation to carry on a national broadcasting service. The new legislation does not compel it to do any such thing. It does not charge it with any such responsibility at all. It gives it the power to do a whole lot of things but it leaves out the main purpose of the whole legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: In that regard I must say I have been a little bit surprised in this debate. Very often quotations are made from the Winnipeg Free Press which is usually fairly close to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I would refer them to an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press which I received this morning. The editorial says that the bill does authorize the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to carry on a national broadcasting service and has created no difference in the broadcasting service whatsoever. Apparently there is a slight difference of opinion in this particular regard, but I am sure that we on this side of the house will accept the opinion of the Winnipeg Free Press rather than that of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McIlraith: It is not good enough to take the opinion of an editorial writer on a matter like this. I think the Free Press is a very fine newspaper and I am very glad that the minister finds time to read it, but I think he should address himself to the point. The point is very real. Under the clause in the new bill it is quite easy to get away from the main responsibility of operating a national broadcasting service. There is nothing in the legislation parliament is being asked to pass that charges the corporation directly with that responsibility, as was the case in the 1932 and 1936 legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot accept that interpretation of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Earlier, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the minister proceeded to indicate what the differences were between the objects and powers contained in the new act and those contained in the old. I will not ask him to go over them seriatim but there is one that comes to my attention, subclause (j).

Mr. Nowlan: Of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Of the present bill. Subclause (j) reads as follows: "acquire copyrights and trade-marks." On the other hand, subsection (j) of the old act reads as follows:

> Acquire copyrights in any literary, musical or artistic works, plays, songs, gramophone records, news and other matter.

Is there any reason why all of the descriptive words concerning copyrights have been dropped and the words "copyrights and trademarks" only included in the present bill?

Mr. Nowlan: There is nothing whatever that I know that I can tell the hon. member. While I am responsible and the government is, this matter was left, according to my understanding, so that the drafting would be exactly the same with respect to all these powers as contained in the old act. If these words have been omitted, as obviously they have been, there is no explanation which I can give the hon. member. I assure him it has nothing to do with intent and it is simply a matter of draftsmanship.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure it had not anything to do with intent, but do the words "copyright and trade mark" cover all the words I have enumerated earlier in the old act?

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member, being a very good lawyer with a wide experience, would know that when you start enumerating matters and you leave one out that old rule of exclusio unis applies. This phraseology is much better because we simply have the general statement "copyright and trade marks". The old act referred to copyright and trade marks for gramophone records and so on, so I would say, with all due respect, this is probably better draftsmanship than the other one. The hon. member knows from his legal experience that it might be argued that something that did not fall within the definition of gramophone records could be excluded.

Mr. Chevrier: Dealing with (m), is there any significance in the fact that under the new bill one of the powers given is to secure broadcasting stations, either by lease or otherwise, whereas under the old act it was to acquire private stations. Is there a distinction to be made between private stations and broadcasting stations?

Mr. Nowlan: I did not catch the reference.

Mr. Chevrier: It is subclause (m).

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member says that in one case it refers to private stations?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, and in the other to broadcasting stations. I was asking whether there is any distinction to be made between the two?

Mr. Nowlan: No.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 30—Acquisition and disposition of property.

Mr. Crestohl: This clause says that the corporation may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire real property. Would the words "otherwise acquire" include the right of expropriation, once the corporation is an agent of Her Majesty?

Mr. Nowlan: If the hon. member will look forward to the next page, clause 32, he will find spelled out there the power of expropriation, and therefore expropriation would be governed by that clause rather than by clause 30. Of course, clause 30 deals only with the acquisition of property by the C.B.C., and if it uses that property to establish a radio station or a network it would have to apply to the board of broadcast governors before doing that.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to direct a question to the minister in connection with line 3, and ask, in the case of the leasing of real property for a period of say five years at $20,000 a year, would that be done without reference to the governor in council? Does it refer to $100,000 in one year?

Mr. Nowlan: It means when the total amount involved exceeds $100,000, whether it is for one year or five years, the corporation would have to recommend that expenditure to the minister and the minister to the treasury board. So long as the total amount submitted to the treasury board and to the cabinet is less than $100,000, it is all right.

Mr. McMillan: That is over the total length of time for which the lease is made?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister tell us how often, in the last financial year the corporation had to come to him and to the treasury board for an expenditure of more than $25,000?

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot say offhand but I can say, I think to the irritation of the gentlemen who are sitting within the sound of my voice, that when I returned after being away for a few days last month I found five submissions on my desk all involving expenditures of more than $25,000. I think that is above the average, but we did have those five at one time. Then, we have recommendations for leases; we have Toronto properties for which we have 24 different leases and some of the rentals for terms of a period of years, amounting to more than $25,000; we had a lease the other day for Winnipeg; we have leases in Montreal, and there are, shall we say, a worrying number of these submissions that come in involving substantial amounts of money.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 31 to 34, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 35—Annual budgets.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like, not that I think it will do very much good, but in order to bring the bill a little more in line with what was recommended by the Fowler commission, to move:

That section 35, subsection 2, be amended by inserting the words "and current" after the word "capital" in line 15.

The clause would then read:

Within one year after the coming into force of this act and every fifth year thereafter the corporation shall submit to the minister and the Minister of Finance for submission to the governor in council a five-year capital and current program proposed by the corporation together with a forecast of the effect of the program on the corporation's operating requirements.

Mr. Nowlan: This was a matter of policy which was decided upon by the government. It was decided that with the expenditures for the C.B.C. running to $60 million and $70 million, according to the Fowler commission, within a year or two that these moneys should be reported and passed upon by parliament. This does not mean there will be any different procedure than there has been heretofore. There will be a vote towards the operating deficit of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and that has been done for some years. The treasury board has had to approve of all these matters.

We propose to carry on the same policy with respect to the current expenditures as was carried on by our predecessors throughout the years, except a year or two when the excise tax provided sufficient moneys with which to carry on all of the operating expenses of the corporation. I believe that this is an improvement, at least it is a step in the right direction over that practice which prevailed heretofore because you get this capital budget approved by the governor in council and a forecast of the effects of that program on the corporation's operating requirements. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would, therefore, have in front of them an estimate, approved by the government of its capital program and a forecast of the effects of that on its current program, and with these two safeguards it should be relatively easy, subject to the vicissitudes of economic conditions or wars and other developments which one cannot foresee in the immediate future, for the C.B.C. to plan its program better in the future than it has been able to do in the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister would not expect that travesty on the history of the corporation to go unnoticed. The minister knows quite well that every royal commission and every parliamentary committee that has considered broadcasting, and has considered this question, has taken the view that it would be undesirable to have the C.B.C. financed by annual appropriations. He knows that this was emphatically stated by the Massey commission and a scheme of financing was laid down by the Massey commission, which was implemented by the previous government over the opposition of hon. gentlemen then sitting over here, to give the C.B.C. an assured budget for a period of five years.

The question also arose of whether there should be a television licence or whether some other method of financing should be found for television, and the government had sought to find some means of financing which would be automatic and which would not be under the day to day control of the treasury. It was decided, as I indicated last night on second reading, to earmark the excise tax. Mr. Abbott introduced a bill which was opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite but which was passed by this house and which gave, until about two years ago, to the C.B.C. sufficient revenue of an assured character which was not under the control of the government.

Regrettably over the last year or two, because of the relative decline in revenues from the excise tax and because of the growing cost of adequate television coverage for the country, it became necessary for the government of the day, a government of which I was a member, to make annual appropriations. But we did that as a pis aller, realizing that it was a bad way to do things but that an emergency had to be met. As I said before that was the principal reason that the Fowler commission was appointed, and the Fowler commission, in the most emphatic of all its recommendations, recommended that the C.B.C. should be independent financially of annual appropriations, and that it should have an assured income with a maximum and a minimum so that it could plan ahead and so that it would not be subject to the day to day control of the government.

I realize that it is not competent to anyone on this side of the house to make the kind of amendment that is embodied in any of the financial schemes outlined in the Fowler report. However, it seems to me that the amendment which I have suggested and which does not involve any expenditure but merely involves the preparation of a five-year current budget as well as a five-year capital budget, would at least give to parliament and to the public the C.B.C.'s idea of what its needs were for the five-year period; and to that limited extent, at any rate, it would be a slight amelioration of what is a thoroughly bad scheme. It is for that reason that I put forward the amendment, not because I think this amendment will make this a good provision but rather because I think it will make this provision slightly less objectionable.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) negatived: Yeas, 26; nays, 93.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 35 carry?

Mr. Fisher: As to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with regard to travesty may I say this. Despite the fact that we voted for his amendment we should like to dissociate ourselves from those remarks. But we feel that what he was trying to get at with his amendment was worth while. We should like to move that the following clause or the following phrase be inserted in clause 35, section (1) after "Minister of Finance" reading: "And in addition a further projected program for the next four years". This section (1) would then read:

(1) The minister shall annually lay before parliament a capital budget and an operating budget for the next ensuing financial year of the corporation, approved by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the minister and the Minister of Finance and in addition a further projected program for the next four years.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the motion—

Mr. Herridge: Not quite so quick, please, Mr. Chairman. I want to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur. We in this group believe that we cannot have in an organization like the C.B.C. programs operated without some long term point of view, some continuity. The Canadian broadcasting league and others, like the members of this group, would like to have seen some five-year financial program. I should like to read a paragraph contained in a press release issued by the league yesterday dealing with that question:

The league is disappointed that the bill makes the C.B.C. dependent on annual grants from parliament. The provision for a five-year capital draft program is an improvement. But it is not enough. The bill should provide a formula by which the C.B.C. would be assured of a predictable revenue for a definite period of years, thus providing a further guarantee of the C.B.C.'s independence from partisan influence.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Port Arthur does not go as far as is suggested in the representations of the Canadian broadcasting league but it is a step in that direction in order to get, shall I say, the administration in the habit of projecting its program for the next four years so that those responsible for dealing with financial aspects of policy will have that in mind and possibly see the benefits, I should say, in the future, as a result of this projected program of having the financial arrangements for a longer period of years.

I am not going to take the time of the committee further but I should like the minister to express his opinion concerning our amendment and what objection he would have to including this amendment which, I am sure, even from his point of view is a most innocent one, namely the addition of the words "and in addition a further projected program for the next four years". That is not a financial program. However, it lays the basis for financial considerations for the next four years and gives some continuity toward the development of programs and the activities of the C.B.C.

Mr. Nowlan: As I have said, the general principle which the hon. gentleman has in mind in his amendment is something with which we can all sympathize and I trust that some day we will get a levelling off so that we can project expenditure. However, I should like to call the attention of hon. members to these figures which I have in front of me now. How would you project a five-year plan when, using round figures, in 1954 the C.B.C. spent $31 million; in 1955, $40 million; in 1956, $49 million; in 1957, $62 million and this year an estimated $70 million. There is an increase of over 100 per cent in five years, and it is still going on.

I suggest that in the changing conditions of the present day, with the expansion of the microwave service and the other technical developments which may come—colour television for instance is something which may come in the relatively near future—together with the expansion of the service to the north, all these things depending on the general financial situation of the country, it cannot be expected that it will be practical to establish a five-year program. I invite the committee to consider the figures which I have read, which show an increase of over 100 per cent in five years. I wonder where the expenditure will be in another five years time.

Mr. McIlraith: Would that not be approximately the increase that the minister forecast five years ago when he talked about the increase that would be involved because of developments in the field of electronics and television?

Mr. Nowlan: Fowler, in taking this up never had such an increase in mind. Anyway that is one of the principal reasons why we cannot accept an amendment of this kind which would commit us to a long term program.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Chevrier: What the minister has just explained seems to me a good reason why we should have a program projected four or five years in advance. What is asked for here is not a detailed program in so far as the financial aspects are concerned, and surely it would be possible for the broadcasting corporation to project a program four years in advance one which, though it might not be carried out in its entirety, would yet give parliament when the budget is tabled some idea of what the corporation has in mind during that period of time. It seems to us that if this were done it would be something to which the government itself could look forward. For these reasons we on this side of the committee feel we should support the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Fisher) negatived: Yeas, 31; nays, 94.

Mr. Fisher: I mentioned earlier in connection with this question of projecting a five-year forecast that we thought it could be done without too much trouble, and the minister seemed rather sympathetic. For that reason we should like to move an amendment to clause 35, subclause 2 as follows:

That the phrase "and every fifth year thereafter" be struck out and the following be added after the word "requirements":

"This program to be extended annually in order that a five-year projection of the program and forecast shall always be before the governor in council and parliament."

This would involve nothing more than extending the forecast annually so that we might always know just what the five-year projection is, and so that there will be no build-up of suspense with regard to the C.B.C.'s planning as we move closer to the end of the fifth year of the forecast.

Mr. Herridge: I should like the minister, who seems to be looking over this way as if in sympathy with this amendment, which is slightly different from the one moved previously, whether he would tell the house whether he has any objection to this amendment as moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur, and if that should be the case, what his objection might be.

Mr. Nowlan: I have already indicated it in my reply to the previous proposed amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Fisher) negatived: Yeas, 30; nays, 94.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 36—Report to parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not propose to take much of the time of the committee in argument, because the argument has been made already over and over again during the course of the discussions on this bill. But since there is another opportunity to get the sense of the committee on this matter, I move:

That clause 36 be amended by striking out the word "minister" in lines 20 and 22 and substituting therefore the words "board of broadcast governors" in both cases.

The purpose of this amendment, of course, is to carry out to some very limited degree the recommendations of the Fowler commission to bring the corporation under the direction of the board of broadcast governors and not of the government.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) negatived: Yeas, 28; nays, 94.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, while it is quite true we have a difference with the government as to the channel through which the C.B.C. shall report to parliament for reasons that have been given in debate several times today, I do want to commend the minister for placing on the corporation the obligation to prepare and provide parliament with a report on the operations of the corporation. That is something which I think should be done with respect to all crown corporations. I hope the Prime Minister will not misunderstand my remarks if I express the wish that the Minister of National Revenue would show this clause to the Prime Minister and commend it to his attention for the next time he is amending the National Capital Act.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 37 to 42, inclusive, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the committee revert to clause 14?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 14—Non-Canadian interests.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is a little too early for the applause as yet. The committee will remember we had a discussion this afternoon on clause 14 which was stood over. The Leader of the Opposition pointed out that clause 14(b) permitted a non-Canadian citizen to acquire a licence if authorized by the board within the first six years of his tenure and afterwards he could not get one and there was some question about what would happen in the case of a transfer. I have given some consideration to this and during the dinner recess I discussed it with the officers of the Department of Justice. I am perfectly happy to leave it so a non-Canadian could get one but there is an obvious flaw in the bill as pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition. If the committee is prepared to accept it I should like to have moved an amendment striking out subclause (b) entirely and relettering subclause (c) to become (b). I believe that will meet the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon. When the bill is amended further consideration could be given to providing for non-Canadians seeking a licence. This is the quickest and simplest way to deal with it at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say a word on the suggestion made by the minister. I understand he has not formally moved the motion yet. I am very sympathetic with what the minister was trying to do in this clause as I imagine the minister would expect me to be because a person who is lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence is a person who has come here, landed as an immigrant, with the intention of remaining here and becoming a citizen. When we say we do not like the idea of a foreigner having a licence to operate a station in Canada, that is a position I believe everyone in the committee would feel a proper one to take. But in a country of immigration like this it is in a way perhaps rather difficult to say that people who have every intention of leaving permanently their former country of residence and becoming citizens of this country should be denied for at least five years the opportunity of getting a licence. I do not think, in fact, this would be any great hardship because in circumstances of that sort it is always possible to make certain legal arrangements through partnerships and things of that sort so the licensee could probably be a Canadian citizen and the other person could become an employee for the time being. Some arrangement of that sort could be worked out so I doubt if any great hardship would be worked if this were taken out.

I suppose the minister has given consideration to the other effect it will have if he does this. It will make the new legislation more restrictive than the present Canadian Broadcasting Act because that act leaves it open to any British subject to have a licence. This will mean that in the future no one who is not a Canadian citizen can have a licence. I am not trying to create any difficulties for the government but am attempting to assist the government solve a genuine difficulty. The other point that was raised was also quite serious. If we were going to leave it in I had intended to suggest we add something like this—and this is just a suggestion —to the clause, that after the words "six years" and before the word "or" the following words be added: "But such licence shall automatically be revoked if the licensee having so resided for six years has not become a Canadian citizen."

It seemed to me that to give a licence to someone because he could not legally become a Canadian citizen and then to allow him to go on without becoming a Canadian citizen and retaining his licence would be something we would not want to have happen. As far as we are concerned I believe we would take the view that if the minister thinks this is the best thing to do for the time being we would have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is probably the best thing to do. I have an open mind on the question. I have been so advised by the officials tonight, having in mind that we could carefully consider this when the committee meets during the next session of parliament. If it meets with the general approval of this committee I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to move an amendment to this clause which will result in taking out subclause (b) and relettering (c) to become (b).

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That section 14 be amended by deleting clause (b) and that clause (c) be relettered as clause (b).

Amendment (Mrs. Fairclough) agreed to.

Clause 14, as amended, agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Fisher: One question; the minister said that either on his estimates or before the end of this debate he might be able to give us some indication whether paragraph (6) of clause 3 precludes the present members of the C.B.C. board of governors from becoming members of the board of broadcast governors. Is he in a position to tell us that now?

Mr. Nowlan: I am advised it is not possible because one comes into operation and the other goes out of operation, and therefore you cannot be a member of both boards at the same time.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Mr. McIlraith: Next sitting.

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave, now.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent, now?

Mr. Nowlan moved the third reading of the bill.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I have a very few observations I should like to make before the bill passes if the minister does not wish to speak.

Mr. Nowlan: No, I think the minister has spoken enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to trespass on the time of the house very long but I was very grateful to the minister for establishing a precedent in the committee, a precedent which I am going to try to follow by keeping within the rules, if I can, as Your Honour interprets them.

The minister quoted from the Winnipeg Free Press, and he commended an editorial to us on this side of the house. I would like to make as my own views, certain views, which are expressed in an editorial of the Ottawa Journal today. I feel I would be saving the time of the house by reading the editorial instead of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. gentlemen would rather have me put it in my own words I would be glad to do so, but I am afraid I would not be nearly as concise as the editor of the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Nowlan: Read it, by all means.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does seem to me that perhaps many of the hon. members on the other side of the house would rather hear the editor of the Ottawa Journal than hear me. That is generally the view they take, at any rate.

Mr. Grafftey: Never.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the editorial relates to the matter now before the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave of the house to read this editorial?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pallett: Read it quickly.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been suggested by some of the newer members of the house that I should read this editorial quickly. I have a long acquaintance with, and great respect for, the editors of the Ottawa Journal and they do not write to be read quickly; they write to be read at leisure, with the full enjoyment of their sentiments and I would not wish to do less than justice, in so far as it is possible for me at all, to the sentiments expressed in this editorial.

The editorial is entitled:

C.B.C. and Parliament; Too Fast, Too Uncertain. Mr. Nowlan, as the responsible minister—

That, of course, is not quite correct. I do not mean to suggest that he is not a responsible minister, but in this context I always described the relationship of the minister and his connection with the C.B.C. as a drain pipe.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, unanimous consent was given to the reading of this editorial so that it would shut the hon. member up. Since he is going to interpolate all the way through, I would suggest that he make his speech and throw the editorial away.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister is right, sir, and I will refrain from any interpolations. I continue with the editorial:

Mr. Nowlan, as the responsible minister, says that when the broadcasting act is passed "the C.B.C. will find itself in a stronger position than ever before". Why? Because, he says, it will be relieved of the friction-causing duty of regulation of private stations which will be taken over by the new board of broadcasting governors.

But, says Mr. Pearson, the new legislation will weaken the position of the C.B.C. and could lead to two systems of broadcasting, one private and one public, with the C.B.C. given no special position and presenting the danger that the B.B.G. might give more attention to private broadcasters than to the national system.

Mr. Nowlan speaks of the B.B.G. as "the overriding agency which is going to lay down the regulations and to enforce them". This sounds like no milk-and-water board of amiable gentlemen prepared to let the C.B.C. do pretty well as it likes. It sounds like a board of extensive power, competent to interfere with minute details of C.B.C. operations.

Mr. Pearson fears, and we think with reason, that the 15-man board of broadcast governors and the 11-man board of C.B.C. directors will get in each other's way to the detriment of the national service.

None will doubt the good intentions of the government—

This is a terrible temptation!

None will doubt the good intentions of the government or even take lightly Mr. Nowlan's contention that a fundamental problem—the allocation of authority over broadcasting—has been solved. But in spite of the minister's reassurances, the text of the bill leaves unanswered the question whether the C.B.C. is to have authority and freedom to maintain a good national service.

The time for further discussion is short. But if the legislation is passed without a full answer to that question parliament—and that means all parties—will not have done its job.

Well, sir, we have not had that answer. We on this side of the house do not want this bill to pass and it is our intention to vote against third reading.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to explain that we are going to vote for the bill for reasons we have indicated earlier. I may sum this up in essence by saying that we feel matters cannot be further delayed. We accept the assurance of the minister that a committee of the house at the next session will deal with a review of the act and have some sort of meeting or liaison with the board of broadcast governors. We support the legislation. Some of our misgivings have been allayed by the candid way in which the minister spoke and met some of our amendments suggesting changes with sympathy. We are going to be optimistic about the eventual outcome of this bill.

I want to enter, if I may, a few remarks by a Mr. Finlay MacDonald who was once general manager of the Canadian association of radio and television broadcasters. This is from an article entitled:

Will The Conservatives "Bell" the C.B.C.?

This article appeared in the Atlantic Advocate of January, 1958. The particular paragraph in this article that interests me has little or nothing to do with the bill but it indicates the hopes that we have:

It is now most interesting to observe the change in a group of men going from opposition to government. The fire of their criticism has been replaced by the studied, defensive consideration of their replies. Where before, they represented the grievances of the individual citizen, they must now be responsive to those issues of interest to the larger segments. What else would we expect?

I would say that we expect that the very best intentions which have been expressed by the minister will come to pass and that our dealings with the board of broadcast governors next session when they come before the select committee will be harmonious. I also trust that we will discover that everything has turned out for the best under this not quite the best of all possible bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we have had a rather hectic day today. Perhaps hon. members would wish to call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: The business for tomorrow will be consideration of the estimates of the following departments. First we shall take the Department of National Revenue—

An hon. Member: No rest for the minister.

Mr. Green: He has done so well today, we are going to put him up to bat tomorrow. Then we shall take the departments of citizenship and immigration, trade and commerce, post office and transport.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader whether that will be the order for Thursday, Friday and Saturday?

Mr. Green: No. I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member that information this evening.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that, pursuant to the order made this morning, the activities of the Clerk and of the translation department under the Secretary of State have been such that sessional paper 214, the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan, is available in French.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on August 4.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WINNIPEG—INQUIRY RESPECTING GRANTS TO SEPARATE SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, Le Droit carries a story datelined Winnipeg in its issue of August 26 to the effect that the defence department has ceased to pay a subsidy or grant in lieu of taxes to parochial or separate schools in Winnipeg, where some 100 children of members of the armed forces professing the Catholic faith have been in the habit of attending such schools. The article suggests that because of this the children may have to attend other schools.

The question I would like to ask the minister is this. Is this an accurate story, and would the minister comment on the article which I have sent to him together with a copy of my question?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I am informed that the Department of National Defence has not been paying a subsidy or grant in lieu of taxes to parochial or separate schools in the Winnipeg area. Until this year the municipality of St. James, in which is situated the R.C.A.F. station at Stevenson field, has not accepted the municipal grant in lieu of taxes from the federal government. Consequently my department has been paying non-resident school fees for the education of dependants of servicemen at this station. This year the municipality has accepted this grant, including that portion covering education.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. I have forgotten the expression the minister used, but have those subsidies ceased now?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He said there were not any.

Mr. Chevrier: Have those school fees ceased to be paid?

Mr. Pearkes: Non-resident school fees have been paid in the past, but this year the municipality of St. James accepted the full grant in lieu of taxes; therefore that portion of the grant which covers educational fees is paid to the municipality of St. James in which is located the R.C.A.F. station.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—REPORTED INCREASE IN CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister comment on the press report of this morning that Canada will propose at the coming commonwealth conference a 50 per cent increase in our contribution under the Colombo plan? If this is the policy of the government, can the Prime Minister say whether a supplementary estimate will be brought in this session?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as that article is concerned it is purely conjecture. The decisions as to what will be discussed at that conference are naturally in a state of fluidity. Various matters and phases of these matters receive constant consideration. I can go no further than to say that the article to which the hon. gentleman has made reference deals with a matter in respect of which there has been no final decision.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR HELP FOR DIABETICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I have been told that the general manager of the Diabetics Auxiliary, Mr. Beauchamp, has travelled on foot from Quebec to Ottawa, a distance of approximately 250 miles, to put the case of all those unfortunate people afflicted with diabetes in this country before the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Would the minister be so kind as to tell the house if he has given any consideration whatever to the request for assistance made by Mr. Beauchamp? Or is it that such a request should first be endorsed by the Quebec provincial minister of health to be considered in my province?

I would be very much interested to find out if these unfortunate people may rely on immediate assistance from the federal government, since there are several hundreds of them in my constituency.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I apologize for not being able to reply to the hon. member in French. I appreciate his having given me a copy of this question just as I came into the house. I did meet Mr. Beauchamp, and I would point out that I am sympathetic, the department is sympathetic and the government is sympathetic to all people suffering from all classes of diseases. I would also point out that a project of the nature suggested by Mr. Beauchamp would have to come to us through the province.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF RECEIPT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour is now in a position to answer the question I asked him a day or two ago.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I intended to rise earlier and reply to the question. Under section 90 of the act, relating to the unemployment insurance advisory committee, the report must be tabled within 30 days after it has been submitted to the governor in council. It was submitted to the governor in council on July 31 and was tabled on August 20.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, am I correct in saying that the minister had this report before his estimates were considered in the house?

Mr. Starr: That is right.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Finance when the return of correspondence relating to the federal-provincial tax-sharing agreements will be tabled in the house pursuant to the order of the house passed on July 28?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I will look into the mattter. My recollection is that when the order was passed I indicated that I thought probably all the correspondence had already been tabled. However, I shall be glad to look into the matter now.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF NEXT MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In view of the fact that when the federal-provincial conference was adjourned last November it was adjourned until early in 1958, has the government any definite plans yet to reconvene the conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the first part of the question is concerned I do not accept the interpretation placed by the hon. gentleman on the understanding at that time. With respect to the second portion of his question, I may say that as soon as a decision has been reached it will be communicated to the house.

HOUSING

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—TENDERS FOR DOZOIS PLAN, MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): May I ask the Minister of Public Works if Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is going to call new tenders for the first five buildings of the Dozois plan in Montreal?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I am not yet in a position to say whether or not that course will be followed. There has been some difficulty in connection with these tenders. At the moment we are waiting for further word from the committee in Montreal.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to ask the Secretary of State to look into the status of question No. 184 on the order paper. It has been there for some time, and I hope an answer may be tabled soon.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

259. General administration, $4,089,027.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Before this vote is discussed, Mr. Chairman, I presume the committee will expect a short statement from me. As the committee well knows, there are two divisions in the Department of National Revenue, customs and excise on the one hand and taxation on the other. We have now called one of the items with respect to customs and excise, and I shall speak briefly on that division at the moment. After the committee has seen fit to pass the votes in connection with that division I shall again speak briefly on the taxation division.

This division, customs and excise, administers not only the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff, the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act, exclusive of part I, but also administers many other acts with which most hon. members, I am sure, are familiar. The division administers in whole or in part, for instance, the Immigration Act, Export and Import Permits Act, the contagious diseases act, and altogether there are over 40 statutes or acts in addition to the general ones in which this division of the department has to play some part at one time or another.

In so far as the organization of the customs and excise division is concerned, there are 24 branches here at headquarters in Ottawa.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I wonder whether hon. members would lower their voices, because we cannot hear the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: Some of these, such as excise audit, investigation, drawbacks, inspection and personnel, have field offices throughout the country. Then, of course, there are the ports, the outports, vessel clearing stations, some 435 in all, which run one might say the length and breadth of this country and are situated at border crossing points, coastal and inland points, airports and so forth. Packages imported through the postal service, all alcoholic and tobacco products manufactured, are under the supervision of the officers of this division. All licensed manufacturers who have to pay either sales tax or excise tax are visited by our auditors and have their records checked and liabilities to the department determined.

I suppose the general public usually thinks of the customs officer as a man in uniform whom they see at the airport or at a particular port of entry. Of course there are also a substantial number in addition to those men who are employed by the department. If one takes the fiscal year 1953-54 as a basis of comparison to show the work that is done by this division, I would say the total number of import entries processed during the fiscal year 1957-58 increased over 1953-54 by 564,920 entries or 16.58 per cent, and the increase in revenues collected totalled $203,168,000 plus.

Mr. McIlraith: What was the year?

Mr. Nowlan: The year was 1953-54 as compared with 1957-58. That is an increase in revenue from that division of 11.7 per cent. During the same period revenue from the excise tax increased by $44 million plus or 19 per cent, and within the area of international travel the number of vehicles entering Canada carrying Canadians and Americans increased by over 4 million or 30 per cent.

It should be remembered that every person, vehicle, ship, aircraft, train, truck and automobile which crosses our borders or enters our harbours or airports is subject to customs control. Therefore as the country grows and prospers the work involved in collecting revenue and providing essential customs services increases, and of necessity the staff required to carry out these functions also increases.

At this point, and because salaries, wages and overtime together account for something like 92 per cent of the total estimates for customs and excise—$35,892,047, to be exact—I should like to say a word or two about the staffing policy of this division. To put it simply, it is a policy of maintaining strict control over all personnel establishments to ensure a flexible organization that combines economy of administration with operational efficiency. Toward this end, efficient establishment control procedures have been established on the basis of extensively developed work formulas and standards, and these are used in conjunction with a system of statistical reporting and the recommendations of our organization and methods unit from studies of work procedures and practices now in effect at the various ports throughout the country. In other words, in simple language, we study the record in order to know where increases and decreases are taking place.

This makes it possible for the establishment control unit at headquarters to keep in close touch with the work situation at every port in the country, and to maintain up to date information concerning any significant change in the normal business index of a port, information which can be translated immediately into terms of proper staffing needs.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

It is from those ports which show a fairly well established decline in business that staff is transferred to fill a need elsewhere, whenever it is practicable to do so. On the other hand, positions which become vacant at a port where the trend of business is downward are also transferred, or earmarked "not to be filled" unless specifically authorized by the headquarters establishment control unit.

I presume that I will be saying something on the individual votes as they are called. I shall attempt to answer questions after we have had the questions and opinions of the members of the committee. At the moment I think this general statement is sufficient, and we will now deal with the individual matters.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to thank the minister for his statement. I must say that this is the first time he has been before the house on his estimates, though he has been minister for 14 months. While he is very familiar to the committee this week, I am sorry to say he was not before the committee last year with his estimates. I will not digress into that subject, but I am one of those who have very strong views about the action of the government last year in not bringing the estimates before the committee for approval in the usual way under the British parliamentary system, but rather choosing to deal with them by governor general's warrants in a way that I regard as wholly improper. However, I will not digress into a debate on that point here.

The minister has had 14 months in which to familiarize himself with the department. Bearing in mind the fact that he was not before the committee last year with his estimates, I hope today he will give us as full information as he can about the operation of the department. I think he will find that his department is a well manned department, and that generally speaking he has an excellent staff. I am sure that is what he found when he took office on June 21, 1957. It is sometimes rather difficult to separate the two divisions of this department, but I should like to ask the minister one or two rather general questions. I think perhaps this is the point at which to do so.

I am one of those who have always held the view that the headquarters of the department are quite inadequate, in relation to the important work it has to do and the volume of work it has to do and the number of members of the public who have to be interviewed. I should like to ask the minister if he cares to comment on this point, and in particular if he has taken any steps to procure more adequate housing in Ottawa for the headquarters of his staff.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no question but that the space occupied by the department is taxed to the very limit. Negotiations were going on before I became minister with respect to the acquisition of other property immediately adjoining the Connaught building, but these negotiations did not bring forth the result which the officials hoped they would. Representations have been made to the Minister of Public Works, however, and the hon. member is certainly perfectly correct when he says that additional room is required by the department and will have to be obtained within the very near future.

Mr. McIlraith: Not only is it a matter of the working efficiency of the staff being impaired as a result of the inadequacy of their quarters, but there is also the difficulty of persons coming to the department to discuss particular customs entries or items, particularly those under the excise tax, and having to carry on those discussions in a room occupied by as many as 40 or 50 persons and as close as six, eight or ten feet to other taxpayers who are discussing their problems with other officials.

I know the officials are very careful with respect to this point, and they do all they can in the circumstances; but in view of the difficulties faced by the taxpayers in these circumstances, particularly the danger of disclosing processes concerned with the manufacture of some items, disclosures which might easily arise when arguing about what item any particular entry should come under, this is a particularly difficult problem. I have in mind the danger of disclosing to a competitor information which is ordinarily regarded under our system as private information belonging only to the particular taxpayer, and as this difficulty is so great I hope the minister will continue to press the matter and that he will find a solution. I do know something about the proceedings in this regard before the minister took office, though I am not in the position of knowing anything about them since. However, I hope this very important subject will continue to receive his attention.

I have one or two specific questions which I would like to ask. Could the minister give us the comparative number of ports, outports and preventive stations for the last three years if he has those figures conveniently at hand. I would like to see if there is any material change one way or the other.

Mr. Nowlan: I will have that for the hon. member in a moment, if he will proceed.

Mr. McIlraith: At the same time I would like to ask him to give us the information which he has available up to the latest possible date covering the entries of motor vehicles from other countries. I am not referring to imported vehicles but to tourist and business vehicles being driven into the country by citizens of other countries and then being returned. I would appreciate having any statistics he could give us on that matter covering the last three years.

I would also like him to give us the information he has for the last three years, and for as recently as he has it available, concerning the amount of excise tax collected on new automobiles manufactured.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I will answer those questions a little later on.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, because I do not know under what heading I should ask these questions I should like to ask them now, and perhaps the minister would answer them at this time or on the appropriate items. Can the minister state whether there has been any increase in the activities of his appraisal staff with regard to dumping duty, and what has caused that increase? If there has been an increase, to what extent has the increase taken place? I might tell the minister I have had some dealings with that branch of his service and have found the service excellent and the officials highly co-operative and very much on their toes; but I also found the activities a little more intense than in the past, and I would appreciate it if the minister could tell us why that activity has been intensified and to what extent.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the hon. member referring to dumping duty specifically, or the valuation and appraisal work of the appraisal department?

Mr. Crestohl: Generally there seems to be an increased tempo of activity in the valuations, which of course we will discuss under the item that will come up a little later. There has been some concern expressed as to why there has been increased activity.

Mr. Nowlan: The increased activity has resulted because of investigations which have been made of importations coming in and specific inquiries referred to the department for investigation. The hon. member will know that during the early part of the war a great many of the senior members of the organization staff were absorbed in other branches of national service. At the end of the war through promotions many were absorbed elsewhere. There was a tremendous shortage of trained staff, particularly in the appraisal section. This was also caused by the great industrial development across the country and the full employment and boom that followed the war. Therefore it was some considerable time before it was possible to recruit the staff that was desirable.

As the hon. member knows, steps were taken toward that end some time ago, and when I came into office I saw that they were carried out. We have advertised, and as we shall show later in the discussion concerning the appraisal section 46 new appraisers have been authorized by the civil service commission. Some of those positions have been filled, and we are filling others as rapidly as possible to carry out the increased work load which has been put upon the department because of the development of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Crestohl: Another question, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether the minister could put my mind, at least, at ease on this question. I was apprehensive that perhaps with the advent of a new government imports were perhaps being managed administratively rather than legislatively. I had some doubt about the matter and wondered if the desire to make imports a little more difficult was responsible for the increased activity. I should like to have the minister's comment on that point.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there has been no change in administration whatsoever except, as I said, that staff vacancies have been filled. There have been an increasing number of complaints from importers and Canadian businessmen with respect to what they alleged were violations of the Customs Act. After all, in the years following the war there was a field day so far as business was concerned. There was no trouble with the Customs Act or anything else. People were ready to buy. It was only during the last two or three years that complaints started to come in and the work load increased tremendously.

As I said, the staff was not there to meet the increased work load. My predecessor had started to increase the staff to take care of it, and we have been carrying on. There has been no change whatsoever in the administrative practice, but because of the increased staff we have perhaps been able—and I hope we have—to investigate the complaints and deal with them more efficiently than was possible before, not because we are more efficient but simply because we have the increased staff.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether the operations of the United States customs simplification act and the whole question of United States administrative protection are his concern, and do they come under his jurisdiction?

Mr. Nowlan: That is a matter more for the officers of finance, but we also have communication and discuss these matters.

Mr. Pearson: If so, could the minister state if the operation of the United States customs simplification act has removed, and to what extent, the complaints we used to have about administrative protection interfering with our exports to the United States?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, while this item is before the committee I should like to bring to the minister's attention a matter which is of very great importance not only to my constituents, the majority of whom are fishermen, but to all the fishermen of Newfoundland. Coming from the maritime provinces, the minister will understand that shore fishermen are dependent entirely on a supply of bait. He will also understand what a cod jigger is. That is the particular kind of hook shore fishermen must employ to catch fish when no bait is available.

All through the history of Newfoundland, prior to confederation and since, fish hooks and jiggers of various kinds used for commercial fishing have entered the country duty free. A couple of years ago when there was no bait the people of the maritimes and Newfoundland learned about a new type of cod jigger which had been developed in Norway, and which had been tried out and found to be much more efficient in the catching of fish than the kind of jigger that is usually employed. Unfortunately this particular type of jigger is called by the Norwegians a lure. The only part of it that resembles a lure is a little piece of red plastic which is interspaced between the hook and the weight; but because of their being described as lures these jiggers have been subject to customs duty of 20 per cent plus sales tax of 10 per cent, which has served to make the cost practically prohibitive to the fishermen who require them so badly.

This may be only a matter of the interpretation of the act, or a matter of judgment on the part of the appraiser. I have an illustration of this device which I would like to pass to the minister so he will know what I am talking about. I do hope that he will take whatever steps are necessary to have this particular type of jigger reclassified so it can come into Newfoundland and the maritime provinces free of duty.

Mr. Nowlan: I shall be very glad to look into it, Mr. Chairman, to see whether it is a matter of interpretation. From sad experience I find that everybody who writes me about changing the tariffs says it is simply a matter of interpretation, and that I can wipe it out entirely. Unfortunately the Minister of Finance takes a far different view. As the committee well knows, the Minister of Finance, under the law of this country, is responsible for taxation policy. It is my unfortunate job to have to administer the act. After the long-haired boys of finance evolve their philosophical findings, then we do the work; but I shall look into this, of course, and if it is a matter of administration I do not have to tell the hon. member that my sympathies would be entirely with him and the maritime provinces.

The hon. member for Ottawa West asked about ports, outports, and so on. There are 435 ports and outports at present, and I am told there has been no significant change in the last three years. There might have been a change in one or two, but it is within that range within the last three-year period.

We have no figures giving the number of tourist cars or United States cars coming into Canada. We simply have cars coming in and, unfortunately for the purposes of the hon. member, these will include Canadians returning to Canada as well as United States residents coming in. For the calendar year 1956, 17,341,800 cars came in. That was a 30 per cent increase over 1953. In 1957, the last year for which we have the complete figures, 17,982,400 cars came in; in other words, an increase of about 500,000 motor vehicles between 1956 and 1957.

Mr. McIlraith: Has the minister any figure as to how it is running this year?

Mr. Nowlan: We have not those figures available yet.

The Leader of the Opposition asked me a question with respect to the customs simplification practices of the United States government. I am advised that this has helped materially in alleviating difficulties between Canadian exporters and United States importers. Outside the scope of the act, in furtherance of the United States government's desire to help they sent to Ottawa a man specially delegated to meet Canadian exporters and try to deal with their problems and simplify them. That gentleman and his staff have done a tremendous job here, and have helped to solve any problems brought to his attention, that could be solved. Therefore the situation is much better than it was in the period to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Carter: May I just thank the minister for his very fine reply to the problem I put before him. May I just inform him of one point which I forgot to mention when I was on my feet. This particular jigger is most efficient when used in conjunction with a special white line. The white line and the jigger itself comprise a single unit, and since I understand it is government policy that all fishing equipment be duty free I suggest that the line and the jigger be taken into consideration when he is dealing with this problem.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I had better go down and have you give me a demonstration of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to support what has been said by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, and say very briefly that we count on the minister, not as the Minister of National Revenue but as a minister from the part of the country where these things are understood perhaps better than they are in Eglinton, to keep before the Minister of Finance the policy that fishermen are to be kept on a basis of equality with farmers in so far as taxation is concerned, and that all their gear should be duty free.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): I wonder whether I could ask the minister this question with respect to dumping. Since about 14 per cent of Canada's oil imports come from the United States as finished products, and after the Suez build-up in the United States there was a very strong suggestion that some of those products were being dumped, can the minister say whether his department is keeping a day to day check to be absolutely certain that those products are still not being dumped into Canada?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the department has received complaints on that score, as the hon. member has said. Those complaints have been and are being investigated. I can assure the hon. member that the department will continue its investigation of any specific matters that are brought before it.

Mr. Fisher: I want to speak at some length on a fairly complicated matter that has been before the house a number of times, namely the Premium Iron Ore case. I believe the former member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to stop the hon. member—of course I could not—but if it is the same Premium Iron Ore case of which I have heard on numerous and divers occasions, it is really a matter of taxation rather than one of customs and excise. They are two separate divisions with two separate executive officers and deputy ministers, and the practice has been to deal with them separately. As I intimated when I spoke first, I spoke then only on customs and excise. When this committee gets through with this division we will immediately go into taxation, and I suggest that the hon.

member defer his remarks to that time unless for some reason he cannot be here.

Mr. Fisher: I can be here.

Mr. Houck: Mr. Chairman, I have not any questions to ask the minister, but I think as the representative of the riding where we probably have more customs and immigration officials than any other ports in Canada I should say something on their behalf.

I want to congratulate the minister and through him his department for the splendid officials we have at the port of Niagara Falls and the port of Fort Erie. At those ports we have custom men and immigration men as well. As the minister knows, probably more cars enter the port of Niagara Falls and the port of Fort Erie than enter any other port in the Dominion of Canada. I have had many people say to me after they have passed through customs, "Well, we worried about going through customs and what restrictions we would have to go through". But each and every one would say, "The officer made us feel right at home. He was not only cordial but a perfect gentleman", or a perfect lady, if it happened to be a female officer. They said, "It was a pleasure to enter Canada and realize that although they had restrictions, the restrictions were fully explained to us and after the explanation we fully agreed with them".

I wish to say to the minister that all his officers are perfect gentlemen. We in the Niagara district are proud of them, because we believe the old saying that the first impression is the lasting impression is correct. When tourists entering Canada get the impression that we are really human beings here and that they are cordially invited to tour Canada, the impression lasts. When they get this impression after crossing the bridge and passing the officials it always remains with them when they tour the province of Ontario or elsewhere in the Dominion of Canada. Then when they go back they worry because they have to get their cards back which they left with the customs officials. They always say, "We leave with a smile on our faces; the officers always leave us with the old feeling that the first impression is a lasting impression".

The only thing I would like to see the minister do—and I know he will because he is so cordial; he agrees almost 100 per cent with everything I say—is this. Because of the fine work these officials are doing in those ports—and sometimes they are doing it under extreme hardship, especially on week ends and holidays when the crowds are dense—I think they are deserving of higher salaries. I hope the minister will take this under consideration. I know they will continue to do a good job. I wish to say to the minister again that we are proud of his officials who are doing such a good job.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, as one from another part of the country I should like to say a word in support of what has just been said by my colleague from Niagara Falls. I represent a constituency in the city of Montreal, and I know that what I am about to say applies not only to Montreal and Toronto, where I have had some experience as well, but also, I am sure, to all parts of Canada. It is a fact, as the hon. member for Niagara Falls has said, that the Department of National Revenue is fortunate in the kind and calibre of men it has at the border ports from one end of Canada to the other. These are most difficult positions to fulfil, and I have no doubt that they are being fulfilled in accordance with the best traditions of the department.

I speak particularly of the officers in Montreal with whom I have come in contact from time to time. I know something of their courtesy and diplomacy. As the hon. member who spoke earlier said, it is so important for people entering Canada to have a lasting and good impression of our country, and no one can help to create that good impression more than the officers who carry out important functions at these various ports. I can speak particularly about the airport at Dorval and the airport at Malton, because in my former capacities I had occasion to use these two airports many times. I know with what seriousness and courtesy the officers of the Department of National Revenue fulfil their duties.

There are, of course, exceptions; there are bound to be. If there were not exceptions I think it would perhaps not be normal. It only goes to show that on the whole these exceptions prove the rule. I want to join the hon. member for Niagara Falls and support the demand he has made, to which I am sure the minister will give careful consideration, for the betterment financially and otherwise of the conditions under which these officers work.

Mr. Batten: Could the minister give me the following information. I should like to know the number of employees in all divisions of the Department of National Revenue in the province of Newfoundland as of March 31, 1957 and as of March 31, 1958. I should also like to have the same information for the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, my remarks have to do with a particular matter concerning the customs and excise officers of the Department of National Revenue at the harbour of Montreal. I am informed that as of July 1, 1958 these officers of the department were notified that all overtime work would be compensated for by time off, and that section 86 of the civil service regulations would be applied to them by the minister. Section 86 makes that provision. I believe it is also the common practice in all departments of the government for the officer in charge to decide whether or not to apply the rules strictly. In any event, I am not suggesting now that cash should be paid for all overtime work at all levels of government employment and that section 86 of the civil service regulations should be repealed, though I would think that in due time we should give serious consideration to the matter.

But I think the government is making a great mistake in compensating for overtime work by allowing time off in departments where it was the accepted practice to pay employees in cash for such work. Because of the nature of his duties the employee has to incur expenses for meal and transportation charges which are increasing all over the country at the present time. Yet he is not paid in cash, though it has been the practice to do so for over a decade. I think such a change in policy kills the incentive of the employee, and the minister will agree that it is not a morale booster for the staff especially at this time, in view of the fact that since June 1, 1957 the cost of the most essential items of shelter, clothing and food, has increased.

At the harbour of Montreal this change in policy affects at least 110 employees. I think the minister will agree that companies are charged for the extra work done by the officers of the department, and that these revenues come to the department. Therefore I think it is only fair that we should continue to pay the employees in cash.

The minister will appreciate that no recognized union in this country would tolerate a private industry paying its union members for overtime work by allowing time off. Instead of getting rid of this antiquated rule, why does the government now try to extend this bad system of paying employees with time off? The employees generally disapprove of such a system, and I think they are on very firm ground in criticizing the change in policy.

When the minister was on this side of the house he advocated that in our relations with our civil service employees we should try to treat them as much as possible along the same lines as private industry treats its employees. The minister is now getting far away from the common rule in private industry, where employees are paid in cash for extra work. We know the minister is administering a very important department, that he needs revenue and that his officials are always on the job to see that duties are paid to the last cent. This is sound and good administration. If the minister, for example, were claiming an amount owing by a farmer, surely he would not like to be paid with a bag of potatoes. The same rule applies to his employees. The department asks them to do extra work and instead of paying them in cash gives them a piece of paper entitling them to a holiday. Let us not forget that when we pay our employees in cash their families and their communities benefit, and their increased purchasing power helps to avoid a recession.

I should like to ask the minister two questions. Is there anywhere in his estimates an additional amount to pay for such overtime work in cash? Second, are the additional revenues earned by the extra work of his employees at the harbour of Montreal put to the account of the department? Finally, and this is not a question but more a prayer, would the minister reconsider the decision already taken, so that the policy effective in Montreal harbour for over a decade will be resumed to the satisfaction of all employees concerned?

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to support the remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, Mr. Chairman. I find myself this morning commending the minister, as I did earlier, upon the excellence of the officers in his department. My friend the hon. member for Ottawa West says, "and rightly so; they were inherited". I find myself now somewhat critical in what I am about to say because of the decision which I understand, from the remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, has been taken with reference to overtime pay in connection with certain of these employees. The hon. member who has just taken his seat can speak far more effectively and with greater authority than I can on the subject because most of these employees, or certainly a large number of them, come from his constituency. There are some who live in my own constituency of Laurier, and the minister will pardon me if I take just a moment or two to preface what I have to ask of him by stating the case.

It appears that by reason of a decision of the Department of National Revenue these port employees were notified that as of July 1, 1958 all overtime work would in future be compensated for in accordance with civil service regulations and not paid for in cash as was the case prior thereto. There are, I am informed, 110 employees at the port of Montreal who are affected by this decision. They have made representations to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont and to me. These representations are made, let me assure the minister, in a most respectful manner, asking him to reconsider the case because of the conditions which have been outlined by the previous speaker.

It has been pointed out that the decision taken by the department is one which is going to have a demoralizing effect upon the officers, in view of the hardships they will suffer because of the fact that instead of receiving cash which has been an incentive for overtime work they will now be in receipt of compensatory leave for work done. They believe that an officer who, because of his duties, has incurred extra expenses such as meals, transportation costs and the like as a result of overtime work, may have a feeling of resentment which is understandable. In their opinion this method is unfair and unjust, since the officer is being penalized when he has to work under these more difficult circumstances because he is no longer in receipt of cash but time off as compensation in lieu thereof.

It is brought to my attention also that if such compensatory time is accumulated in the winter months, it is not much use. If they are paid such overtime in cash, their families and the communities in which they live benefit; their purchasing power is increased, and they are able to meet conditions of life more advantageously than they otherwise would. It is pointed out to me that the effect of this decision is that it cuts by one-sixth, in some cases, the purchasing power they have hitherto possessed. It is my understanding also that the cost of this extra work is, in most cases, charged against the companies accommodated and therefore brings revenue to the department. They feel this is a point which should be given consideration when the question of cash for overtime is under study.

I realize that for years, as has been stated so clearly here, the practice of the administration has been to pay for overtime in cash only when the work load has been so heavy that overtime could not be compensated for in leave. In the port of Montreal, because of the circumstances which exist there, particularly in the eight months of navigation where the work load is not of an ordinary nature but of an extraordinary nature, it seems as if it were a deterrent to the increased efficiency in the national revenue staff. I know, too, that the administrator of the port has a certain discretion in a matter such as this, but I am wondering if I could not be so bold as to say that perhaps that officer has exercised his discretion in a manner which may in effect be detrimental to the efficient operation of the department.

Without saying more, I wonder if I could not prevail upon the minister and his officers, efficient as they may be, who are before him now to give consideration to this case. It is working a hardship on these 110 employees. The withdrawal of this cash allowance which has been in existence for the last 10 years, as has been stated so well by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, seems to me a bit severe. Will the minister, therefore, under the circumstances and having regard to what is happening in the port of Montreal and the overwork that exists there, not reconsider this matter so these men may be placed in the same position as they were prior to this decree coming into effect?

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I should deal now with this matter to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont and the hon. member for Laurier. They suggested that we should provide remuneration for overtime by virtue of section 86 of the Civil Service Act, and that is exactly what has been done. I am advised that section 86 of the Civil Service Act makes it mandatory that overtime should be paid for by compensatory time, if that is available, and only if it is not available should cash be paid.

Now, there was a very wide departure from the provisions of section 86. The hon. member for Laurier referred to the discretion of the port administrator. He has a discretion, and he also has a responsibility.

I am sure that hon. members will not argue that there is more business being done at that port than there was last year, but the overtime in the month of May of this year amounted to $16,000. This was twice as much as was paid a year ago. As the result of a port audit by the headquarters staff, they compared the figures and found they were going up steadily, so they suggested there should be a stricter enforcement of section 86 of the Civil Service Act. As a result, in the month of June the amount was reduced to $8,800 for overtime, although business had increased somewhat in the month of June over the month of May.

This is a problem which has caused great concern to all the officers. One wants to use discretion and one appreciates the arguments about hardship, but I do think there are some cases in which overtime has been paid. I am not speaking now of Montreal at all; I am speaking of a port of which I have knowledge much nearer my own home, where a practice has grown up of paying cash for overtime.

We find year after year more and more overtime being paid and no compensatory time being allowed. If the act is to be changed, that is a matter for the government and for parliament, I suppose; but that is the law as it stands at the moment.

I certainly will take a look at this particular case, and naturally will give it every consideration. However, I think those are the basic facts, particularly respecting that month of May in which there was such a startling increase of $5,000 more than any other month last year. That was something the auditing authorities thought should be brought forcibly to the attention of the responsible officers in Montreal, and that they should be asked to see how section 86 would work. As I said, overtime then was reduced to $8,000, and still gave compensatory time for the balance.

I was also asked about the amount in the estimates, if any, for this overtime. There is $900,000 included in the estimates this year for overtime, which is $200,000 more than it has ever been before. It can therefore be seen that this is a problem. I think all hon. members can realize the difficulties in connection with its administration. It varies with collectors, ports, personal relationships and so on. You get problems of administration which are not the easiest to deal with. However, we must do it in the best way we can. Certainly we might pay more overtime and reduce staff.

It must be remembered that in the winter time many of these people have very little to do, but nevertheless they are carried. There was a time when you paid overtime in the summer and let them go in the winter. However, that policy was found to be unsound and was changed by the preceding administration, and I think properly so. But that is the crux of the problem. Those are the facts in so far as Montreal is concerned. It is a problem which affects not every port but a good many of them in this country, and is one which is receiving careful attention.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say just one word. I thank the minister for the statement he has made, and particularly for the fact that he says he will study this matter in order to ascertain whether something cannot be done to rectify the situation. I realize the difficulty in which he finds himself with growing overtime payments. I think that tendency obtains in every department. It would seem to me that it would be a pity if, because of the increase in overtime, it should be cut altogether. I think it would be better to re-examine the position from one end of the country to the other, obtaining advice from the administrator in each locality, in order to ascertain whether or not there is a good reason for paying it.

That is why I am grateful to the minister for the decision he has made to review the matter. I would think it would be most unfortunate if, in the Montreal case, overtime were cut out altogether. I am sure the administrator will report that there is occasion for a good deal of it, or a substantial amount of it, under present circumstances.

Mr. Nowlan: We paid $8,500 in June. I have not the figure for July, but it was substantial.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope the minister will find it possible to continue the policy which existed in the past.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's asked me about employees in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. I am sorry to say that I cannot give him those figures at the moment. I am advised by the officers that we do not have them. We never keep them on a provincial basis, although the figures can be determined. I have asked the officials to get the figures, and I will supply them to the hon. member. However, I am not sure that I can do so today; in fact, I am quite sure I cannot. They are kept on the basis of ports in the nation as a whole rather than on a provincial basis.

Mr. Batten: That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. Herridge: Before making a few representations on behalf of my constituents I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy and his close attention to any complaints I have brought to his attention. I appreciate that very much indeed. Even when the minister is unable to do anything to correct the complaint, I may say that after a visit with him you feel as though you had had a visit with Santa Claus who is going to remember you at Christmas.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is quite a tax collector.

Mr. Herridge: I also want to say how much I appreciate the prompt replies I received to correspondence with the senior officials in Ottawa, and their going into detail to explain situations that are not too clear to constituents who have complained on various grounds. I also want to say this as to the staff of the minister's department in my constituency, situated at Paterson, Trail, Nelson, Waneta and Nelway. Their courtesy and attention to their duties are recognized not only by citizens of our country, but on numerous occasions I have had favourable comments by visitors from the United States who have expressed to me how much they were impressed by the courtesy of the officials of the department of customs and also of the officials of the immigration department.

Traffic between the United States and my constituency, in fact the whole of southeastern British Columbia, is increasing very rapidly in recent years. On that account, from various organizations, municipalities, representative groups, chambers of commerce and trade unions there has been a continuing demand for the stations to be kept open 24 hours a day, or for giving 24-hour service, particularly at Paterson and at Nelway. That is because of the fact that many of the men at Trail take their four days off in the United States, go on short holidays, work on a sort of 10 days on and 4 days off basis, and also take their longer holidays there. On account of the desire to attend sporting and other events in the state south of us there are hundreds and hundreds going to attend hockey games and other sporting events that are held in the United States or in the Kootenays on the Canadian side of the border.

Because of that increased traffic coming and going, and the fact that many of these people returning from the United States wish to return after midnight and vice versa, there has been this continuing demand for 24-hour service, particularly at Paterson and Melway.

I am not going to take the time of the house to go into this matter in any detail, but in order to present my argument as cogently as possible, as logically as possible and as soundly as possible from the minister's point of view, I want to quote an editorial from the Trail Times, which is a Progressive Conservative paper owned by a cousin of the Minister of Public Works. The editorial is written by the public relations officer of the West Kootenay Progressive Conservative association. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that I could not use a stronger argument on the minister in this case.

Mr. Nowlan: It is well documented.

Mr. Herridge: I want to read just briefly from the editorial. It is headed, "Keep Border Open all Night". This gentleman's name is Denis Williams, and he will be pleased to know that I brought his views to the attention of the minister. After his reply to the representations made by two hon. members who spoke previously I enter this arena with considerable hope. He writes as follows:

> Attempts to persuade the national revenue department to maintain a 24-hour service at the Paterson border crossing have been in progress for years, and Ottawa's uncompromising attitude is disclosed in the following letter we received from Kootenay West member H. W. Herridge at the week-end.

I took the opportunity to send him a letter, knowing of course that he was a supporter of the government. He goes on to say this:

> We think that Mr. Sim is missing the point. He is mistaken if he believes there is no value in keeping the Paterson customs office open just because the U.S. authorities decline to maintain a 24-hour service at Northport.
> It is not southbound traffic that we are concerned about. We are interested primarily in the plight of Canadians who want to return to Canada and cannot do so if they arrive at Paterson after midnight.
>
> At present, West Kootenaians visiting Spokane, for instance, must time their departure in the evening in order to arrive at Paterson before the witching-hour. If they fail, they are put to the inconvenience and expense of spending the night in the U.S. Similiarly, Trail citizens week-ending at Christina lake must leave Laurier by 10.30 at the latest if they expect to spend the night in their own beds.

Most of them do so in our constituency.

> Then there are dozens of travellers who head east through Osoyoos and the Sherman pass rather than endure the discomforts of the Greenwood to Rossland section of highway 3; and they too must plan their schedules to bring them to Paterson before midnight.
> The operation of Paterson on a 24-hour basis would prove of the utmost advantage to hundreds of Canadians—wanting to get back into Canada. To these people, the hours of business of the U.S. customs and immigration office at Northport are of no consequence, since no clearance is required by the U.S. authorities in order for a Canadian to leave Washington.
> Mr. Sim says that his department's observations indicate that the increase in hours beyond midnight could not be justified "by the amount of traffic operating through the port during these hours."
> Here the deputy minister is on shaky ground—

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I very seldom find the deputy minister on shaky ground.

> —to say the least. How can he possibly calculate the amount of traffic that would enter Canada after midnight when he refuses to keep the border post open? The fact is, of course, that a large number of drivers who now either spend the night in the U.S. or time their arrival at Paterson before midnight, would use all-night facilities if they existed. One cannot tell what the volume of traffic through Paterson might be once it was generally known that one could enter Canada at any hour, but we believe it would be heavy.
> The deputy minister's letter to Mr. Herridge rather indicates that departmental thinking in this issue is faulty. There is no relationship, as far as we are concerned, between the hours of operation of the Paterson post and the Northport U.S. office—except for people entering the United States. We think Mr. Sim might study the plight of those who use U.S. highways to avoid bad Canadian roads and who want to get back into Canada to suit their own convenience.

I just read that because I do think it points up some of the reasons for the argument very well, and I would urge the minister to take another look into this question because of the rapidly growing traffic between the United States and that part of British Columbia which I have the honour to represent.

Mr. Lambert: I would like to ask the minister a question in connection with information which has reached me and which

I communicated to his department some months ago, suggesting that there might be dumping in this country of certain types of glass fibre products used for the wrapping and insulation of oil and gas pipe lines in connection with their installation. I was wondering whether any evidence of such dumping had been discovered, and whether a study is being made at the present time in connection with this particular material.

Mr. Caron: There is one matter which has been discussed year after year and which I raise again this year and demand an answer thereto. With respect to almost every federal department, the city of Hull and the western part of Quebec has until now been attached to the Ottawa office, more especially in respect of the income tax department. I think since the city of Hull is known as the metropolis of western Quebec, we should have an office established on our side which would cover the provincial part for Pontiac, Gatineau, Hull and Papineau, and even includes Grenville. I say this because I think the present arrangement detracts from the importance of the city of Hull.

I have previously made complaints based upon statistics which are produced from time to time and which generally include the over-all picture of Hull and Ottawa combined, so we cannot know exactly what is going on on our side of the river. Hull is equal in importance to Sherbrooke, where there is an office; to Three Rivers, where there is also an office; and it is the centre of a large area which, as I have said, covers Pontiac, Gatineau, Papineau and the whole of the county of Hull. I think we therefore have the right to expect that we should get service on our side so that people do not have to come to Ottawa every time they must deal with the income tax department.

I know the minister cannot make a decision today or even, having in mind the presentation of his estimates, this year, but I want the minister to look over the whole question and try to satisfy the demands of the people of the western part of Quebec.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the hon. member should perhaps repeat his argument this afternoon—at least I hope it will be this afternoon—when the income tax officials are here, because I am sure his appeal will have some effect upon them. It will at least be given careful consideration; I can assure him of that.

The hon. member knows, of course, that taxation is divided into districts and it is very rarely that one would have a city which would be a district in itself. In so far as the income tax department is concerned, with which we are dealing at the moment, they do have their own collector in Hull and in so far as the customs house office is concerned, the Hull office operates in the same way as those offices in any other parts of Canada. It is true that for income tax purposes we have the various districts, and we will certainly take a look at the whole organization of those districts as soon as we have the time. I do not think I need to emphasize the fact that since June of 1957 there has not been very much time to take an over-all look at anything, but I am looking forward to the co-operation of hon. gentlemen opposite so that we will have some free time, I hope before the end of September and during the ensuing two or three months, in which we can make new surveys, which I realize are badly needed.

While I am on my feet I will deal with the question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West, who asked about fibre glass. It is true that he made representations to the department some time ago with respect to the suggestion of dumping. These matters are being investigated at this moment by departmental officers but no final report has been received; in fact no report has been received which would indicate that the fact of such dumping has been established. The matter is, however, being investigated and we will see what is shown by the final report.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has made a moving appeal for an all-night service at Paterson in his constituency. I think the only difference between that port and 500 others in this country is that he presents its claims more eloquently than perhaps the claims of some of the others could be presented. This is obviously a very difficult problem, and I can promise that consideration will be given to it. However, that consideration has to be taken in view of the over-all picture and one must realize that if we were to open up one such service then we would be under immediate pressure for others and others and yet others. Although it is perhaps true that there is no direct connection between the United States port authorities and the Canadian authorities, obviously once such a service is opened on one side pressures are immediately created on the other side, and there has to be a certain co-ordination between the services of the two countries if we are to have efficient co-operation and service regulations.

I would have thought that in the constituency from which the hon. member comes the air would be so salubrious that the people there would like to get to sleep early and stay in bed, and really I would not think very many of them would be travelling after midnight, unless perhaps it was the hon. member himself. I would advise him further that he will get a letter from me as well as a letter from the deputy minister, which he can again send to the local paper and which will perhaps be ensconced on the editorial page of that journal.

Mr. McIlraith: I had some difficulty in hearing the minister's opening remarks because of the conversation being carried on in the chamber. He may have given this information, and if he has I would ask his indulgence and request him to repeat it. If he has not, I would ask him if he would now give it. Could the minister give us the total number of customs entries for each of the last three years?

Mr. Nowlan: I gave this on a five-year basis, though I do not know if that is exactly what the hon. member needs. Taking 1953-54 as the basis of comparison, during the past fiscal year entries increased by 564,920 or 16.5 per cent. I have the figures for excise tax.

Mr. McIlraith: I would like that later. Have you any more information?

Mr. Nowlan: I can give you specific figures.

Mr. McIlraith: For what period of years?

Mr. Nowlan: I have them before me. I will go back to 1954-55. Do you want it in round figures?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Nowlan: There were 3,475,400 in round figures, we will say. In 1955-56 there were 3,824,200. In 1956-57 there were 4,099,500. In 1957-58 there were 3,922,000 exactly. Those are the import figures for those years.

Mr. McIlraith: You were going to give the excise figures.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. Starting with 1954-55 there were 335,500, again in round figures dropping the digits. Next year there were 331,300. The next year, 1956-57, there were 336,100. In 1957-58 there were 334,800.

Mr. McIlraith: I presume the excise figures would be more sensitive to changes in the excise tax legislation from year to year than would the import entries under the customs tariff, because of the fact that the customs tariff contains such a great number of items and has a relatively small number of changes compared with the excise tax legislation. Can the minister give us the number of entries, or are statistics kept concerning the number of entries, in which dumping has been found during those years?

Mr. Nowlan: I am told we do not have those figures. I am informed they are not kept.

Mr. McIlraith: Is any data kept in a statistical way concerning dumping?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think there is any information that has been accumulated in respect to this. Obviously there is information in the department with respect to dumping matters that have been brought to our attention and so on, but I understand there has been no compilation of figures with respect to that. I can try to assemble whatever there may be so it would be available on the discussion of the customs bill, whenever it comes up, but I do not think the hon. member will find it too satisfactory because it is not on a comparative basis or compiled in the way the normal statistics of the department have been.

Mr. McIlraith: What I am concerned about is this. I know that during a period of slowing up of business the number of complaints about dumping inevitably increases. I am quite aware of that. That is fairly elementary. But I am wondering if in fact there has been found any dumping increase and, if so, what information the minister has on that point. Of course there would be a tendency to increase dumping from other countries if in those other countries there was a decrease in their volume of business.

Mr. Nowlan: As I said, Mr. Chairman, we have no figures available. There have been more complaints undoubtedly, as the hon. member knows. We have regulations governing the matter of the fixing of samples and the general appraisal practices that are carried on which have pretty well eliminated what might in the past have been an increase in dumping. I do not believe there has been any substantial increase in dumping. The hon. member knows about the practices which have been developed with respect to the tariff. There have been revaluations under the Customs Act from time to time, and I have had to sign an order once in a while changing a valuation on a weighted average basis, but such occurrences have not been frequent by any means. It happens once a month or something like that.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if he feels that the present anti-dumping provisions of the law and the regulations on this matter are now working reasonably satisfactorily?

Mr. Nowlan: I would not want to say they are working satisfactorily, Mr. Chairman. As I said, we have been strengthening and enlarging the staff. If we can judge by the number of complaints received, then certainly there is some area of doubt as to whether or not they are working satisfactorily. The trouble is that all these investigations take a long while, as hon. members associated with them know, and with the gradual increase in staff we have been attempting to cope with the large backlog of complaints which require investigation. I certainly would not want to say they are working satisfactorily, yet I do not want to be too definitive about saying they are working unsatisfactorily. Therefore I would say there is an area that obviously requires much more careful investigation than we have been able to give in the past, but which we hope to give in the coming years.

Mr. Pearson: The minister feels there is really not sufficient staff to deal with the complaints that are now being made under the anti-dumping legislation?

Mr. Nowlan: We have authority for 46 additional appraisers and have taken on 40. These are well trained; they go through an intensive course of training. The salaries are better now, and we have attracted 26 university graduates to go into the field. We are also getting trained men with business and manufacturing experience. They have passed the civil service examinations and will fill out the complement, although we still have some shortage.

Mr. Pearson: So the increase in staff is not really anticipating future difficulties but is dealing with difficulties accumulated in the past?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: Is any statistical information kept on the number of complaints about dumping?

Mr. Nowlan: We will have to check on that, Mr. Chairman. Our statistical information is a little deficient in that area. The assistant deputy advises that he is not aware of such statistics being kept, but we will check and see what information can be compiled immediately on that score.

Mr. McIlraith: If that is available perhaps it could be brought in later this afternoon on another item, if we reach another one.

Mr. Nowlan: It is not available in compiled form, but by going through files and checking records probably some approach to it could be made.

Mr. McIlraith: I believe the minister will understand my concern with this problem. There is frequently a great deal of pressure put on the staff to find dumping because of some difficulty in a particular industry in Canada. At best it is an exceedingly difficult subject.

Mr. Nowlan: I have seen many examples of it.

Mr. McIlraith: It requires a great deal of skill and delicacy in handling, and for that reason I would be very glad to get any information on the point that is available. If I may make a personal reference, I remember in a time of business depression a considerable number of years ago the pressures that were put on the department to find dumping in the case of practically all imports. I quite understand the difficulty and the harm that dumping can do when there is in fact dumping, but it is a term that is difficult of definition at best, and there can be abuses under that guise. Perhaps I am more sensitive to the subject than some because of my early experience in my own professional life when an attempt was made to find dumping in cases which I think most Canadians, and gentlemen on all sides of the house, would now regard as normal imports.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not wish to take up much of the time of the committee, but in view of what has been said in the last few moments I should like to give a concrete example of why some people now and in the future would like the question of dumping looked into. The example I have in mind concerns a company called the Golden Gate Equipment Company of San Francisco, California. Apparently, this company obtains heavy equipment such as cars, diesel engines, trucks, tractors and the like from the United States government. Apparently this equipment is used in Japan and elsewhere. The equipment is refurbished and rebuilt. Sometimes it is brand new equipment which has not been used but has been declared surplus by the United States government. It is turned over to the Golden Gate Equipment Company. I would just like to read from the bulletin sent to one or two firms in this country, which has been put out by the Golden Gate Equipment Company and which is completely self-explanatory. I quote:

> The following equipment just arrived from Yokohama, Japan, and is for sale for export only—

This is in large letters.

> —to Canada, Mexico or any foreign country (not territories of the United States).
> This equipment is new or rebuilt by the government. A large portion of this equipment is still sealed and cosmolened. There is no rust or deterioration. It is our opinion that most of this equipment is new or near new. The prices are far below the market here in the United States. All prices shown are net to dealers—quantity purchases will be considered for discount.

This is the kind of thing that is going on, and it has to be checked into very carefully, Mr. Chairman. A number of companies in this country make these types of heavy equipment. I hold in my hand actual advertisements of this company. Here we have a situation where some large equipment company in the United States is getting surplus United States government equipment on the condition that it be sold only abroad, and Canada is put first on the list. The prices are far below market prices. Here is a good example of a matter which should be looked into, and why the minister will certainly need extra help.

Mr. Pearson: On this particular and very interesting illustration, may I ask the minister before he deals with it whether it is not possible under the present provisions, either section 35 or section 36, to deal with this kind of transaction, which is obviously dumping because it is a product sold in Canada at below the fair market value of the same product in the United States. Therefore it could be dealt with under the existing provisions of the law which have to do with prices below the fair market value.

Mr. Nowlan: On that score, Mr. Chairman, if there is a fair market value in the United States, then of course it would come under dumping, as the Leader of the Opposition says. But a lot of this stuff has no home market value established, and you have to fix a value for duty on it. I can assure the hon. member that this is receiving the very closest attention of the staff. We have issued instructions to the ports that any importations of this surplus United States equipment have to be held at the port, and when the appraisals have been submitted to Ottawa they are to be reappraised, if necessary, and very often they are. A large shipment came in from Japan the other day. I forget the exact figures, but we will say it came in at a value of around $25,000. It was very expensive brand new equipment from Japan. When it was reappraised the value was put at over $100,000.

This is a matter which is causing us concern. I suppose we have representations from pretty nearly every firm in Canada with respect to it, and I have written to each of them pointing out the procedure we have adopted. If we can get those values for duty established and get the machinery speeded up in that regard, then I think we can do a reasonably good job in controlling those imports.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister whether it is not true that where you cannot establish fair market value for duty or dumping duty purposes, there are provisions in the present law which enable the government to establish a valuation for that purpose; that is, when the fair market value cannot be established?

Mr. Nowlan: There are provisions in the law which are designed for that purpose, yes.

Mr. McIlraith: I should think, Mr. Chairman, that the example given by the hon. member for Oxford is one that comes squarely under section 35 of the present Customs Act. Section 35, subsection 2, admirably covers that sort of dumping. It is adequately dealt with, surely, in the present legislation, but it is hard to prejudge these things on the little information we have here.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps there is no more statistical information that we can get on dumping. I do not want to debate the subject, but there is one other matter I should like to ask the minister about. Can he tell us how many decisions of the appraisers have been appealed to the tariff board with respect to evaluation or classification?

Mr. Nowlan: I would have to get that information for the hon. gentleman; we have not it available.

Mr. Fisher: Can the minister tell us what happened to the particular cargo in question that came into Vancouver from Japan?

Mr. Nowlan: I have forgotten; I think they had to pay the duty on the valuation which was fixed. I am not quite sure about that. It is held there and if the duty is not paid then, of course, the usual machinery of the department is invoked for its disposal. I have not the information on that; it happened three or four weeks ago. I am not sure whether the matter has been concluded; probably it has not.

The hon. member for Ottawa West spoke about decisions of appraisers. I think the position is this. The decision of the appraiser is taken to the deputy minister, and the appeal takes place on the decision of the deputy minister.

Mr. McIlraith: That is what I meant; it is an appeal from the deputy minister's decision to the tariff board?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to say something on the customs section in relation to books; what amounts, I would say, to censorship of books. The Minister of Justice has suggested that he is working on a new bill which will differentiate between literature and what is not literature. I want to find out whether the minister has had any discussion with the Minister of Justice on this matter. Are there any figures that we can obtain which would indicate how much time is spent per year by the customs department on this particular chore? I would like to get an idea how many books a year on the average they have refused.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there have been numerous discussions between the Minister of Justice and myself with respect to this rather difficult and nasty task, one of which I was unaware until I came in and I found on my desk one morning a heterogeneous collection of what might be called books —at least they were books; I would not say there was any resemblance to literature— and then I realized what a minor task there was in this department. I said I would have nothing to do with it, as I thought there was a better way to deal with it. Out of that arose those discussions with the Minister of Justice.

No final decision has been taken. Various alternatives have been discussed. As the hon. member points out, the Minister of Justice can take action with respect to domestic matters in this country, but I am afraid there is still going to be responsibility on the customs authorities in so far as importation is concerned, because all imports have to go through our offices. It is impossible to give any suggestion as to the time spent on this matter. The procedure, as the hon. member knows, is for a book or a box of books, or whatever it may be, to come into a port, and the collector there, the customs officer or whoever it may be, has to examine them. If in his opinion they offend that section as being treasonable, seditious, immoral or salacious and so on, then he sends them to his next senior officer, the collector. If he still thinks they are in that category they are then sent to the head office in Ottawa and the assistant deputy minister and the executive assistant take a look at them. I do not know when they do this reading. I imagine most of these books are such that they would not want to read them at all. If they decide that they are in that category they then go to the desk of the deputy minister, and if he feels that they fall within that category they finally arrive on my desk. A decision has been made on the way up the line, and I have to concur in it or otherwise.

It is impossible to say how much time is spent. I certainly have not spent a great deal of time on it. There have not been very many crossing my desk. During the last few months I have seen very few, but that is the way the machinery works. It is unsatisfactory, and it does not guarantee any great control. The officer may happen to be busy or he may be the type of man who has a very liberal outlook. If so, he will say, "This book is all right; I will pass it". Another officer may have a different view of these things.

Perhaps I should not say this, but I can think of one example to show how it works. Last year I had submitted to me six lithographs for inclusion in this year's calendars. They were six nudes. They had been passed on by all these officers. Three of the nudes were absolutely nude and three had some sort of diaphanous wrapping around their bodies. One of the senior officers said the three which had the diaphanous clothing could be admitted because they were semi-clothed. Another officer said their posture was indecent and they should not be admitted, but the nudes could be admitted because their posture was not indecent.

That is an example of the judgment that has to be exercised and the kind of artistic skill that has to be passed upon by customs officers. I really think that we are much better qualified to deal with increasing the seasonal tariff on cabbages and cucumbers than to pass moral judgment on literature coming into the country. Heretofore any decision made could be appealed to the tariff board, but very few appeals were taken. We are all aware of one rather famous appeal a short time ago, as the result of which a certain book was admitted on a split decision of the tariff board after the department had refused it admission.

The tariff board certainly does not want to be shouldered with this task. I do not think that the tariff board is necessarily the best judge of impurity in books and literature. Perhaps I could say that the courts are not either, but someone has to take the responsibility. There will be a provision in the bill which will be before the house shortly, and I think it is a step in the right direction, providing that in future appeals from decisions of the department, if there are any, will go to a court rather than to the tariff board.

Mr. Pearson: May I say I am glad to hear the minister say that this procedure is highly unsatisfactory. I agree with him as one who has to take his own share of responsibility as a member of a government that did nothing about it over the years. I also agree with him that while it is an invidious responsibility, somebody has to take it, and that really the courts are better qualified for this purpose than officials of the customs department, who are better qualified for other duties. I am glad this change is being made.

Just before we adjourn may I return to a statement the minister made a few moments ago about a shipment from Japan, I think he said, with respect to which the valuation had to be increased from $25,000 to $100,000 for customs purposes.

Mr. Nowlan: Roughly.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask him under what provision of the law that increase in valuation was made?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not have the file in front of me, but I know exactly what the hon. member has in mind. It would be under one of the subsections of section 35; I am quite positive of that. I cannot tell him which subsection it was, but it would have to be under section 35.

Mr. Fisher: I want to thank the minister for his statement on books. It is a matter which has exercised us for some time. We have always felt that the situation was unfair to the customs department, especially when you have such inconsistencies as are evidenced by the fact that Joyce's "Ulysses", Faulkner's "Sanctuary" and Wilson's "Memoirs of Hecate County" which at one time were banned have since become rather standard works and recognized as very good literature.

How do the customs officials handle the matter of recordings? I think most members will be aware that there are a number of lewd and lascivious recordings available which can be obtained from United States sources, and I am wondering what resources the customs department has to check on this particular phase of the censorship problem.

Mr. Nowlan: The procedure with respect to recordings would be exactly the same as with respect to books.

Mr. Fisher: Are the records put on the minister's desk?

Mr. Nowlan: Since I came into office no such record has reached my desk in that way, so I would judge that the recordings are of exceptionally high quality or else none of them have come through customs.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to ask the minister a question in connection with the importation from Japan to which he referred. What would be the penalty for dumping?

Mr. Nowlan: It was not a question of dumping. It was a question of fixing the value for duty. I am speaking from memory and subject to correction, but I believe these were United States goods which had been sent to Japan by the military authorities and then re-exported from there. Therefore there would be no home market value established in Japan, and the department would have to establish the value for duty. In other words our appraisal section would have to go to work and reappraise the goods. The hon. member knows, of course, that dumping only occurs when you establish the value on the home market and the goods are being sold below that value under such conditions as affect your own producers.

Mr. McMillan: There would be no penalty at all?

Mr. Nowlan: There would be the greater duty. I think it ran into tens of thousands of dollars.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Fisher: Can the minister tell me whether the border crossing point at Pigeon River south of Fort William has enough staff at the present time to handle any increase in its work in connection with the fair valuation of United States farm produce which has been coming in and which may be affected by future legislation? I raise the point because we are an isolated market area, and there does not seem to be enough business to rate a full time Department of Agriculture inspector. I have had requests from two farm groups in the area to check on this point so that if the agricultural legislation is stiffened there will be enough staff on the customs side to check such imports.

Mr. Nowlan: I am advised that it would appear as if there is sufficient staff, but I will take a personal look at the situation and advise the hon. member.

The Chairman: Shall item 259 carry?

Mr. McMillan: May I call it one o'clock? I have two or three more questions.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to ask the minister a question about imports from the United Kingdom. This government provided that people who travel to the United Kingdom might bring in more goods duty free. I wondered if the minister had anything to report on the amount of goods that had been entered by Canadians returning from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nowlan: Does the hon. member mean as a result of the change?

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: No, there are no statistics available on that score yet because the practice has not been in vogue long enough to enable us to compile any.

Mr. McMillan: I notice that in 1956, during the consideration of this item, some members of the then opposition, notably the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Justice, referred to the fact that the item covering the operation and maintenance of ports which then stood at $24.6 million was too high. This year that item stands at something around $30 million. I believe the present Minister of National Revenue entered into that discussion, too, and said that the expenditure was too high. Some members of the opposition then referred to the fact that we had too many employees in the Department of National Revenue. They blamed the government for waste and extravagance because of the increased number of civil servants in that department. I notice that this year there is an increase in the department as a whole, but not in the customs and excise division alone. I would like to ask the minister if this increase of some 54 over the number employed by the former minister was necessary? If it was necessary, does he still think there was waste and extravagance under the previous administration in connection with that department?

Mr. Nowlan: This item does not come under this division we are discussing at all, it comes under the port administration. I shall be glad to deal with it when we come to that particular matter. It does not come under the general administration.

Item agreed to.

260. Inspection, investigation and audit services, $4,212,190.

Mr. McIlraith: I presume this is the item under which these inspectors come. Is the salary for these additional personnel provided for in these estimates or is it going to require a supplementary estimate?

Mr. Nowlan: It is provided in this estimate.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the minister tell us how many prosecutions there have been under this item?

Mr. Nowlan: What does the hon. member mean?

Mr. McIlraith: Prosecutions in the customs and excise division; I presume the place to ask about them would be this item.

Mr. Nowlan: I have the figures here for the prosecutions in connection with cigarette seizures and motor vehicles seized and sold, if those are the prosecutions to which the hon. gentleman refers. We have a series of them. These are the cigarette seizures; in 1950, 254; 1951, 558; 1952, 813; 1953, 378; 1954, 175; 1955, the same figure, 175; 1956, 134; 1957, 76. Now, the number of prosecutions does not always follow exactly the number of seizures. It is slightly less. The prosecutions, for instance, in 1950 were 242; in 1951, 535; 1952, 779; 1953, 350; 1954, 167; 1955, 165; 1956, 127; 1957, 72.

Motor vehicles seized and forfeited for the same years are as follows: 52, 184, 260, 78, 50, 26, 22 and 19.

Item agreed to.

262. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $848,400.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the minister could give us a bit more detail than is shown in the estimates covering item 262? What are the main buildings covered by this expenditure?

Mr. Nowlan: This, as the hon. member knows, covers the constructions which this department does of smaller residences and offices in places which are more or less remote and in which the Department of Public Works has not the facilities or equipment or organization to do this work. In those cases, this department goes ahead and does it on its own. The record is being looked up now. I think we have two, as I recall, on the Maine-New Brunswick border, some on the Saskatchewan and Manitoba borders with the United States and two or three in the north country. There were seven combination offices and houses that I have authorized within the last few months, which will be coming under that vote for this year. That is the type of building which goes on in so far as buildings and works are concerned.

Mr. McIlraith: While he is getting the details, perhaps the minister can tell us whether there is any one really large item in it.

Mr. Nowlan: No; there is not. If there was any one large item, it would be under public works. There are no large items here but there are a series of smaller buildings which combine office and residence. It runs usually about $25,000 and sometimes much more, depending on whether it is in the north country where building material has to be transported either by plane or under the usual conditions that prevail in that country.

Mr. Houck: As the minister well knows, truck traffic especially at the port of Fort Erie is picking up tremendously. I am wondering whether the minister or his department has been making any plans for increasing the warehouse facilities for the proper handling of trucks at the Peace bridge at Fort Erie.

Mr. Nowlan: That warehouse is under the Peace bridge authority and is not directly under the department. However, we know that there is need for additional facilities and negotiations have been going on in an attempt to get them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was rather astonished at the announcement made by the minister with regard to the Department of Public Works not having facilities in Manitoba and New Brunswick. I believe that in every province the Department of Public Works has a district architect and staff, and I should be immensely surprised if the minister's department had any district architects throughout the country. It seems to me that this is one of those cases which we used to hear criticized so frequently by the present house leader when he was sitting over here on the opposition side, namely building branches in all sorts of departments. Surely this is something that ought to be transferred completely to the Department of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

Taxation Division—

263. General administration, $3,183,910.

Mr. Regier: I wonder whether the minister can give us the approximate relationship between the number of wage earners who, at the end of the income tax year, owe money to his department as compared with the number who are entitled to a refund at the end of the year. I ask for only a rough estimate. What I should like to know is this. Are there more wage earners who have a refund coming to them than there are those who owe money and are obliged to pay a balance?

Mr. Nowlan: I will answer that question in a moment. I should like to make a general statement on the income tax division before we deal with the detailed questions and answers, and while the officers from that division are coming down to the floor.

By any standards, the taxation division operates a large-scale business. Last year collections in this division exceeded $3 billion. Individuals paid about one-half of that amount and corporations roughly the balance, with succession duties of about $65 million being thrown in as a sort of balancing item.

The detail work is tremendous. For instance, in 1957 returns were received from 5½ million taxpayers. That figure included about 100,000 corporations.

Ledger accounts are maintained for about 130,000 instalment payers and 200,000 employers remitting tax deductions. In addition, accounting action has to be taken or was taken last year in about 700,000 cases where taxpayers declare tax owing and find that additional sums have to be assessed. Really, when one considers these figures, he gets some idea of the detail work which has to be done by the officers of this division.

The division employs 6,200 regular personnel in its 29 district offices and its head office. These figures are rather interesting. In 1937 the division had 1,214 employees and it handled 439,000 returns or an average of 362 returns for each employee. In 1947, the division had gone up to 7,400 employees and it handled 3,338,000 returns or about 450 per employee. By 1957 the number of employees was reduced, came down to 6,195 with an increase in work load, with 5,428,000 returns or an average of 876 per employee as compared with 362 to which I referred 20 years previously. Of course, accounting machinery and improvements procedures accounted to a substantial degree for those changes.

I want to give full credit to the taxation officers for their continuing efforts to reduce expenditures and for the efficiency of this department. If time permitted I could give the figures. I put them on the record once before, showing the cost today of collecting $100 as compared with the cost a few years ago. A comparison is really amazing.

I have one qualification to make on this question of efficiency. I think it is fairly well known—it is no secret—that I have been very critical of the public relations of this department. I was critical when I sat on the opposite side of the house and I have been critical since I came over to this side of the house. When I say "of this department" I am speaking specifically of this division. It was my feeling and it is my feeling that in their zeal for efficiency they have tended sometimes to lose sight of the individual and I think there is a natural pressure to look upon the taxpayers en masse impersonally, not as people. Perhaps it is difficult or impossible to look upon them as persons, but I still think that something in that direction can be accomplished. As a result, as is well known to the officials here in front of me and the senior officials in the department, we have had many conferences on this score. Some very frank talking has been done and much thought has been given to this matter. I have received much co-operation from the officials and I think that real progress has been made, or at least I hope so. Reports would indicate that at least some progress has been made in that direction. I have at least told my officials that progress should be made in it and I know that they are attempting to make and I believe have made effective changes in that direction.

Having said that by way of criticism, I think this also should be said about the efficiency of the department. I do not know but I suppose every employee may feel this, whether he is an employee of a bank or what position he may hold. I do not know of any employees who have greater pressure brought to bear on them than have the employees of the Department of National Revenue generally and perhaps particularly the taxation division where they have to go out to people's homes, go to people's offices, interview them, conduct investigations and often are in a position in which, if they wanted to take advantage of it or of the opportunities which are presented to them, there could be a marked impairment of the efficiency of the department and a reflection on the character of the officers themselves. I think it is a real source of satisfaction—it certainly is to me as minister, and I am sure it must be to members of parliament and of Canadians generally—that so little has ever happened which would indicate in any way any derelection of duty or any impairment of efficiency on the part of the thousands of officials who are, as I say, conducting these onerous, responsible and unpleasant tasks, often under conditions which present difficulties in connection with efficient operation.

Canada can be very proud of the calibre of its public servants, their integrity and their efficiency. There have been minor derelictions of duty in the past, as is well known, but these have usually been publicized and have been rigorously dealt with. If, as and when any occur in the future the same thing will happen, but they are so insignificant in number and in frequency compared with the operations which are carried on that I think it is worthy of comment and should be put on the record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: As I have already indicated, we receive over 5½ million returns a year, and most of these come in just before April 30. All of them are immediately scrutinized with priority being given to refund claims, although sometimes the complaints would indicate that there is some dissatisfaction in that respect. It is, however, amazing to note what is done during that period. This work is done quickly; we employ roughly 1,500 casual or temporary employees to help carry the peak load. At the peak point, the committee will be interested to know, we process in the offices across Canada over 100,000 returns a day. In view of the fact that the staff we have to day is much smaller than it was a few years ago and that they are able to process 100,000 returns a day, there is no wonder that an occasional error may creep in and that the occasional complaint may arise as to something which has gone wrong. In addition to this processing, we have 750,000 inquiries a year, including letters coming in which have to be answered, and we handled in 1957 over 4 million refund cheques.

In the initial scrutiny of returns at the rate of 100,000 a day some errors are found, and last year of over 5 million returns which were received, 581,000 were corrected. Four hundred and twenty-three thousand of these were for tax increases, involving a little over $13 million and 158,000 were for tax decreases, involving $3.5 million, which money was refunded to the surprised taxpayers.

Of course, a percentage of these returns are earmarked for closer scrutiny and that percentage is just about 5 per cent of the total processed by the division. We have about 2,000 people who are engaged in examining these returns, of whom a little more than half have sufficient technical qualifications to make field examinations. The others are made at the desk and as a result of these reviews we received approximately $90 million in additional revenue in 1956, $78 million in 1957, and in 1958 the additional revenue received was approximately $73 million. Those are relatively small figures compared with $3 billion, but they are very substantial when looked at by themselves.

During that same period it cost $26 million to operate the department in the first year mentioned $28 million in the second year and $31 million last year, namely, 1957-58.

There are of course bound to be differences of opinion between the taxpayer and the department and that is why there has been set up an income tax appeal board to try to resolve as many of these difficulties as possible. In speaking of the income tax appeal board I know the committee would expect me, and I certainly wish to do so, to pay a tribute to the late chairman of that board, Mr. Fabio Monet, Q.C., who died so suddenly last December. His death deprives this board and the Canadian public service of a very loyal, a very conscientious and able servant. He brought to his important duties an experience and a record of courtesy and impartiality in his profession which had earned him the respect of all.

To deal for a moment with the actual estimates before us, the taxation division is asking this year for $32,481,564. This reflects an increase of $801,000, in round figures, over last year. Of this, $675,000 is required for the two salary allotments and the principal factor in this increase is the provision of approximately $450,000 to recruit 175 additional assessors in order to bring our district offices more closely up to strength again. We have the same problem as that which I mentioned this morning in dealing with customs and excise —the fact that it was impossible to get qualified assessors during the preceding years. A real drive has been made during the past year to recruit additional qualified staff and that is getting results. We believe we will have the 175 additional assessors to deal with more of this review work to which I referred a few moments ago. The balance of this increase is largely accounted for by the statutory increases in the civil service and by promotions.

In order to provide better supervision and enforcement in the administration side of the division, we have reclassified upwards of about 260 positions. However, the values of these reclassifications have been offset by the elimination of 308 full-time positions. This is the result of a three-year program which has now reached its completion. In these estimates the increase in salary costs of seasonal employees is $510,000, which increase covers higher rates of pay plus longer retention. The total payroll provided by these estimates is $28,659,010. The regular staff as of April 1 this year was 6,172 and the seasonals numbered 1,434. Last year at the same time we had a regular staff of 6,195 and 1,303 casuals.

Others types of expenditure show a net increase amounting to $162,000. The major increases are as follows:

Travelling expenses	$60,000
Telephone and telegrams	$40,000
Public forms which have to be printed	$72,000

In regard to the income tax appeal board, there is an increase of $14,220 in the appropriation for administration purposes. The increase in the volume of work which must be handled by the board is indicated by the following statistics:

	1956	1957
Number of appeals filed	373	486
Number of appeals disposed of	312	371

The number of appeals outstanding as of March 31, 1957 was 306, and the number outstanding as of March 31, 1958, 446.

In considering these main estimates of the taxation division and the income tax appeal board it is important to note that the volume of business which we are being required to transact is increasing at an accelerated rate. This is principally substantiated by the increase in the number of income tax returns being processed. The number of returns during the last four calendar years was as follows: In 1954, 4,940,000; in 1955, 5,058,000, or an increase of 2.4 per cent; in 1956, 5,243,000 or an increase of 3.4 per cent and in 1957, 5,542,000, or an increase of 5.7 per cent. That roughly gives a picture of what has been done by this division and the kind of business that has been transacted, together with an indication of the expenditures and the reasons for the increases.

Mr. McIlraith: I wish to thank the minister for his statement on this item. I was particularly pleased with his remarks as to the efficiency of the personnel and staff of the division. I am one of those who has held the view for some time that this department deserves credit. Bearing in mind the suddenness of increased taxation burdens thrown on the taxpayers during the war years at a time when personnel to perform this work were not available due to the shortage that existed in the war and immediate post-war years, I felt it did not get sufficient credit. In any system of taxation where taxes are as high as ours of necessity are in this country it is important that the public have confidence in the absolute fairness and integrity of the department charged with the responsibility of collecting taxes. If we ever reach a state where that confidence is lost or impaired then there develops a bit of a struggle between the taxpayer and the tax collector and there is a breakdown in the whole system. I believe it is important that this confidence be maintained and I believe the personnel of this branch of government deserves the confidence it holds.

While I could if I wanted make some sharp comments about some of the remarks made by the minister and some of his colleagues when they were in the opposition concerning this subject I will not do that. I do not think it is a fair thing to do and I am sure no one realizes better than the minister that some of the criticism may have been slightly excessive or misdirected.

I believe the minister is correct in emphasizing the importance of the need for good public relations for this department. It is important not only that the department perform its duties in an efficient and fair way, in a way that will lead all citizens to believe there is absolute fairness in the administration of the tax law as between individuals, but it is also important that the public feel that is being done. For that reason I can only encourage the minister in any attention he will give to appropriate improvements in the public relations of the department.

I also could not help but feel appreciative of the work that has been done in reorganizing the staff in the program announced some years ago by the minister's predecessor in office. I was quite happy to observe that the minister did not seek to give the impression that this was something he had undertaken in the last month or two and he recognized it was a three-year program and had been carried out over that period of time. I am afraid that all too often in the last few months we have had the opposite type of treatment of some of these subjects on the part of various of the minister's colleagues. I can only commend him for not falling into that error and doing something which I believe is not proper for a minister to do and that is to mislead the committee. There is nothing more I wish to add on the general administration and perhaps I should now yield the floor to other hon. members who may have questions to ask.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am going to be very brief. I should like to echo what the hon. member for Ottawa West has said. I wish to echo his words for the special reason that I am going to refer to a specific case. I do not wish to have the minister think I am suggesting anything should be done to weaken the integrity of the department. It seems to me that is even more important than any other consideration including efficiency, public relations or anything else. I believe that practically all Canadians are convinced that the income tax branch is completely honestly run and that unhappily is not true in many countries. It would obviously have been impossible for us to collect the huge amounts of revenue that have been collected in this country in the last 20 years, and especially since 1940 since Mr. Ralston's budget of that year if there had not been the feeling of confidence that there was almost 100 per cent integrity in the income tax branch. What the hon. member for Ottawa West said about that is something all of us should bear in mind, including the minister who I know does bear it in mind as the first consideration and first duty because of necessity income tax is one of those things that has to be administered in secret. I will not use the word the minister does not like but it has to be done that way. Therefore in that field more than in any other it is incumbent upon the officials to preserve integrity and if public relations may occasionally suffer thereby I think it is better that public relations should suffer than that integrity should suffer.

I wish to say a word about a matter which I have already brought to the attention of the minister. I would not be trespassing upon the time of the committee now if I had not received a little encouragement from the minister to do so. I have in my hand a letter from one of my constituents. I will not read the letter but in it the gentleman relates that he was summonsed and convicted in the courts for failure to submit an income tax return. This constituent, according to his own story which I think the tax department believes to be correct, is a married man who is crippled and who has three children. He was employed only for six months of the year. Apparently he was charged on the wrong assumption that he was a single person. This is a case of a person who did not know the law very well. I do not question that the law was properly carried out. I am sure it was. But what I question is whether there was perhaps a little excess of zeal in bringing the charge in the magistrate's court before someone had investigated all the circumstances. Even if there was a technical infraction, since this man was so clearly and obviously not liable for tax, he should not have been charged and fined $25. This man has a very small amount of income on which to support himself, his wife and his children. A fine of $25 means a great deal to this man and his family. I must say I have not had any other case like this in my recollection since I became a member of parliament, but the minister told me that, from time to time, cases of this sort arise and that he did not think there would be any harm caused to anyone in having the matter raised in the house. I think the minister hoped that by my raising it he might be able to say something which would perhaps improve public relations a little in this respect.

I do not want to suggest to any hon. member that there is any private treaty between the minister and myself. I believe the last few days will have convinced most hon. members that the minister and I are dealing at arm's length. However, cases like this do result in those dubious public relations about which the minister spoke. In bringing this up I do not wish it to be thought that I want anything but the most utter integrity in the administraion of the income tax law.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can deal directly with this point. I think the hon. member has something else he wants to attend to shortly and perhaps I should reply while he is still here. I certainly appreciate the problem he has raised. It is by no means unique. We have quite a few similar cases. As a matter of fact, I have a breakdown before me. We had something like 80,000 requests which we had to send out for the filing of income tax returns. Just to keep the records straight, I think it should be made clear here that the hon. gentleman implied that there was perhaps no justification for the filing of the return. That is true as it developed, but the situation in short was that this man was employed.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I did that I did not mean to.

Mr. Nowlan: This man was employed. He filed, or had filed for him, I presume by his employer, a T-4 slip which showed his income as something over $1,000 a year, we will not say how much, and somebody had erroneously completed a form showing him with an exemption of $1,000. Therefore, obviously, on the return filed he was taxable, and it was on that basis that he was prosecuted and fined. When he was prosecuted that is what we discovered. His employer had sent in this slip showing that he had received over $1,000 a year and was entitled to an exemption of only $1,000. In accordance with the practice of the department he was sent the first letter pointing out that he should have filed an income tax return and asking him to file one. He did not reply to that letter for reasons which apparently were good and sufficient. Anyway, the circumstances were such that he did not reply to the letter. Later on, after 30 days, the department sent him a registered letter asking him in firmer terms—you might call it a demand—that he file and warning him that if he did not file he would be prosecuted. There was no reply received to that letter and then, after a considerable lapse of time, the matter was turned over to the R.C.M.P. Prosecution was started and when the facts were developed—of course, he was guilty of not filing—he was fined $25, as the hon. member says. Obviously, on the facts and the information we received, he was not taxable because he was a married man with three dependents, when the form which was filed with the department indicated an exemption of only $1,000. That is how this happened. It is regrettable. I understand that they were probably in difficult circumstances. Usually those people who are prosecuted are in difficult circumstances. The ones who are not and who avoid income tax do it through media other than failing to file, at least most of them do. They file incorrect returns. Those who fail to file are very often those people in the most difficult circumstances possible.

As I said, we sent out 88,000 requests for filing. Then, the demands were cut in half; half of them replied. Forty-seven thousand demands had to be issued and there were 5,400 for prosecutions across Canada and we discontinued 2,200 of them. As the facts developed, 2,200 were dropped but 3,157 were taken to court. My officers feel that by a more careful analysis of this procedure in the future we can reduce the number of prosecutions started, at any rate, and bring it down to a substantially lower number than we have today.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, any diffidence that I may feel about bringing up the Premium Iron Ore case again is really dissipated by my recalling that in the house the minister told me that some of my arguments on a previous occasion could be easily corrected or, as I recall it, he said that they had no legal basis. Therefore, I am glad to be back at it again to give the minister an opportunity of clearing up once and for all any misunderstanding there may be on this case from the point of view of this department. I suppose the matter is relevant to the Minister of Finance and also to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

A complete review of the case is hardly necessary but there are several points in question that might very well be settled now.

I might begin to make this point by reading two editorials, one from the Winnipeg Tribune of Friday, July 25, 1958, and the other from the News-Chronicle of Saturday, August 2, 1958. The editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune is entitled:

These questions should be answered.

One of the questions mentioned in chats between Prime Minister Diefenbaker and President Eisenhower during the Ottawa visit was the Premium Iron Ores case. Mr. Diefenbaker confirmed this in reply to a question in the commons.

Ordinarily the court case between Cyrus Eaton of Pugwash and the United States tax collectors would be a private fight and no particular concern of Canadians or the Ottawa government. But some of the circumstances about the case make it very much the concern of Canadians.

In the first place, the tax treaty between Ottawa and Washington seems to be jeopardized by the persistence of the United States revenue department in trying to collect taxes from Premium Iron Ores.

Washington tax collectors insist that there has been no official protest from Ottawa against the raid on Premium. Members of the Ottawa government insist that protests have been lodged repeatedly during the past several years.

To end any doubt on this question the dates and nature of the series of protests should be officially tabled in the House of Commons.

In the second place, there have been persistent reports that bureaucrats in the Ottawa revenue department have encouraged their counterparts in Washington to ignore Canadian government protests and to press the suit against Premium in the United States courts. The name of J. G. McEntyre, deputy minister of national revenue, has been repeatedly mentioned in these reports.

These questions should be asked and answered:

Has McEntyre encouraged Washington tax collectors to make a dead set on a Canadian company in spite of Ottawa government policy and the tax treaty?

Is this encouragement still going on?

If so, what does the Diefenbaker government intend to do about it?

Are United States tax officials still being supplied with information from tax files by Canadian revenue officials to help them in their case against Premium?

I would like to move from this editorial to what is perhaps a stronger editorial and at this time I am not identifying myself with either of these particular views. This is from the paper in my home town of Port Arthur, the News-Chronicle of August 2, 1958. The editorial is headed:

Matter of tax policy.

The plight of Premium Iron Ores Limited, which faces a multi-million tax suit in the United States, has been set out in these columns several times in recent months. The company, operating in Canada, and subject to Canadian taxation laws, is seeking immunity from taxation by the United States government on the basis of an agreement between Canada and the United States that was designed to prevent double taxation.

The strange feature of the case is that the heads of government appear agreed that there should be no double taxation. Official protests have gone to Washington from the previous and the present Canadian governments. Prime Minister Diefenbaker mentioned the case to President Eisenhower during the latter's recent visit to Ottawa, and the president apparently agreed Premium was being subjected to double taxation. Why then, does the United States internal revenue department persist with the case?

The only logical answer is that high-ranking civil servants are handling the case in defiance of their superiors. It has been charged that Canada's deputy minister of national revenue and the acting head of United States revenue department have exchanged letters on the Premium case. If statements attributed to the Canadian civil servant are correct, then it is high time the government stepped in and cut him down to size.

What is involved in the Premium case is not routine business between Canadian and United States revenue departments. It is strictly a matter of policy. And policy should be made by the federal cabinet not by deputy ministers.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker should call an investigation into the Premium case to determine exactly what has gone on, and how many other cases there may be which have been decided by civil servants. It should be unnecessary to spell out duties and limitations of authority to such responsible people as deputy ministers, but the investigation may reveal such action is necessary.

Certainly it is desirable that this case, once dismissed by a United States court and now before the United States court of appeal, should be settled. If the settlement is anything other than dismissal, the position of American investment in Canada is in grave danger, and therefore so is the future of Canada.

These two editorials, I think, probably place the case much too strongly and they stem from part of the pressure campaign that has been organized by Mr. Eaton. I have no comments, pro or con, against Mr. Eaton's pressure campaign.

I think he may tend to practice it more because the American environment he has been in for so many years is more open to that and I think he may not be aware that this is rather unusual in Canada. But there is nothing to stop him from mounting such a campaign and when one considers that in a sense his own company and his own fortune are in jeopardy—I would not say his whole fortune, of course—one can understand his particular reason for being worked up about it. I have a letter from Mr. Eaton dated July 15, 1958 referring to the correspondence which has excited these newspapers. That correspondence can be found in sessional paper No. 204 containing a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Minister of National Revenue or any officials of the department and officials of the United States concerning Consolidated Premium Iron Ores Limited from January 1, 1948 to May 12, 1958. I want to read the pertinent part of Mr. Eaton's letter into the record. I do so in order that we may be able to see the situation in the opinion of one of the persons involved, a person who has been organizing his case in every possible way. He says:

The McEntyre correspondence discloses the shocking situation of a deputy minister making confidential commitments with a foreign government in defiance of his own Prime Minister and cabinet. Some of the letters written in 1958 are self-serving documents for the record that probably were arranged by telephone calls or conferences between the writers.

I might interpolate that Mr. Eaton seems to have a suspicious mind. He goes on:

We will produce the statements from Americans to verify every line written by Judith Robinson.

This is a reference to item No. 5 in the sessional paper which was a letter to Mr. McEntyre dated April 2, 1958 from the United States treasury department over the signature of O. Gordon Delk, acting commissioner. In this letter Mr. Delk says:

The statements made in the letter of February 15, 1958, apparently have their genesis in the same source which inspired certain articles by Judith Robinson appearing in the Toronto Telegram under dates of February 18 and 20, 1958. The article of February 20 attributes the statements in question to Mr. Harry Swanson, our director of international operations, in alleged testimony on February 14, 1958, before the committee on foreign affairs of the United States house of representatives. It is assumed, therefore, that Mr. Swanson is the individual referred to in the letter which came to your attention.

Then this letter goes on to dynamite the substance of the points made by Miss Robinson in her column. Mr. Eaton says in his letter:

We will produce the statements from Americans to verify every line written by Judith Robinson. The senate and house in Washington would promptly put an end to this clear cut case of circumvention of the tax treaty between Canada and the United States, if it were not for the fact that the U.S. revenue agents continually emphasize that Canada has never protested but that on the contrary the U.S. agents have had the continued co-operation and support of the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa.

Before I put on record my own interpretation of what we might call the McEntyre correspondence I should like to put on the record the point of view expressed by the United States ambassador to Canada on April 8, 1958. In a press release issued from the United States embassy he said:

The United States department of justice has taken an appeal to the United States court of appeal against the decision, handed down last April, of the United States tax court in the tax case against Consolidated Premium Iron Ores Limited. Because of a crowded docket, it is understood that the case will not be argued until after the court's summer recess.

I understand, by the way, that the case is going to be heard in September.

The department of justice stresses that an appeal is available as a matter of right to either litigant in such cases. If either party is still dissatisfied after the court of appeals hands down its decision, either will be able to apply for certiorari to the United States supreme court. Appropriate legal remedies are similarly open to litigants in Canada.

It is also the position of the department of justice that a reversal of the tax court decision by the court of appeals would have no effect on the standing or validity of the convention between the United States and Canada for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion in the case of income tax.

It seems to me that is the key point and that the minister might clear it up. I refer to the point made here that even if the decision does go to the United States tax authorities it is not a contravention of the double taxation treaty. The release goes on:

The tribunals of both the United States and Canada will from time to time be required to decide what the facts are in a given case and then apply pertinent provisions of the tax convention.

In all such cases it may be confidently expected that the nationals of each country will be afforded the fullest protection of the law. The United States government is vitally interested in the double taxation convention. There are no grounds for allegations that abrogations, derogation or circumvention of the convention can result from full and open consideration of the convention in the course of the Consolidated Premium Iron Ores case.

The minister is aware that as a result of this press release Mr. Merchant was taken over the hurdles by a subcommittee of the United States senate. Very severe criticism was meted out to him for issuing this statement in which he said that no matter what happened in this case the double taxation convention was not in question. If that is so, I certainly think we need a statement on the matter because I have here the brief of the respondent to the United States court of appeals and I should like to read a section of it. On page 71 there is the following:

As we have discussed, the present appeal in the Eaton and Daley cases and the Premium case is essentially a challenge to the careful, detailed factual findings and conclusions of the tax court, based upon a voluminous record of testimony and documentary evidence.

The events with which this case is concerned involved a Canadian enterprise. It concerned the production of iron ore badly needed for war purposes. The physical difficulties in exposing the ore under Steep Rock lake were enormous. The accomplishment of the engineering task, the financing and the arrangements for marketing the ore—located, as it was, in a remote wilderness—was a feat of tremendous proportions.

The transactions in these cases have at all times been subject to the taxing power of Canada, and the taxes levied by Canadian law have been and are being paid.

The effort of the internal revenue service also to subject Premium, a Canadian corporation, to United States taxes, and, as a result of a belated afterthought and an involved, elaborate, novel and devious theory, to tax United States stockholders of Premium for certain alleged profits of the Canadian corporation, is directly contrary to the treaty and to the applicable statutes, judicial decisions and ruling of the treasury department itself, and to the facts.

That, of course, is a biased point of view. It is the point of view of the respondent, but it does make the point again, as a result of what went on before in the tax court, that despite what the United States ambassador has stated, there is a question of the double taxation convention being abrogated, and I certainly think anyone reading the last protest made by this government to the United States government would also get that impression. I should like to ask the minister to make a statement that will clear up once and for all the position of his department and the government with relation to this case, to try to give us an assessment of the protests made to the United States authorities and some indication why no action has been taken to cancel this appeal.

On the matter of the strictures upon the deputy minister that have been made by the press with regard to this particular case I think that perhaps they have been most unfair to the deputy minister and in assessing this correspondence I certainly have difficulty in deciding whether to criticize or to praise him or to be able to say whether or not he has taken the right course. I know there are some statements in there that surprise me as coming from the deputy minister, but I do not know whether or not this is normal. I have somehow the feeling that this correspondence reveals that civil servants, in their relationships with other countries, tend to behave somewhat like Chinese mandarins in one of the older dynasties, where everything was very formal, and there seems to be a feeling that the emperors, in this case the politicians, do not really know what they are about.

I would appreciate it very much, and I think we could avoid a lot of this voluminous editorial writing, I might call it, that has been going on all across Canada if the minister would make a statement to clear up these questions.

Mr. Nowlan: I believe, Mr. Chairman, it would be highly inappropriate for me to make a statement in detail on a matter which is presently before the United States courts. Some of the material which the hon. member has read to us this afternoon and which, as he says, is prejudiced material, suggests that this company was doing business only in Canada. Well, of course that is the crux of the case, and that is the point that has been referred to the United States courts. If the company was only doing business in Canada, then it should not be taxed in the United States. The tax authorities in the United States say it was doing business there. They took the case before the tax courts, and they lost it. For some reason, which I regret, they saw fit to take this case farther, and so far as I can tell now, may have the intention of proceeding with it. If that is their intention, there is nothing the government of Canada can do to stop it. It is the right of their government to take matters before their courts which arise within their country. When a decision is evolved it will be a matter of very careful consideration by this government, by our officials, and then a course of action that may be necessary can be determined. Nothing more can be done in connection with this matter than has been done.

The preceding government sent an aide-memoire to the state department in Washington. Then, as the hon. member well knows, there were whispers going on, or so it was said, to disregard it; that it was not forcibly presented to the United States government. The present government sent another note to the United States government because there were many factors involved in this case as well as the tax convention itself. This government felt, for reasons which were known to the United States authorities as well as our own, that the matter should be dropped. To reinforce that, the Secretary of States for External Affairs, when he was in Washington, was instructed by this government to inform the officials of our position. I was advised that this had been done verbally to the secretary of state, the United States treasury officials and the attorney general of the United States.

When the President of the United States and the secretary of state were here a few weeks ago there were conversations with the cabinet. After the cabinet meeting, the President, the Prime Minister and I had a discussion on this matter. I am not suggesting that the hon. gentleman was misleading in any way, but it is not correct to say that the President or the secretary of state expressed an opinion on this matter. They did not say that they felt the thing was being wrongly handled or that they should not proceed with the case. I raised this, and said it was a matter of concern to the Canadian government. This time, I can vouch personally for the fact that there is no validity in the statement that this has not been communicated to the United States officials, definitely and firmly. It was done in a personal conversation in this building, in fact in room 16 right off this chamber. The President and secretary of state made inquiries about it, and said they would inquire further into it on their return to the United States to see what the situation was. Neither the President nor the secretary of state expressed any opinion whatever on the action. However, I was advised afterwards that even that afternoon they were making telephone calls with respect to it and making inquiries. That is the situation so far as the President of the United States and the secretary of state are concerned.

A great deal has been said, and a lot of misinformation has been spread around, which is not justified in any way, shape or form by the facts, about civil servants communicating information from one country to the other. If any one of the persons who made this charge ever looked at the tax convention between the United States and Canada he would find that the tax convention requires the officers of one tax department to communicate to the officers of the other tax department information which is requested about the affairs of a taxpayer whom they are investigating. In other words, if information was communicated, and I believe it was in the earlier days at least by officials of national revenue, either through Mr. McEntyre or his predecessor as deputy minister or some assessor in Toronto where the file was kept, to the United States officials, that was proper. The United States officials had a right to ask for that under the terms of the tax convention and we could not have refused to give them the information, even if we had wanted to do so. Therefore, there was certain information requested and certain information given.

There was an allegation also that Mr. McEntyre had encouraged these proceedings, but the hon. member for Port Arthur had the file produced and tabled in the house, and he says quite frankly, having read the file, he cannot see any justification for these charges which have been made against Mr. McEntyre. Neither can I. I am satisfied that nothing has been done by Mr. McEntyre or by any of the other senior officials of the department, except what has been done in compliance with the terms of the convention.

I might say the hon. member asked if any information is being given by the department now. There has been no communication with the United States authorities for a long while. I presume the reason is that they have completed their investigations and do not require any further information. At any rate, they have not asked for any more information and there have been no communications from Mr. McEntyre or any other official of the department for some time. Many allegations have been made, but I am not going to stop to discuss them all now, and I certainly do not want to discuss the case itself. I do think there has been an over-emphasis, and I express it that way, of the distortion by bureaucrats and matters such as that. Whatever the facts may be, they are presently before the courts in the United States and this government has to leave it to the United States government to decide whether they should proceed with that action. Every possible approach has been made to them on that score. If the United States government decides not to interfere but to allow the action to proceed, naturally we will await the judgment which will be given by the court in the United States. Then, having got that, we will be in a position to discuss the matter if such a discussion is necessary.

Mr. Fisher: There is one more question, Mr. Chairman. The case which is before the United States court of appeals has three aspects. First, there are two persons involved, Mr. Daly and Mr. Eaton, and then there is Consolidated Premium Iron Ores Limited. I was just wondering, if the case did go against Premium Iron Ores or against the persons, or against both, what would be the position so far as the tax treaty is concerned, in Canada's view? Surely, the minister can make a comment on that without prejudicing what may be before the courts.

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot make any more comment than I have. This matter is within the competence, shall I say of the United States taxing officials, to assess someone for taxation. Whether or not they are right in that, as is the case in this country, must be left to the courts to determine and that is what is going on in the United States at the moment. There has been an assessment made on the company and on individuals, and whether or not the facts warrant that there may be grave differences of opinion and grave doubts. There is nothing that one can do about it. The matter has to be left to the United States courts to determine. This is not a one-way street. There are scores of cases on the other side of the street where Americans assert that we are taxing them wrongly and are obliged to take recourse to the Canadian courts in order to get those matters determined. That is what the tax convention is for. It is to avoid double taxation. Of course there is no double taxation practice in one sense because, as far as Premium Iron Ore is concerned, the company was not taxed in the years in question.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I should like to submit again a suggestion that I made in 1957 to the minister's predecessor in the estimates committee. It has to do with the way in which the income tax inspectors are making their investigations. I understand that the income tax inspector would go to a taxpayer and ask him all kinds of questions in order to get information and facts to which these inspectors no doubt are entitled. The point I have in mind is to put the taxpayer on the same level as the department when a case reaches the court. What often happens is this, and it has even happened to the minister who practised for many years. When a client who was sued by the department went to his office and the minister asked his client the question "Have you discussed the matter with or were you interviewed by an inspector of the department", his client would answer "yes". Then when the client was asked the question "What did you say?" it turns out that he does not remember. The point I have in mind is this. We are not interested in winning cases. In this department we are interested—and I think the minister will agree with me—in gathering facts and in having justice done in such a way that both parties will be on the same level. We should avoid a situation in which a taxpayer may be taken by surprise in court. Hence the suggestion I make again is this. When the income tax inspector goes to interview the taxpayer, he gets the facts which the taxpayers usually gives very willingly. What is the reason why he does not, at the end of the interview, deliver to the taxpayer a copy of the statement of the facts he is presenting to the minister? This investigation has but one purpose, namely to get the facts. If the evidence is well established, a prosecution will follow. What I have in mind is that we should try, as best we can, to ensure that the taxpayer is not taken by surprise in court and that he is given every possible opportunity to defend himself. I believe the minister will see some merit in this suggestion, and I would hope that he would examine the possibility of adopting it.

Mr. Nowlan: I will have to tell the hon. member, as he has reminded me, that I sat on the other side of the desk for a good many years and I think I know something of the problems involved. I have great sympathy. I can assure him that this suggestion and others will be given most careful consideration by the administration.

Mr. McIlraith: There is one matter I want to raise, Mr. Chairman. The minister will recall that, when the estimates of this department were last before the committee of supply some 26 months ago the present Minister of National Health and Welfare who was then a member of the opposition made a rather strong criticism of the department. It was really an attack on the department. Among other things he said this, as found at page 5018 of Hansard of June 13, 1956:

> It was clear in the evidence that the collecting department of the Department of National Revenue is not clear in its own mind as to how to determine the laws that exist,—

Then coming more particularly to the point he went on to say this:

I should like to say a few words on the iniquitous net worth system of collecting taxes, and it applies to all people, not only to farmers.

Then the minister himself followed in somewhat less strong language—

Mr. Nowlan: I was hoping you would spare me that.

Mr. McIlraith: —but nonetheless forceful language. In any event I want to quote one portion of his remarks in order to make my point. I am quoting from page 5048 of Hansard of June 14, 1956:

What is the situation? A farmer is confronted with a net worth statement. He is told, "If you can prove we are wrong, we will accept it. You prove that we are wrong". How can that be done by a farmer whose records are usually somewhat incomplete—at least I am speaking for the farmers whom I know, namely those in Nova Scotia—and who does not purport to keep records over a long period of years?

The point I want to get at is this. Bearing in mind the debate on that occasion with which he is very familiar because of his own participation in it and the attention he undoubtedly gives to his present colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, what administrative changes, if any, has he made with respect to the net worth statements as they apply generally and then as they apply particularly to farmers?

Mr. Nowlan: As far as the practice as such is concerned, I do not think I can honestly say that there have been changes in the practice which ultimately may have to be carried out. Numerous discussions have been held with the head office officials, with assessors and with chief assessors and it has been decided that by following every source of information and pursuing records we could avoid the number of net worth statements which heretofore were taken. We have therefore, reduced the proportion, relative to the over-all number, of net worth statements.

We take a net worth statement only when it is obvious that the records are so incomplete and so impossible to reconcile that that would be the only way in which a fair appreciation of income could be obtained. Then having made up the net worth statement, a copy is sent to the taxpayer before an assessment is made; and he may be asked to come in and review it with the officials. Every care is taken to make sure that when that assessment is finally made on that net worth statement it is as accurate as it is possible to get it. I think that has been done. As I said, it is perhaps not a matter of administrative change. When you have to make up a net worth statement you have to make it up on the same principles. It is a matter of emphasis, one should probably say, rather than one of administrative change.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I will not press the minister on the matter. I assume he went rather far in 1956.

Mr. Nowlan: I still think it is a system which obviously has to be handled with great care by the officials.

Mr. McMillan: I know that the duties of the tax collector are not very popular ones. I want to agree with the minister that he has a very efficient and loyal staff which is noted for its integrity. I have always found the officials very reasonable to get along with here in Ottawa and in the district offices. However, I think the minister should at all times strive for better public relations. We sometimes hear complaints. As members of parliament knowing their problems I think we should help the minister in that respect. I was glad to hear the minister say what he did about net worth. That always troubled the farmers of my particular part of the country and I suspect the same applies to farmers in the minister's part of the country, because I remember in 1956 he said that some inspector had seen a lady there with a new fur coat and had immediately moved in on her husband, or something to that effect.

In connection with prescriptions for drugs, I find they will be exempt as far as income tax is concerned, and would like to know whether or not in submitting the income tax return it will be necessary for the druggist to send a copy of the prescription as well as a receipt for the drug. I think this will be of some concern to some people.

I would also like to know if the department is getting any closer to a definition of capital gains. I know that capital gains are not taxed but a lot of people do not know the difference between earnings and capital gains. In previous years the department was criticized because its estimates exceeded actual expenditures by about 3 per cent, and I am just wondering if that will be the case this year.

I had another question which I asked the minister previously, but I understood him to say it should be asked on item 260. Item 260 went by and I did not repeat it.

Mr. Nowlan: On the matter of drugs, of course drugs are not exempt as the hon. member well knows, and this rule can only be applied if the medical expenses exceed 3 per cent of the income. In other words, drugs bought on prescription will now be applied as medical expenses rather than as the specific drugs which heretofore had to be named in what was always rather a cumbersome procedure.

I am not certain myself at the moment as to what procedure will be followed. It is a matter of administration. I would think you would have to have a receipt for medical expenses, anyway, you would have to have a receipt for your doctor's bill and you would have to have a receipt for drugs, so that it would be a matter of assessment and administration. I do not think there is a rule which requires the druggist to attach a copy of the prescription.

It may be that we will find abuses of this procedure and that some such action will have to be taken, but I am sure that the druggists' profession, as in the case of the medical profession, will make sure there are no abuses and that when we see a receipt attached to an income tax return in respect of drugs that may be accepted as proof of the expenditure. Of course there may be individual cases during the years where suspicions may develop and further investigations will have to take place, but certainly this will not have to be done as a matter of practice.

Mr. Mitchell: There are one or two points I would like to bring to the attention of the minister and his officers with respect to abuses in prescription medicine already taking place. I think the minister will remember that when we discussed the bill on committee stage I spoke two or three times and suggested that a certain amount of inspection may be necessary on the part of his department to overcome such abuses. I happen to know that certain abuses are already taking place and I have just returned from the Canadian pharmaceutical association convention in Edmonton, of which association I am an officer, and I would like particularly to draw the attention of the department to what I might call the "over the counter type of preparation", which in this case is a dietary supplement for infants and children. Due to, shall we say, the integrity of the manufacturer, he is now supplying a printed prescription form to the medical practitioner and all that that practitioner has to do is to sign the form which to all intents and purposes makes it a medical prescription. This in turn is deductible for income tax purposes by the taxpayer presenting it and this particular item happens to be the largest size of the product manufactured. The patient is entitled to a receipt from the pharmacist and it can be used as a deduction for taxation purposes. In view of the fact that infants and children are involved such a prescription can be re-applied a number of times.

The point I am trying to make is that if this practice should be followed by other well-meaning Canadian pharmaceutical houses of repute this could defeat the purpose of the bill and could certainly add to the budget of the minister who brought this legislation into being. We wrote letters to the company concerned, to the minister's department and to the Canadian pharmaceutical manufacturers' association in the hope that they would warn their members that they should not continue in respect of the organizations under their control, but I am afraid that such a practice may create a good deal of abuse.

Mr. Nowlan: I should perhaps say a further word on this matter. Of course the hon. member knows that the section of the act requires the pharmacist himself to register the prescription and to have it readily available if investigation is necessary. I have said before and I repeat that we are in general prepared to accept the integrity of both the medical and druggist professions but if abuses do creep in, as apparently may be the case in some respects today, they will not go undetected because when this department starts to investigate they usually make such a complete investigation that the facts of the matter are very definitely established. If people abuse this practice I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that they will be prosecuted under the terms of the Income Tax Act as rigorously as possible, because this is something which is being done for the benefit of the people as a whole. We trust and have confidence in both professions and also in the general public, but if a few people, particularly a few professional people, attempt as a practice to take advantage of this legislation—and of course there is always an isolated example which can very often avoid detection—it will be detected, it will be investigated and it will be established and the people who are perpetrating it will be very, very sorry they ever did so.

Mr. McMillan: I hope that such abuses do not creep in. I do not know whether in professional men the minister included lawyers.

However, when prescriptions are given, for instance for narcotics, if the Department of National Revenue demands copies of such prescriptions two prescriptions would need to be issued. There would have to be a duplicate because the druggist would have to keep on record the prescription for examination by the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and he would have to send one copy to the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Nowlan: I am told by my officials that we do not ask for the second copy of the prescription.

Mr. Howard: I would like to pose two questions to the minister and, following upon his answers, to expand upon a particular case. I will have to put my first question in a general hypothetical way. I wonder if the minister could explain the attitude or the policy of the department with respect to this legislation in regard to Canadian companies which are wholly owned subsidiaries of United States companies and where the Canadian company is taking the raw material product and shipping it to its parent company in the United States for manufacture. What system is available to set a value on the unit of the raw material for income tax purposes if it is suspected that the Canadian company which is a subsidiary of a United States company is, for bookkeeping purposes, selling to the parent company at a greatly reduced rate to escape the payment of income tax. Is there any provision for that sort of thing?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not sure if there is any specific section dealing with it. There is the general provision under the law relating to companies dealing at arm's length. In the instance mentioned it would not be an arm's length transaction. The burden is very heavily on the taxpayer to establish the bona fides of any transaction entered into between two companies of that kind. I do not recall at the moment a specific section on that. There is one, of course, dealing with inadequate considerations which does not deal with United States subsidiaries specifically. I refer to section 17 of the Income Tax Act which reads as follows:

17 (1) Where a taxpayer carrying on business in Canada has purchased anything from a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length at a price in excess of the fair market value,—

You are raising the case of selling it for less money. I continue:

—the fair market value thereof shall, for the purpose of computing the taxpayer's income from the business, be deemed to have been paid or to be payable therefor.

(2) Where a taxpayer carrying on business in Canada has sold anything to a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length at a price less than the fair market value, the fair market value thereof shall, for the purpose of computing the taxpayer's income from the business, be deemed to have been received or to be receivable therefor.

Then this is a matter of assessment and valuation to determine what the fair market value would have been.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate the clarification the minister has given. I had it in the back of my mind that something of that nature did exist because I recall a case in British Columbia a few years ago where that question did arise.

Following upon that, what steps would one take if he were of the opinion that such an arrangement was being entered into to escape the payment of income tax? What material would an individual have to submit to the department to set the wheels in motion to have the matter looked into?

Mr. Nowlan: If a person interested in this were living near a district office he could go and call on the head of that office or the chief assessor and give him the facts and if the assessor or the head of the office realized that this was not obviously some prejudiced person or someone who was simply trying to make trouble but was a person who wanted to have something dealt with it could be handled from that office, he would consider the matter. Or a letter could be written to the minister, the deputy minister, the assistant deputy minister, the chief assessor or any of the officials and the matter could be investigated. I receive letters but not too frequently some of which are anonymous. I know in the case the hon. member refers to there would be no question of an anonymous letter. When I receive an anonymous letter every once in a while giving me alleged information with respect to tax evasion I simply send it over to the departmental office and an investigation is conducted. I am sure when a letter comes in from someone who signs his name and substantiates it and when it looks like a material case and not one involving $5 or $10 where the investigation costs would exceed the amount involved it is efficiently dealt with by the department.

Mr. Howard: I wonder what sort of corroborative evidence would be necessary? I have in mind a particular company to which I should like to refer later. What sort of evidence would be necessary? How would the individual, for instance, be able to determine whether the company was trying to escape the law when the information is in the hands of the Department of National Revenue and he does not have access to it? Would just a general supposition be accepted? Would that cause an investigation to be made of a particular company?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes. If information were in the files it would cause the officials to look closely at the files. There is no question but that if there were a substantial complaint made on matters which warranted an investigation an inquiry would be conducted.

The hon. member does not have to worry about not having facts to substantiate a complaint. He will find that the investigating officers of this department and the assessors will develop the facts if they are there. The only question is that of having the matter brought to the attention of the department.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I have no doubt from my personal experience that the officers of this department will leave no stone unturned. In fact, there is one way in which the minister himself could assist in a public relations job. If he could explain to the committee all the various ways that people use to attempt to dodge the payment of tax I am sure many people throughout the country would thank him very much and probably test them.

I have a particular case I should like to deal with in this fashion rather than by writing a formal letter to the minister. This question may have been brought to the attention of the departmental officials or the minister before. In dealing with it I feel it might be necessary to relate some of the past attitudes and policies of this company not as they are specifically related to the payment of taxes but as they are related to other fields and attempt to draw a parallel there.

I am making reference to the Canadian Gypsum Company in the province of Nova Scotia which, as the minister is probably well aware, is a wholly owned subsidiary of United States Gypsum. I have looked in the Financial Post survey of industrials for the last two or three years and have inquired from other sources as to whether or not there is an annual report or financial statement available from Canadian Gypsum Company to determine what their financial picture is. From the sources of information available to me I have learned of no reference to this company.

As the minister may also be well aware there has been a work stoppage in progress at this company's quarry for some ten months now. If the policies as evidenced by this company in its relationships with its employees over the past years is any indication, I am sure we can expect that company would attempt to use whatever methods it could to get out from under the responsibility of paying the necessary amount of income tax to the Canadian government.

I would point out that the work stoppage that is in effect at the moment revolves around the question of the acceptance by the company of the employees and of the union they have selected which, incidentally, is a nationally organized union and has no ties outside of Canada. The question which the company is now objecting to, which incidentally was recommended by a Nova Scotia industrial inquiry commission, is the question of union security. After this Canadian Gypsum Company installed its own company union and had signed a contract with it for a closed shop, which is the ultimate in union security, they adopted the attitude that they did not want to have anything whatsoever to do with union security.

We have also a trend on the part of this company, which attempted to dodge its responsibility of dealing with a recognized and certified union, to go so far as to use the legal technicality that the Nova Scotia quarry workers union, which is now affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress, was formerly an affiliate of the Canadian congress of labour, in dealing with this particuliar union. I raise this question only to point out that on occasions companies have used whatever means they could to overcome their obligations, whether it be to workmen or to municipalities. Therefore, we can expect they will use other dodges or other technicalities to overcome their obligations to other sections of society. I merely make reference to this union to point out that there is—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to point out to the hon. member that he cannot, by establishing a parallel between various actions of companies in their relationships with various unions, say that because they are wrong in one particular field they are necessarily wrong in another field. At the present time we are discussing the items of the Department of National Revenue. I would ask the hon. member to keep as close to the item under discussion as possible.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate your allowing me to go so far afield, Mr. Chairman. I was wondering how far I could go. I realize that probably I was out of order in that instance but I do hope that the minister or his departmental officials will undertake an investigation of this particular Canadian Gypsum Company to determine whether or not it is paying the full amount of taxes that it should pay in accordance with the law. I do hope my remarks will be sufficient—I know the people in Nova Scotia have a great deal more information with respect to this company than I have—to get the wheels in motion. I realize that the minister cannot give a specific answer at the moment with respect to this company. He may not be able to give me a specific answer at any time with regard to a particular company or a particuliar individual. If he can, I would appreciate it very much. If he would communicate the findings with respect to this company to me I would appreciate it.

Mr. Nowlan: Obviously, I cannot discuss the affairs of an individual taxpayer at any time. It is not proper to do so and it would be contrary to the act, and one accepts that.

I do not want to be construed as accepting the proposition that every firm which have labour difficulties may also have differences with the Department of National Revenue. That does not follow at all. Very often the firms which may have, shall we say, difficulty in labour relations, in wages or in something of that kind, may also be most efficient in keeping up their records and may be very, very careful in dealing with the department. In any event, all matters, of course, are considered by the department, and particularly those affecting taxpayers. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matters to which he has referred are matters which are always under the consideration of the department, and they will continue to receive the attention they deserve.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on item 263, taxation division. I also wish to put forward a suggestion whose implementation would, I am sure, be of very great service to those taxpayers in the medium income bracket.

Before the last world war, Canadians crowded into large metropolitan centres where they expected to find work more easily.

During the war our industries developed at a very rapid rate. The population of our cities and towns increased. Then a change came over the living habits of town dwellers, who sought to quit large urban centres to establish homes in the suburbs, at distances which, at times, reached 15 or 20 miles from the cities.

It followed that those fellow citizens of ours who live on the outskirts of cities must travel considerable distances in the morning and the evening, at great expense.

If that expense is a small matter on a daily basis, the fact that it is a daily occurrence makes it very heavy to bear. People travel by bus, train or private car.

Let us take the case of a working man who lives approximately 20 miles away from his place of work and who uses a car as a means of transportation. This means that he has 40 miles to travel every day. It will be understood that, only for gas, he will have to spend at least $1.00 a day. If he works 50 six-day weeks, he will spend annually, on gas alone, $300. Add to this the wear and tear of the tires, minor repairs, insurance and depreciation. A very conservative estimate—and of course in my mind the word conservative is not that which is applied to the hon. gentlemen opposite—would put that expense at $600 or $700 per annum.

In my opinion it would be only fair if, for income tax purposes, the working man could deduct all his travelling expenses to and from his place of work, whatever his means of transportation.

In fact, the Income Tax Act should be amended so as to grant a tax exemption to every taxpayer for expenses incurred by the use of automobiles or other means of transportation in the performance of his work or for travelling to or from his place of work.

Workers, professionals, businessmen and manufacturers should benefit from such exemptions on the same basis as directors of large corporations.

Indeed, I am sure that directors of large corporations, in many cases, register their automobiles in the name of their company and the expenses involved are charged to the company, thus reducing profits and taxes at the same time. If a corporation director, whose annual income is substantial, is glad to be able to save a few hundred dollars on income tax, how much more the ordinary worker and, generally speaking, any Canadian who gets an average income, would appreciate an exemption for his travelling expenses by any means of transportation for the purposes of his work.

It would be mere justice to all Canadians, and I respectfully submit to the minister that he should take this suggestion under serious consideration.

While being fair to everyone, this would at the same time provide an additional means of checking the recession which we are now facing, since it would leave several millions of dollars in the hands of Canadians thereby increasing their purchasing power.

I therefore respectfully submit this suggestion to the minister in the hope that he and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), will think it proper to consider it favourably. The same applies to their travelling expenses, airplane, train and ship tickets, and hotel accommodation, etc., which are all put on the company expense account.

I admit that, considering the profit of those corporations, the savings so achieved,—if I may use this expression,—are negligible, but to my mind, there is a principle involved.

If this principle is valid for the directors of large corporations, in all fairness, the government of Canada should grant similar advantages to all Canadians, without exception.

We frequently proclaim the principle that, in a democracy, all citizens are equal before the law, and, if all are equal with regard to sacrifice, I respectfully submit that they should also be equal in the sharing of benefits.

The exemption from which the director of a corporation may indirectly benefit with regard to his travelling expenses may, in many cases, represent only a few hundred dollars a year.

(Text):

For the benefit of the minister I should like to sum up my remarks in English. I submit to the minister that he should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act so as to provide tax exemption to persons for expenses incurred in the use of motor cars or other means of transportation in connection with their work.

Mr. Nowlan: I want to remind the hon. member that, as he well knows, matters respecting changes in the taxation law, as I pointed out this morning, come within the ambit of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and that the Minister of National Revenue is not responsible for initiating changes in policy. It is true that discussions take place between us and there is a closeness of co-operation between the two departments because where policy stops and administration begins is sometimes a rather difficult line to draw. There is some merit in the suggestion that travelling expenses and other matters perhaps have to be considered in a different light from what they were a few years ago, but there will be no change in the taxation law at least during the balance of this session and this recommendation will be considered by the Minister of Finance and by myself and the officials before the new taxation law comes down at the next session of the house.

Mr. Rouleau: I am sure that the Minister of National Revenue is in a much better position than I am to convey the message to his colleague, the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought that the Minister of National Revenue would suggest that the hon. member for Dollard should repeat his speech on the estimates of the Minister of Finance. I think that would be a very good idea.

Mr. Crestohl: In the opening remarks of the minister under this section I think he stated that over 5,000 prosecutions were launched against delinquent taxpayers or taxpayers who had failed to file returns. As a member of parliament I regard that statement as rather alarming and I think that parliament should give some consideration to the statement. I do not know the exact figure but it was over 5,000.

Mr. Nowlan: That is for failure to file.

Mr. Crestohl: For failure to file.

Mr. Nowlan: I will give my hon. friend the actual figures now. There were 5,000 plus prosecutions commenced but 2,200 were dropped. I suppose by "commenced" is meant the laying of the information. There were 2,200 dropped and 3,157 were actually taken to court.

Mr. Crestohl: Perhaps the situation is not quite as alarming as I thought at first. I feel that as members of parliament we should be concerned about the fact that 5,000 Canadians were summoned before the courts for being delinquent in making their returns. I do not know how that figure compares with past years.

Mr. Nowlan: I only have the figure for the immediately preceding year in front of me. In 1956-57 there were 6,100 prosecutions started and 3,126 were taken to court, or almost exactly the same number. Roughly 600 more were started the year before than last year.

Mr. Crestohl: I have had some experience with the department in dealing with these matters and I have found great anxiety on the part of the officials to do everything possible before a prosecution is instituted. I think the officials of the department should receive credit for that. They exhaust all possibilities, grant all the interviews that are necessary, receive all possible explanations and even grant terms for the payment of arrears of taxes. Nevertheless I feel that further study should be given to the matter not only because of the cost to the country of lodging 5,000 criminal complaints but also because of the great inconvenience and time lost. I suggest to the minister that some kind of study of the situation be instituted and perhaps we can reduce the numbers still further in the years to come.

Item agreed to.

Income tax appeal board—

265. Administration expenses, $107,130.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say a word about the income tax appeal board. I have written the minister on this matter with particular regard to one special case. I want to bring the minister's attention to the fact that sometimes the income tax appeal board only sits in the larger centres and there are persons living in more isolated places who want to make appeals and who, in my opinion, are occasioned unnecessary expense and inconvenience. I urge that every consideration be given to persons living in the smaller centres who wish to lodge appeals and who have to go to considerable expense in order to go to Vancouver or some larger centre.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the hon. member will remember that some change was made in his constituency or at least in his province. I sent a letter to the acting chairman of the board and arrangements were made for an additional sitting at another place. Wherever that can be done conveniently and efficiently I am always willing to give it consideration and try to work it out although obviously it involves additional expense. Sometimes matters have gone too far in that arrangements have been made, staffs have been moved in and papers brought in with the result that it cannot be done, but it will be done wherever it is practical.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate the minister's consideration but unfortunately when the board was supposed to go to Nelson the railroad was blown up, the cloud ceiling was too low for planes to fly and the bus did not get there in time for the case to be heard.

Item agreed to.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

53. Grant towards the anticipated operating deficit of the radio and television services, $39,135,000.

Mr. Fisher: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Nowlan: No. I thought I had made enough statements about the C.B.C. during this session, particularly during the last two days, and that I might be forgiven for not making a preliminary statement at this time.

Mr. Fisher: The question I want to ask has to do with one I placed on the order paper some time ago with relation to radio relay stations. I happen to have more of them in my constituency than there are in any other place in Canada and we would like a few more. There are a number of communities of the necessary size to justify it. One of them is larger than some of those that now have such stations. It is very difficult to get a satisfactory statement from the C.B.C. with regard to when they are going to introduce them. I thought by asking a specific question I might be able to get a useful answer. In the estimates now before us is there an item for a radio relay station in the town of Manitouwadge?

Mr. Nowlan: I would rather deal with such questions when the officials are here but I am afraid I have to give the hon. member a negative answer to his question. Perhaps we could let it stand for a few minutes.

Mr. McIlraith: In view of the fact that we have already had two days' discussion—

Mr. Nowlan: And two nights.

Mr. McIlraith: —on radio and television broadcasting in Canada and in view of the minister's commitment that we will have a committee on the subject in the early stages of the next session of parliament, which it is beginning to look may not be too far distant, we can forgo general remarks.

There are some questions of a particular nature that we would like to ask, and perhaps the best way is to take the questions one by one. I wanted to ask the minister, first of all, about accommodation in Ottawa for the headquarters of the present Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. He will recall that some months ago there was a great deal of publicity in this city, including some photographs, of a proposed new building on a site on the Bowesville road. I wonder if the minister would tell us exactly what the situation is with respect to headquarters accommodation in Ottawa?

Mr. Nowlan: Has the hon. member other questions at the moment?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, we could take them one at a time.

Mr. Nowlan: The situation in connection with the headquarters building in Ottawa, Mr. Chairman, is that the moneys are included in the estimates for that building. Plans have been prepared, so I am told, and have been completed for the construction of that building. By plans I mean architect's plans and specifications. All that work has been done, and it is just a question of deciding when the building itself should be started. I think the feeling has been that in view of the other pressures on the C.B.C. there has not been too much attention given to that in the last month or two, and also with the employment situation, that it might be well to defer until later this fall the actual commencement of the construction of the building. I cannot commit the corporation definitely to that, but it is my expectation that the work of construction will be started within the next few weeks.

Mr. McIlraith: Has a site been chosen as yet, and if so what is the site?

Mr. Nowlan: Riverside drive; I think there is a big sign there saying that this is going to be the location.

Mr. McIlraith: There has been a good deal of controversy and a great deal of conjecture about it, so I think it is perhaps well to clear it up in an authoritative way.

The other point is this: Will supervision of the building be under the public works department or will it be under the control of the corporation itself?

Mr. Nowlan: The corporation has had architects retained and plans prepared. It has been the policy of the corporation in the past to superintend its own buildings, and I would expect that practice would be followed in this case.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to ask the minister about implementing some of the recommendations of the Fowler commission in regard to centralizing T.V. and radio broadcasting facilities in Toronto. I understand that there are now a dozen or so separate buildings and installations in Toronto, and that in the interests both of economy and efficiency it would be better to have them centralized in one building. I should like to ask the minister whether there has been any progress in regard to that matter and, specifically, whether the government has taken an option on a property in Don Mills, and whether that option has lapsed? What is the present position in regard to this matter?

Mr. Nowlan: It was expected that the corporation would be buying land at or near Toronto this year and provision has been made to that end in the capital budget. Investigations have been going on with respect to various properties in and near Toronto, and in view of the operating position of the corporation with the large number of properties we are leasing, something over 20, and with the very high annual rental, I would hope that the investigations would be completed and that the property could be acquired in the very near future. Then we could proceed with the construction of a central property. At any rate, we think we have sufficient money available this year in our capital budget to buy the land, if such land is available.

Mr. Pearson: I had a specific point, and I asked whether the option which was taken on a particular property at Don Mills was taken with the approval of the government, and if so whether it has been taken up or whether it has been allowed to lapse? If so, what was the cost of the option?

Mr. Nowlan: Does the hon. member mean the capital cost of the land which was included in the option or the cost of getting the option?

Mr. Pearson: If I could get the information on both, I should like it. How much would this land have been on which the option was taken out? What was the cost of allowing the option to lapse if it, in fact, did lapse?

Mr. Nowlan: There was more than one parcel of land included in this property to which my hon. friend referred as the Don Mills property. There was a definite option taken on two properties, one owned by the Don Mills Development Limited or corporation, and the other by Famous Players Corporation. Roughly, the properties were about the same area, I think both slightly over 15 acres each, making around 31 acres in all. I have not the figures in front of me concerning the division of the option price between the two, but I can get that information if the hon. gentleman requires it. The total option, I think, although I am not certain, was $710,000 for the two properties, and the division between the two was roughly the same.

Mr. Pearson: Has that option been allowed to lapse?

Mr. Nowlan: That option has lapsed.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister explain to the committee why that was done, when an option was taken? Is it true that the government had decided this was a reasonable proposition and had made a decision to take up the option and build on the property?

Mr. Nowlan: The government had taken no decision whatever, as I recall it. There was a submission and recommendation made to the minister to authorize the payment of the money to these two firms. This matter got as far as treasury board, I think, and then from there, because of the amount involved and because of the varying appraisals, I asked for additional appraisals. We had one appraisal, and frankly I was not satisfied. We got other appraisals and they varied substantially in amounts, some being over the option price and some being under the option price, and in view of the amount involved and the fact we were not going to preceed with construction just now, the option was allowed to lapse. An investigation is being carried on with respect to any possible alternative sites in the general area of Toronto.

Mr. Herridge: The minister is well aware of the fact, owing to his near residence to me in this house over a period of some 11 years, that I have repeatedly urged the necessity of some low power relay stations to serve the requirements of some 3,000 people in the northern part of my constituency who, up to date, have been denied adequate radio facilities. I will say since the minister took office his department has secured estimates of the cost of providing low power relay stations at points on the Arrow lakes near Nakusp, places on the Slocan lakes and Balfour. Can the minister inform the house if provision has been made in these estimates for the building of these low power relay stations?

Mr. Nowlan: There is no specific amount allocated in the estimates this year for the relay radio stations to which the hon. member refers. The C.B.C. is giving consideration, of course, to the extension of this service. In various parts of the country, as many hon. members know, there is constant pressure on the corporation to build these stations, to increase their number. It would depend upon the other expenditures which the corporation feel must be made this year under their budget as to how far they can continue to expand these relay stations. However, it is a matter which technically has developed a great deal during the last few years, and is one in which the corporation plans on extending service within the relatively immediate future.

Mr. Forgie: May I ask the minister whether he has made any decision with regard to a satellite station in the Ottawa valley about which I spoke to him yesterday? He said that he might answer today.

Mr. Nowlan: Is that with regard to the Pembroke station?

Mr. Forgie: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to be able to tell everyone that all these stations are going to be built this year or at least not later than next year. However, I am not in a position to do that. With regard to that particular station which he has mentioned, I can assure the hon. member that the challenge there, shall I say, or the problem there is receiving careful consideration by the corporation. They have made a fairly intensive study of it and there is more work to be done. I hope that in the not very distant future the hon. member will be able to see the evidence of that work which is now being done.

Mr. Badanai: I should like to ask the minister whether he has any statement to make in connection with the standards of television programs originating in the studios of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The other day I intimated that some programs were not satisfactory to and did not meet with the approval of some of my constituents. I attempted to read an editorial which had a particular program in mind and I was prevented from doing so because apparently I was out of order. Will the minister now permit me to read the editorial? If there is no objection I wish to read the editorial in full. This editorial appeared in the Fort William Times Journal and reads as follows:

> Last week the World President of Rotary visited Fort William. He is an American from Milwaukee, an idealist who heads an international organization devoted to the cause of building goodwill between peoples of all nations. Warmly received here, the distinguished gentleman radiated friendship.
> At the same time he was being welcomed in the city, laborers in the vineyard of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at Toronto were putting the finishing touches on a production which was waved into the living rooms of Canadians from coast to coast on Saturday evening.
>
> In the name of comedy Duffy and his supporting actors staged a scene in which a cigar-smoking, "smart" American from Milwaukee browbeats an innocent Canadian. The latter comes out of a supermarket, arms loaded with parcels, to discover that the Milwaukee man has crashed into his parked car. The American, abetted by a brassy wife, is shown bribing a witness, feeding the poor Canadian shopper with whiskey from a flask before the police arrive and generally making comments that would make the average American shudder.
> Behind the direction of C.B.C. productions there seems to lie an inordinate dislike of the United States and Americans. Saturday night's exhibition was no isolated example. Digs at our neighbours have been sprinkled liberally through the programs of the last year.
> It is one thing for the Canadian government to take issue with the government of the United States on a specific problem, or for Canadian spokesmen outside the ranks of government to speak their piece. It is quite something else for a government-sponsored agency such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to stir up antipathy against a host of American citizens who do not deserve any kind of a spanking from tin-pot, irresponsible "artists".

That is the substance of the whole thing on which I attempted to make a statement the other day. I wonder whether the minister has in mind something of a regulatory nature that will prevent such productions from being viewed by the people of Canada. That is something that we should like to know. Our people are very much interested in what comes out of the television sets in their own living rooms. Television can be a wonderful thing for the promotion of goodwill, education and entertainment. It can also be something else. It can be a definite detriment if it is not handled and controlled properly. I should like to know what action, if any, the government intends to take.

Mr. Nowlan: It is rather hard to answer specifically a question like that. Certainly the government is proposing to take no action whatsoever with respect to it. What action the board of broadcast governors will take on matters of regulation is something we shall leave for them to determine. It is a matter for experience and judgment.

It is perhaps an unfortunate matter that this little skit happened to take place when prominent American people were in town. I can quite understand that the hon. gentleman is somewhat exercised about it. But after he raised the question the other day, or tried to do so, I checked on the matter. This program was on a national network, and I thought that if this thing was so bad we should see just what the audience reaction was. It must be remembered also that there would probably be more Americans than Canadians or at least just as many Americans as Canadians listening to the national television network. Naturally one would assume that there would have been many injured feelings.

We have checked in all the offices where our national television stations are located. In Halifax there was no reaction; not one came in. In Toronto we had three telephone calls, two saying it was wonderful and one saying that it stank. In Winnipeg we had no audience reaction. In Vancouver none whatsoever. In Montreal, none. That was the reaction across Canada. We had three telephone calls and one letter; and as I said, two were saying it was wonderful and two were critical of it. When you have a situation such as that, reaction can be critical but I do not think that by regulation of any kind you could control or define a situation where a show did not evoke any more reaction than that, I do not think it would be one that could be dealt with even if a board wanted to. I do not think this is an area in which boards can deal in any event.

Mr. Pearson: On this point, Mr. Chairman, I suggest there is no accounting for tastes and that there never will be agreement on matters of taste. It is true, of course, that television programs not only have an important effect on public opinion within the country but they can be an important factor in relations between countries. We all appreciate that importance. I am one of those who get a great deal of pleasure out of the C.B.C. television programs. I also get much pleasure out of some of the programs we bring in from the United States. We discussed this matter at some length yesterday, namely the Canadian content of programs and the importance of that kind of thing. Since that discussion took place I have had the pleasure of reading an article by the Minister of Trade and Commerce dated July 6 for the Boston Sunday Herald. As it bears on this point perhaps I might quote just two sentences from this article by my hon. friend's colleague. Regarding our relations with the United States he says this:

> We have drawn closer together in cultural matters, with Canadians sharing many of the tastes and interests of their American friends.
> Canadians are reading more American magazines and seeing more American films and television programs than ever before.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

And then he goes on:

> The Canadian government's policy has been directed towards giving Americans the same opportunities in Canada as are given to Canadians.

I hope my hon. friend is not going to apply that particular principle to television.

Mr. Nowlan: I am afraid I did not catch that remark.

Mr. Pearson: In so far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned, he said that the Canadian government's policy has been directed towards giving Americans the same opportunities in Canada as are given to Canadians and that was said within the context of television programs, films and magazines. I express the hope that it will not be applied to television in Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: It will not.

Mr. Cardin: I am reliably informed that shortly before March 31 the hon. Minister of Transport—and he is in the house and is able to confirm whether my information is correct—promised to provide immediate television service at Flin Flon, Manitoba. I am just wondering whether the minister can tell the committee whether this service has been provided or whether it is the intention of the department to provide it in the relatively near future.

Mr. Nowlan: No, this television service has not been rendered, Mr. Chairman, and with all due respect to the hon. gentleman I do not think the Minister of Transport promised that it would be. I happen to know something about this matter, not from the Minister of Transport but because this problem has again arisen in the last few weeks. There were promoters from the United States who—

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the Minister of Transport is not going to leave the committee when we are discussing what he said.

Mr. Nowlan: —were telecasters using a substitute for microwave on the telephone lines and who wished to do this in Manitoba, as I recall it. They wanted a chance to prove whether this system could be substituted for the microwave and asked to be allowed to develop the system in Manitoba. I have seen the correspondence in this matter and the Minister of Transport at that time told them that if this could be developed it would be a very cheap way to establish television in Flin Flon and in many other areas. They were asked to go ahead by the government of Manitoba and they went ahead and just before the election, as some hon. members here may know, the government of Manitoba entered into an arrangement with them for that very purpose, but I am told that when they attempted to carry out this proposal it did not work out satisfactorily at all. I believe, however, that the former government of Manitoba was intending to carry on experimental work in that direction. Whether or not the present government so intends I do not know but I believe that is the matter to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Fisher: I want to ask the minister, in connection with the programming of the C.B.C., what plans have been made with respect to the program "The Nation's Business" and whether the introduction of two C.B.C. correspondents into the gallery of this house is a preliminary to the establishment by the C.B.C. of its own television correspondents in Ottawa rather than handling the matter, as at the present time, by farming the work out to various members of the press?

Mr. Simpson: I had thought that possibly when we were discussing item 54 I would like to bring certain matters to the attention of the committee and of course of the minister responsible for the providing of funds to the C.B.C. from this parliament. I now wish to raise a situation which is becoming of increasing concern to the people whom I represent in the constituency of Churchill.

The hon. member who has just sat down mentioned the situation at Flin Flon. I do not now intend to launch into a throne speech, because I know I would be called out of order if I did so at this stage of the session. However, there are certain aspects I must mention about my constituency in order to bring out my point. My constituency comprises roughly 180,000 square miles, taking up almost three-fifths of the province of Manitoba. The matter which is of greatest concern to my people with respect to television is that at the present time there is not one single square mile of that area which is serviced by C.B.C. television. There are many other matters which are of interest and which have been discussed with C.B.C. officials, but when representations have been made to the C.B.C. respecting the possibility of servicing this area, we have often been told that we are too far removed from existing C.B.C. network facilities. This is not quite so, because the more largely populated areas of my riding, particularly those of Swan River, Flin Flon and The Pas, are not so very distant from existing facilities. When one speaks of the far north it is a different proposition altogether, but in regard to Swan River, for instance, which is a large agricultural area, it is only a matter of possibly 175 air miles from Winnipeg and less from Brandon. Extensions to the populated areas of Flin Flon and The Pas would probably necessitate covering some 375 miles, so it will be seen that it is not right for the C.B.C. to continually say that Churchill is too far removed from present facilities. The people of the area believe, and I think justly so, that as they are being taxed in the same way as anyone else in Canada, therefore they should share in the benefits provided by such facilities as the C.B.C.

As a result of recent correspondence and discussions, the C.B.C. informs me that until the present time no private applications have been received for television station licences in the area. Undoubtedly that is correct, but I do know of one or two private concerns who are interested in going into this area but before setting up stations they would like some idea as to just when the C.B.C. network would be available to them. The area in which I live, namely, Flin Flon, as well as other Manitoba areas, are to a large extent sports minded and, as in the case of the rest of Canada, are interested in seeing such live network programs televised by the C.B.C. as the world series, the Grey cup, the Saturday night hockey games and so on. They would also like to receive the national news service.

Some of these station operators feel that if they were to go in on a private licence and to operate with kine recordings this might just serve as a deterrent to the C.B.C. ever coming in and giving them a network.

These are the problems facing people interested in applying for private station licences, and I would like to suggest to the C.B.C. that the mere fact in itself that we have an area from which we have as yet not received applications for television licences, is a direct challenge to the C.B.C. to give serious consideration to servicing such areas in order that it may become a truly national body. In areas already serviced by private stations there is not the same degree of need but in areas where there are no private stations and where no applications have been forthcoming I believe there is a direct obligation on the C.B.C. to give this question full consideration.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, would the minister answer my questions at this time?

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member repeat his questions? I believe he was asking a question about a specific station.

Mr. Fisher: I asked about the situation with respect to "The Nation's Business". I also asked if the C.B.C. has any plans to instal a permanent C.B.C. correspondent who will appear somewhat in the way Stanley Burke does at the United Nations. The other question related to the prospect of installing low power relay stations at Manitouwadge and Armstrong. In both cases I made representations. In one case I sent a lengthy petition to the chairman of the C.B.C.

Mr. Nowlan: At the moment there is no thought of arranging for a correspondent here. I think that is a matter to which consideration will be given but there is no immediate decision forthcoming on it.

As far as "The Nation's Business" is concerned plans have been finalized to start that next month, I believe, or at least in the immediate future. It will come into being again in the fall and winter months.

The hon. gentleman can rest assured that the problem to which he referred is well along in the planning stage. I would not want to suggest he could expect developments there this year in the construction line at any rate but I would be hopeful that in another year real progress could be made in helping to solve the problem which I know is a difficult one. The C.B.C. is faced with a tremendous problem. It has moneys which though large in total amount are small when one thinks of the number of requests that come to it from all over Canada for the construction of power relays, new stations and things of that kind. It has had to try to deal with the problem on the basis of the funds available, on the basis of need and on the basis of the investigations of the officials of the Department of Transport and the C.B.C. I can assure the hon. member that the problem of the area to which he refers is receiving careful and detailed study at the moment and I believe he will be reasonably well satisfied with the progress that will be made there in the not too distant future.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you, very much. One of the recommendations of the Fowler commission which the minister mentioned in the house was that the dominion network be allowed to lapse. I wonder if that is the intention? I hope it is not. If the two networks continue I wonder if it would be possible for the C.B.C. to give a fairly hard figure as to what it would cost to annually pipe through dominion programs to small communities now receiving trans-Canada programs so they would have both. In other words they would be provided with a choice of program.

Mr. Nowlan: I am advised the cost would be very high indeed. I can also tell the hon. member that no immediate consideration is being given to the question. That is not just an euphemistic term. No consideration is being given at the moment nor will any be given in the immediate future to the abandonment of the dominion network. Certainly no decision will be taken on that at least until after the new directors of the C.B.C. have been appointed and have had an opportunity of surveying the whole situation and obtaining the advice of their technicians and also, I presume, the board of broadcast governors. If any decision of that nature were contemplated it will be a long while in the future and certainly the house would have ample notice of it before it materialized.

The hon. member for Churchill raised the question of television service in his constituency and also referred to the inadequacy of the radio service which they are presently enjoying. He has pressed me on this matter on various occasions and I have had to give him the same answer I have had to give other hon. members of the committee to the effect that this is a matter within the control of the C.B.C. and within the limits of its funds the C.B.C. is attempting to achieve the best possible distribution.

I am pleased to tell the hon. member that in so far as radio is concerned at any rate immediate developments are taking place with respect to the northern service. We are very hopeful that the radio need will be met in the immediate future. Progress has been made, it is past the planning stage and work is being done. I hope and expect that the hon. member will be reasonably well satisfied with what transpires so far as radio is concerned.

But television is another proposition. It is easy to say that all Canadians should be treated equally and we sympathize and agree with that view but distance certainly makes a vast difference in cost. The cost of extending a microwave system to that area would be prohibitive at the moment and to do it in other ways would also be an expensive proposition. Probably the reason why no private television station has been established there is because it would require an undertaking from the C.B.C. to extend its program service and at the moment the C.B.C. is not financially in a position to deal with the problem. However, we have solved the radio problem, I think. Next winter, after the board has been appointed and the C.B.C. has been reconstituted, I am sure whoever happens to be the minister responsible for the C.B.C. at that time will have pressure brought to bear on him again by the hon. member for Churchill to do something for his area which is badly in need of television service as every one realizes.

I wish to be perfectly frank with the hon. member and tell him there are no immediate plans. I would almost go further and say there is no immediate hope of solving the television problem at this time in that area.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, there has been much talk recently about the construction of a new building in Montreal which will house all the services of the C.B.C. in that city and also as to the site of that new building. I wonder if the minister is in a position to tell the committee if he is contemplating the construction of such a building and, if so, if an agreement has been reached as to the site of that building?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the minister has a very voluminous mail at all times and one of the matters which has added to the volume has been the number of people in and around Montreal who have written the minister advising him that they have the only available land for the C.B.C. and that it is an excellent buy and should be bought at once. But seriously, there has been no agreement entered into with respect to the purchase of land though, as I have said, many sites have been offered. The C.B.C. has investigated and will continue to investigate any lands offered for sale but no decision has been made. The need is known to the C.B.C., to me and to the government and there is included in these capital estimates, we hope, sufficient moneys with which to purchase the land during the coming year if the committee sees fit to pass these estimates and if the C.B.C. is satisfied as to the availability and price of the land.

Mr. Rouleau: I should like to tell the minister there is still much land available in the constituency of Dollard not too far from the national film board and we would welcome such a building.

Mr. Fisher: I hate to come back to the question of low power relay stations but I feel I must. I think we have nine in my constituency and we hope to make it eleven. The cost figure given by the C.B.C. for these low power relay transmitters ranged between $800 and $1,300. The installation costs range between $3,500 and $6,500. I have talked with telegraph men in several communities involved and they say all that is necessary to allow them to broadcast is a simple turn of the switch. I am prepared to accept the explanation.

Let us get to this other request that I have had from the nine communities involved. They want to know why they cannot have the dominion network programs rather than the trans-Canada programs. It is a matter of opinion, but generally the dominion network programs are lighter and more popular with the people. Several times the man in charge of the relay has thrown the switch and sent out the dominion network programs. He has been checked up for it later. Those switches have won a great deal of popular support in the community.

One of the other points I would like to bring up is in connection with the low-power relay stations. I have had requests from two communities which would like to know whether they can use the low-power relay transmitter to make local announcements when the station is not broadcasting or at the end of its schedule or before the schedule begins. They would like to know whether they can make public announcements in relation to things going on in the community; they wondered whether some sort of regulations could be worked out that would allow this and perhaps they could even pay for the time.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I have to revise my statement about giving consideration to putting another station in there in the immediate future. The hon. member tells me he has nine in his constituency, which I think is more than any other member in the house has. Perhaps he has too many now. We may have to give consideration to changing some and putting them in other places.

As far as changing from the trans-Canada to the dominion is concerned, I am told by the corporation officials that this is impossible. We have a national network. The trans-Canada facilities are there. To make a change such as the hon. member suggests would involve an expenditure of money such as—well, we would have to sell those nine low-power stations he has there to find money to pay for it, and I am sure he would not want that.

It is true the cost of installing those low-power stations is not great. I was bothered about that. I understand the cost of installing is, as he said, from $800 to several thousand dollars. I would say that what he and some of his friends have overlooked is that it is no good to instal them unless you get the programs. When we get programs that are under contract with the communications system we have to pay so much a mile for the programs, and the farther away the relay station is the more the corporation has to pay, and that is where the cost comes in. It is not the installing of the low-power relay but the operation of it afterwards, under the contract that we have with the communications system which is carrying the program at the time. If it is, say, 10 miles away, that is one thing. If it is 50 miles or 100 miles away, the cost goes up proportionately, and the cost is given in the contract for each one of those low-power relays. You cannot say you can carry it in this way, and so on. That is the cost of the operation and that is why it is more difficult. The more we have to instal the more costly it is.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that the province of Newfoundland is not included in the microwave network—I understand it is the only province in Canada not included in the network—will the minister tell the committee at this time when this handicap of our province will be overcome and when the microwave network will be put through to Newfoundland? In St. John's we have one of the finest independent television stations in Canada. However, it is operating under a handicap in so far as it is not connected with the national network because the microwave does not reach Newfoundland.

One other question; perhaps the minister can advise the house as to the capital expenditure the corporation has planned for the province of Newfoundland in the ensuing year?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member for St. John's East, as he knows, that the television microwave expenditure is being proceeded with. Unfortunately there have been delays in the acquisition of material. I had thought that the whole thing would be completed within the next few months but there have been substantial delays owing to material shortages. As a result, I do not think he can expect to see the completion of that microwave system until sometime early next summer. It may be that late. It certainly will not be, as I expected it would be, early in the winter, but it is going ahead. All the troubles are now settled and the material is ordered, and he can confidently look forward to the microwave sometime during the next summer months, and I hope early in the summer.

In so far as the capital budget is concerned, we have the cost of the microwave station and I think that is all that is really included in the capital budget. It depends, of course, on many things. The general budget for the country as a whole is not earmarked, and it will depend on expenditures in different places and how much money is available as to what is done.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, once again I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a problem concerning a radio station that exists in my riding. I am referring to the C.B.C. station known as CBY, which operates on 790 kilocycles in the city of Corner Brook in the province of Newfoundland. This radio station, now operated by C.B.C., was formerly operated on the west coast of Newfoundland long before Newfoundland came into confederation, and its programs, both local and otherwise, were broadcast all along the west coast of Newfoundland. In an area where communications leave a lot to be desired, radio services become much more important under such circumstances. The result is that this radio station has become very important to the people on the west coast of Newfoundland in so far as local news bulletins, news about fishing boats up and down the coast, and so forth, are concerned.

This section of the coast is about 300 miles long. The station is situated approximately 100 miles from the southern end and 200 miles from the northern end. Over the years this station has given very fine service to the area. Of late, however, in the southern part and in the northern part interference from station CKEC at Newcastle, New Brunswick has been experienced. The trouble appears to be that the station at Newcastle is on exactly the same frequency as the station at Corner Brook.

I must make myself clear to the minister. I am not making any complaints about the station at Newcastle and I wish to say right now that as far as I know the interference to which I am referring does not exist within the protected area of CKEC at Newcastle and neither, I think, does it appear within the protected area of CBY. The northern part of the west coast of Newfoundland and the southern part are both outside the protected area but at the same time they are areas that have been served for a number of years by this station at Corner Brook. This interference from CKEC is such that the local station at Corner Brook cannot be heard.

As I said before, over the years this station has given a very fine contribution. It is operated by a very efficient manager, supported by a very capable staff. I say that because of the fact they have been able to play a great part in the local programs in the area and today the people look to it a good deal. When I think of the people in the northern part of the northern peninsula and in the southern part where they are no longer able to get the programs that are broadcast from the station I begin to wonder just what can be done about it. I think the frequency which has been allocated to CKEC is quite within the legal authority of the international code for assigning frequencies, and I have no doubt that from a legal point of view those two stations are quite within their rights. I believe, too, that from an engineering point of view those two stations are perfectly all right.

I agree that the thing may be right legally and I agree that it may be right mechanically but there is something wrong if the people of an area have been able to enjoy these programs from the station over a long period of years and now can no longer do so. What can be done about it, of course, is a matter for an engineer. It may be a question of increasing the power or of changing the frequency. It may be a problem of changing the antennae or ground patterns. Whatever the problem is, I suggest to the minister that he would be doing a service to these people in the northern part of Newfoundland if something could be done to solve it. I might also ask the minister to give any information he can when he is replying about what is happening in the city of Corner Brook as far as television coverage is concerned.

Mr. Nowlan: With respect to the frequency problem to which the hon. member has referred, it is a most unfortunate circumstance that an area which enjoyed radio reception for many years has now apparently had its reception severely prejudiced or has practically lost it entirely due to the allocation of a wavelength somewhere else. Of course, that has happened in other places. As the hon. member says, there is no question about the legality of it. These frequencies were allocated by the Department of Transport in accordance with the international agreement. As the hon. member knows, something happened and although, as he says, the areas directly concerned are clear, you have these other areas which have enjoyed radio reception for years and are now being severely interfered with. The departmental officials tell me that they have been attempting to cope with the situation. Studies have been going on and investigations are being made. Frankly, no solution has yet been reached but I can assure the hon. member that I will urge the C.B.C. to pursue the matter and I am sure they will take every step possible to attain a solution of this nasty and difficult problem with which he is confronted.

So far as the question of television in Corner Brook is concerned, I am not sure what the exact status is at the moment. It is expected, I am told, that there will be sufficient moneys in the capital vote this year to provide for that area.

Mr. Herridge: On June 25 the minister announced in the house proposals for surveys of the possibilities of the establishment of six satellite television stations in Canada, including one in Trail. Can the minister inform the house how far the surveys have proceeded with respect to the establishment of the one in Trail?

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, I know that last June the minister announced that there would be a French language satellite station in Winnipeg to serve the French population in the west. Will the change in the set-up and the creation of a new board delay the project? I know that the people of Manitoba and particularly of my riding of St. Boniface are much interested in a French station in Manitoba. I believe that there are now about two hours a week in French on the Winnipeg station and although many English speaking people enjoy French programs there are always a few who prefer to have all the programs in English. If there were a French station they would not be deprived of all English programs by the two hours in French on the local station. I also understand that many of the students taking French at the university would be interested in listening to French programs over a French station. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would assure the people of Manitoba that this project will not be delayed because of the new board being set up.

Mr. Nowlan: I can give the assurance that it is not going to be delayed because of the proposed changes in the broadcasting bill we passed yesterday. The situation with respect to Trail and the situation with respect to St. Boniface are practically identical. Surveys are being made and are virtually completed. Engineering designs are going ahead for the locations and in both cases work will be started this year. It will not be completed this year but I am quite sure it will be fairly early next year. Some time next year in any event the stations at Trail and St. Boniface will be completed and in operation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 56 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item carries, Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from pointing out that the debate this afternoon, and I am not seeking to criticize anyone on either side of the house for it, is the best possible illustration of the unwisdom of the decision made yesterday. We have listened all afternoon to members getting up and urging the government to do something about a system that we thought and still think should be independent of the government. This business of having annual appropriations, which is what we are talking about now, for the C.B.C. instead of having the C.B.C. discussed in a committee in the way the C.N.R. is discussed is, it seems to me, a very retrograde step indeed.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to get into another altercation with the hon. gentleman. I know that at one time he was busy running a department and probably like other cabinet ministers then and cabinet ministers today did not spend as much time in the house as he does now as a private member. However, I sat in the house for 10 years as a private member and the practice that has been going on this afternoon has gone on every time the C.B.C. vote has come up in the past 10 years. There is no difference whatsoever. Members of the house who had requests to make made them and the situation has not changed. Of course, any reference to the debate on the bill passed yesterday is completely out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might point out—

Mr. Nowlan: I knew you would.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that there have not been annual appropriations except for the last two or three years so that the minister's statement about the last 10 years is not correct.

Mr. Nowlan: It does not make any difference. Requests were made just the same.

Mr. Pickersgill: There used to be debates on setting up radio committees when hon. members expressed their views about what they would like the C.B.C. to do and that is as it should be, but this business of having to appeal to the government is what we find objectionable.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that I do not want to have us identified with the views expressed by the very partisan member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

65. To provide, subject to the approval of treasury board, for trans-oceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers, including care en route and while awaiting employment; and to provide further for payments to the provinces pursuant to agreements entered into, with the approval of the governor in council, in respect of expenses incurred by the provinces for indigent immigrants, $8,180,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, when we were last in committee on these estimates we were considering vote No. 65 and I did not have the opportunity on that occasion to make some reference to this vote and to the size of it. Since the estimates were prepared some time last autumn there have been changes in circumstances which make it possible now to reduce the amount of this vote. Accordingly, I would ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to move this reduction. I should like to have the amount of the vote reduced by $500,000.

Mr. Nowlan: I move:

That vote 65, immigration branch, to provide subject to the approval of treasury board, for trans-oceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers, including care en route and while awaiting employment, etc., be reduced by $500,000.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. lady would explain to us how she came to make this shockingly bad estimate?

Mrs. Fairclough: At the time that the estimates were drawn up we had expected we would have a great many more people on subsistence than now appears to be the case. We have been able to procure employment for so many refugees and others who were formerly on assistance that it is now possible to make this reduction in the estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very encouraging statement indeed, by the hon. lady. The other day I meant to ask, but I did not think of it, how many people are on subsistence at the present time? I shall put two or three related questions because it will be easier to answer them that way. How many persons are receiving subsistence? How many of those persons are seeking employment? How much has been spent in total on subsistence by the department so far in the present fiscal year or, if the hon. lady has not an up-to-date figure for the calendar year, whatever would be a convenient recent date?

The Deputy Chairman: Would the committee be prepared to accept the amendment at this stage?

Mr. Pickersgill: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mrs. Fairclough: As of August 15, Mr. Chairman, the total number of immigrants receiving subsistence was 1,033; the total number of workers yet unplaced or the total number seeking work was 323.

Mr. Pickersgill: That includes Hungarians?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes; as a matter of fact, of that number 98 are Hungarians and 225 are others. The amount to the end of July, for which the hon. member asked, is $2,140,713.97.

Mr. Pickersgill: From what date?

Mrs. Fairclough: For the fiscal year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since April 1?

Mrs. Fairclough: Oh yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that I think what the minister has just told us is quite a tribute to the efficiency of the staff who look after these matters in the immigration branch. I am sure the hon. lady would today agree with me in that.

The other question I wanted to ask concerns the assisted passage loans. I would be interested to know whether or not assisted passage loans are still being made, to what classes of persons they are being made at the present time, and also what the latest balance sheet shows on the assisted passage fund?

Mrs. Fairclough: The total number admitted in the first six months of the calendar year, to the end of June, was 4,962. On their behalf there was paid $1,329,874. In the same period, we received repayment or there were collections amounting to $1,797,665. The hon. gentleman asked about the condition of the fund, I think, and also the classes of persons.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that is right. Perhaps I could make it a little more precise. I should like to know the total amount of loans since this scheme was started, the total amount repaid and the total amount outstanding as of the latest convenient date?

Mrs. Fairclough: Assistance has been given to 107,092 since February 1, 1951, and the total amount paid amounted to $17,181,040. Collections have amounted to $10,963,616. A rapid calculation would indicate that there is something over $6 million outstanding.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I will not ask the hon. lady to do the subtraction. Can she give the categories of persons receiving the loans?

Mrs. Fairclough: Roughly speaking, Mr. Chairman, there are those who are coming to take occupations and those who are in need of assistance, not sponsored by relatives, but those who are coming here to take employment and who have indicated that they are unable to pay their own passage.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to detain the committee, but I have tried several devices to find out from the hon. lady what categories of persons are admitted to take employment in this country. She tabled a very complicated chart which I never quite understood when I was minister, and I frankly confess I do not understand now. Perhaps some day she would have some one of the officials in her department translate it into either English or French as a list of occupations, in any kind of order at all, but in plain, ordinary words that we could understand, and lay it on the table. I shall not detain her now.

Mrs. Fairclough: In the same spirit of good will, may I say that I agree it is a complicated document. On the other hand, as the hon. member knows, an occupation in which there may be no vacancies in one part of the country may show unfilled vacancies in another part of the country, and when you try to signify by area and also by occupation precisely what classes are open, it does become complicated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will let the hon. lady off if she will just give a list of all the occupations to which immigrants are admitted in any part of the country?

Mrs. Fairclough: Does the hon. member mean right now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no, by no means, but before the end of the session.

Mrs. Fairclough: All right, I will.

Mr. Crestohl: Could the minister tell the committee, of those immigrants who are receiving assistance, how many were admitted to Canada without jobs waiting or guaranteed for them?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not believe we would have that information without tracing down every single one of these persons and finding out what the circumstances were under which they entered the country. It is conceivable that a person would come in to take employment, and then within the first year have that employment disappear. He might come in as a person destined for a specific job, and still receive subsistence later on.

Mr. Crestohl: Could the minister tell us whether there is any priority or any special consideration given to immigrants who apply to enter Canada and who have a job guaranteed to them on arrival?

Mrs. Fairclough: I doubt whether we can guarantee jobs, or whether we can indicate to immigrants the possibility of securing employment in certain places or at certain times. The possible exception might be if one comes out to take a job on a specific farm or in a specific household as a domestic. I am not sure that I understand the hon. member's question.

Mr. Crestohl: I think the minister misunderstood my question. My question was this. Is there any priority or special consideration given to an applicant to migrate to Canada who has already a job assured to him on arrival by his relatives or some other people?

Mrs. Fairclough: If I understand the hon. member's question now, what he means is this. Suppose he is assured of employment here in a specific position but has not the necessary funds to come out, will he be assisted in passage?

Mr. Crestohl: I am not speaking of assistance in passage. I am speaking of an immigrant who applies to migrate to Canada and who has a job assured to him on arrival. He may come on his own steam, but he has a job assured him on arrival. I am asking whether any preference or special consideration is given to such an immigrant over one who has no job waiting for him on arrival and who subsequently requires the assistance of the government.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member gets me confused by adding at the end of his question the words "assistance of the government".

Mr. Crestohl: I do not mean to confuse the minister, Mr. Chairman. If I may repeat my question, I shall do so. Suppose a person applies to migrate to Canada, has a job assured him on arrival either by relatives or friends and pays his own expenses. Is there any priority or special consideration given to such an applicant over one who has no job waiting for him and who may become a charge to the government?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to that question would be that, if the position to which he is destined is one for which there are no applicants in Canada and it has been cleared as such through the national employment service, his entry would be expedited; yes.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the minister this question. Does that apply to relatives of Chinese citizens who make application for their relatives to come here and who in every case have assured employment, who never come on the community for care or are never any expense to the Canadian people or the Canadian government?

Mrs. Fairclough: No. That does not apply to sponsored cases.

Mr. Regier: First I should like to compliment the minister on being willing to make and in fact arranging for an amendment reducing an estimate. That is quite a favourable action in comparison to that of a minister who some days ago insisted on an estimate for parliamentary assistants remaining, even though the possibility of the estimate being used had been exhausted by the passage of the months. However, I wonder whether the minister could give us a breakdown as between the various purposes for which the estimate of, I now take it, $7,680,000 is expected to be used? I notice that in the details even less information is given than is given at page 12 of the blue book. What I should like to know is this. What is the estimate that will be needed for trans-oceanic transportation assistance; what is the estimate that will be needed for inland transportation assistance; what is the estimate for other assistance for immigrants and settlers; and what is the estimate for maintenance of immigrants who have not the wherewithal to look after themselves once they are in Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think I can give the hon. member the broad breakdown. Inland transportation is estimated at $640,000; trans-oceanic transportation, $720,000; food, shelter and incidental expenses, $3,800,000. That is the one that will be reduced by half a million dollars. Then there is family assistance for immigrants and settlers, $2,800,000; and federal-provincial agreement, $220,000.

Mr. Regier: The other day I noticed a news item about Canada accepting another limited number of refugees of the revolt in Hungary. Might I ask the minister this question. Have all these refugees now been placed somewhere in the world or are there large camps of refugees remaining in Austria or Yugoslavia or elsewhere? I believe there were some in the other western European countries.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is hoped that this movement will clear up the Hungarian refugees who have been in camps in various places.

Mr. Regier: The minister says that she expects that this large admission to Canada—

Mrs. Fairclough: And to other countries.

Mr. Regier: —is likely to end the matter as far as Canada is concerned. I have one other question. Even with the reduction of the minister's estimates, I notice that it still leaves $7½ million compared to the $12,911,000 for the fiscal year ended last March 31. I noticed a news report the other day that we were expecting to Canada this year only in the neighbourhood of 70,000 immigrants which figure I believe is only roughly 35 per cent of what it was a year ago.

Mrs. Fairclough: There were that many in the first six months, practically.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask the hon. lady a question. How many settlers who were not immigrants received assistance since the item was changed to include settlers? Perhaps the hon. lady does not know what a settler is. I may say that a settler is a Canadian citizen who left Canada a long time ago and came back. We changed the law a couple of years ago so that for this purpose they could be treated as immigrants. This question is asked perhaps just out of idle curiosity. If the figure is not readily available, I would not press the matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not have it right here but I shall be glad to get it for the hon. gentleman.

While I am on my feet may I correct a statement I made a few moments ago. Amongst those for whom assisted passages are available are wives and minor children. I said no sponsored relatives were eligible but wives and minor children in Europe sponsored by residents of Canada are also eligible for assisted passage.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is just one other question that I should like to ask the hon. lady. In response to a question I asked earlier in the session she gave me a categorical assurance that a settlement made with the government of Ontario with respect to Hungarian refugees was in no respect whatsoever more favourable than the settlement made with Saskatchewan. I should like to be quite sure that was the case.

Mrs. Fairclough: If my memory serves me well, I did not put it in quite that way. I think I said that the one was based on the same general principle as the other. I would not be able to answer the hon. gentleman if he is asking me if there was any particular in which the one is more favourable than the other. I would have to inquire.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. lady has examined the file at all carefully she will recall that there was a good deal of negotiation that went on about this point before she became minister and before the government changed, and that I took the view that we could not possibly give more favourable treatment to a wealthy province like Ontario than we were giving to Saskatchewan. It was because I took that attitude that the negotiation broke down and no settlement was ever reached with the government of Ontario. I think we really ought to be assured in the committee before the estimates are passed that all provinces—and of course Ontario and Saskatchewan were the ones that performed the widest services in this field—were treated on a basis of absolute equality.

Mrs. Fairclough: I will try to get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. lady would undertake to give her reply tomorrow I will not hold up the item on that account.

Mrs. Fairclough: Very well. With respect to the question asked about settlers, as of July 31, 69 settlers received transportation assistance in order to return to Canada.

Mr. Garland: Would the minister say if any preference whatsoever is given to applicants when the sponsor is prepared to post a bond or give a guarantee that the immigrant will never become a public charge?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think I am correct in saying that we do not ask for a bond except where there may be health conditions indicating that the person could be a public charge. These cases are handled so carefully and individually that I do not think I could give a general answer to that question.

Mr. Crestohl: I wish to make a few general observations. My views on the urgency of increasing immigration to Canada have been stated in this house over the years since I have been sitting here and those views have been supported in large measure by eminent members of the house. If I might mention the Hon. George Drew, the present Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister himself; all those gentlemen have taken views similar to my own and have stressed the importance of admitting immigrants and expanding our population. I do not wish to go over the ground again but there is one phase of it which I would like to draw to the attention of the minister and that is the expediting of immigration into Canada of the close relatives of people already here.

This is a very delicate subject and I think merits all the sympathetic consideration of the minister. I know that in the past I have found great sympathy on the part of the former minister and the officials of the department when dealing with the cases of close relatives, and I wonder if since immigration has been stopped, generally speaking, this has not influenced the immigration of close relatives, although I understand such immigration has not been stopped by the present government.

I personally know of a great many people who have close relatives abroad and who were delighted by the fact that a lady had been appointed as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration for the first time in Canada's history. They felt, quite rightly, that this lady would understand with more sympathy the close ties of family life and the great urgency of having relatives close at hand. I would like to address myself to the minister with a simple plea that she could perhaps avoid being influenced by the men around her who are also sympathetic, but who are more inclined to adhere to the strict interpretation of the regulations. These are men whose judgment I have always respected and by whose decisions I have always abided, but yet I feel that sometimes as supporting officials to the minister, without the authority or the right enjoyed by the minister, they cannot extend sympathetic consideration to these cases. I therefore appeal to the minister as warmly and as urgently as I can to extend every possible human sympathy to these cases concerning close relatives and to even go a little beyond the strict interpretation of the letter of the law and to apply the sympathy which should come from a minister of this department, especially from a lady whose sympathy and kindness is known.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thank the hon. gentleman for his kind remarks. The policy of the department is of course to keep family groups together, but when the hon. gentleman speaks about immigration having been curtailed this year I must say that the vast majority of those who have come to Canada have been people sponsored by their relatives in this country.

I think I am correct in saying that this department has always lent a sympathetic ear to those persons who find themselves parted from their immediate relatives by reason of their migration to Canada or for other reasons beyond their control. It is our hope that we can bring these family groups together, but when I say that I cannot guarantee that this would be a blanket policy applied to all parts of the globe because, as the hon. member knows, different conditions prevail in different countries and different areas.

In so far as possible we do hope to bring family groups together, although we cannot always do this as quickly as we would like, for many reasons. I can assure the hon. member that the policy is undergoing close scrutiny at the present time and we hope to have an announcement to make in that respect in the not too distant future, bearing in mind just such circumstances as those he has described.

Mr. Regier: I am a little hard of hearing sometimes but did I hear the minister correctly to the effect that of this roughly $7 million, $3,800,000 was for incidentals? Would she clarify what she said. I know there were other matters, but I was not quite clear in that respect.

Mrs. Fairclough: That was for food, shelter and incidental expenses. Incidentals would be just a very small portion of that.

Mr. Regier: Would the minister explain how this is a separate item from the next item—family assistance of $2,800,000? This was the sum of money paid by agreement with the provinces. Exactly how does the item for food come under $3,800,000 and the family assistance under $2,800,000?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, family assistance is the term given to family allowances when paid to immigrants who would not, by reason of their short term of residence in this country, qualify for family allowances. There might be, and in my opinion there is, some room for argument as to whether this might not properly be paid by the Department of National Health and Welfare, but that is a matter of conjecture. Nevertheless, that is what it is, family allowances paid on behalf of the children of immigrants.

Mr. Regier: May I make a general remark on this item. I believe the basic responsibility of the department should be to find proper immigrants for Canada and I say that when over $7 million out of $18 million is used for the bringing of immigrants to Canada and the maintenance of those immigrants, that is a fairly high proportion. Relatively more money should be spent in finding ways and means to let Canada have those people who so badly want to come here and who will not be a burden to the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as I wish to make somewhat extended remarks on this item, may I call it six o'clock?

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOURQUE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL"

(Translation):

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have before me a copy of this evening's Journal, which reads as follows:

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would raise his question of privilege in the morning. It is now six o'clock and according to the rules the house rises at this time.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask leave of the house for the hon. member to continue? It is a small matter which appears in this evening's paper and it will take less than a minute.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, I have an objection. May I be heard on it?

Mr. Speaker: As unanimous consent has not been given, I do not feel that the rules of the house should be broken.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is interesting to see who does not want corrections made.

Mr. Churchill: What is wrong with tomorrow?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government leader what the business will be tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we hope to deal with three or four of the items on the order paper which are not contentious; item No. 2, a minor amendment from the other place to the Excise Tax Act; item No. 9, the resolution preceding a bill to provide for additional judges; item No. 5, second reading of a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge from Campobello island to Lubec, Maine, and possibly item No. 1, the house in committee on a bill to amend the Railway Act. Then we shall take the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration followed by three or four items which remain under trade and commerce and then transport and finance.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister indicate what the business will be on Friday and Saturday?

Mr. Green: We are hoping, Mr. Speaker, to finish up the estimates.

Twelfth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Fraser.

HOUSING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DESIGN OF "MINIMUM" HOUSE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, while the housing program during the last year has generally been very successful, there is still a great need for a more modest type of home which would be suitable for erection in the less populated areas. In the past one of the difficulties has been the reluctance of approved lenders to lend on this type of house, especially in sparsely populated locations.

As hon. members are aware, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been working on the design of a modest house which, while it is intended primarily for rural areas where municipal services are not available, can also be built in the smaller populated centres. The design and brief specification have now been completed and steps to publicize this "minimum" house are about to be taken. This is an example of what may be accepted for National Housing Act lending. Leaflets describing this house are available at every corporation office across the country. Working drawings of this house may be purchased at a cost of $10 a set.

It is hoped that the house will be erected in the more remote areas for a cost of approximately $5,000. Where there are some services in the smaller centres it is hoped that the cost will not be more than $8,000. This house conforms to the minimum standards required for houses erected under the National Housing Act, including a recent amendment which gives more freedom of design in that it permits access to the bathroom from a habitable room or the entrance hall. Copies of the leaflet describing the minimum house are being distributed to all hon. members, and I think they will be doing the country a service if they pass the word around in their constituencies concerning this new and more modest type of home.

I am sure hon. members will be glad to know that there has been a great increase in the number of loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in centres under 55,000 population. The figure for the first seven months of 1957 was 7,531 units, and for the same seven months of 1958 the figure is almost double, 14,581 units. There were over 1,000 more in July, 1958 than there were in July, 1957. We are hoping that this new type of home will be of great benefit to Canadians living in the smaller centres.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would care to comment in a little more definite terms on the C.M.H.C. attitude toward this type of home in the larger centres.

I have in mind the restrictions which exist now and which make it difficult for people in the lower income brackets to take advantage of these facilities. I should like to ask the minister whether or not this house will be available in the large centres, and at the same time we commend him for making it available in the rural areas.

Mr. Green: It will be available, but I doubt very much whether homes could be built for this price in the larger centres. The practical need for housing of this type has been in the smaller centres of Canada.

Mr. Garland: May I be permitted one further question. Have there been any conversations with the lending institutions as to their attitude toward making loans on this type of accommodation?

Mr. Green: We always do what we can to persuade the lending institutions to make loans in all centres, and I must say they have been very co-operative. We do believe that the use of this new design will greatly facilitate the construction of new homes in the smaller centres.

Mr. Garland: Is it intended that the lending institutions will carry the bulk of the financing, or will it be by direct loan from the corporation?

Mr. Green: If the loans cannot be obtained through the lending institutions, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will make the loans directly.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): This is very welcome news, Mr. Speaker. I must comment on the remarkable swiftness with which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has moved. I think it was about a week ago that the minister told me the plans were not ready, and now they are in form. How far has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation gone in clearing certain materials for specification in this type of housing? I am thinking particularly of plywood and that sort of thing, which will go a long way toward making this type of construction cheaper. One of the complaints I have had from the plywood manufacturers has been the fact that this material has not been cleared yet through the various testing processes. Is Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation working with the testing laboratory to clear various types of materials?

Mr. Green: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been working for a much longer period than the last week on the preparation of these plans. The hon. gentleman's question of a week ago was very helpful, but just incidental. I do not have the information necessary to give him a detailed answer to his question, but if there is any difficulty about clearing materials which could be used, we certainly will try to overcome that difficulty right away. I feel confident that there is no such difficulty now.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works arising out of the statement which he made this morning about low-cost houses, which I can assure him will be of special interest to people of my province. Will steps be taken so that arrangements can be made to make these new houses available to fishermen in the small fishing settlements of Newfoundland?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to say to what extent they will be available to fishermen. I think the hon. member will be able to judge that better than I can when he sees the pamphlet. Then, if there is any difficulty we should be glad to try to iron it out.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to restrict these houses only to incorporated areas?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING INCREASED AID TO UNIVERSITIES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to assist the universities of Canada, parliament has made provision to authorize payments to the national conference of Canadian universities. In accordance with the provisions of an agreement entered into between the conference and the minister of finance on March 26, 1957, payment is to be at the rate of $1 per head of population for the province concerned. The main estimates for this year contain an item of $17,100,000 to provide for payments at this rate. The government is now proposing that this per capita payment be increased from $1 to $1.50. Accordingly the further supplementary estimates will so provide, and will contain a further item of $8,500,000 for this purpose. The two items combined will bring the total federal aid to universities in Canada in the present fiscal year to $25,600,000.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members will welcome the announcement of the Minister of Finance extending the scheme for assistance to higher education in Canada introduced by the previous government, as he has indicated, a couple of years ago. We shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter in detail—and it warrants that discussion—when the supplementary estimates are before the house. At this moment I merely say that the universities need this help, and I am sure they will welcome the additional amount they are to receive from the government.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Finance will go some small way toward solving the educational crisis in this country, and the crisis that faces our universities. We would hope that the government would enunciate an over-all educational program to include scholarships, and that the government would make this a first step in a rapid movement to the achievement of equal educational opportunities for all within our nation.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I address a question to the Minister of Finance apropos of the announcement he just made concerning an increase in university grants. May I ask him if the government of the province of Quebec has given any indication whether or not it will accept these grants?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have had no indication that the government of the province of Quebec will accept the grants on any existing basis.

CANADA COUNCIL—STATUS OF CIVIL SERVANTS AWARDED SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to give me an answer to a question I asked him on July 26 concerning the awarding of scholarships by the Canada Council to civil servants, to which question he intended, I know, to make an early reply.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman communicated with me and advised that he was going to ask for an answer to the question he asked on July 26, which was to the following effect:

I have been informed that some persons awarded scholarships by the Canada Council have been denied the opportunity to take advantage of these scholarships because they are civil servants. Can the Prime Minister inform the house of government policy in this respect, and would he have this matter looked into to see that there is no conflict in policy or with the government's intentions?

I would point out to the hon. member that on other occasions in the house I have been asked about activities of the Canada Council, and in reply I have said that the Canada Council is not an agency of Her Majesty and that the Canada Council Act clearly specifies the manner in which the council is to report to parliament annually. However, in view of the fact that on the occasion when the question was asked I advised the hon. gentleman that I would communicate with the council to see whether or not an answer could be secured, I may say that in carrying out that undertaking I also communicated with the civil service commission.

The civil service commission reports that a civil servant—not some civil servants—requested leave with full pay to take up a Canada Council scholarship of $4,000 for an academic year. The commission advises that it has no fixed policy or regulation that prevents a civil servant taking a scholarship but that it is a matter for judgment and discretion to be exercised in each case as to whether or not leave with pay should be granted. In this one case the commission felt that leave with pay should only be granted during the summer months, when the individual in question could be relatively easily spared from his regular position, and that leave without pay could be granted during the academic year for which he would hold the scholarship, and the stand he took was that he declined the scholarship on that basis. Had he been granted leave with full pay for the full period he requested it would have cost an additional $6,000 over and above the amount to be paid to him under the scholarship.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's very lengthy answer to this question, but I have a letter here from Professor C. S. Burchill in which he says:

India—Financing of Development Plan

The application for leave which I submitted followed precedents established at this institution, and was for leave on half-pay only—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the hon. member's interest in the question, but this is not the proper place to give information. Perhaps he will find an opportunity on the estimates.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING CONFERENCE ON FOREIGN EXCHANGE SITUATION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, hon. members may have seen in the press statements that during the earlier part of this week discussions were held in Washington under the auspices of the international bank for reconstruction and development regarding the foreign exchange situation confronting India.

The meetings were attended by representatives of the bank itself, and also of the United States, the United Kingdom, Germany, Japan and Canada. Apart from Canada all these countries may be described as India's chief creditors, either in the sense that the value of their exports to India substantially exceeds their imports or in the sense that they have extended substantial credits to India for past exports and the debts are now coming due. Canada is not a major creditor in either sense. However, the Indian authorities had advised us that they would wish Canada to be represented at the meetings, and the government accordingly decided to send a representative from Canada to attend. I know the house would approve this decision, in view of the great interest of Canadians in India and the important position which India holds in the commonwealth and in the world.

I am now informed that there was full agreement in Washington about the situation in which India now finds herself and also as to the urgent need to find a constructive solution. The problem arises chiefly from the fact that India's second five-year development plan is requiring more foreign purchases, in a more concentrated period, than India can at the moment pay for. While India has been cutting back both her imports for consumption and her domestic development plans, I am sure nobody, and certainly no Canadian, would wish to see India's development arrested or retarded.

Canada, as I have said, is not one of India's chief creditors either in the sense of accumulated obligations or in the sense of an export surplus. Therefore the Canadian government is not confronted by the main problem facing others; that is to say, the problem of how to arrange finance to cover their excess exports to India or how to exchange short term obligations for medium and long term obligations. Officials of the other governments represented in Washington are now reporting to their governments and there seems to be good reason to hope that India's problems in this field for the immediate future may be solved.

We have not yet been able to give full consideration to the report of our representative, who returned to Ottawa only last evening, the meetings having concluded yesterday at noon. However, I think I may report to the house that it appears that in the context of the Washington meetings and the particular group of problems that were under discussion there, the most helpful thing that Canada can do is to continue to provide India with the Canadian goods she may require in her development program. In large measure these are provided on the basis of grants out of the moneys voted by this house under the Colombo plan. To this extent they create no financial obligations on the part of India, nor have they done so in the past. We may also be able to help by accelerating our Colombo plan shipments; and to the extent that this is physically possible, the house may be assured that it will be done.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister's announcement deals with a matter of great importance, primarily of course to India but also to Canada, because there is nothing of much greater importance in the free world at the present time than the effort being made by a free democratic government in India to develop by democratic planning a way to take care of the needs of its great and growing population. Therefore I am sure the house will have welcomed the announcement made by the minister.

The problem of assisting India to meet its indebtedness from outside investment assistance has now been considered in Washington by representatives of the United States and of other countries, of which Canada is one. It is true, as the minister has said, that our assistance to India since world war II has taken the form of grants of capital aid rather than loans. Therefore we are not, as are some other countries, a major creditor of India. I welcome the statement of the minister that this kind of assistance is going to continue—I suppose through the Colombo plan—and I suggest to him that what he has said has underlined the desirability of emphasizing the necessity for capital rather than consumer aid. There has been a move, and I am not criticizing it, in recent months to assist India by sending to her under the Colombo plan consumer goods, but the Colombo plan was originally designed to assist India in the kind of development about which the minister has spoken by the provision of capital goods. I do hope that in our desire to help India in other respects we will not lose sight of the importance of maintaining this capital assistance.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we listened with a great deal of interest to the announcement by the Minister of Finance. We are very concerned that the Canadian government should continue to help India develop her economy. India is, after all, the great fortress of democracy in Asia, and we feel that the Canadian government should do everything possible to maintain the outpost of democracy in that large nation. We believe the Canadian people have sufficient sympathetic understanding of what is happening in India that they would welcome this government taking a liberal approach to this matter and exerting much more effort on behalf of India than has been the case in years gone by.

We feel that the extent of Canada's aid to overseas territories, and especially those overseas territories which are attempting to develop our form of government, should be more like 1 per cent of our gross national product; in other words we should be thinking in terms of $300 million rather than in terms of $30 million or $35 million.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOURQUE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean has a matter which he endeavoured to raise last night.

(Translation):

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have here before me an article taken from last evening's Journal, and which reads as follows:

(Text):

Nobody Told Him of Boycott!

At 3.30 this afternoon a lone Liberal, Romuald Bourque, Outremont-St. Jean, wandered into the public accounts committee.

He was given tremendous applause, looked slightly embarrassed, and explained that "nobody told me we weren't supposed to come to this committee".

Then he left.

(Translation):

That is absolutely untrue. In accordance with the statement made by my leader, I did not attend the meeting which was held at 1:30 p.m., but I attended the sitting of the public accounts committee in conformity with the decision made by our party to take part in the meeting which had been called for yesterday afternoon at 3.30. I arrived at the meeting at 3.30 o'clock and I remained until the end. In other words, I only left the meeting when it had been duly adjourned and not before. I wanted to have the true facts on the record, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON NEWSPAPER REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a disturbing report in the Globe and Mail that the government will not make deficiency payments on western grain but will instead pay $1 per acre up to $200 per farmer, a most disturbing and inadequate amount. I would appreciate the Prime Minister's comments on this report.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to announce government policy by way of comment on any newspaper article, but I can say this to the hon. gentleman. No matter what is done he will always say it is not enough.

Mr. Argue: Especially if it is peanuts, like this announcement.

FEDERAL-MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister give the house any information he has concerning the meeting to be held soon with the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities, in particular with regard to the proposed agenda?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the hon. member knows, last February the association of mayors made representations to the cabinet and asked, among other things, for the convening of an informal meeting so they might place before the cabinet information concerning the position of municipalities throughout the country as a whole. The date of that meeting has now been determined as the 6th of October, and it may continue into the 7th.

Consideration has been given to the routine to be followed, but as yet the agenda has not been determined.

AGRICULTURE

TOBACCO—REPORTED BLIGHT IN ONTARIO CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that a blight of unknown origin has been detected in the Ontario tobacco crop? If so, can the minister inform the house what steps his department is taking toward finding a solution to this problem?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, research officers of the department are aware of the condition known as leaf spot or wet weather fleck in tobacco. The condition existed in a severe form in tobacco in Ontario in 1955 and again in 1957. Present indications are that damage will not be serious in 1958. Tobacco losses in 1955 and 1957 were estimated at eight million pounds and six million pounds respectively.

An extensive research program has been undertaken by the department with the co-operation of the meteorological service of the Department of Transport, the Ontario research foundation, and scientific officers of the Imperial Tobacco Company. Points under investigation include the effects of soil, fertilizers, varieties, irrigation, light, air pollution and meteorological conditions. No results are available to be reported at present. The research program will be continued and expanded if necessary.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call to the attention of the Secretary of State question No. 96, on the order paper, which has gone unanswered although it has been there for over a month. I would ask him to be so kind as to note it and to see whether he could give an answer before the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) are submitted to the house.

UNITED NATIONS

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—REFERENCE TO DATE OF PRESS RELEASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address another question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not giving him notice. It is based on a document I received in my office just prior to coming to the house. It is a press release which indicates that the occupants of the Prime Minister's office are one month ahead of ordinary mortals in their understanding of the time-space dimension, or may indicate the influence of British Columbia in his office. The document is a press release concerning the Prime Minister's attitude toward the proposal of the President of the United States for an increase in the resources of the international monetary fund, and so on. My point is that the press release is dated Tuesday, September 26 and for immediate release. Will the Prime Minister say when we can make up this time?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about the press release, but the care with which the hon. gentleman has observed the mistake in the date indicates the meticulous attention which he gives to small matters.

TELEVISION

FORT FRANCES, ONT.—REPORTED CLOSED CIRCUIT PERMIT TO U.S. FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I would like to know whether there is any foundation for a press release which appeared on the first page of this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that a United States firm has been granted clearance by Ottawa to bring closed circuit television to Fort Frances in Canada? If so, is it in accordance with section 14 of Bill C-55?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I have no knowledge of the press release; I have not seen it. There was no press release issued or authorized in any way, shape or form. I will look at the statement in the press and advise the hon. gentleman later whether there is any foundation for the statement; I am sure there is not.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. C-44, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Perhaps I should say very briefly here that this is a very minor amendment in the Excise Tax Act. The Senate looked at one expression in the bill which reads, "Shall be received in evidence as prima facie proof" and chose an alternative expression, "Shall be prima facie evidence". I may say that the former expression is preferred by the Department of Justice, but apart from some legalistic hair-splitting I do not think any member of the house will regard this as a matter of substance. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am moving simply for concurrence in the amendment proposed.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the high court of Ontario, for one additional judge of the appeal division of the supreme court of New Brunswick and for six additional judges for the county courts of Ontario.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister not going to give some explanation?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not think much explanation is necessary. The resolution is self-explanatory. The legislatures of the respective provinces have passed and proclaimed the legislation to provide for these judicial positions, and the attorneys general of the provinces have requested us to enact the necessary amendment to the Judges Act to provide the salaries in order that the appointments may be made to the offices. Accordingly we are recommending to the house that we be given the authority to introduce the necessary bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have a few observations I should like to make about one item in the resolution; and I make them, I suppose, because I represent a constituency in one of the Atlantic provinces. In the province I represent, which has a population almost within 100,000 of the population of New Brunswick and where I do not suppose the people are very much more law abiding or less litigious than they are in New Brunswick, there are three high court judges and only two county court judges. In Nova Scotia, which has a population of at least 150,000 more than New Brunswick, and I would think a population at least as litigious, there are only seven high court judges.

It does seem rather extraordinary that in New Brunswick eight high court judges should be required for the discharge of the judicial duties. I understand that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi has a word to say about the situation in New Brunswick, but it does seem to me there is a great disproportion between the figures for the three provinces. I know the minister's predecessor did not just automatically accept requests to increase the number of judges when they came from the provinces, but made a very careful inquiry to see whether the money of the taxpayers of Canada should be expended for this purpose. It does seem to me that in this particular case we should have a more detailed explanation than we have had from the minister.

Mr. McWilliam: Mr. Chairman, I am not completely clear in my own mind on exactly what procedure is followed with regard to the appointing of judges. Possibly I am right in presuming that the only purpose of this legislation is to provide for salaries. However, I should like the minister to tell me whether any examination of the need for the appointment of a judge is made in these cases. There is provision here for the appointment of an additional judge for the appeal court of New Brunswick, and as far as I have been able to ascertain the consensus is that there is much greater need for another judge in the Queen's bench division. If that is so, I wonder whether the minister has looked into the need for an additional judge for the Queen's bench division as against the present recommendation.

As I said before, I do not know whether that is within his jurisdiction. Possibly the purpose of the legislation is simply to provide salaries. Would the minister comment on that point?

Mr. Fulton: Of course I have made inquiries and satisfied myself, as I have had to satisfy my colleagues, that there is necessity and justification for the appointment requested by the province. In the course of these inquiries I have had correspondence with the attorney general of New Brunswick. My hon. friends opposite will, of course, appreciate that the constitution of the courts is entirely a matter of provincial jurisdiction. It is therefore up to the province to determine to what branch of the courts additional appointments should be made, while we have the responsibility mainly of satisfying ourselves as to the necessity of such additional appointments.

I understand that there was discussion and consideration in New Brunswick with respect to whether the additional appointment should be made to the supreme court or to the appellate division, and the decision was that it should be made by way of an extra judge appointed to the branch of the court exercising appellate jurisdiction. That is my information from the attorney general.

As hon. members from New Brunswick will appreciate, there is in that province a judge exercising jurisdiction in divorce and matrimonial causes who is appointed under provincial legislation with authority in that field. That judge, Mr. Justice Anglin, has recently tendered his resignation as the judge in divorce and matrimonial causes, and it is therefore necessary to find another judge to discharge that responsibility. The intention is that if this legislation carries the judge newly appointed will assume that divorce jurisdiction. He will be available, of course, as a judge in chancery, the division of the courts in New Brunswick exercising appeal jurisdiction, as I understand it, but will also have jurisdiction in divorce and matrimonial causes.

I am informed by the attorney general of New Brunswick that this matter has been discussed with the council of the barristers' society of New Brunswick and with the chief justice of the province, Mr. Justice McNair, who is of the opinion that this is the best way to handle the matter. I am also informed that the number of judges in New Brunswick has not been increased since 1913, and that the population of the province has increased by about 50 per cent since that time. I am also informed that in 1936, for instance, there were 196 cases before the court having jurisdiction in divorce and matrimonial causes, but that in 1956 there were 597 cases.

I might also point out for the information of hon. members that we are not unmindful of the fact that the appointment of additional judges requires the payment of additional salaries. Therefore hon. members will be interested to learn that although in the past it has been provided by statute under our Judges Act that there will be an additional salary of $500 payable to the judge in New Brunswick who is in charge of the divorce court, that salary will no longer be paid and, with the agreement of the attorney general of the province, the bill to be introduced if this resolution carries will provide for the elimination of that additional salary of $500.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has given us statistics for New Brunswick. I suppose in making the decision to bring this matter before us he also looked at the case load in the province of Nova Scotia, where there is a very much larger population, where there is only one court, as I understand it, and where one would expect the need for additional judges would probably be greater than it is in New Brunswick. I also wondered whether there were any other provinces with two courts, such as there are in New Brunswick, Manitoba and I believe in most provinces from New Brunswick west, that is to say a trial and an appeal court, where the number of appeal judges equalled the number of trial judges.

Mr. Fulton: I do not have the figures before me, but offhand I do not believe there are. As I have pointed out, however, it is the feeling of the government of New Brunswick, which is responsible for the constitution of the courts of that province, that this will be the best way to handle the matter. The new judge to be appointed to the appeal court will exercise jurisdiction in divorce and matrimonial causes, which will relieve one of the judges of the supreme court of that duty. Five hundred and ninety-seven cases, including 222 divorce cases, represents a fair burden of work in divorce and matrimonial causes.

Mr. Brooks: I wonder if I might say a word; I had not intended to speak. I think the Minister of Justice has explained the situation in the province of New Brunswick very well. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has made a comparison between Newfoundland and New Brunswick. I think our population is about 125,000 greater than that of Newfoundland. Newfoundland just came into confederation a short time ago, and it is my understanding that that province is pressing for more judges. I believe that is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not know.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member would not know, and would not admit it if he did.

Mr. Pickersgill: They only have three judges as opposed to the seven you have now.

Mr. Brooks: I believe the number of judges New Brunswick has compares very favourably with the number of judges in other provinces of Canada. Nova Scotia has two more judges than New Brunswick, one more county court judge and one more supreme court judge. If the hon. member will look at the record—and I do not intend to take the time of the committee to go into detail on that point now—he will find that the other provinces in Canada have about the same number of judges in proportion to population as we have in New Brunswick.

There is another situation in New Brunswick which does not apply to most of the other provinces in Canada. We have about a 60-40 split in the population as between French speaking and English speaking. This makes a little extra work so far as the courts are concerned. I know that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has not mentioned this matter in too serious a vein. This request for a judge has been made by the barristers' society of New Brunswick and also by the chief justice, who is a very good friend of the hon. member—

Mr. Pickersgill: And for whom I have very great respect.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Brooks: —and whose judgment I think he believes as I do, is pretty sound in most things. We make no apology for asking for another judge in New Brunswick.

I might refer also to the fact that one of our judges, who is very well known to many of the members of this house, has been ill for some time. I refer to Mr. Justice Clovis T. Richard. We have been rather proud of our bench in New Brunswick, and for many years we have had outstanding men on that bench. I am satisfied that a judge is needed. I am pleased that the justice department has realized this and has acceded to the representations not only of the barristers' society and the chief justice, but also of the government of New Brunswick. I see no reason at all, Mr. Chairman, why the request should not be granted.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just thinking of the taxpayers.

Mr. Brooks: You were just thinking, that is all.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to ask the Minister of Justice some questions concerning that part of the resolution which relates to the province of Ontario. As I understand it, in the high court of Ontario there are a chief justice and 18 judges. The result of this proposal will be to increase the number of judges to 20. I believe that is undoubtedly necessary, because there has been a condition of overwork of the judges of the high court of Ontario.

With respect to the county courts in Ontario, my understanding is that there are now 64 judges in the county courts, and that the proposal is to increase that number to 70. The point which concerns me, and about which I desire some further information, is this. In the past, county court judges have been appointed to designated counties, that is each judge to his particular county. These six additional judges may or may not be necessary, depending on the areas to which they are to be appointed.

My reason for saying that is this. There has been a rapid growth in some parts of the province and a much slower rate of growth in other parts of the province. The boundaries of the older counties have not been changed for a great number of years. The consequence is that we have judges appointed to counties where the total population is of the order of 25,000 persons, and there is very little for them to do. In other parts of the province, where rapid growth has taken place, there may be one or two judges dealing with an area in which there is a population of a quarter of a million persons. The work is away beyond the capacity of those judges, and it is that problem I have in mind. If the minister could give me any information as to where these six additional judges will be serving, I would be grateful to him.

Mr. Fulton: I have had discussions on the point mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa West, with the attorney general of Ontario. It is the intention that these judges be appointed to serve in those areas where their appointment will best resolve the disparity between places where there is a heavy case load and a carryover of cases, and other areas where there is a light case load and the judges are left with some time on their hands.

The attorney general of Ontario, as he has announced in the legislature of that province, is presently working on a scheme with a view to equalizing the judicial load as among the judges of the county courts and also with a view to equalizing what I might call the judicial services as among various areas of the province, so that ultimately county court judges in Ontario will each be doing approximately the same amount of work and the different areas of Ontario will be served, with respect to the speed of dispatch of their cases, equally well. In this way we will not have a situation where in one area the judges are overworked and cases are dragging, whereas in another area cases are heard and decided with dispatch.

As I understand it, and as the attorney general has discussed it with me, there is to be one extra judge for district No. 1.

Mr. Benidickson: Could the minister indicate the geographical place name of the county seat?

Mr. Fulton: As I recall it, in the No. 1 area the greatest case-load was in Essex; in district No. 2 there is to be one extra judge, and there the greatest case-load seems to be in Lincoln, Welland and Wentworth; in district No. 3 there is to be one extra judge available in the Simcoe area; district No. 4, which is York county, will have two extra judges. I do not think I need to say anything to my hon. friends from Ontario about the case-load in the county courts of that district. In district No. 8 there will be one extra judge, as I recall it, in the area of Sudbury.

Mr. McIlraith: It is rather interesting, as I understand it, that the minister is asking the house to approve a resolution providing for the appointment of judges in Ontario without knowing precisely where those judges will be appointed, and before the province has made the necessary legislative provision—

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend is quite wrong.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to have that point clear.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend is quite wrong. The Ontario act, which was a bill to amend the county judges' act, was passed at the fourth session of the 25th legislature—that is their last session—and was proclaimed by order in council to come into force on August 21, 1958. Hence the six additional judges will be appointed under the provision of the Ontario act to which I have referred. If my hon. friend will look at section 2 of that bill he will see the provision relating to the appointment of these six judges.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the minister for clearing up that point; I had not understood his earlier remarks. I am concerned about one other thing. He has indicated the six areas in which he expects these judges to serve. As I understand the matter, the second or third heaviest case load in the province is in Ottawa, in the county of Carleton. There is a situation here which is not conducive to the best standards of the administration of justice because of overwork of the two judges in the county of Carleton. The situation has been alleviated by certain administrative changes whereby the county court judge of the counties of Prescott and Russell relieves and does a good deal of work in the county of Carleton. I hope that when this legislation passes the minister will bear that matter in mind in his further discussions with the attorney general of the province, in order to see whether the situation cannot be improved by way of providing additional judicial capacity for service in Carleton county.

Mr. Fulton: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Benidickson: My recollection is that these amendments to the complement of judges are preceded by conferences between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general, because we have the peculiar situation in which the federal government pays the salaries of the judges yet the provinces must determine the geographical area of the county court set-up. In connection with the discussions which the minister has doubtless had with the attorney general preceding the introduction of this resolution and his announced intention, has he had from the attorney general of Ontario an indication that there would be any alteration in the pattern of the county court judicial seats in the Kenora and Rainy River districts?

Mr. Fulton: No, I have not. As I said a few moments ago, the attorney general of Ontario has in mind a scheme for improving the administration of the county courts generally, but that is a scheme with relation to the whole province. Whether ultimately there would be any effect on the county or district mentioned by my hon. friend is something which I, of course, am not in a position to say. But in so far as the present situation is concerned, nothing in our discussions has led me to believe that a specific change will be made with relation to that area or that there will be any change unless and until there is an over-all change as a result of the implementation of a general scheme.

Mr. Benidickson: Our population there, of course, is growing fairly impressively, largely owing to the natural resource development. The Rainy River district court, perhaps from the point of view of the case load, has not been impressive, but on the other hand our geographical area is huge. In addition to that, on the eastern boundary of the district there is a development that I think will be extremely important from the point of view of population. I refer, of course, to the iron mine development at Steep Rock and Atikokan. I think it would be a most unfortunate step if we looked simply to the present case load and overlooked the great hardship to litigants as well as members of the bar if there was any thought of combining the two courts of Kenora and Rainy River.

The matter was drawn to my attention two or three years ago when I believe the attorney general of Ontario at that time asked the then minister of justice to increase the number of county court judges. It was conveyed to me indirectly that one of the places he had in mind for compensating reduction or economy in the matter of courts was the combination of the two county court seats of Kenora and Rainy River. I opposed that suggestion very strenuously and I think with some success. I just remind the minister that we would feel it to be a most unfortunate thing if, when we were increasing the judges in one place there should be great inconvenience caused to the public because of some form of trading on the basis of the final number of judges. Our geographical area is about one-eighth of Ontario, though we do not have that proportion of the 90 members of the legislature of Ontario.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Garland: Earlier the minister referred to what he described as the Sudbury area. Could he say whether it includes the district of Nipissing?

Mr. Fulton: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, at the present time it does not. Nipissing forms a separate county within district No. 8. As I understand the organization of the courts in Ontario, Sudbury also forms a separate county or district within that general district. I pointed out that Sudbury seems to be the area of greatest case load at the present time within district No. 8, and I indicated that as I understand the scheme envisaged by the attorney general of Ontario, the intention is to make these initial six appointments as a first step in the equalizing of the case load throughout the county courts of Ontario. The exact places in which the judges will reside will be fixed later under the Ontario legislation. But the indication given me by the attorney general is as I have just given it to the house, namely that these are the areas of greatest case load and these are the areas in which he wishes to have these six county court judges serve in order to equalize the situation throughout the province.

Mr. Garland: When the minister says "reside" does he mean where they will carry out their duties.

Mr. Fulton: Not necessarily. They will be available, as I understand it, to go on circuit, as it were. That is not the correct term because it usually applies to judges of superior courts, but it is something of the same nature that the attorney general has in mind. Their place of residence is to be fixed, but they will be available for work outside of that place of residence. The places I have designated are the ones which primarily need the assistance.

Mr. Garland: Will they have the status of judge or junior judge?

Mr. Fulton: I am not certain. I believe they will all be judges except possibly the one in Essex, the one with respect to whom the intention is that he should primarily serve the Essex area. I do not have that information before me. Of course I shall have it before me at the time the appointments are actually made.

Mr. Benidickson: From time to time I have noticed orders in council indicating that the Minister of Justice recommends to the privy council that certain judges be given leave of absence. I think probably it is required when for some reason they want to leave the province. Does the federal authority or the provincial authority deal with absences of judges of the county courts?

Mr. Fulton: The federal authority also deals with absences of judges from the county courts, and such leave of absence is given only after an assurance—which as I recall it in the case of county court judges comes from the attorney general—to the effect that arrangements have been made for serving the area which that judge who was given a leave of absence would normally serve.

Mr. McMillan: I think the minister referred to area No. 2, which would comprise Lincoln, Welland, Wentworth and, I presume, the city of Hamilton. At the present time Welland has two county court judges and Lincoln has one, and I do not know how many there are in Hamilton. I just wondered if the minister could be more specific and say to which county this extra judge would be assigned?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot say at the present time. The scheme of the Ontario Act, as hon. members will see if they look at clause 2 thereof, provides for the appointment in such a manner that the area in which the judges are to reside and serve may be subsequently designated under the authority of the province. I have merely indicated that in the course of my discussions with the attorney general he passed on to me his desire to relieve the work load in the most overcrowded of these districts, that is, overcrowded in the sense of the number of cases on the dockets. I cannot be more specific at the moment than I have been, because this is the general outline I received from the attorney general.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fulton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-59, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

BRIDGES

NEW BRUNSWICK-MAINE—AUTHORITY TO CONSTRUCT

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-56, to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lubec channel between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the construction of a bridge between Campobello island in the province of New Brunswick and the town of Lubec in the state of Maine. The bill provides that the province of New Brunswick may enter into an agreement with the state of Maine for the construction, maintenance and operation of such a bridge.

An act of the United States congress recently passed authorized the state highway commission of the state of Maine to construct, maintain and operate that part of the bridge extending from the international boundary to the mainland of the state of Maine. The matter will be submitted to the state legislature in Maine for action in January, 1959. The bridge will be for the free use and passage of persons, vehicles and goods from a point on Campobello island in New Brunswick to the town of Lubec in Maine.

At the present time there is a ferry service between Campobello island and Lubec, which is subsidized by the federal government under the Canadian maritime commission and the province of New Brunswick. The subsidy is shared equally between the two governments. The service, however, is limited and does not normally operate during the hours of darkness.

The province of New Brunswick has surveyed the area in conjunction with the state of Maine, and they jointly feel that the ferry service should be replaced by a permanent bridge. In part this decision is based on the fact that there are no medical facilities on Campobello island, and there have been many cases where emergency trips have had to be made under adverse and sometimes dangerous conditions. Further, for the development of trade and tourism it is felt that the existing ferry service is completely inadequate and should be replaced by a permanent structure.

The bill does not deal with financial matters; it merely permits the province of New Brunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine, which agreement would cover the financial arrangements and the procedure for construction. This bill does, however, provide that any such agreement is subject to the approval of the governor in council, and also provides that construction must be in accordance with and subject to the regulations for safeguarding navigation.

The bill also provides that Canadian labour and materials to the extent of approximately 50 per cent shall be employed in the construction of the bridge. Arrangements for financing the construction of the bridge and approaches would in the first instance be a matter for agreement between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine, which agreement will be permitted by this legislation.

It is proposed that the design of the structure will be undertaken by the state highway commission. However, provision will be made in the agreement that tenders will be called both in Maine and New Brunswick.

As the proposed bridge would be built in the area included in the Passamaquoddy tidal development, which is before the international joint commission, confirmation has been obtained from the commission that the construction of a bridge at this location would not interfere in any way with the proposals being considered by it. Furthermore, there would be no financial advantage in seeking to merge the proposed bridge with any of the dam structures under consideration for the power development project.

As this would be an international structure, and in view of the fact that the federal government now assumes 50 per cent of the ferry subsidy, the province of New Brunswick has requested that the federal government participate with the province in the case of the Canadian share of this structure. Should the necessary legislation be enacted and a satisfactory agreement entered into between the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick, the federal government has agreed to share in the cost of the project with the province of New Brunswick. The present proposal is that the federal government will bear two thirds of the cost of the Canadian half of the structure and the New Brunswick approach and that the province of New Brunswick will assume one third of the cost of the structure and approach and, in addition, assume 100 per cent responsibility for the construction of a connection from the highway system to the bridge approach.

On the basis of preliminary estimates the Canadian share of the project would be $580,000, and funds for federal participation would be dealt with under the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

The total cost of the bridge is estimated at $1,050,000. The state of Maine will be responsible for half of that, and the federal government and the province of New Brunswick will be responsible for the other half, $525,000. In addition there is the cost of additional approaches to the bridge on Campobello island, which is estimated to be $6,000, and there is the cost of the road connection from the present New Brunswick highway on the island to the approaches to the bridge, which it is estimated will cost $49,000. The best figure we can get is that the cost in Canada would be approximately $354,000 to be paid by the federal government and $226,000 to be paid by the province of New Brunswick.

This is, of course, simply an enabling bill.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary for me to speak at great length because, as the minister has just said, this bill is self-explanatory and is an enabling bill to give permission to the government of New Brunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine, a measure which is necessary in accordance with article 92, section 10 of the British North America Act.

I suppose the minister has satisfied himself that there is a need for this bridge; in fact I think he has shown that there is. And I take it he is satisfied that this is an economically justified project, because the share which the federal government will pay will replace the subsidy now being paid under the Canadian maritime commission. This being clear, I think we on this side have no objection to this measure. We are in accord with the principle of the bill and we approve the measure, though we will have some questions to ask during the committee stage.

Mr. R. D. C. Stewart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill with a great deal of pleasure and some degree of personal satisfaction. My personal satisfaction I will leave to my constituents to judge, but I do think some facts should be placed on the record to indicate the necessity for this bridge.

As hon. members know, Charlotte, my constituency, is a small county with a population of some 25,000, with three islands, one of which is called Campobello island, which has a population of some 1,300 and which is separated from the state of Maine by a narrow passage called the Lubec channel approximately 800 feet in width, and which is the means of access by the people of Campobello to the state of Maine and to the rest of Canada.

As the minister has pointed out, this need has been served in the past by a very inadequate ferry—a scow pushed by a small motor—which closes down at six o'clock in the evening. Anyone on the island after that has to stay on the island, and anyone who is off the island has to stay off the island. There are no facilities to enable people to to reach the island or leave it after nightfall; in case of illness a doctor cannot be brought to the island except by private boat.

The house might be interested to know that in 1957 exports from Campobello amounted to approximately $1,200,000. In the same year 130,000 foot passengers went from Campobello to Lubec, and 30,000 cars were taken across. Pulpwood was exported to the value of $200,000, and fish to the value of $600,000. As hon. members know, the greater proportion of the total export of sardines by the province of New Brunswick comes from my constituency, and a large percentage of that comes from the island of Campobello.

I think all this indicates very clearly the necessity for this bridge. As the Minister of Public Works has pointed out, this bill simply enables the province of New Brunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine to provide for the construction and maintenance of this bridge. It will be a free bridge, and traffic will pass over it freely. The people of Campobello have for many years advocated the building of such a bridge, and I am sure I am expressing their views when I say that they wish me to convey to this parliament the appreciation they feel for the steps which have been taken on their behalf. I am sure if this bill passes and becomes law we will have gained the undying gratitude of the people of Campobello and the people of Charlotte county.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This is the type of bill which commends itself to all parties of this house. We know that the bridge which it is proposed to build will meet a very long standing need of the people of the island of Campobello, and we are pleased to lend our support to the passage of this measure.

This is another indication of the excellent relations which ordinarily exist between our country and the United States. The fact that we are able to work out with the United States a method of building a bridge such as this between our two countries is an indication that co-operation is usually possible and to our mutual benefit.

The Minister of Public Works has given us a fairly comprehensive review of the main features of the bill. I notice there is one provision which seems to make certain that the project will not run into such difficulties as have been experienced in connection with a certain well-known project in the city of Hull, namely the printing bureau. I do not know whether or not this is a new pattern which has been set by the government, but the government is certainly tightening its regulations and its supervision to make certain that if anything is done which might be of the nature of a scandal or an extravagant expenditure of public funds, it will be laid at the doorstep of the governor in council and not of some departmental official a certain number of rungs down the ladder. As the Minister of Public Works has explained, the governor in council will have to pass on the plans and drawings, and no subsequent material change can be made without his approval.

I do not know how the governor in council would have the time to supervise this kind of provision if it were in every act and if the government made it its business to carry it out under every act providing for construction, but it does seem to me to be an indication that the government is tightening up on the construction procedures in the Department of Public Works, and presumably in other departments, to make certain that full value is obtained for the construction dollar.

However, it will be very interesting in a few years, probably next year, to see whether or not we can have a full and wide ranging discussion of projects that have been built by this government such as has taken place in reference to other projects. I express the hope that in the days ahead we may have a chance to make a thorough and careful inquiry into projects constructed under this administration, following the provision of such a section as is in this bill, to see whether or not there has been inefficiency, extravagance and waste in connection with public funds.

There is a further provision in the bill which I think is most sensible, namely that in the building of this bridge 50 per cent of the content of labour and material in so far as may be practicable shall be Canadian. I think when we are building a bridge in conjunction with the United States it is only reasonable to say that 50 per cent of the labour force will be Canadian, if that is practicable, and also that 50 per cent of the material content shall also be of Canadian origin.

We are very pleased to support this bill, and we feel that it will prove of great value to the people of New Brunswick, to the residents of Maine and to Canadians and Americans generally in the years ahead.

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that this bill is enabling legislation. Like the hon. member for Charlotte, I say this bill is very welcome, particularly to the people of the southwest corner of the province and the people of Campobello island. I think the population figure is some 1,176. The hon. member for Charlotte gave statistics as to the amount of traffic and the volume of fish taken across Campobello island to the mainland and to the state of Maine.

While I support this bill, when I looked at the map the thought occurred to me to ask whether much consideration was given to the fact that perhaps in the days to come there may be a connecting link from the mainland of New Brunswick to the state of Maine by means of bridges or causeways across the islands in this part of the province. If that should come about it would seem to me it would be more practicable to build the bridge from Deer island to Eastport, Maine. Deer island lies fairly close to the state of Maine, but not as close as Campobello. On the other hand it is much closer to the mainland of New Brunswick, as the main part of Charlotte county.

Be that as it may, I do not offer it as anything that can be regarded as an attempt to object to the present bill. As I said before, I think everybody is in favour of it, and it is a bridge that is badly needed. When the bill is in committee I may have one or two observations to make. Perhaps at that time the minister may give us something more definite as to how the cost is to be shared. I did not quite catch his figures in his opening remarks. However, we can ascertain that when the bill is studied clause by clause.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to hold up the passage of this bill. Like the hon. member who has just spoken and also the hon. member for Charlotte, we in New Brunswick are very much interested with the construction of this bridge from Campobello island across Lubec channel.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi spoke about connecting all the islands with Eastport or some other point in Maine. Of course this is a good start along that line, and it may be practicable in future years. If it is I am sure the present government will give it every consideration. It would have to be very carefully studied as a matter of course.

I am very happy indeed that the people of those three islands, Grand Manan, Deer island and Campobello island, have been recognized by the proposed construction of this bridge. In days gone by there has been excellent water transportation between Saint John and St. Andrews and the islands. No doubt that will still be continued, but this bridge means very much to the people of Campobello. I have recommended it in the past and I was very pleased indeed to give what assistance I could to the hon. member for Charlotte in his advocacy of this bridge.

Campobello island has had quite an interesting history. As a matter of fact all the three islands there of which we are very proud have a long and interesting history. They are very important, too, as part of the great fishing industry of the bay of Fundy. Campobello, as you know, was the summer home of the late President Roosevelt. I have not the least doubt that the construction of this bridge from Lubec to Campobello will bring about a very extensive tourist traffic from the mainland to the island. But more particularly it will be a great convenience to the people on Campobello island who, as was clearly stated by the minister and also by the hon. member for Charlotte, become isolated after certain hours of the day and the people also have not the necessary conveniences which people in other parts of New Brunswick, or in other parts of Canada have.

As I said a moment ago, I am very happy that this bridge is to be constructed and that the dominion government is bearing its share of the cost of construction.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I too am not anxious either to oppose or hold up the bill. However, I do not think this is as routine a bill as some previous speakers have indicated. My recollection is that we have seldom if ever contributed to the construction of an international bridge. I do know that in the territory which I represent we have the United States across the Rainy river and for some years we have been interested in getting a federal contribution, probably jointly with the state of Minnesota and the province of Ontario, toward the construction of two international bridges which are badly needed in that area. We have always understood that since confederation this has not been one of the normal functions of the Department of Public Works. Therefore I hope when the minister replies he will indicate whether or not a new policy is developing in this respect.

As hon. members know, three or four years ago private bills were passed by the house for the construction of a bridge between Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, and Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, and so far it has not been possible to finance the bridge under the normal pattern that has prevailed at Niagara Falls, Brockville and other locations with which I am familiar. That pattern is that a private company usually arranges to obtain tax-free bond money from United States investors. The bonds are amortized over a period of years, and after they are paid off the bridge then reverts to the ownership of the people of the United States and Canada on a 50-50 basis. That has been the standard pattern. In the Rainy River district we have struggled valiantly to try to develop that kind of project, but we are having difficulty. Tenders were called two or three months ago and the costs were considerably greater than those estimated by the consulting engineers. That has caused a delay.

I think it is very important for people all across Canada to find out from the minister to what extent there are precedents for this type of federal contribution. We would be particularly happy to know that representations could be made from now on for federal contributions to bridges which have already been given approval in principle by the house but have not yet been constructed. I am thinking of the proposed bridges at Sault Ste. Marie and between Baudette, Minnesota, and Rainy River.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a very few words in closing the debate. First of all, with reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia may I say that this is not a new type of bill. It is drawn in the standard form; and I would be unfair to my predecessor, Hon. Robert Winters, if I were to claim that we are adopting any new principle in bringing in a bill in this form. I am quite sure the hon. member will find that this is the standard form for an international bridge of this type.

The remarks of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River were very interesting, but in the particular case now before the house the dominion government has been paying a subsidy for transportation and has recognized a responsibility to do so. I would not care to give any undertaking that every community which wants a bridge over international waters can get it merely by filing an application with the Department of Public Works. I think that would be true no matter who formed the government. It may be that the hon. member tried this out on Mr. Winters; I do not know. In any event, I am afraid I cannot give any commitment of that type today. With regard to the bridge at Sault Ste. Marie, I think that is a toll bridge.

Mr. Benidickson: There is no bridge at all yet, but they are proposing to have a toll bridge.

Mr. Green: It is to be a toll bridge, and there was no question at all of the federal government participating.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the bill passes, would the minister permit me to ask one question. I do not think he answered the question of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River with respect to whether this making of a financial contribution by the federal government was a new departure.

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is not a new departure. In certain cases this has been a responsibility that has been recognized before.

Mr. Pickersgill: When I made statements like that in the past I was always asked to cite an instance. Could the minister do that?

Mr. Green: I believe one example is the bridge at St. Stephen, New Brunswick.

Mr. Benidickson: Since confederation?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

New Brunswick-Maine bridge

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the minister give the house the total estimated cost of this bridge?

Mr. Green: The estimate of the cost is $1,050,000. That is without the additional approaches and without the road connections from existing highways. Of the $1,050,000 the state of Maine will pay half, and I believe will be assisted by the federal government in Washington. The share of Canada and the province of New Brunswick will be $525,000. In addition to the $525,000 there will be the cost of the additional approaches on Campobello island, which is estimated at $6,000.

Mr. Bourget: May I interrupt the minister. Is he speaking of the approaches connected to the bridge directly? There are approaches to the bridge, but does the minister mean some other approaches?

Mr. Green: This is the approach to the bridge itself. It is not a very big matter. It is only $6,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Could we have the total estimate?

Mr. Green: That is a total of $531,000, of which the federal share is two-thirds or $354,000, with New Brunswick paying the other one-third or $177,000. In addition, New Brunswick will pay the cost of a road connecting the present highway on Campobello island with the new approach to the bridge. That will cost $49,000, which brings the total of New Brunswick's share to $226,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the minister give me the total estimate of all works including approaches and roads?

Mr. Green: The Canadian share—

Mr. Chevrier: No; the total project, the United States and Canada.

Mr. Green: We do not know, of course, what the cost of the approach on the Maine side will be. The total Canadian cost, including the connecting road, is $580,000. The Americans will have to pay half the cost of the bridge, $525,000.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the figure of $1,050,000?

Mr. Green: I should have said that this is an additional approach on Campobello island. The main approaches on both sides are included in the total estimate of $1,050,000.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the figure of $1,050,000 which the minister gave earlier?

I asked what the total estimate was and the minister gave a figure of $1,050,000.

Mr. Green: That is the estimated cost of the structure, including approaches and engineering. The figure of $6,000 is for an additional approach on the Campobello island side.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister indicate to the committee who prepared these estimates, and on what they were based?

Mr. Green: There have been long conversations among officials of the government of New Brunswick, the state of Maine and the Department of Public Works, and these estimates are the result of the collaboration among the three groups of engineers.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say how many contracts will be involved in the Canadian part of this project?

Mr. Green: No, we cannot state that yet, It has not proceeded to that stage.

Mr. Chevrier: Will it be one contract or more than one?

Mr. Green: I cannot say that, but tenders are being called, both in Canada and in the United States.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask the minister if borings and soundings have been made?

Mr. Green: I am not in a position to give the committee that information, but I have little doubt that such precautions will be taken.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask the minister if the department has seen the plans for the bridge? Is it to be a steel bridge or a concrete bridge? I cannot understand clause 4, which says that the location, borings and soundings will have to be approved by the department. How can the minister explain this estimate of $1,050,000 if no soundings or borings have been made and no plans are made? Would it be a concrete bridge or a steel bridge?

Mr. Green: As the hon. member knows, it takes some time to work out plans. In this case the design will take about six months. The ordinary practice, as he is well aware having had experience in the Department of Public Works, is to have an estimate of what the project will cost. It would be unwise to go to all the expense of having this design done until there has been an approval of the scheme. As yet no one has any authoritly to proceed to prepare for the construction of the bridge.

Mr. Bourget: I just cannot follow the minister. He gave us an estimate of $1,050,000. How could he arrive at that figure if no plans have been drawn, no soundings and no borings? It is just a figure taken out of the air. If you have no preliminary sketches how can you arrive at that figure?

An hon. Member: Ask Mr. Walker.

Mr. Green: As the hon. member knows, this is always done. There is a preliminary estimate obtained.

Mr. Bourget: I have been told the policy has been changed.

Mr. Green: I did not say there had been any policy change in connection with this at all.

Mr. Bourget: We have been told that in the committee.

Mr. Green: Not in this committee.

Mr. Brooks: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the province of New Brunswick knows this locality very well indeed, as do the engineers of the state of Maine. This channel is about 400 feet wide; they know how long the bridge will be and how wide a bridge will be necessary. They know all about the soundings and whether or not it is a rock bottom. There is no guesswork in connection with the estimate as to what it might cost to build a bridge that long, that wide, in that depth of water. It is very easy.

Mr. Bourget: It is not very easy. You may know the width of the channel and the depth of the water, but you are not sure unless you have made borings. We have had that experience. Unless you have made borings you cannot know the depth of the rock, and that is very important.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The hon. member is in the wrong committee.

Mr. Bourget: I am in the committee of the whole here, and I am trying to find out how the department can arrive at an estimated cost of $1,050,000 without having borings or soundings made, without knowing what kind of bridge it will be, reinforced concrete or steel. We have nothing here. We have an estimate of $1,050,000, yet no one has seen the sketches.

Mr. Argue: It sounds like the printing bureau.

Mr. Bourget: It sounds worse.

The Chairman: I must remind the members of the committee that in this committee we cannot discuss what is going on in another committee. We must try to discuss the bill that is before us, and not become involved in a discussion of how costs for various constructions were arrived at.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order—

The Chairman: I have the floor at the moment. I must ask hon. members to please confine their remarks to the bill being discussed.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, I would ask Your Honour to give your ruling some reflection. As the Minister of Public Works has stated, it is estimated that the passage of this bill will involve an expenditure of $354,000 of federal money. Surely it is competent, on clause 1, for the hon. member for Levis, who has great experience in this field and wide knowledge because of his own training as well as his experience in the Department of Public Works, to ask the minister what I consider to be a very pertinent question, as to what prior knowledge the government has obtained before arriving at this very precise figure of $354,000. With great respect, although some of us have some other discussions in our minds, I would say that I do not believe the other discussion has been brought into this committee.

The Chairman: I really must say that what the hon. member for Assiniboia has stated has simply proven my earlier decision. I must ask the committee to discuss this one particular bridge. We cannot compare this bridge with what is happening in connection with the famous printing bureau, which is being discussed in another committee. I certainly agree with the hon. member for Assiniboia when he states that it is in order to discuss this particular bridge, and I must ask hon. members to discuss this bridge and this bridge alone.

Mr. Herridge: I want to speak for a minute or two in a quite different vein.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: I shall reserve my remarks until later.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Bourget: I thought the minister would probably have some answer to the question we asked this morning prior to the luncheon recess.

Mr. Green: I checked up with regard to the preparatory work that has been done in connection with this structure. Apparently the state of Maine just recently completed a bridge of about the same dimensions. Hence they had a design which could be of use for this Campobello bridge. The work on the preliminary design was done by the government of Maine and that of New Brunswick. They had the estimate on the structural portion based on a tentative design which they were able to make as a result of soundings in which they found that there was a relatively firm bottom. It is believed that the bridge could be constructed on a pile type of foundation. No actual borings were done on the site.

If the bill becomes law, there will be detailed borings and they will take off a final design based upon them, from which detailed estimates will be made and plans and specifications prepared on which tenders would be called. Then, of course, there could be no final decision as to cost until the tenders were in. I point out that this is merely an enabling bill. Without such a bill nothing can be done leading to the construction of a bridge. The bill does not provide for the expenditure of any money. That would have to be done by an estimate, and of course that estimate would be subject to scrutiny by the house in the usual way. But there would be no point in getting final plans drawn if there is not the legislative foundation for the project.

In the bill which is being presented today that is all that is sought. It is merely an enabling bill. Once it has been passed there will have to be an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States. Then the state legislature will have to pass a bill; I believe they meet in January. If this enabling bill is not passed here at the present session there is a real doubt as to whether this bridge could be built. I am sure none of the hon. members would wish that to happen. Everyone who spoke on second reading spoke in favour of the bill. There is great importance in having it go through at the present session.

Mr. Bourget: I am quite in agreement with what the minister has just said, namely that it is only enabling legislation to permit the province of New Brunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine. But in his remarks the minister also said that the cost of the bridge would be $1,050,000. I asked him at the time on what the estimate of $1,050,000 was based. There were no soundings, no borings and no plans.

Mr. Green: There were soundings; there were no borings.

Mr. Pickersgill: Made by whom?

Mr. Green: The soundings were made by the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Bourget: Even if soundings had been made, as an engineer I do not think that is the most important thing. From experience we know that what could be costly in the construction of a bridge are the piers, the foundation of the piers and abutments, because you never know what you are going to encounter. Even if the state of Maine had constructed a bridge 100 feet or 200 feet away from the location of the particular bridge mentioned in the bill, that does not mean that the solid rock would be of exactly the same nature in that particular location. It is necessary, and I do not think anybody will deny this statement, that borings be taken at that particular spot. I therefore cannot see how the minister can say the bridge will cost $1,050,000, because again there is no foundation for the estimate. He has not the information necessary to establish even an approximate estimate. What I am saying is said just to protect the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bourget: Oh, hon. members can laugh if they wish, but I am speaking from experience as an engineer. If the minister would ask his own chief engineer and his deputy minister, he would realize that what I am saying now is true. The minister has already mentioned that the share of the federal government will be $350,000. How does he know that? There are no plans, no sketches, no soundings, and no borings. The figure just came out of the air, that is all.

As I said, as far as our party is concerned we have no objection to the principle of the bill; far from it. However, we should like to have correct information about the cost of the bridge. That is what we want. I mention that point because the minister in his opening remarks stated that the cost of the bridge will be $1,050,000. Where that figure came from, nobody knows. Even the minister with the information he has is not in a position to tell us exactly where it comes from.

Mr. Green: The hon. member is not correct in that statement. I said this was an estimated cost at the present time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Estimated by whom?

Mr. Green: This cost was worked out as a result of examinations made by the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick. Soundings were taken in which it was found that there was a relatively firm bottom. They reached the conclusion that the foundation could be of a pile type. No one is committed to spend one cent at the moment. This is merely a preliminary estimate. My chief engineer advises me that this is the regular procedure, and is the proper procedure.

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly it is.

Mr. Green: Once there is authority to undertake the bridge, then of course detailed borings will be made and the plans and specifications will be drawn. In the meantime the government is not committed to spend one cent. I told the committee frankly this morning that this was the preliminary estimate, and how could you have anything more? If hon. members wish the project to go ahead I would say to them that they should let this bill pass. If it is to be dropped—

Mr. Bourget: We are for it.

Mr. Green: —they will have to take the responsibility. I am advised by my officials, and I believe the chief engineer is one of the best men in Canada for this type of work—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Green: —that this is the way these preliminary estimates are made, and I should be unreasonable if I refused to accept that advice.

Mr. Bourget: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that as far as we are concerned we are for it. However, I just cannot see how the minister could give us an estimate of $1,050,000 when there is no plan and there are no borings. I hope he will ask his deputy minister or his chief engineer—

Mr. Green: I told the hon. member—

Mr. Bourget: The minister told me of soundings, and soundings are very different from borings.

Mr. Green: The state of Maine has built a bridge of approximately the same type.

Mr. Bourget: But not on the same site.

Mr. Green: No, but work has been done—

Mr. Pickersgill: There was another printing bureau built in California.

An hon. Member: The hon. member had better not mention the printing bureau.

Mr. Green: If it should be found as a result of further investigation that the scheme is going to cost more, naturally all governments concerned will have to consider whether they are going to go ahead with the project, and will be perfectly free to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: There are just one or two points about which I would like to ask the minister, and he will find very quickly that I am not in any disagreement with him but on the contrary I am in full agreement with some of the things he has said. In the first instance, I want it clearly understood that so far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we are not opposing this bill. We are for this bill because we think it is a project which is in the general interest of the country.

The next point I would like to make is that I agree with the minister that it is only enabling legislation. The bridge may never be built, and this is to authorize the expenditure by the federal government of a certain amount of money.

Mr. Green: No, it does not authorize the expenditure of one cent.

Mr. Chevrier: It enables the federal government to enter into an agreement with the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Green: No, no, it does not do that at all.

Mr. Chevrier: All right, perhaps the minister would explain.

Mr. Green: It enables the province of New Brunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine.

Mr. Chevrier: Very well. I am corrected by what the minister has said; it enables the province of New Bunswick to enter into an agreement with the state of Maine for the construction of a bridge and I presume, from what the minister has said, that public funds voted by the parliament of Canada will eventually be paid in connection with the construction of the bridge. I could not agree more with the minister in respect of his statement that the practice followed by his department is that followed in respect of all projects, and I particularly refer to his statement that all this was a preliminary estimate and that you could not have any more at this time.

How could you? The project has not been gone into in the manner in which it should have been gone into, and it is therefore only a preliminary estimate; it is an intelligent guess, and it is not based on preliminary plans nor is it based on borings, as has been brought to the minister's attention.

Mr. Green: On soundings.

Mr. Bourget: There is a difference between borings and soundings.

Mr. Chevrier: If I might continue with what I was going to say, this is but a preliminary estimate, and when the time arrives for the determination of federal spending then the minister, I presume, will come forward with a detailed estimate based on complete plans of the superstructure and of the substructure of this construction on the Canadian side of the line, so we will be in a position at that stage, whether it is the second or third stage, to have before us all the details in connection with the project.

I was very glad, therefore, to hear the minister make the statement he did, particularly when he said it was a matter of practice in the Department of Public Works and that there was no change in policy, and with that statement I am in perfect accord.

Mr. Green: I said on projects of this kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): We are not in the public accounts committee now.

Mr. McMillan: I understood the minister to say that this was the second international bridge built between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine; I think he referred to the one at St. Stephen, to which the federal government made a contribution. Most of the international bridges in the province of Ontario are fully paid for by that province, and at the present time there is talk of building another bridge across the Niagara river. Would the federal government give any consideration, if requested, to paying to Ontario two-thirds of the cost thereof?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must ask the hon. member for Welland to stick to the bill regarding this bridge.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to continue with the point raised by the hon. member for Levis. We have been told by the minister and also by his colleague from New Brunswick, who is not now in the chamber—I hope I am not misconstruing anything he said—that the New Brunswick government knew all about this and that they had built other bridges and so on. We have now been told by the minister that he got some data from the government of the state of Maine, and that on this basis—

Mr. Green: And from the government of New Brunswick.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes, and from the government of New Brunswick. I do not want to be unfair in any way. In fact I want to be scrupulously fair about this matter, following an excellent example set for us in another place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to get the facts straight and nothing but straight. In other words, there is absolutely no information in the possession of the minister's department which has been procured by his own officials on the site. Am I right in that assumption?

Mr. Green: I am not in a position to say to what extent the actual surveys were made by officials of the Department of Public Works, but they were made by duly qualified engineers—certainly those of the government of New Brunswick and the state of Maine were well qualified—and all this information has been checked by our public works engineers. We have a tentative design in the department, and the officials have checked this preliminary estimate and they are satisfied with the information which has been furnished to them.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, the minister believes that although no borings have been taken on the site and although there is no certainty as to where the piers for this bridge will have to be placed or how deep they will have to go, the estimate he has given us is an approximate estimate of what the cost of this project is likely to be; a good estimate, an estimate that will come somewhere close to what this structure will cost. I take that to be what the minister has been telling us, and that if he were not satisfied that this estimate is likely to turn out to be pretty close to the actual cost he would not be sponsoring this legislation at the present time.

I think we should not be misled; the minister has a very—I was going to say endearing, but perhaps that is a strong term to apply to the minister—a very insinuating way of implying things in this house without precisely saying them, and he has told us that no money will be spent on this project until an estimate is brought before the house and it has been fully considered and voted by this house. I doubt, however, that this would necessarily be the case, because it does not appear to me from this legislation that there will be any necessity of voting money until the stage arrives when the money is to be reimbursed to the government of New Brunswick.

I say this because if I do not misconstrue the legislation—and if I have misconstrued it the minister will correct me—this structure is to be built jointly by the government of New Brunswick and the government of the state of Maine.

When it has been built, the federal government will make its contribution to the cost. Therefore it would be quite possible for us to be faced with expenditures already made, as we have already been faced in this session with billions of dollars of expenditures which had already been made before parliament had had any voice in the matter. We would be faced with a fait accompli, and we would have no control over the situation. We would be told either you contribute or you don't; the money has been spent, and you can do nothing about it.

[Mr. Green.]

It seems to me this could easily happen under this legislation. The legislature of the state of Maine will meet, the minister says, some time next winter. They might want to get ahead with this bridge next summer. Our parliament might no longer be in session. The bridge might be one-third built before this parliament knew anything about the matter. There does not seem to be any safeguard in this bill to ensure that this would not happen.

It is true, as the minister has said, that we are not authorizing the expenditure of any money here. But we have had a little experience already of the relations between this government and the government of New Brunswick. We passed legislation in the last parliament, as will be recalled—and I am simply using this as an illustration, from analogy, of what might happen under this bill—lending $30 million to the government of New Brunswick to pay for a project which was already practically completed and over the expenditures concerning which we had no control in this parliament.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Well, we got nothing out of the Liberal government for 23 years.

Mr. Benidickson: What about your St. Stephen, N.B. bridge replacement in 1956?

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say I think the hon. member for Saint John-Albert ought to get himself put on the public accounts committee. He would be quite at home there.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): At least if I were on that committee I would go to the meetings.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps because you have nothing to do here.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I am saying here is that we may very easily find ourselves in parliament in 1960, when the estimates of the minister's department come up for consideration, faced with an item in those estimates to pay for a bridge which is already half built, and parliament will have no opportunity to do anything about it.

That might not be so serious if there were some limit on what the federal expenditure might be, but under this open-ended commitment which the minister has been talking about there is no question but that after this debate today there will be an implied obligation on the part of this parliament to give the financial support which the minister indicated in his frank and forthright statement it is proposing to do, and I give the minister full credit for having made that statement. It does seem to me we are embarking on a very dangerous course which might end up by our being faced with the expenditure of moneys which will have to be raised from the taxpayers of this country, moneys which will already have been spent by another government and another jurisdiction, over which we shall have no control whatsoever.

I think this was one of the reasons why my hon. friend from Levis was so concerned about the accuracy of this estimate and the completeness of plans and specifications. I think he has good reason to be concerned, because we know that the estimates in the minister's department are not always completely accurate; and if we have any doubt about that we could not have a better illustration than one which appeared in last evening's Citizen about a certain cafe or cafeteria on which the minister's department made an estimate of $700,000—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate explain to me how he relates a cafeteria to a bridge?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suspect, sir, that your attention must have been distracted for just a moment from what I was saying. I was talking—

An hon. Member: Just talking.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was talking about the estimate which the minister gave us for this bridge, and I was saying that estimates of that character—estimates without complete plans, without final specifications have been made and even estimates with them—can sometimes be very inaccurate. I was illustrating that from a very recent experience, not from an experience of 12 or 15 years ago but an experience about which we learned only yesterday, when the minister's department, after the plans and specifications for the job were completed—

Mr. Green: I must raise a point of order. This has nothing to do with the bill before the committee, and the hon. member has no right to be arguing along those lines. If he can raise a point with regard to one building he could argue in connection with this bill matters having to do with every structure built by the Department of Public Works across Canada. That shows how far out of order the hon. gentleman is in trying to argue in the way he is doing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the chairman hear me on the point of order raised by the minister. My position is this. We have been presented here with a project and we have been told by the minister that this project will, he estimates, cost $1,050,000. We have been inquiring into the basis of the minister's estimate, and we have not been very well satisfied with the information we have as to the basis of that estimate, and I was suggesting that it might be very wide of the mark, that it might be a very long way indeed from what this project may cost.

In order to give substance to that argument I was not going far afield; I was illustrating from something which happened very recently in the minister's own department. Surely if we are going to be so circumscribed that we cannot compare one thing with another there can be no debate in this house, and we are moving toward a one party state which seems to be desired by some people in this house.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not think the hon. gentleman should read a newspaper report which may or may not be correct. The Chair does not think he should read these newspaper reports which may or may not be factual in these circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not going to read a newspaper report at all. All I was going to say was that this building was supposed to cost $700,000—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the lowest bid was well over $900,000, which shows how inaccurate these estimates can sometimes be.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not know how the cost of a building has anything to do with the cost of this bridge. I cannot see that it does, and I think I will have to ask the hon. member to stick closer to this particular bridge that we are discussing.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very happy indeed to do that.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: I come back now to my main preoccupation, which is that under this legislation and in line with the intention announced by the government it will be possible for this bridge to be built before any estimate ever appears before this committee for consideration. I think we should have some kind of assurance from the government or some kind of safeguard in the bill, one or the other, that this will not happen; that this project will not be embarked upon, if there is to be any federal contribution to it, until we have had before us full and complete detailed plans and detailed estimates of costs and an agreement with the province about the sharing of costs on which this parliament can pass before the work is done.

Mr. Green: The hon. member has considerable ability. He has been a friend of mine for many years, but I would point out to him with great kindness that if he is not more careful than he has been in recent days he is going to be considered as advocating a one man parliament, let alone a one party state about which he talks so much.

He has had experience as clerk of the privy council; he knows very well what happens, and he should not try to pull the wool over the eyes of many other members in this house, to lead them to believe there is something that is not just quite right about this whole transaction. This is merely enabling legislation. The federal government has the right to approve or reject plans which are agreed upon between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine. Those plans have to be approved by the governor in council.

If and when that is done I presume the procedure would be to put an amount in the estimates for the current year, I hope for the next fiscal year. The government of the day has to take the responsibility for doing that, and then it has to justify that expenditure when it comes to the House of Commons. If the members decide that the estimate is not a proper one, then the government will be defeated. This is the democratic process.

This suggestion that we should give a commitment on this and a commitment on that before this enabling bill is allowed to go through is childish, nothing more nor less than childish. Of course it might look all right in the press; for the moment it might impress somebody who has not had any experience in the House of Commons, but I am afraid that in making arguments of this kind the hon. member is not being very helpful. If he does not want this bridge built, if his aim is to kill the bill and stop the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine from undertaking a venture of this kind, that is one thing. Mind you, his talk this afternoon makes me wonder whether or not that is the fact.

Mr. Chevrier: Why does the minister not stick to the facts?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The hon. member is against everything in the maritimes.

Mr. Green: Surely if everybody is in favour of this bill, and the normal practice is being followed by the present government and by the Department of Public Works, I do not see what the hon. member is whining about. I go right back to the statement I made some weeks ago, that in order to be effective in opposition you must learn the art of whining —I was good at it myself—but you must have something to whine about, and the hon. member does not have anything in this.

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot believe the Minister of Public Works would consider that talking about the rights of parliament, so long as he sits in the cabinet with the present Prime Minister is something that is improper. Under our British system of government it is not for the government to decide finally what will be spent; it is for parliament to decide what will be spent. It is true that this government, having spent so many billions of dollars without the prior approval of parliament, has perhaps got the habit and has perhaps forgotten that even though the opposition is small it has still a duty to criticize any actual and also any potential expenditures and any commitments for expenditures. All I was pointing out was that it would be quite possible for this bridge to be partly built before one dollar ever appeared in the estimates. Parliament would then be faced with a fait accompli and the minister has done nothing whatsoever to reply to that argument.

Mr. Crestohl: One thing is abundantly clear, namely that everyone is in favour of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: Everybody has said so.

Mr. Pallett: Everybody but the Liberals.

Mr. Crestohl: The agreement which the minister has mentioned could do him a disservice, and let me point out why. He says it is regular practice to make a rough estimate of a project, and it is sensible that it should be so, even before the final plans and specifications are cleared. We have learned that quite recently, and the minister is quite right when he says that. But I think a disservice to the minister could result if we do not put this bill through properly, because some day he may be facing the tender attention of the hon. member for Rosedale if the matter should come before the public accounts committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: Earlier I asked the minister about some precedents for a federal contribution of this kind. During the noon recess I examined the bill. I am not sure whether the authorization is based on the Navigable Waters Protection Act, as some of the private bridge bills have been in the past, or whether it is by reason of the information he gave us when he spoke on the introduction of the resolution, namely that there would be a federal contribution.

I point out that this feature perhaps makes this bill decidedly different from the two bills to which I referred this morning, namely the bill incorporating the Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company and the St. Mary's River Bridge Company. This morning I was not sure that the minister was too well acquainted with the situation with respect to an international bridge at Sault Ste. Marie. It was with reference to that location that the St. Mary's Bridge Company came to this house and received authorization in a private statute. I ask the minister whether or not one of the key points in his negotiations with the province of New Brunswick respecting a federal grant was the stipulation which we shall come to subsequently, namely that if there is a federal contribution it will be a toll-free bridge? Was that a stipulation on the part of the federal administration?

Mr. Green: Oh, yes; this is to be a toll-free bridge. That is contained in clause 3 of the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: That is the point, Mr. Chairman. So far as I can find out, everywhere else in Canada people are obliged to build an international bridge by use of the device that is outlined in Bill No. 115 of the 1955 session, which refers to the Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company.

I believe the province of Ontario has been just as loath or reluctant to make contributions to international bridges as the minister indicated has been the history of the federal administration since confederation. I am not completely up to date in my research because of the lack of time during the noon recess, but I do have here a return of the Ontario legislature dated April, 1954, in which this question, No. 56, was asked and answered in the Ontario legislature:

> What is the policy of the government relative to making any financial contribution toward the cost of construction of a bridge across an interprovincial or international river?

There were some other questions but for the sake of brevity I will not read them. The minister of public works for Ontario replied as follows:

> No statutory provision. No financial assistance granted through the department of public works for new construction of an interprovincial or international bridge since 1947.

The actual contributions made over the years before 1947 were very small indeed. I believe that since that time the province of Ontario has entered into an agreement with the province of Quebec and the federal government with respect at least to the bridge at Pembroke and perhaps another bridge. I am just indicating again that this proposal is something very rare indeed so far as national policy is concerned.

I say that I am not opposed to it. If the minister will say forthrightly that he is now embarking on a new policy that will be applicable equally, where circumstances warrant it, in other sections of the country, I think the house will applaud such an assertion. But the point I want to make is that everywhere else in Canada where a means of crossing an international stream is required, it is necessary for private individuals to undertake through private companies the construction of a toll bridge. The public pays the cost of such bridges. I simply want to know whether or not, if the province of Ontario changes its mind and decides that it is willing to enter into agreements with the state of Michigan and the state of Minnesota—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I will have to ask the hon. member to come back to the bill respecting a bridge between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we can accept the bill unless, as we normally expect in the federal arena, we have some assertion that the principle and policies of the bill will be generally applicable. I simply raise this question. If the province of Ontario decides, contrary to its announcement of about six weeks ago—

Mr. Green: The chairman ruled against you and you are going on.

Mr. Benidickson: No, he has not ruled against me. I am saying there is an analogy here. I need satisfaction from the minister. I need answers from the minister at this stage of the debate before I can properly exercise my responsibility in voting upon subsequent clauses of the bill. This bill relates to the construction of a bridge in a certain section of Canada. I simply ask the minister whether, if Ontario changes its view about the construction of toll bridges at Sault Ste. Marie and Fort Frances and agrees to toll-free bridge construction, would a similar contribution be available from the federal government on the basis of this bill and this principle, which I say is rare and new, if traffic statistics and other things indicated that it was justifiable?

Mr. Green: I point out to the committee, as has been pointed out already by several hon. members, that this is a case where 1,200 to 1,500 Canadians are living on an island off the coast of Maine and their means of transportation to the mainland is by ferry to the state of Maine. There are occasions when people have become seriously ill and have had to be taken over by boat. I believe some very tragic incidents have happened because there has been no bridge there.

Mr. Benidickson: I am sympathetic to the bill.

Mr. Green: There is not the slightest comparison with conditions in other parts of Canada where thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of tourists travel every summer and are in a position to pay the cost of a toll bridge. This is a case which should not be confused with bridges in other parts of Canada. The government has no apology whatever to offer for proposing to undertake this project. At nearby St. Stephen, New Brunswick, an international bridge was built and the whole of Canada's share of the cost was paid by the federal government. The province of New Brunswick was not asked to make any contribution at all. There are other cases in New Brunswick of older bridges where there were different degrees of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments in order that an international bridge might be built.

This is the situation with regard to the proposed Campobello-Lubec bridge. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River knows very well that I cannot be tempted into making a commitment to build a bridge in his riding or to contribute toward a bridge in his riding simply because we are taking this step—

Mr. Benidickson: I referred to situations outside my riding.

Mr. Green: —to help the people of Campobello island.

Mr. McWilliam: Has the minister the figure available as to the amount of the ferry subsidy?

Mr. Green: It varies slightly. It is about $8,600 per year.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister referred to the St. Stephen bridge in New Brunswick, but I have found there are also others at such places as St. Croix, St. Leonard, Clair and Edmundston, all in New Brunswick, which were constructed with some form of federal assistance provided through votes or bills such as we now have before us. Is there any reason why all the precedents happen to be in the province of New Brunswick? Is there some pre-confederation agreement that applies to New Brunswick and therefore would rule out a similar grant in any other province.

Mr. Green: I do not know what the hon. member has against the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Benidickson: Now, Mr. Chairman, the minister is putting words in my mouth. I said I had no objection to the passage of this bill, but I was hoping that something similar would be available to other provinces. I asked him a straightforward question. I am sure that before he decided to recommend the expenditure of this amount of money to his colleagues he must have looked at some of the precedents and the law that would apply. I simply ask him a straightforward question. Has he determined that there is some special reason why all the precedents with respect to federal contributions to international bridges happen to apply only in the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing. That question does not really arise at all. This project was undertaken because it was considered to be a proper project for the federal government to assist. I presume that earlier governments which gave assistance to other projects were of the same opinion. The hon. member must bear in mind that there are very few provinces in Canada in which any international bridges are situated.

Mr. Benidickson: What about Ontario, with its hundreds of miles of international boundary?

Mr. Green: Poor old Ontario has a hard time, I admit, but we are spending quite a lot of money in Ontario too.

Mr. Benidickson: I think the premier of Ontario will be coming to see the Minister of Public Works very shortly with respect to the Sault Ste. Marie, Fort Frances and Rainy River bridges.

Clauses 2, 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Plans and drawings to be submitted.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to move an amendment to this clause. I move:

That section 4, subsection 2, be amended by inserting after the word "council" in line 8 the following words: "and public tenders have been called."

I should like to say a few words on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. It is one which I feel should go into this clause. I hope the minister will not have any objection to it. If not, then perhaps we can dispose of it without anything more being said.

Mr. Green: The tenders will be called, I presume, by the province of New Brunswick. Of course the dominion would insist that proper procedures be followed. In view of the fact that there are several governments concerned we could not accept this amendment. It does nothing to improve the practice with regard to the construction of the project. As the hon. member knows, public tenders always are called, certainly by the federal government, and I think it would be quite inappropriate to put that in this bill.

Mr. Chevrier: It does nothing to improve it, but it simply affirms the position, and there would be no harm in doing that.

Amendment (Mr. Chevrier) negatived: Yeas, 23; nays, 64.

On clause 5—Labour and materials.

Mr. McWilliam: Clause 5 says:

Where available in Canada, Canadian labour and materials, to the extent of 50 per cent, as nearly as may be, of the cost of such labour and materials respectively, shall be employed in the construction of the bridge,—

Would the minister consider adding after the word "respectively", "with preference for local labour and materials so far as it is possible to do so".

Mr. Green: This is a provision which is found in the ordinary contracts of the Department of Public Works. There would be no need to insert that in the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: With respect to this matter of construction, which involves the cost of both labour and materials, I do not know whether or not the committee is aware of the fact but when a bridge is constructed on the basis I previously outlined, namely by a private bridge company, the private bridge company is also obligated to provide accommodation for governmental inspection services on an international basis. Has the minister given consideration, in his discussions with the province, as to what the situation would be here? In so far as the federal customs and immigration facilities at either end of the bridge are concerned, are they to be part of the estimate of $1,050,000 to be shared jointly, or would facilities of this kind, unlike the obligation of a private bridge company, be solely at the expense of the two federal governments?

Mr. Green: I do not think they would be. We will bear that in mind.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister does not think they would be what?

Mr. Green: I presume the United States would have to pay for their own customs and immigration buildings, and we would have to do the same.

Mr. Benidickson: Is it not likely that the cost of the examining rooms on the Canadian side of the bridge or even on the United States side would be part of the estimate of a little over a million dollars, which the minister indicated would be the cost of construction?

Mr. Green: I am not sure about that, but I do not think the province should have to share in the cost of any such buildings.

Mr. McMillan: I want to ask one question. Would the federal government assume any maintenance costs after the bridge is built?

Mr. Green: I am not sure about that. I think the maintenance costs would have to be borne by the province.

Mr. Benidickson: See clause 3.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—

66. Administration, $565,938.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister, since this is a matter concerning Indian lands, how many islands in the international section of the St. Lawrence river were affected by the power development? What were they, and how much compensation was paid to the federal government by Ontario hydro?

Mrs. Fairclough: I will secure that information for the hon. member as soon as the officials have appeared.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the officials come, could the hon. lady tell us the point she has reached in the negotiations with the St. Lawrence seaway authority over the Caughnawaga expropriation, a subject that is not exactly simple, as I think the hon. lady would agree?

Mr. Chevrier: If I may add to that, Mr. Chairman, I noticed recently that there were a number of things being done around the Caughnawaga reserve arising out of the St. Lawrence seaway construction program. I should like to inquire from the minister just what expenditures were made, either by her department or at the request of her department by the St. Lawrence seaway authority: (1) to construct a drainage system; (2) to construct a sewage system; (3) to construct a water system for the village of Caughnawaga.

Mrs. Fairclough: With regard to the first two questions which the hon. member for Laurier asked with reference to the number of islands and the compensation, I am advised by my officials that we do not have that information in the house. However, we will secure it for the hon. gentleman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 66 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no. The hon. lady was going to tell me about Caughnawaga. I think we ought to keep the Minister of Transport here because he is the other party.

Mr. Chevrier: He has a faculty of coming in and going out.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we ought to keep the Minister of Transport here because he is very much interested in this matter.

Mr. Green: He is coming back.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the Minister of Transport should be sitting with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mrs. Fairclough: I might advise the hon. member that he could ask these questions of the Minister of Transport because I think probably they are more properly related to his department than to mine. But in so far as compensation is concerned, I am told that a total of 214 individuals are entitled to compensation as a result of expropriations made by the St. Lawrence seaway authority and that as of August 20 settlements have been reached with 195 individuals.

Mr. Chevrier: For how much?

Mrs. Fairclough: We do not have the amount. However, we can get that information very shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that, generally speaking, I find myself in substantial agreement with my friend and colleague the hon. member for Laurier. But when he was chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority we could never quite see eye to eye on this subject because I felt that my primary duty was not as a minister of the crown but as superintendent general of Indian affairs; and I took the view that we could never have final settlement with the St. Lawrence seaway authority until all the Indians had been satisfied. I trust that the hon. lady is holding firm in the same way I did, is not yielding to the importunities of the Minister of Transport or the present chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and is not sacrificing any possible rights of the Indians. I am sure she is doing so.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member is quite right. We are not satisfied until proper compensation has been paid to all of them; until they are happy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. lady has gone a little bit far in saying "happy".

Mrs. Fairclough: I will say "satisfied". Maybe I did go rather far.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was quite sincerely trying to help the hon. lady when I said that, because I know what a difficult thing this is. I am not in the least seeking to be contentious about it. All I wanted to do was to be quite reassured. The hon. lady will no doubt recall that when I was in the position which she is in I gave on behalf of the administration of that day, an assurance that, notwithstanding the legal rights of the matter, any Indian who wanted to take his case to the exchequer court would in one way or another be given the facility of doing so by the government. I should like to be sure that that will be the policy of the present administration as well.

Mrs. Fairclough: This matter has not come to my personal attention until now but I am informed that we are consulting at the present time with the Department of Justice on the matter.

Mr. Chevrier: There was some information that I required earlier about what was being done around the village of Caughnawaga in connection with water facilities, sewerage facilities and drainage facilities. Here perhaps the minister would allow me to say that I should like to commend the officers of her department, particularly the person who holds the position of superintendent general of Indian affairs, for insisting upon the protection that the Indians should get in so far as their rights were concerned. A while ago I referred to the superintendent of Indian affairs. I should have called him the director of the branch. He is the person I had in mind. Not only did he look to the interests of the Indians of Caughnawaga in so far as the project of the seaway was concerned but he insisted upon greater facilities being given to the Indians than they then possessed. While we could not see eye to eye with that point of view at the beginning, we gradually came around to it because we felt that here, while legally speaking the Indians were entitled to a replacement in kind of the facilities they possessed, nevertheless in this day and age the facilities which they received were far better than those which had existed in the past. Because of that consideration I believe water facilities and sewerage facilities were given to the reserve. I see now by the press that a contract is being advertised for drainage in connection with the village. That is why I should like to know from the minister what were these three items of expenditures that were made either at the request of her department to the St. Lawrence seaway authority, or by the seaway authority itself. Perhaps the minister cannot give that information to me at once but it may be that before the termination of the discussion of her estimates she can do so. I should like to be brought up to date on those items.

Mrs. Fairclough: With regard to sewage and water, may I say that the seaway contributed $200,000 to this project and the government $50,000. The project is now complete. In so far as drainage is concerned, that is a matter that is at present under consideration as the hon. gentleman apparently knows.

Mr. Chevrier: I know only what I saw in the press. How much will it cost?

Mrs. Fairclough: We do not know until the tenders are in. We have called for tenders on it.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there not an estimate of the cost?

Mrs. Fairclough: We think about $25,000. But of course until we get the tenders in, we cannot tell.

Mr. Chevrier: What about water? Provision was made for giving water to the Indians during the course of construction. What did that cost?

Mrs. Fairclough: The individual connections are now being arranged. Arrangements are being made with the branch to handle actual mechanics of the connections.

Mr. Chevrier: What was the cost?

Mrs. Fairclough: The individual will pay for the individual connection to the main. However, the actual work will be handled by the department.

Mr. Chevrier: I think there is a misunderstanding. What I had reference to was the contamination of the wells during the course of construction. It was so serious a matter that at one time we feared there might be an epidemic and we were obliged to provide water at the time. I wondered whether that project had been completed and what it cost.

Mr. Small: May I ask the hon. member for Laurier a question? Would not the health authorities of the province, including the sanitation officers, insist on that being done whenever a new subdivision is going up? Would that not be insisted upon by the province, that proper water and sewers and so on be put in before they built any homes?

Mrs. Fairclough: The actual installation of water services, that is the main service, was included in the figure I gave.

Mr. Chevrier: In the $250,000?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, and the individual connections, of course, are the responsibility of the individual occupant.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. lady recalls the questions I asked last Saturday about education, scholarships and economic developments?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I prepared some answers to those questions which I shall be glad to give the hon. member. He raised the question of progress being made in joint education and in the scholarship plan designed to encourage promising Indian students to enter universities and other institutions of higher learning. During the fiscal year 1957-58 fifteen agreements for joint schools were completed at a cost of $949,747 to the Canadian government, involving 1,000 children. For the current year seven joint agreements have been approved, six are now under consideration and data is being gathered on nine more, making a total of 22 for the current fiscal year, involving approximately 900 children.

The number of children enrolled in provincial and private schools in 1956-57 was 6,272, and in 1957-58, 7,330. It is anticipated that 8,500 Indian children will attend non-Indian schools in 1958-59.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just for the sake of continuity, does the hon. lady happen to have the total number of Indian children attending school, because I think it would be nice to have that on the record right at this point.

Mrs. Fairclough: Attending all schools?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, so that we might have the proportion at the joint schools.

Mrs. Fairclough: The total is 37,537, and that includes day, residential and non-Indian schools; at day schools there are 20,125, in residential schools 10,082 and, as I have said, in the non-Indian schools 7,330.

Mr. Pickersgill: So that steady progress is being made.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. Reference was also made to scholarships. The department has awarded 14 scholarships. These 14 scholarships are included in the number of 403 Indian students enrolled in professional and other courses and they were awarded simply on the basis of outstanding scholastic ability. These scholarships are in addition to the amount given as a tuition grant to Indian pupils who required it.

Mention was made of vocational training. This practical aspect of the educational process is gaining impetus with increasing numbers of Indian boys and girls enrolled in trade and vocational schools throughout Canada, the cost of their tuition being provided by the department. Last year in our Indian schools 2,620 boys were instructed in the fundamentals of woodworking and motor mechanics, while 3,226 girls received instruction in home-making, cooking and sewing. This type of practical education is being extended into the adult field. Last year over 500 Indian men and women participated in similar courses on Indian reserves.

I am pleased to assure the hon. member that the economic development program which has been established by the Indian affairs branch is being vigorously pressed forward and that substantial progress has been made during the past year in assisting and encouraging the employment of Indians in a variety of occupations in non-Indian communities.

Additional placement officers have been appointed and there are now six regional placement officers and a senior placement officer at headquarters to carry on this important work. The placement officers are largely concerned with the problem of selection of suitable Indians for employment in urban centres. Rural placement has not been overlooked and the fur supervisors employed by the branch were recently reclassified as field officers with the added responsibility of assisting in placement work in rural areas.

Up to the present emphasis has been placed on careful selection of Indians where individual placements are concerned and this policy necessarily should continue for some time to come. In other words, we have emphasized policy rather than the quantity of candidates placed on the grounds that they must prove their worth to employers as well as their adaptability in the non-Indian communities so that those who come after may find ready acceptance by the employer and the community generally. In addition, it has been necessary to develop procedures to recruit and train staff and to establish liaison with employment agencies and employers generally.

From April, 1957 to July, 1958 there is a record of 150 Indians successfully placed in permanent urban employment, of whom 117 were in skilled trades. Our records also show group placements of 788 Indians in agriculture, construction, road-clearing and lumbering. These figures represent only the employment achievements of the new program in its first year of operation. It should be understood that a large number of Indians continue to find work on their own initiative and through the assistance of the Indian agency organization in the field and are not included in these figures.

I should mention that the education division of the Indian affairs branch has been instrumental in providing vocational training and in arranging on-the-job training, and that the results of courses in carpentry and other technical trades have been encouraging. For example, of 29 graduates from the Vancouver vocational institute referred for placement, 26 were successfully placed in permanent employment. The practice of developing the educational standards and technical skills of Indians to fit them for employment in trades which provide greater opportunities will be continued and expanded as time goes on.

I should like to refer briefly to a few group placement projects which will illustrate the progress made in this field. For several years there has been an influx of Indians to southern Alberta to assist in the cultivation and harvesting of beet crops. The numbers have increased each year. Last year approximately 600 were employed and this year the objective is to recruit 1,000 Indians, not only from northern Alberta but from Saskatchewan. Arrangements were carried on through liaison with the national employment service which was responsible for the actual movement of the Indians.

Last winter through co-operation with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Public Works the Indian affairs branch supervised the clearing of 24 miles of right of way between Fort Rae and Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories. One hundred and twenty Indians were employed at one stage or another and earned a total of $58,000. This was of great assistance in reducing the number of relief recipients in the area. In addition, 250 Indians were employed by a private contractor in clearing work in the same general area. In both cases the Indians' work performance was reported to be very satisfactory.

Substantial numbers of Indians are employed in the International Nickel project at Thompson, Manitoba and an Indian community has grown up at Schefferville, Quebec, the centre of the important iron ore project there. Elsewhere Indians continue to be employed in mining operations, both above and below ground, and in railway construction and maintenance, as well as in many urban occupations.

Employment opportunities are of course dependent to a considerable extent on the general level of business activity and we look forward to an increase in the number of Indians employed off reserves during the forthcoming year. The goodwill and support of employers are most important in expanding the placement program. In this regard I feel I should mention a letter received a few days ago from a mine manager in the province of Quebec who, on the basis of successful employment of Indians in his mine, has asked our assistance in referring to him an Indian who could be trained for a supervisory position in that mine. This is only one instance of the results which can be expected through confidence gained from satisfactory experience with Indian labour. It is anticipated that as this program develops there will be increasing recognition of the important contribution which the Indian labour force can make to the development and expansion of the Canadian economy in a wider range of pursuits and occupations.

I should also refer to the questions asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria with regard to drinking water facilities for Indians on the Eskasoni reserve. The department has been seeking a satisfactory solution to this problem and on technical advice came to the conclusion that the only permanent and satisfactory method of meeting water supply needs would be the installation of a water pressure system rather than reliance on drilled wells. To this end the Indians have agreed to meet partial cost of the installation from their band funds. It is estimated that the installation will cost in the neighbourhood of $100,000.

Mr. Pearson: As the minister no doubt knows, for many years there have been Indian boys' and girls' high schools conducted by the Jesuit order at Spanish, Ontario, and these have done a great deal of good by providing for the education of Indians of Wikwemikong, Shequiandah, and Kaboni on Manitoulin island, and along the north shore as well as for some non-Indian students. These high schools are now about to close. I am sure that all those in the area will understand the reason for this, though they will regret the necessity. Can the minister tell us whether any provision will be made for the high school education of children who have in the past been going to these schools.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the hon. Leader of the Opposition will agree, perhaps we can wait until we come to the item on education.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one general question I should like to ask and which, I think, should come under the administration item. I might have asked it the other evening if I had not been in such a hurry to get the hon. lady's bill through the house. Would she tell me whether any cases are still unresolved with regard to the band lists? My recollection is that there were four groups of cases the last time I had any information about the matter on January 30, which had still not been settled. I wondered if these band lists were now final except for future births and marriages and, of course, deaths.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid the same four cases are still pending for the reason that the persons concerned are out of the country and the registrar is unable to get in touch with them.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has now been reduced to four individuals, has it?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then it really does look as if this operation is pretty well over.

Mrs. Fairclough: We hope so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can only say I hope the minister never has to face a Hobbema incident such as I did.

Mr. Pearson: I want to ask a question about medical services for Indians, but I do not know whether this is the proper item—

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact, medical services for Indians comes under the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Howard: As far as Indian affairs are concerned, this being a matter primarily within the jurisdiction of the federal government and also inasmuch as each province deals with some aspect of it we often find that there is an overlapping of interests and a conflict of opinion with respect to the policies and the attitudes taken toward the Indian people.

We in British Columbia have had in the past year a number of interesting articles which have appeared in a newspaper and we are expecting a number of additional articles to appear in another newspaper beginning some time this month, and we also had a report from a team of professors and students from the University of British Columbia on Indian affairs all of which have done a pretty full and comprehensive job in analysing the problems of Indians and making suggestions with respect to Indians.

I hope the minister will undertake to review quite carefully in particular the Hawthorne report and will also, if she has not already done so, make a review of what I consider to be the excellent articles which have appeared in the Vancouver Sun written by the Vancouver Sun reporter, Jack Cahill which ran in a series of eight articles, I believe it was, during the first part of May, and the ones which we expect to start in the Victoria Times or the Colonist—it escapes me at the moment in which of the papers they are appearing—but they relate specifically to the Indians of British Columbia, even though the conclusions drawn and the studies made could be applicable to Indians in other parts of Canada.

Perhaps the most important long range thoughts of the newspaper articles and the Hawthorne report relate to the question of education which I think all hon. members will consider to be of paramount importance if our native Indian peoples and ourselves as non-Indians are going to work better with each other for the common good of both our groups and for the common good of society. With respect to education I should like to refer to one of the articles which Mr. Cahill has written in the Vancouver Sun of May 7 of this year headed "Segregation of Schools Deplored". Mr. Cahill mentions under eight separate headings questions relating to education. Part of them deal with the number of Indian children attending Indian day schools, or segregated into schools which only Indian children attend, and the author points out that there is an increase in the number of Indian children, an increase in the number of the Indian people, and so on. One important point referred to in Mr. Cahill's article to which I am referring mentions this, and this is a most unfortunate and deplorable part of the results of our educational policy with respect to Indians. He says here, and I quote:

> Only 387 of the 5,900 children attending Indian schools last year had reached Grade 8 or above. Three Indians were attending university and 86 were receiving private or provincial vocational grain training.

The unfortunate part of that is the very small number in comparison with the total number of Indian children in the schools who have reached grade 8 or grades above grade 8. There are very few who are in universities or who are taking additional vocational training. I am sure we all realize that until and unless we can make far greater steps in the field of providing facilities for education to Indian children on the same basis as education is provided for non-Indian children we are going to continue to have a difficult time with Indian affairs. I am not expressing only my own thoughts and ideas in this regard, but I am expressing also the ideas set out by a number of people who have studied the matter in far more detail than I have been able to do, and the views, also, of a great number of Indians, chief counsellors and members of band councils with whom I have spoken personally. Their opinion is the same, namely that it must primarily be a question of education in attempting to draw our two groups together so that we may have a better understanding of each other's ways and each other's cultures.

Mr. Cahill mentions a couple of other matters with respect to teacher qualifications and salaries paid under this branch. May I read further from what he says:

> Qualifications of teachers of Indians are generally much lower than qualifications of teachers in provincial schools, though it is obvious that they need additional teaching skills and qualities.

With respect to salaries, Mr. Cahill says:

> Top-quality teachers are not attracted to Indian schools because salaries are much less than salaries offered by provincial schools. (The top-paid principal of Indian day schools received $4,950 plus accommodation last year compared with top salary of about $7,000 for provincial elementary school principals.)

He points out further that very few teachers of Indian people have any conception of, or have mastered to any degree the language of the Indian people whom they are teaching. Of course, not being familiar with the language of the Indian people, which is not a written language, and not being familiar with the terms and expressions and what they mean, their attempts to teach English by, as Mr. Cahill says, prolonged experimentation with sounds bring about very poor results. He points out that most of the young Indian population find this lack of good English a handicap in job seeking and in social life. He says further that the Indian education administration is seriously understaffed with respect to regional inspectors. He compares it with the educational staff under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

It has been my contention for a long period of time,—and I hope the present minister will at least exhibit the same zeal and enthusiasm that she used to exhibit on labour matters when she sat on this side of the house and the same attitude with respect to the department under her jurisdiction and specifically the division of Indian affairs—after discussing it with people who have studied this question quite thoroughly, that until and unless we can bring the education of the native Indian children under the same authority as that of non-Indian children, namely the jurisdiction of the provinces themselves, we are going to have difficulties which are compounded by the other factors that Mr. Cahill and other people set out, if they are valid ones. I refer specifically to lower qualifications for teachers under the Indian affairs branch and lower salary structures, and not as much emphasis being placed upon the question of education in the Indian affairs branch as is placed upon it in the department of education of the provinces. Until we can eliminate this overlapping jurisdiction and bring uniformity to the curriculum and to those who are responsible for education, until we can bring this under the jurisdiction of the provinces, we will be approaching the problem from the wrong direction.

In British Columbia for a number of years now we have had an experiment in integrated schools, if I may put it that way, schools which combine under provincial jurisdiction the teaching of Indian children and non-Indian children. A per capita student payment is made by the department of Indian affairs to the department of education for that service. I realize it may be difficult for the Indian affairs branch suddenly to say they were going to abandon the field of education so far as Indian education is concerned and put it in the lap of the provinces. I do not think such an immediate approach would accomplish much. In fact, it might create more problems than we have at the moment, but we must express and exhibit more than a pious hope that the jurisdiction over education of Indian children is going to be in the provincial sphere. We must have direct consultations with provincial authorities and express to them the attitude of this department and of this government which must be, I think, that the provinces should take over the jurisdiction over the education of Indian children so that there will be a uniform approach, a uniform curriculum and an enhancement of the qualifications and salaries of teachers to make them more equitable, and so on.

This is just one phase of the problem. I appreciate the fact that we can all express the same ideas, and I am sure that mine are not too different from those of any other hon. member in so far as the necessity of more advanced educational opportunities for our native Indian people is concerned. But coupled with the question of formal education there is the question of the attitude of the Canadian people. The attitude of our so-called white people has generally not been a good one toward the native Indian people. In many instances that attitude has been one of paternalism, an attitude of superiority toward the native Indian people who grudgingly accept their position in life as being a little inferior to ours. That, of course, is something that you cannot legislate for. You can pass all the laws that you like about attitudes of one racial group to another, or specifically the attitude of non-Indian people to native Indian people, but that would not have too much value. There has to be a conscious desire to accept native Indian people as equals and that we will undertake to abandon our paternalistic attitude. We should undertake an attempt to appreciate and understand and experience the same feelings that Indian people have. We should try to understand their background, their cultures, their hopes, their desires and aspirations. In turn, we hope that they will appreciate ours.

To attempt to classify Indian native people as something apart from and different from the rest of Canadian citizens is just nonsense and it will not accomplish a great deal. While we have had, as I mentioned earlier, specifically the Hawthorne report of British Columbia, which has undertaken a comprehensive study and analysis of aspects of Indian life and problems; while we have had in British Columbia a provincial advisory committee established by the British Columbia legislature, in addition to those reportorial and informative type of articles, such as the one I quoted from the Sun, and one which is accepted to appear in a Victoria paper soon, I doubt whether we have had the same type of analysis and constructive study made on Indian affairs generally throughout the nation.

I am sure we all know that the ideas and attitudes of Indians in one part of the nation may be different from those of Indians in another part of the nation in the same way that the attitudes of white people in the east may differ from those of people in the west or even in different parts of the same province. Over the years a number of joint committees of the House of Commons and the Senate have dealt with Indian affairs, but I would express the hope that one of the first things the minister will do is establish a royal commission on Indian affairs. I would also hope that its field of jurisdiction would not be confined specifically to the problems of native Indians but that its terms of reference would enable it to investigate the attitude of the Indian affairs branch.

If I were to voice the thoughts of a number of Indians whom I know with respect to the Indian affairs branch the chairman would be on his feet immediately to tell me that I was using unparliamentary language and I would be doing so if I were to use the same terms a number of Indian people have used to me with respect to the branch. I certainly suggest that such a royal commission should be established and I hope that its terms of reference will include the attitude of the officials of the Indian affairs branch and the structure, administration and entire approach of the branch to Indian affairs. Even if it is found that the attitude of the branch is acceptable and that its policies are desirable, such an investigation will at least show the Indian people that the government is sincerely interested in their affairs and it will give the Indians an opportunity to express their ideas about the branch.

That is about all I have to say on these two general matters. Quite frankly I hope that others will express their ideas about Indian affairs and offer solutions to specific or general problems but I still do not think this will accomplish as much as an all-inclusive commission on Indian affairs would. I know that the minister simply has to recommend such a move to her colleagues and action will be taken but if I had the opportunity to vote for it I certainly would do so. I know that she would also be taking a long needed step towards complete understanding and obtaining a compilation of the problems and solutions and recommendations so far as Indian affairs are concerned.

There is one other matter I would like to deal with which I raised during the last session when another minister held the portfolio. With all due respect to the gentleman, we always considered that it was more or less a part-time folio on almost an equal basis with the justice portfolio, both of which jobs require the full-time effort of one person. We are pleased to see there is a minister looking after the affairs of this department and branch.

Last session I raised the question of the rations provided to indigent native Indians. I placed the schedule of rations on record at that time and I felt then and still do that the approach to the problem was most disgusting. There has been no change in the rations. They should not be considered rations at all. I am sure that anybody who looks at the list will consider that in no way at all could they hope to contribute to the survival of one person. This list is to be taken as a guide of minimum food requirements, and as I recite the items each hon. member can decide in his own mind whether he could expect to subsist on such rations or whether his wife and family could do so.

One adult Indian who is considered indigent and qualifies for this type of starvation food relief receives the following items: Flour, vitamin B, 24 pounds; rolled oats, 6 pounds; baking powder, 1 pound; tea, 1 pound; sugar, 2 pounds; lard, 3 pounds; beans, 5 pounds; rice or potatoes up to an equivalent value, 2 pounds; cheese, Canadian product, 1 pound; meat or fish, $2.50; salt, 10 cents per adult or 15 cents per month per family; matches, 10 cents or 20 cents per month per family; canned tomatoes or tomato juice in 28-ounce tins, 9—I imagine that means 9 tins—milk, 1 pint of milk or equivalent in evaporated milk per day for each child of an indigent family 12 years of age and under.

That is only for one person. One of my friends from the Hazelton band undertook to price these articles for me in the store there to indicate what this ration means in terms of cost. The flour cost $1.92, the rolled oats 72 cents, baking powder 44 cents, tea $1.32, sugar 30 cents, lard 96 cents, beans 95 cents, rice 38 cents, cheese 65 cents, meat, $2.50, salt 23 cents, matches 10 cents, for a total of $10.47 in foodstuffs by way of relief to one adult Indian. On an experimental basis the department has recently undertaken to substitute relief in terms of cash for relief in terms of food. The maximum amount authorized monthly for one adult under the cash plan is $18, for each additional adult, including children over 12, $15, and for each child 12 years of age or under, $12.

It is difficult to find words to express my attitude to this niggardly approach to our Indians. The amount is far less than unemployment insurance and, heaven knows, that is not ample, but at least the people on unemployment insurance may have been working in some cases and have saved some money so that they can draw on their savings to supplement what they receive by way of unemployment insurance benefits. But many Indians, because we do not accept them in all walks of society, because we do not accept them in all types of jobs, because their educational background which we design for them does not fit them for many kinds of jobs, find it is not possible to earn the same amount of income in a year as others might be able to earn. Then, in addition to that, they get this grant of $10.47 worth of food to last them for a month.

Any housewife who has gone shopping, as I am sure the minister has on a number of occasions in the corner grocery store or the supermarket, will know just how far $10.47 will go today towards buying food, even if you buy the cheap cuts of meat and even if you shop for bargains. This $10.47 would not last a week, let alone a month. I hope the minister, with her humanitarian ideas, and in view of the fact she is a mother and knows what it is to try to raise children, especially small children, will express some ideas with respect to this niggardly amount of food relief. I hope that this amount will be raised substantially. After all, our native Indian people need to eat, just the same as we do. They have children, just the same as we do and want the very same things for their children as we do. This approach, which has been the rule for some period of time, certainly needs revision. One could talk in terms of trebling or quadrupling the amount of relief given under this program, and it still would not be sufficient.

Before I sit down I should like to draw one matter to the attention of the minister on which I have had some correspondence with the various people in the provincial department and the department of Indian affairs, dating back to sometime in 1955. This matter relates to a road that was built by the provincial department of highways from Hazelton through the Gitanmaax reserve. They expropriated certain lands, many of which were registered by locatees on the reserve. I do not know the exact date of this, but it would be some two or three years ago, that the provincial department of highways paid some $1,500 to this department of Indian affairs. I have a photostatic copy of a listing in which they listed the names of each of the locatees, the station along the roadway, the area and the amount of money involved. To my knowledge, only a few of these locatees have received any of that money up to this date for the lands that were taken.

As I say, I have had correspondence with this department and with the provincial department of highways, discussions on the telephone with officials in the Indian affairs branch, but have not succeeded in bringing this matter to a conclusion. I would appreciate very much getting it straightened up. It has been four or five years now since the money belonging to these locatees was transferred from the department of highways to the Indian affairs branch. Evidently this money got lost somewhere in all the red tape in that branch. I would appreciate it if the minister would try to straighten this out. It is a personal matter relating to these people.

In summing up, I want to say that I appreciate the opportunity of making these few remarks; some of them have been unkind and some of them have not been. I would certainly like to hear the comments of the minister with respect to these matters, especially the question of education and our approach to it. I should like to know whether the approach is going to be different from that of the former administration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister replies, I should like to make a few brief comments. I do not intend to make a speech, but since I said something about joint education the other day I want to make it clear that I could not go along with the suggestions made by the hon. member for Skeena. It seems to me that the federal government has an inescapable responsibility under the constitution for the education of Indians and for the preservation of certain rights in connection with the education of Indians that would be sacrificed in one or two provinces if education of Indians was transferred to those provinces without safeguarding those rights. I should like to make it quite clear, so far as we in this party are concerned, we stand solidly behind the preservation of constitutional rights in this matter.

With that reservation, I can say that I agree with the objectives of the hon. member for Skeena. As I said the other day, you cannot get the Indian children with other children too early because, as I recall it, even in Wallaceburg where we did not have them go into the schools until they were in grade 4, it was found that it took a year before they felt at home. In Sarnia, however, where the Indians went into the school right at the start they were accepted by the little tots right away and there was no psychological difficulty. I know this thing is going to take a long time and it is going to be difficult. In one or two provinces there is great resistance to this. We cannot have any compulsion in the matter, and we must be very sure we do not do anything that even appears to trample on any of the constitutional rights or other rights that are sacred by law and usage. Within those limits, I do agree with the objective the hon. gentleman has in mind.

I should like to say, as a former minister, that while of course I do not think every member of the Indian affairs branch is perfect—I am not going to embarrass the hon. lady today by asking her what she thinks of the efficiency of the officials—nevertheless, I do think they are very conscientious and hard-working officials. I had a special affection and interest for the Indian affairs branch, but I am sure the officials elsewhere in the department never held this against me. I do think that there is inherent in the position of Indian agent a difficulty that is perhaps like the difficulty a schoolteacher faces, and that has to be guarded against a little. Sometimes there is a tendency perhaps to treat the Indians a bit as though they were children, and that has to be guarded against.

I believe the department has been very wise in moving Indian agents from one reserve to another after a certain length of time, so that they do not get too set in their ways. The department is also wise in having conferences and in other ways stressing the importance of avoiding Indian agents becoming too set in their ways. I do think, too, that this business of having elections of the bands and providing for self-government cannot be pushed too fast or too far once the Indians accept it. I know, of course, there are difficulties in some places. I hope the minister, and the senior officials will seek at all times to find Indians to employ in the branch when they can, but not with the idea of making the branch a special reserve for Indian civil servants. That would be the last suggestion I would ever make. I know there are one or two already who are doing very well in the branch but it would perhaps be a good idea, since the branch is intimately associated with the Indians, to be able to encourage a few more Indians to come into the branch.

But perhaps it would be an even better idea to encourage them to go elsewhere in the public service. We know that one of the most distinguished public servants of our time, namely Mr. Monture, was an Indian who was not in the Indian affairs branch, as far as I know, at any time during his career. I remember meeting him one time at Dorval airport. I was on my way to Newfoundland. I asked him where he was going and he said he was going to Indonesia on one of the United Nations technical assistance missions. It seems to me that is the kind of thing that we need to hold before the Indians as a possibility for the future.

Mr. Howard: May I say one word, Mr. Chairman, before the hon. lady speaks. My friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I, as far as the constitutional question and the rights of Indians are concerned, certainly agree with each other except that we have expressed ourselves in different words and on different occasions.

Mr. Pearson: Before the minister replies I just want to say one word. I want to express my gratitude and appreciation, through the minister, to the members of the branch for all the courtesies and consideration they have shown to the requests I have made over the years as member for Algoma East on behalf of the considerable number of Indians I have in my constituency. Even when they have not been able to meet those requests, they have always treated them efficiently and sympathetically.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thank the Leader of the Opposition for what he has said. I think we are all fairly much of a mind on this question and there is not much point in elaborating on it. I thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who, I think, fairly well answered one point that was raised by the hon. member for Skeena.

There are one or two things upon which I should like to comment. One is the question asked by the hon. member for Skeena as to the number of students in various grades. Rather than taking the time of this committee to give this information, may I tell him that if he will refer to page 106 of the annual report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration he will find all of those grades broken down. That page tells him precisely how many students are in every grade.

Mr. Howard: I did not ask how many students were in each grade.

Mrs. Fairclough: I understood the hon. member to request information as to the number of those who were in some of the higher grades.

Mr. Howard: No. When I was speaking previously I was reading from an article by Mr. Cahill which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of May 7, 1958—I think the Hansard reporters have it now—wherein he pointed out a number of things with respect to Indian education. One of them was that only 837—I may be wrong about that figure—out of 5,900 Indian children who were attending schools had reached grade 8 or more. I was decrying the fact that such a small percentage of Indian people had reached the higher grades. I just wanted to point out the necessity of expanding and enlarging our approach to education so that more opportunities are there, hoping that the native Indian children would be able to advance into the higher grades more easily.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the information the hon. gentleman had was a little bit erroneous because from grade 9 up just in the non-Indian schools there are about 1,500.

Mr. Howard: Is that for British Columbia?

Mrs. Fairclough: Oh, no. The hon. member was speaking of British Columbia only?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: In any event, I think there is not much purpose to be served by discussing that matter because our figures would not be the same. However, more and more are reaching grade 8 every year.

With regard to the matter of rations which the hon. member raised, may I say at the start that first of all we consider that the list which is prepared averages out to about $14 per adult. However, the very difficulties which he enumerated have been at the base of the thinking which has caused and is causing us to change more and more to a cash basis. Even taking that matter into consideration, I might say that these payments were never at any time intended to be the complete living cost of these people. They are based on country food and on the supposition that the food will be supplemented by fish and game, as we know it is. This plan was prepared after consultation with the health authorities of the Department of National Health and Welfare. It may not be perfect. I do not think anyone can ever compile a list that would be absolutely perfect under all conditions. While it may not be perfect, it has been fairly generally told to those in authority that they are at liberty to vary the list to suit the needs of differing sections of the country and the requirements of different individuals.

The hon. member also asked about the funds which were paid into the department on behalf of those persons who surrendered lands for the building of highways. I will look into this matter at once. However, my understanding is that those payments which have not been made have been held up for the reason that it has not been possible to establish to a certainty the ownership of the lands which were surrendered; I have reference to the individual ownership. However, we will check that matter up and see what we can find out about it.

If I may, I should like to answer the hon. member for Laurier. I now have the information with regard to the islands. There were eight islands in the St. Lawrence which were purchased by the Ontario Hydro at a cost of $172,200.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you.

The Chairman: Shall vote 66 carry?

Mr. Howard: No. I wonder whether the minister could indicate whether there is any possibility of increasing the ration allotment or how long ago it was established; could she say when this list, even though it is only a guide, was established or when it was last revised?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is under constant study. It was changed or revamped within the last couple of years, and it is under constant review.

Mr. Howard: Last fall, I believe, or sometime not too long ago there was a conference of Indians in Vancouver of all British Columbia Indians. I think it had specific reference to the matter—I have not my estimate book here—of the method of distributing the $100,000 allocation to the Indians of British Columbia. In addition to that, a number of other items were discussed and a number of ideas were expressed by delegates at that conference. I wonder whether this is going to result in the follow-up in a revision of the Indian Act, or whether we can expect, as was apparently planned sometime ago, a normal two-year revision of the Indian Act after consultation with the Indians.

Mrs. Fairclough: All of the information gained from these various meetings is, of course, studied carefully by the department. The hon. member referred to the Hawthorne report. That report was made at the request of this department and was paid for by the department. All of the recommendations are being very carefully studied. In some instances we have already gone ahead with preliminary planning to implement those which were capable of immediate implementation. I can assure the hon. member that every word of that report is being carefully studied by the department. Any information which comes to the department from any source whatsoever is given careful study.

Mr. Chevrier: Did the minister give a moment ago the names of the islands that were expropriated?

Mrs. Fairclough: No; I did not give them but I can secure them. There were eight of them.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked for that and the amount of compensation. The minister gave the amount of compensation but did not provide the names of the islands.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we would have seen evidence of a much broader attitude on the part of the government. This is not a criticism of the government but is a criticism of ourselves as people. We have been most delinquent in respect of our responsibilities, duties and obligations to our native Indian people over the years.

Every year the same comments are made in the house, and from the editions of Hansard which I have read it appears that the same type of general discussion has taken place year after year. More than anything the hope has been expressed that our Indian people will be given better opportunities for education and chances for advancement and that they will be accepted by society and improved opportunities for employment and generally enabled to improve their lot in our nation. But although the debates over the years have been somewhat similar to that which has taken place today they have accomplished practically nothing.

Admittedly we have seen a few more Indian children reaching higher grades in school, but certainly nothing has happened which would be anywhere near what should have happened. There have been changes—very slow changes—as has been pointed out, in our attitude toward the Indians, but practically nothing concrete has been accomplished as a result of representations, conferences with the Indians, joint committees of the Senate and the House of Commons and royal commissions. I recall, in fact, one royal commission as far back as 1916 which sat in British Columbia with reference to delineating the boundaries of the reservations or, more particularly, with reference to giving some of the land in those reservations to the C.P.R. Over all these years, however, we still appear to be just on the threshold of hope that something might be done.

This is the most unfortunate aspect of the matter, and as I say, this is not a criticism of the minister or of this government; certainly no more so than it is a criticism of the past government or the gentleman who held the post before the hon. lady or even the minister before him. It is a criticism of our non-Indian society as a whole and of the inability of government or parliament to come to grips with the problem.

If we can spend, for instance, something in the neighbourhood of $16 million per year on immigration—and I am not decrying the fact that we do spend this sum for that purpose—good heavens, can we not spend more than we are spending to take a more definite approach with respect to our native Indian people who were here long, long before the coming of our first settlers? That is the thing that is wrong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: Unless and until this minister or this government or any government in office will undertake to do more than merely administer a department, we are going to have the self-same problem continuing and becoming more aggravated as the years go by.

Mr. Herridge: I was unavoidably called away when the item upon which I wished to speak was called, and I will have to send the question I wish to ask the minister in writing.

Does the minister think it right and proper that an indigent immigrant should receive an allowance from her department much larger than the allowance which would be allowed to one of the native owners of Canada who also happened to be an indigent?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not think you can compare the two; they live under entirely different circumstances.

Mr. Peters: I would like to hear more from the minister on the educational aspects of this problem because this is of great concern to the Indians and certainly to those in my part of the country. I have in mind particularly the question of the educational standards. The schools which the Indians attend are being run, so far as I can tell, by church organizations rather than other educational organizations, and less concentration is centred as the years go by on modern educational trends. Therefore, the educational standards of these people have deteriorated as their economic position has deteriorated. If our desire is to eliminate the Indian people then we are probably going about it in the right way because they are losing their identity more each year.

I have had the opportunity, as have some others in the more favoured urban communities, to attend school and to sit in classrooms with Indian children, and I have found that they have made a contribution when they have been able to obtain higher education, not only to our economy but to their own people. Particularly in the nursing profession and allied profession Indians have contributed much when they have returned to their own people. I think the minister must give consideration to this matter and that something must be done very shortly to at least bring educational standards up to the level in the province in which they live and I do not think we should wait for four years before action is taken in this respect.

I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that when I attended a veterans' school I, among others, was asked whether I would take a job teaching the Indian children. The pay was relatively good for the type of employment involved, but our standards of education were certainly not in keeping with those normally required in the teaching profession. We were merely high school students and were not, in my opinion, qualified to teach Indian children who I believe require more skilled teaching than would be required by average children. We were, however, asked to do this work, which I believe was evidence of the archaic thinking which might be expected if our aim was to dispose of the Indian population rather than to help the Indian people to become assimilated in the communities and to become first class citizens of Canada.

In my opinion the only advantage the Indians have received from us was that during the last war when they were provided with a better type of education if they were able to serve in the armed forces, but we have done very little in the field of elementary education during peacetime.

I do hope that the minister will give consideration to this matter and will have something more to say in this respect. The hon. member for Skeena has certainly given the whole subject a great deal of study and I think some of his ideas should be implemented in the very near future, not only for the betterment of Canadian Indians but for the betterment of the Canadian people as a whole. The Indians form one of the very few minority groups in Canada and we should be able to do better than some other countries with respect to improving the lot of our native population.

Mr. Howard: I believe I asked the minister at one stage whether any thought had been given to the possibility of increasing the allotments or the cash payments. If an answer was given I am afraid it escaped me.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thought I had answered that Mr. Chairman. I said it was constantly under review.

Mr. Howard: Is there any thought of an attempt to make the cash payment coincide with welfare payments to the municipalities?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, this matter is under review right now. I am informed that in one province our scale is higher than that prevailing for non-Indians. In another it is just the same, and in the rest it is a little lower than the prevailing scale.

Mr. Howard: Does the hon. lady have these figures so that we can compare them?

Mrs. Fairclough: As you get into the larger families it more nearly coincides with the provincial rate. We do not have any of these figures here.

May I reply to the hon. member for Laurier while I am on my feet? Would the hon. gentleman like to have the individual amounts?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: Here, then, is the list:

Sheik	$120,000
Wagner	5,000
Grassy	500
Toussaint	25,000
Doran	3,600
Indian	1,700
Stein	14,500
Adams	1,900
Total	$172,200

Mr. Peters: Can the hon. lady say whether it is the intention to do anything about bringing up the standard of Indian education to that of the standard in the province in which the Indians live?

Mrs. Fairclough: We are working on that constantly. I advise the hon. member that these schools are under inspection by the provincial authorities.

Mr. Herridge: I am very interested in this. I have just been handed this by the hon. member for Skeena. It mentions the rates of allowance to indigent Indians. The maximum amounts authorised are: one adult, $18; each additional adult, including children over 12, $15; each child 12 years of age or under, $12. I think it is disgraceful. If we can pay $65 as an allowance to persons coming into this country who are indigent, and if we can afford to pay $6 a day per person in respect of a certain group who came to this country and lived in hotels and restaurants, I want to protest emphatically against this small allowance made to our Indian population who were here before any of us were here and whose forefathers were here before any of ours. I do hope the department can do something to remedy this gross injustice to our Indian population.

Mrs. Fairclough: I wonder if the hon. member is aware that this amount is for food only? Things such as shelter, clothing and so on are all in addition.

Mr. Herridge: Even on that basis there is a great discrepancy.

Mr. Howard: Have you tried living on $18 a month for food?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not a hard and fast rule. This is under constant review, and in one case at least it is above the rate paid by one provincial authority. But we are watching the position and hope there can be some improvement made.

Mr. Howard: I would suggest the hon. lady watches it out in the field close to where these people live. I live very near to a number of these reserves and I have personal knowledge of Indians reduced to such circumstances that they have to go begging to the Indian superintendent's office and they get a pretty short deal. That raises the question of the acceptance of the superintendent by the native Indians themselves, which is another matter.

You talk about supplementing the income of these people by game and fish, but they find it difficult to do that. At one time trapping used to provide a substantial amount of income to the native Indian peoples but in recent years trapping has declined because of a number of reasons. As far as our part of the country is concerned one reason is that even though they have registered trap lines and are the only ones allowed to trap there, the provincial government has come along and granted timber rights or mineral rights, and when a logging or mining company moves in it ruins the trap line and that takes away part of the income. As far as game is concerned it is the same thing.

Over the years our approach—and it has had a poor result—has been to try to get them to leave their old way of life of being nomads and living off the land and living off game and fish and so on, and to encourage them to set themselves up in our social structure where they should work as much as they can the year round and earn enough to keep themselves and to buy the goods and necessities they need in the same way as some others of us attempt to do. On the one hand, we have been trying to tell them to forget about fishing and hunting as a way of life and to accept our way of life and, on the other hand, we tell them, when they only get this paltry amount to subsist on: go out and fish and hunt to increase it. And in many instances they are not able to do so because civilization is encroaching on their lands.

North of Terrace we have one company in the logging and pulp field which has a forest management licence of over 750,000 acres much of which used to be land which the Indian fished and hunted. Now they cannot get in there because it would be trespassing. Our approach is foolish and I cannot help but take exception to this sort of attitude. I am not being critical of the minister. What I am being critical of is our attitude as non-Indians towards Indians, and as long as that attitude continues we will do nothing to help solve their problems or our problems in relation to them.

Mrs. Fairclough: I can only assure the hon. gentleman that I am as gravely concerned as he is over the situation, and since the administration of the department is in my hands I will not leave any stone unturned to try to correct injustices.

Mr. Howard: Needless to say I would be the first to wish the minister every success in the world.

Mr. Benidickson: On item 66, and directly to the point of administration, I wonder if the minister would outline to me something about the decentralization activities of the department? Would she please say something about the jurisdiction of the sub-areas? I make no complaint against the minister or the present administration. I want to say very frankly that I have objected to the set-up under her two predecessors with regard to a situation which I do not think was improved very much in the line of decentralization.

In the district of Kenora-Rainy River we have three Indian agencies. They are obliged to report to North Bay. The minister, who has been a visitor to northern Ontario on many occasions, knows there is a distance there of eight or nine hundred miles and I have often felt that this idea of decentralization has merely been camouflage and that in fact it had created an additional post office where mail could get lost and procrastination could set in. The main thing I ask is that the minister should outline the jurisdiction at the Indian agency level for getting certain things done. Would she also indicate what might be within the authority in our area of North Bay without reference to Ottawa? As I say, over the years I have made these complaints to three ministers.

It is my experience that too many things have to be referred from the Indian agency to the subagency and then to Ottawa eventually. The result is that work does not proceed. With respect to such things as the laying of linoleum or putting in a boiler or something of that kind, the decision is received in August and the school does not open until January. I can illustrate that not only in the current year under the present minister's administration but also under the former administration. There is something wrong there, particularly in the construction field. Decisions of importance which involve construction should be taken in the summer holidays when the school is vacant, but the paper work is not completed until well on into August and the result is that the school is disrupted at the beginning of September. I know of at least three instances in the last four years where the schools did not open until after Christmas.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not sure whether I understand the hon. gentleman correctly. Is he advocating the placing of more authority in the hands of the superintendent or of the agent, probably with greater spending power at their level? Is that what he is advocating? Is he advocating that the request should come right through to headquarters?

Mr. Benidickson: I am inclined to think that with respect to the larger items the latter is what I had in mind because I get the impression that while they are referred to this sublevel, they have to come to Ottawa anyway. If that is so, why is not some form of duplicate letter sent merely to the sublevel and the Ottawa administration, particularly on construction, repairs and things of that kind, deal with it immediately and not have a new initiating letter from the area superintendent.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course, the problem that the hon. member has brought up is not a new one. It has been one that has caused considerable headaches in the department for many years. I do not know to what extent we can streamline the operation to obviate the difficulties the hon. gentleman has suggested but I will look into it. I have not yet had the opportunity to go into some of those details, but I will have a look at it.

Mr. Benidickson: I appreciate the assurance, Mr. Chairman. I still recall some experiences in the administration of the post office in the past where there seemed to be too many levels of passing an item for decision and yet it had to come to Ottawa anyway. I am just wondering whether those things have to come to Ottawa for approval anyway or whether there should not be a very serious look at the levels of responsibility. My pertinent question was, what is the maximum authority of the sublevel jurisdiction under the superintendent—I think that is what he is called—without reference to Ottawa?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is $1,000.

Mr. Benidickson: In my opinion that is ridiculous. There is no point in having a superintendent who is the supervisor of many agencies if his jurisdiction extends only to $1,000, and the correspondence eventually has to come to Ottawa.

Mrs. Fairclough: If my information is correct, the public works districts are operated in the same way. Of course, $1,000 does not apply to just one item. For a small contract it does not mean $1,000 a year; it means an expenditure up to $1,000.

Mr. Benidickson: If you have to lay some linoleum and disrupt your classrooms it is too bad. If you intend to do that you should do it while the school is in vacation. If the amount involved is a little over $1,000 and it has to come to Ottawa, then the decision is not given until August 15, and my hon.

friend can understand what that means to the administration of the school.

Indian agencies—

68. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,195,630.

Mr. Pickersgill: How much of this estimate is spent directly by the department and how much is spent through the Department of Public Works?

Mrs. Fairclough: On this particular vote none of the work has been done by public works.

Mr. Pickersgill: Relatively speaking, these are all agency buildings. There seems to be quite a substantial increase in this amount; in fact it is about 50 per cent. The minister is better at arithmetic than I am, but it is perhaps 40 per cent more than last year.

Mrs. Fairclough: This is largely owing to the need for water supply and sewage systems.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Caughnawaga business?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suppose the amount paid by the seaway with reference to Caughnawaga went into the consolidated revenue fund and the minister had to get a vote for the full amount?

Mr. Benidickson: While the minister is preparing to reply I just want to put this on Hansard. This brings to mind something that has given me a great deal of irritation over the years. I refer to the matter of construction. I have been told repeatedly, not only by the construction branch of this department but by the construction branches of other departments of government, that the reason why we have not had much progress and particularly have not been prepared to embark on a building job in the best building season in this country, which is rather short, is that parliament has not passed an estimate. I have not the document in front of me but I am well aware that this is nonsense. There is a clause in the Financial Administration Act which permits a department, once the estimates are tabled in the house,—and normally they are tabled in January—to get on with the job, to get their work done and to get their tenders called. I do not think that the history of parliament indicates that parliament has ever been loathe to grant interim supply, if that were necessary. But it is utter nonsense to hear repeatedly from construction branches of government—and I think this department offends more than most—that the reason they have not a contract let is that parliamentarians have not concluded the session or they have not passed the relevant item in the estimates. The Financial Administration Act provides ample remedy for that and I hope the minister will keep that in mind. I drew that to the attention of her predecessors.

Mrs. Fairclough: I believe we are proceeding as rapidly as possible. I do not think any of our works are being held up at the present time for those reasons.

Item agreed to.

Reserves and trusts—

69. Operation and maintenance, $327,912.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister has ever had time to look at the proceedings of the estimates committee when this department was before that committee some years ago she will realize that at that time I made a frank confession that in so far as the winding up of Indian estates was concerned it was very badly in arrears and steps were being taken to bring it up to date. What progress is being made in that field?

Mrs. Fairclough: I can assure the hon. member that we are making progress in this department. In 1957-58, 1,979 estates were concluded and in the same year an additional 702 were opened. The preceding year there were 1,420 concluded and 667 opened.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister does feel that steady improvement is being made.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, very definitely.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister explain to me and to the committee what the statutory item, Indian annuities, refers to? I am sure she can do it far more quickly than we can by looking up the statute. Would she also explain what is meant by reserves and trusts? What is in trust?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not know whether the hon. member wants a long explanation. As far as Indian annuities are concerned, this provides for the payment of Indian annuities in pursuance of the conditions of any treaty entered into on behalf of Her Majesty or her predecessors, for which the government of Canada is responsible and which is a charge upon the consolidated revenue fund of Canada as provided by statute under section 71 of the Indian Act, which section reads as follows:

> Moneys that are payable to Indians or to Indian bands under a treaty between Her Majesty and the band and for the payment of which the government of Canada is responsible, may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister allow a little help on that point? I think I can explain it in two seconds. It is what is called treaty money in all the other provinces and in British Columbia you do not have it.

Mr. Howard: In addition there was the question of the item in the estimates having to do with the operation and maintenance of reserves and trusts. I am interested in the trust factor. What is kept in trust?

Mrs. Fairclough: While we are getting the rest of the information maybe I should tell the hon. member that the functions are, first, the management, administration and utilization of Indian reserves and surrendered lands, which includes the acquisition of land for new reserves, and the sale, lease and disposal or other use of natural resources such as timber, oil, petroleum, natural gas and other mines and minerals; second, the administration of Indian band funds and annuities; third, the maintenance of band membership records; and, fourth, the administration of the estates of deceased and mentally incompetent Indians. These are all under reserves and trusts.

Mr. Howard: For argument's sake, and this is purely hypothetical, if a band in British Columbia sold some timber to a logging company the proceeds of that sale would go into this trust fund and come under the administration of this branch.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is right.

Mr. Howard: Is there any provision whereby the band may prevent the money coming to Ottawa to be held in trust? Is there any arrangement whereby the band may decide that they do not want the money tied up in the Indian affairs branch at Ottawa and that they want to use it themselves for some specific or general purpose?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am advised there is a section in the act which permits the Indians to handle their own funds but that none of the bands has yet reached that stage.

Mr. Howard: Who decides when they reach this stage?

Mrs. Fairclough: To some extent they do themselves.

Mr. Howard: Again this is hypothetical, but if a band decided that they would use the proceeds from the sale of timber the branch would allow them to do so, or would there be any possibility of preventing it?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is very difficult to answer hypothetical questions. If the member can give us a specific case, we will try to answer it.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mr. Howard: I am sure there are some specific cases. I can think of one near Nanaimo. I pose this question and I am sure it can be answered. If a band decided that certain timber on their reserve would be sold and that the proceeds from the sale of the timber would be kept for use by the band and not sent to Ottawa, would the departmental officials be able to override the wishes of the band and make them send the money to Ottawa?

Mrs. Fairclough: The funds come to Ottawa and if the band requires money for a specific purpose they make arrangements with the branch and in certain cases the money is used for purposes decided upon by the band.

Mr. Howard: I think it is getting clearer.

Mrs. Fairclough: There has to be a resolution of the band. The band has to decide what it wants to do with the money. Representations are then made to the branch and if agreement is reached the funds are handled in that way.

Mr. Howard: In all cases the officials of the Indian affairs branch are agents acting on behalf of the minister in any negotiations.

Mr. Peters: How do the Indians eventually get the benefit of these moneys? Suppose they need to build new houses or want to buy new stoves for their houses and have sold a million feet of lumber from the reserve; how do they get the money back again?

Mrs. Fairclough: They would make representations to their own band and the band council would decide. The council would pass a resolution with regard to the matter expressing its wishes which would come forward to the Indian affairs branch and the matter would then be dealt with in that way.

Item agreed to.

Welfare and economic development of Indians—
70. Operation and maintenance, $3,970,678.

Mr. Pearson: I believe this item deals with the welfare and economic development of Indians and I should like to express my appreciation of what the branch has done for the welfare of the Indians in my riding. There are still some problems, especially in the West Bay band, but on the whole great progress has been made. But as the minister knows one important aspect of welfare is health, and while I now realize what she said a little while ago, that the health of Indians comes under the Department of National Health and Welfare, nevertheless the problems and the difficulties encountered by Indian affairs doctors, though not under the minister's jurisdiction, will have an effect on the welfare of the Indians. That is why I venture to bring this matter forward. If difficulties can be created under the health and welfare regulations by a doctor serving not only Indians but in certain cases white patients and if that particular doctor is prosecuted for that under the regulations, then there can be trouble and the welfare of the Indians themselves will suffer. We have an unfortunate case at hand at the moment on Manitoulin island where an Indian doctor has been prosecuted apparently for giving service to some whites. I am sure that is causing a great deal of worry and anxiety and probably some discontent.

Mrs. Fairclough: That has been settled.

Mr. Pearson: According to the press the case is coming up and the doctor is to be prosecuted. I hope this kind of thing can be avoided because it causes trouble. I am not assessing the blame because I do not know where the blame lies in this particular case but I hope that the two departments can get together and make sure that this kind of thing does not occur.

Mrs. Fairclough: If my memory serves me well, I saw either in today's or yesterday's paper that he had been acquitted and held blameless because whatever services he had rendered had been rendered with the consent of other doctors who were overloaded and any fees received were paid to the government.

Mr. Pearson: I may be wrong. Perhaps the case has come up. Perhaps the doctor has been acquitted, but the charge was laid by the Ontario college of physicians. What I am suggesting is that surely arrangements could be made in the future so this kind of thing, with all the undesirable publicity, could be avoided.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the man was just trying to help out his colleagues in the vicinity, who simply could not handle their patients.

Mr. Pearson: I am sure he was.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make another comment along the same lines as the comment I made with respect to education. I should like to suggest the same approach should be adopted here, that is that in consultation with the various provinces which have fairly extensive departments of health and welfare an attempt should be made to have these provincial departments look after the health and welfare of the Indians. Having in mind the views expressed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingsgate—

Mr. Pickersgill: Twillingate, without any "s".

Mr. Howard: It is a hard one to pronounce, and I would find it easier to say the unpaid parliamentary assistant. However, with all due respect to the views he expressed concerning the constitutional problems and the hereditary rights of the Indians, we should attempt to move in this direction of having the health and welfare of native Indians under the jurisdiction of the various provincial governments, just as I advocated for education. I say that having in mind the general idea that we will be able to work more closely with each other as Indians and non-Indians; we will be able to appreciate each other's background and culture, and so be able to work together for the general betterment of society.

It is in that light that I am expressing this idea, as I did in connection with education. We should move in the direction of bringing the health and welfare of Indians under provincial jurisdiction so that we do not have two jurisdictions in the field of health and welfare overlapping one another so far as Indians are concerned and their friends who live right next door who are not Indians, and who normally fit into the program of the various provincial governments. I know that at the moment this is something we could not give to the provincial government and say, here, we are going to dump it all in your lap; you figure out a per capita payment and we will pay. It is going to require some extensive discussion.

I feel that the federal department, which now has Indian affairs under its jurisdiction almost exclusively, should take the lead in this matter and express its ideas to the various provincial governments. The hope would be, eventually, of moving in the direction of not having an Indian affairs branch but having the various services administered for Indians on the same basis as they are administered for the other people in this country, working towards equality. I merely want to express the same general thoughts with respect to health and welfare, as I expressed with respect to education.

Mrs. Fairclough: We have been working on this matter for quite some time now with a view to making agreements with the various provinces. But the hon. member will understand that a plan such as he envisages must entail the province accepting some responsibility.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister indicate what progress is being made? Is she in a position to mention specifically the provinces which, in a few years, might be doing something?

Mrs. Fairclough: We have at the moment an agreement with Ontario and 23 out of 26 children's aid societies.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there not the same kind of agreement with Saskatchewan?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is not complete as yet.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to make a few remarks on this. I just want to mention to the minister a few of the difficulties with respect to Indians in my territory. She probably is already familiar with them, although she is new in the department. We are feeling, probably as acutely as anywhere in the country, the difficulties that result from Indians moving in, as we desire them to do, to the industrial areas and taking their place on an integrated basis. I want to pay tribute to the officers of the department, particularly the present executive assistant to the Minister of Transport, who visited our particular part of the country. I think his report is worthy of study by the minister and her officials. I know the director has always been very sympathetic to this type of thing.

We are having a great deal of difficulty in our municipalities which adjoin reservations—some reservations are within the boundaries of municipalities. I know that at the moment there is some litigation in this respect, and I feel sure the minister will give this matter study. I think very worthwhile advances have been made also in providing direction, and sometimes equipment, for the processing of lumber from the timber that is available on the reserves to aid the Indian to build for himself better accommodation. This move has certainly been worthwhile in our territory, and I think it could be extended. I wondered to what extent similar consideration is being given to directing Indians, and even providing them with certain of the basic equipment, in connection with fish processing.

In northern Ontario, according to my experience, most of the Indians today are at the mercy of the commercial fish brokers because they are not acquainted with some of the more modern methods of fish processing. I think some of the more basic equipment that is now available, and which is not expensive, as well as some advice on fish processing would have the result of giving the Indians better returns from their labours in catching fish. As a result of this lack of knowledge, and this lack of certain basic processing equipment, today the Indians are at the mercy of the fish merchants. Of course, if the Indian received a greater return there would be a benefit in the reduction of the welfare item. I think the same kind of attention ought to be given to this fish processing problem as has been given, in recent times, to the processing of lumber. I hope that will be done.

There are a great many difficulties, as I say, experienced by the municipalities. I must say I have found the department most sympathetic to these difficulties. I would only complain that I think, in some instances, inasmuch as we are able to rectify some things here, there may be some slight lack of knowledge on the part of the local agencies as to what is the desire in this respect. I am not one who believes, in so far as welfare and health matters are concerned, that the Indian who leaves the reserve is, forever and a day, a ward of the federal government. I think that might be a bar to integration. However, I am a great believer in a sympathetic attitude on the part of the department during what I might call the bridge stage when one would be moving from the reserve into the other type of life that would be lived normally by other Canadians. I believe that is the view of the director and, I am sure, of the minister. I just hope that it will be taken by municipalities and others who are constantly passing the buck and saying "once an Indian, always an Indian". It takes weeks sometimes for welfare and health situations to be taken care of. I hope there will be some more authority and conference provided to the local agencies so that they can deal with these things on the spot.

Mrs. Fairclough: The matter of fish supervisors does not properly come under this item but, nevertheless, if the hon. member will make available to the department his requests in this respect we shall see whether we can comply with them. The department is always ready and willing to aid with whatever equipment will make it possible for the Indians to pursue their particular activities with greater efficiency. The supervisors will be glad to co-operate. If the hon. member has some specific suggestions to make or if he wants more supervisors in the operation of fishing and the gathering and marketing of fish, we shall be glad to do what we can to help him.

Mr. Benidickson: I think in the larger lakes it can be provided without very much expense. I am thinking of lakes north of Sioux Lookout and Red Lake. I think that either by loan or gift certain filleting and other types of processing equipment could be provided. If that were done I think the Indian would soon have a very much greater return per pound for the work he has put in to catch the fish in the first place.

Mrs. Fairclough: We have assisted the Indians at Sandy lake in their goldeye program and we shall be glad to assist any others who would like to benefit by the advice of the supervisors.

Mr. Howard: It may be that it is under this item that the question of the revolving fund comes, or does it come under the Department of Finance? I wonder whether the minister could indicate where this revolving fund could be dealt with.

Mrs. Fairclough: We can discuss it under this item.

Mr. Howard: Very well. I do not know what has been the experience of the Indians applying for a loan under the revolving fund within the last year, but at least prior to that time many that I know of had a sad experience in trying to borrow money from the revolving fund for purposes which they thought—and in many instances I agreed with them—were ones for which loans should be made. As I say, I do not know from any personal knowledge how this fund has worked in the past year. However, the operation of it can mean a great deal to individual Indians or to groups of Indians who may want to perform some work on a farm, buy additional industrial equipment for logging, as some of them do, for fishing, for some other pursuit or even for the establishment of a store on the reserve. In years past the experience has been that it has been most difficult to get money out of the department from this revolving fund.

As the minister knows, Indians are in a most difficult position in respect of borrowing money from a bank because of the question of collateral. Those of us who are at the moment in the upper brackets of income have no difficulty in going to the bank and borrowing, say, $1,000. But an Indian would find it almost impossible to borrow money from the bank. Generally speaking, the only source from which he can get a loan is the revolving fund. I think that if there were to be a relaxation with respect to the granting of loans from the revolving fund it would certainly do a great deal so far as fishermen are concerned in the way of assisting them in getting out of the clutches of some of the fishing companies they work for. They get tied hand and foot to a fishing company, renting a boat, renting their gear, renting everything and buying everything from a particular company. They wind up at the end of the year to find that they still owe money to the company and they start off the next fishing season in precisely the same position of being in debt. I wonder whether the minister could indicate what are the general requirements for borrowing money from the revolving fund; what amount of money is in there at the present time; what is the limit that any one individual may borrow, if there is any; and what is the total limit on the amount that may be borrowed from this fund.

Mrs. Fairclough: The main requirements are character and a reasonable ability to repay. I may say that just within the last couple of weeks two loans have been given to individuals in British Columbia, each for about $10,000. From April 1, 1957 to March 31, 1958, 131 loans were made. Those are by projects so I cannot say how many were to British Columbia. But over the period this fund has been in existence there were 128 loans to British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: Is there a set length of time for the loan? Is it on a five-year or ten-year basis or does it vary with the project? What interest rate, if any, applies?

Mrs. Fairclough: They vary according to the need of the borrower, but the average is about five years.

Mr. Howard: And the interest rate?

Mrs. Fairclough: Five per cent.

72. Grants to agricultural exhibitions and Indian fairs, $7,025.

Mr. Herridge: I have two questions I wish to ask the minister on this item. Why are these grants to agricultural fairs other than Indian fairs administered by this department instead of by the Department of Agriculture? Second, as the grants are all small, on what basis are they determined?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member has misinterpreted the wording. They are all for Indians. But some of the fairs are agricultural fairs and some are Indian fairs.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, but I did not understand the minister. Some of the fairs mentioned here are quite well known agricultural fairs.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes; but they are for Indians.

Mr. Herridge: In what way are the moneys used for Indians at these fairs?

Mrs. Fairclough: If they will sponsor Indian exhibits and work in co-operation with Indians.

Mr. Herridge: That is to say it is a form of prize for Indians to undertake that work?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

73. Fur conservation, $286,284.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the minister can explain how this operates? In what manner are fur-bearing animals conserved for Indians?

Mrs. Fairclough: The purpose of this vote is to promote the stabilization of the Indian economy by management, in co-operation with the various provinces, of the fur and wildlife resources available to Indians, both on and off their reserves, including assistance in marketing and management of the proceeds therefrom. Although the amount is relatively small, in terms of total expenditure, this vote is of the utmost importance to the Indians who live in areas where the only vocations available to them are hunting, trapping and fishing and who, by instinct and training, are proficient in these vocations. Alternative sources of livelihood are constantly sought and developed, but to many Indians there will remain for some time to come, only fur-bearing animals, wild meat and fish as a source of food and revenue.

Mr. Herridge: I would like to ask the minister a question on this vote. In view of the fact that the trap line of the Arrow lakes band of Indians has disappeared because of activities in the early days, is the government under this vote preserving their traditional trapping rights on the west shores of the Arrow lakes and on the slopes of the Monashee?

Mrs. Fairclough: We have received a report from the field on this particular problem, and I think I can best answer by reading that report:

> It is reported that Mary Ann Joseph, last member of the Arrow Lakes band, transferred her interest in the trap line referred to, to an Indian of the Lower Kootenay band, Lazarus Louie.
>
> The game branch advised that Lazarus Louie has not renewed his registration since 1949 but there is no indication that the line would be disposed of without consulting the branch.
>
> An interview with Lazarus Louie, holder of the line at this time, will be arranged to ascertain his intentions of either renewing the registration or disposing of the line to another Indian.

Mr. Herridge: I went to school with Mary Joseph.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is a recent report, just two weeks ago.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister for that information because I know the trap line there very well indeed. Will the minister assure me that the Indian affairs branch will make sure that the rights of these Indians are protected with respect to this trap line?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister tell us how much of this assistance went to Ontario and how much is handled by that province? I know they have a system of allocating trap lines to Indians on a preferment basis, but I want to know if any of the money goes in compensation to those trappers whose lines are let us say devaluated by pulpwood operations?

Mrs. Fairclough: The amount that was allocated to Ontario was $150,000.

Mr. Fisher: Why was the amount of $150,000 required by Ontario when by agreement the total federal assistance is only $145,000?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is just half the cost.

Mr. Fisher: Oh, I see.

Mrs. Fairclough: Half the cost, but the amount has always been over-expended by Ontario, which province has no difficulty at January 31 of each year in submitting amounts in excess of the $150,000, but of course that is the ceiling.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister tell me whether there is any system of compensation to those people whose trap lines are affected, and the whole value of the catch and everything is devaluated by large scale pulpwood operations in their areas? This has happened to many trappers and I am thinking especially of the Long Lac and Marathon pulpwood operations.

Mrs. Fairclough: If there is any reason to believe that there should be some compensation the department looks into it. The ones mentioned by the hon. member are not known to the department as having been injurious to the rights of Indians. Apparently no protests were lodged.

Mr. Howard: I thought I heard the minister say, if the trap lines have been ruined and lost as a result of the situation mentioned by the member for Port Arthur, whether there is any possibility of reimbursement by this department. Did I understand the hon. lady to say that?

Mrs. Fairclough: No. If the trap line of an Indian is destroyed or damaged or otherwise interfered with, so that his livelihood is affected, and if he makes representations to the department, it is considered. Most of these are on provincial lands, and the matter is then taken up with the province and compensation is sought from them.

Mr. Howard: I thank the minister very much for saying that and my friend from Port Arthur for raising the matter, because we have a problem in British Columbia with respect to trap lines being ruined in this way. This has been the case for quite a number of years and the position taken by the provincial authority is that inasmuch as the trap lines were on crown land the provincial government had the responsibility of considering whether or not reimbursement or compensation should be paid and up until this time they have seen fit not to make any compensation payments.

Their argument has been, and in my opinion it is a screwy one, "who is to say whether the entry into that trap line by a logging company drove the furbearing animals away; if a logging company had not gone in, the animals might still have gone away, so that the onus is not on us and we are not going to make any payments."

I can assure the minister that a number of representations will be made to her branch arising out of individual complaints that trap lines have been lost and that livelihoods have been affected by reason of logging activities in respect of crown timber, by reason of mineral claims and developments in respect of mines and by reason of hydro development and the flooding of trap line areas.

Mrs. Fairclough: We have secured compensation in the case of hydro developments and I might especially mention Kitimat.

Mr. Howard: You have paid compensation?

Mrs. Fairclough: We have secured it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister has yet made a settlement with the Department of National Defence of the Cold lake business. I am afraid it was a terrible mess that I left her to settle, because the minister of national defence was not showing the generosity towards the Indians which I thought he should show and we never were able to reach a settlement. I do not expect an answer now because it is far too complicated a question, but I think the principle is, is it not, that in a case where any injury is done to an Indian trap line or an Indian's trapping rights the department seeks compensation from the person responsible for the injury, whether it is the provincial government, a private person or a corporation?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is right.

Education—

74. Administration, operation and maintenance, $14,805,968.

Mr. Howard: On the first item I raised a couple of matters with respect to education. One matter had to do with salary structures for teachers in the Indian affairs branch not being comparable with salaries in effect in the provinces, specifically in the province of British Columbia. I am wondering if there is any intention of so adjusting the salary structure of teachers in the Indian affairs branch that they will be comparable with provincial teachers' salaries?

Mrs. Fairclough: I might tell the hon. member that it is quite true our salary structure was low but it has now been increased and favourably compares with the salary structure for teachers right across the country.

Mr. Howard: Is there now a uniform salary structure in the Indian affairs branch across the country?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Howard: It appears to me that the salary structure of teachers might vary from province to province. I understand that the salary structure in the maritimes is quite low compared with that in British Columbia or that in other provinces. Is there an equitable situation between the provinces or how can we get the equation there?

Mrs. Fairclough: In government, as the hon. member knows, the same rates apply across the country. The rates are determined according to the qualifications of the individual concerned.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister inform the house if the rates paid to teachers in this branch equal the rates paid to teachers by the Department of National Defence?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer is, yes.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister what is the policy of the government in regard to Indian residential schools?

Mrs. Fairclough: There is a continuing need for some of the residential schools. Where there does not appear to be a continuing need the pupils are being transferred to day schools.

With regard to the hon. gentleman's former question as to the Spanish schools, it is only the boys' schools which will be closed. No Indian boy will be denied the opportunity of high school education, and provision has been made to accommodate them in other schools.

Mr. Pearson: I am glad to hear that. There was also the factor of non-Indian pupils at these schools who would suffer some inconvenience. That I know, is nobody's fault. I am also glad that it is not the policy to close any residential schools which are needed.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not wish to delay the minister or the committee in passing these estimates but I should like to ask whether or not the minister is familiar with an offer which was made by the department of the provincial government of Ontario with respect to education in the Red Lake area to which I referred when discussing the welfare item.

I simply want to know if the offer is still open as far as the province of Ontario is concerned with respect to something which would have to be rather new in the matter of a contribution to the education of Indians, during what I again refer to as bridge period, who are not actually at that moment on reserves.

Mrs. Fairclough: At the present time we are negotiating with the school board about that.

Mr. Benidickson: I have mentioned in addition the fact that very worth while work is being done for these Indians that is not being done by the public schools and I learned to my surprise that a new separate school is not going to take care of them, either. I know a good deal is being done through a United States church which has, I believe, 45 or 50 pupils in its school. No fees, as far as I know, are charged these pupils. Apparently there was some doubt in the department that they were catering solely to Indians and on that basis I understood there was some hesitation about considering a financial grant. They looked upon it as a private school. It is entirely a missionary school for Indians and I am wondering if this is under active review at the moment by the department.

Mrs. Fairclough: There is some doubt as to whether the provincial government is going to take care of their needs and the situation stands there.

Mr. Benidickson: That was not the actual doubt that was last expressed to me two or three weeks ago. The deputy minister indicated that he had some cause in connection with the request for some help, largely on the ground that he did not understand it was a school which was completely charitable and, secondly, which was catering entirely for Indians. He had understood it was in the nature of a private school catering to both whites and Indians. I admit that the situation is odd in that some, if not most, of the Indians are not actually living on reserves but if the minister and the officials will assure me that there is continuing and active conversation with the province of Ontario with respect to this I will be able to convey it to those who are very interested in the Red Lake district.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is true, but I am told it is a private school and that it is not under the inspector of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Fisher: Are there any educational facilities for Indians at either Lansdowne House or Weenusk?

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mrs. Fairclough: There is a school at Lansdowne, but with reference to Weenusk there has been a seasonal school operated there if and when we can get staff to go in during the season.

Mr. Fisher: The place is about 600 miles north of Port Arthur and I doubt whether I will ever get into it but I understand there is a bit of a problem of Indian education there. It is one of the defence bases and I have heard from a white man who worked there that the conditions of Indian education were not very satisfactory.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, that is the one I have just mentioned, Weenusk.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I might make reference to an allegation which appeared in a newspaper—whether factual or not I have no means of knowing at the moment—to the effect that the qualifications required of teachers in the Indian affairs branch were lower than those required of teachers teaching in the province of British Columbia where this comparison was drawn. I wonder whether the minister could comment on the accuracy of that report?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is not true.

Mr. Howard: The qualifications are normal?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we not carry on for one more minute and finish it?

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the house that we take one minute more?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will yield to the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: My question relates to the reserve at Longlac. Could the minister indicate whether there have been any difficulties in the reserve over the question of hydro power into the communities. I have been there personally; I still have not threshed out what the situation is but I know there have been general grievances with regard to hydro going into their communities. I wonder if the minister has anything in her files on that matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have not, but I will be very glad to look into it.

Item agreed to.

75. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $6,647,200.

Mr. Benidickson: I just want to say on item 75 that the minister's predecessor in March, 1957 assured me that the residential school at Fort Frances would be reconstructed. The officials of the department said it was not worth repairing. Construction has not started, and I wonder whether the minister has any information.

Mrs. Fairclough: The Department of Public Works is working at the present time on the design for the school.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if there is not going to be too much discussion could we take item 76?

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to follow the course suggested by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall item 75 carry?

Item agreed to.

76. Grant to provide additional services to the Indians of British Columbia, $100,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman,—

An hon. Member: Oh! Sit down.

Mr. Howard: I say to my hon. friend over there with the big mouth that I do not wish to get into harsh words with him, whoever he may be. Since I come from British Columbia and since the minister wanted to proceed with this item I thought it only fair that we might be permitted to make a comment or ask a question specifically with respect to the conference of Indians that was held in Vancouver, British Columbia a few months ago. This item was discussed at some length at that conference. Can the minister indicate what arose out of that conference with respect to the distribution of this money and what the plans are at the moment with respect to the recommendations of the conference?

Mrs. Fairclough: It was suggested that the branch continue to spend this money with the assistance of three Indian advisers from different parts of the province. Right now we are endeavouring to secure those persons.

Item agreed to.

Welfare and economic development of Indians—

539. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. Howard: This is a substantial increase. It is $1 million for welfare and economic development of Indians. Compared with the original amount, which was a little over $1 million, it is almost a 100 per cent increase. May we have some details?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is for a housing program. We hope to proceed with it at once. It is for housing which is badly needed.

Mr. Howard: Where?

Mrs. Fairclough: I presume the hon. member is most anxious to know how many are to be built in British Columbia. There will be 126 in British Columbia and the Yukon, 86 in Alberta and the Northwest Territories, 115 in Saskatchewan, 70 in Manitoba, 50 in Ontario north, 25 in Ontario south, 55 in Quebec, and 11 in the maritimes.

Mr. Fisher: Is the lower figure for Ontario north in relation to Saskatchewan and Manitoba an indication that the facilities there are now considered to be higher or more adequate?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not think it is particularly that. It depends on the area and the need which is estimated to exist in the area.

Mr. Howard: Would it be possible for the minister, probably not at this time unless the information is readily available, to give us a breakdown of where the 126 will be built in British Columbia, on what reserves, and so on?

Mrs. Fairclough: Would the hon. member be satisfied if I put it on Hansard?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: The places are as follows:

British Columbia and Yukon

Babine agency—3 new houses	$ 6,000
Bella Coola agency—6 new houses	12,000
Burns lake agency—8 new houses	12,000

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

226. Administration, production and distribution of films and other visual materials, $4,103,346.

The Chairman: Shall item 226 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I am sure the hon. lady would like to tell us a little about the film board.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those divisions of the government which is interesting and whose activities are complex. At a total additional cost of $92,380 this year, the board will be increasing during the present year the number of foreign versions of its films and will provide the deferred replacement prints for film libraries operated by the Canadian posts abroad, together with additional copies of new releases, and will supply a basic library for two new Canadian posts at Kuala Lumpur, capital of Malaya, and at Accra, the capital of Ghana.

The board has strengthened its science film division and wishes to increase by $31,500 its allotment of funds, bringing its budget up to $95,230.

Finally, the board wishes to commence the survey of 60 million feet of film held at Pendleton airport, 40 million feet of which is on cellulose nitrate base, an extremely hazardous substance. In the footage held in a hanger at Pendleton airport, in edited or unedited form, are materials from world wars I and II, the Canadian motion picture bureau, plus numerous miscellaneous accessions from government departments and others. The survey for which $20,000 is allocated will determine which portion of the material must be transferred over a period of years to film with an acetate base and also which part of it must be maintained as part of Canada's permanent historical records on film.

With respect to the distribution activities of the board, I should like to inform the house that during the fiscal year 1957-58 the board, through Canadian posts and film libraries, reached an audience of 21,008,919. Canadian films are being shown daily by the national film board in the Canadian pavilion at the Brussels fair. Approximately 3,000 visitors a day attend screenings in the 280-seat theatre operated by the national film board in the Canadian pavilion. In Canada in the last year, through the co-operation of 496 community film councils and other national and local voluntary associations and on the film board's own circuits 32,000 showings have taken place. In the northern territories and the Arctic alone the board has distributed, through the co-operation of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Transport, 4,500 films. These figures do not take into account the mass audience which has seen national film board productions over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation national network or on private stations through local bookings.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I have one or two observations I should like to make about the film board. I am not going to embarrass the hon. lady by asking whether she thinks the film board is efficient but I do want to say a word about the subject she first mentioned in her observations, the preservation of old film going back to the first world war. If I caught the purport of the hon. lady's observations correctly, it is the intention of the present administration to preserve all of this valuable historical material that can be preserved. I am afraid from what I learned that there is some of it in such a state that this may be very difficult.

Mrs. Fairclough: It will be edited.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know I had some little difficulty persuading a hardhearted treasury board to make provision for starting this work and I hope the hon. lady is as successful with the present Minister of Finance as I was with his predecessor because I think in the future this is going to be one of the real treasures of our country. As to the film board itself, I think the hon. member for Dollard, in whose constituency the film board is now situated, would like to make a few observations. I do not intend to make any except to say that there is an apparent increase in the estimates of $239,000 and I was not sure that I caught the reasons for that increase.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact, I started to speak about the foreign versions of films and I am afraid I overlooked the introductory remarks which would have explained it. The amount requested this year is $4,258,918 which is a net increase of $239,230, of which $152,562 is required to cover the increased cost of maintaining existing activities at the level of last year and $143,880 of which represents the cost of extension of activities and new projects. I enumerated the new projects. The difference is unrequired new building vote.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a most difficult position tonight in discussing the estimates of the national film board. As I am still a bachelor I hate the idea of arguing with a lady, and being convinced that the national film board is doing good work for the Canadian people and for Canada it is hard for me to find room for criticism. But having in mind what the hon. lady said a few years ago in the house, that despite the fact that she was a woman she would not ask for any quarter, I feel very much at ease in discussing the film board, and also because I have in mind that there is always room for improvement. Before making the few remarks I wish to make, I should like to ask the minister why we were not able to obtain the annual report of the film board for the year 1956-57 until today.

Mrs. Fairclough: I understand there was some difficulty about the 1956-57 report. It was tabled, as the hon. member may know, on October 21, 1957, by the acting minister of the department. The responsibility for printing and delivering the report rests with the queen's printer. I do not know where the distribution fell down but in any event the report is available and can be procured by any member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it tabled in manuscript form?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, it was tabled in printed form.

Mr. Rouleau: I should like to pursue my remarks in French and I hope the minister will forgive me.

(Translation):

It was on September 24, 1956, that the new national film board building was officially opened in Montreal, more exactly in the city of St. Laurent. On that occasion, we had the honour of playing host in Montreal and in the city of St. Laurent to federal and provincial government officials and to representatives of universities and colleges all over Canada. It was a great honour for my constituency of Dollard, and for the people of Montreal island.

All present at the opening were greatly impressed.

As member for Dollard, I must say that, when I looked at the national film board report for 1955-56, I felt proud of the frontispiece showing a picture of the new building, against the background of the city of St. Laurent and the constituency of Dollard.

At the opening of the NFB building his worship Mayor Cousineau, of St. Laurent, congratulated the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), then minister of citizenship and immigration who was responsible for the NFB in this house, for having transferred the film board to the city of St. Laurent and for having caused this magnificent building to be put up with the co-operation of the minister of transport. These events took place in 1956. But then in 1958, this mayor of St. Laurent, Mr. Cousineau, became an official candidate of the party of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and this time complained of the national film board being there and even indicated to the people of the constituency of Dollard that it was a charge on the municipality.

I then told the people of Dollard that nothing could be farther from the truth. On my arrival in this house, at the very beginning of the session, I put a question on the order paper asking what advantage could accrue to the city of St. Laurent from the fact that the national film board was situated there. I was told that in 1956 the national film board had paid $23,075 to the city of St. Laurent, in lieu of taxes, and $128,807 in 1957. I was also told that in future the city of St. Laurent would receive an annual payment of $130,000.

(Text):

I wanted to bring this to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, because it reminded me of the fuss made by the Conservative opposition in 1954 when it was decided by the Liberal government to move the national film board to Montreal, and more particularly to St. Laurent in the constituency of Dollard. In spite of the criticism of some members of the Conservative party, the move was authorized and the new building opened its doors in the fall of 1956, as I just said in French.

The film board had to be located in a large cultural centre not too far from the capital city, where transportation facilities were available, having in mind the bilingual status of Canada, and in a place where cultural and creative talents were easily available in the two official languages of Canada. As stated in the report of the national film board for the year 1955-56, and I quote:

> The building site was chosen after 21 sites had been carefully investigated, not only with regard to transportation, proximity to residential areas, utilities, soil conditions and other pertinent factors, but also with special consideration for such relevant conditions as ground vibration, noise levels and atmospheric contamination. Sound and vibration tests were carried out with jet aircraft overhead, heavy trucks on the highway and diesel trains on the neighbouring railway—all conditions common to metropolitan areas.

The government of that day found no better place than Montreal to meet the requirements I have just outlined. I was glad that St. Laurent, situated in the constituency of Dollard, was chosen as the site of the national film board. If the people of Canada now have reason to be proud of the beautiful building which houses the board, we in Dollard are very proud to have that board in our district. In its new building the board carries on the good job it has been doing since its creation. The working conditions are ideal.

It is stated in the annual report of the national film board for 1955-56, and I quote:

> New quarters, to house the board's equipment and staff once the move was over, were specially designed to meet the necessities of film-making under modern conditions, including colour, wide screen techniques and television requirements. Every measure was taken to ensure that the installations in the new building were adequate for the program of the board and technically up to date in all possible respects.

When it was decided to build the $6 million building for the film board, we were accused as usual by the Conservatives of waste and extravagance. We realize now, once again, that the Conservative accusations came out of the blue. Those accusations of waste and extravagance have disappeared. The Conservatives, now in office, have just awarded a contract to a Montreal firm for a $350,000 addition to the national film board building. I am glad to see that the present minister is aware of the importance of the national film board, and its needs, if it is to discharge its responsibilities to the satisfaction of the people of Canada.

We owe the present building to the foresight of Messrs. Winters, Harris and Pickersgill. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate attended the opening of the national film board as the representative of the government. The people who met him on that occasion remember him as a man of foresight, action, devotion to duty and a great Canadian.

As stated in the annual report for 1956-57, at page 3,

> Now, for the first time in its 17-year span of operations the combined facilities of the board—production, technical operations, administration and distribution branches—are located under the one roof.

Almost 500 people, many of them skilled technicians and craftsmen, are employed in the new building. In the spring of 1957, Mr. Guy Roberge was appointed government film commissioner and chairman of the national film board. Under his able direction the national film board in its new building has taken advantage of its many facilities and has done an outstanding job. Under Mr. Roberge's direction the morale of the national film board and of its employees has never been so high.

In the past year the film board has produced, to my knowledge, outstanding films. I should like at this time to commend the national film board for its production of the film entitled "The Sceptre and the Mace" which was a report of the royal visit of 1957. This production, which has been seen by millions of people, is further proof of the high skill of the people of the national film board.

I should like also to mention the films produced under the direction of Mr. Norman MacLaren, who is, I should say, one of the best ambassadors Canada has. From what I know and from what I have heard, his films are known and admired all across the world and have been awarded prizes at many European festivals. I sincerely hope that the minister and the government will see fit to continue providing the national film board with all the facilities possible to enable them to do their job and achieve the aims and objects which have been assigned to that board. It is my strong belief that Canada cannot do without a body like the national film board. Again, I wish to say how happy I am to have the national film board in my constituency. I hope that the present minister will find it convenient to visit the building before long.

I may add that I would be pleased on that occasion to show her around the surroundings of the film board, that is, St. Laurent and the constituency of Dollard. I am quite convinced that her charms will conquer the hearts of our people. If I am not eager to see her at election time, I will be very happy to see her in my riding in between elections.

Mr. Pearson: I have only a word to say about the film board. I should like to congratulate the board, through the minister, on the work it is doing and especially, if I may say so, upon its contribution to the projection of Canada abroad.

I have had some experience with the results of that work and they are admirable. The board that has done that work has done a great deal to make Canada known abroad and in the right way.

The other matter that I want to mention was touched on by my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and it is this. I am glad to hear from the minister that the board is proceeding with the work of the preservation of these earlier war films. I am not quite sure of the technical considerations involved but I would hope that perhaps, in the relationship between the board and the C.B.C., it might be possible to show some of these films on television. The reason I say that is that, along with other members, I have been immensely interested in the series the C.B.C., is showing, I think by arrangement with the B.B.C., of British war films and American war films of the second war. If that could be done with Canadian films showing Canadian participation I think it would be of educational value and it would be of great interest to viewers.

May I just conclude by expressing my satisfaction with the work that is being accomplished by the board.

Mr. Herridge: I want to express our appreciation of the good work being done by the film board both at home and abroad. I can wholeheartedly support the complimentary remarks made by the previous speakers in this discussion. However, I do not want to take up the time of the house by repetition. I want to bring to the attention of the minister and of the committee one particular aspect of the film board's activities that I think have been very much worth while indeed. I refer to the programs of the film councils throughout the country. I think it was called a brain child of the board which some years ago I remember was criticized quite severely in some quarters as were some other policies of the film board. But the more people come to understand the value of these film councils, the greater support they get.

To illustrate that point I simply want to deal for a few moments with the success of the film councils in Kootenay West which, of course, is inhabited by a very progressive population. There are local film councils throughout the district which are operated under the sponsorship of boards of trade, service clubs, women's institutes, farmer's institutes and so on. They are associated together in the Kootenays under the direction of the Kootenay film council. Before proceeding further I must say how much we appreciate the excellent work that is being done by Mr. William Orr in organizing the activities of the film councils in the Kootenays and in getting much greater support for and appreciation of their activities. In the Kootenays we have the Kootenay film festival which has about 6,000 patrons annually. I think that is a very good record for the population. Then we have the children's film society, which organization had an attendance of some 29,000 at various film showings and so on. Then we have had some extremely interesting discussion groups, lectures and other activities associated with the film council based on films supplied by the national film board, sponsored by the parent-teachers association. They have asked me to say how much they appreciate the films with which they are being provided and the co-operation and assistance of Mr. William Orr in this connection.

I might say that I am not boastful in any respect. I am only speaking of things of which I have knowledge. We have in our district a group of people who have creative ideas. There have been several activities undertaken in Kootenay West for the first time in British Columbia, ideas which we are certain have actually been copied in the last year or two as far away as Dublin. I just mention that matter in order to indicate how this participation in this form of cultural activity brings out talent and interest that goes unnoticed without this type of organization.

With those few words I want to express again the appreciation of all the people in Kootenay West who are interested in film council work for the work of the national film board and the co-operation that has been extended to them, so willingly and so beneficial to young and old alike.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the hon. minister who is discharging her responsibilities with care and efficiency. I must say that she has shown herself superior to the former minister of citizenship and immigration, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

May I say a few words about the national film board whose aim is to make Canada known abroad and to inform the people of Canada. The high technical quality of our films is recognized throughout the world. Yet we must not forget the formative aspect of film, but rather try to stress moral values and respect their priority. The national film board's mission should be to counteract bad films and bad publications.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) a few moments ago mentioned Mr. Cousineau. I am pleased to tell this house that the present mayor of Ville St. Laurent administers his town perfectly and sees to its progress. As a matter of fact, if the national film board is established at Ville St. Laurent, it is probably due to the good administration of the present mayor, Mr. Cousineau.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I shall hardly be expected to answer the remarks just made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon).

(Text):

I should like to say, however, that I was extremely glad to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West say that the film councils were doing a very good job in his own constituency. Film councils are doing a very good job all across Canada. I know that film councils do not come under the jurisdiction of the minister but I know for a fact that film councils have been promoted by the national film board. I should like to know from the minister whether, since the advent of television in Canada, these film councils have diminished.

Mrs. Fairclough: They have increased.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was intrigued by what the hon. member for Dollard said about another building being constructed. I had not realized that previously. Can the minister tell us what it is for?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is the vault which is being built to store films.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is right there on the same premises?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: I just rise to mention briefly something that I overlooked. I was asked to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and the officials. Sometime in the future, owing to the great interest in and the great importance of the Columbia basin to the development of British Columbia and to Canada and the great opportunity for filming wonderful scenery, dam sites and remarkable characters on some occasions, the people I represent would like the film board to give consideration to filming a documentary of the Columbia river basin which would include its history, its beauty, its opportunities for development and its unique character.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I assure the hon. member that the Columbia valley will not be overlooked. This year the board is undertaking to film a portion of the Fraser valley, and Kamloops and the vicinity. Eventually it will get around to the Columbia valley.

Mr. Herridge: That is splendid.

Mr. Rouleau: In the report of the national film board for the year 1956-57, at page 2, I read the following:

> The purpose of the National Film Board is stated in the National Film Act of 1950: "to initiate and promote the production and distribution of films in the national interest, and in particular to produce and distribute, and to promote the production and distribution of, films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other countries."

I know the minister has had an opportunity to see the work of the national film board at first hand and would she care to comment on the role the film board has played both as an agent of the government and in relation to the film industry as it presently exists in Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, that is rather a broad assignment. However, may I say first of all that we are not in competition with private producers. The kind of film which is produced and distributed is intended to fulfil the purpose described in section 9 (a) of the act. National film board films are produced in the national interest. They are information films; they are not of the type which a commercial firm would order through a private producer, at least speaking generally.

In distributing its films through such commercial channels and theatres, television and commercial distributors, the board charges standard commercial rental or royalty rates. In the distribution of its films in Canada as well as abroad, the board attempts to obtain the cost of prints from the user wherever possible. It should be noted that in the sale of its films or prints in Canada the board is competing primarily with information films brought in from abroad, since few of the information films produced by Canadian producers are offered for sale to the general public.

Mr. Rouleau: I thank the minister for the information she has given me, and would ask her, since the annual report for last year is not available, if she would kindly inform the committee of the number of films produced by the national film board for television showings and for public cinema showings and, thirdly, to fulfil the orders of government departments.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of the total number produced last year, namely 318, there were 73 for first release on television, 46 of those being English films and 27 French; there were approximately 20 films produced for first showings in theatres and there were 56 films produced for government departments or agencies. The rest were part of the general program of the board.

Mr. Rouleau: May I ask the minister another question. I know the national film board has been distributing films all across Canada except, for a while, in the province of Quebec. Could the minister tell us whether any films have been distributed in that province during the last two years and, if so, I would like to know the numbers of showings in Quebec?

Mrs. Fairclough: Of the theatrical bookings which numbered 7,484, there were 630 French bookings. As the hon. member will know, one booking may have involved several showings. So far as television is concerned, there were 5,866 telecasts of which 1,485 were French.

I think the hon. member also asked the number of showings, outside of cinema and television showings. There were 21,927 showings at which the attendance was 1,853,202.

Mr. Rouleau: Could the minister tell me if showings of national film board films are given to the public at the national film board building and, if so, is there any charge to the people seeing those films there? If there are such showings I would like to know how many were involved.

Mrs. Fairclough: There are no public showings of films at the film board headquarters except to groups, in which case there is no charge.

Mr. Rouleau: Do groups such as the minister has mentioned have to have certain qualifications to entitle them to showings at the national film board itself?

Mrs. Fairclough: They are usually organized groups who intend to pay a visit to the board and they are shown around. We know in advance they are coming and if they are interested in some particular film we try to make arrangements to show it to them.

Mr. Rouleau: Thank you very much.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I would like to say a few words on the first item, and I hope the hon. lady will forgive me for using my mother tongue.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege of going to Brussels after the famous NATO conference in Paris. I merely wish to pay tribute to the national film board which is doing a tremendous job in Brussels. I spent about four days at the Canadian pavilion there and saw huge crowds scrambling for seats in the pavilion's projection hall.

I am all the more anxious to pay tribute to national film board officials, because of the fact that the pearson in charge there is working under rather difficult administrative conditions.

I apologize for taking up the time of the committee to say those few words, but I wished to let my colleagues know that even though the NFB was removed to Ville St. Laurent, as a result of representations by my friend the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), it is doing a marvellous job.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

228. Administration, operation and maintenance, including industrial design division, $554,575.

Mr. Fisher: I have just two questions to ask on this item. Firstly, I wonder whether it is true that in connection with the design originally prepared for the building that is going to be built a start was made by the gallery people themselves whom one would imagine would have a fairly good understanding of what they wanted and that the Department of Public Works did not accept their particular ideas and design and the resulting building is strictly a Department of Public Works affair.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not sure that in the shuffle I did not lose the import of that question. Is the hon. member asking me with regard to the new building which is being erected?

Mr. Fisher: I have already heard a number of aesthetic complaints about the facing by people saying: this looks like another monumental Grit building. I have heard it said or alleged that there was a design prepared by the national gallery people themselves which the Department of Public Works did not accept because they did not feel it was monumental enough, though this national gallery design was simple, chaste, and, they thought, beautiful. The result is the Department of Public Works is not completely in line with what the gallery people had in mind.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact this is only a temporary building to serve the gallery until the new building, which may be built in a few years time is ready. The building which will house the gallery will probably be of different construction. This particular building is, I understand, being erected to be, eventually, an office building. The national gallery is merely a temporary occupant.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word about this because I know what the facts were. There was a nationwide competition for a design for a national gallery and it was won by a firm of designing architects in Winnipeg. When it was decided not to proceed with the work on a permanent gallery—and in my opinion this building will be the permanent gallery for the lifetime of everyone in this chamber—it was considered by the government that the proper thing to do would be to give the architect who had won the prize for the original design the job of designing this temporary building.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to say a word in appreciation of the good work done by the staff of the national archives and the national library—

Mrs. Fairclough: This is the national gallery we are talking about now.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, and I want to advance a suggestion in view of the remarks made by the two previous speakers with respect to the design of the proposed new building. I ask the minister to pass this on to the Minister of Public Works. We do hope that the new building will be a fitting building for the cultural activities it is intended to house. I want to bring to the attention of the minister that in the middle ages up to quite recent times in Europe buildings of this type—state buildings and other national buildings—were often surrounded by what were known as gargoyles which were symbolic of mythical creatures which existed in the middle ages and previous days.

I want to make a suggestion in this respect, and I hope the minister will take it as a creative suggestion coming from Kootenay West, that in this type of building there would be a good opportunity to pay a tribute to the gentlemen of the press and those interested in literary activity. I would suggest that the architects have splendid models in the moving gargoyles who move along the rails above our heads to the right from day to day, and that there you have some excellent patterns for gargoyles—you have them bearded and with whiskers, you have them clean-shaven, you have them bald; gargoyles of all types and descriptions which would provide enough inspiration to furnish this new building with gargoyles replete with character and charm which, I think, would go with this type of structure.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think, Mr. Chairman, we could also get some from the floor of the house.

Mr. Pearson: I could give you eight.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES AND NATIONAL LIBRARY

318. General administration and technical services, $582,826.

Mr. Fisher: The first question I want to ask the minister she will probably be able to answer in the absence of the particular official. I wonder whether the minister can straighten out what may have been misconceptions that have arisen about the work and attitude of Dr. Lamb as a result of some comments and criticisms which were made in the other place the other day.

Mrs. Fairclough: I will be very glad to do so because I think it was rather unfortunate that when questions were asked in the other place Dr. Lamb was in Europe. He is still there. Neither he nor his office gave the negative reply which appeared. It was one of those confusing things which sometimes happen, but because of the question which was raised we were in touch with Dr. Lamb and he left it to the minister's discretion to decide whether the speech which was requested should be tabled or not.

I may say this address was given in his capacity as president of the Canadian historical association, and that it has received some notoriety because of the remarks which have been made in the other place. The text was turned over by Dr. Lamb to the editor of the Canadian historical association. It is now in the hands of the printer and it is to be published in the annual report of the Canadian historical association, probably in November. Dr. Lamb will be back in Canada in a month or so, and in this situation I propose to wait until he returns to find out whether he thinks it necessary to have an advance copy of his address tabled before the journals of the association are available.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was not this speech a public speech made in a public place in public session?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me this is a tempest in a teapot about absolutely nothing.

Mrs. Fairclough: I agree with the hon. gentleman and I think it is most unfortunate that aspersions should have been cast on the good name of a very excellent official.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fisher: I want to ask the minister a long range question. I would like to have her answer next year on her estimates. I am bringing up this question now at the request of a number of people of the same occupational group as myself, that is, librarians, I will not say in an official capacity. I have heard it discussed a number of times that the set-up of having a public archives and the national library under the one administrative head is not exactly satisfactory from the point of view of the library aspect of the matter and I want to make some criticisms later of the national library which would indicate more particularly the point I have in mind.

There is really very little connection between a library and an archives except that they both have printed material used for research. A library is a much more active institution with a much wider range of material; it is not riveted down to government departments or their histories. I am not making this suggestion because I feel that Dr. Lamb, for example, should be dispossessed of one or the other. It seems to me it might be considered and I would like to have the minister's view after she has been in charge for a while as to whether she thinks it would not be worth while to separate the two from an administrative point of view.

One of the other difficulties, I may mention in passing, is in our habit in Canada of alternating an English-speaking and a French-speaking person at the head of affairs. In the situation we have now, Dr. Lamb has an academic background that tends towards archives and Dr. Tanghe has an academic background that ends towards librarianship so there is an alternative there, but that could easily break down in the future and I wondered if it might not be better to consider having a librarian for the librarians' work in the national library and having an archivist separately.

In connection with the archivist there is one question I wish to ask the minister which is peculiar to a new administration taking over. The most difficult problem any archivist has is the obtaining of correspondence of ex-ministers of governments. This is a problem that every country that keeps a public records office has encountered. In most cases it is a voluntary arrangement. In Canada the situation is such that Dr. Lamb goes around and negotiates with ex-ministers. There are no sets of regulations or rules that spell out anything so far as I know so that incoming ministers would have some idea of their responsibilities and their duties in this regard. It was very welcome news to hear that when he turned over his papers to the archivist the Right Hon. George Drew gave them with an open hand. As I understand it, he turned them over practically holus bolus without bothering to sift through them. If one of the main purposes in keeping archives is for historical work in the future, the ministerial files that should be kept are those which should have a historical background rather than have a minister himself make the decisions on personal grounds. At the same time the minister—or the ex-minister I suppose it would be, in most instances—would certainly need to be consulted. Since we have a new cabinet, Mr. Chairman, I wondered whether it might not be the time to try to lay down a policy and some rules which would never be hard and fast but which might make the task of the archivist easier in the future in so far as ministerial records are concerned.

We have a couple of ex-ministers present and perhaps they could give us the best judgment of all on the difficulties connected with this matter.

I noticed in the New York Times for August 27 that the United Nations produced last year material for the archives at the rate of 242,855,500 pages. This amount of material was produced in one year. That indicates, I think, as the minister is probably aware after talking to the archivist, the tremendous pressures that are going to be placed on libraries and archives because of the monumental nature of government publishing. That is another reason why I think the archives, in the long run, should be separated from the national library aspects of this problem, since more and more the archives, especially on the United States pattern, are tending to become very bulky record setters. The object of such bulky records is always to get the cheapest possible storage rather than the more expensive when you have the kind of show building a library usually is. Therefore, there are very good arguments from the cheapness point of view to separate the archives from the national library. I know the experience in Britain has been that the public record office contains at the present time really a historical selection rather than the more recent governmental productions. For these reasons I would like to ask the minister to consider this whole problem. I do not make this suggestion with the thought of criticizing the people who are involved with the work at the present time; I just thought it would be worth while to bring it up.

There is one other question I want to ask in connection with the public archives. I believe it comes under this item. I wonder what the situation is with regard to Laurier House and the present set-up? What will be the situation in the future from the point of view of personnel?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word about the first suggestion my hon. friend has made because I am very interested in this both as a person who has an interest in the historical material for research and eventually for publication and also as an ex-minister who had a certain amount of material when he vacated his portfolio. It seems to me that there are already very clearly defined rules laid down for that sort of thing. When a minister goes he has no right to take away any material which is official or confidential and which is not personal in character.

In the first category, the material which is official material he leaves behind and presumably it becomes the responsibility of the new minister of the department to decide what to do with it. But certainly the incoming government would have no great difficulty with it. With respect to laying down rules, I know my hon. friend did not have in mind rules that pose any obligations, but even with that qualification, would the incoming ministers not have great difficulty laying down rules on what should be done with regard to material of outgoing ministers? I quite agree it would be helpful if there could be some way in which the archivist and the staff could have access to the material. It would become the custom that those papers should be turned over to the archivist. It would have to be left entirely to the discretion of the person who has possession of the papers and it would be very difficult indeed to lay down any rules or regulations covering this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word about this also because it does seem to me that it would be inimical to what the hon. member has in mind if any attempt were made by the government to lay down any kind of rules about these matters. After all, those papers are the private property of the ex-minister and he is not going to cede his private property to the archivist in most instances unless he can do it entirely on his own terms.

I have had some little experience with this. I think hon. members know that I am one of the literary executors of the late Mr. Mackenzie King. I also had something to do with the papers of the former prime minister. It does seem to me in these cases and in other cases I know about that there is nothing that can be properly done except to leave it to the individuals themselves and hope that out of a sense of patriotism and a regard for history, as I believe is increasingly the case, they will pass their papers over to the archivist while retaining ownership of them. The hon. lady will wish to explain the provisions for storage herself. There are provisions for that in the new records building.

It might interest the committee to know that until Mr. St. Laurent became prime minister there were no files in the prime minister's office except personal files. He was the first prime minister in the history of Canada who made a distinction between official files and personal files and left certain official files in the office when he left. Up until that time every prime minister from confederation on took everything away. Nothing was left but the filing cabinets. I believe in one or two instances even they were not left when there was a change of government. It was a quite extraordinary and, I might say, a very difficult problem to sort those files and to keep them sorted in the proper way; but I think it is going to be immensely to the advantage of the country and to historians in the future that that was done.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the problems raised by the last three hon. gentlemen perhaps the minister will also deal with this one. I see no provision for the acquisition of any material that might go into the archives, such as items of interest, Canadiana, that might be held by private citizens. Will the minister say a word as to how those items are acquired, whether there is any provision to purchase them and, generally speaking, the over-all historic items which turn up from time to time in the country and which are in the archives? How are they acquired by the government or by the chief archivist?

Mrs. Fairclough: If the hon. member will look at page 449, I think it is, of the details, he will find an item of $20,000 under "objects". As he may appreciate, the acquisition of specific articles, works or objects is a matter of personal approach in many cases, an activity in which the dominion archivist is quite apt. He has done an excellent job in acquiring objects which might be of value to the archives.

I should like to refer to some remarks made earlier. The hon. member for Port Arthur referred to the great activity which centres around the library in contrast to that which centres around the archives. I think one must bear in mind that this is not a public library. This is not a lending library. Both the national library and the national archives are depositories whose nature is that of reference. It seems to me quite appropriate that a person of the capacity of the dominion archivist and the national librarian should, at least at the start of a national library, have the dual administration. I also draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that there is an assistant dominion archivist charged with the activities of that branch and there is also an assistant librarian charged with the activities of that branch. The two are co-ordinated under one administrator.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is true, is it not, that there is no organic connection between them whatsoever? It is just like the situation when the Minister of Public Works was also Minister of Defence Production.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is quite right but the time may come when the national library, being housed by itself and having grown in stature and importance, may require the full-time services of a national librarian as distinct from the archivist, but for the present I think the two positions are being handled very efficiently.

I think the matter of the availability and depositing of ministers' papers has been adequately dealt with by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, both of whom have had experience in this matter.

With regard to Laurier House, it is an endowed institution, of course, and we expect it will carry on as it has heretofore. I might say my own feeling is that we could do with more of these historical places and I hope that as Canada grows older more persons connected with the national life of the country will make premises and funds available to perpetuate historical places.

Mr. Fisher: I did not want the minister to think from my comment that I had anything against Laurier House. I just wanted the assurance that the present government was interested in it. I feel I did not make my point too well, no matter what the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said. Their statements would seem to indicate that on the departure of the ministers of the Liberal government there was a very clear situation and that the ministers knew what was their personal correspondence and what was departmental correspondence and everything went along just as sweetly as could be. That is not my information and I think my information is correct. With a number of ministers I think it did not go smoothly at all. All I was suggesting was that a bit of preparation on the part of the present ministry might mean that when the day comes when one of them drops out or when some day they may all go at one time they will know the proper moves to make and they will have planned ahead for it so far as their correspondence is concerned.

Mrs. Fairclough: I may say I think there is something to be said for the hon. member's idea that there should be some way of marking or designating papers which might conceivably be of value. Whether or not the minister who owns them would eventually decide to make them available to the archives is another matter, but I can assure the hon. member that the matter will be considered.

National library—

319. General administration, $182,591.

Mr. Fisher: There are a number of points I want to make on this item. I want to compliment the national library for continuing to print the accumulation for the Canadian periodical index. I do not know whether some members realize that much of the material for their speeches which is provided by the library of parliament is dug up through the use of that particular accumulation, and it is a very worth-while effort. It is the type of government subsidy that I think more than repays what is spent.

One question I want to ask the minister has to do with the book deposit regulations. When you consider that well over 20,000 books are published in the English language in a year it seems to me that the fact that we only have 2,410 under book deposit regulations indicates that there may be some loopholes in the regulations. Is any consideration being given to acquiring more of these books and copyright privileges free or by trading arrangements with national libraries of other countries such as England and the United States which have copyright privileges for their nations and areas?

Mrs. Fairclough: The opinion of the officials is that not more than one per cent escape acquisition. Could the hon. member tell us where he gets his figures of 20,000 published and only 2,410 acquired?

Mr. Fisher: I was not suggesting that there were that many published in Canada. There are that many published in English throughout the English speaking world. When you consider that 2,000 or less than 10 per cent are coming into our national library freely it means that they will have to do a tremendous amount of purchasing. I wondered if some sort of mutual arrangement could not be worked out with some of the other countries.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is the opinion of the officials that the copyright law only covers books published in Canada or books published by Canadians. However, the member's representations will be considered by the library.

Mr. Fisher: I want to express criticism of the book purchasing policy as outlined in the report of the national library for 1958. There is a national library advisory council which I gather advises the national librarian on policy and they are going to give priority to a restricted number of fields including the following, Canada, bibliography, general reference works and so on. The whole emphasis of the policy is going to be concentrated on the social sciences and humanities. I am not suggesting for a moment that is bad but it is certainly not going to give us a well-rounded library in the sense of moving ahead with science and technology. The other factor is that there are already quite a number of relatively good libraries in the universities where the emphasis is in this direction. It would seem to me that this policy reflects what I would almost say was a cultural lag on the part of the people who are advising the national library. They seem to be obsessed with a pattern of scholarship that is changing, and I think fairly quickly. Now, this may be an incorrect judgment of them, but it seems to me this kind of collection is going to be excellent for historians and perhaps people in the literary field, but I wonder about the new disciplines and how they are going to fare with this kind of collection.

I should like to ask the minister whether or not she has any views on this particular emphasis that is going to develop in connection with the national library?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, as a matter of fact, I have some. Of course, certain types of publications are acquired by various departmental libraries. One of the activities of the national library is the compilation of a national index, I think it is called a union catalogue, which provides information as to the depository of all publications which may be of interest and which, in itself, is a considerable work.

Mr. Fisher: I, of course, agree, that the union catalogue is probably the most important function the national library has carried out or will carry out in its whole life. As a matter of fact, I should like to know what the stack space is going to be in the new library. We can assume that this library is going to run easily over the million volume mark. If that is the case, and this is the slant, it seems to me we are going to have what could be an old-fashioned collection in terms of scholarship, and in the relatively popular field there will be nothing. I would hope that the role of the national library, through its union catalogue and its reference service, will be to integrate the library service right across the nation, not necessarily at a high scholarship level. If a national library becomes merely a place where the professors of our universities get their material, I do not think it will be carrying out its work. This is the reason I am in doubt about this particular policy.

Mrs. Fairclough: I can reassure the hon. member on that point. The stack space planned now is for 2 million volumes. The aim of the library is to make it a comprehensive collection. I can assure the hon. member that it is not aimed at any one segment or any one period, but will be a comprehensive collection.

Mr. Fisher: I have two more questions. When will the destruction that is preliminary to construction get under way? The second question is, is there any consideration being given to have the national library encourage scholarships in the librarianship field?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am informed that tenders for the demolition of the existing building will be called in December, and tenders for the new construction will be called in the spring. I have forgotten the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Fisher: Is any consideration being given by the national library to the encouragement of scholarships for librarianships? I am making the point because, while the Canada Council has been doing some work in this regard, the Canadian librarian association's last report indicates that the financial resources for such scholarship work are very meagre and there is a great shortage of librarians in this country, especially in the western provinces. I suggest that this might be one role that the national library might play, perhaps with some kind of in-training scholarship, to help the general activities in the librarian field.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman, so far any scholarships which would be available would be under the Canada Council.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have one small question. I noticed that only $33,334 appears to have been expended last year. I understand that under the statute there was supposed to be $40,000 expended every year. I daresay this has something to do with dissolution and the use of governor general's warrants. I was wondering if some provision is being made to put the full amount into the fund?

Mr. Chambers: I understand the National Library Act requires the publisher of a book published in Canada to supply the national library with a copy. I was wondering if there was a provision that those who import books into Canada should also supply a copy to the national library. If there is no such provision, consideration might be given to changing the act.

Mrs. Fairclough: I understand that under the present regulations only books totally produced in Canada are subject to the deposit provisions. If I may answer the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the full amount of $40,000 is in the estimates this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not this year about which I was asking, but last year. What puzzles me is that the item given for last year is $33,334, and there was $40,000 in the estimates as they were originally tabled by Mr. Harris last year. I wondered how this discrepancy was explained, and if it was to be made up. The Prime Minister, on the federal district commission estimates, explained that the full amount of one of these votes of a similar character was not shown for last year, but it was being made up in the supplementary estimates this year.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid I cannot answer that. I was not in the department at the time. I do not know why the amount was reduced.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to hold up the estimates now, but I wonder if the hon. lady could get an explanation and give it to me later?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the hon. lady.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

414. Departmental administration, $2,144,060.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The main estimates of my department, Mr. Chairman, and of the other agencies reporting to me, excluding loans, amount for the fiscal year to almost $254 million as compared with $219,750,000 the previous year. To this has been added in supplementary estimates an additional $7 million, so that the gross increase as compared with the previous year is over $41 million. The major portion of this overall increase is due to a substantial expansion of our construction program this year, designed both to meet the rapidly growing requirements of transportation and communications in this country and to assist economic conditions.

In view of the size and complexities of the department and its associated agencies, and because of the time at my disposal, I do not intend to explain the estimates in detail. However, it does seem to me that it would be helpful, and particularly so to those members attending their first session, if I were to touch upon the highlights.

In the canals branch, the level of activity will not materially change during the present year in so far as operation is concerned. We expect that towards the end of this year the mainline Ontario-St. Lawrence and great lakes canals will all be transferred for administration by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, since otherwise two canal organizations would be functioning in the same area. As for the secondary canals, such as the Rideau, Trent, Chambly and the Canso, we will continue our efforts to improve these both in facilities and in attractiveness as a means of serving the growing popularity of boating, domestic and tourist.

We are doing everything we can to find employment for those individuals who have been displaced by the flooding of a number of the Ontario-St. Lawrence canals consequent upon the opening of the seaway. Preferential treatment is being given in connection with work on the seaway and on certain of our other canals, and we hope that a large proportion of the individuals concerned can be offered alternative employment.

In the field of canal construction we have increased our program by $2 million or over 100 per cent. This expenditure is spread over a large number of small projects, but there are certain large items which merit attention. These include improvement of the Canso canal by installation of fenders and extension of the mooring wall; the initial funds required to start on the long delayed project of cleaning up the old, disused second Welland canal; two causeways to connect the main highway with the village of Cardinal across the old Williamsburg canal; continuation of the work on the new bridge across the Lachine canal at Ville St. Pierre.

As for the Chignecto canal project, previous economic studies have indicated doubt as to whether the benefits that would result from the project would offset its very heavy costs. Notwithstanding this, we have recently asked the Department of Pubic Works to give us a preliminary engineering estimate on the cost of the Chignecto project, on the basis of which I propose to have a further economic study made and to report my findings to my colleagues.

Staff requirements in this area of operation have not varied substantially, but there is an increase in our wage and salary requirements due to salary increases.

Turning to marine services, I should note in passing that there has been an extensive reorganization of the marine sections of my department which has resulted in three separate branches being established. One branch is charged with all regulatory matters in the marine field arising out of the Canada Shipping Act, such as nautical services, pilotage and steamship inspection; a second branch is charged with the provision of marine aids, such as lights and buoys, harbour administration, supervision of the secondary canals and the St. Lawrence ship channel; and a third branch is charged with construction and operation of departmental vessels, including our icebreaking program and Arctic patrol and supply work. This reorganization has been made necessary by the rapid growth of our activities in the marine field in recent years.

Our requirements for operation of our departmental vessels are substantially increased over last year. We will have a couple of new vessels to put into service this year, although the main impact of our new vessel construction program will not make itself felt until later years. Our vessels not only perform winter icebreaking duties and summer Arctic patrol icebreaking and convoy duties, but they are used for the placing and supply of our various aids to navigation in coastal and inland waters, a very extensive task. We do have substantial increases in our requirements for the charter of commercial vessels for northern and Arctic supply, and for provision of stevedoring services and ship-to-shore equipment for lightering barges in the Arctic. These are required because of our general responsibility in providing marine supply for civil departments of government, for the R.C.A.F.

and for the United States air force in the eastern Arctic. A substantial portion of the funds will be reimbursed by the users, since we do this work on a cost-recovery basis. An increase of some 88 positions is largely accounted for by the transfer of the Labrador from the Department of National Defence.

To turn to construction of vessels, we have an increase of about 150 per cent in our expenditures this year as compared with last year; and, indeed, we have well over a dozen vessels under construction for the department now to replace obsolete and worn-out vessels and to increase our ice-breaking capacity in the great lakes area, the Arctic and the St. Lawrence-Atlantic area.

In addition, we expect to proceed with the construction of two ferry vessels, one for service between Portugal Cove and Bell island, Newfoundland; the other for service between Pelee island and the mainland in lake Erie. We expect that both, when completed, will be operated by private companies on rental arrangements. We are preparing plans also for the construction of new ships for the Newfoundland coastal service operated by the Canadian National Railways and a new ship to be made available as a gift from the Canadian government to the new British West Indies Federation.

To turn to marine aids for navigation, our operational budget is slightly increased over the previous year, largely as a result of salary increases. We are continually making efforts to improve the service rendered through our marine agencies, and to introduce better and newer technical devices, some of which are being developed through our factory at Prescott, and in co-operation with the national research council. We are proceeding with an improved scheme of classification for lightkeepers, which we believe will create better working conditions and remuneration, and also improve the standard of lightkeeper services. Completion of this gradual program will probably require several more years.

There has been a marked increase in our capital program for marine aids, to a total of almost $5 million, up over 50 per cent. The largest items in this program are related to wharf work for our new marine agency at Saint John, New Brunswick; completion of our new marine agency building at Halifax; extension of our marine agency wharf at Quebec due to increased number of ships; and a start on the plans for a completely new marine agency wharf and buildings at Charlottetown. A substantial item is provided also for new piers and lights required in the St. Lawrence seaway. Apart from these major projects, we have over 100 projects scattered through coastal and inland waters, such as gas or whistle buoys, fog horns, lightkeepers' dwellings, et cetera.

The increase in the amount of shipping has increased our workload in the field of marine regulation, but we are managing to avoid any very great change in staff requirements. There has been an increase of only seven employees in nautical and four employees in steamship inspection.

I am sure hon. members have noted the growing popularity of pleasure boating. I should perhaps mention the very successful conference we had with interested agencies in Ottawa last winter, which helped us greatly in the preparation of our small boats regulations and in providing us with new ideas which may be implemented at a later date. The departmental booklet "Safety Afloat" for users of small boats has been so well received that its circulation now numbers in the hundreds of thousands.

Pilotage services have provided some difficulties. We expect in the coming months to send a special team of officials to our pilotage districts to hold discussions with the pilots themselves and other interested parties or groups in an effort to ensure that existing problems are not overlooked, and that we are doing our best to provide a proper atmosphere for the operation of pilotage.

Special problems relating to the Kingston and the great lakes area will involve further discussions with the United States, as a result of construction of the seaway. At the moment, our objective is to provide a balanced framework within which pilotage may operate in the mutual interest of both shipping and pilots. Pilotage dues now represent a substantial cost to shipping, and we will seek to avoid a situation in which this becomes so expensive as to injure shipping itself while, at the same time, ensuring the proper standard of working conditions for pilots.

The St. Lawrence ship channel branch are budgeting for an over-all increase of some $3 million for three special works: one in Montreal harbour, one immediately below Quebec city, and the other in the Saguenay river.

In the field of radio one of the great problems which continues to confront my department is the increasing reliance of both shipping and aviation upon radio aids to navigation of all sorts. Increasingly complex and expensive equipment is necessary in order to maintain proper safety standards. We anticipate our costs will climb this year by approximately $2,750,000 to almost $14 million. One-half of this amount is on account of the army signal service in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, which is being taken over gradually from the Department of National Defence.

Our staff requirement is up from approximately 1,622 to 1,723 for the reasons I have just given. Overtime payments are up because of a general change in government policy which provides for payment of overtime in lieu of leave. In this connection I would like to point out that many of our operations are on a 24-hour per day basis.

Our radio aids system of flying is built around the four-course beacons, for many years the standard on our airways; the newer visual omni-range aid being established which provides for a greater multiplicity of courses to be followed by the aircraft; instrument landing systems; radar for airway and airport surveillance; and a variety of other installations. With the growth of civil and military flying, even newer and more advanced systems must be provided if safety is to be maintained. The solution may involve such equipment as electronic computers and automatic data processing. These and many others, such as the Decca navigator system, the doppler systems of navigation, etc., are being studied to keep us abreast of developments.

In the construction of radio aids we require a total of $11,385,000. The main reasons for the increase are the deliveries taking place this year of the long range radars intended for airway use. In addition to these we are purchasing and installing a very wide variety of marine and aviation beacons, transmitter and receiver equipment, etc.

Our work in the enforcement of the Radio Act and regulations includes assignment of frequencies, maintenance of technical standards and the licensing of all radio stations. There is a constant growth in the use of radio by industry. Departmental technicians are called upon to process a large number of licences, to make a larger number of investigations and to deal with a much larger number of complaints regarding interference. An increase in establishment is to enlarge this unit from 364 to 425 employees.

As to meteorology, we have for a long time been hampered with a shortage of personnel possessing the required postgraduate training. However, prospects for recruiting this year appear more favourable. There is a small increase of approximately 29 employees in this branch, largely based upon our expectation of better recruiting. Our work continues to centre around meteorological training, public forecasting, special services to aviation and shipping and to the armed services, a wide variety of special services for agriculture, forestry, power entities and specialized employees, including extensive climatological work, much of which is proving of great value to industry. Among the problems confronting us is the need for better forecasting at high altitudes for today's jet aircraft and the development of automatic devices for the collection and processing of weather data.

Turning to civil aviation, we continue to face the problem of increasing demand for air services, airports, air traffic control and all the physical facilities and administrative operations which are necessary if aviation is to function. Our vote for the operation of airports is up this year by almost $2,500,000. The department already operates some 115 airports as well as a number of other special facilities of a related nature. It is gratifying to note that we have gradually been improving our revenues from airport operation, and this year we expect to receive some $7 million from landing fees, gasoline concessions, parking areas and other concessions and rentals.

Air traffic control operations also have been expanded with the budget up approximately 25 per cent. This vital service provides the control system for both military and civil flying. Here again, one of the great problems confronting us is that of the solution of the technical problem of how control should function at the time when density becomes too great to be handled by present procedures. More and more we are introducing automatic devices such as switching lights, closed television circuits, radar and machines. Much of the research which will be going on in this country, in the United States and in Europe in the next two or three years will centre around completely new approaches to control procedures which may be based upon such things as automatic machine collection and processing and computer analysis to provide the necessary directions for aircraft.

I come now to our largest appropriation—that for construction of airports. It will be noted that it has now grown to the large sum of $61 million, representing an increment of almost 80 per cent. This reflects the great demand for improved facilities to accommodate those travelling by air. Scores of projects are involved and it would be useless for me to attempt to detail them or even to single out the large ones, because many of them pertain to heavy expenditures and construction programs spreading over a two, three or four-year period. In the railways, canals and telegraph committee I explained that the program can be broken down into runway and taxiway construction to provide for larger and faster aircraft; new terminal buildings and the extension of existing structures; construction of entirely new airports and installation of special facilities such as runway and approach lighting systems, power plants, heating plants, barracks, garages, etc.

We have recently completed a ten-year analysis of expected airport and airfield construction needs in Canada and, based on that analysis, the figure included in this year's budget represents the approximate amount we may be required to expend annually over the next ten years if we are to keep abreast of aviation requirements.

There are also the usual items relating to grants for small municipal airstrips—either outright grants or those on a cost sharing basis. Our policy in this regard is under review and I am not in a position to make a definite statement as yet but it may be necessary to increase the existing ceiling in respect of the amount of a grant while at the same time making the prerequisites somewhat more stringent.

Hitherto we have made grants up to $25,000 when a municipality is willing to provide the land and to operate the field. If amounts in excess of this are needed for a small local airstrip we provide additional funds on a cost sharing basis with the municipality. I am inclined to think that in future we should make slightly larger grants when satisfied that an important local need involving the federal government exists, such as service to a remote community dependent upon air transportation, but that in other cases, where a small airstrip may be beneficial but not essential we should insist on cost sharing from the outset. However, the final outlines of this policy have not yet been determined.

Our assistance to flying training continues to represent a successful part of our program. We have for many years been paying $100 to the club or school which provides the training and $100 to the pilot, in the case of each person who learns to fly, which has led to a gradual but steady increase in pilot training. The number of student pilots being trained roughly eight years ago was 1,200 annually. This had increased a year or so ago to 1,600, and we expect that it should pass 2,000 this year.

There are many other points in connection with the departmental activities upon which I could comment at this time. I trust, however, that the foregoing will be of some assistance to hon. members in dealing with my estimates. I would remind the committee that we have spent many hours in a special committee of this house in examining my estimates in greater detail and have heard evidence from a large number of the officials of the department and other agencies. I trust that the exhaustive inquiry which took place during those sessions will be borne in mind by hon. members in dealing with the estimates in this committee.

Mr. Chevrier: First, Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the Minister of Transport for the very comprehensive statement he has made concerning the various activities of his department. Anyone listening to that statement from an unbiased standpoint cannot help but come to the conclusion that the Department of Transport is responsible for varied activities in the field of transportation.

I should also like to congratulate the minister upon his appointment to this department because I believe this is the first time any one of us has had an opportunity to do so, since there was no occasion during the last session of parliament to consider either the activities of his department or the estimates themselves. I congratulate the hon. gentleman not only because of the position he holds but more particularly because of the department over which he presides. I may perhaps have a preference for it but I have no hesitation in saying to the minister as well as to the members of this committee that among the portfolios in the government there is none in my opinion that is better than the one over which the minister presides. That is why I think he is fortunate in being the minister of this department which is not only extremely important but also extremely interesting.

I should like to add to that a word about those officers—those faithful officers—of the Department of Transport whom he has to serve him and assist him. I know something of their devotion to duty and their loyalty because of my association with them for a period of over nine years and I can therefore speak with some authority. That is why I am happy this evening to say to the minister that he is fortunate in the calibre of these men, and that in these men and women he is extremely well served in the Department of Transport.

Having said that, and realizing that the minister has already referred to the fact that these estimates have been given some consideration in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, I will not detain the committee unduly. I did have some remarks to make which were of an extensive character, but because of the fact that there was some consideration given to these estimates in the committee and because, also, of the fact that we are in the dying days of this session I do not intend to speak at length. I think I can finish what I have to say before ten o'clock, and if I do not, I wish the minister would stop me.

I do want, however, this evening to deal with a special aspect of transportation. It is one which has to do with the province from which I come and which I represent. It has to do with the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence river and I would make a special appeal to the minister to give consideration to the treatment which I believe the province of Quebec is entitled to receive with reference to the development of the Lachine section. There has not before, I believe, been any consideration, of this aspect of the St. Lawrence seaway. That has been the case because, I think, an opportunity has not arisen. But an opportunity has now arisen to speak on it and I believe that serious consideration should be given to this point not only by the Department of Transport but also by the government as a whole.

The minister may know that recently a statement was made by an official of Quebec hydro that it is the intention of that division of the Quebec government to develop power in the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence seaway. The power development can, of course, be done independently of the navigation development, but I think it was envisaged all along that there would be tremendous savings if both power and navigation in that section could be developed on a joint basis. The reason I bring this up now is that there have been given in connection with the upper reaches of the seaway substantial amounts of money for channel enlargement and for power development there, and having regard to that it strikes me that because of commitments made by the federal government in the past and because of the present situation there is an obligation on the part of the federal government to make similar contributions to the province of Quebec.

Perhaps I can make myself clear by saying that I believe the vice-president of Quebec hydro stated recently that in the near future it would be necessary to develop the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence river, and in saying that he also stated that a group of engineers had been requested to prepare preliminary plans and studies of that development. He said it would be possible in his opinion to develop Lachine on a two-stage basis, developing the one stage at the head of the Lachine rapids and the other stage below Victoria bridge in the harbour of Montreal, all of which would bring about a power development in the neighbourhood of between 900,000 and 1,000,000 horsepower. I make that statement because the Department of Transport, as the minister knows, gave careful consideration to this whole matter when in 1947 there was established a board of engineers on the Lachine section and a report was tabled in the House of Commons. The board of engineers at that time was asked three questions: first, is the scheme for the improvement of the Lachine section, recommended by the joint board of engineers in this report of November 16, practicable; does it provide to the best advantage for the logical and planned development of this section; and, thirdly, what alternative scheme, if any, would be better adapted to secure the ends desired.

The board of engineers in conjunction with the officers of Quebec hydro gave careful consideration to this matter and they recommended three schemes; first, exclusive power development; secondly, a joint power and navigation scheme; and, thirdly, a navigation scheme alone. It was attempted at that time by the former government to convince the province of Quebec to develop power jointly with navigation, but that government was not successful in its endeavour. I have no blame to cast on anyone, because the question of power is one which belongs to the provinces, and in the final analysis it is for them and for them alone to determine what is their responsibility.

The point I am making is that the federal government proceeded with navigational facilities in the Lachine section without regard to power. In my opinion the cost for the development of power because of that will be increased by some $25 million, and it strikes me that even now, even at this late date, I should ask the minister and his department to see if it would not be possible to make some agreement with the province of Quebec whereby power and navigation could be proceeded with jointly to the advantage of both the province and the federal government.

In locating the facilities on the south shore regard was had, of course, to industrial development and regard was had particularly to the triangle which extends between Valleyfield on the west, Sorel on the east and Montreal in the centre, because there is a tremendous triangle there which will benefit because of industrial development.

In the endeavour to assist the provincial authorities with reference to this aspect of the project a number of things were done at the time, not only to assist them but also to protect provincial rights. One of those was that the seaway authority determined to enlarge the cross-sectional area upstream from Lachine rapids in order to provide for easier power development when that was undertaken at a future date. Then lands were exchanged between the authority and Quebec hydro at Beauharnois in order to assist Quebec hydro in expanding its power development there. There was also provided a canal which would take 40,000 cubic feet a second of water in order to aid in additional power development during the non-navigation season. Finally, hydraulic models were constructed at the request of the international joint commission for the use of the seaway authority as well as Quebec hydro.

The point I am trying to make is this, and I will come to it at once. Back in 1941 Mr. Mackenzie King wrote to the then premier of Quebec, Adelard Godbout, dealing with this whole matter. The letter divides itself into three parts. The first part has to do with representations from the province of Quebec on all international boards or other boards directing the design or construction of works and that, I think, has been respected. The next had to do with the apportionment of rights and obligations arising out of the development of the Beauharnois section. I would like to read the first sentence of the third because it is of extreme importance. Mr. Mackenzie King went on to tell the Hon. Adelard Godbout, the premier of the province at that time, the following:

> With this end in view, the government of Canada would be prepared to undertake that, if and when Quebec takes over the control and operation of the Beauharnois development, there will be paid to the government of Quebec, by the government of Canada, the sum of $7,972,500.

That was in 1941. Roughly speaking, that was a sum of $8 million. That sum has never been paid to the province of Quebec. At today's value of money I would think it would be the equivalent of some $20 million. The point I am trying to make is that having regard to the sums of money paid for channel development and power development in the upper sections of the St. Lawrence river, as and when the province of Quebec decides to construct and develop power in the Lachine section that province is entitled to the same treatment as given to the province which resides upstream. Having regard to the value of money today I would say that would be no less than $20 million.

I make this statement having regard to the facts with which I have prefaced my remarks and I make it, too, with this appeal to the minister. Whether the Lachine section is developed in 1958, or next year, or the year after, makes no difference. There is no doubt in my mind that it will have to be developed. It will have to be developed because of the tremendous number of industries which are coming within that triangle and power from Beauharnois will not suffice indefinitely. It will be necessary to get additional power from Lachine and it seems to me that the Minister of Transport will play an important part in that, not only because of the facilities which he is building today with the St. Lawrence seaway but also because of the fact that legislation will be required in order to develop this power. Legislation will be required with respect to the Lachine section in the same manner as legislation was required in connection with the international section. Therefore, it was decided to enter into an agreement with the province of Ontario and the terms and conditions were clearly set out in that agreement. The same thing should appertain with reference to the development in Lachine section.

I thought I should make this point because I am sure it has already come to the attention of the minister. If it has not, it will in the near future and I know he will give it his careful attention.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. member for Laurier for his very constructive contribution to the debate and to assure him that we will follow his suggestion. We will be very glad to approach the province of Quebec and see whether that province will be interested in developing the power in the Lachine section at this time. I can assure him, and we will assure them, that if they are interested we will give them every co-operation in such an endeavour.

Mr. Howard: It is so close to ten o'clock I wonder whether we can call it ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader what we shall do tomorrow and on Saturday, if he can give us the information now?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, August 29, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

FRUIT

PEACHES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROVISION OF MINIMUM PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he can make a statement on the announcement that appeared in the press this morning with regard to measures for the stabilization of the price of peaches.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to provide a minimum price of $83 per ton for No. 1 peaches, 2-inch minimum size, delivered for processing in the province of Ontario. Under this authority the board will pay to the grower any amount by which the average return should fall below the prescribed price. The prescribed price of $83 per ton is about 89 per cent of the base or 10-year average price. This action has been taken to ensure that the peach growers will be able to market their crops. They were in considerable difficulty from this point of view, and this support on the part of the government will result in the maximum quantity being canned.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I might ask the minister a supplementary question arising out of his very welcome statement. Can the minister say whether or not the canners in that area will maintain operations? I have read that they have shut down periodically.

Mr. Harkness: As the result of a series of negotiations which have been conducted with the growers and canners during the past week or 10 days, I think most of the canning factories will now open. A number of them were not going to open for the canning of peaches, but they are now going to open and they are going to can to their maximum capacity. I think there will be no question but that the entire crop will be canned.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INCREASED AID TO UNIVERSITIES—COMMUNICATION WITH QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance before we reach his estimates. I should like to know whether before announcing the increase in the grants to Canadian universities the minister communicated with the authorities of the province of Quebec, either by letter, phone call or telegram?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

Mr. Deschatelets: Did the Minister of Finance ever inquire from the premier of Quebec about his reasons for not permitting the Quebec universities—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: —to benefit from the federal grants?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member must surely be aware that this is a question on a matter entirely beyond the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance.

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN FORMULA OF PAYMENT TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in connection with his statement yesterday concerning increased grants in aid to universities. Will the minister inform the house if there is any change contemplated in the formula of payment?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

FINANCE

CONVERSION LOAN—INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTIVES ISSUED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Will the minister say if he, or anyone in his department, during the progress of the present conversion loan campaign sent out directives to anyone, including banks or other financial institutions, ordering or suggesting any restriction in the price or in the dealing, in connection with the new conversion loan bond issues? If so, what were the contents of those directives?

Mr. Speaker: This seems to me to be a question that might better have been put on the order paper. However, if the minister can answer it offhand he may do so.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think before attempting to answer that question one would have to have some clarification of some aspects of it. If the hon. gentleman cares to ask it on my estimates, it could be more properly dealt with there. The terms of the loan were clearly laid down at the beginning, and there has been strict insistence on adherence to those terms.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY RESPECTING AMENDMENTS TO ACT NEXT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Labour before we reach his estimates—next year. Would the minister inform the house if officials of his department are now undertaking a review of the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, and if so, if consideration is being given to suggestions put forward for the improvement of the legislation by the national legislative committee of the railway brotherhoods and other labour organizations? Does the minister intend to introduce amendments to this legislation at the next session of parliament?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. There are three national organizations that have not as yet submitted their recommendations. They are the Canadian Labour Congress, the railway association and the Canadian construction association. We have received recommendations from the national legislative committee of the railway brotherhoods, but we cannot review these until we have received the recommendations of all organizations.

So far as the introduction of amendments is concerned, that will depend a great deal upon the work required to review these suggestions and make recommendations.

[Mr. McMillan.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TERREBONNE, QUE.—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton)? Has the minister received from the Laurentides bar a request for the establishment of a bankruptcy court and registry at St. Jerome for the judicial district of Terrebonne? If so, may we expect that such a registry and bankruptcy court will be established soon?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a request was received some time ago for the establishment of a new bankruptcy division for the judicial district of Terrebonne and for a bankruptcy court in St. Jerome. As the appointment of a bankruptcy registrar for such a division comes under the jurisdiction of the chief justice or the associate chief justice of the district for which he has been appointed in the province of Quebec, the correspondence on that matter has been referred to him for study, and it seems that no decision has been taken so far.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED NEED FOR MEETING AT EARLY DATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Because of the application of certain legislation such as that with respect to the hospital insurance plan, tax gift exemption and federal grants to the conference of universities, does the Prime Minister not realize now that there is more than ever an urgent need for a federal-provincial conference, which he promised a year ago?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is offending the rules again. He is simply making a statement, and that is not what this question period is for.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, today is the three-month anniversary of a question I placed on the order paper on May 29 with regard to government expenditures for spirituous liquor. I wonder whether the Secretary of State could indicate when this question might be answered.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): What is the number of the question?

Mr. Howard: It is the first one. There is no number attached to it. I am sorry; I should say it is No. 43.

Mr. Courtemanche: I will check with the minister interested.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONCLUSIONS OF RECENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is in a position or will soon be in a position to report on the conference on winter employment?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the minister's "yes" mean that he is now in a position or will soon be in a position to do so?

Mr. Starr: I will soon be in a position to do so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS FOR INCREASES IN SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether he will be in a position soon to make a statement with regard to the representations made to the minister and the government by the various civil service organizations asking for increases in salaries, particularly as to salaries of the lower income group?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): A request was received a few days ago from one of the organizations asking for a meeting. The request was for a meeting either last week or next week, but not this week. A request was received from another one of the organizations, I think yesterday, for a meeting. Probably a meeting will be held within a few days, depending somewhat on the course of this session.

HOUSING

"MINIMUM" HOUSE—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN INCOME REQUIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to know whether there will be any liberalization of the salary or income requirements by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on applications for the new lower priced type of housing announced yesterday.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker; there is no intention to make any change.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

414. Departmental administration, $2,144,060.

Mr. Howard: Inasmuch as the minister said last night that the estimates of his department were given very exhaustive and detailed study in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and that there was extensive questioning of witnesses, I do not think there is much point in my going over the same ground to any extent.

I just wish to say that I certainly appreciated being a member of the committee and being able to listen to the information given by the minister and the officials of his department. I want to publicly express my appreciation of the frank and open manner in which the discussions were held, and for the great amount of information and assistance given by the officials who were in attendance at the committee meetings.

The activities of this department probably have a far greater effect, from a material point of view, upon our society than those of any other department except the Department of Public Works. Those activities affect so many communities, industries and walks of life in our nation, and we in British Columbia are particularly dependent upon the attitudes and policies of the department. For instance our fishing industry, occupying such a great place in the economy of the province, is very much dependent upon the approach of the Department of Transport, especially as it relates to aids to navigation. I know the fishermen have expressed in years past, and will continue to do so in the years to come, their desire for additional aids to navigation and for the installation of more up to date and modern equipment for positioning, lighting and things of that nature.

In so far as aviation is concerned, the coast of British Columbia is a pretty difficult area in which to fly for a great portion of the year, and from that point of view also we are dependent to a great extent upon the approach of this department.

Shipping policies certainly affect my province, particularly the communities along the coast line. Some of them are accessible by other means of transportation, but others are almost entirely dependent on shipping, and certainly the attitude of the government with respect to freight rates has a great effect upon our economy.

It is not my intention to go into detail as to the efficiency or otherwise of the department with respect to some of these questions, but I just wish to emphasize our dependence in British Columbia, as in the case of other provinces, on the attitude of this department. Probably there is only one respect of the department's operations which has no bearing on our affairs in British Columbia, and that is the aspect relating to canals. Try as we might, our efforts did not result in our being able to bring any need in this respect to the attention of the Minister of Transport. Apart from that, the activities of the department are watched with interest by workers and industrialists in British Columbia, and we hope that in future the approach will be even better than it has been in the past.

There is one problem I should like to mention briefly; and while this may be more specifically dealt with on the items relating to the Canadian maritime commission it might be just as well to mention it at this time. We might then be able to proceed with the rest of the estimates without too much difficulty or loss of time, inasmuch as the detailed and exhaustive analysis of the department was made in the standing committee.

Our merchant shipping fleet in Canada has been on the decline over the years, especially since the end of the last war. Ten or eleven years ago Canada was considered to have the fourth largest shipping fleet. Our fleet at that time numbered in the neighbourhood of 175 ships with a tonnage of 1,100,000. Then came a gradual decline in the number of ships under the Canadian flag, accompanied by a decline in tonnage and a decline in the amount of cargo carried by those ships, which would indicate that the policy of the government in this regard—and here we must look to the government which was in office during the period of this decline—was nothing more or less than one of allowing the merchant shipping fleet to wither on the vine and die an unnatural death, when it could very well have been expanded to include even more ships under the Canadian flag and employ even more Canadians in our own merchant fleet and handle our own commodities for export and import.

However, that has not been done, and we have seen this decline in shipping reach a point as at the end of March of last year where we had a total of 26 ships representing a gross tonnage of 186,165, only five ships being in the 10,000 ton class as far as cargo ships are concerned. The balance was made up of smaller ships, diesel cargo ships, tankers, and so on. This decline in our Canadian merchant navy presents a sorry picture when it is considered that if the government of that day had taken an aggressive policy and abandoned its approach of holding in effect a fire sale of these ships after the last war, we might never have reached this position.

Unfortunately, I must say that I doubt very much whether the attitude of this present government is any better than that of its predecessor, because we have seen no great change in the policy of this government as compared with the government which was formerly in office. At what figure the number of merchant ships stands at the present time I do not know, but I imagine it is less than 26 ships, the figure given a year ago. Allowing the sale of the ships of the Canadian National fleet was not a good demonstration of this government's attitude with respect to attempting to build up our own merchant shipping fleet.

I have just these few remarks to make, and I will not go into more detail at this time. One could deal with these matters more extensively and better illustrate the deficiencies that have existed in past years with respect to this department, but I do not think it is necessary at this stage. Such questions can be dealt with more exhaustively in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines than in this committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I would not want in any way to wound the humility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), but I trust that he will allow me, at the beginning of my brief remarks, to add my congratulations to those he received last night from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) upon the introduction of his estimates in the house. I feel that he has a right to be proud of heading one of the most important departments of the government, and I feel certain that in the few months that he has been leading that department, he has found that he can count on the support and the co-operation of honest, intelligent and loyal employees. I therefore wish him good luck during the few years he will remain as head of that department.

An hon. Member: That is what you hope.

Mr. Ricard: For many years to come.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I wish this morning to discuss for a few moments a matter of special concern to my constituency and to a few others, that is the matter relating to shipyards.

(Text):

During the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I spoke about the very difficult situation facing the shipbuilding industry in Canada today, particularly in my constituency and others where many thousands of families depend on this industry for their livelihood. Earlier during the session the report of the royal commission on coastal trade was tabled in the House of Commons, and hon. members will now have had an opportunity of studying it. Those who have done this will notice that with respect to the most vital question of whether or not free competition with non-Canadian ships should be allowed in Canadian inland waters when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed the commission recommended in the affirmative, as the minister well knows. This recommendation, of course, was contrary to the request and arguments of the Canadian shipbuilding and repairing association and other organizations representing the shipbuilding industry. As a consequence Canadian shipbuilders today are very concerned, and I know the minister is well informed of this, about their future and the future of this important part of our national economy.

Of course I want to be fair about it and state that the problem of maintaining a prosperous shipbuilding industry in Canada did not arise overnight. At the beginning of the last war Canadian shipbuilders expanded their facilities very rapidly and were able to make a vital contribution to the allied war effort. However, since then the situation has become progressively worse for Canadian vessels. Construction costs are higher here than in the United Kingdom, and operating costs are also higher. So our shippers find it impossible to compete in international trade.

For this reason the last large group of 70 Canadian vessels was transferred to United Kingdom registry in 1949 and 1950. Transfers are still being made as new ships are built. Now that the Canadian National (West Indies) ships have been sold, the Canadian merchant fleet consists almost entirely of the vessels on the great lakes; and if with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway these boats too are to be faced with open competition from foreign vessels, then the minister will agree with me that the outlook for them is also very bleak.

It is for that reason that the Canadian shipbuilding and ship repairing association urged the following suggestions in its brief submitted to the royal commission on the coasting trade on June 30, 1955 as found at page 157 of the report of the commission:

1. That from henceforth the coasting trade of Canada shall be reserved to ships registered in Canada.

2. That from January 1, 1957, or some other convenient date in the near future, replacements of and additions to Canada's coasting fleet shall be built without exception in Canadian shipyards.

As I said at the beginning, the commission did not agree with this request. When the St. Laurent government set up the commission that was one of the most important questions it wished to have answered, but it was not the only question. If you read the order in council, P.C. 1955-308, appendix I of the report, setting up the commission you will find that Mr. Justice Spence and his colleagues were authorized and instructed to go much further than that. In fact they were authorized to study and recommend upon the whole subject of coastal shipping in Canada. So the present government is called upon to decide not only whether or not it will accept the royal commission's recommendation concerning open competition on our inland waters, but also the whole question of the future of our shipping industry.

When I spoke in the house on May 26 I mentioned some of the reasons why it is important to preserve our shipping industry in Canada. I referred to the serious consequences of closing down an industry employing some 15,000 people and supplying a livelihood to entire communities. I referred also to the importance of water transportation in the economic development of our country. As our economy grows our water transportation facilities must keep pace. If we are so convinced of the importance of water transportation as to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on the St. Lawrence seaway and other projects, surely we must be convinced as well of the importance of our merchant vessels to Canada's future. Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, a nation with the most highly developed inland waterway in the world serving its ports and not having the necessary vessels to transport its own produce? It seems to me that our pride and confidence in Canada make it essential to find ways and means of maintaining our shipping industry, including the shipbuilding facilities which are the essential basis of a fleet.

There is also, Mr. Chairman, a third reason, and in my opinion a very important one, for maintaining our shipbuilding industry. We all remember in what an embarrassing situation Canada found itself when war broke out in 1939, when we had neither ships to come to the aid of Great Britain nor a navy suitable to protect such ships. The United Kingdom eventually managed to obtain 50 over-age destroyers from the United States for escort duty in exchange for military bases in Newfoundland and elsewhere. Our shipbuilders did heroic work, for which we have great cause to be grateful, in building ships to transport men, munitions and supplies across the Atlantic.

If we allow our shipyards to close down and disappear we risk finding ourselves in the same position as in 1939. After one severe lesson that is something which I think those responsible for the nation's security cannot ignore. Russia today has many more submarines than Hitler had in 1939. If war should be declared—and I am one who does not believe it would be over in a few hours—we would again be faced with the problem of keeping open the sea lanes between North America and our allies in Europe and other parts of the world. If the British shipping industry were to be destroyed, Canadian shipyards would then be the only ones in the commonwealth which could produce the ships necessary in wartime. So it is my contention that it is not only in Canada's interests but in the interests of the United Kingdom and all our allies that our shipbuilding industry be kept in readiness as part of our military preparedness.

Whatever the government decides to do, Mr. Chairman, about allowing foreign vessels to compete freely with Canadian vessels on the St. Lawrence waterway, it is of the utmost national importance for the government of Canada to take very positive steps to maintain our shipbuilding industry. Despite the fact that the Minister of Public Works has remained silent on this subject since becoming a minister of the crown, I still think I have his sympathy in this matter. If he and his colleagues would act now with the same force with which they used to criticize when they were in the opposition, then I think some way of helping the shipbuilding industry could be found. I was glad to notice that the royal commission on the coasting trade suggested that the shipbuilding industry might be assisted by a federal subsidy if seaway traffic from countries abroad worsens its positions.

I do not want to express negative criticism only on the question of shipbuilding. I want to place before the Minister of Transport a suggestion which I think merits some consideration, and which might serve to encourage the building of ships in Canada at this time. In one respect United Kingdom shippers, our keenest competitors, have what might be considered an unfair advantage over Canadian shippers. In addition to enjoying considerably lower construction and operating costs, they are able to claim 140 per cent of a vessel's value by way of tax deduction. In other words, a shipowner may claim as a deduction from his profit for tax purposes an investment allowance which when initiated in 1954 was 20 per cent and now is 40 per cent of the cost of a ship. This is in addition to a normal depreciation allowance of 100 per cent over a period of years.

In the royal commission report, page 67, we find the following explanation given to the British House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on April 9, 1957. He said this:

> —the increase in the investment allowance is for ships only, and was proposed because of the special position of the shipping industry . . . faced with severe competition in a world market, often from ships sailing under flags of convenience with small liabilities. It finds it increasingly difficult to build up finance for the replacement of its ships when they become obsolete.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, if there is justification for the United Kingdom government helping its shipping industry in this way, a similar claim by Canadian shippers is justified. I am not suggesting that we should adopt a specific figure of 140 per cent in Canada, but perhaps the figure should be higher because the cost of building a ship in Canada, as the minister well knows, is approximately 60 per cent greater than the cost of building the same vessel in the United Kingdom.

For that reason I am not going to suggest a specific figure in this connection, but I do want to urge the Minister of Transport and the officials of the maritime commission to investigate this device and see whether, having regard to the fact that steel is no longer in short supply in Canada, the present would not be an appropriate time to introduce a measure of this kind, which seems to have given satisfaction abroad.

I do not forget, of course, that under the Liberal administration the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act was introduced, and it has been a very useful measure. I want to say, too, that it has been improved upon by the present minister, and at the time I complimented him and thanked him for doing so. I believe, having regard to the present economic situation, we need more than that. The minister quite realizes that this is an important industry and needs more help than we are giving it now.

The commission also recommended that the industrial development bank, which was set up by a Liberal government after the last war and which has done such a marvellous job in assisting the growth of smaller industries, should give serious study to providing adequate credit for the operators of small ships engaged in the coastal trade. The commission suggested that the future for ship repair work would be brighter as business picked up after the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway in 1959. However, with the average cost of building a ship in Canada about 60 per cent higher than in Great Britain, there are few possibilities of obtaining foreign, let alone Canadian, contracts in this country unless the government takes some action.

It seems to me that the object of government policy in this field should be to assure sufficient shipbuilding and repair work to enable our shipbuilding industry to survive and prosper to the greatest degree possible as our country develops. I view this as a matter of national importance. Let me read one paragraph from the commission report, which appears at page 178:

> The commission is in no position to determine whether the defence preparedness value of a Canadian shipbuilding industry would be great enough to warrant it being maintained at a level of activity higher than is in prospect without assistance. Should this be determined to be the case, the commission considers that a policy of direct subsidization of ship construction would be the least costly and the most effective way of achieving the desired result.

This is a question for the government to decide, and on its decision the future of the shipbuilding industry depends. At the present time this is an industry worth more than $350 million and employing many thousands of Canadians. The Prime Minister indicated, when the report was tabled, that it would receive careful study. Well, Mr. Chairman, these thousands of Canadians are all looking to the federal government to help them in this critical situation. A solution must be found that will enable Canada to enjoy the benefit of economic ship transportation but which will, at the same time, enable our shipbuilding industry to survive.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to ask the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to make a nation-wide survey of our railway requirements for the benefit of all districts which now have no railway service, so that they too might share in Canada's economic development.

Railroads and highways play a large part in the economic development of a country. They link areas together and ensure the economic future of an area. Highway and railway communications are like the blood vessels of the body. From the remotest corners of the land they bring in materials essential to large industrial production and farm products to non-farming areas.

In Canada's pioneer days, the waterways were the avenues of progress. That is why settlement was concentrated on both banks of the St. Lawrence, way up to the large inland sea, the great lakes. At that time there was no congestion, but due to the great distances, our forefathers had to fall back on a kind of economic self-sufficiency.

However, great modern discoveries gradually provided man with new and powerful means of venturing farther into the field of discovery and development. This opened up an era of artificial roads of communication entirely built by man according to his wants. Those linking roadways, railways, canals and highways marked, according to their purpose, the development of this vast country but favoured certain areas while keeping others back.

Thus some 40 per cent of the population of the province of Quebec is concentrated in the metropolitan area of Montreal.

The building of a coast-to-coast railroad was, to a great extent, the very lifeblood necessary for confederation to become a reality. It was a highly political decision, destined to promote progress inland as well.

There were other reasons why the province of Quebec was denied the railroads which would have meant greater industrial development for her. The former government, which held power for almost twenty-two years, neglected some areas and left them without needed railroads. This was typical of its neglect of the province of Quebec.

Thus, Quebec, with 30 per cent of Canada's population and a sprawling area, accounts for only 11 per cent of the railroad trackage, while regions with only a tenth of the population have equivalent trackage—or twice as much.

What is the sequel to this policy? Areas like Timiskaming, where, for twenty years, people have been clamouring for extension of the Montreal-Mont Laurier line, have, at best, remained static. The same applies to Gaspesia and other parts of Quebec—indeed, the entire country. Ore-rich areas like Chibougamau and Ungava, whose deposits were known practically half a century ago, are only at the dawn of their development, for people in the increasingly populous agricultural areas, unable to take part in the difficult development of industry in those parts where there are practically no communications, have been steadily forced to leave their village of origin, to take up residence in the big cities—even, alas, south of the border.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to draw your attention to a problem which exists in the town of Repentigny, in the federal riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I have repeatedly tried to get the Board of Transport Commissioners to follow up an urgent request by ordering the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to include that town in the "extended area service". Now, Repentigny is near the island of Montreal, to which it is linked by a bridge, "Le Gardeur de Repentigny". Almost all the towns around Montreal have now obtained the "extended area service" from the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and Repentigny, a fast growing community, urgently requires this service to keep up with the times; a number of new housing developments are under way and, all factors considered, no town in the whole of Canada is developing at a greater pace. His Worship Mayor Rosaire Deschamps and the aldermen of the town are clamouring for this "extended area service", realizing that the company's present service can only hamper present development and future prospects of this progressive town.

Mr. Chairman, quite apart from this lack of a basic service, Repentigny is putting up with an outrageous situation: 12-party lines —even 15-party lines! Fancy this—in the middle of the 20th century! It is enough to make Graham Bell turn over in his grave. It is unbearable for Repentigny residents. I grant that the Bell Telephone Company of Canada deserves a good deal of the credit for the country's economic progress, but it is high time it dipped into its kitty which still contains several million spare dollars, and put an end to this paralytic blow at Repentigny's development.

I call upon the Board of Transport Commissioners to instruct the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to resolve this pressing problem as soon as possible, to the satisfaction of those concerned.

Mr. Chairman, may I, in conclusion, congratulate the Minister of Transport for the admirable way in which he performs his duties, and for his bilingualism—symbol of national unity.

(Text):

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to several matters that are extremely important to the riding I represent, and I think in a general way they are important to many other parts of Canada. In Lincoln county we are particularly interested in shipbuilding, water transportation and air transportation. First of all I should like to express my opposition to tolls on the Welland ship canal. Since the canal cuts across the Niagara peninsula I am well aware of the type of ships that use the canal and the type of cargoes that pass through it.

Briefly I should like to say something about the several canals that have been built in the Niagara peninsula during the last 130 years. Three canals in all have been built. I shall deal with the first one and also with the third canal, which is the one in use at the present time. The first canal was built by private enterprise with some financial assistance from the government of Upper Canada and the British government in London at that time. As it was a canal that was built by private enterprise, tolls were charged. In 1841 the capital stock of this canal company was acquired by the government of Canada, and since that time Welland ship canals have been entirely under the control and maintenance of the government of Canada and thus toll free.

About 70 years ago the first canal was discontinued as a ship canal, and since that time it has gradually deteriorated into a public nuisance, dangerous to health and public safety. Without going into full details in connection with the clean-up of this canal, I must say that negotiations with the Department of Transport have been going on since 1934. However, it fell to our present Minister of Transport to conclude the negotiations with the area municipalities. Preliminary work is now started, and the balance of the contracts will be let for the clean-up before the end of the year.

To turn to the present Welland canal, as I say tolls were discontinued many years ago, just as tolls were discontinued on our public highways, all in the interests of a freer development of Canada. A toll free Welland canal is a custom of long standing, and has been a matter of settled international policy for many years. To change that policy now could bring about retaliation by the United States of America, and tolls could be placed on the upper lakes channels that have been improved and maintained by the United States and have also been toll free. Industry and commerce throughout the entire upper great lakes region, in which there are large industrial areas both in the United States and Canada, have relied upon the established policies of no tolls. The imposition of tolls now would tend to destroy this stability and could discourage new industries from locating in these areas. Even a small toll on the Welland ship canal such as that recommended by the joint tolls committee establishes a new policy, and implies that further tolls may be imposed when further improvements and enlargements are made to the canal.

I believe that this is the time to make a decision against the levying of tolls on the Welland canal and to clarify its future operational authority. Industry located on the Welland canal and those considering locating in that area should know the future policy of the Canadian government with respect to this matter.

The Welland ship canal is different from other parts of the seaway and other parts of the great lakes navigation system. It is entirely owned by the government of Canada and lies well within the boundaries of Canada. I believe that this canal, located as it is, should remain entirely owned by the government of Canada and operated by the Department of Transport, and should be toll free. There seems to be no need to have it under international seaway authority.

When I say the Welland ship canal is toll free and should continue that way, it does not mean that ships pass through the locks entirely free of charge. At the present time ships using the canal pay a locking charge to cover the cost of linesmen, supplied by the Department of Transport, who assist in tying up the boats when they pass through the locks. Industries located along the canal pay substantial charges for use of water, wharfage and other rentals, all of which is applied against the operational costs. This revenue from locking charges, rentals, use of water and wharfage amounts to something over $1 million annually, and the annual cost of operation and maintenance amounts to slightly over $2 million.

A review of these annual revenues should be made. I am informed that no increases have been made since 1932. Upward revisions, perhaps, could be made to bring revenues more in line with operating costs. The basic charge for locking a vessel through the canal is $25 for smaller vessels up to 250 feet long, and $50 for the larger ones. I believe it takes from four to eight linesmen on each lock to make the ships fast. There are eight locks, and it takes about eight to ten hours for a ship to pass through the entire length of the canal. I think there is reason to review this matter in order to bring our costs more in line.

Much of the cargo passing through the canal consists of Canada's natural resources including wheat, oil, pulpwood and iron ore. Tolls will only increase the cost of our wheat in Liverpool and our pulpwood, iron ore and oil in central Canada and the United States. We in the Niagara peninsula look forward with confidence in the expectation that with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway it will be possible for coal from Nova Scotia and iron ore from the north shore of Quebec to compete with coal and iron ore from the United States. A toll free Welland ship canal would do much to make that possible.

I was interested to note in yesterday's press that Nova Scotia coal is now being delivered in the Toronto area. I believe this is the first time this has happened in a good many years, perhaps the first time it has ever happened. This is something we must encourage, but making it more expensive to sail on our waterways by the imposition of tolls is not going to help the situation. Tolls on the Welland ship canal and the upper lake channels might very well destroy some of the advantages which could be ours when the seaway is complete and larger vessels can be used. At such a time more direct shipments could be made of our raw material and natural resources. I trust that if the final decision on tolls is made by the cabinet when parliament is not in session, all the facts and forecast outlined in the many briefs which have been presented to the seaway authority and to the Department of Transport regarding the Welland ship canal will be thoroughly considered.

I would also like to mention the use of pilots on the great lakes by deep sea vessels. There seems to be a strong opinion in certain quarters that pilots are not necessary on the open lake but only when those ships are passing through the St. Lawrence seaway itself or the Welland ship canal, or are entering harbours and restricted channels. I understand, however, that our navigational signs and signals are quite different from those used under deep sea regulations. There is also, in many cases, a language problem in connection with foreign ships. For these reasons, and as a matter of safety for other vessels, I should think the captains of these deep sea vessels should have to undergo some test or examination before they are allowed to sail on any part of the great lakes system.

Another matter which I would bring to the attention of the minister is that of the pollution of our lake shore beaches by the discharge of sewage and industrial waste into our lakes, canals and water courses by the cities and towns. Many of our beaches on lake Ontario and lake Erie are becoming unsafe for bathing as a result of pollution from oil scum carelessly discharged from ships, untreated sewage and industrial waste. This is a matter which requires immediate attention, and it is one which is of more concern to the Department of National Health and Welfare. Nevertheless in the past the Department of Transport has given to municipalities and industries leases which permit the discharge of sewage and industrial waste into canals and water courses under the jurisdiction of the department.

I hope the minister will give this matter serious consideration. I know it is going to cost a lot of money to the city of St. Catharines; nevertheless it is something which must be faced, and the sooner we do it the better.

I would suggest to the Department of Transport that it should continue its interest in establishing regional airports in strategic areas, in providing services for feeder air lines, in picking up scheduled air services and by providing intermediate service to relieve the larger air terminals which are now badly congested.

Another matter which I am sure concerns all of us is the passing of our coastal and ocean going ships into the hands of foreign operators. In particular, the passing of Canadian steamships into Cuban registry has not constituted a solution to our problem. I am familiar with a small Canadian company which is being forced into the same position which, by the way, is a St. Catharines firm. I refer to the Ahearn Steamship Company, which over the past five or six years has been engaged in hauling supplies into the Northwest Territories. Ships of European registry are now cutting into that trade and paying about one-third of the wages. And having a much lower standard of living for their sailors, they are taking away the business from our Canadian companies, and as a consequence this company I have mentioned now has only one of its four boats in operation.

I have in my hand a clipping from a labour magazine in which I was interested, having been associated with labour organizations at one time, and unless they have changed their ways their reports are generally pretty accurate. This particular report says that the Canadian government has sent a fleet of 52 ships into the Arctic carrying freight and military supplies, and of those 52 vessels only two bear Canadian registry. One of these is a ship of the Ahearn Steamship Company I believe and the other the Maplebranch, is from somewhere down in Nova Scotia. I think this is a very serious matter, requiring the consideration of the government. If nothing is done about it, then it will not be long before ships of Canadian registry will no longer be operating on the great lakes. Their trade is already being cut into to a great extent.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks have probably been rather rambling, but I appreciate the opportunity of bringing to your attention and that of the minister the problems of the county I represent. I am sure the minister will give them this serious consideration, as he did in connection with the clean-up of the old canal.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, Dominion day this year, the 91st anniversary of Canada's confederation, marked the completion of the major works in the building of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project. It was the day on which the rushing waters of the St. Lawrence poured into a basin above the international St. Lawrence power dam. It was the day on which a new lake was born. According to the statement by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys made in the house on August 20, the lake has now been named lake St. Lawrence. The minister said that was the choice of the Canadian board on geographical names. I have no quarrel with this particular board, but it seems to me that the name is meaningless.

I thought here was an occasion to name this lake after a Canadian who had rendered outstanding service in the promotion of the St. Lawrence project. On August 4 last I asked the Minister of Transport the following question:

> Is the goverment contemplating naming the newly created lake in the St. Lawrence seaway in the near future? If so, is the suggestion contained in the letter to the editor to be considered?

A letter to the editor of the Ottawa Citizen which appeared in the issue of Saturday, August 2, impressed me with the idea that here perhaps was a suggestion which, regardless of political affiliation, was good and had real merit. I wish now to quote the letter which I was prevented from reading because, apparently, I was out of order in attempting to do so at that time:

> I understand our authorities are looking for a suitable name for the new lake in the St. Lawrence. I believe a Canadian name would be well received especially the name of one who had so much to do with the getting together of the United States and Canada in the formation and completion of this great project. I know most Canadians and Americans appreciate the efforts of Mr. Seaway himself, Mr. Lionel Chevrier, M.P. What man in Canada whether Conservative or Liberal is more entitled to a thank you for a job he did, than Mr. Chevrier?
> I believe lake Chevrier would be well received by the Canadian public in general and would also show that the present government appreciates the work of this great Canadian for services rendered whether Conservative or Liberal.

I do not know whether the minister is very happy about the choice, or whether he or the government ever gave any consideration to naming the lake, but it seems to me that the government should have seized the occasion to honour a person, preferably one who has had more to do with the actual planning of the great project than any other Canadian, by virtue of the position he held in the Canadian government of the day and subsequently as chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway commission.

I would say that the name "Chevrier" would have met with the approval of a large majority of Canadians. The large French Canadian population living along the shores of the seaway would have appreciated one of their favourite sons being so honoured.

Will the minister take all these factors into consideration and perhaps recognize the former minister of transport in some manner, so that the name "Chevrier" will be associated with what has been undoubtedly one of the most talked about projects in the world, ranking alongside the building of the Suez and Panama canals?

Along the great lakes 8,300 miles of shore line, cities in the great mid-west of the United States will become ocean ports. The city of Chicago will be linked with Calcutta, Duluth, Antwerp, Toronto, Brisbane, Australia; General Motors of Canada will be able to ship a Chevrolet or a Cadillac to New Zealand for less money than it now costs to ship a car from Oshawa to Vancouver by rail; wheat will move from Fort William, Ontario to Rotterdam at a saving of up to 15 cents per bushel.

This is a reality of the near future, and what could be more exciting than to have Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth sailing along this great seaway on the royal yacht Britannia from Montreal to Fort William on the official opening of this magnificent project? A suggestion along these lines has already been communicated to the Prime Minister, and I understand that his office and Buckingham Palace are considering the idea.

The broad outline of the Queen's third visit to Canada next year would indicate that a voyage starting at Montreal and ending at Fort William would give Her Majesty and her sailor-minded husband one of the greatest possible opportunities for sheer enjoyment and relaxation, and would permit brief stops at major points on both sides of the international boundary.

I express the hope that the Minister of Transport and the government will do everything in their power to plan the official opening of this great project, in which the Queen will participate, in such a manner that it will go down in history as the most memorable Canadian event of the century.

There is another matter I should like to mention, and that is the effective role which Trans-Canada Air Lines is playing in the transportation field in our nation. This is at least one of the beneficial projects which the former Liberal government created, the chief architect of which was the former brilliant minister of trade and commerce, Right Hon. C. D. Howe. Trans-Canada Air Lines has an enviable record of efficiency and I wish to congratulate the president, Mr. G. R. McGregor, and his capable staff for the very courteous handling of passengers.

Now I would like to ask the minister if he is giving consideration to granting transportation privileges on T.C.A. to members of parliament on the same basis that is now enjoyed in connection with the railways. There are a goodly number of us who cannot possibly use the railways due to the time factor. Surely any member whose riding is 500 miles or more from Ottawa should have the privilege and the convenience of visiting his constituency as often as possible without being compelled to be away too long from his parliamentary duties.

I understand the minister was wholeheartedly in favour of the free use of the services of T.C.A. for members when he sat on this side of the house. May I ask him if he is still in favour of the idea—I hope he is—and may I also express the hope that he will see his way clear to make a statement on the matter which will give us all hope that we may expect the implementation of what he himself has advocated in the past, if not during the present session, which is nearing its end, then in forthcoming sessions of this parliament.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, because the minister's estimates have been very thoroughly examined by the standing committee and because of their lateness in coming before us this session I am going to be most parsimonious in dipping into the barrel of time on this occasion. However, I should be remiss if I did not bring to the attention of the minister one or two matters which are still of very serious concern to my constituents.

Before doing that, however, I do want to say that after reading the minutes of the committee on estimates and Mr. Gordon's evidence I, like a good number of other Canadians who read reports of the same evidence in the newspapers, am very disturbed at the suggestion by Mr. Gordon that there is a need for the curtailment of the transcontinental passenger service in this country. I am one of a good many who hope this will not be necessary, and I think that in this respect the C.N.R. is somewhat at fault for a certain lack of patronage. I am not sure that everyone will agree with me, but I believe that with respect to transcontinental passenger trains The Canadian, which operates under the C.P.R., is probably the best train today; and hon. members can imagine how it pains me to admit that at this time.

These railways are the fundamental basis of our transportation system. Regardless of the possibilities of air travel and travel by road, we must realize that at all times during the year our heavy freight and commodities must go by railroad, and that in bad weather the great majority of people want to go by railroad, too. It is essential that we maintain our railroad system in Canada and our first class passenger service.

I realize the difficulties; the demand for air travel, for water travel, for improved transportation by highways and the carrying of freight by trucks, and so on. We are inclined to want everything at once without regard to the circumstances. I believe the whole situation in Canada with respect to transportation of all types shows a lack of planning, and illustrates the need for consideration of the entire problem from a national point of view and the development of a national transportation policy.

I have noticed from conversations with employees and with somewhat senior officials of the Canadian National Railways that there is a lowering of the morale of the staff of that company across Canada at this time. I am not blaming the management entirely for that. It is occasioned to some extent by large lay-offs in certain places involving men 45 years of age and over, who have given the very best years of their lives to the railway and who have an investment in their homes in the communities in which they have lived for many years. I have also noticed a certain lowering of morale amongst the supervisory staff, occasioned by the fact that there is a somewhat different approach to railroading nowadays from the approach that obtained in the old days.

Going back approximately 50 years I remember that some of the older officials of the C.P.R., the men who operated the railroad, were railroaders from the ground up. The railroads are now managed by business administrators and executives, to a large extent, and in my opinion and in the opinion of many people they have not the same human approach to problems as they affect the employees and the communities which the railways were designed to serve.

I have personal knowledge of many cases of men who have served the company well for a long period of years. I believe these remarks apply to both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. These men have long experience and have given many years of good service. They find themselves denied promotion today because someone who has just graduated from a university with a degree in engineering or a bachelor of arts degree is considered more suitable for positions in these circumstances. I would not want to underestimate the value of those degrees and academic qualifications generally, but I feel that both the railways could give more serious consideration when they are making promotions in the middle supervisory class to those men who have experience and who have served the railways over a number of years.

In addition, it was recently brought to my attention that the C.N.R. has made an agreement with the Pacific Great Eastern Railway to haul its empty box cars from the coast to the interior for 5 cents a mile per box car. I do not know what the details of the arrangements are, but the information I obtained from people closely in touch with the administration of the C.N.R. in that division is that it will have the effect of taking traffic away from the C.N.R. without providing any substantial saving. I mention those facts because these older employees of both railways have no one to speak for them with respect to their complaints in general as they apply to the parliament of Canada, except members of parliament.

I now come to a more local problem, and I can tell from the look of anticipation on the part of the minister that he is eagerly looking forward to hearing what I have to say.

Mr. Hees: Always.

Mr. Herridge: In our own district we believe that the C.P.R. has been most unthoughtful in its consideration of the needs of the people of the district so far as passenger service is concerned, and has completely overlooked the great contribution that the Kootenays make to the industrial production of Canada. They have done that by reducing service in two ways. First of all, they have reduced the number of days the trains operate on the Kettle Valley railroad between Vancouver and Nelson; and second, they have reduced the service by running a Budd car without any sleeping accommodation or any cafe car for the serving of meals.

This has been brought to the minister's attention very forcefully by representatives of various organizations in my constituency which he visited during the election period last year in an effort to try and make certain that I did not return to this house. I do not blame him for that; that was his duty, and we all have to accept our responsibilities in that respect. However, it has been brought to his attention and it is continually being brought to his attention, as it is to mine. I represent a type of people who never cease agitating until they reach their objective.

They have the same attitude with respect to peacetime affairs as the 54th battalion had overseas in the war.

With respect to the reduction of service I wish to read a letter that was written by the local chairman of the brotherhood of railroad trainmen, Kootenay lodge No. 558, Nelson, British Columbia on July 31. The letter is addressed to Mr. G. L. Phillips, superintendent, C.P.R., at Nelson, British Columbia, and a copy was sent to me. The letter states the position from the point of view of the men who are operating the trains:

Dear Sir:

I have been instructed by the members of the brotherhood of railroad trainmen and other running trades to vigorously protest to you, the company attitude and manner in regards to the curtailment of service on the boundary subdivision.

On Sunday July 27, passenger train No. 45, two diesel units and four passenger cars was run from Nelson to Midway on the boundary subdivision, leaving Nelson at 9.00 a.m., arriving Midway at 1.20 p.m. A freight train extra 4064 east was run out of Midway on the same date, leaving Midway at 1.20 p.m. arriving at Nelson at 10.00 p.m. with ten loads and two empties.

The fact that the two above mentioned trains have been run on a day and weekend at which time a curtailment of service is supposed to be in effect is sufficient to prove that other trains could be run seven days a week under the same conditions.

The people in our district, the people in general as well as employees of the railway, are of the opinion that the C.P.R. is taking advantage of the particular circumstances in the Kootenay district, where on occasions the railway track has been blown up, to reduce the passenger service. In their opinion the very fact that freight trains can operate continuously is an indication that the company is taking advantage of this situation to reduce that service.

With respect to the Budd car, we find this is a most unpleasant means of travel. It is particularly difficult for older people coming from the coast because it involves a 22-hour trip in a Budd car with no sleeping accommodation provided and no opportunity to obtain meals in a proper manner. A newsboy does come around periodically with a pot of coffee and dried up sandwiches, but that is not suitable nutrition for elderly people, children and those who are sick.

I have outlined my complaints on behalf of the people I have the honour to represent, and I urge the minister to do all he can to ease the situation by discussing the matter again with the board of transport commissioners and the officials of the C.P.R. to see if something cannot be done to meet the very modest requests of my constituents.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, I believe it was just a week ago today that I rose to make some comments on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, on which occasion you offended my sensibilities and caused me deep grief by suggesting that I was making a political speech. I was grievously hurt at your suggestion, because that was the farthest thing from my mind and because you know I never indulge in activities of that kind. I thought it was a general, rough and tumble discussion in which anyone could join, and I felt moved to participate in the discussion on that occasion.

However, a different situation obtains today. I am rising to speak on the estimates of the Department of Transport, and I want to join the happy throng who have jumped on the bandwagon and become one of the members of the mutual admiration club that has been operating since the minister concluded his remarks. In doing so I wish to extend him my compliments and congratulate him on the efficient administration of his department.

It was a revelation to me to find, shortly after I became a member of the house, that no matter from what constituency a member came or to what party he belonged, all of them, whether they were ordinarily extreme free traders or high protectionists, had one thing in common when it was a question of their own riding, municipality or province. They were all outstanding high protectionists. They wanted everything they could possibly get to protect their own ridings.

But today we have a general give-away, with each one after a bridge or a canal or a post office or an airport, and the Minister of Transport is acceding to their requests. I was particularly pleased last night when the hon. member for Laurier presented his request. He outlined his connection with the department over a period of years and complimented the minister upon carrying out some of the policies he had inaugurated and adding a few others that pleased him as well. He spoke about the St. Lawrence seaway, referred to the Lachine section, requested that the Quebec hydro authorities be given consideration with respect to development and mentioned an amount in the neighbourhood of $6 million which, with today's inflation, would represent a sum of approximately $20 million.

I was exceedingly pleased at the alacrity with which the minister acceded to the request of the hon. member, and the fact that the minister said he would go as far as he possibly could. It brings to mind what a difference a few years make, because I can remember the continual trek to Ottawa over the years by Sir Adam Beck when he was just plain Adam Beck, the father of hydro development in the province of Ontario. I can remember how all during his regime, and subsequently Mr. McGrath, Mr. Cook, Mr. Lyon and Bob Saunders, all of whom had the interests of Ontario hydro and the province at heart, he came down here year after year to plead for development of the power potential on the St. Lawrence only to meet with obstacles, stumbling blocks and frustrations and have to go back home after fruitless journeys. The St. Lawrence seaway was known at that time as the deep sea waterway, later as the great lakes waterway and finally the St. Lawrence seaway.

No matter what party was in power the same answer was always given. No recognition was given to their pleas. In addition to having tremendous energy, Sir Adam Beck possessed marvellous powers of foresight in being able to peer into the future and assess the requirements of the province of Ontario and the whole dominion. He had an analysis made of the power potential of the province. He outlined what was going to be required. He pointed out that when Niagara power was exhausted Ontario hydro would probably have to call upon the province of Quebec to assist them, because Ontario hydro was then supplying eastern Ontario by bringing power from Niagara Falls.

The hon. member for Laurier mentioned the wonderful hydro development that has taken place in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway and said that he thought that Premier Frost should consider allotting some of the power from the St. Lawrence seaway development to the eastern section of Ontario in the same way as is being done by the New York state power authority across the river. I can assure the hon. member that Ontario hydro has always endeavoured to take care of the eastern part of the province, even going to the extent of bringing in power from Niagara Falls and elsewhere.

But the situation is different today. We have this power development now on the St. Lawrence seaway after 25 or 30 years of making appeals and being blocked by the electrical ring and commercial interests, some of the opposition emanating from the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal. The same thing happened in the case of Sir Adam Beck. The power ring in the United States concentrated all their efforts to frustrate everything Sir Adam Beck did in the interests of the people of Canada, particularly the people of the province of Ontario. If I were to follow the technique of the opposition groups of saying that we do not start things soon enough and do not go far enough I could point out that the St. Lawrence seaway is an outstanding example of that, in that it was not started soon enough and did not go far enough under the previous administration.

[Mr. Small.]

However, we are indulging in happy, mutual approbation today and complimenting each other upon the wonderful results of the St. Lawrence seaway. Nevertheless there is one thing I regret. I do not want to be too severe because of the nice-Nellie diplomatic policy of the previous administration in dealing with the United States, but things came to the point where we were so fed up with the opposition to the seaway project that we finally told the United States that if they were not going to participate in the project we would go ahead and build it and pay for it ourselves.

I thank the hon. member for Laurier for expressing appreciation of the services of Bob Saunders in abating the opposition in the United States and getting them to cooperate with the province of Ontario with respect to power. Be that as it may, the United States came to the conclusion that we were going to be tough about it and would go ahead. Therefore though they were reluctant to do so, they agreed to take part in the project. But after that our tough policy was watered down. It became lukewarm and the United States eventually took over and dictated the whole policy as far as the St. Lawrence seaway was concerned.

I will not say anything more about the building of the St. Lawrence seaway and the fact that we did not go far enough because we did not build our own canal system within the Dominion of Canada. I will leave that to another time later, because I do not want to mar the love and sweetness evident in this debate, and also because I know the minister would like to get these estimates through.

To change the subject for a moment, I am pleased that the amount of money available under the grade crossing fund has been increased. In that regard may I say to the hon. member for Laurier that I appreciated his attitude when he was the minister of this department and the matter of the grade crossing fund came up. I had always been vitally interested in it, and I still am. At that time I put forward a plea for further consideration by the government, but I was ruled out of order because the matter was under quasi-judicial consideration by the board of transport commissioners. However, I was very much concerned because in my riding there were some 11 level crossings where serious accidents had happened, and likewise in the adjoining riding of Scarborough there were 82 level crossings, 52 of which were considered hazardous because of accidents. I was, therefore, bringing the matter before the house knowing that I was out of order, but the hon. member for Laurier allowed me to practically complete my remarks before he raised his objection. I want to say that I appreciated that very much.

When the report did come in it was worth waiting for, and I feel that the minister did his best at that time to increase the amount of money that is available. However, there was not sufficient consideration given to the matter because, in fact, there are very few votes in that proposition. At any rate, I think they are on the right track, and they are going to speed up the progress of removing this menace from the Dominion of Canada.

The other matter I should like to mention is one to which the hon. member for Kootenay West referred. The last time I was talking about it the hon. member was introducing a bill. While he was out of order, I joined with him in placing before the house some of the claims I thought should be made in regard to the railways. I have not changed my opinion on that. He has referred to the attitude of the president of the Canadian National Railways, and I think serious consideration should be given to that matter. I do not say it is an amusing thing, though sometimes it is, but it is alarming when the president of a great concern can come to our committee and, with the nonchalance of a person who is enjoying himself, tell the committee that we are going to have a deficit next year; that the railway is going to have to remove this particular service or reduce it. He did not have to tell us he was reducing the service, because everyone is aware of it. He says he is not getting the passengers, but he is not giving the service that the people of Canada require of him, and if it keeps on he will not have anyone riding on his passenger cars.

I pointed out to hon. members at that time the situation with regard to the stations at Ottawa and Toronto, as well as other places. I referred to the lack of service and the complete contempt in which the people travelling on the railroad are held. I thought there might be some prospect of a change in that situation, but no change whatever has taken place. I think it was a Mr. Dunn who was in charge of the service here who admitted that everything I said was correct but there was not much that they could do about it. It was one of those things with which we had to put up. They were going to move the station some five miles away soon, and the long-suffering public would have to put up with that until then.

There is the attitude of a railway that is operating on a deficit, for which you and I and all the people of Canada have to dig down into our pockets to pay. They cannot improve the service with these half-baked policies, these half-considered plans which are in effect today. Probably it would be a good idea if we called them in and said, "We are going to cut your salary in half because of the service you are giving." Probably we could say to Mr. Gordon, "All right; you are taking it so nonchalantly, how would you like your salary cut from $75,000 to $37,500?" If a private business were operated like that, there would either be a new manager very soon or the business would close down.

I have a clipping from a newspaper here which says that they are going to discontinue operating the passenger service to Owen Sound and Wiarton. There is probably some reason for curtailing that service, but they are going to continue the freight trains, and there would be no more expense involved in having a passenger car on the freight train. They said they would discontinue that service because they were not getting any passengers. Well I claim there will be no harm in leaving the passenger coach on the freight train that is to be continued; it will cost very little. The clipping goes on:

> The company further applied for licences which would enable it to carry by road transport the mail, express and passenger baggage formerly carried by two Montreal-Brockville trains.
> The railway said it proposes to serve all railway stations and express agencies on the line between Montreal and Brockville with trucks which would operate on highway No. 2 and others, and county roads.

That is a capital idea. At last they have a certain amount of wisdom and they are going to give faster service by using trucks. It is because of the slowness of the passenger service the railways were giving that people are using automobiles. I wish they would apply this to the railway section between Brockville and Ottawa. I wish they would take off those super-duper freight cars that they call express cars and baggage cars, and for which they have all kinds of freight and postal equipment. These cars form such a large part of the train that when you come to the station you have to crawl over crates and large trucks used for hauling away this freight and express.

Since the last time I mentioned this the railways have added another inconvenience. They just dump the ice on the platform in large blocks before putting it in the cooling system of these cars. You have to jump over that, and probably if you miss the jump and light on the slab of ice, you slide into the station on your backside. Just imagine my chagrin last Thursday when I was returning from the opening of the exhibition in Toronto. The Minister of Transport had to suffer the indignity of having to walk through the passenger cars up to the baggage cars before getting out in order to try to avoid walking through the rain. There were so many of these baggage cars on the train that the passenger cars were down to the Laurier avenue bridge and the passengers had to walk through the rain right into the station. I said to the Minister of Transport, "Can you imagine that happening to us?"

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Small: Imagine that kind of service, when the Minister of Transport has to walk through all this rain and lose the press in his trousers to get to the station. I said, to our dapper Minister of Transport, "George, I think the next time we will have to get you the Governor General's car so you can be brought right into the station." Then, if they do not give better service, we shall have to carry this thing further. I think we would accomplish marvellous results if we were to bring in Mr. Gordon and say, "You are a swell fellow, and you can tell us how much you deficit is going to be, how much it is going to cost with your broken-down equipment, but we think your salary should be commensurate with the service."

He tells us that the parlour cars, the sleeping cars and so on are going concerns, that they produce a profit. At the same time they treat travellers with the utmost contempt. Hon. members have great difficulty in securing accommodation if they want to leave here on a Friday or Saturday night. They are told there is a waiting list, so you must wait for cancellations to get accommodation. When we receive that kind of treatment from a service that is producing a profit I think it is time we brought in Mr. Gordon and talked to him in a lovey-dovey fashion, saying, "We do not want to hurt your feelings, but we think the time has arrived when your salary should be commensurate with the kind of service you are giving, and probably at $25,000 a year you would be overpaid."

Mr. Crestohl: We were, of course, greatly interested in what was said by the hon. member who just took his seat, especially in the opening portion of his remarks when he joined hands in a very affectionate way with the opposition and congratulated the former minister of transport for the attitude he takes toward the present minister. But somehow or other I think the hon. member perhaps resorted to the type of caution that he always exercises in the statements he makes. He has always been very careful in every way he expresses himself to retain unity in the country, to retain unity as between the parties. With that same type of caution which he previously exhibited in this house, he now proceeds to reverse himself. I do not know why at this juncture he becomes critical in a way which, judging from his remarks, led me to believe that maybe the hon. member for Danforth is looking for an appointment or seeking a job in the railway service of Canada.

Mr. Small: Oh, heaven help me, no.

Mr. Crestohl: I do not know that, but that is the impression I received. After all, I think the hon. member has referred to a very fine civil servant of this country who, over the years and in difficult days in time of war, has been exemplary in giving the kind of service that Canadians should give to their country. There may be some criticism which might be made of the railway operation or of the railway system, but I do not think it is within the right of members of the House of Commons to speak in a fashion that is not appropriate with regard to a distinguished citizen of Canada and a prominent civil servant.

There was the suggestion, for example, that the minister himself had perhaps experienced some inconvenience in having to walk a little distance in the rain. This was typical of the humility which the minister has always shown in his new office. There is no hauteur about him. He is humble in his ways. He lives with the people. That is one of the things which I am sure prompted the hon. member for Laurier to congratulate him so fully and sincerely on his appointment.

I want to join in that congratulation. We find the Minister of Transport to be a most congenial gentleman. He is affable. Above all, Mr. Chairman, he is easily approachable; he receives you like a colleague in the house. He is really a splendid gentleman. With all these qualities, being a humble man and one who does not mind if he is obliged to walk several yards in the rain, the minister should be congratulated. Certainly he should be the first one to complain if he was not pleased with the situation.

Mr. Chevrier: He might even sing "Walking in the Rain".

Mr. Crestohl: As I said, he does not look any the worse for his experience. I am sure he has not suffered by it. However, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something that is not intended to be critical.

The minister disturbed much of the thinking around the city of Montreal when he announced recently that there will be no air conditioning for the Dorval airport. That announcement was a disturbing one. The minister may have given good reasons, but it is my objective at this time, if I can, to persuade the minister to reconsider whether or not the new Dorval airport merits air conditioning. I should like to point out that there is a substantial increase in air travel, and that there will be a further increase in the future. Montreal is the showplace of Canada to incoming air passengers, whether from the United States or from Europe. Montreal airport will make the first impression upon visitors or newcomers to our country. Having gone to the tremendous expense of erecting such a magnificent building, I think it is a little shortsighted not to complete it to the fullest extent. Certainly in a few more years air conditioning will be prevalent everywhere, in every public building. Why then wait a few more years and be obliged to tear down sections and instal air conditioning? The time to instal it is now. It will be done at a great saving if it is done now.

I should also like to point out not only that Montreal is the showplace to incoming passengers but that we must also consider first impressions. People coming to Canada and being received at such a magnificent airport certainly are being dealt with by civil servants. The immigration branch, for example, should have the comfort and the convenience of air conditioning when they are examining passengers, when passengers are sitting before them, are being questioned and cross-questioned and are having to spend time there. Imagining how uncomfortable the situation could be on a hot July day for incoming passengers on their first trip to Canada, being in this gorgeous building and sitting and sweltering in the heat before an immigration official. Apart from the fact that answering questions is a trying experience—being alert to answer properly—there is that added discomfort.

Then, of course, you also have the customs branch. Why should not the customs officials enjoy the convenience of air conditioning? Everywhere in public buildings it is possible to enjoy it. The customs officials must exert themselves physically in the lifting up of baggage, in the lowering of baggage, in opening it and in closing it, and in examining the baggage of passengers. On a hot sweltering day it is not a very comfortable occupation. I am sure the hon. member for Danforth would not like it. Does the minister wish to say something?

Mr. Hees: If I may, Mr. Chairman; I see that it is about one o'clock. I should like to thank the hon. member for his very constructive remarks, and also to assure him and other hon. members from the Montreal area that since I made my announcement in the house, my officials and I have been doing a great deal of thinking about this matter with a view to seeing whether something can be done. I am very hopeful that something can be done, and that it will be possible to make a statement to that effect in the very near future. I thank the hon. member for what he has said, and I agree with him. Everything possible is being done to work out something along those lines and, as I have said, I hope to be able to make in the very near future the kind of statement that he would like me to make.

Mr. Crestohl: With that assurance, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to add, and I shall conclude my remarks.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had not really intended to inflict any remarks on the committee in connection with the minister's estimates on my own account, but my hon. friend, the member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, is unfortunately not able to be here today, and there are one or two matters which he wished to bring forward and which I am sure the minister will excuse me for bringing forward in his stead.

Before I do so, however, although I was not in the committee this morning I understand that an hon. gentleman on the other side of the house had some observations to make about the president of the Canadian National Railways, and I wish to say that so far as I am concerned—and I hope I am speaking in a completely non-partisan way—there have been times in the past 21 years or more of our friendship when Mr. Gordon and I have not seen eye to eye on some subjects. It is very hard for anyone with the strong opinions I have and the strong opinions Mr. Gordon has to always agree on everything, but he is in my opinion one of the greatest public servants this country has ever had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Indeed, none of us who lived in Ottawa through those awful six years of war under the great strains which we experienced during that period will ever forget the extent to which Mr. Gordon's work enabled this country to make the tremendous effort it did at that time in the prosecution of our part of the war. Mr. Gordon undertook his present position without any previous experience in connection with railways, and I think no one would doubt that he undertook that task with the same zeal, the same energy and the same intelligence—and I might say the same disinterested patriotism—which he brought to every other task he ever undertook.

While many of us may disagree with some of his decisions at times, and there are times when I have myself disagreed with them, I still believe no one could find grounds for questioning the disinterested public service of this great public servant.

The two matters which I wish to raise on behalf of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador are rather closely related and have to do with communications in Labrador. The first matter is one with which I know the minister's department is familiar, though he himself may not be familiar with it, and I am not asking him for his comments at this time but I just wish to place the matter on record and ask for his careful consideration of it. I would refer to an agreement made by the Department of Public Works, although today this is really a matter for the Department of Transport. The other party to the agreement was the Gulf of St. Lawrence Telephone Company, and it was made a short time before confederation, or at least what I call confederation, that is to say March 31, 1949.

If the minister will look up this agreement he will see that in so far as the operation of that company in the province of Quebec was concerned, there were certain stipulations about the maintenance of the service, and that similar stipulations were not made about the maintenance of the service in that part of Labrador which is in the province of Newfoundland. Of course it is easy to understand that at that time, since Newfoundland was not a part of Canada, it was not part of the domestic duty of the government of Canada to make provision with respect to that area, but it does seem to me that under the circumstances which have existed since March 31, 1949, there should have been protection and service given in Newfoundland equal to that given in Quebec. I am not going into the details of this matter, but I hope the minister will take a sympathetic look at the question, as I believe is the minister's practice in connection with all such matters.

The other matter to which I wish to refer is one which has always been directly under the minister's jurisdiction and, so the minister will not give me what used to be the stock answer though we are hearing it less and less, namely "Why didn't you do it", I will tell him right now why I didn't do it. It was because I was not able to persuade the minister's predecessor to do it; but I believe the arguments I put to that hon. gentleman in private are still sound arguments, and since I am not under the strain of the responsibility from which the present minister now suffers I can put those arguments in public at this time.

Under the terms of union, as the minister well knows, the telegraphic and telephonic communications in Newfoundland were operated by the department concerned with postal and telegraphic communications in that province. In the island of Newfoundland these services were transferred to the Canadian National telegraph system, and that system has extended its service, not as fast as my friend the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and I would like to see it done, but it has been steadily extended. Unfortunately the same process did not apply in Labrador, although Labrador is just as much a part of the province of Newfoundland as is the island of Newfoundland. The facilities which then existed there were brought under the operation of the Department of Transport. Unhappily some of these facilities have been restricted in recent years, and there has been no expansion in Labrador comparable with that carried out by Canadian National Telegraphs on the island of Newfoundland. This has caused a great deal of inconvenience and some hardship and, in some cases, actual suffering in the area.

I know this is not a situation which could arise in any other part of Canada, because in other parts of this country telegraphic and telephonic communications are either provided by private companies or by provincial entities; but in the province of Newfoundland, because of its former status, the post office service was part of the postal and telegraphic department service. It is, in fact an inheritance from the days before confederation, and is one of those unique features which we have to take into account in our confederation in exactly the same way as in other respects we do with the province of Quebec.

I recognize that this is not a comparable situation at all, because I recognize how much more important is the situation from the point of view of Quebec. But in the same way that we respect the civil code of Quebec, this peculiar situation in the province of Newfoundland should be recognized and we should seriously consider maintaining, and where necessary expanding and improving, that service. I do hope these arguments which would have been made by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador had he been here will commend themselves to the minister.

I am now going to speak on my own account with respect to one other subject which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister, and I hope that here again the minister will appreciate that I do not do so in a spirit of captious criticism.

I was very apprehensive when the minister told us in the house a month or so ago about this new policy of almost unrestricted competition which was being encouraged with regard to certain types of air service. We are very apprehensive in Newfoundland—and I think the minister will probably find that this is true in other outlying areas—that this is going to result in fly by night competition—perhaps that is not a very happy image to use; I do not mean literally flying in the night time—but we are apprehensive lest outside companies should come in for a time, skim the cream off the milk, and then go out again.

We know that this situation did exist in the thirties. We remember how some of these small companies, shoestring operators, were put out of business at that time. We think the minister should take another long and careful look at this matter and keep an eye on it to see that reputable companies which give service day and night, in season and out of season, are not going to find all the profit taken out of their flying by competition from operators who, once they have made a killing, will leave the place without any adequate service.

I have tried to speak to these points as briefly as possible. I would appreciate the minister's consideration of them.

(Translation):

Mr. LaRue: Mr. Chairman, before addressing the house today on this subject, I think it would be timely for me to say something about my constituency. Saguenay is the biggest constituency in Canada, with the exception of the Northwest Territories. With an area of 374,000 square miles, it has a widely scattered population of approximately 80,000. There are 2,000 enfranchised Eskimos scattered among ten posts along James bay, Hudson bay and Ungava bay. The remainder of the population live in a 700-mile coastal strip along the St. Lawrence gulf and river, stretching from Tadoussac to Blanc Sablon.

Mr. Chairman, during my 8 years as director of the chamber of commerce of Baie Comeau, I had a firsthand opportunity of seeing that Saguenay's main economic obstacle is the dearth of adequate communication facilities, whether they be by air, land or sea.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I want particularly to mention our land transport facilities placing special emphasis on the necessity of a railroad on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. I shall try to be as concise as possible, as I do not wish to delay the progress of the session.

It has always been considered that the great thing in opening up an area is to build railroads; that is how the Canadian west was opened up—not, I would add parenthetically, without great sacrifices.

A railroad running from Great Slave lake is at present contemplated with a view to developing the mining industry.

Saguenay is going through a phase of full industrial expansion. Great strides are being made in the forestry and mining industries, and in power development.

I will name a few of the companies operating in my constituency: In forestry, we have the Quebec North Shore Paper, the Consolidated Paper Company, the Donnacona Paper, the Anglo Canadian Pulp and Paper, the St. Lawrence Corporation, the Canadian International Paper, and the Gulf Pulp and Paper.

As for mining, we have the Iron Ore Company of Canada, the Quebec Iron and Titanium Corporation, the Quebec Cartier Mining, and the Canadian British Aluminum. Further, Cyrus Eaton has a mammoth project for the development of the Hamilton Falls.

The grain elevators, I might add, are in the process of construction.

A 350-mile railway, the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway, built and financed by the Iron Ore Company, carries the ore from Knob Lake to Seven Islands. Another railroad is being laid down by Quebec Cartier Mining. It will stretch 150 miles from Shelter Bay, in the north of Quebec.

Even greater industrial expansion is foreshadowed in Saguenay by its enormous hydraulic resources. Saguenay's hydro-electric potential is calculated at 12 million horsepower.

To sum up, Mr. Chairman, we can say that the various companies have invested capital of at least a billion dollars so far, and economists assure us that, by 1970, companies' investments in Saguenay will exceed two billions.

It will be noted that the various companies operating in the Saguenay did not allow the constituency's development to be contingent upon federal aid in transport; these private undertakings went ahead with their own capital to build harbours, airports and railroads.

But I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is now up to the federal government to show its good will by improving our transport facilities. Indeed, the companies in Saguenay are confronted with a serious problem, namely, winter transport. Navigation in winter has become most difficult, regardless of all the aid from the federal government.

Consequently, heavy industry is forced to stockpile an enormous amount both of its production and of material needed for production. The same problem applies to small industry and trade. Businessmen must accordingly invest considerable amounts in the fall, so as to have the necessary material on hand for the winter.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one adequate solution to our transport problems, and that is to build a railroad from Seven Islands to Quebec. But I know that a responsible government must be sure that such a project will be self-liquidating before it can contemplate the enormous investments required for railroad construction.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I would draw special attention to the excellent brief submitted by the chamber of commerce of Baie Comeau to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects.

This brief contains all the necessary information to prove conclusively that not only would a railroad in Saguenay be a good proposition, but that it should also compensate for some of the deficits which the Canadian National Railways have in other areas.

In conclusion, I would like to quote an extract from this brief.

(Text):

An active and insistent group with the formidable title of "Comite du Chemin de Fer Chambre de Commerce du District de Baie Comeau" have been making studies of the possible rail routes and have met with Mr. Marler recently on this subject. We will quote the extracts from the report of our committee drawn up November 5, 1955. Certainly the question of the construction and economic prospects for a railway along the north shore should be given serious and immediate study by our federal government. Such a railway line, we believe, would be of national value to our great dominion with its growing importance, responsibilities and new sources of danger.

Our committee reports as follows: In view of the growth which is taking place in this section of the Saguenay and north shore region and the wealth of potential resources available for future development, it is important that consideration be given to supplying year-round transportation facilities in the form of a railroad.

While it is impossible for us to provide estimates of the present profitability of a railway line, joining present C.N.R. facilities and extending to Baie Comeau and Seven Islands, it is apparent such a rail line should be built in the general interest of Canada. We believe that there is sufficient assurance of future development in this area to merit such action.

...Any railroad can only be profitable if the freight traffic to warrant its construction and operation is available. The Minister of Transport mentioned a minimum of 500,000 tons a year would be required to warrant such a venture. Our committee is presently working on preliminary estimates and these are not yet complete; however, the first large item which we would be certain of is the movement of at least 100,000 cords of railed pulpwood which amounts to 250,000 tons to start with. There is merchandise, construction supplies and equipment, pulp and paper machinery and products, mining machinery and products, army, navy and air force requirements. With a population of 100,000 people, which we will realize in a very short time, and rapid and increasing flow of raw and manufactured or semi-manufactured materials, we believe the north shore and Labrador will load much more freight on a railway each year than you will find on some of the railways above enumerated which have been recently undertaken by the C.N.R. We count on your commission to draw to the attention of our government the need for an immediate and serious study of our railway problem.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I have a few matters I should like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time, and I do so in the knowledge that the Department of Transport which administers the Canadian National Railways has a great responsibility in the province of Newfoundland because the C.N.R. is practically our sole means of transportation there. Consequently I should like to bring a few points pertaining to transportation, particularly as they apply to the C.N.R., to the attention of the minister.

We all welcomed the announcement made by the minister to the effect that the long awaited arrival of the ferry William Carson was now an accomplished fact and that she had sailed into Port aux Basques harbour on a trial run. I do not intend to comment on this controversial vessel. All I should like to say is that I hope the minister later on in this discussion of his estimates will be able to tell the committee what are the results of that trial run, and also when the William Carson will be able to operate to Port aux Basques as she was intended.

During the time when further repairs and alterations were being made at Port aux Basques this vessel plied between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Argentia in the eastern part of Newfoundland. This fact lends emphasis to the following important point. As yet the province of Newfoundland does not have an adequate system of roads. No doubt some hon. members will be surprised to learn that it is impossible to drive from east to west in Newfoundland. Therefore the following question naturally arises. With the advent of this automobile ferry service to Port aux Basques, what useful purpose will it serve? I submit it will be many years before this vessel can operate as she was intended to operate, carrying automobiles from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland, because if she does go to Port aux Basques there are virtually no highways to take the automobiles across the province.

With that in mind I should like to point out the need for a ferry to ply between the eastern part of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia on the mainland of Canada. The Avalon peninsula is practically an island in itself. Two-thirds of the population of Newfoundland are domiciled there, and much of the industry in that province is located there. Indeed, there is a great need for some means of communication between this peninsula and the province of Nova Scotia, in order that our people may communicate directly and freely with the rest of Canada.

I would hope that the minister, his department and particularly the Canadian National Railways will give consideration to the following request. If it proves that the William Carson cannot operate effectively to Port aux Basques, I hope consideration will be given to providing facilities at Argentia in the Avalon peninsula of Newfoundland so the vessel could operate as a car ferry to the eastern part of the province.

I have been concerned about the attitude of the C.N.R. with regard to Newfoundland, because whenever hon. members of this house representing Newfoundland have approached the Department of Transport or the railway concerning badly needed improvements they have been met with the attitude that such improvements would not be profitable. I submit it should not be a question of profit. The C.N.R. is the only means of transportation on the island of Newfoundland; consequently I believe it has a grave responsibility to the people of that province. Profit should be only a secondary consideration, and service should be placed above all else.

I noted with interest the comments of the minister to the effect that provision was made in his estimates for the construction of an auto ferry to ply between Portugal Cove and Bell island in my constituency. This is a very important island in the province of Newfoundland which for many years has carried on under a most inadequate system of transportation. Frequently the ferry service as it presently exists did not function at all.

When this new boat is put into operation I would ask the minister and his deputy to give consideration to extending Canadian National express services to Bell island. That island has a population of approximately 10,000 people and is the site of a great iron ore mine, one of Newfoundlands chief industries. The people there should have the benefit of Canadian National express service. At the present time they are treated the same as the residents of the city of St. John's, and they operate under the same regulations. If a Bell island businessman or resident receives goods via Canadian National express he has only 48 hours to go to the express office in St. John's and claim his goods. If he does not reach the office within that period he is penalized. On the surface it would appear a simple matter, but for a resident of Bell island to reach St. John's he must cross a stretch of water which consumes 30 minutes of his time. In all about an hour is required to make the trip because the present ferry service does not operate on schedule.

Representations have been made to the department and to the railway on this important subject. I ask the minister to bring pressure to bear on the C.N.R. with a view to seeing whether it is feasible to establish a suboffice of the Canadian National express on Bell island so the local people will have the same advantages that are enjoyed by people in St. John's.

The other point I should like to make has to do with Torbay airport. A new terminal building is currently under construction there, and I understand that the official opening will possibly take place next month. In that connection I would emphasize the need for an alternate air strip. Torbay airport was built during the war as a military air field, and I am afraid very little consideration was given to the location of that air strip because flying conditions there are not always what they should be. As a matter of fact Torbay airport is closed in a lot more than it should be. About 30 or 35 miles from the site of the present airport at Torbay excellent flying conditions can be found, and the terrain lends itself to the building of an alternate air strip.

This is very important in view of the importance to my province, and to the city of St. John's particularly, of Trans-Canada Air Lines. With no road system so people can drive their cars across the province, and with no car ferry on which to put their cars in order to go to Nova Scotia, the people are practically wholly dependent on Trans-Canada Air Lines. Consequently it is a very serious handicap when Torbay airport is closed in for as much as a week at a time, as it sometimes is. I would ask the minister to give this matter serious consideration.

Finally, I should like to express my gratitude to the Minister of Transport for the great personal interest he has taken in matters pertaining to my province. There are many accomplishments which can be directly attributed to the minister, not the least of which is the building of the new car ferry for Bell island. I hope his record will continue to be one of good service to the province of Newfoundland, and I hope the recommendations I have made this afternoon will merit his consideration.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, on July 31, 1958, as found at page 2888 of Hansard, the hon. member for Papineau asked the minister the following question:

—whether the minister has recently received representations requesting the implementation of the decision taken by the previous administration to build a third bridge over the St. Lawrence river in the east end of Montreal.

On August 1, 1958, as found at page 2939 of Hansard, the minister answered as follows:

I have not been able to find any record of a decision by the previous administration to build a third bridge over the St. Lawrence river in the east end of Montreal. Various representations relating to this subject have been received from time to time and the matter, of course, will be kept under review.

I should now like to repeat by reading from Hansard two statements I made previously concerning the construction of a third bridge in the east end of Montreal. As found at page 706 of Hansard for January 31, 1955 I said:

I would like here, in passing, to suggest to the government to take into consideration the building of a new bridge on the St. Lawrence river at the end of Pie IX boulevard; when I am suggesting the building of this additional bridge for Montreal what I have in mind is the speeding up of traffic. As a matter of fact, all the traffic coming from the eastern part of the city must now go through the centre part of the town in order to cross Jacques Cartier bridge; this Pie IX boulevard bridge would link the south shore of the river with eastern Montreal, and would connect directly the Laurentian highway with Pie IX boulevard at St. Vincent de Paul. But the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterways will bring about a situation which will make the building of the Pie IX bridge still more urgent.

I should like to refer now to page 2062 of Hansard for March 15, 1955, where I said:

Once more, as I did a month ago in this house, I ask that another bridge be built in Montreal at the foot of Pie IX boulevard.

I continue.

(Translation):

And now, Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Transport stated, in reply to a question by the member for Papineau (Mr. Meunier), that he could not find the file on the building of a third bridge in Montreal East, I thought, first of all, that the record should show the requests that have been made in this connection since 1955.

I now want to bring the minister up to date on the various conversations I have had on this subject with the former minister of transport, Mr. Marler. The former minister of transport, having instantly recognized the need for a third bridge in Montreal East, had decided in 1957 to submit the matter to the cabinet once work on the bridge of the Ile des Soeurs (now Champlain bridge) had been completed. I am sure the minister will not refuse to take my word on this, but I must tell him that the matter goes much farther than that, for even the name of this new bridge was dragged into the discussions. As controversy was raging at the time about the name chosen by the C.N.R. authorities for the new hotel, I had suggested to the former minister of transport that the authorities of the city of Montreal, as well as the residents of Montreal East, would be only too proud if we called this bridge ofter Montreal's founder, Maisonneuve. To this, the former minister of transport had replied to me that it was not the practice for the former Liberal government to impose names for constructions under its jurisdiction.

I must say, in this connection, that the present government followed our policy in selecting the name of Champlain bridge.

The former minister of transport had, however, promised me that if the authorities of the city of Montreal, and the public bodies concerned, agreed upon calling it Maisonneuve bridge, then the government of that time would be happy to agree.

(Text):

The minister will appreciate, no doubt, the work that has already been done by Liberal members toward the construction of this third bridge over the St. Lawrence river, and he will also appreciate the fact that even the name has almost been chosen. I know the Minister of Transport very well and I know that he will not be disturbed at all by the fact that if the government proceeds with the construction of this third bridge Liberal members from the city of Montreal might be given credit for the work they have done. The minister has repeatedly said that he is not concerned with political patronage, and as long as he follows this line of conduct he must be congratulated.

The minister is more concerned with the need, and now that proof of the need has been established, now that preliminary discussions have already taken place, now that the previous minister has examined the need and found that a third bridge should be built, and now that even the name has already been mentioned, I am sure he will do his utmost to recommend to his colleagues the immediate construction of this third bridge to be known as the Maisonneuve bridge.

Mr. Fisher: The minister's introductory statement, which he made last night, contained two paragraphs which were devoted to the question of pilotage. I note that he said:

> We expect in the coming months to send a special team of officials to our pilotage districts to hold discussions with the pilots themselves and other interested parties or groups in an effort to ensure that existing problems are not overlooked, and that we are doing our best to provide a proper atmosphere for the operation of pilotage.

The question immediately comes to my mind, why did the minister not do this long ago? We have had a dispute on the lakes —I know it appears a small matter affecting the livelihood of only some 40 Canadians— but why was this step not taken some time ago? However, he went on in his statement:

> Special problems relating to the Kingston and the great lakes area will involve further discussions with the United States, as a result of construction of the seaway. At the moment, our objective is to provide a balanced framework within which pilotage may operate in the mutual interest of both shipping and pilots. Pilotage dues now represent a substantial cost to shipping—

I think we need to interpolate right here that pilotage dues do not represent a substantial cost to United States or Canadian ships within the great lakes system. I doubt very much that pilotage dues represent a substantial cost, because if you divide the cost of pilotage into the total tonnage carried by foreign ships I do not believe you would find it a terrific burden. Then the minister went on:

> —and we will seek to avoid a situation in which this becomes so expensive as to injure shipping itself while, at the same time, ensuring the proper standard of working conditions for pilots.

When we were considering these estimates in the standing committee, the minister was very blunt in answering some points I tried to make. As a matter of fact he received considerable applause from most of the government members on that committee when he came out with the forthright statement that we did not care what the United States thought about this, Canada was going to set its pilotage policy on its own. I can certainly understand why the minister made that statement in the particular way he did, but it seems to me it overlooks, in its sharpness, the realities of the situation, because the minister in his statement said it involves further discussions with the United States. The minister's answer in the committee ignored the fact we have to co-operate with the United States just as they have to co-operate with us. There can be no throat-slitting by either party in this regard.

As I interpret the situation, it seems we have a lock-out or a strike, whatever you want to call it, and some 40 Canadian pilots who formerly made their living by piloting foreign ships in great lakes waters are out of work. Most of these pilots picked up their ships around Kingston and went on from there. As of last year they dealt with the shipping federation of Canada on a sort of temporary basis. The shipping federation of Canada is not a federation of Canadian shipping interests, it is really a committee representing foreign ship owners. The pilots formed themselves into an association and made arrangements with the United States association or union representing the masters and mates, to approach the whole seaway problem together from the pilots' point of view.

When it came time to renew the contract for this year with the shipping federation of Canada, the shipping federation turned down any negotiations on the demands of the pilots and informed them they were going to set up their own pilotage district between Port Weller and Sarnia. The shipping federation said they would not need pilots on any other part of the great lakes system. The deputy minister of transport, I understand, informed the shipping federation of Canada that it had no authority to set up a pilotage district and tried, along with the minister, to bring the shipping federation and the pilots together in some sort of colloquy to settle their problems.

The pilots have informed me that they have always been willing to go to such a meeting, either under the aegis of the minister now before us or the Minister of Labour. The shipping federation has refused to deal with this particular case. I have asked to have tabled the correspondence between the department and the shipping federation and with the dominion marine association, which is the third interested group. I had hoped to have that correspondence available today so I would have a better idea of the opinions exchanged between the ministry and these organizations.

The Canadian pilots had hopes that legislation which was passed by the United States House of Representatives and was before the Senate would win them back their jobs. It was expected that this legislation would become effective this fall. During what I understand was the last committee meeting to be held on this particular legislation the chairman of the committee, Senator Magnuson, announced that the state department, which interposed no objection during the house consideration, telephoned him to urge delay because of opposition by the Canadian government.

In effect, therefore, this is one example where a Canadian protest had some result, unlike the Premium Iron Ores case where the Canadian protest seems to have been ignored. Our government, acting on the advice of the Minister of Transport, has blocked some United States legislation which indirectly would have had a beneficent effect on our own pilots; that is the way I interpret it. Perhaps I interpret it wrongly. I know that was not the consideration in the mind of the minister. I think he was undoubtedly pressing the point of view of the Canadian shipping federation, perhaps not deliberately because I suppose they are coincidental, with the emphasis upon the high cost of pilotage which may put tremendous burdens upon transportation costs and upset our whole dream of cheap shipping through having foreign bottoms come into the great lakes.

This is all very well as an argument, but we have to consider what is going to happen to Canadian shipping and Canadian pilots in this regard. What were the reasons for the anxiety of the United States, especially the United States coastguard, to go ahead with this particular bill, which the Canadian government managed to hold up temporarily? The emphasis in the United States bill was, I know, on safety and security and to have on foreign ships at all times in this very expensive seaway system pilots who had been screened both for ability and for loyalty.

As a result of the Canadian government's action in killing this bill, there are a couple of other possibilities looming up. One possibility is that each individual state along the great lakes will be able to write its own legislation so far as pilotage is concerned. We could get into a situation where Governor Harriman in New York could require a Canadian pilot to get off a ship going through that part of the canal and a United States pilot would take the ship through until it got back into the river. We know that sort of thing is probably nonsense, but the point I want to emphasize is that each of the states has retaliatory power if it wants to use it.

I underline the fact that we need an agreement with the United States on the federal level which will take all these factors into consideration. What I am afraid of is that the government, in its present ignorance, is going to be pushing strongly the interests of foreign shipping rather than, let us say, the interests of our Canadian pilots and the mutual interest they have with the United States pilots. I feel also that the government may be missing the safety factor.

I should like to read to the committee, Mr. Chairman, part of a statement by Captain John Bishop, international secretary treasurer of the international organization of masters, mates and pilots, in support of this bill No. S-2096 of the United States House of Representatives, which was blocked in the Senate by our government's action. I read this in order not to back up his position completely but just to put on record the American side of opinions, which opinions are held by our great lakes pilots and held with sincerity. Captain Bishop said:

> I am appearing today in support of S-2906, a bill which would upon enactment, formulate a long-needed safety factor in the fast growing navigation program in the great lakes and St. Lawrence seaway area.
> The present laws regarding manning by licensed officers on United States and Canadian vessels provides for sufficient qualified personnel, licensed by the appropriate agency of the countries mentioned. However, the fact remains that foreign vessels are not required by law to provide for competent and qualified personnel to pilot their vessels in the area under consideration and covered by the provisions of this bill. The fact that this situation exists, certainly indicates that no matter how proficient and qualified the American or Canadian pilot may be in the execution of his duties, complications will arise over which he has no control.
> It may be readily seen that a hazardous situation will exist when, during each such an ordinary event as the passing of two vessels, where one being piloted by a thoroughly competent licensed pilot and the other is manned with a crew of individuals who may be making their first trip in the great lakes area and are unfamiliar with our passing signals, rules and regulations. There are even cases when communication by radiotelephone is impossible, due to the language barrier between the foreign crew or the American or Canadian crew.
>
> Although the passenger vessel trade is small in nature as compared to the bulk and dry cargo trade on the lakes, one major catastrophe caused by the lack of properly experienced pilot personnel would prove tremendously embarrassing to the opponents of this legislation as well as a possible reflection of dereliction of duty on those charged with the safeguarding of the American public.
>
> The reciprocal feature of the bill involving Canada provides the solution to any possible problem which may arise due to the geographic nature of the ports and channels of the seaway and the ports in the great lakes area.
> The significance of proper pilotage regulation can be best indicated by the fact that in practically every seaport in the world, a pilot native to that country is required by law on entering or leaving the port or navigating in canals, rivers or other areas which may be deemed dangerous.

In other words, if I may interject here, if a Canadian ship goes into foreign ports it is going to have to have a pilot in almost every case. But we are much more generous with our ports and our installations, at least in this government's view. Captain Bishop goes on to say:

I think the record of casualties involving vessels without the proper personnel will indicate the necessity for regulation of vessels covered by this proposed legislation.

In the interest of marine safety, it is essential that a pilot or other qualified officer direct and control vessels navigating on certain channels and rivers of the great lakes system. We further maintain that when a vessel is in the open areas of the great lakes, it would be sufficient if the pilot was on board subject to call to assume control and direct the navigation of the vessel.

One fact which we feel of equal importance is the feature of security which would be provided by the enactment of S-2096. Although the presence of an American or Canadian officer would not by any stretch of imagination stop any smuggling of contraband or narcotics into this country we feel it would be a factor which would at least slow it down, also the illegal entry of aliens could be more closely observed and reported to the proper authority.

The American officer at the present time must be screened by the United States coastguard for security and loyalty wherein a great deficiency exists on foreign flag vessels in this respect.

The safety factor for American shipping alone warrants the endorsement and support of this organization.

That statement is the United States pilots' position. In other words, they insist that safety and security are extremely important there. Our government evidently feel that those matters are not major considerations. I understand that the United States coastguard helped to prepare the bill which our government blocked. We must assume that the United States coastguard considered safety and security to be extremely important matters.

I know we must balance safety and security against cost. I should like the minister to tell us just what pilotage costs are in relation to the total costs of moving freight in the great lakes. One of the points I think the minister must recognize, if he knows anything about foreign ships, is that they work with practically skeleton crews compared with our own lake ships. There were foreign ships on the lakes this summer with crews as small as 10 or 11 men. Yet the minister is worried about the cost of pilotage of these ships, and evidently seems willing to present the point of view of this group of foreign ship owners that the high costs of pilotage are something about which we need to be deeply concerned.

There is one final point I wanted to make in connection with this matter. This is from a brief prepared by the great lakes pilot association, which states as follows:

The shipping federation argues that pilots are not needed on "the open waters" of the great lakes. Foreign ships propose to use—and they are now using—pilots in the Welland canal, the Detroit river and the St. Clair river. They state that they do not even wish to use pilots on lake Erie. The argument is completely fallacious. The so-called "open waters" can be and often are very dangerous. There are many hazards in shallow lake Erie.

On all the lakes fog or snow can and frequently do reduce visibility. In bad weather ships are required to give many signals. Foreign shipmasters persistently give the wrong signals, not being familiar with the inland shipping rules. One foreign master, on a voyage from Toronto to Kingston early in May, 1958, admitted that he did not even have a copy of the inland rules in his possession. He, however, had been wise enough to take on a pilot at Toronto (contrary to the instructions of the federation) and was able to proceed to Kingston in heavy fog without mishap.

I understand that the departmental officials are ready to go into consultation with their United States counterparts to thresh out legislation which I understand the government is considering bringing in next session, and which one would understand the United States congress would pass some time next year. Their session starts in January. Probably it would become law by the middle of next summer. In other words, in the next few months there is to be a threshing out of this whole problem on an interdepartmental basis between Canada and United States officials.

I should like to suggest to the minister that in these discussions his officials take a bit more broadminded look at the proposals the Americans have than he seems to have indicated in his reply in committee. I sincerely believe that the arguments of the pilots' association, as far as security and safety are concerned, are extremely important. The arguments that he put so strongly and the propaganda the ship owners put so strongly, namely this whole idea of "featherbunking" and "we are not having the United States union dictate our set-up in Canada", I think are rather emotional arguments that are advanced by people who do not have a very sound position.

I should like the minister to look into the matter personally just in order to see how powerful a factor the pilotage costs are in the total cost of materials being moved on this great lakes seaway. I should like to have some idea in terms both of percentage of the cost and also percentage of the cost in relation to wages that are paid on the ships that are moving the material.

In conclusion on this particular point may I say this. The United States coastguard has a rather remarkable reputation that has been improving, I would say, until it stands in many Americans' minds almost on a par with their practically worshipped United States marines. I do not know whether the United States coastguard is entitled to the high reputation it has, but if there is any merit at all in this high reputation then there must be a great deal of merit in the proposals which have been made and which were embodied in that United States bill which our government has blocked. I would like the discussions to take place with a recognition on the part of this government that these men are not fools and that they do not resent this legislation which is nothing more than the backing up of the pettifogging of some United States unions, but that there is much more to it than that.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): As I do not wish to prolong this discussion, I will omit the usual congratulations to the minister because I will congratulate him at a later date. I just wish to introduce a subject which is not a matter with which he is altogether unfamiliar and this also applies to his deputy minister. Rather than going over the same old ground again, I hope to present a solution to what has become a most difficult problem, not for any particular region but for the whole of Canada.

I refer to what we normally call the bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States on air transportation routes. Until recently we have been one of those countries interested in the opening of bilateral negotiations but we now find ourselves in a position, particularly with respect to the United States of America, which involves matters which are the concern of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of External Affairs. Until the past few months it did look as though Canada and the United States were going to be able to sit down at something less than a summit conference to discuss how the international agreement has been affected by changed circumstances since it was amended in 1951 and the fact that there are areas in both countries which are not receiving the type of services which the various communities involved require.

As an example, in the city from which I come there is absolutely no north-south connection and we know that various congressmen and senators in the United States have been more than interested in seeing that a particular airline should be granted rights by the United States administration to land in Calgary but that we have run up against an impasse. This impasse does not constitute something peculiar to the present administration because it dates back almost 10 years, but neither government has been able to move ahead in connection with this agreement because of certain differences between them.

This is the past history and today we find ourselves in the situation where the United States, just as recently as a month ago, indicated they were prepared to re-negotiate the bilateral agreement between the two countries which we had hoped would eventually lead to better and a greater number of routes for both countries. We now find that there is an objection raised by the United States with respect to the landing of transports carrying immigrants from Europe to Canada and this objection has prevented the discussion of the agreement at the top level.

I want to suggest to the minister a solution. First of all, in the event that the United States continues to insist that this question of immigrants should hold up the discussion of the bilateral agreement, I suggest this is a matter which could be referred to the cabinet committees recently set up by Prime Minister Diefenbaker and President Eisenhower or, failing that, that the subject matter could be discussed by the proposed committee to be established between the legislatures of the two countries. I am suggesting that the question of immigration and where these immigrants are to be picked up and whether or not they are to first land in the United States and from there journey to Canada, is not a matter which should affect an international air agreement such as this one. I say this particularly in view of the fact that this agreement can help to a very large extent to develop air routes between the two countries.

If that suggestion is not acceptable I believe that if the United States and Canada still cannot come to any agreement because of this problem then it is in the interests of Canada to permit unilateral discussions to take place. I believe that it does not perhaps require a formal agreement between our countries, but perhaps could be dealt with on a purely limited basis involving, for instance, an amendment to the charter to provide Canada with landing rights for a particular airline which I have mentioned, so that it may utilize the facilities in the city of Calgary which, as I have said, is completely without a north-south connection. I realize that this presents difficulties and I have now reduced it to a local rather than a national problem, but I am sure that those who have travelled across Canada will agree with me when I say that when one considers any Canadian city having a population of over a quarter of a million people, when one considers our citizens are not permitted the advantage of a direct route for flights to the United States, when one considers the centre of the petroleum industry which has one company alone making 235 flights a year for which it must operate its own airline, he has to realize the urgency which, although admittedly it has existed for six years, is becoming more extreme every day.

I am not speaking of any particular government but refer to the governments of both countries when I say it is time we should stop hiding behind what has really become a technicality which is preventing us from carrying on these discussions. When I have broached the subject to the minister or to his deputy I have received nothing but courtesy, but I am reaching the point where I believe the discussions are going to have to take place. These considerations preventing us from re-opening negotiations on this bilateral agreement must be dealt with entirely separately and the question of immigration particularly should be considered on its own merits. I do hope the minister will find an opportunity to reply to this suggestion.

Mr. McMillan: Living as I do at the top of the Niagara escarpment at the site of the twin locks of the Welland ship canal, I have had more to do with the Department of Transport than with any other department of government. Like the hon. member for Laurier I congratulate the minister on his appointment to one of the most important, and I think the most interesting, government portfolios, and I would also pay tribute to the officers and employees in his department who have always given to me and to my problems every consideration.

I think the minister is doing a very good job and I have never thought he was overstaffed except perhaps at one time, and that was during last March, when I thought at least in my area there were more employees on the Welland canal, or there seemed to be more employees there, than there were shovels or tools for them to use. However, that situation was soon corrected and I hope the minister will still take the same keen interest in the number of unemployed in my area as he showed at that time.

The ministers of transport have always taken great interest in the Welland ship canal. At the time of my first election the hon. member for Laurier, who was then minister of transport, came to my constituency and later the Hon. Mr. Marler was down there and at the last election the present minister showed up there.

Mr. Chevrier: But not for the same reason.

Mr. McMillan: Not for exactly the same reasons, at any rate. Some of his supporters told me that the present minister had a smile on his face when he told the people in Welland that they should elect a Conservative because the Conservatives always looked after their constituents better than did the Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: —and always paid more attention to everything that was going on in the house.

I would think that probably this is an invitation to members on this side at least to go over his estimates with a fine tooth comb on this particularly occasion and to give his department more than just passing attention. He also told an audience in Welland that if they would only elect a Tory candidate that he would tell him when he came here what he would do about the overhead crossings across the Welland canal. I know the minister is honest, and that he had no plans about the crossings over the canal, because on the orders of the day I have asked him about them since and he has admitted that he has had no communications from the minister of highways of Ontario about building bridges over the canal. When Premier Frost announced the planning of the construction of three toll bridges across the canal the minister seemed to be just as surprised as I was at that particular time. I hope the minister will not further try to dispense with me in this parliament. I have not much to say and very little criticism to make of his department.

I regret indeed to see the Department of Transport handing over the operation of the canal to the St. Lawrence seaway authority. These canals have always been operated with efficiency by the Department of Transport and I know that the employees of the Welland ship canal at least will not hail these changes with any degree of satisfaction. I hope that these efficient, trustworthy and loyal employees will be remembered and that they will continue to have their seniority and pension rights.

In connection with the approaches to the canal crossings at Welland, Port Colborne and other centres of population there is much annoyance and inconvenience caused by the holding up of traffic. This applies also on the Queen Elizabeth way. I hope the minister will give every co-operation to the department of highways of Ontario with respect to the problem of the congestion at these bridges and their approaches.

The agreement between this government and the municipalities of St. Catharines, Merritton and Thorold regarding the old Welland canal rehabilitation and clean-up has been finalized and I would like to ask the minister when this work will get under way. There are a good many unemployed in this area, and if the minister would only co-operate I could send him many men to help along with this work.

The hon. member for Port Arthur brought up the question of the dispute between the shipping federation of Canada and the great lakes pilots association over the use of pilots on ocean-going boats in our great lakes system. I have received many letters from people interested in this and I was glad to hear the minister say he would send somebody down to contact the pilots and other people who are interested. I note that the department has no present authority to require pilots on boats on the great lakes system and that it has informed the shipping federation that it could arrange, or had the right to arrange, for pilotage on its own behalf for ships of its members in the area from Port Weller to Sarnia. There was one statement that the department did not want to give the impression that this was a scheme approved by the department.

I should like to ask the minister if he has evolved any scheme to deal with this. I should also like to ask him if in his own words of July 1st it is his conviction and the conviction of the department that to impose pilotage fees upon shippers where pilots are not necessary—and I take it he thinks they are not necessary in the open lakes—amounts to imposing an extra and unnecessary burden on shipping charges generally which must be borne eventually by the consuming public. I should like to ask the minister, also, if the masters who are piloting ships of the shipping federation of Canada from Port Weller to Sarnia and back are fully qualified. I should further like to ask the minister if the communication system belonging to the Department of Transport on the Welland ship canal is being utilized by the ships to contact pilots other than those belonging to the great lakes pilots association.

The pilots of this association are well trained and responsible men and I understand that they hold certificates from the Department of Transport. I should like to see the Department of Transport try to compose the differences between these pilots, their association and the foreign ships.

I hope the department can arrange some satisfactory agreement because these men are well trained. They are experts and they have been off work most of the summer. I suppose we may expect some legislation at the next session of parliament if similar legislation goes through congress and I can say here that the pilots themselves think that this government is taking the side of the shipping federation of Canada. I do not know whether that is so or not; I am just saying that that is their impression.

There are two other questions I should like to ask the minister at this time. Will the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland ship canal be turned over to the St. Lawrence seaway authority by order in council, and has any action been taken in this regard. I should also like to ask a question in connection with tolls. I notice that the hon. member for Lincoln brought up the matter of tolls and said he was against tolls on the Welland canal. I have often spoken in this house on the same subject, expressing myself against tolls on the Welland ship canal. However, it seems likely that tolls will be applied. That is the last information I have been able to obtain. In these circumstances I should like to know if these tolls will be applied by order in council or if they will be brought before parliament so that we may have a chance to discuss them next year before the opening of navigation.

Mr. Chambers: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join other hon. members who have offered congratulations to the minister on the efficiency of his department and on the very fair attitude which his officials have taken with regard to questions of local interest which are brought before him.

I should like to say a few words this afternoon on the subject of some of the facilities maintained by the department in the Montreal area. I was very happy to hear the minister's statement this morning with regard to air conditioning at Montreal airport in reply to a question by the hon. member for Cartier. The minister will remember that I, along with others, spoke to him privately about this matter, and we are very glad to hear that further consideration is to be given to it. Of course, we hope that results will be favourable for the airport.

The Montreal research council, which is a body sponsored by McGill University, has made a very thorough investigation and brought out a report concerning the impact of the St. Lawrence seaway on the Montreal area. I am sure the minister and his officials have received copies of this report and no doubt have studied the recommendations made but I should like to place some of the recommendations on the record at this time because with the opening of the seaway which is imminent will come a time of crisis for the port of Montreal. Since Canada became an active trading nation the port of Montreal has been the most important port in the country and the effect of the seaway on this port will depend to a large extent on how well plans have been laid by the federal, provincial and civic governments. I do not wish to dwell at great length on the detail of how these recommendations were arrived at but I should like to emphasize to hon. members that the group that made the investigation was a large one and took a considerable amount of time in conducting the study. The recommendations of that body are well worth consideration by the department where they apply to the federal government.

I should like first to read from some of the general conclusions contained in the report:

> Stripped of qualifications and refinements, this study suggests that the seaway is likely to confer substantial economic benefits on the Montreal area's traffic in grain, coal and iron ore; that little or no change is to be expected in the volume of local petroleum traffic; that the port may well incur significant losses in general cargo business handled; and that the seaway stimulus to industrial location in Montreal is not likely to be of major proportions. In short, the local pattern for the future is a mixed one, precluding any simple estimate of net seaway effect.

It is pointed out in the paragraph above that there is an expectation of increased grain traffic and the department has already instituted some of the improvements in the grain facilities in Montreal that will be required. I should like now to turn to the subject of ore. The section on ore contains the following conclusion:

> The post-seaway outlook presents difficulties, however. Any substantial rise in local tonnage of imported ore will be contingent, to a considerable extent, on the expansion of Montreal's handling facilities. While existing dock space, water depth and storage capacity are generally quite adequate for future needs, this is not so in the case of the rate of discharge. And the problem here will be further accentuated when transshipment is made directly into upper lakers with a carrying capacity roughly equal to that of the ocean ore vessels. In short, the greatest priority attaches to those improvements which will increase the speed of turn-round of bulk carriers in Montreal harbour.

As I mentioned when reading the general conclusions, general cargo is the field in which Montreal must expect to lose. General cargo, of course, is that part of the port business that provides the greatest proportion of employment. The amount of general cargo we will lose will be dependent on the facilities available in the harbour. I should like to quote the conclusion contained in the report in regard to general cargo facilities:

> In common with most established ports, however, the bulk of Montreal's facilities were constructed many years ago, and consequently, under present-day conditions, considerable strain on these facilities is apparent. The trucking industry, for example, complains of serious traffic congestion on the harbour front, and of antiquated transit sheds which do not permit the most efficient handling of goods.

And further:

> It should be added that improvement of these general cargo facilities is currently under way in Montreal. For example, the federal government is building four transit sheds which will extend the port's shed floor area by nearly 300,000 square feet. However, there would appear to be a substantial need for further expansion and improvement of general cargo facilities in the Montreal area.

In common with other hon. members of the committee from the Montreal area I am extremely concerned that everything possible be done so that in those areas where Montreal may expect to be hurt by the opening of the seaway the impact shall be as minor as possible and therefore I wanted to read these recommendations into the record for the consideration of the minister and his officials.

I should like to add an additional thought in connection with traffic in the area of the Montreal harbour which is a very congested area. With the developing trend of shipping by truck rather than by railroad the port will be at a great disadvantage if there is not a great improvement in the traffic situation in and around the harbour so that trucking firms will be willing at reasonable rates to take on cargo from shipping in the harbour. I realize that for the most part this problem is a civic one. Nevertheless there is a considerable mileage of roads in that area under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. The suggestion has been made that a through-way established along the harbour front which would in part pass over the national harbours' board property would be of great advantage. I hope that in consultation with the civic authorities there the department will give sympathetic consideration to co-operation both with regard to allowing use of the department's land and with regard to financing with a view to providing a modern highway system in that area so that not only private cars but more particularly trucking facilities can get in and out of the harbour area quickly and with a minimum of delay.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, on August 15 last, following a report which appeared in the Star of August 13 and another report which appeared on August 14, I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) as to whether air conditioning would be provided at the new Dorval airport. I was very glad to hear the hon. minister this morning inform the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl) that he would take into serious consideration the representations made and that he would soon make another statement in the house, which, if I understood him well, would satisfy everybody. I am very happy to see that the minister has decided to reconsider his decision and I sincerely hope that he will see fit to go ahead with and put in air conditioning in that important building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to another subject with which I have often dealt in this house, that is the provision of adequate protection at level crossings throughout the country.

On June 28, 1955, parliament enacted an amendment to the Railway Act to allow the federal government to contribute 60 per cent of the cost of construction of adequate protection at level crossings, up to a maximum of $300,000. This year the federal government has decided to amend again this act and raise its contribution to 80 per cent, up to a maximum of $500,000. It is another step in the right direction.

When we think of the number of lives lost throughout the country because of inadequate protection at level crossings, we realize that the expenses necessary to ensure adequate protection at such crossings are insignificant. Taking into account the number of lives lost and the money spent each year to protect human lives, prevent accidents and safeguard the health of Canadians, I believe that the amounts spent for the protection of people at level crossings are not wasted.

If we think also about the difficult situation in which the municipalities have found themselves these last years on account of the expenses they incurred in connection with level crossings, we must realize that the federal government, as well as the provincial governments, must do something to help them.

Both during the last electoral campaign and the preceding one, a promise was made that the federal, provincial and municipal authorities would be brought into a conference with a view to helping our municipalities. That is another promise which the Conservative government has not yet fulfilled. However, the fact that this government intends to help the municipalities by paying 80 per cent of the cost of construction of means of protection at level crossings is something that will help the municipalities.

Following my election as member for Dollard and during the first session, I had the opportunity of pointing out here that there were in the constituency of Dollard, and more particularly in Ville St. Laurent, several railway crossings about which the federal government should do something in order to protect human lives. In some cases, I met with some success. I shall mention only one, because during the last election campaign, the official Conservative candidate in the constituency of Dollard, his worship mayor Cousineau—and I hope this will not be too displeasing to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, Mr. Pigeon—had promised, in his electoral program, as published in the newspaper l'Écho de Dollard:

My dear friends,

The day of reckoning is at hand. It will then be time to decide who is going to represent us in Ottawa, in the forthcoming administration.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

Briefly, I would favour, in addition to the articles of my party's platform, the following measures:

Among other things, Mr. Cousineau said:

Adequate protection at railway crossings in the constituency of Dollard.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I did not wait for the mayor of Ville St. Laurent, the Conservative candidate in the constituency of Dollard, to serve the people of my constituency and more particularly that of Ville St. Laurent. As I said a moment ago, at my first session here, I made representations to the then minister of transport, Mr. Chevrier, now member for Laurier, and in some cases I obtained the protection I was asking in regard to railway crossings.

In fact, on March 1, 1956, I received a letter from Mr. Henri A. Dore, chairman of the Property Owners' Association of Northeastern St. Laurent, in which he thanked me for the work I had done in order to obtain what I had asked, and I will quote only one passage:

Dear Sir,

The automatic signals at the railway crossing of Cote Vertu, in Ville St. Laurent, have been in operation since February 6 last, as you had forecast in your last letter.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not the Conservative candidate who was running in the last election, who obtained that protection at the Cote Vertu railway crossing; in fact, it was done even before he decided to be a parliamentary candidate.

Mr. Pigeon: If Mr. Cousineau had been elected, he would—

(Text):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, would you be kind enough to have the hon. gentleman keep his mouth shut? I know he likes to talk a great deal.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question he can address his request to the member who has the floor. If that member consents to answer such a question the hon. member may go ahead and do so, but I do not think other interruptions should be made while the hon. member for Dollard has the floor.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just interjected likes to rise all the time when others are speaking. I strongly suggest to him to speak after the others are through. I know how fond he is of taking the floor and we on this side, like hearing him; we, on the opposition side, are not the ones who will make trouble for him; his colleagues on the government side will take care of that.

Mr. Chairman, on several occasions I urged in this house the construction of an underpass on Decarie boulevard at the C.N.R. crossing, in Ville St. Laurent. Once again, I did not wait for any pressure from his worship mayor Cousineau, Conservative candidate at the last election, to make representations in this house to the then minister of transport (Mr. Chevrier) and, later on, to the hon. George Marler. This is confirmed by the fact that, on August 13, 1956, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton), then private member for Notre Dame de Grace, said, following representations I had made:

(Text):

Let me turn now to a few events of local interest in Montreal. I should like to join my voice to that of the hon. member for Dollard, when he gets around to it, in suggesting that there be an underpass constructed, and that very shortly, on Decarie boulevard north.

(Translation):

This is another proof, Mr. Chairman, that I did not wait until his worship, mayor Cousineau, who was Conservative candidate during the last election, would urge me to make some representations in this house and to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I constantly gave adequate attention to all railway crossings in Ville St. Laurent and, as I said, I particularly dealt with the underpass on Decarie boulevard, because I know that the city of St. Laurent alone would not have the necessary means to undertake such a project which would cost $600,000. Thanks to the steps we took on various occasions, we obtained in very clear terms the department's consent to build this underpass, and I know that the Board of Transport Commissioners are ready to issue an order in the matter.

The Board of Transport Commissioners, like the C.N.R., are ready to proceed with this underpass.

On February 12, 1957, the Board of Trans- the interested parties on the building of this port Commissioners met in Montreal to hear underpass. The town of St. Laurent, the Canadian National Railway, the Bell Telephone Company and the Montreal Transportation Commission were present at that meeting. All parties concerned were in favour of the project.

Mr. MacDougall, representing the Canadian National Railways, said, as can be read on page 452 of the record of that investigation, and I quote:

(Text):

We are anxious to do anything we can to accommodate the board and our friends in the city of St. Laurent. We have no wish to be obstructionists in the matter in any way at all.

(Translation):

On the other hand, Mr. Letourneau, representing the Montreal Transportation Commission, said, as can be seen on page 449 of the same report the following words:

(Text):

—we will do our utmost to help the board in every way we can or it can be suggested to us.

(Translation):

So as to implement the project under consideration. However, the same Mr. Letourneau, representing Montreal Transportation Commission, pointed out, as can be read on page 448 of the report:

(Text):

—but I am just wondering whether the town of St. Laurent can do that there because that is our private property. That street belongs to us. That is not public property but it belongs to us. We merely gave a right of servitude to the town of St. Laurent.

(Translation):

While the commissioners were ready to hear the case, the authorities of Ville St. Laurent found that the street on which it was proposed to build the underpass did not belong to the town but to the Montreal Transportation Commission. And to conclude the investigation, the chairman of the commission, at the time of the investigation, asked the parties concerned, that is the town of Ville St. Laurent and Montreal Transportation Commission to come to an agreement before proceeding, so as to allow the building of an underpass on Decarie boulevard at Ville St. Laurent.

But what happened then? The Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada and the Canadian National Railways were both anxious to go ahead with the project. They wrote on several occasions to the lawyer representing the authorities of Ville St. Laurent. They even wrote to his worship the mayor, Conservative candidate during the last election, asking him whether an attempt had been made to reach an agreement with the Montreal Transportation Commission, before a start could be made on the construction of that underpass on Decarie boulevard, which is urgently needed because of the great number of accidents which happened there.

Well, following the investigation made in Montreal, considerable correspondence was exchanged between the authorities concerned. I will quote but a few passages of that correspondence to show that, if that project has not been completed, it is the fault of mayor Cousineau who, during the last election campaign, promised that the matter of the underpass would at last be settled, although I had been working on it since 1953.

On May 17, 1957, the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada through its secretary, Mr. Rump, wrote to the solicitors of the municipality of St. Laurent.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I do not have this information here, but in that letter Mr. Rump asked the municipal authorities of St. Laurent whether an agreement had been reached between the Montreal Transportation Commission and the municipality of St. Laurent. The Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada received no answer to that letter.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I just found that letter, and another paragraph reads as follows:

During the discussion, the Montreal Tramways Company contended that they owned the street on which the petitioner—

That is the city of St. Laurent—

—plans to build a tunnel with easement allowing for the use of the street.

The case was then adjourned to allow the petitioner and the Montreal Tramways Company to reach an agreement as to property rights to the street—

Farther down, it reads:

The board now wishes to be informed of the progress concerning the matter involved, that is the matter of property rights to the land where it is planned to build the tunnel, or, in case an agreement has not been reached, what is the intention of the petitioner.

—that is the city of St. Laurent—

—concerning the expropriation procedure against the Montreal Tramways Company.

This case is still pending before the board, and it is desired to reach a final decision.

In a note sent to the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada, the chief engineer of the board, on December 16, 1957, said the following:

(Text):

It is evident from the C.N.R.'s letter of December 11 that they are anxious to proceed with the construction of a grade separation at the Decarie boulevard, but it is also evident that the town of St. Laurent is not moving fast on this proposal.

(Translation):

On February 17, 1958, Mr. MacDougall, representing the Canadian National Railways, addressed the following letter to the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners, Mr. Rump, and I quote:

(Text):

On December 11 last I wrote to you inquiring as to the reasons why the city of St. Laurent and the Montreal transport commission are taking so long to review the plans of the Decarie boulevard grade separation which I sent to them on October 28 last. We have not heard from either the city or the commision since that time.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

(Translation):

And later on, Mr. MacDougall added:

(Text):

With the approach of the spring construction season we feel that this matter, now that it has been raised by the city, should not be left to drag along but should be proceeded with to a conclusion. We have told the board that we are quite prepared to bear our fair share of the cost of this matter,—

(Translation):

On February 26, 1958, Mr. Rump, secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada, wrote again to the solicitors of the city of St. Laurent. This is what he said:

The board wants me to ask you whether you are now in a position to let us know if the municipality of Ville St. Laurent has made representations on this matter.

Plans for the proposed tunel on Decarie boulevard, prepared by the Canadian National Railways, as well as estimates of the cost of that tunnel, were forwarded to you on October 28, 1957. It seems that the municipality has had ample time to study those plans and to make its comments known to the board.

And on March 27, 1958, the secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada wrote again, this time to the mayor of Ville St. Laurent, Mr. Maurice Cousineau. Here is this letter, in full:

This case was heard at a commission hearing and the commission believes that the matter should be pursued to the point where an order could be given authorizing the construction of grade separations.

Therefore, the commission would appreciate any comments from your municipality in answer to its letters of May 17, 1957, and February 26, 1958, forwarded to the city solicitors. Herewith copy of those letters.

The Railway Act may be amended shortly in order to increase the appropriations of the level crossings fund up to a maximum of $15,000,000. When the act has been amended, the contributions from the fund will probably be higher.

Therefore, if the city gives its approval, the commission would be willing to consider issuing an order to authorize the construction of grade separations, the matters of costs allotment and payment of a subsidy from the level crossings fund being postponed to some later date, that is until the anticipated amendment has taken effect.

The commission would therefore appreciate any comments from the city of St. Laurent on this subject as soon as possible.

And now, on May 2, 1958, Mr. MacDougall wrote another letter to Mr. Rump, secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada. He said, among other things:

(Text):

Canadian National . . . would advise that we have no objection to the issuance of the order authorizing construction, reserving the question of apportionment of costs and the grant from the fund for future decision by the board.

A copy of this letter is being sent to the city of St. Laurent and the Montreal transportation commission.

(Translation):

Finally, on May 2, 1958, his worship, mayor Maurice Cousineau, Conservative candidate in the constituency of Dollard at the last federal election, decided at last to ask the secretary of the municipality, Mr. Lucien Toupin, to write to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I quote from the letter sent to Mr. Rump, secretary of the Board:

Dear Sir:

Following your letter addressed to his worship, mayor Maurice Cousineau, C.R., on March 27, 1958, the council, at its committee meeting on April 30, 1958, directed me to send you the following information:

1. The council approves the revised plans of the Canadian National Railways dated October 7, 1957, which provide for a clearance of at least 30 feet between the two concrete structures, as well as the estimates to the amount of $412,900.

2. The city of St. Laurent could not agree with the Montreal Transportation Commission which owns part of the street on that site. The M.T.C. will consent to the building of a tunnel only if the city of St. Laurent assumes the cost of replacing streetcars by buses. Together with the city of Montreal, the Metropolitan Commission of Montreal and Mount Royal, we are urging the M.T.C. to remove its car lines as soon as possible. According to the original plan the change was to have taken place only in 1960. Everything your commissioners could do in this respect would be greatly appreciated by the council of the city of St. Laurent.

One thing the mayor of Ville St. Laurent does not seem to know is that the federal government cannot interfere in municipal affairs, but that it is up to the city council to approach the Montreal Transportation Commission in order to settle the differences between this commission and the city of St. Laurent. As to the statement that the municipality of St. Laurent has communicated with the Montreal Transportation Commission, Mr. Letourneau, one of the commissioners, took it upon himself to answer in the following manner:

I have had no news from them since my letter of May 27, 1957. Under the circumstances, I cannot understand the contents of the second paragraph of the letter written by the council of Ville St. Laurent to the Transportation Commission on May 2, 1952.

In the third paragraph of his letter the clerk of the city of St. Laurent says the following:

The cost of that tunnel would be about $612,900, counting $412,900 for the structure, according to the estimates of the Canadian National Railways, and another amount of $200,000 for damages to property and changes to be made in public utilities (sewers, water mains, telephone, electricity, gas, etc.). Since the Canadian National Railways agree to pay only 15 per cent of the cost of the structure and your Commission 60 per cent, there would remain for Ville St. Laurent to pay approximately $303,225, which is much to high.

Fourthly, Ville St. Laurent would be prepared to contribute toward the construction of that tunnel a minimum of 20 per cent of the total cost which is estimated at $612,900.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the Minister of Transport's attention to this last paragraph of the letter from the municipal authorities of Ville St. Laurent, in which they say that they are prepared to pay 20 per cent of the total cost of the construction which is estimated at $612,900.

I do hope that the minister will again consider this question which is of great importance not only for the residents of Ville St. Laurent and the constituency of Dollard, but also to the residents of Montreal island, who use that railway when they go out vacationing in the Laurentians.

I wanted to make this clear in so far as what went on between the Montreal Transportation Commission, the municipal authorities of Ville St. Laurent and the Board of Transport Commissioners.

During the last election campaign, Mr. Maurice Cousineau acted in bad faith,—so far as we can make out from the record,—in order to mislead the people. He attempted to make them believe that I had done nothing to settle that important problem. Now, you can well realize, in the light of that correspondence as well as of the debates of the house, that I did everything possible to settle that question. If it is not yet settled, if the underpass has not been built, whose responsibility is it? It is no fault of the member for Dollard, or of the Board of Transport Commissioners or of the federal government, which are both prepared to do their part. The one responsible for this situation is none other than the mayor of Ville St. Laurent, Mr. Maurice Cousineau.

(Text):

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman, hon. members of this house will recall that throughout the single session of the 23rd parliament a resolution dealing with the greater use of Canadian ports stood in my name on the order paper of the house. It was repeated on the order paper again during this session and had reached that unlovely spot of heading the list when this house, in its wisdom, decided to forego further private members' resolutions for the balance of this session. During the debate in this house at the time we abandoned private members' resolutions the house leader assured us that I would have the opportunity to raise the matter during consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport.

This is, Mr. Chairman, not exactly the kind of debate that I should like to have, inasmuch as hon. members representing constituencies surrounding or adjacent to ports of the national harbours board in other parts of Canada had indicated to me that they would warmly support the resolution which stood in my name. I am therefore hopeful, Mr. Chairman, that an opportunity will present itself at the next session of parliament for a fuller consideration of what we believe to be an important resolution. In the circumstance in which my resolution has been on the order paper for two sessions and had reached the head of the list, I wish now to speak for only a few minutes.

In consequence of the circumstances surrounding the abandonment of my resolution again this session I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the committee will give unanimous consent to have printed in Hansard two tables prepared by the traffic branch of the national harbours board which I intended to use for purposes of debate on the resolution which was to have been supported by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and others. These two tables I wish to have printed in Hansard with the consent of the committee so that hon. members might, during the interval between this session and the next session, contemplate the problem which attracted our attention. I shall be grateful if I may have the unanimous consent of the committee, Mr. Chairman, for the reproduction in Hansard of these two charts, one of them dealing with exports of 19 selected groups of products to overseas countries via United States and Canadian ports, and the second dealing with total exports and imports through other than Canadian ports.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order. Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to have these two tables printed in Hansard?

Mr. Herridge: How many pages of Hansard will these tables take?

Mr. Morris: I should think about two pages; a double fold and perhaps part of a single one.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Morris: The tables are as follows:

I thank hon. members of the committee for their consideration of this request under the unusual circumstances existing and I shall not detain the minister in the consideration of his estimates for more than a few moments in order to draw attention to the principal items which I should like hon. members to consider before the next session when it would be my hope the resolution might appear again under private members' notices of motion.

Understandably we are most concerned with the impact of the resolution upon eastern Canadian ports. We have some of the finest harbours in North America which are well served by both inland and ocean transportation lines. Particularly the ports of Halifax and Saint John represent the investment of many millions of dollars of federal money. That investment was originally made and has continued to grow in order to provide all Canada with an outlet to the sea from her eastern shores. It is well known that this investment in large part lies fallow during the season of navigation in the St. Lawrence river. We are understandably concerned about the future impact of the St. Lawrence seaway upon our area. It would be ideal if we could find a way to utilize the facilities of the east coast throughout the year. Because of the use of the ports for only a brief period of each year, we feel it is all the more important that the ports on the Atlantic shore should be utilized to the fullest extent during the four or five months of every year in which they are Canada's only ice-free outlets to the Atlantic ocean. But instead of this full utilization, Mr. Chairman, what do we find? We find that vast quantities of cargo are both exported and imported via United States ports. We find that hundreds of millions of dollars in inland transportation charges, in labour costs and in port service charges flow across the border yearly instead of staying in this country where they could contribute to the prosperity of all our people.

We in the Atlantic provinces are disturbed at this tremendous flow of Canadian foreign trade through non-Canadian channels. We do not, however, urge that all such traffic go through Canadian ports. We realize that our neighbours to the south possess some of the finest ports in the world and that, for a number of reasons, some of our traffic probably will always use their installations. However, we insist and urge that companies which derive their prosperity from the Canadian market make a special effort to ship both their import and export requirements through our Canadian ports. We in the Atlantic provinces are realistic enough to realize that patriotic sentiment is not the only or the most important business factor under normal conditions.

I will make one or two suggestions in a moment's time. In the interval I should like to point out the significance of the Atlantic ports to the regional economy of the area. Every ship that enters or leaves any port on the eastern coast of Canada, of course, provides jobs and dollars for our people. This is true also in the United States. Hon. members of the committee may not be aware of the fact that the port of New York authority has estimated that that great port supports one out of four of the 13 million people living in the area. We have no similar statistics relating to Halifax and Saint John but I doubt whether, if we did have them, they would differ greatly from the New York statistics.

Our ports provide a multitude of jobs in a variety of fields. The men who are actively engaged in all sorts of businesses, from those engaged in the handling of cargo such as freight handlers, stevedores, even down to banks and mercantile companies, benefit from port business. We have estimated that in the port of Halifax and the port of Saint John the annual wages of longshoremen, freight handlers, watchmen and checkers alone come to about $10 million. By the economic principle of "free economic generation", by which every dollar earned by these workers generates or creates two dollars of additional income, hon. members will see that this represents at least thirty million very valuable dollars to us.

I should like to ask the members of the committee during the interval, and perhaps before we have an opportunity to discuss the matter in a full day's debate at the next session, whether they would consider, in relation to the tables prepared by the national harbours board which they have kindly consented to have printed in Hansard, these possibilities as corrective devices. We believe that the utilization of Canadian ports could be vastly increased. We believe that it may be possible at next month's commonwealth trade talks to suggest to other commonwealth countries whether it would not be possible to implement something paralleling the British preferential tariff to apply to goods brought into Canada from commonwealth countries through Canadian ports. We think that perhaps we might urge commonwealth countries to allow the British preferential tariff only on such of their imports from Canada as have been shipped out via a Canadian port. There is certainly no doubt that the recapture of part of the nearly $400 million a year of Canadian trade passing through United States ports instead of through Canadian ports would be of tremendous assistance not only to the ports of Halifax and Saint John and their people but to the entire economy of the Atlantic provinces and to that extent to the entire economy of the country.

Mr. Carter: I too, Mr. Chairman, should like to join with all those who have congratulated the minister on his appointment to the office, as this is the first appropriate occasion on which it could be done, and also on this first occasion of the presentation of his estimates before parliament.

I should like to thank the officials of his department for the very fine, sympathetic and courteous manner in which they have listened to all our problems and also for the consideration which has been given to improving the navigational aids and other facilities in my own riding and in my province generally.

Unfortunately, I did not have the privilege of being a member of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, by which committee the minister's estimates were discussed. I am sorry that the pressure of work has made it impossible for me to keep abreast of the evidence so I trust that the minister will bear with me if I raise a few questions as the various items of his estimates come before the committee.

There is probably no department of the federal government which touches the lives of the people of my province more intimately than does the Department of Transport. Newfoundland has seafaring traditions going back over 400 years; we are a seafaring people and a great part of the population spends a large part of their lives on the sea. In Newfoundland more than in any other province, the people are dependent upon the sea, either directly or indirectly, for their living. Furthermore, all of our necessities must be brought in by water because the majority of our population lives on the island of Newfoundland and practically everything we produce must be sold in world markets and therefore must be taken out by water. In no other province do the transportation costs play such a large part in the cost of living as they do in Newfoundland and for that reason we deplore the decline in our mercantile fleet.

There is need for special shipping to take care of the requirements of our province. This is the age of specialization and specialization must certainly be applied to Canadian shipping if we are to keep up with the times and to meet competition from other maritime countries. We need special ships to carry our fish particularly to the West Indies markets. There is a need for a special self-unloading ship to bring coal into our province and this is one way in which the minister and his department could kill three birds with one shot. He could certainly help the shipbuilding industries and the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia and at the same time by lowering the cost of coal help the people of Newfoundland if his department would consider providing assistance for the construction of a self-unloading coal carrier. Then we need small ships of from 200 to 300 tons to distribute our goods from the large centres to the smaller fishing settlements in our province and there is a need for special assistance to encourage the industry to provide these ships. I do hope the minister and his department will give some consideration to this matter.

I would also like the minister to do whatever can be done to remove the restrictions in order to permit the importation of used trawlers for our fishing industry which can be obtained in other countries at a fraction of the price that would have to pay for them in Canada. Either the government must subsidize our own shipbuilding industry or some other means must be found so that these ships which are essential for the development of the fishing industry may be obtained without the outlay of too great a capital expenditure.

At this juncture I should like to say a few words about the Newfoundland railway. The function of any railway is to integrate the economy of the area it serves. In Newfoundland it has two functions because Newfoundland can be divided into three separate economic sectors. There is the Avalon peninsula which is almost an island, as the hon. member for St. John's East pointed out this afternoon; there is the western end of Newfoundland; and, in between, we have the central part of the island. Each of these divisions has a separate economy and one function of the railway is to integrate these separate divisions into a single provincial economy. But since Newfoundland is a part of Canada, the railroad has another function.

Having integrated the three different portions of Newfoundland, it must also integrate the whole province into the economy of Canada. This could and should be done in such a way that no part of Newfoundland would be more than 24 hours away from the mainland. This cannot be done, however, as long as the railway follows its present route no matter how much money the government or the management of the C.N.R. are prepared to spend. I said a moment ago that in no other province do transportation costs play so large a part in the cost of living as they do in Newfoundland and to support this contention by way of illustration I should like to quote a paragraph from an article which I have just discovered in the Sunday Herald dated August 31, 1958. This article speaks about a decision of the A and P chain stores not to set up branches in Newfoundland and it goes on to explain why.

> The A and P officials said that on visiting Newfoundland they discovered that it was almost impossible to ship in perishable goods without the resultant loss being so large as to make the product too expensive to sell. They point out that fresh vegetables, for example, such as tomatoes, lettuce, arrive in their warehouses in Toronto or Montreal one day, and are shipped out direct to their own stores within a matter of 24 hours. In other words, all products are turned over in a 24-48 hour period.
> If they were involved in Newfoundland, they pointed out to the Sunday Herald, it could be seven days from the time the products were shipped from their Montreal warehouse to the time they were received in St. John's stores, and this delay alone would result in tremendously increased overhead.

That illustrates very clearly the handicap under which the people of Newfoundland have to labour because of the difficulties in their transportation system and it also illustrates the handicap that businessmen must undergo in comparison with their mainland counterparts. Since Newfoundland is an island, everything must go in by water and because we do not have a rail car ferry we are precluded from buying in carload lots. A firm in Halifax can buy a carload of bananas or oranges from Florida and have them shipped almost to the door but a load ordered in Newfoundland has to go to North Sydney where it must be broken down, put on a ship, taken off again, put into another narrow gauge car, transported to its destination and then unloaded again. Moreover, goods brought in from central Canada have to be packaged as though they were intended for export and not only do we have to bear the cost of extra handling but we also have to pay extra packaging costs as well. That is a tremendous handicap and it is one which must some day be removed because it certainly cannot be allowed to continue indefinitely. I realize that this is a long term project because you cannot build a railway overnight. It is probably a 10-year project, but the time to start thinking about it is now, and I hope the minister will begin to give consideration to these matters which I have outlined.

There is one other point to which I want to bring the minister's attention in connection with the adjustment of freight claims for losses incurred on goods being carried by the railroad. As I understand it, if goods which are being carried by rail, or on the ferry across the strait, which is part of the railway, should be lost in transit, any loss or damage that occurs is the subject of compensation by the railways. But the coastal steam service, which is not considered part of the railway, though it serves the same purpose as the railroad for those who are living around the coastline, is operated under a different system and a person to whom goods are consigned cannot enforce any claim should goods be lost in transit. I had a number of cases brought to my attention arising out of an accident in which a motor vessel ran aground in Placentia bay a year ago. As a result of that accident a large quantity of goods was damaged and when people sent in their claims to the claims division of the railway they were told: we cannot pay you anything because these ships are not part of the railway; they are just ordinary water carriers, and this was an act of God and the goods were carried subject to the conditions on the waybill. Therefore you have no claim. As a result, the people who live inland and who are served by the railway line are treated differently from those who live on the coast and who must depend on the coastal service which is the equivalent of the railway service in the coastal areas of Newfoundland. I hope the minister will look into this matter because it is important that the coastal boats should be considered part of the railway service in the same way as the ferry which crosses the gulf is considered to be.

My hon. friend from St. John's East referred to the William Carson this afternoon and I hope, as he does, that the minister will give us a full account of the recent trial runs. I hope, also, that he will find it possible to give us an exact breakdown of the cost of this ship, because so many stories have been told about the cost of this vessel that in the interest of telling the public the truth and setting the record straight I think this should be stated. If the minister cannot provide the figures at this moment perhaps he will be able to do so later on this evening, or tomorrow. I should like him to state exactly what the ship costs, what the terminals cost, what the harbour improvements cost and what the operating costs have been. My hon. friend from St. John's indicated that if the trial runs were not too successful this ship might be diverted to the ferry service between the mainland and Argentia.

I do not blame him for trying to get an improved service for his constituency. I would do the same thing if I were in his place. But I must point out to him—and I am sure the minister does not need to be reminded of this—that the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada expressly stated that this ship was built for service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques and for nowhere else. The minister and the government are bound by that agreement and by the terms of union to maintain that ship in that service and to see it is not diverted anywhere else.

With regard to Argentia as a terminal, I would disagree with the hon. member for St. John's East that it is suitable for this purpose. Perhaps it is suitable from the standpoint of harbour facilities and from the standpoint of the Canadian National Railways but it is certainly most unsuitable from the standpoint of public convenience because Argentia is a United States naval base. One can enter and leave there only with the permission of the United States authorities. I have personally had the experience many times. When I went to join one of the C.N.R. ships I had to secure a pass to enter through the gateway before I could board the ship. That is not a satisfactory state of affairs from the public standpoint. Furthermore, there is no place at Argentia to erect a waiting room, a snack bar or any kind of facility for people who have to wait either for the ship to arrive or for a train to take them back to St. John's. It may happen that in ten years' time the United States will not be interested in Argentia and perhaps the lease will be cancelled but as long as the lease is in force Argentia is not a suitable place from the public standpoint for a terminal of the C.N.R.

I have one or two minutes left at my disposal and I wish to refer to the reorganization of the department about which the minister spoke in his opening remarks. I could not gather from what he said just how far the reorganization had extended but if it has not already done so I hope it will extend down to the marine districts. It happens that part of the coast of Newfoundland and part or perhaps all of the coast of Labrador come under the agency of Prince Edward Island. That may be convenient for the department from the point of view of administration but it is not a convenient arrangement for the people of Newfoundland. We have our own marine district and that should comprise the whole coastline of Newfoundland.

The minister also referred to a reclassification of lightkeepers' salaries and I am happy to hear him make that announcement. I would urge him to also look into the salaries of assistant lightkeepers and see what could be done about having the latter brought under the civil service commission in the same way as lightkeepers are. At the present time there is a vast inequity between the salaries paid to lightkeepers and their assistants. As I pointed out to the Minister of Labour when the committee was discussing his estimates, the latter are paid on the basis of prevailing rates. I brought this to the attention of the Minister of Labour on August 16 and I would draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to what I said at that time. My remarks can be found at page 3867 of Hansard of that date. I do not wish to waste time repeating now what I said on that occasion.

However, I wish to remind the minister that the Department of Transport as well as the hydrographic service is a big sinner in this respect. I understand that the crews of the ships operated by his department at Halifax which do the same work and carry the same responsibility receive 11 per cent less pay than their counterparts in western parts of Quebec. In the interest of equity something should be done about this. As a national employer, I would suggest to the minister that a department of the federal government should follow the principle of equal pay for equal service regardless of where the service is performed. But if that is too wide a principle to adopt then I would point out there should certainly be no discrimination against people in the eastern provinces who do the same work and carry the same responsibility as people elsewhere and who should receive exactly the same pay. I urge the minister to consider the situation and correct these inequities.

Before taking my seat I should like to support the plea of the hon. member for St. John's East for an alternate airport. We all know that at the present time passenger and mail, freight and air cargo are held up for weeks at a time when the existing airport is fogbound. An alternate airport should be constructed in a suitable locality as convenient to St. John's as Torbay. With the increasing volume of freight traffic an alternate airport is necessary in any case. This is looking into the future, too, but I do wish to support the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East in that respect.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 53 of standing order 15, to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed with the consideration of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF TORONTO

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the house I wonder if I might be given permission to remove from its present location on the list of private bills Bill No. S-17, which is item No. 32 on the list of private bills. It is not contentious or controversial. It is simply an act to enable the board of trade of the city of Toronto to change its name to the metropolitan board of trade of the city of Toronto.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): I must oppose that motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale asks for leave to call item No. 32 by unanimous consent. Do I understand the hon. member for Halifax to say he does not consent?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Regretfully, I oppose the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale knows that taking this item now can be done only by unanimous consent.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I make an appeal to the hon. member for Halifax in this respect. I believe this matter was discussed briefly with all parties by the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill. Surely there has been ample time to discuss divorce bills in this house and I mean not only during the hour devoted to private bills. The purpose of Bill No. S-17 is simply to change the name of the board of trade of the city of Toronto to that of the metropolitan board of trade of the city of Toronto which is a matter that should take only a few minutes. We on this side of the house would welcome the opportunity to assist the hon. member in presenting his bill.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the house is agreed, except for the hon. member.

Mr. McCleave: If the house wishes to hear my reason I will be perfectly happy to give it.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is not a matter for debate. If the hon. member does not agree we will have to proceed in the ordinary way.

WILLIAM HARRISON TERRY

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-199, for the relief of William Harrison Terry—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something about this case. The bill has already been before the house on previous occasions and was recommitted to the private bills committee for the second time. There was no agreement on the bill in the committee and the division was very close.

This case gives an opportunity to members of parliament to scrutinize very closely what is wrong with the handling of divorces by parliament. In this instance there were five professional witnesses on the one side and on the other side the co-respondent who testified on his own behalf. Members of parliament are going to have to judge whether the five professional witnesses told the truth or whether the co-respondent spoke the truth. On the one hand, the co-respondent said that he definitely could not have been in such and such a place on such and such a date and on the other hand these professional witnesses gave testimony that he was.

Therefore it behooves parliament to make a decision whether these people are going to be allowed to continue to come before parliament and perjure themselves or whether we are going to do something about it. I think we should take a look at just what happens in these cases. The Senate deals with divorce bills first before a committee where a decision is made. The House of Commons has the right, and has exercised it in contested cases on many occasions, to hear the evidence again or part of the evidence or additional evidence. The House of Commons is not an appeal court and does not function as such but exercises its right to examine such bills as it would any other private bill and to go into all the implications.

One of the problems that immediately confronts the House of Commons committee is that it has no power to subpoena witnesses. When a lawyer can come before members of a committee of the House of Commons and say that he will not bring forward such and such a witness, while at the same time we have no right to subpoena witnesses, I think it is very foolish to ask parliament to rule on such cases when parliament has no right to ask for all the evidence. If the committee of the House of Commons is going to be able to act properly then we must have the right that any court has in this type of case, and that certainly involves the fundamental right to subpoena witnesses in order to make sure that the whole story is heard. If the House of Commons is going to continue to operate a divorce mill and wishes to be honest, fair and just in its dealings with the people involved in these cases we are at least going to have to have that right.

There are many other handicaps under which we operate that have been highlighted by the Terry case. We find that the House of Commons can grant a divorce for any reason at all. Adultery does not have to be proved. It does not even have to be intimated that adultery took place. We can grant a divorce if we wish because the husband did not like the looks of his wife or the colour of her hair. The committee is completely within its rights in granting a divorce on such grounds.

On the other hand, apparently certain grounds are set out for the direction of the Senate in the granting of divorces. The Senate committees have been constituted in such a way that they can call witnesses.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order. I think that I must ask the hon. member for Timiskaming to stick to the actual bill under consideration by the committee at this time. It appears to me that in his recent remarks he has been leaving the subject matter of the bill before the house. Would he kindly come back to the bill itself?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, while my remarks can be construed as being general they are also very pertinent to the Terry case because in that case the committee found that there were certain faults about which they had no power to do anything. The committee checked with the legal advisers of the House of Commons and found that it did not have the right to do the things to which I have referred.

Another factor that arose in this case has to do with the fact that when we hear evidence given on one side directly contradictory to evidence given by the other side we must have the right, which we did not have in this case, to investigate the circumstances surrounding that evidence. In this particular case the co-respondent testified that he assumed he had been in the Pembroke area. He assumed this because he had a gasoline statement indicating that on the day of the night in question he had purchased gasoline in Pembroke. I believe it was the evening of the tenth and the early hours of the morning of the eleventh that were in question. He established that it was his practice to go into an area such as Pembroke and spend two or three days there looking after his business. The man certainly is a very poor bookkeeper but I do not think that enters into the matter. He did have a receipt indicating that he was in the Pembroke area on the tenth and he did not say he did not have one that would indicate that he was there on the eleventh or twelfth.

The question boils down to the fact that his evidence is directly contradictory to the evidence given by the other witnesses in the case. They cannot all be right. Some of them must be wrong. Therefore I say that as a committee we are not functioning properly when we have not the right to send the R.C.M.P. to the Pembroke area to check the motels he may have stayed in—he also produced a motel receipt—and are not in a position to check the validity of his statements and the receipts which he produced. My experience is that when boards composed of laymen have been set up on a pseudo-legal basis they have checked immediately into receipts produced in evidence before them.

When somebody has a signed statement, then that statement is immediately checked. They have photostatic copies made and checked for identification purposes. They have machinery set up that will allow them to function in a proper manner. If the exchequer court had been used to hear these divorce cases, as some hon. members of my party have suggested in the past, then that court would have been able to check into the evidence in a legal manner.

On the other hand, and I think this should be borne in mind, the evidence of private detectives is always in question when given in court. Defence counsel, Mr. McDonald, made a reference to this fact and backed it up with legal references which nobody questioned. I think, therefore, that statement will stand. It was pointed out in those references that these people are paid to do a certain job. We should take a look at the five men who were involved in this case under the direction of legal counsel. Some of them were on the job for nearly six months, and when you consider that these detectives receive $30 a day and expenses you can see that a great deal of money was put into this case. It would appear to me that the lawyer had told these men to either get the evidence or he would put somebody else on the job.

These men made certain statements which I believe should be checked by the R.C.M.P., especially when we consider that their evidence is always in question. A simple example of this was the matter of the driveway. On numerous occasions these detectives said the driveway would hold three automobiles. On the other hand, the defence said that it would hold only two automobiles, three if they were small English cars or if one were a small European sports car. This is a matter which could have been checked very easily. I feel this committee should have had the R.C.M.P. go there and measure the driveway to find out who was lying and who was not.

If we are going to accept evidence on face value, then why do we not recommend to legal counsel that they take their case to the Senate and let them hear the case? They do not care what happens over there, except when defence counsel gets up and says, we are going to contest this. Then, when the case comes to the House of Commons, defence counsel make their pitch. If this is the type of thing with which we are going to have to contend, then it is going to mean we would be well advised to tell the defence lawyer who is coming here to bring any theatrical witness he wants. He can make any statement he wants and can make as big a farce out of this committee as he wishes. Nothing will happen.

We have not any right to commit these people for perjury. It has been said that we can ask the Ontario attorney general to investigate such a matter. According to my information it has happened once before, and the attorney general did exactly what I think he should have done. He said that he did not have time or it was not within his jurisdiction; he used some such method to by-pass it. He would have been very silly to bring a civil case from the province of Quebec into the Ontario courts and to have laid a perjury charge in connection with it.

Then we have the matter of the written evidence. We have here copies of the written evidence in these divorce cases in the Senate. This evidence was all taken down in the Senate, but when we heard this case we heard several witnesses that were not heard by the Senate. Now, the Senate has no desire to charge these people with perjury, and certainly they could not charge the people who did not give evidence before the Senate. We did not even have the evidence taken down because we were not constituted to do that. Would it not be a fine state of affairs if the private bills committee of the House of Commons were to go to the attorney general of Ontario and tell him that we would like to commit somebody for perjury on evidence which was not taken in a court of law and of which there is no transcript. I think it would be ridiculous to even suggest we would have the right to go to the Ontario court and ask for that type of charge.

These are some of the things that have plagued the House of Commons since it first started passing these divorce bills, and which have been highlighted in this Terry case. There are other things which have entered into this case. We have had a great deal of lobbying, and I understand that anyone who is going to lobby in the House of Commons must pay a fee and be registered as an official parliamentary agent. In many cases the people who have been doing the lobbying in this divorce case have been private citizens. I think we should have the right to prohibit these people from doing that type of lobbying. Other charges of intimidation have been made, and there are many other things that are better left unsaid, so I am not going to be put in the same category as the people who said them.

I think that we have in this bill probably all the fundamental problems that have faced the House of Commons since it started handling these divorce bills. I think it would not be out of order if I were to mention some of the things that could be done in the Terry case and in other cases to settle some of these problems. One of these things would be the establishment of a committee at the next session to be charged with the responsibility of doing something about getting divorce out of the House of Commons. The committee could probably consider the bill that was introduced by a C.C.F. member on a number of occasions—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order; I must take this opportunity to correct the speaker on something he said before, as well as the fact that he is off the bill again at the moment. He made a reference to the committee in the other place not caring about these particular cases, and I think that remark should be withdrawn. Any further remarks he makes on this bill should be confined to the bill itself.

Mr. Peters: When I referred to the Senate not caring about this bill, I meant that the Senate had already ruled on it and expressed satisfaction with the evidence. When I said that the Senate did not care about it, I meant the Senate had finally disposed of this bill. The House of Commons is now considering it. I cannot speak for the Senate, but I doubt if they are going to review this bill. If they are, I would be very happy to have them do so. The chairman of our committee could suggest that the bill be withdrawn from our committee and be re-committed to the Senate. I do not think the remarks I made were out of order in that respect.

With all due respect, I would think that when we say something is wrong with this bill we should be given the right to say something constructive, and which would be advantageous to the procedure of this house. We should do something constructive towards moving these cases out of the House of Commons and into the exchequer court. If I am out of order in saying that, I will not say any more about it.

I think the committee has been faced with another problem, and that is when the committee makes a decision there is no fundamental right of appeal from that decision for the people affected.

If there were a court of law in the province, then they would have the right of appeal. We have had an appeal in the Terry case and we may have some more before this bill is finally satisfactory to a number of people. We may have appeals but they are strange appeals. They are just appeals where somebody recommits the bill to the committee after it has already been handled and a decision has been made. This may be an appeal, but in my opinion it does not satisfy the fundamental requirements or ensure the consideration that an appeal court presided over by a judge or judicial authority would give that type of appeal. The committee has not the right of sitting on appeal. Once the bill is passed, then there is no appeal from that decision as there would be if these cases were handled in any other manner.

I should like to make another suggestion, Mr. Chairman. We are all well aware of the reason why the Terry case and other cases go through the House of Commons. The reason this matter was not dealt with in the province of Quebec is to be found—and this is true of the province of Newfoundland —in their dislike of and their objection to divorce cases. That may well be and we do not want to discuss the grounds for that. But before the bills in many cases come into the House of Commons as private bills, there is litigation in the courts of Quebec for maintenance of children, for legal separation from the wife and in many of these cases—as in this one, I am quite sure—the adultery charge has been made. I would suggest that this may be another angle that the committee could investigate, namely that when the courts of Quebec rule—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order. The hon. member has strayed away from the content of this bill on several occasions. I must ask him once and finally to confine his remarks to this bill or I shall be obliged to ask him to take his seat.

Mr. Peters: I am in agreement with the chairman of the committee who has said that we do not want to discuss personalities when we are discussing this bill. I am in agreement with him. I do not want to discuss personalities. I should like to make the statements general rather than refer to the persons concerned because I do not think such reference is fair. We are discussing this matter on a national basis and I do not think it is fair to the people concerned to discuss personalities. In many of these cases the defendant is going to be obliged to live in the community in which he or she is now living; and where children are involved, I do not like to see the children in the position of having had their names dragged through the mud, so to speak. But in cases where legal separation took place—and this is one of them—in my opinion it would have been much more advantageous if the courts in the province where the legal separation had taken place had proved or disproved the adultery charge at the same time they heard the rest of the case. Then we in the miscellaneous private bills committee would not be obliged to deal with this matter. The court would have already ruled on the legality of the adultery charge.

We are asked to make a decision on these adultery charges. The chairman would like me to refer to this case. This one is an especially good one, if you wish to refer to personalities in this respect. The adultery charge itself in a few words is based on the following circumstances. On the night in question a number of people, five to be exact, came to the house; four of them came to the front door and one went to the back door. They tried to break down the front door. We smile at this. I think that that is something that any judge, if he were ruling on this case, would take exception to. They tried to break down the door. We are asked to condone this type of action. They tried to break down the door. They had no search warrant. They rapped on the door or rang the bell. There is a great deal of doubt in the evidence whether it is a bell, a buzzer or what it is. They make some kind of noise with a button anyway. Five minutes go by and the second time they make this noise with a button they hear footsteps. The man at the back hears footsteps. While they tried to knock down the front door, in the committee we find that the back door was open. All they had to do was to walk in. They did not need to break down the door. Then there were some footsteps coming down the stairs and five people ran around to the front door; there was a fight and there was a woman inside, and she got into the act and they had to fight her off. Then they were going up and down stairs and nobody knew whether they turned on the lights or not and the witnesses, in my opinion, were either very stupid or very smart. I consider that probably some of them are too smart for their own good, and if we could prove some of these perjury charges against them, maybe that would cool them off.

Anyway, no one seems to know whether the lights were on or off, and nobody tells the same story. They picked up clothes and they searched all through these rooms; they searched through the clothes closets in the two bedrooms, and all this takes place in only two and a half minutes. In that time they visited all the clothes closets and they found lipstick on the pillow cases. The two pillows had been mussed up and then they went downstairs and gave a cursory glance around the place. Then they went down to the basement and it was dark, but they found someone in the basement, and he had his shirt open.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Frankly, I do not care if hon. members like it or not, this is what happened as I heard it in the committee.

An hon. Member: You know what happened; everyone knows what happened.

Mr. Peters: I do not want to talk about it, but we are in committee. We go down —they go down the stairs—

An hon. Member: We go down?

Mr. Peters: I have been taken up and down those stairs so many times in this particular case that if I say "we" it is because of that fact. Next we are in a bedroom which is normally occupied by the owner's son, and we have a great deal of difficulty in finding out what kind of a bed is there; whether this 36-inch bed was a camp cot or whether it is a single bed or three-quarter bed, but in any event we are in the bedroom which has been fixed up and probably sound-proofed to a certain extent, and there is a man there who said he has taken a couple of aspirin and had been lying down to relieve himself of a headache.
