STRIKERS RAID STEEL PLANT AT WHITNEY PIER

TROOPS ORDERED OUT.

Miners Threaten Strike Unless Soldiers Withdrawn.

Miners Threaten Strike

SYDNEY, July 2—The miners of Cape Breton will down tools at midnight Tuesday unless the provincial police and federal troops are on their way out of Sydney by that hour.

This ultimatum was adopted at a meeting of miners at Glace Bay yesterday, and ordered to be wired immediately to Premier W. H. MacKenzie King, Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, to Premier E. H. Armstrong, of Nova Scotia, and Attorney General W. J. O'Hearn.

Police Charge Mob

SYDNEY, July 2—Scores of rioters nursing damaged heads, five injured seriously enough to need medical attention, two in jail, and several automobiles wrecked, is the result of a night of excitement on Sunday on the coke oven side of the Sydney steel plants.

Mounted police charging on the mob, and tin-hatted soldiers advancing with fixed bayonets, lent a warlike and spectacular touch to the strenuous scenes which commenced at 8.30 o'clock and continued intermittently until midnight.

Troops Ordered To Sydney

OTTAWA, July 2—Troops have been ordered to Sydney from Halifax, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and London.

Raided Mills

SYDNEY, June 30—Mike Koval, a Russian, one of last night's raiders on the plant of the British Empire Steel Corporation, was struck over the head at an early hour and is still unconscious.

Five young men named Goss, MacDonald, English, Pike and Vokey were arrested, and John Macauly, foreman of the blast furnace department, was suffering from a severe mauling.

These were the outstanding results of raids and disturbances growing out of the local steel strike, which commenced about 8.30 last night and continued at an early hour this morning.

At 8 o'clock last night, a crowd estimated at more than one thousand men had assembled in Victoria Road, outside No. 4, gate of the steel plant. At 8.10 they swept forward carrying away the gate and a long section of the fence. Sweeping aside the guard on the gate the men surged into the nearby mills and spread out over the two hundred and seventy acres of the steel plant.

They were stopped long enough to say they were not out for sabotage but to take "scab" off the plant.

As the attack commenced signals were sounded on the steel works siren and the city police rushed to the spot in automobiles and entered the plant. Following a struggle the raiders were driven out.

At about 10.15 forty men made their way through number 5 gate into the mills. They were met by a party of men who had been working and during the melee that followed Kozel was struck over the head.

Macauley was hurt in the mix-up.

Later fifty men made their way in but were driven out. Five of the party were arrested.

The disturbance appeared to be over at 2.30 this morning.

Soldiers Fire Over Heads of Strikers

SYDNEY, July 2—The first shots of the Sydney steel strikers were heard on Saturday night at Whitney Pier, where things got so serious that the troops were called out, the Riot Act was read and a volley fired over the heads of the crowd, in the effort to induce it to disperse.

Even this show of military force seemed to have little effect, and it was not until a machine gun was placed in position, and at least an apparent effort was made to fire, that the crowd moved slowly off, and gave up its efforts for the night.

The trouble started about 8.30 in the evening opposite number 4 gate of the steel plant, guarded at the time by the steel company police, the troops having retired for rest to their quarters in the building some distance inside the property.

After a period of inactivity the crowd surged forward and broke down the gate and a section of the fence. At the same time volleys of stones smashed the windows in the gate house and struck several policemen, one large piece of slag fracturing officer John Macaulay's arm. While officers were using fists and clubs in the effort to stand off the crowd, the troops were summoned, and when a small detachment appeared under arms, Magistrate T. F. Routledge started to read the Riot Act.

The crowd transferred some of its attention to him and showered him with stones. Mr. Routledge, with difficulty finished reading the act, and ordered the soldiers to fire.

A volley was fired over the heads of the crowd, which gave back a little but did not seem seriously alarmed by the shooting, to judge from the shouts of derision which arose from all sides. By this time other troops had appeared, and as the crowd seemed to be getting ready to rush the gate a machine gun was placed in position.

Chief of Police, J. B. McCormack and men stopped traffic on Victoria Road, in order to keep the general public off the line of fire. However the crowd eventually began to disperse, and at 9.15 the street was reasonably clear and traffic was resumed.

During to-day the force of thirty-five mounted provincial police, disbanded some weeks ago, was re-assembled.

S. S. Advance Lost While Entering Halifax

HALIFAX, July 2—The steamer Advance, which went ashore on Shutfll Island while entering Halifax Harbor in a dense fog this morning, broke in two this afternoon. Her Sixty-five passengers and crew of forty-five were taken off by tugs.

The Advance struck at 4.30 o'clock, almost at high tide, and the passengers were taken off four hours later.

An hour afterwards, with the falling of the tide, the ship broke in two, and Edward Vokey, a waiter was knocked down and suffered injuries which necessitated his removal to hospital, while other members of the crew had narrow escapes.

The crew left the ship shortly afterwards. The entire vessel settled considerably, and at high tide tonight, was practically submerged.

More than twenty of the passengers were children, some of them infants in their mothers' arms, and there were a large number of women.

Fortunately these were carried to tugs in calm water prevailing an hour before the breaking of the ship which it is thought would have caused fatalities or severe injuries had a larger number of people been aboard.

Thirty-one of the passengers were of St. John's, Nfld., and will go forward by the Red Cross liner Rosalind, Tuesday.

The Advance was commanded by Capt. C. W. Nickerson who was making his first trip as master of her.

CHAPTER XVI.

Rankine's Plans

Rankine kept asking himself, as he paced the moonlit deck under the shimmer of the stars, whether he was furthering or thwarting destiny. He was longing to prove himself, but the primeval land shorn of all life's travesties and shams, where truth walks, stark and unashamed, appealed to him mightily. He felt within him the stir of elemental passions.

His meeting with Affery was strangely on a par with his meeting with Carlotta. He had sought neither, yet how mightily both had affected his destiny!"

Yet the saner, more practical vein in him assured him that, in declining Affery's offer of adventure, he had done well. The short cut to fortune is not always the best, or even the easiest in the long run.

When he got down to his stateroom an hour or more later he found Affery sound asleep in his bunk. A small, red tattered book he had been reading had fallen from his hand to the floor. When Rankine stooped to pick it up he observed, with a thrill, that it was a copy of the New Testament. He replaced it tenderly under Affery's pillow, without disturbing the deep and childlike slumbers of its possessor.

CHAPTER XVII

The Firt-nighters

"If there is nothing to keep you in London, why not come down to Cambridge and stay beside me for a few days?" said Judy in the train.

Carlotta shook her head, her eyes fixed on the dirty window-pane which the driving rain had blurred.

"But I'm not sure that it isn't your duty," persisted Judy. "They can't need you in Ayr as I do. They are doing without you quite well there I am sure! That is the dismal thing about life, my dear, every one of us can be done without, and the more indispensable we imagine ourselves the less it matters."

The singular note of bitterness in Judy's usually cheerful voice arrested Carlotta's attention somewhat painfully.

Judy undoubtedly had given up perhaps more than any of them, and had said least about it. Perhaps it was well that there were other people in the carriage, and that their conversation had, of necessity, to be conducted in detached and somewhat obscure whispers, such as would hardly be understood by any interested listeners. It effectually prevented, also, any display or overflow of emotional feeling to which both were naturally a prey at the moment.

There are few things more dismal than speeding the parting friend or kinsman at the ship's side with the full knowledge that the dividing seas will soon roll between.

"Don't say that, my dear," whispered Carlotta, permitting her eyes to express much that her voice dared not utter. "You, of all people! Why just think how many are depending upon you now! Me, for instance! I have only just found you. You are going to mean everything in my life."

Judy momentarily brightened. She was neither dull nor unreasonable, and already she had bestowed a romantic worship on the beautiful creature her brother had won. She leaned forward coaxingly.

"Listen, dear. You won't go home to-morrow?"

"Oh, no," answered Carlotta, with an odd tremour in her voice. "I have no intention of going home to-morrow. I can't possibly."

"Then we'll do a theatre to-night! Shall we?"

"Not possible," Carlotta reminded her. "We shan't be in until after nine o'clock."

"Well, a music hall, then; for something desperate I must do!"

"I'll go to the hotel with you. We will have a cosy supper together, and you'll go to bed early. Then I shall trot round to my boarding house and to ditto," said Carlotta cheerfully.

"Then to-morrow we shall go down quite early to Cambridge. It is lovely there in spring. And we shall spend our Sunday making Claud do the honors of his Alma Mater," suggested Judy.

Carlotta neither assented nor demurred, and they went back to their books and papers again, to which, however, they were inclined to give rather a detached attention.

The train, a non-stop one, ran them into Euston on the stroke of nine, and they drove by taxi—Carlotta's extravagance, against which Judy protested, because they had no luggage, she said, and it was wholly unnecessary.

As they sat at supper Carlotta said quite suddenly: "Judy, you won't go down to Cambridge to-morrow! I want you to write to Claud instead and ask him to come up quite early, so that he gets here in the afternoon some time."

"Why?" asked Judy, her eyes round with excitement. "I don't believe he could get away. You know he could not to-day."

"But Saturday is an off-day. I think he could manage it. Make it urgent."

"And what reason am I to give?"

Carlotta's colour was high, her eyes dangerously bright.

"I've got a box for the first night at a theatre. The play begins at 8.15. I am sure he could get up in time, and it necessary, he can go down by the Sunday train."

"A first night at a theatre! How frightfully interesting! Where did you get it, Carlotta? I suppose you know people in the theatrical world."

"Not many. Only this one man Graham Madox."

"Do you know Graham Madox? Actually know him, Carlotta! Why I saw him once in 'Macaire' at Glasgow! I thought him the finest actor I had ever seen, but that, of course, my experience has been limited to provincial companies, and very decent local chances in town."

"I know him quite well. I have known him a long time. He was a student at Cambridge when we lived there, and papa brought him to the house."

"How interesting! Is he a single man?" asked Judy, and then laughed consciously at her futile and apparently unsuitable remark.

"Yes. But what has that got to do with it?"

"It might have a lot if he happened to be in love with you, Carlotta," observed Judy steadily. "I shall have to watch you, my dear, and look after you for Alan, poor chap—poor, poor old chap!"

Judy's voice suddenly faltered, and Carlotta's hand went up to her own breast and seemed to lie there, with a quick, caressing touch.

"Don't be silly, Judy. If all the men in the world were in love with me—which heaven forbid—it would make no difference. They are but shadows to me. Well, if you have eaten enough, come to the reading room and write that note to Claud and I'll post it as I go out."

"You are very masterful!—and if Claude doesn't come?"

"I think he will if you make it urgent enough. Tell him it's a very important play—the chance of a lifetime, if you like," added Carlotta, with a little catching laugh.

"All right. I'm not saying I shan't like it. I've never been at a first night. It must be rather exciting; but I suppose with a great actor like Madox, there couldn't be much chance of a failure."

"Oh, yes, there might be a good deal!" answered Carlotta reflectively.

"I don't see it; for, of course, he makes very sure both of his play and his company."

"Ah, but both have been known to fail," said Carlotta as she rose.

"I haven't much in the way of evening clothes, Carlotta. Only a black rag," was Judy's next deliverance.

"In a box it doesn't matter. You can sit far back if you dislike," answered Carlotta carelessly. "Though I am quite sure you have the right thing."

"You will come out in something resplendent, I suppose?" observed Judy as she linked her hand through Carlotta's arm to walk up the long corridor used as a lounge by the hotel guests.

"I shan't be with you, dear. I've got something else to do," said Carlotta guardedly.

"Oh, how disappointing! How very disappointing! It won't be the same at all! I don't believe I will write, after all! I'd much rather go down to Cambridge in the morning."

"Afterwards, dear. But it is very important to me that you should see this play. I'm interested in it. I want your opinion—yours and Claud's—so come. Don't let us have any more fuss about it."

Judy did as she was bid; for the disappointed, there seemed to be no particular reason why she should not do so.

Carlotta carried the letter out with her, and posted it at the nearest pillar box, and then walked home to Brunswick Square through the gaily lighted streets.

There was no rehearsal on the morrow, so she had come to the end of what had been a difficult task in the last week—explaining her protracted afternoon engagements to a man who wanted to take up every moment of her time!

Over and over again she had been on the point of telling him, but the fear that he would disapprove, or that it would cause him to have any misgiving or anxiety about her in his exile restrained her.

But now Judy must know! And of all the crowded house assembled to witness Graham Madox's new triumph or defeat—since the one might just as easily overwhelm him as the other—there were only two for whom Carlotta played.

WOMEN FROM FORTY TO FIFTY

Will Be Interested in Mrs. Thompson's Recovery by Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winnipeg, Man.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me good in every way. I was very weak and run-down and had certair troubles that women of my age are likely to have. I did not like to go to the doctor so I took the Vegetable Compound and am still taking it right along. I recommend it to my friends and to any one I know who is not feeling well."—Mrs. THOMPSON, 303 Lizzie St., Winnipeg, Man.

When women who are between the ages of forty-five and fifty-five are beset with such annoying symptoms as nervousness, irritability, melancholia and heat flashes, which produce headaches, dizziness, or a sense of suffocation, they should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is especially adapted to help women through this crisis. It is prepared from roots and herbs and contains no harmful drugs or narcotics.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from roots and herbs, has for forty years proved its value in such cases. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who suffer should write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario, for a free copy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women." C

GOVERNOR UNVEILS WESLEY MEMORIAL

Immense Congregation Attends Solemn and Impressive Ceremony.

The impressive ceremony of the unveiling of the beautiful memorial at Wesley Church, erected to the memory of Wesley's fallen heroes, took place on Sunday evening.

Promptly at 6.30 His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Lady Allardyce, Miss Allardyce, and attended by Captain Major Goodfellow, entered the church and was received by the pastor and officials and escorted to the special seats, while the organ played the National Anthem. In the church were also the Prime Minister and Lady Squires, accompanied by Colonel Rendell, Chief Staff Officer, His Worship Mayor Cook, Inspector General and Mrs. Hutchings, Major Clare Marsh, CMG., Sgt. Roberts, V.C., representatives of the G.W.V.A., Girls' Lads' Brigade, and Newfoundland Highlanders, specially representatives from the Legislature, members of the House of Assembly, Councillors and a goodly number of kin and relatives of those who were being remembered.

Within the rostrum were Rev. J. G. Joyce, B.A., S.T.B., pastor of the church who was in charge of the service, Rev. Frank Langford, B.A., one of the chief secretaries of the Methodist Church of Canada and Newfoundland and the special preacher for the evening, Rev. W. J. Morris, ex-President of the Conference, Rev. Dr. Crummey, and Revs. Chas. Lench and W. J. Rogers, former pastors of the church, the latter during a part of the war period.

At the organ was Mr. J. C. Pratt, who with his choir rendered splendid service and added to the impressiveness of the ceremony. The guard of honour composed of two sailor lads with fixed bayonets, took their position in front of the tablet and the service commenced. The Doxology was sung and the pastor repeated a prayer of invocation, followed by the Lord's Prayer, in which the whole congregation joined. Then the grand old hymn, "O God Our Help in Ages Past" was sung sung with much zest, after which the first Scripture lesson was read responsively, Rev. W. J. Rogers leading.

Rev. Charles Lench read as a second lesson the 22nd chapter of the Book of Revelation. Then the hymn "For all the Saints who From Their Labors Rest" was feelingly sung and Rev. Dr. Crummey read a prayer of consecration.

Following the prayer the choir rendered the well-known anthem, "What are These Arayed in White" by Stainer, after which the Guard of Honor, who had been standing at ease, came to attention, the congregation stood and His Excellency the Governor stepped forward to the tablet which was draped by the Union Jack, the flag under which the boys whose names he was shortly to read had served, and with a few choice and appropriate words, pulled away the covering and laid bare the white marble tablet and therefrom read the inscription and names as follows:—

ROLL OF HONOUR

The names of the men connected with this church who made the Supreme Sacrifice in the Great War are here recorded to be forever remembered.

Duncan Atwill
James Atwill
Leonard Barrett
Norman Coultas
John Fry
Frederick Gard
Eric S. Martin
Bernard Regan
Albert Taylor
Herbert Taylor
Herbert Taylor

Immediately after the unveiling the ex-president of the Conference, Rev. W. J. Morris, recited the prayer of dedication, following which the organist played the Dead March in Saul, the congregation standing with bowed heads. During the rendering of the Dead March in Saul, wreaths were placed at the base of the Tablet by Hon. Sir Richard Squires, Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government of Newfoundland, Hon. T. Cook, Mayor of St. John's, on behalf of the City; by Lieut. Grace of the G.W.V.A., on behalf of his Association, by Mr. A. W. Martin of behalf of Wesley Church congregation by Mr. Ernest Nicholle on behalf of Wesley Adult Bible Class, to which all the deceased beonged, and by the relatives of the men whose names are recorded on the Tablet. This solemn ceremony ended with the sounding of the Last Post.

The offering was then taken up and the offertory prayer recited by the pastor, after which the hymn "Oh, Valiant Hearts, Who to Your Glory Came" was splindidly rendered by the congregation. Then came the sermon; the peacher being Rev. Frank Langford, B. A., of Toronto.

Prefacing his adress with an expression of regret that he could not speak on this solemn and patriotic occasion as a citizen of Newfoundland who personally knew our soldier and sailor boys, yet after all he said, we were met to do honor to the heroic dead who with ourselves were all members of one great British Commonwealth. He announced his text, Hebrews, 1st Chapter, verses 10 and 16: "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. But now they desire a better country that is an heavenly."

We regret that pressure on our space prevents us from giving an extended reference to the inspiring address rendered by Rev. Langford.

Thousands Participate in Memorial Ceremonies on Sunday, July First

Hundreds of Beautiful Wreaths Are Laid on Soldiers' Monument.

Memorial Day which was observed on Sunday, July 1st, was marked by large gatherings than were witnessed on previous years.

Following the services at the City Churches thousands gathered in every available space till the whole Square, including Garrison Hill, Queen's Rd., and Cathedral Hill down to Bond St., was thronged.

At noon the Colour Party moved to the allotted position and were received with the general salute. The colours were carried by Capt. Eric Chafe, M.C., and Capt. J. Snow.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce, Miss Allardyce, accompanied by Major Wilberforce-Bell and Captain Goodfellow, arrived immediately afterwards, and were met by Capt. A. B. Baird, President, Capt. G. J. Whitty, M.C., Secretary and the Exective officers of the G.W.V.A. His Excellency was received with the General Salute. The Prime Minister and Lady Squires, and the Mayor, Hon Tasker Cook, were also present and were escorted to their positions directly in front of the monument by the officials in charge.

Then the impressive but simple service commenced. The gathered throng lead by pupils from the city schools and the church choirs, accompanied by the M. G. Band joining in the singing of the grand old hymn, "O God Our Help in Ages Past". Last year the singing was the one weakness of the service; Sunday, thanks to the leadership of Prof. Hutton, it was particularly good, and one of the touching features of the programme.

At the conclusion of the hymn the C. L. B. Band very beautifully rendered the "Dead March in Saul." Then the wreaths were reverently placed at the base of the monument. The Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, attended by the Chief Staff Officer, Lt.-Col. W. F. Rendell, laid on the wreath from the Government of Nfld. Then into the enclosure escorted by Capt. Whitty, came Mrs. Frank Jackman, who as last year carried the wreath from the bereaved mothers. Mrs. Jackman had two sons make the Supreme Sacrifice and it was very fitting that one who had suffered so greatly should present the little token from the mourning mothers of our gallant dead. Next representatives of the Societies and organizations placed their wreaths, and the relatives and friends of those who fell and citizens generally followed. This was one of the most solemn featrues of the ceremony. Here a mother or father came forward, there a young widow, here a sister, there a child to place their floral tribute to the memory of some dear one who sleeps amidst the poppy covered fields in Flanders on the slopes of Gallopli, or in the mighty deep. A very beautiful wreath was presented by French Consul, Monsieur E. S. DeBeauregard, in person, while a wreath from the 16th Irish Division, represented by three of our officers, who served with that famed division, was also placed by the mounment, whose base was literally covered with a profusion of wreaths and floral tokens. The firing party in charge of C.M.S., J. Andrews, then fired three volleys, the military coming to the "Present." After this the two minutes reverent silence in honour of our fallen wae observed; the vast throng remaining in silent meditation during that time; and then in the distance sounded the Soul stirring strains of the "Last Post." This concluded the first part of the ceremony.

THE GOVERNOR'S ADDRESS.

His Excellency the Governor then delivered the panegyric, a platform being especially provided, from which His Excellency in clear voice spoke as follows:—

I feel greatly honoured at being asked to address you on Commemoration Day, and to be privileged to share with you the pride and your heartache. On this impressive and solemn anniversary our thoughts go back to that ever-memorable fourth of August, 1914, when our dear Motherland went to war for what the Prussian Chancellor termed ""a scrap of paper." But that so-called "scrap of paper" meant every thing to us; it involved alike our Honour and our Liberty. We had pledged ourselves to maintain the neutrality of Belgium, a pledge which the Germans, although a party to the same Treaty, wantonly violated. This was the reason why Great Britain declared war. Germany had cast off the mask under which she had feigned and dissembled for years, and now displayed herself in her true colours. Decade after decade she had secretly intrigued and worked for "Der Tag" and "Deutschland uber alles" and she now threw down the gauntlet of militarism and materialism.

The news of the declaration of war was immediately flashed across the seas and the Daughter Nations and peoples of every hue and colour throughout our vast Empire recognized that the Motherland, notwithstanding her unpreparedness for a continental war, had no alternative but to accept Germany's challenge in the cause of humanity, aye, and of Christianity. Does not the very thought of her action fill us with pride and make the pulse of each one of us beat faster, and the blood to tingle as it rushes through our veins? Hundreds of thousands of Britain's sons, the cream of her manhood both in the Motherland and in every part of her world-wide Empire at once volunteered for active service. And here in our Old and Ancient Colony of Newfoundland and its Dependencies, where its people are second to none in pride of race and loyalty to the Monarchy, the clarion cry, "For God, King and Country" echoed and re-echoed through town, outport, and hamlet to arms and rallied round the Flag and donned His Majesty's uniform. Their numbers ran into thousands, and they proceeded overseas, and many

"Nobly striving, nobly fell, that we might live."

These men, assuredly had faith, faith that in making the Supreme Sacrifice they were performing the highest duty that is given to men to perform, and this faith acted as a torch and threw across the dark abyss of the unknown valley rays of both light and hope. Light to guide them to that region w here neither sorrow nor disappointment are known having done their duty, and Hope that the cause for which they had fought and voluntarily and willingly laid down their lives would prevail, and that they would again see those they so dearly loved.

Be assured of this, you who are here to-day, and you also throughout Newfoundland and Labrador who gave your boys to the great fight for right, that wheresoever your dear ones peacefully repose, whether in Gallipoli, or in Flanders Fields, or at the bottom of the deep, they are not lost. True, they may not be with us in the flesh, but they are nevertheless with us. Their influence cannot die. It is indestructible. Their heroism and their valour cannot perish, for they are heaven-sent and imperishable. Neither can their example be forgotten so long as our English tongue is spoken. Your loved ones have entered into the deathless life of ever-increasing possibilities. This being so it is alike or duty and our privilege to maintain in our everyday lives that high standard of duty which they set us. By doing this we shall be honouring in the best way possible the memory if those who gave their all on our account. We must likewise hand down to our children and our children's children, as their most precious treasure and their most powerful inspiration, that same spirit of self-secrifice which was possessed by all those whose memory we commemorate to-day, who, when duty called, fearlessly and unhesitatingly obeyed the summons.

"Heed not the dropping flags nor bugle calls,
His soul has long passed further than our praise,
He turned away from all that makes life fond,
To face, brave heart, the inscrutable Beyond.
All men within themselves have this desire
To rise above the glamor of the hour;
To pledge themselves to sacrificial fire.
And leave to all Eternity a power

Weep not for such a man,
No darkened sun goes down asiant his tomb.
He rests within the ever-wonderous plan
That birth's its virtues from a nation's tomb.
His epitaph is writ where writing cannot lie;
The man who died—the man who'll never die."

At the conclusion of His Excellency's address the Hallelujah Chorus was rendered by the C.C.C. Band, and the Memorial Service for 1923 was over. The War Veterans, Naval Guard and Brigades reformed, and marched to Government House where the Colours were deposited, after which they returned to their respective armouries. During the day messages were received from Capt. J. E. J. Fox, London, and from the ex-President of the Sergeants' Mess, H. R. Peckham at Boston. The whole ceremony was cannied out in a most efficient manner, the arrangements being perfect in every detail.

The Gulf Stream

Weather experts are accounting for the recent frequent changes in temperature by ascribint them to the Gulf Stream.

For centuries the Gulf Stream has been blamed for every fresh development of climate, when, as a matter of fact, the slight seasonal changes that take place in its position are not directly responsible for these vagaries.

Its flows does not reach within two thousand miles of any part of Europe, so that we must search for another cause on whose broad back to lay the responsibilities of June snowstorms and February heat-waves.

The Equatorial current, coming into contact with South America, splits into two, one part turning along the Brazilian coast and the other turning north to form the Gulf Stream.

Contrary to the stream making a complete circuit of the Gulf of Mexico, as was formerly supposed, only a small amount of water is drawn from this gulf, and the stream, beginning in the Strait of Florida, sweeps northwards, gathering velocity until it reaches the coast of Newfoundland, where its speed decreases gradually until it becomes merely a wind drift.

Winds may disturb the surface of the Gulf Stream. Favourable winds may accelerate its flow and adverse ones retard it, while a strong southerly or south-easterly wind may blow surface water out of its course.

The prevailing winds of Western Europe are from the west and southwest. Coming from the ocean they contain a lot of moisture, which is chilled by their contact with northerly latitudes, and drops in the form of rain or snow even before reaching the land.

The Land We Live In

Signs are not wanting that people of good sense who have more or less identified themselves with political thought in the House of Assembly and outside of it, are settling down to the solid conviction that, if they are to be of any service to the country of their birth or adoption, unproductive "obstruction" must cease, and co-operative or sympathetic criticism with a view to help in time of need, must henceforth be a principle of action. If public men do not see the national necessity of acting along this viewpoint, it will mean to them a great slice out of their public life and usefulness, public loss and personal deterioration. We are glad therefore that signs of better counsel are already evident.

We have not yet passed through the dark days. It is our conviction that we could not expect the times of comparative comfort which the country occasionally enjoyed. They were not based upon solid and permanent foundations. It is clear that the time has now come for men of foresight, iniative, good judgment, and constructive ability to devise means whereby our present population may be retained and increased, and those who are away recalled. We have the country "and we have the goods." Normal and healthy development, is what we need.

We must look further ahead than the Humber with all its magnificent and latent possibilities. We have the land and we have the ocean. Geographically our impact upon Newfoundland has been only skin deep. The country has been built up on the fringes of the unknown and undeveloped wealth of our fisheries.

It is becoming more and more evident that a source of wealth such as we have in the Newfoundland and Labrador fisheries, ought to afford, much more remuneration to those who are thrown out of employment as soon as the short fishing season is over. Our statesmen and business men are aware of this great labour asset and of the waste and loss of its being unproperly handled, and neglected.

We are tired of hearing our fishermen put off with the excuse that the people who buy the fish on the other side are "in rags" and "too poor to pay a decent price" for it. It is only half the truth. The real truth is that our who system is unbusinesslike and unsound, and there is a natural market for our fish on this side of the water which we are not using. As long as our principal market is amongst people who are satisfied to eat "salt cod" sold in bulk, there is no great future for the Newfoundland fishermen. We must cater now for other markets on this side, which may demand a different cure of fish.

Fish is good food. It is worth preparing well. We must make it as familiar and as welcomed on the breakfast or dinner table, as grape-fruit or marmalade, or the bread we eat. If we do this, and if the necessary energy and foresight were applied to the solution of our fishery problem, we could look the future fearlessly in the face.

We rejoice in the inauguration of the great Humber project. We are not unmindful of the men to whose foresight and resourcefulness we are indebted for its successful inauguration. Nor are we forgetful of the many minor ways which might be employed to make life worth living in Newfoundland, especially on the West or Gulf Coast by agricultural development; but the hope of the East Coast lies more largely in the wonderful fisheries, and we invite thoughtful men to think about it, and get together and do something.

The Sydney Strike

Reports of the Sydney strike would seem to indicate that the situation has been most serious there for the past forty-eight hours, and there does not appear to be any hope that the worst has passed.

The threat of further strikes by Cape Breton miners, unless the Provincial police and Federal troops rushed to Sydney from Halifax and elsewhere, are withdrawn, is sufficient to show how high the feeling runs. Any further disturbances and casualties may develop a condition of affairs most deplorable and unprecedented.

Apart from the fact that a prolonged and general strike in Sydney will affect this country adversely, there is the matter of our countrymen who have been earning in the mines the wherewithal to keep their families here. Considerable numbers from all sections of this country have been working at Sydney; and if they are obliged to leave work, it will mean great personal loss to them and their families, as it will not be easy to provide work here when there is even now such a pressing demand.

We understand that already messages have been received, advising that some men are desirous to return home owing to the strike.

While it is not advisable to give an opinion as to the justification or otherwise of the miners' strike, it must be felt that the Sydney situation is a most regrettable and disturbing thing, the present results of which even have demonstrated the wisdom of a strong endeavour on the part of Labour and Capital to work together for the common good.

There is another lesson.

It is that Newfoundland should make all haste to develop its latent resources, in order to take care of its own workingmen and make them as independent as possible of circumstances arising outside. And to this end, all sections of political thought should work in co-operation.

Splendid Sermons Preached and Brigades Attend in Full Strength

AT THE C. of E. CATHEDRAL

The Church of England party, consisting of veterans, guides, C. L. B. etc paraded to the Cathedral yesterday morning. The service there was Holy Communion. His Lordship, Bishop White was the celebrant and he was assited by Rev. Canon Field and Rev. J. Brinton. The congregation included His Excellency the Governor and suite. The preacher was the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland, and his subject, "Lest We Forget." The sermon follows:—

THE BISHOP'S SERMON

A correspondent to one of our daily papers a few days ago asked whether we are not in danger of gradually forgetting what we owe to the men who fell in the Great War, and he expressed the fear that our annual Commemoration Day is already showing signs of a wanting power to draw out the sympathic response which such a day demands.

I do not presume to say what grounds exist for such a fear, but should there be any real reason for concluding that time as it passes is dimming our sense of gratitude, of admiration, or of respect for the men who died, it would, I think, indicate a failure on our part to appreciate the greatness of our debt and that we really never estimated aright the sacrifices made on our behalf.

It is evident, I think, that such a day of remembrance as this can only retain a full measure of observance so long as we continue to believe intensely that by their sacrifice the men who fell saved something worth while for us and for the world. It goes without saying that disappointment and disillusionment are being experienced as men and women compare the results they were led to hope for with what has been achieved. No one would be bold enough to say that many of the great evils which it was thought the war would terminate have in fact been removed. Some would urge with good reason that they have been mutilated.

On the other hand the war has brought certain results which may eventually have far reaching effects for the good of the world. For instance war itself, as a means of settling international quarrels, would find few supporters amongst civilized people to-day. It has been seen in its hideousness and ugliness, and men hate the very name of war as never before.

And again, although the war divided nations and led them to seek each other's destruction it has taught them that international hatred cuts at the root of even commercial prosperiy, and that if one nation suffer the other nations suffer with it. If proof of this were needed we have it in our own country, whose chief industry is largely paralysed because of the poverty of other nations with which we did our trade.

Now if these two effects of the Great War are in any degree permanent they will produce untold blessings in process of time—blessings to generations to come which may be in some very true sense a compensation for their cost.

There were fruits of the war which men hoped for apparently in vain. Let this be admitted. Perhaps war, and especially modern war, cannot produce those fruits. It may very well be that we had not judged aright. Perhaps such things as the world needed and which many of us fondly imagined would be produced by the war can never come that way at all. But I do believe that we have every reason for maintaining the conviction that the voluntary sacrifices made by thousands of the flower of our manhood brought an enrichment of life which was immediate and permanent. Men rose above the thought of personal ease and selfish comfort, endured pain willingly, and drank to the bitter dregs of suffering and death, and thus gave to the world examples of noble self-surrender to the call of duty as they saw it.

Men point to the economic loss involved by the withdrawal of so many breadwinners from all ranks of life, and this loss was and is beyond computation. The world must necessarily be poorer for a generation by reason of it—That is one point of view. There is without question another. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." So said Christ who knew as no other could know what goes to make life at its highest. You may not place the length of life as the only measure by which its worth is to be gauged. Not by what a man has, but what he has given can the life of anyone be assessed.

Reckoned in this way the men who gave themselves when nothing less would suffice have surely a claim on our gratitude which the years as they pass ought not to disregard or forget. At the close of his pilgrimage to France last year, the King sent a message to his people over all the seas. The closing words of that message are, to my mind, singularly appropriate to an occasion such as this:—"I fervently pray that, both as nations and individuals, we may so order our lives after the ideals for which our brethren died, that we may be able to meet their gallant souls once more, humbly, but unashamed." So long as memory lasts there is little likelihood that their names will be forgotten. They are engraved in marble, inscribed on Honor Rolls, indelibly written on the hearts of those who loved them. But what have we to say in regard to the ideals for which they died? Are these remembered, lived for, striven after as sacred trusts, which may not be ignored on peril of incurring the guilt of having betrayed the dead?

Is it not worse than futile, is it not sheer childishness for us to complain of the hardships, the inconveniences, nay, the evils which we have inherited from the years of tumult, if we are doing nothing to put things straight? What right had we to imagine that years of international conflict would bring us a world in which there would be freedom from strenuous effort and the hard discipline of toil and struggle by which alone progress can be secured?

The task set the men who died in the war and that of us who live in peace is one and the same, if we understand it aright. They were not called to give everything in order that we might have no demand made upon us. The call is that their work was unfinished, and they have committed to us the task of carrying it a step nearer to completion. Remembrance Day might well demand for us some heart-searching as to how far that trust is being respected by us all. It is not enough that we should talk, however eloquently, of what our soldiers did, the question for us is "Are we in our several callings showing a like devotion to duty for others' sake?" The gratitude of the nation is doing all that is humanly possible to keep sacred and secure from profanation the places where their bodies lie. But on this day of remembrance we think of their souls now passed into the care of the loving Lord who redeemed them by His own blood. It is our duty and our privilege to remember them all before the Lord to-day to plead the merits of the Saviour's death on their behalf as we offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Altar as Christ has appointed. The men of Ours have not passed beyond the loving care of the Shepherd of souls. Let that be our consolation and the ground of our hope. Surely the love we bear them prompts us to-day to pray for them the ancient prayer, "Grant them O Lord Eternal Rest and let Light Perpetual shine upon them."

How can I cease to pray for thee?
Somewhere
In God's great universe thou art today.
Can He not reach thee with His tender care?
Can He not hear me when for thee I pray?

What matter it to Him who holds within
The hollow of His hand all worlds, all space,
That thou are done with earthly pain and sin?
Somewhere within His ken thou hast a place.

Somewhere thou livest and hast need of him;
Somewhere thy soul sees higher heights to climb,
And somewhere still there may be valleys dim
That thou must pass to reach the hills sublime.

Then all the more, because thou canst not hear
Poor, human words of blessing, will I pray,
Oh, true, brave heart, God bless thee wheresoe'er
In His great universe thou art to-day.

AT THE R. C. CATHEDRAL

At 10.30 the R. C. Veterans, headed by the C. C. C. Band and Brigade, left the rink grounds to attend last Mass at the Cathedral. The C. C. C. had a large turnout and the lads looked exceptionally well in their new uniforms. The celebrant, Rev. Fr. Kennedy, was attended by Lt. J. Dee and Reservist J. Hickey, while a guard of honour from th C. C. C., under Capt. C. McGrath, occupied a position in the Sanctuary. At the conclusion of Mass Rev. Dr. Carter ascended the pulpit and delivered the sermon, speaking as follows:

"Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends." (St. John, xv. 13).

My Brethren, and you soldiers and sailors, veterans of the great war, you who fought side by side with our heroes whom we this day commemorate, who saw them fall in Flanders fields, or on battleships of the great North Sea, to you this morning I address these brief words of tribute and of prayer.

"Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends." These are the words of my text: words uttered by Christ Himself the God-man, the greatest man the world has ever seen, ever will see, the Martyr of martyrs: spoken of His own sacred person on the night before He went to immolation. He laid down His life, he offered it to God as a sacrifice on the altar of the Cross. He shed His most precious blood, not for His friends alone, not for His country, but for the whole human race. This is the first of July, a day which for ages past the Holy Church has set aside as sacred to the Most Precious Blood as the Feast of the Most Precious Blood; the vestments worn by God's Minister the priest to-day at Mass, at this solemn service are as you see of the colour red, a symbol of the blood of Martyrs, of the blood of the King of Martyrs: is there not then for us Catholic veterans, a fitness in this celebration; the first of July, the day that our boys met their baptism of fire and blood in that ever memorable encounter of Beaumont Mamel; the first of July, Memorial Day, ever to be observed with ceremony and ritual with reverence and devotion as sacred to all our boys who shed their blood; laid down their lives for their homes, their country and empire. Greater love than this hath no man.

And now to-day the praise of these heroes will be extolled, their glories sung; yours too, comrades in the fight who shared their hardships their sacrifice if not their martyr's crown. But midst all these functions these solemn ceremonies, to the Catholic mind, to the broken hearted ones who have lost ones near and dear and losing have nobly borne their loss, the first place in the ritual must be given to "Requiem," Our first thought this morning then is one of prayer for the souls of these fallen.

An eminent dignity of the Church, a great theologian and philosopher, Cardinal Mercier, the Primate of Belgium, during the early days of the war expressed it as his opinion that those who had died in battle in defence of their fatherland by that very fact merited eternal salvation. This I say was his opinion, it is not, however, the teaching of Church. There were soldiers brave and valiant, ages ago just before the dawn of Christianity who fought and died for a cause as noble or nobler than was yours in defence of their homes, their laws and the laws of God: those were led by that most valiant man Judas Macabeus and they triumphed, but many were slain in battle. Judas on the next day came to give them burial and they found under the cloaks of the dead, donaries; votive offerings such as trinklets etc. taken from the Pagan idols of Jamnia "which the law forbiddeth to the Jews; so that all plainly saw, that for this cause they were slain." Judas immediately ordered prayers and making a gathering sent twelve thousand drachms of silver to Jerusalem for sacrifice to be offered for the sins of the dead. "It is, therefore, a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead. "It is, therefore, a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead, that they may be loosed from sin" (II Machabees xii, 46.) Therefore, this morning, out from the depths of our hearts, sincere and fervant, should rise a prayer to God to have mercy and give rest to our fallen comrades' souls. It was edifying this early morn to see amidst the throng that came here to the altar rail to receive the bread of life, the body of Christ Himself, some of your own selves clad in uniform your medals on your breasts; not many of you but some there were: this is the spirit this indeed a memorial. But now you all have come to Holy Mass, to the sacrifice of the blood of the Lamb. What is the meaning of this parade, of this part of the solemnities at least for you Catholics if not to pray to offer up that host for your comrades' souls. No bond there is can bind you more closely to them than that of prayer.

And now there is a lesson for us too in all this ceremony. They have fought the good fight and have fallen; may they sleep in peace; but they have thrown the torch to us, it is for us to carry on. The war is not yet over. We still must fight the battle of life. "The life of man upon earth is a warfare." (Job VII. 1.) We must show forth in our private lives the virtues which Christ the great martyr taught and showed us, we must hold dearly and tenaciously those principles and ideals our heroes fought and died for. Hold fast to those principles, of truth, honesty, purity and manhood and you will be a perfect citizen you will be doing more good for your country than by shedding your blood for if he be a hero who dies for his country and her cause and be worthy of praise and renown; he on the other hand deserves an imperishable crown who by the observance of her laws by his industry and integrity lives and gives her the service of his life.

When Dr. Carter had left the pulpit Mr. Chas. Hutten rendered the Dead March in Saul, on the organ. As the impressive sounds vibrated through the Church the congregation stood with bowed heads and offered up silent prayers for the repose of the heroes who gave their lives in the World War.

AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

The Presbyterian detachment of Veterans and Nfld. Highlanders, paraded to St. Andrew's Church where service was held by Rev. R. J. Power, who was also the preacher. Taking as his text "God created man in His own image"—Genesis ch. 1, v. 27, Mr. Power began with a story about the ex-Premier Bonar Law. When Mr. Bonar Law laid down the Premiership of Britain a prominent statesman declared that he was one of the most popular of all Prime Ministers, and went on to state that his popularity was largely due to his unbounded faith in man. Fundamentally man was fine, essentially man was divine—that was Bonar Law's fixed belief. A short time after the close of the war with a few friends Mr. Law was discussing what had taken place and asked them what they considered the most impressive thing about the war. One mentioned one thing and another another. Mr. Law said that the most impressive thing to him was the majesty of the common man. The war will not go down in history as a war of brilliant admirals and generals, it will be renowned forever as the war in which the common man revealed his soul. The Majesty of the Common Man! That was Mr. Power's theme. The war should have cured us of all pessimism regarding humanity. From the first day of the war to the last we had a continuous revelation of the grandeur of the human soul. It was demonstrated every hour of every day that man is as brave now as he has ever been. No Greek or Roman of olden time can teach the man of to-day anything in the book of courage. There are no heroes in history who will outflash in glory the heroes of 1914-18. "It is this innate nobality, this fundamental dignity of man that makes me an optimist," said the preacher. "I believe that there are better days ahead, that the best is yet to be for the world. Man may not be at his best to-day, wait until to-morrow. We trusted him in the hour of the world's supreme crisis and he did not disappoint us. He is not going to disappoint us now. He overthrew the Kaiser before. He will overthrow the Kaiser again. All greed and vice and lawlessness shall go and the Kingdom of love and service shall come. Made in the Image of God, God expects great things of us and Christ has died to restore in us the lost. likeliness. You will not disappoint Him. He is depending on you."

AT GOWER ST.

The Methodist troops attended service at Gower Street Church, and beside the Veterans there was a large representation of Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, while the Guards Old Comrades Association was also represented. The Pastor, Rev. Hammond Johnson, Rev. Dr. Fenwick and Rev. E. Broughton, Secretary of the Conference, assisted at the service; while the preacher was the President of the Conference, Rev. Sidney Bennett. His text was taken from St. John's Gospel, 13th chapter, 17th verse: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Mr. Bennett delivered a sermon of remarkable force and inspiration on the relationship between knowing and doing the will of God. The Hallelujah Chorus was rendered by the choir as an Anthem.

FOREST FIRES RESULT FROM CARELESS AUTOISTS.

CLEVELAND, June 25 (AP)—One hundred thousand motorists of Cuyahoga county have been asked by the Cleveland Automobile Club to join in a movement to keep camp and picnic sites clean and undefaced and to protect the countryside from the danger of fire.

In a statement the club suggests that the motorists adopt the slogan, "Clean up as you go." It is pointed out that in recent years there has been a growing tendency to litter the countryside with rubbish, especially during the warm months. "Not only is the natural beauty of the countryside desecrated," the club says, "but there are even more serious aspects of the situation. More than 1,000 forest fires were started last year by automobilists who left camp fires burning or threw lighted cigarettes, cigars or matches into grass at the road side."

Aunt Jane Describes Uucle Jim's Visit to Port Union in Her Usual Interesting Fashion

She said she took a lot of interest in the girls and women wherever she went. She told about the girls of St. John's, how they are banded together to help each other, and how rich and poor alike meet and have splendid times. She told us about Princess Mary and the Girl Guides and asked the young women of Catalina to get busy, and if they needed any help at any time to write to her, and she would tell them the best way to get to work to do good among the young people.

Then she had quite a chat with the older women about keeping their homes and their children bright, and I wish Jane was there to hear what she said about cooking, for I would remind her of the time she made a mistake and made my tea out of pepper, and how often she let the porridge burn on the stove while she talked a lot of nonsense with the women of Change Islands. Lady Allardyce told us about fireless cooking and how to make a cooker. I must get Jane to write her when I get back.

Her Ladyship spoke about knitting and how to earn pocket money so as to have a few dollars in the house when the fishery is poor, and the old man has no money to give for things that women want.

Oh! it was a grand speech but I can't remember half of it. During the winter some of the things she said will come to my mind, and I hope Jane won't think I am making it up; or dreamt it. After Lady Allardyce finished Mr. Coleridge presented the Governor with a present of Labradorite cuff links, so as not to let him forget his visit, and then a lady presented Lady Allardyce with a nice hand bag made, I think, of Newfoundland seal. The meeting closed with the National Anthem, and everybody went home happy as the Governor's visit was such a success. The men in charge of the reception must feel proud of their work.

The next day the warship was open for anyone that wished to go through it, and the officers and crew were very nice to anyone that called.

The Governor went on board in the morning and was made acquainted with anyone who wished to meet him. When I shook hands him I felt that I was shaking hands with a friend. He was so nice and smiled when I told him that I would tell Aunt Jane all about him when I got home. If he ever goes to Change Islands Jane will be sure to give him and his Lady a cup of tea; and if they will stay overnight we will give him a good meal of fish and brewise for his breakfast, for Jane and myself are great believers of eating plenty of fish as it helps out the country, and as Lady Allardyce sed at the meeting it is good food, and we should eat more of it. When it comes to fish and brewise no one can cook it like Aunt Jane, altho' she hasn't got a fireless cooker. The steamer left for Bonavista at 12 o'clock Saturday morning and I must try and get home by first schooner, steamer or airship going north."

This is the end of Jim's notes and I am sorry if I have taken up too much space in your paper, but I thought you would rather have his notes than if I copied some of them and left out the others.

Jim thinks I'm proud of my cooking and thinks by praising me I'll let him alone, and not scold him for neglecting his work by staying in Port Union so long, but if he misses the fish this summer because he 's not ready he needn't think I'll go knitting or cooking without fires to buy him hooky, for I intend to keep any money I make to save up for a trip to Port Union myself, and when I go, I'll have a good time and hope I'll have the pleasure of meeting our Governor and his Lady there when I go, for I am sure they must be nice sociable folks, and if I could have one long chat with her Ladyship I am sure I could give her a lot of information about how women could save, and earn and perhaps help her in the good work she is doing.

I congratulate Sir Wm. Coaker on the honour given him by the King and hope he will live long to continue the good work done by him for the fishermen of this island.

Please excuse this long letter and blame it on Jim for he begged me to write, and when I get started it is hard to stop.

Later on I will write more about Jim's visit to Port Union, as he says he has a wonderful lot to tell me when he has time to think things over. He is busy getting ready for fishin' now so you will have to wait.

If you see Sir William anytime tell him we're all proud of his title, and hope he'll live long to enjoy it.

Good-bye for this time.

OBITUARY

Editor, Evening Advocate,

JOSEPH WHELAN, Caplin. Cove.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your esteemed paper, to record the death of my dear father, Mr. Joseph Whelan, who passed peacefully away at his home in Caplin Cove, on April 6th, at the age of 57. He was a cripple for about 7 years, but he bore it patiently.

He was a good member of the Church, although he could not attend for the last five years; he was interested in the work of God.

He had many friends all over Random and elsewhere, who visited him day by day. Now that his chair is vacant, he is missed by all.

He was a member of the L.O.A. and his Orange Brethren from his Lodge paraded to pay their last respects to him, also many friends were present. It was the largest gathering of people ever known at a funeral service in Random, showing how well known he was and respected.

It makes us feel sad when we think of one we love so well being taken from our midst, but we can rejoice to know that our earthly loss is Heaven's gain. We believe that he is taken from his afflictions to a brighter home above; we believe he is gone to be with Jesus which is far better.

He was a kind and loving husband and father. While his friends and loved ones were gathered around his bedside his last words were that he was going home to die no more.

He told his wife and children to met him in Heaven. We all know that he has fought a good fight, he has borne his cares and now he is gone to obtain his crown which he will wear through all eternity. He was loved and respected by all who knew him.

He was laid to rest in the Methodist cemetery on April 5th at Caplin Cove, to await the general resurrection at the last day. He leaves to mourn a loving wife, (Catherine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Higgins, Hodges Cove) one son, Selby, five daughters, three brothers and two sisters, also a large circle of relations and friends.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. S. Rowe, who took for his text Isaiah, chapter 48, verse 10, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction."

We loved him, yes we loved him,
But Angels loved him more;
And now he's sweetly sleeping
On Zion's happy shore.

But one there is who misses him:
That is his loving wife,
But still she has a glorious hope,
He's passed from death to life.

Mother dry your tears from weeping,
Let not sorrow dim your eyes;
Though at times your heart seems breaking,
You know he told you not to cry.
For he was going home to Heaven,
And our loss is Heaven's gain.

Thanking the many friends for their sympathy, and thanking you for space, Mr. Editor, I remain, his loving daughter,

EMMA WHELAN.

In June, the 20th, Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Lee of Riverhead, St. Mary's and removed from their happy family circle their daughter, Bridget Ann., Deceased, had decided in September, 1922 to go to the General Hospital for treatment, but although receiving the best medical skill and attendance and the kindness of relatives and friends she slowly grew worse and on the last week of May it was decided. She was removed to her home where despite the loving care of her parents, sisters and brother, death called her to the great beyond fortified with the rites of the Holy Catholic Church. She leaves to mourn her sad loss, her heartbroken father and mother, four sisters and one brother.

EXECUTORS AND TRUSTEES

She is gone but not forgotten,
Never will her memory fade
Sweetest thoughts will always linger,
Round the place where she is laid.

Harbides, June 24th, 1923.

Dear Sir,—

Will you grant me space in your paper, the Advocate, to record the death of William Gilliott, who passed peacefully away on February 6th, over in some part of Boston, Lynn Mass.

His father died when William was not two years old and he was taken care of by his grand-father who died when he got to the age of nine; then his Uncle took him as his own, and took care of him.

When the Great War broke out, like lots of our young men, he asked his uncle if he could go and I told him to use his own mind, and he went and joined the Navy in 1915 and served on the Battle-cruiser, H.M.S. Devonshire, and went through all the hardships of it. When peace was signed in the fall, he was then sent to the West Indies till the next spring.

Since then he has not been home more than two or three weeks at a time, but still he loved his home.

During last fall in Nov., he came over from Boston and got married in St. Thomas's Church, St. John's. He came home to see us and went over to Boston again and was just married three months, when we received a message saying that he had passed away. It was a hard blow to us, not knowing that he was sick.

He was only sick two weeks, was taken to the hospital and died there. God's will be done. Wm. would never murmur, no matter what came against him. He was liked by all who knew him and when he passed away, he was willing to give up all in this world, looked up and smiled at the last hour and died. May God help us to bear our troubles, knowing that we shall meet him in Heaven.

So good by our de arest William,
We will meet you by and by;
When the storms of life are over
Twill be a cloudless sky.

Thanking you for space.

MRS. LEVI GILLIOTT,

Pike's Arm, Herring Neck,
June 177th, 1923.

MRS. RICHARD GREENSLADE.

To The Editor,

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your paper, the Advocate, to record the death of my dear grand-mother, Mrs. Richard Greenslade, who passed peacefully to the Great Beyond, Septemper 12th 1922, after an illness of a few months, being at the age of 64 years. She leaves to mourn their sad loss, her husband, seven sons and one daughter, Mrs. William Dawe, Joseph in Sasktechewan, Henry and Alfred in Vancouver, B.C., Samuel in New Jersey, John Thomas, Walter and George at home, and a large circle of relations and friends. She was loved by all who knew her, and no doubt she is greatly missed, especially in her home. She was a member of the C.E.W.A., who acompanied the remains of their dear sister to its last resting place in the C. of E. Cemetery where the service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Facey, in sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection.

On that happy Easter morning
All the graves their dead restore;
Father, sister child and mother
Meet once more.

Dearest grandma, thou hast left us,
Your dear face we'll se no more;
But we hope to met up Yonder
On that bright and happy Shore.

You are gone but not forgotten,
Never will your memory fade,
Sweetest thoughts will always linger
Around the place where you are laid.

Belvedere Garden Party

The anual Garden Party in aid of Belvedere Orphanege was held in the Orphanage grounds yesterday afternoon and attracted a large gathering of supporters.

The grounds were tastefully decorated and the presence of numerous tents and stalls showed that the wants of the inner man had not been neglected. In connection with the Garden Party the Junior League played a number of lives which resulted in a win for the Cadets.

The prizes were presented by Mrs. A. Hiscock.

The pupils of the Orphanage danced a ribbon dance which was at once intricate and pleasing.

The C.C.C. and Mount Cashel bands rendered delightful music and the whole aair was most enjoyable.

At 5 o'clock teas were served and at night a dance was held in the gymnasium which was attended by a tremendous number and did not terminate until an early hour this morning.

The party was in every way a thorough success.

Two Steamers Are Total Loss St. Mary's Bay

Two coal-laden steamers are ashore, and are total wrecks, in St. Mary's Bay.

The first to go ashore was the Norwegian steamer O.K. Knudsen, which struck at Gull Island Point near St. Vincent's at 11 o'clock, Friday night. The ship wasg oing at about three-quarter speed when she struck, and the crew of 32 were obliged to immediately leave the ship which began to sink rapidly.

The men stayed near the ship all night, and at 7 a.m. landed at Peter's River. It was not until Saturday afternoon that news reached the city and the Senef, Captain T. Connors, left for the scene at 7 p.m.

The ship returned at 6 a.m. yesterday, bringing along the crew of the ill-fated Knudsen, which is a total wreck, only her top decks being over water, and with little hope of salvage.

The Knudsen was bound from Sydney to Wabana with coal cargo and was afterwards going north to load pit props. The ship was owned in Norway and was 3500 tons gross

The S. S. Banda

The second wreck occurred at 4 p.m. Sunday, when the s.s. Banda, also from Sydney, bound to Granville, France, coal-laden, struck at Watering Cove, a mile to the eastward of where the Knudsen went ashore.

The weather was foggy at the time, and this ship is also a total wreck.

News of the second disaster was received yesterday morning by Mr. J. J. Collins in a wireless from Cape Race. The tug had been to the Knudsen and was returning when she sighted the Banda. The crew as well as several passengers, one of whom is a lady, landed safely in their boats at Peter' River, from where they will come overland to Trepassey, and they should reach the city to-day.

The Banda is a French ship and is 3893 tons gross.

PERSONAL

His Lordship the Bishop of Newfoundland left by to-day's express on a visitation to the West Coast. His Lordship is taking as Chaplain the Rev. Andrew Tulk of Portugal Cove. The visitation will probably extend over July and August.

Rev. Roland T. Moores, B.R.E. of New Bay, Newfoundland, received the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology (S.T.B.) at the annual graduation exercises of Boston University on Monday, June 18. The exercises were held in Symphony Hall and nearly 1000 students received diplomas. Mr. Moores, who last year graduated from the same institution was formerly a member of the Newfoundland Methodist Conference but resigned after ordination to continue his studies. He is now preaching at the Cuyler Presbyterian Church, Brookyln, N.Y.

Arrived From Barbados

The tern schooner Jean Dundonald Duff, Captain John Doody, 32 days from Barbados with a cargo of molasses to Baine Johnson & Co., arrived in port early this morning.

The Duff left here early in the Spring with a cargo of codlsh for Bahia to which port she made a good run, and after discharging, she proceeded to Barbados to load molasses for her owners.

Captain Doody and crew are well.

The Susu's sailing for North has been postponed till 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

METHODEST CONFERENCE

SATURDAY, Jnne 30.

Conference opened at 9.30 with devotional services.

After a good deal of routine the Board of Governors of the Methodist College convened decided the chairmanship of Mr. C. P. Ayre. The minutes of the monthly meetings were read for information. The total annual expense runs to $29,000 with a substantial balance of about $1500 which is a batter showing than any Methodist secondary school in this connection. The school acquired two additional residences for masters during the past year which is a great gain. A complete new electric installation was made during the year. Mr. Edgecombe leaves the staff to take post graduate work. Mr. Young for a position in Moncton, N.B. The Treasurer, Mr. Joseph Peters presaged his report with a few remarks pointing out that the great gift of Mr. Ayre in the playing field had introduced a new and helpful element into the school life. Over $12.000 had been expended on the field during the past year.

The work of the executive was very finely articulated during the past year the sub-committee doing their work with machine like regularity. During the year Mr. McDougall (C.A.)' volunteered to install a modern system of accounting which is being operated by a trained bookkeeper. Hearty votes of thanks were presented to the executive, staff and guardian. Dr. Trueman spoke appretiaicvely of the standing in Canada of pupils from this school.

Rev. Ezra Broughton was appointed Treasurer of the Superannuation Fund.

Grants of $50.00 each were made to Greenspond and Little Bay Islands from the parsonage fund.

The Saturday noon address by Dr. Trueman was guaged for a smaller audience almost entirely ministerial.

At the Ministerial Session Saturday afternoon the 'pastoral address" was presented by ex-President Morris. The phraseology of this paper moved in a very unusual scriptural atmosphere which specially suited its purpose. This was not so. It was only the form. Duty was increasingly taking the place of sentiment. Methodist people have not been in the habit of comppomising with evil. They will not hereafter. Belief is of no value unless righteousness results. There are Heavenly places lying very near us. One of these is The Lord's Supper. The true Christian life is a happy one. The church has a right to and is not right unless it does rejoice in the Lord. The address was ordered printed and read in all our churches.

MONDAY, July 2.

Monday morning reports began to go through with a rush. It was mentioned that Mr. Reay was in the General Hospital seriously ill and a special messanger was despatched with greetings.

Statistics came from Rev. C. R. Blonut. The total financial operations showed an increase of $22,000 which in a year of great depression is an indication of strength and must greatly ofset the decrease of members. In fact, it just means that members removing if of the same breed as those staying are going to be a strength to the church in other places. As soon as conditions are normal Newfoundland generosity will set right the contributions to the various benevolent funds.

Mr. Langfard's versatility was shown in a passing incident. There were four minutes to spare. There was an explanation to make. Mr. Langford was called upon, "You have four minutes Mr. Langford." "I can do it in two, sir" He did. And the question was one of the of the relation of Japanese philosophy to Christian ethics, and not a technical term was used.

The atmosphere all through the morning was suitable for an immediate transition to the last of Dr. Trueman's addresses. The first duty to the Church cannot depend upon even the Scripture. This is the work of the spirit. The spirit mast be cultivated by worship. There must be the cloister in the home, the hill-top with the master, (prayer must not become less to men as they grow older) and the fire from off the altar. (public worship). Beauty must be found in the sanctuary. The Old Testament Scripture is full of this idea. Churches ought to be spotless, proportionate and beautiful. Stillness is(needed especially in Sunday School. Hymns are not to be sung for the purpose of stretching our lungs or varying the monotony. The part of the congregation in worship should be increased. The Church has a duty to teach. The speaker paid a deserved compliment to President Bennett regarding the bearing of his Sunday morning sermon on that point. The learning of any fact is accomplished by the actual discharge of nerve force between the ends of two nerve lines as in a telephone exchange. This sequence of discharges must be permanently established. Evangelism must paralled the work of religious education all the way through life.

Monday afternoon a considerable time was spent in straightening out a legal tangle. Once it was straightened out a strong discussion took place, moderately voiced, penetrating clear insight into many and varied matters of denominational policy centred on the all important matter of Missions. There was the urge of foreign missions. There was urgent need of local supervision. Which was the more important policy?

Messrs House, Dr. Dunn, Dr. Darby, W. R. Butler, R. H. Mercer, R.E. Fairbairn, Hammond Johnson, A. Mews, N.H. Burt, Rev. J. A. Wilkinson, M. A. Rabbitts and others took part in the debate which was on a much higher plain than that on Social Service a few days ago. It was so in being more restrained than the former. Mr. Datchon made a bit of humor by mentioning the Green Englishman sent to Green Bay (he is of course English himself). The discussion closed with a unanimous vote of confidence in Dr. Fenwick and in the necessity of the maintenance of his office.

Mr. Swan was before the conference for a few minutes. He is returning to England. For sincerity, for humility, for correctness, for all that makes a Christian he has been an example to the Conference which wished him a most hearty "God Speed." Many spoke to the motion.

Does the Conference know just what a perfect pie of clerical accuracy it has in H. D. Coppin, Journal Secretary? The Reporter who certify that whatever the Conference does will be exactly recorded no matter how great the entanglement of amendments. That does not of course mean that the Conference is infallible.

Elections followed of Chairman and Financial Secretaries:

St. John's District:—Dr. Fenwick and Dr. Darby.

Carbonear:—Ex-Pres. Morris and Ezra Broughton.

Bonavista:—H. D. Coppin and C. R. Blount.

Wesleyville:—George L. Mercer and S. J. Hillier.

Twillingate:—W. H. Dotchon and T. A. Wilkinson.

Grand Falls:—The President and W. E. Mercer.

Burin:—C. House and E. C. French.

A discussion took place in regard to the number of appointments in the Civil Service according to denomination. The disparity in Methodist appointments had increased over that of two years ago. This was noted as a proof of the honourable conduct of the Church which has kept her hands clear of all intrigue in the matter. However, in fairness to ourselves it ought to be noted and given publication.

The Conference Board of Trusts reported Marshall Fund scholarships paid to Claude House and Frank Meadus $65.00 each. The Macpherson Bequest for parsonages has awarded $200 to Carmanville; $50, to Little Bay Islands, $100 to Fortune, $100 to Bell Island.

Dr. Darby entertained the conference at supper in the residence. This was the first time for seven years that he had been able so to owing to the dates set for exams by the Department of Education. After dinner a discussion took place regarding the new residence.

Conference convened at eight greatly refreshed, naturally; Ministers are only human; and it was a good supper beautifully served. A resolution was heartily passed thanking Dr. Trueman for his visit to the Conference. In the solemn Memorial service the names of William Henry Browning, W. S. Howell and H. W. Martin were read with appropriate minutes in each case.

LOCAL ITEMS

On Saturday last Hibbs' trap at Portugal Cove took 8 qtls., and other traps also did well, and there is a good sign of fish.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Snelgrove's Sunday School Class of George Street Church entertained the children of the Methodist Orphanage at Bowring Park, when a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Guests at the Balsam:—Miss I. Brocklehurst, Miss A. Brocklehurst, Mrs. Wm. J. Caul, Mrs. J. Maddock, Miss Margaret Maddock, Carbonear; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Patten, Miss Marguaret Patten, Grand Bank; F. M. Wells, P. Burke, Little Bay; J. E. Blanchard, St. George's.

The Sachem leaves Halifax to-morrow, and is due here on Friday. The ship sails for Liverpool Saturday and some 40 outward passengers are already booked to go by her.

A sharp curtailment of traffic on the Ruhr and Rhineland interurban tramways lines, over which the Germans have been moving merchandise, mail and coal since the seizure of the steam railways, has been ordered by General Degoutte as a penalty for the bomb explosion at Duisburg last Saturday.

Great Britain is likely to make a fresh move in the Ruhr situation. It is stated that Great Britain will see that Germany pays enough money annually to cover the interest of the British debt to the United States.

C. L. B. Sports Are Great Success

Skirving Creates a New Record For The Mile Run.

Some 2500 people witnessed the annual C.L.B.C. Sports on St. George's Field yesterday afternoon. Thew eather was ideal and contributed in a great measure to the success of the event. The field had been carefully surveyed and correct measurements given for the distance tests and everything was done to ensure satisfaction.

Promptly on time, Mr. W. J. Higgins, captain of the Field Committee appointed his judges and ordered the start of the program. The following events were then run off in quick succession:

Hurdle Race—L. Spurrel, 17 2-5 secs.

100 Yards—J. Herder, G. Halley, 11 secs.

One Mile—Skirving, Stone, 4.49 2-5 thus lowering the previous record, which was 4.50.

Football Sixes—Guards vs. C.C.C., won by Guards, 2 to 1.

B.I.S. vs. Feildians, won by B.I.S., 3 goals

220 Yards Dash.—Butler, Herder.

Junior League Relay—Won by B.I.S., Manning, Collins and Halley.

High Jump—Won by Kieley, 5 ft.

Senior League Relay—Won by B.I.S., Phelan Constantine and Halley.

Half Mile Open—Skirving, 2 1-5.

Two Mile Walk—Burnell, O'Neill, 17.18 4-5.

Quarter Mile—Hamlyn, Nikosey, 1.41 1-5.

Inter-Coy. Relay—Won by F Co., Keats, Snow, Martin.

Football Six Finals—B.I.S. vs. Guards, won by B.I.S., 3 goals to a corner.

A pymamid exhibition by the C.L.B. Gymnasts was particularly well done and elicited much applause.

The 10-Mile Road Race

The 10-mile road race was one of the features of the sports. A field of eight, comprising the following—R. Parsons, J. Russell, J. Willar, R. Nichol, G. Kelly, W. Dodd started from the Octagon at 3.36 p.m. They were set going by Mr. C. J. Elis who was the official in charge of the race, and all got awy in good shpe.

On reching the field Dodd who was leading was quite fresh, and he lnished the two rounds in fine style, finishing the race in a splendid burst of speed in 66.35.

At the conclusion of each event Mrs. Col. Rendell graciously presented the prizes to the victors and congratulated them upon their performances. The C.L.B. band rendered splendid music through the entire affair.

The Ladies' Auxiliary was indefatigable in its work. The young ladies sold ice-cream and candy and met with a big demand.

The entire affair was well arranged and carried into flawless execution, and those who participated may feel justly proud.

THE STRIKE EXTENDS TO MINERS

TROOPS ARE REINFORCED IN TROUBLE AREA; OVER 100,000 ARE AFFECTED BY WALKOUT

Ten Thousand Men Are Now On Strike At The Besco Works

Troops Are Now Being Reinforced And Not Withdrawn as Demanded

SYDNEY, July 4—The eight thousand coal miners of Cape Breton quit the pits at midnight last night in support of the strikers at the Sydney steel workers, and to force the withdrawal from the Sydney strike area of the provincial police and federal troops now employed in protecting the plant of the British Empire Steel corporation and maintaining law and order.

Union officials declared that the strike was on' hundred per cent., which means that pump men and maintenance men have gone or soon will be out.

The walk-out of miners completes the tie-up of the allied coal-steel industry on the island and placing the number of strikers at a figure in excess of ten thousand men.

An additional active force of active military have been requiitioned for service in the strike zone. Alex. S. MacNeil has been appointed to take over the duties of H. J. McCann, assistant general manager of the Dominion Coal Co., who is ill.

In future all heads of coal departments of the British Empire Steel Corporation will report to Mr. McNeil.

100,000 Affected

SYDNEY, July 3—Although the strike was not scheduled to begin until midnight, the miners of Cape Breton South, started to walk out at four o'clock this afternoon in support of striking Sydney steel works and to force withdrawal from the district of provincial police and federal troops. The day shifts finished work at four o'clock and the night shifts in most instances did not report for duty. Dominion Number One Colliery continued to work as usual, and there were a few men in Number 25. By to-morrow morning the strike was expected to be complete in Cape Breton South with the possibility that it would be joined by miners on the north side of the harbor. Approximately eight thousand miners are affected and directly another two thousand workers are involved in the miners' strike. More than three thousand steel men are out. The total population dependent upon the coal and steel industry and directly affected by the combined strikes is approximately one hundred thousand. It is not expected that the miners of the mainland, in Pictou and Cumberland Counties, will join the Cape Breton men in their strike. Troops from Halifax numbering about two hundred and fifty, which have been stationed at Sydney Steel Works since Saturday, were reinforced today by the arrival of three hundred and fifty more from London, Ontario. Seventy-four horses also arrived.

Explorer Off

SYDNEY, July 3—Captain Donald MacMillan and his men cast off from their wharf here at four minutes after six this evening and headed their vessel Bowdoin for the far North. "If I am not back in Sydney Harbor by September 1924 then I will remain in the Arctic one more year," said the intrepid explorer to-day.

Is Total Loss

HALIFAX, July 3—The Royal Mail steamer packet liner Carazuet, which went ashore June 25th on reefs about twelve miles from Hamilton, Bermuda, will be a total loss and will be replaced on the Canadian Bermuda and West Indies route by another steamer it was stated here to-night by John Hulbert, General Agent in Canada of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co.

CHAPTER XVII

The Firt-nighters

A good deal of interest had been created in the profession on account of the cruel way in which Viola Fancourt had thrown Madox over and left him in the lurch, but he had bound the members to secrecy, and even Viola, who had remained in town for the first night in spite of doctor's orders, did not know the identity of the leading lady.

Carlotta was early at the Russel Square Hotel, and, before ten o'clock, Claud had wired to say he would arrive at five. That seemed to relieve Carlotta, and she was very gay all the morning, which they spent in shopping.

"I wish you could persuade your father and mother to come to Cambridge, Carlotta," said Judy coaxingly. "Just think how jolly it would be for us if you were there!"

"But probably you will only be there for a year, and then we should be left lamenting. It is quite possible, however, that we may all come to London. We are thinking about it. By Monday I shall know."

That interested Judy immensely, and they had a great deal to say to one another about the best residential parts of London, and at last Judy agreed that perhaps Carlotta was right in asserting that the old, dignified squares in Bloomsbury were hard to beat.

They both met Claude at King's Cross, But Carlotta said good-bye almost immediately, and intimated that they might meet after the theatre if it was not too late.

The Rankines had not been spoiled by too much pleasure, and they were both young enough to feel a certain amount of excited anticipation at the prospect of an evening spent at the theatre under such unusal auspices.

The box was an excellent one, commanding a fine view of the stage, and so large that Judy'e economic mind naturally mourned over the loss it must be to have it so sparsely filled. The animated scene before the curtain went up engrossed all their attention, and, though they had nobody to point out the celebrities to them, Judy knew tha every man and woman in the stalls looked as if they had done something out of the common. As a matter of fact, a good many of them were well known, both in the world of literature and art, and in Society, for Graham Madox was a general favorite, and his exceptional gifts were fully realized.

Then, too, the treatment he had received at the hands of Viola Fancourt undoubtedly had awakened a good deal of sympathy for him. No one knew that she was in the house, unobtrusively attired in outdoor costume with a thick veil over her face, mingling with the crowd in the pit—a whimsical act on her capricious part which, she confessed, amused her immensely.

She now regretted what she had done, and felt considerable pique as well as surprise that Graham Madox had "taken it lying down," as the expression is, without so much as attempting to get her to change her mind.

For this reason she devoutly hoped that he would be punished for his dereliction. In spite of much effort, she had been unable to discover anything about the woman he had secured to take her place, and it was sheer unadulterated curiosity which was at the bottom of the escapade of her presence in the pit.

There was no tantalizing delay such as sometimes happens on first night. Punctually at 8.15 the call bell rang and the curtain went up.

It is unnecessary here to give the story of the play, which was a domestic drama of a rather high order, an attempt to teach by a sort of allegory certain great truths of considerable import to humanity. The first scene presened Madox as the hero. John Tenderton, sitting in the library of his country house, torn with anxiety and doubt regarding the wife whom he adored.

Judy was sitting forward with eyes for nothing but the stage, when the door in the wings was suddenly opened, and Margaret Tenderton, the wife, entered. She was in evening dress, in which she looked superbly beutiful, and every movement was the embodiment of grace.

But it was when she spoke that the exquisite tones of her voice, never raised, but so clearly modulated, so perfectly enunciated, that it carried to the remotest corner of the crowded house, prepared the way for her triumph.

Judy gew deathly white, however, and reaching out, gripped her brother's hand.

"Why, Claud, it's Carlotta! You see! Don't you?"

"Yes, of course. Be quiet, Ju. We can't do anything—it's great!"

They had no room for resentment at having been kept in the dark; nay, they realized as the play went on that silence had been perfectly within Carlotta's right, and that she had even been wise, for now they had brought to the theatre perfectly unprejudiced minds, and were free from the slightest trace of personal anxiety or feeling. It certainly gave her a better chance. Immediately, with the rest of the house, they were in the thrall of that poignant human drama, which marched inevitably, and with dignity and majesty, to a close.

It was a sad story, and thus more true to life, of which so much is sad. But it was relieved by so much genuine humor, so much happy play of quite natural feeling that even blase playgoers experienced that singular feeling of refreshment which is only born of something really fine and great.

Madox was obviously and distinctly nervous, but Carlotta threw herself so completely into the part of the misunderstood and misjudged wife that she simply carried the audience, breathless, with her. Every act was a success. It could not fail to be, because each was a corollary of the other, and so perfectly acted that even the most carping could detect no flaw.

When the curtain fell at last upon what the audience was oddly and humanly pleased to find was a happy if somewhat unusual ending, the thunder of applause was tribute enough. So voiciferous were they, so hearty, so genuinely affectionate and appreciative, that tears came into Carlotta's eyes. But when she came on, radiant by Madox's side, a woman in the pit rose, grinding her teeth, and elbowed her way through the crowd to the egress, without the smallest regard for the disapproval of those about her. She had seen more—much more—than she desired.

"Author! Speech! Author! Speech! Speech!" Came in a deafening roar; and Madox at length was prevailed upon to say the few necessary words which revealed to the delighted audience that he was responsible both for the writing of the play and the production.

"You have rallied around me in a difficult crisis, but the accomplishment of this evening is largely if not altogether due to the accomplished lady, who came to my relief and rescue at the eleventh hour. When the time comes for me to write 'Finis' across my life-work, one of my proudest memories will be that I have had the honor to present Miss Margaret Tenderton to the British public. That she has already won your hearts it is easy to see, and I pray that the tie forged between you and her may last through many happy years."

Carlotta, now trembling and in tears, bowed her acknowledgements, and hurried off the stage, but not before she had stooped to pick up a little bunch of violets, tossed from the left-hand box, which she had given Claud for his button-hole, Tese she put to er lips as she moved out.

Then Judy sat back and suddenly burst into tears.

"Don't be silly, Judy. There isn't anything to cry about!" said Claude in an undertone which betrayed that he himself was moved in no small degree.

"I can't help it," answered Judy as she dropped into a chair at the back of the box, where she was secure from observation. "That glorious being is too far removed from us ever to be any good to Stair!"

"Oh, come, it's only Carlotta after all. And she was simply ripping this afternoon," said Claude in his boyish way. "You can't say she put on one bit of side!"

"No, no. But how are wegoing to keep her, and how is Alan—away across that horrible Atlantic, with heaven knows what in front of him—ever to hold her to her promise? Tat's what's troubling me, Claud! Why, the whole world will be after her simply, and I don't just see how we can heve the presumption to expect her to belong to us.

Claude had no convenient answer ready. It certainly was a puzzling problem.

"You'd better get on your cloak, and let us get back to the hotel then," he said practically; but at the moment there was a knock at the door, followed by the entrance of one of the theatre attendants.

"Please, Miss Tenderten wishes you to come to her dressing room now. If you will follow me I will take you."

She was standing in the open doorway of the dressing room, and she drew them in and closed it on those who were waiting outside.

It was Judy's face her glowing eyes were fixed with keen scrutiny which she made no attempt to hide.

"You are not angry or vexed with me dear, for not telling you? I tried to yesterday and again this afternoon, but I simply couldn't. I decided it would be better to leave it, and let you judge for yourself. Did I do well?"

"Well! Oh, don't ask us," murmured Judy. "We are quite overwhelmed! Of course we are proud of you! But you are coming with us now back to the hotel until we can talk things over?"

Carlotta shook her head.

"I'm sorry I can't. I have to go to supper with Mr. Madox. He has asked some people to meet me. But we can spend att to-morrow together. Good night, Judy dear. Try to suspend judgement until I explain. Good night, dear Claude, and thank you for my little posey. I shall put it away to-night beside a little stuffed black cat my mother sent me for a mascott."

MILITANT MEXICAN BEAUTY DIES OF HER WOUNDS

MEXICO CITY, June 15 (AP)—The Joan d'Arc of the Mexican revolution, Ramona Flores, is dead from the effects of a wound she received during one of the battles in which she was engaged against the troops of Victoriano Huerta in 1913.

Known popularly as "La Coronella," Ramona first saw active service in the ranks of General Juan Carrasco. She was born in Sinaloa about 40 years ago, and was a striking example of Mexican Indian beauty. During the last three years she was a patient in a local sanitarium, the federal government meeting the cost of her medical treatment.

U. S. Consul Presents Flag

Detroit Rotarians Send Stars and Stripes To St. John's Club.

The sual weekly meeting of the St. John's Rotary Club was held at Weeds West End Restaurant yesterday, the Rotarian, Arthur Mews, Deputy Colonial Secretary filled the chair. A very pleasing event took place on this the eve of the great American day, July 4, when the United States Consul, Mr. J. S. Benedict, on behalf of the Rotary Club of Detroit, presented a beautiful Silk American Flag to the Rotary Club of St. John's. The presentation speech of Counsel Benedict was informative and instructing, and is well worth recording.

SPEECH OF U.S. CONSUL, J. S. BENEDICT.

On behalf of the officers and members of the Rotary Club of Detroit, Mich., I have the honor of being invited to present to the Rotary Club of St. John's a silk American flag, which privilege is greatly appreciated, I can assure you. But before making this presentation possibly you may be interested in having a short account of the origin of the American flag, or as it is frequently called, the "Stars and Stripes."

It is now generally accepted that the idea of the Stars and Stripes as a National Flag was inspired or suggested by the Coat of Arms and the Crest of General George Washington's family and his forefather in England, who may be traced back to the reign of Henry the 8th, when the manor of Solgrave, Northamptonshire was granted to Lawrence Washington Esquire, of Gray's Inn, and Mayor of Northampton, who is said to have been a shrewd lawyer and a man of power and influence. But these church lands never turned out lucky to the grantee, as it appears that the first heir (Robert the son of Lawrence) had to come to terms with his son (Lawrence) to cut off the entail and sell the estate, which sale was effected in 1610 and the estate was purchased by one Lawrence Makepeace. (By the way "Makepeace" it would seem, was a very appropriate name for these days.) I will give a condensed outline of the Washington genealogy as taken from a booklet in my possession, continuing from Lawrence Washington, son and heir of Robert Washington. He Lawrence Washington married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Butler, Esquire, of Tees, Sussex. He died December 13, 1616, and lies buried in Great Brington Church, where there is a mutual monument recording the same and having the stars and strips on a shield—coupled with the arms of the Butlers. Robert the brother of this Lawrence died in 1622, and his remains are also at Brington and have a brass plate to his memory, with the Washington shield in excellent preservation.

John Washington the second son of Lawrence was Knighted at Newmarket February 1622; he emigrated to Bridge's Creek, America, in 1657; he married Ann Pope; will dated 1675.

Now next in line with George Washington's forefathers we have another Lawrence Washington, the son of John aforesaid; he married Mildred Warner; and he die 1697.

We come then to Augustine Washington, the second son of Lawrence; married first Jane Butler, by whom he had three children; secondly to Mary Ball by whom he had six children. The eldest son of this second marriage was George Washington the first President of the United States of America; he was born February 22, 1732, and was a great-grandson of John who emigrated to America in 1657, and sixth in descent from the first Lawrence Washington of Solgrave. He died December 14, 1799 at Mont Vernon, his home, a beautiful spot located in the State of Virginia on the banks of the Potomac River, where also lie his remains.

George Washington had the Solgrave arms in many ways about his person. There were two watch seals and also a book mark; the design was blazed, too, on the panels of his carriage. No item was omitted,—the red bars, the five pointed stars and the raven issaunt out of the ducal coronet, were all there. In the red and white bars and the stars of his shield, the farmers of the Constitution assuredly got the idea of the Stars and Stripes and the spread eagle of the national emblem, and this is the opinion of the Archaeological Society of England—the highest authority in the world.

I may say that frequently people confound Arms with Crests. They are totally distinct. The Arms is the shield,—protection in battle. The Crest is that ornament which surmounts the shield. The crest in this case is the bird issuant, which bird, the raven with open wings suggested the spread eagle of the national emblem. I am unable to explain why the ducal coronet is in the Washington crest, but evidently there is a ducal connection somewhere, possibly it may come through the marriage of Sir William Washington, Knighted by James the 1st, with the sister of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.

Respecting the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as a national flag, I will read what is printed on the back of a picture, taken from the original historical painting,—entitled "Birth of Our Nation's Flag," by Charles H. Weisgerber, and exhibited in the world's Columbian Exposition, Chicago in 1883, it reads as follows:

"The first definite action taken by the Colonies toward creating a flag was in 1775, when Congress appointed a committee to devise a national flag. The result of the deliberation of this committee was the adoption of the "King's Colors" of "Union Jack" combined with thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, showing that although the Colonies united in opposition to certain procedures or acts of England, they still acknowledged her sovereignty.

This flag was used in 1776, but later Congress appointed General George Washington, Robert Morris and Col. George Ross to devise a new flag. This committee called upon Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, of Philadelphia, and engaged her to make a flag from a pencil drawing furnished by General Washington. Betsy Ross, as she was familiarly known, was noted for her skill in needlework.

The story goes, that General Washington, after explaining his drawing to Betsy Ross, directed that the stars should be six-pointed ones. Mrs. Ross objected to this, and argued that the stars in the sky seemed to have but five points; following her argument by a practical demonstration, she folded a piece of paper, and with a single clip of her scissors, cut out a perfect five-pointed star. This was too much for the committee, and without further argument the idea of Betsy Ross prevailed. This flag was the first legally established emblem of the new nation.

On Saturday, the 14th of June, 1777 Congress resolved that the flag of the Thirteen United States be "Thirteen stripes, alternate Red and White," that the Union be "Thirteen Stars, White in a Blue Field," representing a new constellation.

Because of the admission of Vermont and Kentuckey, the flag was changed in 1794 by Act of Congress, which provided the flag of the United States should consist of fifteen stripes and fifteen stars; but in 1818 the flag was reestablished as thirteen horizental stripes alternately red and white, the union to consist of twenty stars, white in a blue field; one star to be added to the union upon the admission of each new state.

Such addition to be made on the 4th day of July succeeding such admission. The flag went into effect July 4th, 1818, and remains the present regulation national emblem of the United States of America.

Some description of the symbolism of the colors in the flag is not without interest:

Red—Representing "Courage and Divine Love."

White—Representing "Integrity of Purpose, Truth and Purity."

Blue — Representing "Steadfastness and Loyalty."

Now, Mr. Chairman, officers and members of St. John's Rotary Club, I have great pleasure in presenting to you this flag, the Star Spangled Banner, the national emblem of the United States of America,—from the Rotary Club of Detroit, Mich., which I can not help but feel is am ark of brotherly friendship, and a guarantee of its members' co-operation with you in various worthy objects and undertakings for the betterment of business and social conditions as between men and man from boyhood up.

SPEECH OF MR. ARTHUR MEWS.

Rotarian Mews on behalf of the Rotary Club of St. John's was very pleased to accept the Flag presented by United States Consul Benedict, and in replying said as follows:

MR. CONSUL BENEDICT:

On behalf of the Rotary Club of St. John's, Newfoundland, I accept from your hands as representing the Rotary Club of Detroit, this beautiful silk flag which is the National Standard of the Great Republic of the United States of America. I account it particularly fitting that you, in your representative capacity, have been chosen to make this presentation, for you, with your good wife and family, during your stay here, have ever sought to identify yourselves with everything that made for the welfare of the people of Newfoundland. We regard you with such sentiments of good will and friendship, that we would fain take you and account you as Newfoundlanders indeed.

We have been greatly interested in your address which set forth succinctly the origin and development of your National Emblem. We can not but notice that the colours in your flag and in our Union Jack are the same—Red, White and Blue. And we are proud of the fact that in our two great English speaking races, the qualities denoted by these colours, and mentioned by you in your address, are inherent. Both races —have courage, both stand for righteousness and purity and both have the highest regard for honour and fidelity. The greatest guarantee that the world can have for peace, is the establishment of these characteristics and virtues in the minds of all men, and their observance in all the Councils of the Nations.

We have noticed that, in setting forth the origin of your flag, you went back to the time when the forefathers of your great people lived in the Old Land across the water, and our thoughts also went b England whence came our Our peoples came from the sa English stock, and we are bear you not only friendship will, but we are held by bond of blood. Together in the fields of France a ers, and your sons and gether in the great righteousness and liber

It is fitting that the Ro should be the medium of t entation, for our Club is an tional one, knows no bounds try, no limitation because nor creed nor colour. R for service to all.

It is therefore under th py auspices that we meet in regard to youh good honoured representative in of the Great Republic of t States of America, in respec Rotary Club of Detroit, and in rela tion to the two great peoples whic we represent, having a common ori in standing for the same princi and virtues, and both seeking peac and good will upon earth.

Turning to Vice President Ern Watson, Mr. Mews said:

MR. VICE PRESIDENT:

In passing to yoru custody National Flag received from the R ary Club of Detroit, I feel Emblem will have a fitt place here. It has come "the land of the free, and of the brave," and it will f people blessed with the f dom, and a race that re lantly and quickly when to do battle upon the ope.

Amongst the guests Major Philips, Mr. Wr Hugh Anderson, Mr. Ell R. M. Patterson. The p lea concluded with the singing tional Anthem.

SERVICE TO ALL"

In another column there is published an account of yesterday's Rotary Club meeting which was addressed by the United States Counsel, Mr. J. R. Benedict, and who, on behalf of the Rotary Club of Detroit, presented our local club with a very beautiful silk American flag.

The presentation by the American Counsel was, we think, a very appropriate one, and may be taken as a significance of the good relations which exist between our country and the Great Republic. The need for the continuance of the pleasant relations always existing between us will always obtain, and such expressions of mutual goodwill as given by the American Consul to the Rotary Club will tend to make closer the bonds which bind Newfoundland to the great English speaking nation to the South. To the complete understanding of the English speaking people the future will hold much as far as peace and prosperity are concerned; and this is shown by the growing strength of the English Speaking Union, which is an organization rapidly developing, having for its membership many of the most prominent public men of England, America and the British Colonies.

And while the Rotary Club may be limited in its extent, the ad- its principle of "Service to all" cannot fail to have a

The Railway Agreement

THIS AGREEMENT made the ninth ay of June in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty Three BETWEEN HIS EXELLENCY SIR WILLIAM LAMOND ALLARDYCE, K.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland and its Dependencies n Council (hereinafter called the Government) of the one part and REID NEWFOUNDLAND COMPANY LIMITED (hereinafter called the Company) of the other part.

WHEREAS disputes have arisen and are subsisting between the Government and the Company respecting he construction maintenance and operation of the Newfoundland Railway and its Branches and otherwise arising out of the mutual dealings and the respective rights and obligations of the Government and the Company under the various Contracts relating to such Railway and Branches:

AND WHEREAS such disputes have reached a stage at which, unless settled by mutual agreement, they can only be disposed of by arbitration or by litigation:

AND WHEREAS the Company has entered into a tentative agreement with Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, Limited, and with the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the immediate development of the water-powers in the Humber River watershed and the immediate construction and continuous operation of a large modern pulp and paper mill in the Humber Valley, and Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, Limited, and the said Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, Limited, have made proposals o the Government for the guarantee of certain second debentures and for other assistance in the establishment of this enterprise:

AND WHEREAS it is desirable in he interests of the Colony and particularly having regard to labour conditions existing at the present time to encourage the influx of new capital into the Colony for the development of its natural resources and the establishment of new industries, thereby benefiting trade in general and providing new avenues of employment for the people of the Colony:

AND WHEREAS such arbitration or litigation as aforesaid would be uncertain, protracted and expensive, and would absolutely prevent the immediate establishment of the said proposed enterprise, and it is desirable in the interests of the Colony that the said disputes should be settled finally and immediately by mutual agreement:

Now this Agreement Witnesseth as Follows:—

1. THIS Agreement is subject to the approval and confirmation by the Legislature of the Colony of this Agreement and of two Agreements of even date herewith made between the Government and Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, Limited.

2. The Company and its subsidiary companies shall retire absolutely from all transportation (including express) operations in from and to the Colony and from the Docking business in Newfoundland.

3. THE Company shall convey and assure or procure to be conveyed and assured to and vested in the Government free from encumbrances:

(a) Its eight steamships, Kyle, Meigle, Sagona, Glencoe, Argyle, Clyde, Home and Petrel with their apparel, tackle and furnishings;

(b) The assets and goodwill of its express business;

(c) The Dry Dock and premises (subject to the rights if any of Newfoundland Atlantic Fisheries Limited) with all buildings, plant, machinery, equipment, stock in trade and the goodwill of Newfoundland Dockyards Limitid, but excluding bills receivable and payable by the latter Company at that date of transfer; the Company to procure the surrender of the existing lease in favour of the St. John's Light and Power Company, Limited, on the provision of the new sub-station referred to in paragraph 8 (d);

(d) All stocks of railway steamship express and telegraph supplies and material on hand belonging to the Company;

(e) All buildings, rolling stock, equipment and accommodations including telegraph lines provided by the Company under the Railway Contracts or in connection with the railway steamship or express services (including the terminal facilities enjoyed by the Company at North Sydney).

4. The Government and the Company shall respectively be relieved from all claims whatsoever which either party may have or think it has against the other with respect to any matters whatsoever affecting or incidental to the Railway Steamship telegraph express or dock service and from all obligations and liabilities past, present or future, in connection with the construction provision equipment maintenance or operation of the said services or any of them or heretofore imposed upon the Government or upon the late Sir Robert G. Reid, or upon the Company by any statute or by any contract or agreement whatsoever; and by way of illustration only, and so as not to exclude any other items the following matters shall be included under this head:

(a) The claim by the Company that the Government is under obligation under the Transportation of Timber Act 1904 to provide the Company with over two hundred and seven thousand acres of timber land;

(b) All claims if any by the Company for transportation or other services over and above contractual requirements either during the war period or at any other time;

(c) All claims if any by the Company in respect of the competition of the Government in freight and passenger transportation;

(d) All claims if any by the Company in respect of subsidies unpaid and of money due and unpaid on operating account under any contracts or agreements relating to the operation of any of the said services;

(e) All claims if any by the Company in respect of money due and unpaid on Branch Railway Construction account;

(f) All claims if any by the Company for damages in respect of breaches by the Government of all or any of the various contracts and agreements relating to the establishment and operation of all or any of the said services;

(g) All claims if any by the Government in respect of construction and operating contracts, including operations under the Railway Commission and subsequent temporary operating contracts and whether for debt default or damages.

5. AS the final and complete consideration for all matters included in this settlement the Government shall pay to the Company in bonds of the Colony at par maturing in twenty years bearing interest at five per cent. per annum and charged upon the funds of the Colony the sum of Two million dollars or at the option of the Company the equivalent of that sum in sterling money of Great Britain calculated at the rate of exchange prevailing on the date of the passing of the legislation hereinafter mentioned. Such payment shall be made within a reasonable time after such legislation as may be necessary for the confirmation of this Agreement and the creation of the said bond issue has passed the Newfoundland Legislature.

6. THE said railway steamship telegraph and express services shall be taken over by the Government as a going concern provided however that all debts due or claimed to be due on operating account to or by the Company shall be deemed to be included in this settlement. The Government shall be entitled to the balances to the credit of the Company's Railway and Steamship Account and Newfoundland Express Company Account in the Bank of Montreal.

7. THE Company shall procure that St. John's Light and Power Company, Limited, hereinafter called the Power Company, shall for itself and its assigns enter into a contract for not less than ten years nor more than thirty years for light and power for the Railway terminus and dock at a discount of twenty five per cent. off its regular rates to ordinary customers or at its lowest rates to any customer whichever shall be less.

8. TO protect such contract and ensure a continuous supply of light and power for St. John's the Government shall

(a) Subject to existing rights if any introduce legislation authorising the grant to the Power Company of the water powers of Pierre's Brook and Tor's Cove Brook (now held by the Company under an approved application under the Crown Lands Acts) as a reserve supply free of royalty or other charge until developed, after which the same shall be subject to an annual royalty of fifty cents per horsepower used;

(b) Introduce legislation to enable the Company to assign and mortgage its franchises under the St. John's Street Railway Charter 1896 and otherwise in order that necessary capital for improving the power plant and street railway may be secured;

(c) Subject to the approval of the Government Engineer or of persons from time to time nominated by him which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld permit the Power Company to carry its transmission lines along the right of way of the Trepassey and West End Branches of the Railway; and

(d) Provide the Power Company with a free site either in the Municipal Basin or on the dump or made land west of the Gas Works for the erection of a new Sub-Station at St. John's and the provision of terminal facilities for the street railway before requiring possession of the present sub-station and street railway terminal.

9. THE settlement contemplated by this Agreement shall be a complete final and absolute settlement of all questions and disputes outstanding between the Government and the Company on railway steamship telegraph express dock and other matters, and is intended to cover every relationship between the parties and exclude all possibility of arbitration or litigation between the parties in connection with anything which has happened prior thereto.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF His Excellency the Governor in Council has caused the Great Seal of the Colony of Newfoundland to set hereto and has signed these presents and Reid Newfoundland Company, Limited, has caused these presents to be executed in accordance with its regulations the day and year first before written.

By His Excellency's Command,

Colonial Secretary.

The Common Seal of Reid Newfoundland Company Limited was hereunto affixed in presence of

GARLAND CLUB HAD ENJOYABLE EVENING

Trinity East,

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago a very enjoyable evening was spent here by the members and friends of the "Garland Club," which terminated the meetings of the club for the summer season.

A splendid programme, featuring songs recitations and musical selections was gone through, which was greatly enjoyed.

The Garland Club was formed in March of last year, with officers as follows:

James Evely, President.
Reuben Layte, Vice President.
Wm. Fowlow of Martin, Secty.
Colin Evely, Treasurer.

The Club has had a very successful and interesting beginning, and everything points to a growing future.

Thanking you for space.

Yours very truly,
WM. FOWLOW, Secty.

Hon. Sir W. F. Coaker.

Sir,—I beg to avail of this opportunity, although rather late, to congratulate you on the high honour conferred by His Majesty King George V. May you live long to enjoy the well merited honor conferred on you. You sir have your enemies, but the public man today who has no dogs barking at his heels, is doing nothing for his country or people. Therefore your name will go down in history as one who has fought for the common people, and after your star has set, will be remembered as a king among men.

I have the honour to be,

Sir Wm. Coaker, K.B.E.

Sincere congratulations on the high honour which is yours in the knighthood recently conferred on you by His Majesty the King. No Newfoundlander in our country has or can possibly more worthily wear the honour than yourself. It is an honour which you have deservedly won by your life long service of hard toil on behalf of the common people of our country. The highest wish of your sincere friends is that you may be spared many years yet to enjoy your honour and continue your labours in the interests of the people whose cause you have always so fearlessly and nobly espoused.

Alaskan Volcano Again In Eruption

KING'S COVE, Alaska, June 6 (AP)—Shishaldin volcano, on Unimak Island, which erupted violently Novem-20, 1922, was emitting bursts of heavy smoke early in May, officers of the coast guard cutter Haida reported on arrival of the vessel here in the course of her annual patrol of Alaskan and Bering Sea waters.

The 1922 eruption of Shishaldin was picturesque, according to the stories of eyewitnesses. Great flames burst from the crater and the top of the volcano was blown high in the air, about 200 feet of the summit disappearing. Lava poured down the canyons, melting the snow, and the black streams could be seen for miles. Lava continued to flow for three days, and heavy smoke was emitted for more than a week. At one of the light houses on Unimak Pass, the flames lighted up the sky for days, appearing, according to the keepers, in the form of a cross.

On Christmas Eve, 1922, Pavlof Volcano, on the Alaskan Peninsula, was in eruption and lava flowed for several days thereafter, with a heavy emission of smoke for a longer period.

Natives at villages visited by the Haida declared that Bogoslov the "disappearing island" that first appeared from the sea during a period of heavy earthquakes and volcanic activity in 1906 had changed its contour during the last year, but the report could not be confirmed. Scientists declare that Bogoslov is in reality a submerged volcano, only the peak appearing above the surface of the ocean.

Interesing Notes From Caplin Cove

Caplin Cove, B.D.V.,
June 20th, 1923.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your esteemed paper to record a few items concerning this busy little settlement, especially at this time of year. There is a great hustle on now, everyone getting their boats and traps out in the water. There have been two or three traps out the last few days, and a very good sign of fish has been taken, and the fishermen say that it is the right quality. It has been busy on the waterfront the last few days, where all the people of the place are engaged building out their stages, which have to be done every year at a big cost, with hard labor, but we people don't despair. A good voyage brings contentment and ease for the long stormy months of winter.

I also wish to make mention of a very pretty marriage that took place here on Monday 4 p.m., the 19th, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, when Eli, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Cull was united in Hol Matrimony, to Janet, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Garland, both of this place.

The bride looked charming in a nice suit of cream silk and bridal veil to match. The bride boys were Samuel Garland and Llewellyn Cull, brothers of the bride and groom; and the girls were Florence, sister of the groom, and Miss Ethel Fagnar. Mr. Harrison Bryant acted as best man, while the Rev. Mr. Pitcher officated. The party, after leaving the church, proceeded to the home of Mr. Thos. Cull, where a splendidly laid table was awaiting.

Every person in the place was invited and the table tenders were kept busy up till 12 o'clock. The organ rendered some nice music and the gramophone was kept busy. I am sure everyone present enjoyed themselves, and on behalf of the community we extend our best wishes to the bride and groom for a long and happy life.

OBITUARY

MRS. ANNIE HUTCHINGS.

Death has again visited our little neighbourhood of Charles Brook and taken from our midst an old and respected citizen, in the person of Mrs. Annie Hutchings. She had reached the ripe age of 86 years, when death came.

On the 6th, of June, 1923 she was called away to the Great Beyond; she was ready to go. Although she was a sufferer for many months, she did not fear death, the last words being "My God, I am thine." It is good to be able at the last to say this.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. T. Thistle, having for his text: "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Pselm 90 chapter, verse 12. We had hymn 521 in the Methodist hymnbook, i.e., Still, Still With Thee. The hymn at the graveside was "Shall we gather at the river?".

A few more years shall roll,
A few more seasons come,
And we shall be with those that rest
Asleep within the tomb.

She leaves to mourn her sad loss, many friends and relatives. Her husband died four years before her. We believe he was watching and waiting at the gate for her. No one knows how much she suffered but God himself, but thank God, we have not to be sorry without hope. We all have the hope that when we are done of this world and its troubles, we are going home to meet those that are gone over the river before us.

To all her friends we extend our sincere sympathy and pray that the dear Master will comfort them for he has promised to comfort those that mourn.

And God has marked each sorrowing day
And numbered every secret tear;
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here.

Hoping I have not taken up too much space in your much esteemed paper, the Advocate.

Wishing you a prosperous year.

BEATRICE HUTCHINGS,
Charles Brook,

JOHN THOMAS WICKS.

Dear Sir,—Please grant me space in your valuable paper, the Advocate, to record the death of my beloved brother, John Thomas Wicks, aged 13 years and 8 months, who passed peace fully away to the Great Beyond, June 21st, 1923 where there will be no more pain or sorrow. He was a sufferer for the past few days. But bore his sickness patiently. And no doubt was a bright and promising young lad.

This young lad while in the bloom of youth, had such charming manners that he was loved by all who knew him; no doubt will be greatly missed by all his friends and relatives. He was laid to rest in the Methodist Cemetery June 24th, his funeral was largely attended. He leaves to mourn a sad loss a sorrowing father, mother, three brothers, four sisters and a large circles of friends, to whom the community extends t heir sincerest sympathy.

Darling brother, thou hast left us,
And on earth we'll see no more
But we hope to met up Yonder,
On that bright Celestical Shore.

A darling one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is still;
A vacant chair has reached our home.
Which never can be filled.

So blooms the human face divine,
When youth its beauty disappears
And left a tearles world behind
Which caused us grief and tears.

Inserted by his brother, Joshua W. Wicks, Burnt Point.

How Far Do Flies Fly?

Travel Feats by Bees and Butterflies.

By trapping bluebottles, colouring them with red powder, and then turning them loose, it has been discovered that a fly travels six miles in one day.

A honey bee will travel eight miles from its hive in search of honey, but the wasp rarely flies more than a mile or two from its nest.

Butterflies are great travellers, for flights of them have been seen far out at sea. They travel with the breeze, and at times get caught in a strong wind and may be carried a hundred miles or more.

A flight of locusts will rise to a great height and cover forty or fifty miles in a day. But once the locust swam comes to the ground, there it remains, devouring every green thing and never again using its wings.

Armies of Ants.

Moths fly long distances. It has been proved that a female moth caged will attract males from a coppice two miles away.

The ordinary ant never travels more than a couple of hundred feet from its nest, but African driver ants migate in great armies, marching for miles through the forest, and destroying all ife in their path. If they pass through a house nothing is left. Not only beetles and insects, but mice, rats and snakes are devoured.

On non-flying insects the gossamer spider holds the record as a traveller. Letting out a long light line which is caught by the wind, it rises to a great height, and is carried for many miles across country.

Methodist Conference Closing Session

Conference, beginning to thin out but with plenty of spirit left commenced at 11 a.m. The committee on lay agencies brought in their report. The most interesting thing therein was a definite suggestion that women be used as exhorters, lay readers and local preachers in order that all our places of worship be open every Sunday.

Dr. Curtis introduced a motion of welcome to our new Governor inasmuch as this was the first meeting of Conference since his arrival. The address will be duly presented.

The report of the Lord's Day Observance committee was discussed at some length. The coastal boats violate the Lord's Day constantly. Stores are open almost at will in the City. Sport is on the increase. Law will not make men righteous but law will procect the worker in his right to his weekly day of rest.

G. L. Mercer, presented the report of the Greeting. The financial statement showed a balance including bills receivable of something over $100. There had been quite an increase of subscribers. A great surprise was sprung on the Conference indeed the greatest surprise of the Conference, in the slate of officials for the Greeting for next year namely:—

Editor—Rev. J. G. Joyce.
Assistant—Rev. R. E. Fairbairn.
Business—Rev. C. H. Johnson.

The first item was carried in a silence that was quiet marked. Dr. Curtis the retiring editor has had twenty-five years service. He is still active, intensely active but his conviction was clear that with the increase —of his department work unloading had to commence. May it be many a long day before he has to lay his armour down.

Mr. Fairbairn's name was withdrawn on his behalf. Just the same Mr. Fairbairn is a writer. Every spare minute this summer must be given by him to literary craftsmanship. He has been invited by the Ryerson Press of Toronto to prepare for them a work on a set subject to form part of a uniform series of volumes. He will do it well.

Rev. C. H. Johnson, indicated frankly his preference for literary work compared with business. Conference concurred making him assistant editor.

In the afternoon all the mass of details that affect conference were cleared up. Mr. Harry Wyatt was elected business manager of Greeting. Rev. W. J. Morris was elected representative of the Conference on the General Board of Missions. The Rev. T. W. Atkinson resigned as hospital visitor. The conference put on record its appreciation of the seven years of faithful service given the Church by this still young old veteran.

The minutes were read and approved. The ever old, ever new, always impressive ending came on. Members of Conference rose to their felt. The minutes were signed by President and Secretary and the work of the 41st Conference will be recorded in about twelve months once more in the city ancient and hospitable St. John's.

The Water Main

Work on the laying of the section of twenty inch water main near the Basin is progressing favourably. The cut which parallels the old line is in some places very deep, runnig from eight to fifteen feet. The Council has done well to undertake this very necessary work as the existing sixteen inch section to be replaced is very badly corrorded and almost chocked with rust. The laying of the new pipes will tend to minimize the loss of pressure in the city pipes next winter and insure a plentiful supply of water against all contingencies. The pressure at City Hall is now standing at 120 lbs. to the square inch. This would represent about 140 lbs. on Water Street and about 80 lbs. on the higher levels. The City Engineer has had a most complete map of the city made. This map which shows every detail of the city has been recently litographed in London, and is a most useful work of reference where one seeks information regarding the city. The preparation of this map entailed much careful labor on the part of Mr. Ryan and his assistants and occupied seven years in the making. An enlarged copy showing in red the location of every hydrant, has been prepared for the special use of the Fire Department.

At The House

The House of Assembly met at 3.15 yesterday afternoon. After a number of questions had been asked and others answered, the Prime Minister moved the House into Committee of the Whole on Supply. The estimates for 193-24 were tabled after which the Committee rose.

The House then went into Committee on the Products Corporation Bill which was read section by section. Some discussion took place as to amendments, the matter being left over for further consideration.

The House next went into Committee on the Railway Resolutions, when Mr. Higgins, Leader of the Opposition, reviewed the situation in a speech of an hour's duration. Mr. Grimes replied to some points raised by Mr. Higgins and at 6 o'clock the House adjourned till 3 this afternoon.

It is interesting to note that all Union Stores are now stocking the great destroyer of pains and aches—Sloan's Liniment.

The Ocean's Mystery Creatures

Giant of the Deep That Weighs Fifteen Tons.

Man has explored the land surface of the earth pretty thoroughly, and has classified most of its animals. But we know little about the world's oceans and their mysteries.

How should we? Ships stick to the same tracks between ports and there are millions of square miles of sea where the smoke of a steamer is never seen. Even close to well-known shores, how are we to plumb the gigantic depths or discover what life exists in the abysses?

The mysterious sea monster captured recently off the coast of Florida has given naturalists a shock. They cannot laugh at it as they do at the sea serpent, for it has been lying on the beach for anyone to see, measure, or examine.

A Healthy Appetite.

This giant of the deep is quite unlike anything ever seen before. It weighs 33,600 pounds (15 tons); its hide is 3 inches thick, and inside it was an octopus weighing 400 pounds, a black fish weighing 1,500 pounds, and nearly four hundredweight of coral.

Nor is this strange beast by any means the first of such mysteries which have been cast up on the shore or taken by man. Two years ago a monster was found ten miles from Bombay, which was just as great a puzzle to naturalists.

This evil-looking creature was 25½ feet long and its huge face had an uncannily human expression. The mouth was three feet long, with extremely sharp teeth. The bocy, dull black, was curiously ribbed. Its eyes were small and its great fins had the shape of an elephant's ear. Perhaps the strangest thing about it was that it was still alive after being forty-eight hours out of water.

Elephant-like was the head of a creature caught in Port Fairy Bay, Southern Australia, in December, 1902. This fish, totally unlike anything ever seen before, was 9 feet 6 inches in length, had a tail like a screw shaft, a nose like a rhinoceros, and a huge toothless mouth. Its fins were large, and its skin black and soft.

Much smaller, but equally puzzling to naturalists, was a creature landed two years ago at Yarmouth by a steam tawler. Its body was seal-like in shape, and it resembled a seal in that it had two flippers, but its head tapered to a sort of beak, and it had a tail shaped like that of a porpoise.

The mouth was furnished with a double row of sharp teeth, and on top of its head was a blow-hole such as whales have. The creature's eyes were mere slits. No one could classify this extraordinary specimen.

From its enormously thick hide and its tiny and almost useless eyes, it is supposed that the giant Florida fish lived in the profound and chilly depths of the ocean.

For similar reasons it is believed that a fish taken some years ago on the coast of Maine was also a denizen of the very deep sea. The creature was six feet long and weighed about 200 pounds. Its head was extraordinarily wide, and its mouth like a great bag with small but sharp teeth. It was practically boneless, the bones being represented merely by gristle.

WEDDING BELLS

NEWELL—KENNEDY.

On last Tuesday morning a quiet but very pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Butler, Manuels when Miss Winifred May, daughter of Mrs. May M. and the late William Kennedy, Western Bay was united in Holy Wedlock to James Henry Newell, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. William Newell, Brigus.

The wedding room was very prettily decorated for the occasion and to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Flora Kennedy the bride entered leaning on the arm of Sir John C. Crosbie, as father-giver, and attended by Miss Nance Newell as bridesmaid, while Mr. Chesley Ayre Kennedy supported the groom. Rev. J. G. Joyce, pastor of Wesley Church performed the ceremony. The wedding party partook of a very sumptuous spread and Sir John C. Crosbie in a happy manner proposed the toast of the bride which was responded to by the bridegroom.

The happy couple accompanied by their friends then motored to St. John's, where they joined the S.S. Susu for Catalina to spend the honeymoon. Their future home will be in St. John's. The large number of presents and telegrams testified to the popularity of the young couple.

The "Advocate" joins in wishing both a happy voyage over life's matrimonial sea.

OBITUARY

MRS. F. J. KING

We regret to record to-day the death of Mrs. F. J. King, after an illness extending over about twelve months. It had been hoped that Mrs. King could have taken passage for England, her home, by the S. S. Sachem, but it was not to be, and yesterday she passed away. The deceased had made many friends since she arrived here as the bride of Mr. F. J. King some ten years ago. Gifted with a rich soprano voice that made her facile princeps in our community, she has been a delight to music lovers whenever she has graced the concert platform, and in this way and in all ways, has been a true helpmate to her husband. The shock of her death comes with heavy force on her four children who are left, and her husband, Mr. F. J. King, who is Organist and Choirmaster at the C. E. Cathedral. One little child, Roma, died suddenly early in this year.

A devoted wife, a loving mother and an estimable woman, Mrs. King will be missed by many, and the music of her voice will remain a fragrant memory with all who were privileged to hear her.

To those who mourn here, and in the Homeland, we offer our sincere sympathy.

165,000 Tons of Coal Burning Unchecked

Company Will Fill Contracts With U.S. Coal

SYDNEY, July 4—The final tightening of Union lines has marked the completion of the first twenty-four hours of the general strike of the Cape Breton coal miners and steel workers. Both Company and Union headquarters agreed to-night that the walkout was one hundred per cent. The only place where Union workers remained on the job to-night was at the New Waterford power house which supplies light, power and water to the town. The Dominion Coal Company has announced that it will divert its colliers from Sydney to Hampton Roads, Vermont. They state they have large contracts to fill and their only recourse is to send American coal up the St. Lawrence. The first interference with Company property occurred this afternoon at number two colliery where pickets refused to allow switch engines to shunt coal into the boiler plant where officials were endeavouring to keep up steam. As a result the fans have stopped and gas is accumulating in the pit, which is the largest coal mine in Canada, and within a few hours the pumps will be down and the mine flooding from water from submarine workings. The clerks and officials manning the boilers to keep the fans and pumps going in other mines have not been disturbed. A serious feature of the situation from the British Empire Steel Corporation point of view is the fire of the great coal banks at New Aberdeen where one hundred and sixty-five thousand tons of coal are awaiting shipment to Montreal. The fire has been burning about a month, but it has ben held in check by special men assigned to fighting it. There were no disturbances today in the strike areas.

GLACE BAY, N.S., July 4.—J. B. McLachlin, District Secretary of the United Miners Union of America, today emphatically denied the statement credited him last night by Hon. D. A. Cameron, representing the Provincial Government in the strike area, that the property of the Dominion Coal Company could go to hell.

SYDNEY, July 4—With over 10,500 men on strike in Cape Breton, the night passed without serious disturbances in the coal fields. Organized pickets are guarding twenty collieries of the British Empire Steel Corporation, but no attempt has been made to work the mines, and the Company officials pumping the pits have not been interfered with. The strikers have abandoned the fight to save the coal bank at New Aberdeen where 165,000 tons of coal have been burning for ten days.

HALIFAX, July 5—The provincial government announcement last night stated it had been decided to recruit more provincial police for duty in the Cape Breton strike zone.

Those accustomed to horses and riding would be given preference, it was said.

SYDNEY, July 5—With the miners of Cape Breton already out in sympathy with the steel workers of Sydney, they voted by a small majority yesterday to strike for the enforcement of the 1921 rate of wages. It is thought this will mean a strike for that purpose concurrent with the present one.

WINNIPEG, July 5—Approximately two hundred and fifty members of the active militia passed through Winnipeg late last night from Camp Hughes, Manitoba, enroute to Sydney. The contingent comprised units of the Strathcona Horse and Princess Pat's Canadian Light Infantry.

Dempsey entered the ring 5 minutes ago followed by Gibbons, 8.35 p.m.

First started Gibbons mouth bleeding. Dempsey doing most leading 8.39 p.m.

Second round, Gibbons closed Dempsey's eye; Dempsey only being using left jabs at Gibbons, has him bleeding furiously from mouth, 8.53 p.m.

Fifth round ended Gibbons playing for Dempsey's cut eye, but Dempsey finished strong, 8.55 p.m.

Seventh Gibbons appears to be weakened under Dempsey's punches in the last round. He is looking sick, 9.03 p.m.

Eighth round Gibbons hit Dempsey two lefts in the head, Dempsey replying with right to body. Gibbons landed Dempsey's chin. Dempsey at bell landed Gibbons' face with short rights and lefts, 9.11 p.m.

Ninth ended Dempsey drove Gibbons to the ropes by a blow to the stomach, Gibbons weakening, 9.13 p.m.

Tenth round, Dempsey drove Gibbons to the ropes again with jarring punches to head. Gibbons then faced the attack backing the champion to the ropes at bell, 9.16 p.m.

Eleventh, Gibbons ducked a right and hit Dempsey's chin. Dempsey replied with a left to the chin and two uppercuts, forcing Gibbons to retreat.

Dempsey gets decision in 15th round fight over 9.35 p.m.

CHAPTER XVII

The Flrt-nighters

She kissed Judy, and, after a moment's hesitation, lifted her cheek to Claud, who, blushing like a schoolboy, touched it with his lips.

He was young enough to be carried clean off his feet by this token of favor from the woman of whom so many were talking at the moment; and as he drove back with Judy to the hotel she had to listen to his praises of Carlotta.

But Judy seemed to be in the thrall of a mortal fear.

"It's already begun, Claud, with this supper to-night! And they'll pour incense at her feet, and through time she'll forget poor old Alan and her vow to Stair."

"Well, we can't help it, Judy," said Claud philosophically. " After all, neither we nor anybody else could expect a woman with gifts like that not to use them simply because of our old-fashioned prejudices."

"I haven't any prejudices," said Judy hotly. "Only I hope I do possess a little common sense and ordinary perspicacity. What a chance has Alan? Why all London will simply be at her feet now! Did you see them in the theatre to-night? I'm only groaning because of poor Alan."

"Well, I believe you are groaning prematurely. I don't know her very well, but I don't think she is that kind," said Claude vaguely. "Anyhow is was ripping of her to do what she did to-night, and to behave like that to me As for Alan, he ought to have stopped home and made sure of her—that's all I've got to say about it!"

"I wonder whether she told him? I think I must really ask her that tomorrow," said Judy.

And she did next afternoon in the drawing room of the hotel where they were having tea together, Carlotta having refused several tempting invitations in order to spend the rest of the Sunday with them.

She looked a little tired, and was rather quiet, although she did not attempt to minimise her success.

"All I want now, Carlotta, is for these horrid back-biting women at Ayr to come up in a body and see you in 'The Searchlight.' If I had the money I would even go to the expense of organizing an excursion for the purpose," said Judy with an odd touch of viciousness. " I suppose you always knew you had it in you. Indeed, anybody might have known if they had een you playing under all those hampering conditions at Ayr."

"I knew that I could act, of course. I have loved it all my life."

"And why did you not go on the stage ever so long ago then?"

"Because my father objected."

"And does he not object still?"

Carlotta pondered a moment before she answered:

"I am afraid that this time I did not ask him."

"They why—then why—"began Judy, but was deterred by something she saw in Carlotta's eyes. "May I just ask you one more question, dear?" she said, sitting forward a little eagerly. Has Alan an idea? Did he know you were to appear to-night?"

Carlotta shook her head.

"No, but I have his consent, Judy," she answered. "He gave me full liberty if ever I wished it.

As she spoke, her hand went up to her breast again and rested there with a little gesture which Judy had noted once or twice before, and wondered just what it meant.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ravelled Ends

While all these extraordinary currents were jowing in the lives of Stair folk, a singular and unmitigated gloom had descended upon The Lees.

True, they had callers in plenty; carriages that had long forgotten, if they had ever known the way to TheLees, now rolled thru its gate-The Lees, now rolled thru its gate-were hard put to it to answer all the questions they were plied with.

Peter had given them a formula, but, as his mother informed him, there was no formula under heaven which would shut people's mouths or their eyes, and she was hard put to it to keep her temper.

One afternoon, not long after the sailing of Alan's boat, a very smart dogcart, driven tandem, came up the short drive to The Lees, and the Lady who handled the reins with such conspicuous grace swung ligtly to the groun. It was Mrs. David Sillars of Kildoon, who was still often spoken of as "Meg Hamilton," once the most beautiful and popular of the matrons of thec ountry.

Now the mother of two fine sons, she scarcely looked a day older than when an adoring husband had his eyes opened regarding the creature he had won. The color was clear and healthful in her rounded cheek, her eyes were beaming with happiness, her whole aspect was that of a woman content, nay more, in love with life.

"If they are not at home, William," she said to the young groom, "you may go round to the stables, for I shall stop to tea."

He touched his hat. Ramsay appeared at the moment, admitted her with every sign of welcome, and the door was closed upon her.

Now Mrs. Garvock had been one of the matrons who might hame mothered David Sillars' wife in the stormy days of her unprotected youth, but her tongue had been one of the sharpest and most critical. Born in the strictest and most conventional of houses, she had neither pity for nor understanding of the poor, desperate young heart that beat itself against the bars of a prison without realizing that, with all its so-called freedom, it was a prison where her woman's heart was not at home.

But since Meg had sailed so magnificently into port as Mrs. David Sillars of Kildoon, wife of one of the richest as well as one of the most respected men in the country, on intimate terms with its most exclusive set, she was a very different creature. Therefore, though he had not crossed the threshold of The Lees for many a day, she was more than welcome.

Meg had always chosen her won company, and she chose it now. Her inner circle was small but intimate and dear. But she was sorry for the Garvocks, whom so many were blaming. Since the partition of Stair, somehow, they had forgotten the provocation Peter Garvock had received, and the country was inclined to cut him and his for their shabby treatment of their kinsfolk.

And all on accout of Carlotta Carlyon, a woman of less than no importance, too! That was the rub!

Mrs. David Sillars then received the warmest welcome at The Lees, tho the time had been when the doors were closed against her.

"I suppose you have heard that I have been out of Ayr for over two months, Mrs. Garvock? My husband and I had a trip to Jamaica—the second since our marriage. We spent our honeymoon there," said Meg blithely. "We only returned a few days ago, and I came up to say how sorry I am about all this upheaval in your family. And, perhaps, to hear the truth about it," she said frankly. "I myself have suffered from lying and evil speech, and it is one's duty to get at the truth as well as to live up to it. Ah, Lucy, how do you do?"

Lucy entered at the moment, looking sweet, but rather fragile, in the slight mourning for her uncle at Stair.

Now Mrs. Sillars did not greatly care for Lucy Garvock, who belonged to the narrow-minded, sharp-tongued order of the days before her ship came into port. She forebore to remark upon the change she noticed in the girl's looks, for rumor had been busy with Lucy Garvock's name, and it was freely said that she was fretting her heart out about the handsome cousin to whom she had given her heart unasked.

Tat this was only half the truth made small difference. It is seldom, indeed, that the woman gets the benefit of the doubt in an ill-balanced world.

"You are a lucky woman to have a husband who takes you off for lovely trips like that, Mrs. Sillars," said Mrs. Garvock. "We have to stick here whatever happens. We were surprised, knowing you were out of Scotland, when we heard that Mr. Sillars had bought some of the Stairland."

"Oh, his lawyers cabled to Santa Lucia for instructions, and David was pleased because that particular farm lies so nicely to Kildoon that he was very glad to get it," answered Meg with perfectf rankness. "Tell me, Mrs. Garvock—unless there is any special reason to keep it quiet, in which case, forgive the question—what has actually become of Alan Rankine?"

She forbore to look at Lucy as she spoke, for it was no mean spirit of prying that had brought her to The Lees, but a genuine desire to learn exactly what had happened during her absence, so that she might adjust her own conduct accordingly.

"How should I know, Mrs. Sillars? They say he has gone to America."

"America!" repeated Meg, pursing up her lips. "But why America?"

"I don't know, Mrs. Sillars."

"And what has become of Judy? Is it true that she has gone to Cambridge to live?"

"I have heard so, but really, I know no more than you do, and that only from hearsay. My niece did come here to say good-bye, but it was while Lucy and I were away. What I understand is that she has taken a small house, or rooms in Cambridge, where she can have her own things, and that the old nurse, Ann Christy is with her. I can tell yon no more."

"It is mighty sad," said Meg musingly, and her beautiful eyes grew limpid and soft. "Wherever Judy is she will make a home, and we need not break our hearts about her. She will come out on top. But Alan has gone to America! And without money! It does not sound well for Stair."

Mrs. Garvock made no reply, and at the moment Ramsay came in to serve tea, and the conversation had to be removed from topics to dangerous and personal.

It was impossible to resent Mrs. Siller's' frankness. for it was without a spice of venom or vulgar prying. When the man had left the room again she leaned forward and spoke out with still greater frankness.

"Can't anything be done, Mrs. Garvock, to mend this frightful breakage? Was it worth while for Peter to behave as he did?. Was she worth it?"

OBITUARY

The passing of Mr. William Waterman Horwood, for many years in the Sales Department of the Horwood Lumber Company, so suddenly at noon yesterday, was not altogether unexpected, as he had been suffering from heart trouble the past six months, something bec t months, sometimes becoming alarmingly ill, but his buoyant cheerful spirit caused him to rally, and by God's goodness he would appear again on Water Street to receive the hearty hand shake of his many friends. His services will be missed by the firm, but where he will be more greatly missed is at Wesley Church, where he had been Financial Steward for over twenty years. Mr. Horwood had lived at Brigus and Carbonear in early life and came to St. John's to reside about 1888. His bright boys soon secured employment and his was a happy home. During the visit of the Evangelists Bromley and Hutchinson, Mr. Horwoor realized he had "a charge to keep, a God to glorify," and he joined that band of men who led on by the Revd. George Boyd and others, began the extension of Methodism in the West End of the city about thirty years ago. As a man and a Christian he could be trusted, and was absolutely loyal to his friends. Only those who knew him intimately could measure his worth and influence for good. His excellent and devoted wife was behind him in her efforts with the Ladies Church and Parsonage Aid, her open purse and pantry has assisted the poor, and every good cause. He leaves his partner, two daughters, Mrs. Ethel Cross, of Masonic Terrace, City; Mrs. Jeannie Rowe, of Heart's Content, and three sons, Edward, at Boston; Walter at Montreal, and Charles at Grand Falls, to morn the loss of one of the best of husbands and fathers.

The funeral will take place to-morrow, Friday, at 2.30 o'clock, from the residence of his son-in-law, Captain Cross.

WEST COAST EDITOR IS OPTIMISTIC FOR BIG PULP INDUSTRY

Predicts Unprecedented Prosperity

SYDNEY, C.B., June 20.—(Star Special)—"We expect, inside of two years, to have a town with a population of not less than 15,000 people on the shore of Bay of Islands," said A. L. Barrett, managing editor of the Western Star, Curling, who is visiting this city en route to Halifax. With the erection and operation of the new pulp and paper plants on the Humber river we look for an influx of at least that many workmen and their families.

"The Northern Construction Company of Ontario has at the moment a gang of engineers and laborers working at Corner Brook, where the finishing plant will be erected. A shipload comprising seven locomotives, five steam shovels and other machinery is already on the ground, and the work of running out the shipping piers is now well under way. Other steamers with cargo for the construction company are due in a few days. Three hundred men are employed at this point.

"The mill at Corner Brook will have a capacity twice that of the big Northcliffe plant at Grand Falls, which turns out 200 tons of paper daily. At this place 5,000 men will be employed, with another 2,000 in the pulp works and timber cutting in the woods.

"The company owns hundreds of acres of wilderness of the finest woods, stretching along the Humber and inland to Grand Lake, which an adequate reforestation policy would be inexhaustible.

"The pulp plant will be located about 30 miles from the mouth of the Humber, at that point where Junction Brook empties into Deer Lake. The latter river, a wild, turbulent stream, dashes through impassable gorges impossible to navigate. About half way along is a fall 200 feet high. At this point a dam will be constructed and a canal dug to a smaller stream, for the purpose of diverting the heavy flow of water to the power house, where electricity will be generated to operate the plants.

"The company plans to develop 160,000, half of which they will use, and propose leasing the remainder. The Newfoundland Government hopes to realize $160,000 a year royalty on the power utilized. Another English company is at present negotiating with Sir Richard Squires looking to the erection of a nitrate plant on the Humber, which would be a subsidiary to that operated by the Armstrong-Whitworth Corporation. It is quite likely this proposition will be accepted, and a contract entered into during the present session of the Colony Government. The exact nature of the proposed operations has not been disclosed.

"A third proposal before the Government is the working of copper areas at Gull Pond, located on the Reid Railway, about halfway between Grand Lake and Millertown Junction, a distance of about 90 miles. Should cheap power be available from the Humber plant it is the intention to erect electric smelters at this point. An assay of mineral taken out shows sufficient ore to warrant operations on a large scale.

"Slate and marbel abound in the Bay of Islands district, both prove present in marketable quantities.

"With the operation of these plants I look forward to the west coast enjoying unprecedented prosperity."

German Rum-Runner Succumbs To Strategy

BERGEN, Norway, June 4 (AP)—Strategy plays its part now and then in Norway in the taking of rum-runners, and the recent capture of the 200,-ton German yacht Elizabeth is a case in point.

Standing off the Norwegian coast the Elizabeth was in need of coal, and sent in a motor boat and 17 men to get a supply. The boat was seized, and the men replaced by 17 armed police and customs officers. Approaching the Elizabeth, the police signalled for three men to come off in a row-boat to help with the unloading of the coal supposted to be aboard. When they reached the motor boat they were overpowered and handcuffed. The police then drew alongside the Elizabeth and boarded her.

The Germans still on board the yacht made a desperate resistance and one of them loosed the ship's dog, a gigantic Great Dane, who leaped at the throat of one of the police, but was shot dead. Eventually the smugglers were overpowered and put in irons.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 5th., 1923.

Railway Matters

When the House was in Committee on the Railway Resolutions yesterday, Sir William Coaker took occasion to reply to some remarks of Sir Michael Cashin in connection with the Railway Commission's work in 1920, in which Sir Michael pointed out that the operation of the road under control of the Commission had not been successful. Sir William reminded the House that immediately the Government came into power in 1919 they were confronted with the problem of keeping the railway going. The best thing that could be done at that time was to place the management of the road in the hands of a Commission who would see that whatever monies had to be expended on Government account would be used to the best advantage. When the Commission took over the railway the Reid Nfld. Co. were practically bankrupt and could no longer undertake the upkeep of the system which was in a decidedly run-down condition. It was found necessary at the outset to spend half a million dollars on maintenance, apart altogether from any loss on operation, before the road was capable of being operated on any scale. The whole outfit had been allowed to get down to the lowest possible ebb of disrepair and the task of putting it in any sort of efficient working condition was a tremendous one. However, this was done by the Commission and it was in these improvements, that should have been attended to years before, that a big percentage of the total deficit was incurred.

We found, said Sir William, that operation under joint control could not be a success and it was finally decided to place the road under the management of a capable outside man who would have full powers. In pursuance of this, Mr. Morgan was put in charge and he enjoyed as great a measure of freedom of control as it was possible to secure. During the time he was there the earnings of the railway came nearer to expenditure than was the case during any previous period. Sir William said he was not in favor of Government control and operation and he did not think that the Government had any intention of retaining the management of the railway. All knew that the Government could not come into the House with an operating scheme for the future till they had first disposed of the old contractors, but he hoped that by the end of September arrangements will be made that will prove satisfactory to the whole country.

A Deplorable Situation

The situation in Sydney has developed from bad to worse; and now 10,500 miners and steel workers are on strike, which, as the despatch indicates, represent 100 per cent. of the workingmen.

When it is considered that over 100,000 men, women and children are indirectly dependent upon the Cape Breton operations and that large coal contracts for Canadian supply by the British Empire Steel Co. will be filled from the United States, which would indicate a prolonged cessation of operations in Sydney, the whole affair becomes almost appalling.

The prevention by the strikers of attempts of the Company's officials to keep steam for the purpose of keeping the mines free from gas and water appears to be most unjustified, as whatever grievances exist from the strikers' point of view, there can be no sound argument for vindictive injury to the mines, which have, and they must hope, will provide them with their future livelihood.

It is to be hoped that an early solution will be arrived at between the workingmen and the Company, or we fear that the affect will be more widespreading than is apparent even at the present time.

In all such times as these, when feelings between the disputing parties run high, it is difficult to act upon the realization that the national welfare should stand far above class considerations or vindictive feelings which may result in ruination of great industries. Canada has grave troubles to-day, like most other countries; and the cessation of one of her greatest industries at this particular time, will strike her a hard blow, which may also be felt in our midst.

FOREST PROTECTION

There is a more or less general newspaper propaganda through Canada for the conservation of the timber resources of that country; and the Canadian Government have recently given its Cabinet power to stop the exportation of pulpwood across the border into the United States.

Whether action will be taken to stop this export of pulpwood in the face of possible American tariff retaliation is not known, but the action of the Canadian Federal Government is significant of the general opinion that this most valuable source of national wealth, viz., the forests, should be conserved as much as possible for Canadian manufacturing and employment giving purposes.

The pulpwood industries have a large future and Canada evidently realises the necessity not only of encouraging full development of her resources within her borders, but of extreme precautionary measures against the ravages of such forest fires as have recently burnt timber areas, valuing millions of dollars.

What applies to Canada applies with equal force to our country, especially now that another great pulp industry will shortly be in operation. If we want to get the full measure of benefit from our splendid water power resources, there is a crying need of preservation of our forest wealth. Forest wealth and water-power go hand in hand.

The smoke of forest fires has already darkened our skies this year, and perhaps a timely warning will serve the good purpose of impressing on all sportsmen, trouters, etc., the duty of being most careful regarding fires.

The Montreal Daily Star, regarding this important matter of forest preservation has the following to say:

"During the last few weeks, wanton fires have robbed us of standing timber worth millions and millions of dollars. If a city were burned to the ground, worth half as much, we would be staggered at the calamity. But we do not visualise the greater loss when it occurs far-away in the empty forest.

"By all manner of means, we should stop it. The hunter should be impressed profoundly with the need for guarding his fires. The settler should be shown that when he starts a little blaze to clear his new farm of "slash"—dry limbs left after the trees have been cut and carried off—he may imperil forest wealth beyond his power to compute. And when either the hunter or the settler works mischief through carelessness after this impressive warning, he should be judged as guilty of crime as if he were a "fire-bug" caught at arson in a thickly-populated city. Canada, with her mounting debt and her continuing deficits, must guard her natural wealth as she would her life."

Railway Settlement is a Good One for Country, Says Opposition Member

The House of Assembly met at 3.15 yesterday, when petitions were presented by Messrs. Walsh and Higgins.

The Prime Minister tabled the report of the Auditor General.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Products Corporation Bill (Humber). The exemption from taxation clause was made to read "till 1973" or for fifty years.

The minimum wage of $2.50 per day is agreed to by the Company and an undertaking to that effect will be entered into by letter to the Government. The over supply of power developed will be at the disposal of the Government for Railway electrification purposes in preference to other prospective customers. The bill was put through Committee and by unanimous consent was read a third time and sent to the Legislative Council.

The House next went into Committee of the Whole on the Railway Resolutions when addresses were made by the following Opposition members:—Mr. Higgins, Sir M. P. Cashin, Mr. C. Hunt, Mr. P. J. Cashin, Mr. N. J. Vinnicombe, Mr. W. Walsh, Mr. Woodford, Mr. J. Moore, (Carbonear), Mr. Sullivan, Mr. P. Moore, (Ferryland,) and Mr. Sinnott. Sir William Coaker and Mr. Downey spoke from the Government side. The former explained the connection of the Commission of 1920 with the Railway, a digest of his remarks appearing elsewhere.

Mr. Downey wished to clear up a statement made by him a few days ago, in relation to the operation of the Railway by the Government. He said that by the appointment of an independent Commission which would be untrammelled by Government interference, the railway could be ran as successfully as by a private concern. He had been in close touch with railway operation, particularly on the West Coast, for many years and he was in a position to know where changes should be made and what was best to be done with regard to winter operation of the trunk line. There was no reason why the service should not be continued throughout the winter months between St. John's and Mary March's and between Port aux Basques and Little River, dropping the twenty-five or thirty miles intervening which it was next to impossible to keep open. It had been done before when instead of heavy engines and rotaries, the road was only equipped with small locomotives and push plows and there is no rea- Resolutions before the Chair was by no means a bad one from the Country's standpoint. He reviewed at length the payments that had been made to the Reids when the '98 Contract was amended in 1901 and pointed out that the Reids had fared better then than they were going to now. Lands that had been given to them for nothing were bought back at a tremendous cost, the telegraph service which was no better than a white elephant, had been taken off their hands and a million dollars paid them for it. For the repairs and improvements that had been made in the short space of three years from '98 to 1901, they had been paid over $9,000,000.

In the present instance the Government was getting far more than the value of the two million dollars they were paying the Reids. First of all there were the eight steamers which were insured for over $900,000. It was impossible to get anything like this insurance at Lloyd's to-day

Then there was the dock, which as Mr. Downey had said, could be put in first class condition for a comparatively small expenditure and with somewhat improved machine shops we could compete successfully with Halifax for dock work. Mr. Sullivan said that the Humber plant when it began operation would mean a couple of hundred thousand dollars increased earnings for the railway. He felt that it would be worth while paying a substantial subbsidy to outside contractors to operate the road for us.

The Resolutions passed the House without amendment on a strict party vote, and the Bill was read a third time.

Before the Committee rose, Mr. Higgins referred to a statement made in son why it cannot be done now.

Mr. Downey also referred to the Dry Dock. It had been stated, he said, that the dock was in a falling-down condition. This was not so. He had made the original survey for the dock and he knew whereof he spoke. It was true that the dock showed signs of wear and tear, but its present defects were superficial only and with the expenditure of a hundred thousand dollars or even less, it could be put in as good condition as ever it was.

Mr. Sullivan, while feeling that the Government should have let the Reids default, was emphatic on the point that the settlement involved in the one of the City papers some time ago, in which it was alleged that he had taken part in a strike settlement between the Reid Nfld. Co. and their employees and that he had taken sides with the Company against the men. A member of the Government, by which, Mr. Higgins said, was meant. Sir William Coaker was alleged to have been present at a meeting when Mr. Higgins expressed his views against the workers interests and Mr. Higgins asked Sir William to state whether the transaction had ever taken place or not.

Sir William said he had never attended a meeting of the Railway Co. at which Mr. Higgins was present nor had he any knowledge of anything of the kind Mr. Higgins had referred to.

The Hose then adjorned at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

OUR DERBY DAY

To Mr. Arthur Hiscock, President Regatta Committee.

Dear Arthur, now it won't be long, before we'll take our places,
To mix among the happy throng,
in August at the races.
There's hundreds who remember you, since they were little laddies,
When they the races went to view, along with their dear "daddies."

And all of them want you to know, it pleases them to hear,
Sir,
Once more, as in the long ago,
that they will see you there,
Sir,
The old time vim is in you yet, the same old smile you're showing,
As shown for fifty years, I bet,
since first you witnessed rowing.
Ah, Arthur dear, you can tell, of which we'd ne'er grow weary,
Of "Lillian," "Native," "Heather Bell," the "Volunteer" and
"Mary,"
When Ferguson from Halifax, thought nothing here could beat him,
Till "plain Dick Squires" gave him his "cracks" and badly did defeat him.

You look as youthful yet, dear
Sir, and as cheerful as a linnet,
As when our "dads" were fond of
"her," that fine boat built by Sinnott,
When manned by brave Placentia
"boys," no boat was rowed more smarter,
They won the Prince of Wales' prize, now did they not, dear Arthur.

That challenge race it was a
"beaut," of it much has been spoken,
When "Johnnie" Coaker, then a youth, Tom Leahy's skill had broken.
Ah, God be with those good old days, o'er which I draw the curtain,
Which you shall ne'er forget to praise, of that I'm sure and certain.

Now, when on earth you've ceased to be, and crossed o'er Jordan's water,
There is a wish, as held by me, by
St. John's sons and daughters,
That at its gates you may be met by old friends' smiling faces;
Those whom you often think on yet, who loved the old time races.

MYRTLE.

Don't Laugh at Your Husband

Dorothy Dix on Wit That Kills

A bewildered woman went to an old woman and said:

"I've come to ask you what is the matter with John and me. John has ceased to care for me. When we were married three years ago he was wildly in love with me, and could not get enough of my society. Now he avoids me, and never wants to go anywhere with me. I don't know what has happened to change him."

"You are wrecking your home with your tongue," replied the older woman. "You have the knack of saying sharp and cutting things that wound like a two-edged sword, and with this lethal weapon you are slaying your happiness.

"You have made John afraid of you. He's ill at ease in your presence because he doesn't know where you are going to stab next, and he doesn't want to go out with you because he cannot endure having you hold him up as a figure of fun for the ridicule of other people.

"Perhaps you don't realize it, but all your best stories centre around some weakness of his, or some blunder he has made. I have seen you set friends in a roar as you caricatured one of his peculiarities, and I have watched the hurt look that came into his face, to be succeeded by one of bitter resentment, that should have warned you of the danger you were running. But it didn't."

When a woman has the fatal gift of sarcasm, she cannot refrain from using it. She will cut her nearest and dearest to the quick for the pleasure of saying something smart. She will alienate a lifelong friend with an epigram.

There is nothing that any of us fear and dread as ridicule. There is nothing we hate so much as being put in a position that makes us look absurd. None of us has any sense of humour when we are the point of the joke ourselves.

We are especially sensitive to ridicule from those we love, because we hope that, somehow, their affection for us is great enough to hide our defects from their eyes, and they see us not as the poor,faltering creatures we are, but idolized into what we should be.

This is why it is rash for a woman to make fun of her husband. He doesn't want any wife sharpening her wits on him, nor will he stand being made the goat in her side-splitting anecodotes of domestic life.

What Man Dislikes.

The woman with the serpent tongue makes no hit with men. Not many men like a witty woman, and they even fight shy of the woman who laughs much and who has a keen sense of humour, because they are always afraid she might possibly be laughing at them.

They can't stand that. There is something in a man which demands that a woman should respect him and admire him and look up to him. He can't endure being a joke to her, especially if he is her husband.

Swallow the sarcastic speeches that rise to your lips even though they choke you, and, above all, never yield to the temptation to tell a funny story of which your husband is the butt.

Laugh with your husband but never at him.

A woman's weapon is her tongue. She can use it to hurt her husband and drive him away from her, or she can sing with it a siren song that will bind him to her for ever.

WOMAN'S HEALTH RESTORED

She Claims Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did It After Everything Else Failed

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I feel that I ought to let you know about my case. I was ailing and could barely do my housework and washing I was so run-down, just from having one child. I took a lot of medicines and had doctors. Then I gave them all up and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel wonderfully good now. I do everything that comes along, and we all take your medicine as a tonic when we don't feel just so. I am thankful for what the Vegetable Compound has done for my health and for my family."—Mrs. MARY SAIECHECK, 944 28th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Letters like these testify to the value of the Vegetable Compound. These women speak from the fullness of their hearts. They describe as correctly as they can their conditions: First, those symptoms that affected them most conspicuously; and later the disappearance of those symptoms. They are sincere expressions of gratitude. For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so praised by women.

Canrda's Progress Under Confederation

By FRANK YEIGH.

TORONTO, June 29—(By Frank Yeigh, for The Canadian Press.) The story of Canada's progress under Confederation is one to thrill every dweller, and to warrant alluring dreams for the future.

And this fifty-sixth birthday of the Dominion is a fitting occasion to review the past, and to take fresh heed for the morrow.

We can measure or comprehend the distance this Britian of the west has travelled since 1867, when the federation pact was consummated, and the new Dominion set up housekeeping for itself in a national sense. The gulf between the Then and the Now is a wide one, as thru the young giants' limbs there throbbed the blood of youth and the thrills of conscious energy.

Then, only four provinces entered into the pact, with an area of 377,000 square miles; now a chain of nine links clasp the continent like a girdle, and the 377,000 square miles have grown to 3,729,000!

Then, the baby dominion traded with scarcely a score of countries; now, our trade channels radiate to the seven seas and the five continents, and the 120 millions of total trade have expanded to nearly two millions!

Then, Canada talked in small millions; now the Dominion is a billion-dollar country; a billion bushels of grain, worth a billion dollars, then only 78 millions were invested in the truly infant industries; now the sum is well beyond the three billion mark.

Or take the Government revenue, think of less than 20 millions to run the country as against the 400 million receipts in these spacious days. Our national investments make the total high—nearly seven billions in agriculture and live stock; over two-and a half billions in railways; three and a half billions in manufactures, and these are merely samples.

Or if our national wealth is reckoned what a contrast between the modest figures of 1867 and the estimated 17 billions of to-day, making the Canadian the richest man in the world per captia! Why, we have the tidy sum of nearly two billions tucked away in our savings banks for a rainy day!

Take our railways as a measuring rod between the past and the present; how small the 2,288 miles of 1868 look over against the 40,000 of today, even if they come high, giving the Dominion the largest railway mileage per capita of any country in the world. Then, the primitive lines reached a very limited area, and not a mile existed north of the Great Lakes. Look at the may for a contrast, and compare the engine for contrast, and compare locomotive in Winnipeg with a modern mogul drawing the Trans-Canada, or the National Express.

Then, 'way back in the sixties,' we were only playing at farming. Perhaps that is relatively true, yet, with less than 15 per cent. of the available land under cultivation. The Sower went forth to sow is superceded by the drill; the sweep of the scythe has been replaced by the song of the reaper, and the tractor is a wholesaler in its operations.

Think too, of the new inventions even since the birth of the Dominion. No father of Confederation ever dreamed of a harnessed Niagara, of farm machinery run by pressing a button, the twin powers of water and electricy. When driving old Dobbin over a rough turn-pike, the occupant of his choice never imagined a horseless carriage over paved highways!

If the men of '67 had suddenly seen an aeroplane cleaving the sky like a great bird, he would have dropped dead with fright or excitement, or predicted the end of the world; or, if they had known that ere the Dominion was scarcely more than a half a century old, human speech could have been carried over wires, and then even the wires rendered unnecessary, one again fears for the reaction.

One would fain wish this old-timer could revisit the Canada of 1923 in order to see what has happened—to look for example, on the locks of the new Welland Canal, or the massive masonary of the Chippawa-Queenston power canal, or to watch the great ocean liners nose their way a thousand miles inland to the port of Montreal, or to realise the big Canadian cities of today, born of the little towns of yesterday. Winnipeg would astonish him into silence; the sister cities of the plains and coast—all created under Confederation—would impress him with their modernity.

What was in his day the Great Lone Land is now the Great Farm of the Dominion—the great thousand-mile farm stretching from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains. Wonderful trains would carry him to and through and over the wonderful Alpine world of the west; and on arriving at Vancouver and Victoria, the heart would melt in him.

One repeats, what a wonderful story this is, of Canada, and less than half of the half has been even hinted at. And if this is the tale of a mere half century, if this has been the ratio of progress, what of the next half-century span?

"Awake my country, the hour is great with change," sang our Canadian Roberts in his ode for the Canadian Confederacy. "The hour of dreams is done, lo, on the hills the gleam!'

Truly, the future is all a gleam, Nothing can stop the growth of this young giant of the north. Even the awful war, with its equally awful loss in men and material wealth has not seriously retarded our national expansion.

And if the Canadian of today can thus survey a Confederation span containing such wonderous development, who dare predict what the coming decades hold in the womb of time!

Watch Canada Grow! Help Canada Grow! Help to make Canada as great a heritage for our children as our fathers made it for theirs—this Land of the Northern Zone; this western outpost of the Empire; this whelp of the Red mother lion, this half-way home on the trade routes of the world. This land of Opportunity!

"Lord of the Lands, make Canada Thine own!"

Couple Devote 70 Years To Passion Play Service

OBERAMMERGAU, June 9 (AP)—Jakob and Mathilde Rutz have just celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, one more milestone in two lives which have been devoted to the Passion Play for 70 years. Rutz was the village smithy of Oberammergau until age pulled him away from the forge, and is the father-in-law of Anton Lang, the renowned portrayer of the life of Christ.

In 1850, as a babe of three, Rutz took his original part in Oberammergau's famous play. He was then cast as Adam's son in one of the Old Testament tableaux which feature the performances. Ten years later he appeared as an alto soloist and in 1870 was chief assistant to the Passion Play prologist and choir leader, Johannes Diemer. During the performances of 1880, Diemer again held this combination position but Rutz often substituted for him and in 1890 replaced the leader entirely.

For centuries the Diemer family has furnished the choir leader, Rutz being the only person ever to break in on this otherwise uninterrupted succession.

In 1870, when the Passion Play season had to be interrupted, Rutz was called to the colors for the Franco-Prussian war. It was an ironical coincidence that he was billeted during the hostilities with a French family which had once been his guests at Oberammergau while attending the play.

Mother Rutz's devotion to the Passion Play has expressed itself principally in hospitably caring for many of the thousands of tourists who trek this way every ten years. One of her two sons lives here and took a prominent part in last year's play; the other lives in Munich and is therefore not eligible to the cast. Her daughter Mathilde, the wife of Anton Lang, made a name for herself in former years as a Passion Play artist.

Rutz continues active in public life, as a member of the village government and one of the Passion Play executive committeemen.

Japanese Imperial Family To Become More Democratic

LONDON, June 10 (AP)—In line with the democratic tendencies of European kings and queens, the Japanese Imperial Family, says a dispatch from Tokio, will in future adopt a more democratic attitude in its public activities. Much of the pomp and ceremony which accompanied the social functions of the royal house in the past will be eliminated.

Members of the imperial family plan to attend theatrical performances, concerts and similar public gatherings more frequently, and will mingle with the people with greater freedom than heretofore. Guards of honor which have invariably appeared in the past as escorts to members of the imperial household are being dispensed with.

Russians In Berlin United To Build New Churches

BERLIN, June (AP)—Soviet officials failed to stop the religious activities of the Othodox Russians in Berlin when they closed the chapel in the Russian Embassy and converted the beautiful sanctuary into offices. Two chapels have replaced the one which was closed.

One was improvised in a large hall and the other is a German evangelical church which has been converted into a Russian orthodox sanctuary. But both of the places of worship lack the spirit of a building constructed especially for the Russian service, and the refugees are planning to erect a new church.

Many of the professors of theology and other religious leaders exiled from Russia are in Berlin, and courses in religious subjects are attracting many students.

Artificial Lumber Gives Promise of Structural Utility

WASHINGTON, July 3 (AP)—Experiments in the making of "artificial" lumber are arousing increasing interest among government officials and leaders in the lumber industry.

Although none of the product has been marketed, officials of the National Lumber Manufacturers association declare that tests already made of a synthetic composition produced by Minnesota lumber interests show it possesses many qualities making it available for structural purposes.

The experiments are based on somewhat the same principle as that employed in the manufacture of paper from wood pulp. In the process not only the trunks and branches of young trees, but the leaves and smaller parts as well are ground up and mixed with other substances, virtually eliminating waste. The resulting compound is capable of being moulded into sizes and shapes of almost any description needed in building.

Officials of the Lumber Manufacturers association declare that if a practical method of this sort can be perfected, the result may be to revolutionize the entire lumber industry. Aside from utilizing the present great waste in converting trees into usable lumber, they say, it presents a solution to the manufacturer's problem of finding sufficient material in the country's rapidly diminishing timber resources.

From the time the standing tree is turned by the sawmill into planks and boards and applied in construction, from 60 to 65 percent. has been wasted. This includes stumps, chips, bark and branches, plank and log trimmings and a huge amount of sawdust. The new method will use all of this.

Already $750,000 have been spent in experimental work in this direction by the Weyerhaeuser lumber interests in Minnesota. Their experiments are said to have been undertaken largely because one of the chief obstacles encountered by lumber manufacturers is the competition of paper manufacturers, who can use young trees unsuitable for lumber purposes. This is especially important in the Lake states, where pulp mills so complete with sawmills as to make it practically certain that very little saw timber will be grown commercially under present conditions. Timber owners find that in from 15 to 20 years they can grow crops of spruce that will be suitable for the pulp and paper mills, whereas it would take from 50 to 100 years to grow a crop that would meet the requirements of the lumberman.

According to the manufacturers' association, tests have shown the artificial lumber to have a satisfactory tensile strength and to be capable of being sawed, planed and nailed, so that the product lacks only the charm of the grain effects of natural wood. Officials of the forestry service, while declaring they had not yet been assured the strength of the artificial boards equals that of the natural ones, believe they would be useful for many purposes. One of their strong points, it is said at the forestry service, is their waterproof qualities and insulation against heat and cold.

THE NAVY IN THE ORIENT.

Singapore Free Press: Even with Singapore armed to the teeth, the possible battlefield with Japan is so far away that the Navy could not reach it, could not fight effectively, and could not get away for want of fuel. In that respect the selection of Singapore instead of Hongkong is a decided advantage to Japan. But why not look at the matter logically If we are to have a navy, it must be effective. How can it be effective unless it has bases?

End of United Irish League

LONDON, June 27—The United Irish League, which had been in existance for fifty years and was a strong supporter of Charles Stewart Parnell in the troublous times in Ireland when Parnell was the Irish National Leader, came to an end quietly at a recent conference held in Leeds. There were more than 200 delegates to the conference, which was presided over by Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., who has been a member of the British House of Commons continuously cince 1880, and whose 75th birthday on May 18th was signally honoured by his fellow members of the House.

'Tay Pay' in addressing the gathering at the outset of the conference, said the United Irish League must come to an end because new conditions demanded new organizations and newmethods. So long as a portion of Ireland was cut off from the rest of Ireland, he said, so long would the Irish question be unsettled. The members would be loyal British citizens prepared to take their share of the political life of the country. The new organization is known as the Irish Democratic League.

Joyous Bucharest Needs No Boosters to Sing Its Praises

BUCHAREST, June 10 (AP)—Bucharest is growing faster than any city in Europe. It is spreading out in all directions over the neighboring plains in an effort to house its population of a million, which is still growing. In 1913 the capital's population was only 338,000, which included 35,000 Austrians and Hungarians and 43,000 Jews.

Bucharest is the joy city of Europe. Love and laughter, song and wine, dancing and card-playing are as dear to the Rumanian heart as to the gayest spirits in Bohemia.

The Roumanian eats five time a day, and is ready for another repast at midnight. He dislikes going to bed. He loves his wine-jug and his cards. And he would die without his rum-coffee and his gossip about the latest scandal of the town.

The Calle Victoriei, Bucharest's Fifth Avenue, is studded with pretty women in the latest Parisian gowns and jewels. Smart looking army officers in high patent-leather boots and blue and gold uniform strut along the rialto, shedding smiles on Rumania's lovely feminity. Among these dashing Don Juans and Lotharios one sees motely groups of gypsy men and women with their numerous progeny, some of the children without a stitch of clothing. For this is the land of Romany, of the race from which the gypsy fortune-tellers and vagabonds of the United States claim descent. And the gypsy believes that beauty unadorned is adorned the most.

Rumanian women, who admittedly are the most attractive and fascinating in the Balkans, owe their striking beauty to their strain of gypsy or Greek blood, their langorous eyes and their olive complexions. They are buoyant and vivacious, romantic and pleasure-loving.

Both sexes in Rumanian use perfumery, rouge and cosmetics in profusion. The cosmetic business is one of the most profitable in Rumania. The Rumanian men are tall, handsome and dark, but are inclined to be effeminate. They wear form-fitting jackets, waistbands and affect monocles and spats. This, of course, does not apply to the peasantry, who, are a sturdy, homely, energetic lot, and constitute the backbone of the country and its chief hope for the future.

Although Bucharest prides itself on being the Paris of the Balkans, and French is spoken more than any other foreign tongue, there is a great desire on the part of the educated classes to learn English. American tutors are much in demand.

There are at present three newspapers printed in French, which is the court and society language, but it probably will not be long before a daily paper published in English will be established. Queen Marie, who is an accomplished writer, has published all her books in English, and that is the language of the royal family, although both the king and queen command facile use of nalf a dozen other tongues.

City Oddfellows Entertain Visiting Grand Patriarch

Mr. J. H. Belleny, Grand Patriarch for the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland, of the Patriarchial Branch of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, arrived by Monday's express, and was met at the station by C.W. White, C.P., and G. W. Soper, P.C.P., of the reception committee, after which he was shown the beauty spots around the city and driven to Bowring Park, the scenery of which he greatly enjoyed.

Last night he paid a visit to Premier Encampment at the I.O.O.F. Hall, and after the meeting was the guest of the Encampment at a dinner at the West End Restaurant. At this enjoyable social function the following toast list and musical program were gone through, the speeches being of an exceptionally high order, and the selections beautifully rendered.

Toast List

"The King"—Prop. The Chairman, C.W. White, C.P.; resp. "God Save the King."

Song—Duncan Cook, P.C.P.

"The Grand Encampment," prop. G. W. Soper, P.C.P.; resp. J.H. Belleny, G.P.

Song—Patriarch B.R. Humber, Bell Island.

"The Land We Live In," prop. Patriarch S. A. Case; resp. D. Cook, P. C.P.

"Ode to Newfoundland."

Song—A. Heath, P.C.P.

"Sister Encampments," prop, J. C. Phillips, P.C.P.; resp. J. H. Belleny G.P.

"Past District Deputy Grand Patriarch," prop. A. Heath, P.C.P.; resp. S. Butler, P.D.D.G.P.

"The Chairman," prop. Duncan Cook, P.C.P.; resp. the Chairman, C. White, C.P.

"National Anthem."

Mr. A. Walker acted as accompanist during the evening.

Mr. Belleny left by the express today for Grand Falls from which place he goes to Pictou for the opening of the Oddfellows' Home at that place on July 17. He will visit the different Encampments in the Provinces and will afterwards attend the session of the Grand Encampment at Bridgewater, N.S.

To-night's Game

The B.I.S. and Saints are contesting in to-night's game on St. George's Field, and a lively game is expected. Footballers Want Race

Footballers request that the decision of the Regatta Committe to eliminate the football race be reconsidered. They state that the majority of the teams are anxious to have the race on and are willing to submit the names of eight bonafide footballers for each team who will practice and to select a crew from the eight only.

In advocating the race they point out 1—that the football race has always been one of the most interesting of the programme and was certainly the most talked of one; 2—in view of the large number of citizens interested in football it seems unfair that they should be disregarded in the Regatta. 3—contributions to the Regatta fund have been greatly augmented by subscriptions from the football fans and players, and now, if there is no football race, they will probably not be forthcoming, with consequent loss to the committee.

The teams are willing to send representatives to the Regatta Committee's meeting and to adopt any rules and regulations and abide by them, which the Committee may require.

In view of the fact that the evident desire of the public is to have it, it is felt that the committee may be moved to reconsider its decision.

A Debenture Drawing

The Anglo Newfoundland Development Company has notified the Law Debenture Corporation, the trustees under the trust deed securing the eight per cent. Guaranteed Fifteen-yer Second Mortgage Debentures of the company, of its intention to redeom on January 31 next £300,000 worth of debentures out of the £800,000 issued and outstanding.

The issue was made in September, 1920, at 98, and whilst it was provided that redemption should take place at 103 per cent by annual drawings commencing in December, 1926, power was reserved to repay at 103 in any earlier year on three months' notice ending in January or July.

The drawing has been made and debenture-holders whose debentures have been drawn for redemption will be notified by the end of the present month.—London Exchange.

Died at Montreal

Mr. William Moore, engineer at the General Hospital received a wire from his brother at Montreal last evening, which conveyed the sad news of the death of Philip Moore, is father at Montreal, yestermay morning in his 79th year.

Left mourn are a wife, daughter and three sons, Philip, Government boiler inspector at Montreal, another at Boston and William of this city. Mr. P. F. Moore, M.H.A., is a cousin.

Sable I. Takes Crew

The sailing of the Sable I. has been postponed to await the arrival of the crew of wrecked steamer Banba, from Trepassey. Immediately on arrival here the crew will embark on the Sable I. for St. Pierre.

LOCAL ITEMS

The following report was received by the Department of Marine and Fisheries yesterday from Flower's Cove:—"Moderate S. W. wind, fair and warm. No report of any fish today."

The crew of the wrecked steamer "Banba" arrived at Trepassey yesterday and will come to St. John's on the train to-day, when arrangements will be made to send them home.

Candidates Must Have Thick Skins

Use of Unparliamentary Language In Election Campaign Not Libellous.

"Candidates for political honors are not supposed to be super-sensitive, and should be prepared to take in good part attacks made upon themselves, their party or the principles they represent. Besides, their character should be such that do not fear attack." In these words, Mr. Justice Maclennan, in Superior Court, dismissed the libel suit for $10,000 instituted by Wilfrid Lamarre against A. Grosleau for alleged defamatory utterances in the course of a wildly demonstrative meeting held at St. Irenee Hall during the course of the last federal campaign, in which Lamarre, Conservative candidate for Westmount-St. Henry, was defeated. Lamarre stated that at the meeting in question, Grosleau had arisen and asked, before a large concourse of people, whether or not it was true that Lamarre had "sheltered and protected Hon. Mr. Sevigny in the course of the conscription campaign in 1917, to protect him from the onslaught of the infuriated mob, and had led Sevigny out dressed as an old woman to take him to his, Lamarre's home, for the night."

EXCHANGE "COMPLIMENTS."

Lamarre had denied the allegation, whereupon Grosleau is said to have replied, "You're a liar." The compliment was handed back and forth until, amid scenes of disorderly commotion, the meeting broke up.

Lamarre said that he had suffered damages to his honor, name and reputation, to the extent of $10,000 as a result.

Grosleau denied that any misstatement had been made by himself, and asked dismissal of the action.

The court, commenting on the affair, ruled that even had the utterance been made as to Sevigny and Lamarre, it did not constitute a libel. Unparliamentary language had been used by both men at the meeting, and no further damage had resulted. A candidate in an election had to be prepared to hear criticism and attacks on himself and his platform or party. Such was "an unpleasant but necessary appendage to every candidate." In view of this, the action was dismissed for want of grounds for prosecution.

ALBERTA COLLEGE GRADUATES FIRST WOMAN AGRICULTURIST

EDMONTON, Alta., June 24 (AP)—The degree of bachelor of science has been awarded Miss Sheila Marryatt, the first woman graduate in agriculture from the University of Alberta. She completed the prescribed three-year agricultural course with honors in a class of several hundred men.

Miss Marryatt, sister of the Hon. Irene Parlby, minister without portfolio in the Alberta provincial cabinet, has announced that she will take up a quarter section near Alix, Alta., and will apply scientific agricultural methods to the land. Miss Marryatt believes that women can succeed as farmers just as well as men.

Government statistics based upon census figures show that 15,841 women in the Dominion are operating farms.

Ireland is Tranquil as Britain, Says Mr. Healey

Free State Is Now Definitely Established.

10,000 HELD AS PRISONERS.

LONDON, July 5—"Ireland to-day is as tranquil as Great Britain" said Timothy Healy, Governor General of the Irish Free State, in an interview with the Daily Express prior to his return to Ireland last evening, after conversations with the Imperial authorities over Irish affairs. "The Free State is now estalishbed definitely, despite the internal assaults that have been made upon it," the Governor General said. He added that now peace has been established the Government was preoccupied with how to terminate the situation in which to its sorrow it found itself, still holding ten thousand Irish men prisoners. The Government's purpose, Mr. Healy said, was to release these prisoners as rapidly as possible without exposing the public to a recrudescence of disorder and they were now being freed at the rate of about three hundred weekly.

MANY TROOPS ARE NOW IN SYDNEY

All Quiet at Mines and Steel Works.

SYDNEY, July 5—Reinforcements for military guards now on duty in Cape Breton strike area were on their way this afternoon by special trains from points as far west as Winnipeg, and recruiting for Provincial police units is progressing in Halifax and other places, while unofficial reports emanated from Halifax to-day that the Militia would be mobilized if available, permanent forces proved incapable of coping with the situation in Cape Breton. Quiet has reigned among the ten thousand miners and steel workers during the past 24 hours and military occupation of the trouble centres is proceeding. Brigadier General Thacker, officer commanding military district number six, arrived in Sydney this morning inspecting operations of troops and will probably remain to personally supervise their activities in Cape Breton.

QUIET PREVAILS

SYDNEY, July 5—(By Canadian Press Staff Correspondent)—Throughout today and up until a late hour tonight the Cape Breton strike area was so quiet one might almost hear the proverbial pin drop. Steel helmeted soldiers guarded the property of the British Empire Steel Corporation at Sydney and mounted policemen roamed about the streets in the immediate vicinity of the plant, but the residents of the affected district kept indoors for the most part and no untoward incident developed. Tonight the band of H.M.S. Wisteria, anchored off the Royal Cape Breton Yacht Club, played gaily to the evident enjoyment of hundreds lining the shore. Inspection of the colliery districts this afternoon revealed like conditions to those prevailing in Sydney. At Glace Bay a baseball match drew a slim attendance. The miners for the most part played about their own doorsteps and the streets were practically deserted. Only at Dominion Number Two, the heart of the colliery district, supplying as it does, the electrical energy required to operate the ventilating systems of the nine other mines, was there evidence of the struggle. Here the plant is being picketed by 250 strikers, working in four relays on six hour shifts. Earlier in the present strike coal cars enroute to the boiler plant were dumped on instructions of the pickets but to-day there was no interference of this nature and food supplies for officials operating the machinery required to protect the property, were permitted to enter.

A CHURCH WAR

MOSCOW, July 5.—A new international Church war has begun. Dr. Tikhon, recently released from prison, signing himself boldly as Patriarch has addressed an appeal to all faithful Clergy and Laymen, depecating the new Church and declaring his untrocking was illegal and ineffective. Tikhon's appeal brands the revivalists as seekers after profits, titles and awards.

BRITISH TROOPS IN "INDEPENDENCE DAY" PARADE

PORTLAND, Ore., July 5.—President Harding spoke at an Independence Day gathering here yesterday, when the feature of the parade was participation by two companies of sailors and marines under arms, from the British cruiser Curlew. The President said history was being made, for never before had British naval foarces marched in an American Independence Day parade.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ravelled Ends

Now Meg this time spoke out of ignorance, for she had no personal knowledge of Carlotta. At the time of the rehearsals, after the performance which had laid the foundation of the tragedy, she had been confined to her house at Kildoon for domestic reasons and therefore had missed the opportunity of which Judy Rankine had made such good use.

"Decidedly not!" snapped Mrs. Garvock. "But things are like that in life. It is the insects who torment and make it intolerable!"

"Oh, I shouldn't call her an insect exactly, Mrs. Garvock," said Meg with a sigh, "I have something to tell you. We spent two nights in London on the way home, and we went to the Imperial Theatre to see a play all London is talking about. And the lady who has made the play such a success is—Miss Carlyon!"

Mr. Garvock's face expressed the horror appropriate to the occasion, and a full mead of surprise.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Miss Carlyon as An Actress"

"You don't say so! Are you sure? I heard that she had gone away from Ayr, but of course we supposed that her object was to be with him, and to see him off at Liverpool."

"I am quite sure. I know her well enough to make no mistake. And there is no doubt that she is a great actress. As I sat there looking at and watching her, I felt nothing but pity for Alan Rankine, for what chance has he—a nameless adventurer in America—and she with the whole world practically at her feet?"

Lucy made a little nervous gesture with her hands, not lost upon Mrs. Sillars.

"If it is as you say," began Mrs. Garvock, "certainly risks are great. A great actress, is she? Now I wonder whether he knew what she was going to do when he left her? And Judy?—I am sure she would disapprove most highly! Now that she is supposed to be pledged to Stair, it is hardly the thing—I should have thought!"

"Oh, that is a matter of little importance. It is the personal side of the thing I should be afraid of. And if I were Alan's friend, or in his confidence, I should simply advise him to come back and take her out of it all. Otherwise—"

She shrugged her shoulders, and her expression was significant. Now while there was no venom or malice in Mrs. Sillar's tongue, or in her heart, she did some mischief that day which she afterwards could very heartily have wished undone. In her eagerness to be kind to these two lonely women, suffering through no fault of their own, she had done less than justice to a woman she knew nothing about.

"I was in town before I came to The Lees," she went on, finding that Mrs. Garvock did not seem inclined to pursue the subject, "and in the Sandgate I saw two furniture vans before the door of the Clock House; so quite evidently, Miss Carlyon's people are joining her in London. A great clearance, is it not? We could ill spare the Rankine's from Stair, Mrs. Gavock, but we shall have to call upon the new people and make them welome. They are very nice, and will take great care of the house, I am sure."

Mrs. Sillars now having finished her tea, said she thought she would go, and bade them good-bye heartily; hoping tey would soon come to Kildoon, and that all the trouble and worry would blow over.

She was genuinely sorry for them, for quite evidently they felt the position keenly, and, through no fault of their own were being talked about much more than they relished. Indeed the extraordinary number of new versions of the story rampant in the country would not bear telling.

"Mother," said Lucy, when they were left alone, "I wish you would order the carriage, and let us go down to the Clock House to say good-bye."

"Why should we do that, my dear? It would surely be more dignified to leave them alone now."

"Oh, but Mrs. Carlyon wrote a very kind letter. You said yourself it was a kind letter."

"I did, and I answered it, Lucy. Nothing more is needed."

"But I do so want to go! I must go, mother! Please don't refure, or I will get ready and walk down myself."

"You may order the carriage, then; though it will inconvenience the people greatly, I am sure, to have us calling on the very same day, the furniture vans are at the door."

"You know that won't trouble Mrs. Carlyon or the Professor the least bit," Lucy reminded her.

Shortly after they were being driven over the smooth roads, in the delightful sunshine, towards the town.

Arrived at the Sandgate, they found the pantechnicons at the Clock House door, precisely as Mrs. Sillars had said.

The coachman was instructed to stop a little to one side, and both laa ies alighted andw alked up to the door, which was wide open. When no one answered their ring at the bell, they ventured in, and ascended the steps from the lower hall to the first landing, where they encountered Mrs. Carlyon in a strange costume, apparently directing operations.

She had a small Chippendale dressing glass in her hand, which she nearly dropped in her surprise at the sight of the ladies fom The Lees. But though surprised, it was just as Lucy said, she was not in the least disconcerted, but welcomed them quite warmly, and invited them to come in to a small sitting room at the back, which had been left untouched.

"I've just had tea in there. Can I offer you some".

They thanked her, but assured her they had already had it.

"I am quite glad to see you, and to have a chance of sitting down for a few minutes. What a business this removal is! And this came upon us with such suddenness. Of course, the Professor has gone! He went yesterday. Oh, yes; it was much better. He is in anguish when this sort of thing happens! I do hope that this move will be thel ast, and that this lotta will not hustle us any more."

So much citizen of the world was Mrs. Carlyon that she saw and felt noting incongruous in the visit of The Lees ladies, and no thought of apologizing for the condition of the house occurred to her. Still carrying the glass, she ushered them into the little room, where she kept accurate accounts, and suc stores as the limited size of the establishment permitted. It had an old-fashioned knee-hole desk across the window, on which the tea tray still stood, a long low couch, an easy chair and a faded rug on the floor.

Both ladies seated themselves on the sofa, while Mrs. Carlyon leaned against the corner of the writing-table.

"Such an upset! But, mind, I do not say I'm sorry to leave Ayr just now! I suppose you haven't heard what has happened to Carlotta?"

Mrs. Garvock pondered a moment, and then said outright that Mrs. Sillars called upon them that very afternoon with the astounding news.

"Sillars—Sillars? I don't know her. How did she know? Because, though the play was spoken of in the newspapers, Carlotta's name was not given— only her stage name, Miss Margaret Tenderten."

"Mrs Sillars has just come from London, where she saw her in the play."

Mrs. Carlyon's face flushed a little with pleasurable excitement.

"What did she say about it? Do tell me! You can't imagine what I have felt like shut up here, while all that was going on in London."

"Mrs. Sillars says she is a great actress," said Mrs. Garvock kindly; for now that all chance of relationship with what she called "those queer people" was at an end, she could afford to be very friendly and interested in everything concerning them.

"Of course I have always known that! And if it hadn't been for her father, she would have gone on the stage long since. It was our old friend Graham Madox, who persuaded her. He was a student at Peterhouse in my husband's time there, and we knew him very well. It's a splendid chance for her, though I do not quite understand why she should have taken it up all of a sudden just now."

She hesitated just there, remembering that she was hovering perilously near the edge of debatable ground.

"No doubt Miss Carlyon had her own sufficient reasons," suggested Mrs. Garvock.

"Oh, probably. There was never one like her for knowing her own mind! But I can't help wondering whether she got Mr. Rankine's consent before he went away. My belief is that when a woman goes on the stage, when she has gifts like Carlotta, she hasn't the same interest in matrimony. I shouldn't be at all surprised if that came to an end too. You see, with a girl like Carlotta, one never knows! You can't lay down hard and fast rules for her, or calculate with any certainty how she is going to behave."

Lucy's eyes fluttered down, but Mrs. Carlyon, quite unconscious of the undercurrents, babbled on.

"Of course, she may have taken it just to fill and distract her mind just now; but I know far better than most people what is likely to be the end of it. She'll never give it up after she has felt the glamour of it."

"You gave it up—did you not?" asked Mrs. Garvock, with a smile.

Mrs. Carlyon shrugged her ample shoulders and her petty faded face, looking a little tired and old with the bright May sunshine on it, smile ruefully.

"Oh, I was never a great actress! —only a comedy performer, and not much at that. But I liked the life, and the Professor had no idea what I gave up when I married and went down to that stuffy old college to live! I tell you, I nearly died the first year. But, you see, I promised him to give up, and I kept my promise. It's no use pretending I'm sorry for what Carlotta has done, because I'm not. I'm glad, and I hardly know how to bear myself till I get to London to see her in her proper place, where she ought to have been years ago if her father hadn't been so prejudiced."

"I suppose he gave in this time," murmured Mrs. Garvock merely for the sake of something to say.

"Carlotta didn't ask him. She simply wrote and said she was going to do it. He has gone up, poor dear man, with some idea of expostulating with her. He doesn't know that she is fixed up now irrevocably, for many months to come! But Carlotta knows how to manage him. I've no doubt that, by to-day, she's got him talked over. They are a wonderful pair! The one is quite lost without the other. It was very kind of you to drop in like this to say good-bye. I did think I would write a line tonight, after I got down to the hotel to sleep, and tell you what had happened."

Universal Language Makes Great Strides In England

LONDON, June 9 (A.P.)—Esperanto the universal language, is making much headway in England among the commercial classes. The British Esperanto Association, organized in the interests of furthering the language in Great Britain, has grown by leaps and bounds.

The association has about 15,000 active membership, and classes are held in London seven times a week. Hundreds of pupils have already graduated from the course and readily find positions translating the language for use on the continent, where it is now becoming a popular form of communication between commercial houses.

"Will you let me kiss you if I give you a penny?" asked the little boy's aunt.

"A penny!" he exclaimed. "Why, I get more than that for taking castor oil."

CANADA MAY PROHIBIT EXPORT OF PULP WOOD

May Result in Increase in Manufacturing Industries in Canada

OTTAWA.—Hon. W. S. Fielding's notice of motion to the effect that the Export Act be amended "by providing that the Governor-in-Council by regulation may prohibit the export of pulp wood of the variety kind, place of origin or having particulars of ownership or production prescibed in the regulation," is considered here as a very important measure. There was evidence early in the session that the campaign along these lines was having effect, but only recently has its actual progress been so apparent.

The action of the government in making artificial silk products dutiable has had quick effect in the announcement that Courtlaud's a large English silk manufacturing firm, will build a plant near Quebec City for the manufacture of artificial silk. In deciding on its course the government was fully aware of the developments likely to follow, though they were hardly expected so soon. It is understood that the chances of a considerable addition to the pulp and paper industry are good, the viscose process used largely in the manufacture of artificial silk being based on the use of certain materials used in this industry.

Canada imported $2,000,000 of artificial silk last year; but the big attraction is the strong foreign demand which Canada, because of her large supplies of raw materials, should have an advantage in supplying.

It is understood that the manufacture of artificial silk employs quite a large percentage of labor.

NEWFOUNDLAND METHODIST CONFERENCE

PASTORAL ADDRESS, 1923.

To the Members of the Methodist Church Within the Bounds of the Methodist Conference

DEARLY BELOVED—We greet you as your pastors in the name of Our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we both have access to the Father by Faith. That there may be an increase of the Divine favor and advancement and growth of the work of Grace in your hearts through the knowledge of Him who hath called us to glory and virtue, is our prayer.

At this time, many of you will recall with sorrow the memory of the Rev. W. H. Browning, whose life has so impressed itself upon the Methodist people of our dear land. With strong faith in God, and in labour more abundant, he ever sought to do His Father's will.

Two probationers, Brethren Howell and Martin, faithful and promising young men, have also been called home.

Year by year the Company of Witnesses is growing larger, with those whose faces were once familiar to us.

We will not be negligent to put you in remembrance of these things which you have been taught, that you may be established in the Faith. Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works. Love we believe to be the basis of moral excellence. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy might." "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." Therefore, set your hearts unto all the word of this law, which ye shall command your children to observe to do. For it is not a vain thing for you, because it is your life. Out of love of God our fathers heartened each other to the doing of things that were beautiful and sought to spread Scriptural Holiness throughout the land. Much of our failure in life to-day is due to loss of courage and that enthusiasm which is born of the inspiration that cometh from Above.

The times in which we live are trying times. The conditions as found in the social and political world are testing the patience and faith of men. The Spirit of the Age, of Elijah the Prophet and of the age of the Baptist is not yet dead. The temptation of making love and friendship to the world is as great as ever, but it is also true that our mode of life may be under the guidance of the Spirit. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the Sons of God. Be not moulded after the fashion of the age, but shape your life in the image of the Lord in following his steps, in the character of Love, Mercy, and Humility.

We are grateful to the Giver of all good for His gracious blessings. Doors of opportunity to us. .b-mmk Doors of opportunity have been opened to us. Guidance in our activities has been given, and in many instances, we have been enabled to lead men and women unto the Kingdom. Your hearty co-operation and loyalty in the Great Work have greatly encouraged and helped us.

The Family Life

It has been said that the most important force in modern civilization is the home fireside.

If that be so, then everything which threatens the integrity of the family life is an enemy to Christian civilization. The consecrated sanctuary of the home existed before the public assembly. The love that controls angry tempers and overcomes disappointment is an indispensable element in the parental authority and guidance which should be observed and re-established in the homes of our people.

With sorrow we have often observed neglect of parental guidance and careful family government. We also agree with the report of the committee of evangelism and social service when it says that parents must realize their immeasurable responsibility for more careful and systematic religious instruction in the home. We place special emphasis upon the conduct of regular worship by the family as a unit. Grace at means, the regular reading of the bible, singing of hymns, and daily prayer, all conduce to the integrity of the family.

Until the child reaches the age of responsibility the parent represents to the child both the government of God and the individual conscience, and it is of solemn importance that the child will learn well the lesson of obedience to firm, loving, intelligent family government.

Humanly speaking, Methodism owes a great deal to the faith and good family government of Susannah Wesley. Let us not be indifferent to home training and early conversion and think irresistible grace will ultimately turn our children from sin.

The statement has been made on good authority. "That the race never produced a more intelligent, more heroic and Christianlike girlhood than we have in our Christian homes to-day. Some of the finest missionary work which does not always appear in print is being done on many of the home mission fields by these consecrated girls and women.

Small Feet they are to guide
In Wisdom's ways,
And lisping lips to teach
Blessings and Praise;
And wistful aged eyes,
Grow dim with tears,
A'wearying for the light
Beyond the years.

Missions

The history of Methodism in Newfoundland has been a great one. Following in John Wesley's footsteps we have had a deep interest in the task of building up the Kingdom of God both at home and abroad. Along our shores over a hundred years ago Missionaries from the Old Land carried the message of the love of God and the infinite value of the human soul. The ranks of Methodism have always had zealous friends and sturdy champions of every great and good cause. The missionary spirit, we believe, is as much alive as ever it was. With increased information has come a firmer hold upon Missionary principle. We are moved to activity more by love and duty than by sentiment. We earnestly desire your faithful and effective support in our work and your prayers that fruit may abound in all our work of faith, labor and love. We are reminded of the fact that we are still to some degree dependent upon the missionary board for the maintenance of missionaries on our home Mission field. The mother church has twelve in family, and we are members one of another. The spiritual needs of our people have been met because means to some extent have been sent us by the Methodist mission board.

There are other ways by which our Connexionalism has made us beneficiaries, such as the help received by our superannuated ministers, and the splendid literature for our Sunday schools, and the sympathy and special prayers of our great church.

Prohibition

In the more remote past pastors and people have been as one in the furtherance of temperance and prohibition, and we do not wish to lose this unity of spirit in a great cause. Though we have not always achieved success we have succeeded generally in maintaining a clear conscience. We still have need, however, to keep in view our high calling and to seek and have that love which suffereth long and is kind, which is not easily provoked, and thinketh no evil. The world has its allurements but the Christian is above the world. His life is hidden with God; hence his courage, his truth, his power. He finds his pleasure not in the diversions of life, but in Christ. Our Church is greatly strengthened by men who are decisive in action, and who will not compromise with the world.

General Conference

The general conference of the Methodist Church was held at Toronto last Fall. The object of this gathering of representatives of our churches from the Atlantic to the Pacific may be found in the words of the general superintendent's address. They are as follows:

"This assembly in the Providence of God has been called together to consider how best to mediate the Gospel of the Grace of God to such a time as this, and to plan for the effective realization of its powers."

That our church is not declining in strength, in so far as statistics can reveal the intellectual and spiritual life of the church may be seen from the following increases of the Quadrennial over the preceding one:—

Total membership Increase	18,753
Sunday School Increase	19,556
Gifts for Missions Increase	$1,484,227

These figures inspire thanksgiving for the past and courage for the future.

The question of church union was a vital one to the general conference. A committee was appointed to print a statement of information showing the advances made towards church union by this general conference, this statement in due time to be read from the pulpits of our land.

Evangelism

We are learning more and more the meaning of the word Evangelism. Evangelism is not completed when persons are converted and confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Master. All such should be enrolled as members of the church, and be developed by many processes of Christian nurture into full-grown christians. Beliefs and sentiments are of no avail unless wrought into deeds of righteousness.

Sunday School

Again we would remind you of the place the Sunday school holds in its relation to the church as a whole. Every support by way of inspiration and encouragement to teachers and S.S. workers should be given, for if we fail in the work of nurturing and training the children, we fail in all.

Means of Grace

Neither can we emphasize too strongly the value and importance of attendance at the class meeting and the observance of the sacrament of the Lord's supper. These are means of grace to those who believe in them and use them. In this age which boasts that its philosophy is a philosophy of facts, it may be well for us to be reminded that they are heavenly places lying very near us and that we can come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. We are running a great risk of losing what we have gained when we neglect the God appointed public and private means of grace. May we ever have the witness of His spirit, His guidance, and the assurance that all we do is right and according to His will and word, (well pleasing in his sight.)

Beloved, follow not that which is evil but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God.

You may be misunderstood by the world, for the world knoweth not God, but if we are the sons of God by faith in Jesus, we are blessed of Him in life and death.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him. Every man that hath his hope is pure. They are blessed forever who keep the commands of God and the faith of Jesus.

In closing our address to you, we exhort that ye rejoice in the Lord always, for He is able to supply all your needs according to His riches in Christ Jesus.

In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

May the God of grace, who hath called us into his eternal glory by Christ Jesus make you perfect, stablish and strengthen you.

Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savious Jesus Christ. To Him be glory now and forever. Amen.—W. J. MORRIS, President.

AT THE CITY HALL

The weekly meeting of the Council was held yesterday afternoon. Deputy Mayor Martin presided and Councillors Outerbridge, Vinnicombe, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

The meeting was a short one, routine matters only being given attention.

T.P. Halley, on behalf of his client, Mr. H. Budden, LeMarchant Rd., served notice on the council of his intention to take action unless his client is either permitted to repair or make alterations to his dwelling. The propety is at the corner of LeMarchant Road and Pleasant Street, and the Council for some time past has had under consideration the removal of the range of houses so as to widen this thorofare. Mr. Halley is to be informed that the council in the course of a week or two will give a definite answer in the matter.

E.J. Neary claimed compensation to the amount of $150.00 for damage to his property, Pleasant Street, during the storm on the night of the 27th ulto. His communication was referred to the City solicitor for report as to the council's position.

Mr. Harold MacPherson wrote re traffic conditions at the junction of Newtown Road and Parade St. stating that the board fence around St. George's Field constituted a "blind corner" which was very dangerous to motorists and drivers of other vehicles.

It was decided that the Nfld Football League, who are the lessees of the property be communicated with.

Mr. F. McKay called attention to arrangements made last year with regard to extension sewer, Alexander Street, to which he contributed his portion of cost, and asked that the work be proceeded with. It was ordered accordingly.

Inspector-General Hutchings stated he had no objection to permit being given Mr. Christian to erect garage at corner of Bannerman and Gower Streets, provided the building was properly ventilated and covered with non-inflammable material.

The following plans were passed subject to the approval of the City Engineer, and on the usual conditions: Dwelling—Jas. Lucas, McNeil Street; Extensions—A Warnell, 6 Monroe Street; A. S. Wadden, Buchanan Street; G. Coish, LeMarchant Road; A. Buckingham, Job Street; C. Picco, Carter's Hill.

It was brought to the notice of the Board that many of the seats placed in various parts of the city, such as the Promenade, St. Thomas's Avenue and of Garrison Hill, (particularly the last mentioned) had been considerably damaged by some persons unknown. Such destruction of public property on the part of citizens is certainly to be regretted, and the council intend making inquiries and having the guilty parties severely dealt with.

A discussion took place as to the motor traffic in Bowring Park, and it was unanimously decided that motor cars and cycles be not allowed to enter the park.

Petitions were received from Taxi ownes with reference to the new taffic regulations and it was decided that the council will meet a deputation from the respective stands at a special meeting to be held for the purpose.

Reports of the City Engineer, Sanitary Supervisor, etc., were tabled, also the health report showing seventeen new cases of Scarlet Fever in the city during the week.

Payrolls and Accounts presented were ordered paid and requisitions for the departments acceded to.

The meeting them adjourned.

ANOTHER DRAFT

LONDON, Ont., July 5—Orders were received here last night from Ottawa to prepare a further draft of the Medical Ordnance Army Service and other units for immediate transportation to the Sydney strike area.

BANK OF ENGLAND RAISES RATE

LONDON, July 5.—The Bank of England to-day raised the rate to four per cent. from the three per cent. level, which had prevailed for the year. The raise was not unexpected in financial circles.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 5.—The Turkish Government has rescinded the order, issued on Monday, prohibiting all foreigners, except British, French and Italians, from leaving the country without permission from the authorities at Angora.

MANY DEAD AS RESULT OF COLLISION

LEEDS, July 5.—The Manchester express, drawn by two engines, collided with an engine outside a tunnel while running at full speed. The crash piled up a mass of wreckage from which doctors and nurses and ambulance men recovered the bodies of six dead and seven badly injured.

Why LIBBY'S MILK is specially rich in butter fat.

Libby's Milk is known as the milk that good cooks use because it is so rich in butter fat. 7½ teaspoons in every 16 oz. can! It has this high percentage because, first, it comes from selected herds in the finest dairy sections of the country, where men specialize in raising cows that give exceptionally rich milk. Then right there, we remove more than half the moisture, making it double rich.

Thousands of women are using this richer milk. You will find it gives the very richness you want in all your cooking. Get a can; try it today in one of your specialties.

Write for free recipe folder.

Upon request, we will gladly send you one of our new folders containing recipes sent us by good cooks who use Libby's Milk.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, JULY 6th., 1923.

THE FORCES OF LABOUR

With 10,500 mine and steel workers on strike in Cape Breton with 40,000 dockmen on strike in London and with labour unrest in various countries, the fight between Labour and Capital assumes a keen world-wide interest, and relations between the two bodies appear to be strained very dangerously.

The forces of Labour seem to be developing greater strength every day and its organizations and unions are forging new links of understanding for centralized action for securing their demands.

In this connection it may be noted that Mr. John C. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers of America, consisting of over a million workingmen, has recently reached an agreement with the mine unions of England and other countries, under which agreement the miners of those countries will refuse to mine coal intended to be sent to America at any time when American miners are on strike for better pay or for any other cause. Similarly, American miners under take these conditions when English or other miners are on strike.

If this agreement be adhered to it will give labour unions a vastly greater power than heretofore possessed, will soon cement the coal miners of the world into a centralized force and will constitute it as a supremely organized factor of immense controlling strength.

When the miners' strike occurred in Great Britain a few years ago, it will be noted that American mine owners sent huge quantities of American coal to the Old Country, which largely helped to defeat the purposes of the British miners. When the American coal strike took place, English mine owners sent large shipments to America; which indicated a mutual understanding existing between the mine-owners of the respective countries and their common and natural desire to defeat the forces with which on occasions of strikes, they have to contend, sometimes under very adverse conditions. Evidently, the miners' unions have combatted or are trying to combat this co-operation of mine owners, and the result is the Lewis agreement referred to above. The workers of the various counties will not lift their hands against each other.

Thus we see that the cords are tightening, and the world's workers as well as the world's capitalists, are intending to pursue common courses in order to achieve their common interests in life. Becaus Labour and Capital are each united as between themselves, it is urgently necessary for the general good for boti. parties to allow settlements of disputes on the basis of reason, truth and justice. The oner that leaders will recognize this necessity the better ill it befor the world.

THE BURDEN OF WAR

Speaking at Oxford recently, David Lloyd George stated England had spent $50,000,000 on the world war. The ex-Premier pointed out that in peace times, it was most unfortunate that the Old Country could not sweep away the slums which housed somewhere around 3,500,000 people. Such a statement as this shows the frightful enormity of war and armaments. The world's peoples are taxed with unbearable burdens and the world compelled to find billions of dollars which results in the killing of humanity and destruction of property. And slums remain, but their bettermen is rendered the more remote by the colossal extra burdens on state and taxpayers as a result of wars. No wonder the world is searching for a solution from its greatest curse, and looking to that future horizon, when the battle flags will be unfurled no longer.

More Congratulations to Sir Wm. Coaker, K.B.E.

Barbados, B.W.I.,
June 7th, 1923.

Hon. Wm. Coaker,
Port Union, N.F.

Dear Mr. Coaker:

I notice by yesterday's telegram that the King has been pleased to confer on you as one of his birthday honors the title of "Knight Commander of the British Empire Order," and I now beg to heartily congratulate you on the deserving title that has been conferred.

Yours sincerely,
C. H. KINCH.

Pike's Arm,
June 21, 1923

Sir Wm. F. Coaker.

On behalf of the members of Local Council of Pike's Arm, hearty conratulation for the honor bestowed upon you by His Majesty King George as Knight Commander of the British Empire. Good for our noble President and a son of Terra Nova.

ED. RICHARDS, Chairman.
R. DALLEY, Secretary.

St. John's, N.F.

Sir Wm. F. Coaker, K.B.E.

Sincere congratulations on the honour which is yours in the Knighthood recently conferred on you by His Majesty the King. It is an honour which you have deservedly won by your life long service of toil on behalf of the common people of our country. Long may your big jib draw for the welfare of Newfoundland and its people.

J. J. CAHILL.

HUDDERSFIELD, Eng., July 5—Six persons were killed, including two railway guards, and seven injured in a train wreck at Diggle near here to-day.

YESTERDAY AT THE HOUSE

Yesterday's sitting of the House was a brief one and very little business was done.

In answer to Mr. Hunt the Minister of Justice stated that the Labrador Boundry dispute would come to trial in June 1924. The Barristers and Solicitors engaged are as follows:—Sir John Simon, K.C., Mr. Barrington-Ward, K.C., Mr. W. T. Monckton, Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C. and Sir Richard Squires, K.C.

The Railway Settlement Bill was read a second time and ordered to be referred to Committee of the Whole House to-day.

On motion for adjournment, Mr. Walsh for the second time brought up the matter of the charge that had been made against a Minister of the Crown, and asked the Attorney General what he meant to do about it. Mr. Warren said that up to that time he had heard no definite charge made against any particular minister and told Mr. Walsh if he desired to make a charge, to do so in the proper way. Mr. Walsh said he was not a lawyer and that he would have nothing else to do with it.

Sir Michael Cashin then took up the subject and told the House his side of the Lornina Bounty Scandel, pointing out that he had been treated in a different manner in connection therewith from that in which the present charge was being treated. He alleged unfair and disloyal treatment of himself by his then leader, the present Lord Morris and stated that Sir Richard Squires, who was at that time Attorney General, had been cognisant of all that was on foot to get him, Sir Michael, out of the Cabinet when Sir Michael had finished his remarks the Prime Minister arose in his place to speak, but this was rendered extremely difficult by Sir Michael Cashin, who kept up a running fire of interruptions throughout Sir Richard's remarks. The Premier told Sir Michael that the House had done him the courtesy of giving him an uninterrupted hearing when he wanted to speak but that he, Sir Michael, could not act the gentleman long enough to let anyone else reply.

The Prime Minister went on to say that he had not engaged in debate with Sir Michael Cashin for the past two or three years and he did not intend to begin now, but he could not sit quietly in his seat and hear Lord Morris vilified in the manner attempted by Sir Michael Cashin. Sir Richard said that Sir Michael Cashin or anyone else could belie and vilify him as much as they pleased, he rather enjoyed it. He certainly did not deem such diatribes of sufficient moment to demand a reply from him, but this was a different matter. Lord Morris had been bitterly attacked by Sir Michael Cashin when he was not able to defend himself and he, Sir Richard, was going to defend him in his absence. He had been associated with Lord Morris as a law clerk first, then as a law partner and for a number of years as a colleague in the Morris Administration. The Prime Minister said he probably knew Lord Morris better than any man in the country and he could say that he was a man of whom Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders could justly feel proud. He was by far and away the greatest statesman this country has ever produced, nor has his wholesouled interest in his native land waned a single jot even though he is far removed from her shores and interested in affairs that might well serve to diminish the ardour with which he has always followed the destines of this Colony. The Prime Minister thought Sir Michael's uncalled for attack and unfounded insinuations came with poor grace and he deeply regretted the incident.

The House then adjourned till 3 o'clock this afternoon.

SWEET GIRL GRADUATES

Los Angeles Times: Newspaper inquiry centred upon the sweet girl graduates that 70 per cent. of the college girls still consider matrimony as their best career. As between the home and an independent life in the business world 70 per cent. prefer the home with its children and lace curtains. Some figure that they can have both children and a career, but a majority of them prefer home life to a career—if they must decide between them. Asked what they thought was wrong with the average young man, a good many of the fair graduates announced that he was all right. To those who found fault his outstanding failing was his conceit. Most of the girls agreed that there was too much conversation about flappers. They said that the social flapper was not vastly different from their grandmothers at the same age. A jazzy environment may have coloured her life, but her heart was the same. The responses to the questionnaires would indicate that the college girl is still safe and sane.

Towels with coloured strips should not be washed until they have first been soaked overnight in salt water. Wash in hot, soapy water mixed with a cupful of vinegar.

BEEF FROM WEST AFRICA

Kenya Journal: We do not see any hope of an export trade in beef from this country unless under some form of Preference which is most unlikely as the Home Government was ever loath to help its overseas colonies and dependencies though not chary of assisting aliens, as instance the huge prewar advertising campaign to assist Greece in the exporting of currants. To sum up, the position of the stock-breeders in Kenya today is that they are without outside markets and even the full benefit of the local markets is denied them through the competition of native cattle from the reserves.

He was a young lawyer who had just started practising in a small town, and he hung his sign outside his office door. It read: "A Swindler."

A stranger who called to consult him saw the sign and said: "My goodness, man, look at that sign! Don't you see how it reads? Put in your firse name." Alexander, Ambrose or whatever it is."

"Oh, yes, I know," said the lawyer, resignedly, "but I don't like to do it."

"Why not?" asked the client. "It looks bad as it is. What is your first name."

"Adam."

Catalina and Port Union Services

During the vacancy of the mission, including both Catalina and Port Union, occasioned by the removal of the Revd. R. F. Mercer, the late Incumbent, to that of Fogo, whither he had received a call to fill the existing vacancy there, the Revd. G. S. Chamberlain, former Incumbent of the Mission, but now upon the retired clergy list, kindly volunteered his services, so that those of the Church might be continued as usual without break or hindrance, and although an octogenerian, this has been accomplished without any disabling effects to himself. Sunday by Sunday, each Church, S. Peter's and that of the Holy Martyrs, alternately, has received the benefit of his Ministrations, but now the advent into the mission of the Incumbent, elect, the Revd. T. W. Upward, has relieved him of any further responsibility in that direction.

Upon Sunday evening last, those who were privileged to attend the service at the Church of the "Holy Martyrs," must have realized the beauty and dignity of the Anglican ritual and felt that it was good to be there. The clergy, the Revds G. S. Chamberlain, Canon W. Lockyer and T. W. Upward were present, the former sitting amongst the congregation, whilst the Canon read the lessons, the Incumbent said the prayers and preached from Psalm viii, 4, 5.—"What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the Son of Man that Thou visited him? Thou madest him lower than the angels: to crown him with glory and worship." The sermon was an eloquent and able exposition of the text and riveted closely the attention of the large congregration present, amongst whom were the Hon. Sir W. F. Coaker and visitors.

Canada Loses Her Trade With Newfoundland

Canadian Exports 8 Million Dollars Against 16 Millions in 1920.

TORONTO—Several of Newfoundland's importing houses declare that Canada is losing trade to the United States for the reason that there is no trade representative in the country to represent Canada in keeping in touch with conditions.

The United States consul at St. John's is in close touch with the business community with the result that business is going to the States which formerly went to Canada. Canada did have a commercial agent there, but for some reason he was withdrawn.

Inquiries by The Financial Post confirm that Canada has now no trade representative in Newfoundland. At one time there was an arrangement by which a commercial agent gave the Canadian government part of his time, but this was cancelled, and all that is done at praesent is that a junior trade commissioner goes to Newfoundland every few months and stays there for a short time.

The matter has been taken up with the C. M. A. and laid before the department of trade at Ottawa. The department has felt that the market is one which should be developed by their own representatives. It is to be hoped,, however, that Hon. Mr. Robb, who has been reorganising his department in a very efficient way, will go further into this matter to see that Canada is given such representatives in Newfoundland as justified by trade opportunities.

Trade figures which have been published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, show that Canadian exports to Newfoundland, which amounted to $16,175,443 for the year ending in 1920, and $16,676,728 in 1921, declined to $9,317,639 in 1922, and $8,523,264 in 1923.

"Children," said the teacher, instructing the class in composition, "you should not attempt any flights of fancy; simply be yourselves and write what is in you. Do not imitate any other person's writings nor draw inspiration from outside sources."

As a result of this advice one bright lad turned in the following: "We should not attempt any flights of fancy, but write what is in us. In me there is my stomack, lungs, hart, liver two apples, one piece of pie, one stick of candy and my dinner."

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

One hundred and sixty prominent American clergymen, educators, editors and businessmen have signed their names to a statement which declares that the nations are frankly pushing preparations for another war. Provided you are any way familiar with American public life, these names will be tremendously significant to you:

William Jennings Bryan, Frank A. Vanderlip, Roger W. Babson, George W. Wickersham, Cardinal O'Connell, John B. Clark, Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University, Bishop Thomas F. Gailor of the Protestant Episcopal Church, John R. Mott, Miss Mary E. Wooley, president of Mount Holyoke College, Mrs. Philip North Moore, president National Council of Women, and many others.

"After a devastating conflict which has cost millions of lives, created immeasurable hatred and piled up a debt of fifty dollars for every minute of time since Christ was born, the nations of the earth—apparently having learned nothing—are once more playing the old game of competitive imperialism and competitive armament," declares the statement.

"There are some amongst us, of whom the signatories of this appeal form a small group, who regard war as the most ruinous organized sin which mankind now faces; who are sure that the war system and the Christian gospel cannot permanently abide together on the same earth; and who clearly see that the spirit of war and the spirit of the gospel are anti-theatrical, the one representing what the other hates and would destroy."

*** *** ***

"We will not believe that mankind is so deficient in character and intelligence as to make the rational solution of our international problems impossible and to commit us to the continued rule of insane fear, hatred and collective destruction. And we are certain that unless the Church of Christ takes now a clear and consistent stand on this matter of life and death to our civilization and to the world, she will merit the contempt of men and the judgment of God.

*** *** ***

"We therefore urge all the people of the churches, and all ministers in particular, to an outspoken declaration that the war system and the gospel of Christ are diametrically and irreconcilably opposed.

We would have every Christian Church the center of a frank and courageous antagnism to war and everything that makes war, until in our country and in all lands we succeed in reinstating Christian loyalty to Christ where it belongs—far above all local prejudice, racial hatred and divisive nationalism."

Little could give me more deepseated pleasure than to witness the people of Newfoundland, rising as one people and declining solemnly that they are against war and against all things that make war and against all men who conspire for war and against the imperialism that results in war.

The railroad telegraphers' union of America has opened at St. Louis, Mo., the Telegraphers' National Bank, with a capital of $500,000. E. J. Manion, president of the union, announced that deposits of $1,500,000 were assured for the opening.

And so the movement proceeds. The greatest feature above all features in this marvellous age in which we are living is the way Labor is coming to the front. We have had kings, smperors and kaisers and czars and generals for ages, and what good have they done the world and the common people? What have they done but given us war and death and destruction? Labor has never ruled, and so Labor comes to the front with no evil past to live down, but with clean slate and honest hearts. We are entering upon the Labor Age.

I see that the government of France has issued a new 10-centime postage stamp bearing the portrait of the late Louis Pasteur, the greatest bacteriologist in the world, who died recently. I am glad. Pasteur was a great scientist and a great benefactor of the human race. His name will go down into international history for his development of the first successful treatment of rabies, that dread disease. Whenever you hear of pasteurized milk, or pasteurized cheese, or pasteurized anything, you are hearing an unconscious tribute to the great Pasteur. Pasteur's discoveries have resulted in saving the lives of millions of people.

*** *** ***

And so I like to see him honored. It has not been often, lately, that I have found myself in agreement with any act of the French government: now I can join enthusiastically with it. One Pasteur is of greater usefulness and service to his fellow-men than fifty dozen military generals.

I hope to see the day in Newfoundland when our postage stamps will bear the portrait of one who has been a noble benefactor to humanity and progress in Newfoundland—President Coaker.

Pope Holds Grave Fears for Future

URGES FRANCE AND GERMANY TO AGREE ON REPARATIONS.

ROME, June 28—The Pope has written to Cardinal Gasparri, Papal Secretary of State, saying that despite the attempts made since the beginning of his Pontificate to secure pacification of Europe, international relation had not improved, but had even become worse, justifying graver anxiety for the future.

"While we are striving with all our strength and all the means our children place at our disposal for mitigation of the present serious general sufferings," writes the Pope, "we ought to take advantage of every opportunity to co-operate to bring about the desired pacification of peoples and individuals in Christ. We entreat those who hold the peoples' destines in their hands to consider the various questions, and that of reparations, in that Christian spirit which does not separate the exigencies of justice from those of social charity on which the perfection of the life of people is based."

"If, in the intention to repair the very serious damage inflicted, the debtor displayed real goodwill to reach an equitable agreement by using impartial judgment on the limits of his solvency and to undertake to supply to the judges every facility for careful and exact scrutinity, then justice and social charity, as well as the creditors' own interests, seem to require that more should not be asked of the debtor than he can give without completely exhausting his resources and productive power, to his own irreparable detriment and that of his creditors, not to mention social disturbances which might mean the final ruin of all Europe and resentment which would remain as a continual menace to fresh and runious conflagrations.

"It is just that creditors should have guarantees proportionate to the importance of their claims, insuring the latters' recovery, on which their vital interests depend, but we leave to them to consider if it is necessary to maintain to that end territorial occupations imposing grave sacrifices on the occupied countries, and whether it would not be better to substitute even progressively, other guarantees not less effacious, and certainly less painful."

Chintz or cretonne covers and draperies may be dry-cleaned with bran, powderer chalk, and salt mixed together in equal proportions, and rubbed over the material with a piece of flannel.

WASHINGTON, June 28—The near future will see the perfection of radio movies. Every ""listener-in," with the aid of a special apparatus, contained in a box about a foot square, and a small curtain, will be able to see as well as hear over the versatile radio, according to C. Francis Jenkins, of this city.

Last week, Prof. Jenkins, who has previously demonstrated the transmission of still pictures by radio, showed on a screen in his laboratory the movements of his hand and other objects held in front of his radio transmitting apparatus in another room. The apparatus used in transmitting still pictures was employed in the last experiment, but a new "lens-faced prismatic ring" was introduced to show a rapid succession of pictures depicting movement.

Perfection of the moving-picture radio transmitting set now awaits only the manufacture of a new and more powerful electric lamp of the "corona-glow" type. In the recent demonstration a temporary lamp was made by the inventor, but it is not strong enough to transmit large pictures. The question of rapidity is solved, Mr. Jenkins says, as he has already sent pictures at twice the standard movie speed. What he needs is a better and stronger lamp which will stand up when the signal strength is increased about 3,000 times, as is necessary in sending pictures in motion.

Not only actual pictures of moving bodies can be transmitted, by pointing the machine at them, but films can be broadcast, Mr. Jenkins claims, and shown on screens in theatres or homes where proper receiving and reproducing apparatus and a screen are available. When the power of the light is raised the size of the picture can be increased, was explained.

INVALUABLE AID.

Radio experts of the navy, who saw the first demonstration between two rooms of Mr. Jenkins's laboratory on Connecticut avenue, say that the invention is adaptable in military operations as well as in commercial fields. They point out that a transmitter used in an airplane over the enemy fleet or trenches would give officers far in the rear an actual view of the fall of shells and all front-line activities. In the commercial field, with some adaptations, moving picture distributors might transmit their films to subscribers by way of radio instead of by express, saving time and the making of many copies.

With the completion of his new lamp, probably not sooner than several weeks, Mr. Jenkins promises to give a long-distance demonstration, transmitting pictures of objects in motion and perhaps films, between Washington and probably Philadelphia.

Great Cable Service

LONDON, June 30—Reuter's agency states that the cable messages in Reuters' service from London reporting the result of the Derby reached their respective destinations in the following times:—Capetown, half-a-minute; Durban, 1 minute; Melbourne 1, 1-2 minutes; Sydney, 2 1-2 minutes; Bombay, 1 1-2 minutes; Calcutta, 4 1-2 minutes, Cairo, half-a-minute; Hong Kong, 3 minutes; and Shanghai, 3 1-2 minutes.

Equally good service went to North America through the Associated Press and The Canadian Press.

The West Indies

(By J. L. A. in Montreal Star.)

Will Mr. Baldwin's categorical denial that the British Government have ever contemplated the sale of the British West Indies to the United States be sufficient to put an end to this persistent rumor? There have been official denials before, but the report has continued to hold its ground steadily. When first it appeared in Britain, from a palpably American source, it was regarded as a subject of humorous comment. As an example of the fertility of imagination which the American newspaperman is said to possess, it was not without its value but as a serious proposal regarding the settlement of war debts, it was rightly held to be worthless. Yet it cropped up at regular intervals, displaying a dragon-like vitality which defied the swords of criticism and contradiction alike. Propaganda poured from its nostrils, and though the British Prime Minister has once again struck off its head it will no doubt grow a new one.

For propaganda has this queer result—that in time it hypnotizes the people. It is as if M. Coue were to tunn international bandit and for some unscrupulous purpose were to persuade a whole nation that they needed to be cured of some ill from which they did not suffer. Though at first the British people burst into mockling laughter, so stubborn was the rumor that little by little men fell to wondering whether their elected servants might not have entered into some mercenary negotiations without the consent of their masters. They grew suspicious. Questions were asked in the House of Commons, and even now that the British people have agreed and promised to pay all their indebtedness to the United States, there are still some so simple that they think the rumor may have some foundation in fact. But they are fortunately very few.

In the United States it is apparently different. In that country, where assets are measured largely by their pecuniary value and sentiment is chiefly confined to the movies, there has been no disposition to doubt the authenticity of the rumor. No matter how the American people at times refer to the conservative tendencies of the British, they do not in their hearts of hearts believe that their Old World cousins are in reality poor business men. They credit them with very little less than their own ability at spotting a good thing. They know what they would do under similar circumstances—Take the cash and let the credit go. Why should clever traders like the British do anything else It was very clear to a considerable number of them that the deal was as good as "cinched" as soon as it was suggested. A few paltry islands, which were of no real commercial value any longer, since the abolition of slavery and the introduction of free trade, what reason would there be in keeping them? But they counted without the true sentiment of the British, a sentiment which lies so deep that only those who share it really known of it, a sentiment which could do more permit the sale of their own kith and kin than it could permit the desertion of those whom they have taken under their protection. For there are duties attached to Empire.

A century and a half ago the British West Indies were a source of great profit for the people of England. Sir Horace Walpole, writing to a friend, complained that it was practically impossible to obtain a seat at Westminster, since all constituencies had been bought by East Indian Nabobs or West Indian merchants. Many a noble family today owes its wealth to the plantations which it used to hold in the Leeward or the Windward Islands. Our Princess Mary herself married a husband whose family owned great West Indian possessions. Jamaica, Antigua, Baruda, St. Kitts, the Bahamas, Dominica, Barbados, Montserrat, Bermuda, St. Lucia, Grenada, St. Vincent, —what visions these names must conjure in the mind of a man who did not grow up in an atmosphere of barter? Pieces of eight and doubloons, Captain Kidd, Spanish galleons and walking the plank, there is a mystery about them all. With the British perhaps distance may lend enchantment. Ten-storey hotels, jazz bands and movies leave little room for illusion.

Therefore the gods in the United States machine, putting a low assessment on the West Indies from the point of view of Great Britain and a high one from their own, "made a proposition." They suggested that the Islands should be ceded in settlement of the war debt. A little later they stated that the suggestion had been received with favor. As time progressed their propaganda became bolder. They did not hesitate to state that "high British officials" had been in communication with the White House on the subject. All of which was intended to hoodwink the people of both countries. It is very certain therefore that the men who work the maronettes at Washington have some other project than that of helping Great Britain to settle her liabilities. Some other impetus has urged them to persevere in this ingenuous campaign. What is it—Panama canal or prohibition or both?

Murders Four to Get Their Money

Kills Three and Then Slays Woman Accomplice.

t BUDAPAST, June 28—Joseph Toth 24 years old Hungarian, has confessed to the murder of Andreas Lachman, aged Hungarian-American, and told of a series of fiendish crimes involving the murder of four persons by which he endeavored to get control of Lachman's home and money.

Lachman returned from America last year with a comfortable fortune, purchased a charming villa and settled down to a peaceful old age.

His daughter, Mrs. Koevess, became enamoured of Toth despite the fact that she was 16 years his senior and that he was a grocer's clerk.

She conspired with Toth to murder the Lacham family. The first step was to get American passports which they showed to neighbours, saying that Lachman was returning to the United States. They then killed Lachman and buried him under his house, telling his friends that he had left. Toth then shot Mrs. Lachman and her 15 year old son. Their bodies bere buried in a garden.

Left alone with Mrs. Koevess, he strangled her and buried her body alongside the others.

Toth claimed the house and fortune of the entire family, declaring all had gone to America and left the property to him. Discovery of the bodies led to his arrest.

THE SEARCH FOR CANCER'S CAUSE.

London Daily Telegraph: What value humanity would set upon the discovery of the cause of Cancer we cannot appraise. One feels that all the riches of Golconda would be dross beside the certain discovery of the secret of how to banish from a million homes throughout the world the dark shadow which medical science today is powerless to turn away. Large sums of money will be needed. Much will be asked here much in the Dominions. The glory will be great to the British name if it is a Bitish brain which solves the problem but, of course, each step on the road will be publicly charted so that all nations may benefit equally with our own.

Talented Singer Gets Wonderful Reception

The Song Recital in the Methodist College Hall last evening, given by Miss Eleanor Mews, A.T.C.L., L.T.C M., was largely attended and included His Excellency and Lady Allardyce and many prominent citizens. The lovely appearance of the stage adorned by a lavish and gorgeous array of flowers lent to the excellence and artistic manner in which the program was given.

Miss Mews possesses a mezzo-soprano voice of fine pure rich quality and the varied selections of the programme displayed in full the particular beauty of her voice as well as, when necessary. its striking power.

It is impossible almost to particularize any of the numbers, all of the program being rendered in an excellent manner.

Miss Mews had a very appreciative audience and during the course of the recital several beautiful bouquets were presented. Assisting her was the Hon Alex W. Mews, who in several cello selections delighted the audience in his usually capable way. Mrs. Mews accompanied Mr. Mews at the piano. Miss Mews' accompanist was Mr. Gordon Christian, L.R.A.M., who played in his masterly fashion.

Miss Mews during her studies won two diplomas, 1st, teachers which is A.T.C.L, and last year secured the artists diploma, L.T.C.M., so that she is qualified to appear as performer or or teacher. Miss Mews's teacher, Miss H Ethel Shepherd of Toronto Conservatory of music is well known over North America as a teacher of vocal art and in Europe enjoyed a reputation as a dramatic soprano, having studied under Jean de Rezske. For one encore Miss Mews sang last night "God's In His Heaven," the music of which was composed by Miss Marjorie Mews, her youngest sister. It is hoped that the public will have an opportunity of hearing a repetition of the Recital. The complete program follows:—

Scarlatti (1659-1725)—Le Violette, (The Violets.)

Scarlatti—O cessate di piagrami, (O cease to pain me.)

Pergolesi (1710-1736)—Se tu m'ami, (If you love me).

Wolf—E'en little things.

Schubert—Hedge-Roses.

Schumann—Thy Lovely Face.

Schubert—The Trout.

Violoncello—Hon. Alex Mews, (a) Berceuse from "Jocelyn" Godard; (b) Gavotte, David Popper; (c) Melodie, Jules Massenet.

Massenet—Le Cid—Pleurez, pleurez mes yeux.

Rimsky-Korsakov—L'Ange, (The Angel),

D'Ambrosio—Les papillons couleur de neige, (Butterflies, colour of snow)

Panizza—D'une Prison, (From a Prison).

Rabey—Rondel melancolique pour une amante oublieuse, (Melancholy Rondole for a forgetful lover.)

Massenet—La Melodie des baisers, (The melody of kisses.)

Violoncello—Hon. Alex Mews, (a) Cantilena from Concerto in A Minor, Goldtermann; (b) "Wie einst in Schoener'n Tagen, David Popper; (c) Reverie, Schumann.

Quilter—Now sleeps the Crimson Petal.

Arne—Where the Bee sucks.

Willan—O Mistress Mine.

Curran—Nursery Rhymes.

Burleigh—The Sailor's Wife.

Leoni—Tally-ho!

Battle Harbor:—Light south, clear. A sign of fish was also reported from Battle Harbor.

"Inter Nos"

The Advocate acknowledges with thanks a copy of the initial number of that delightful magazine "Inter Nos" published by the pupils of the Convent of Our Lady of Mercy Academy and which made its appearance in the literary field last month.

"Inter Nos" was published under difficulties, in that many fine illustrations and a great deal of "copy" were destroyed in the Trade Review fire several weeks ago. Nevertheless the publishers have given their readers something above the ordinary in this particular line of literary endeavour and their work in behalf of their Alma Mater in thus establishing a school magazine should be recognized by every ex-pupil of the College whether at home or abroad.

The editor of "Inter Nos" is Miss Betty McGrath, B.A. and she is indeed to be complimented on the excellence of the publication, an excellence which, if it can be maintained in future issues, will mean the future establishment of the magazine amongst the best of our local literature.

Amongst the many contributors to "Inter Nos" are Misses Helena McGrath, Mary Carey, Mary G. Harris, Mary Sullivan, Angela McGrath, Caroline Furlong, Sadie Organ, Shelia Conway, Laura Cantwell, Mary Power, Ellen M. Bryne, Alice Walsh, Marie Norris, Amy McEvoy, Mrs. Selina Sullivan, Mary Shortall, Bessie McGrath, Constance Kiely and Bessie Primm.

While every article contained in the magazine, whether poetry or prose, is well worth perusal. We must refer particularly to that of Mrs. Sullivan who was the first pupil of the Mercy Convent and whose virile and highly descriptive article entitled "Back in '61," may justly be termed a masterpiece.

It is seldom that a local magazine has secured the profusion of timely matter for a single issue and if the June number may be taken as a criterion, we have no hesitation in saying that the publishers of "Inter Nos" have already entered upon the road to success.

Suffering From Diphtheria

A message received by the Asst. Collector of Customs from Bell Island yesterday stated that a sailor from the S. S. DINNER LASTING THREE DAYS WILL MARK ROYAL NUPTIALS

TOKIO, June 4 (AP)—A public dinner extending over three days is planned to follow the wedding of the Prince Regent and Princess Nagako, which is to take place in the fall. Three thousand government officials, the diplomatic corps, the foreign colony and many others are to be invited. The Empress, the Prince Regent, Princess Nagako, who then will be the Crown Princess, and other members of the Royal family will attend at stated times.

ISSUE AND LEADERSHIP

New York Evening Post: Mr. Harding might raise the question whether the danger of a highly hypothetical split in the Republican Party is really as serious as the danger of the Republican Party strength melting away for lack of an inspiring issue and an affirmative leadership. That issue and leadership Mr. Harding has it in his hands to create in the fifty-nine days between his World Court speech at St. Louis and his return to the Union Station at Washington.

A FORM OF MANIA

London Daily Express: Frankly, we think this mania for advertising in stamp books, on envelopes, and by the medium of a score of Government departments is being overdone. It may make more jobs to be filled in the bureaucracy, but we doubt if it will show any net profit. Anyhow, it irritates. The Post Office and any other Government department will make more profit in the long run by cheaper prices and better service. As for income tax receipts, most people will welcome them more if they are, as they indicate, a clean sheet.

Among the passengers by Monday's express to Heart's Content was Mr. Jack Chafe, who has succeeded in making an honourable position for himself in the field of Telegraphic Engineering.

Mr. Chafe, formerly of the Anglo this city was superintendent of the telephone system for a number of years and left here in April in connection with the re-opening of the re-opening of the Western Union Cable station there and has since been appointed to the important position of chief electrician and assistant superintendent at Canso.

Although but a young man, Mr. Chafe has had a most varied experience in his chosen profession.

During the war he was plant supervisor of the Anglo land line system, and while occupying this position he instituted many improvements among which may be mentioned the installation of the equipment now in use in the St. John's office. After the completion of this installation Supt. Tranfield had him transferred to the cable division of Heart's Content for special study of the submarine cable. Mr. Chafe is a brother to Mr. Will Chafe of the Railway despatching office this city and son of Sergeant Chafe of the Constabulary Department.

Exhibition of Paintings

They are painted in the modern manner and some of them have received special mention at the exhibition. Tea will be served this and Saturday afternoon by the 3rd. St. John's Co. Girl Guides. Admission to see the pictures is free.

Fell Into Water

About 4.30 yesterday afternoon four men making repairs on the King's Wharf received a sudden ducking when the scaffold on which they were standing gave way and they were plunged into the water. Two of the men clung to the posts and were hauled out while the others were rescued by means of ropes which were thrown to them by their fellow workers. Beyond a good wetting the men suffered nothing.

Saints Defeat B. I. S.

In last evening's League football game the Saints defeated the B. I. S. by 4 goals to 1. In less than a minute from the star the Saints had drawn first blood, and when the whistle sounded for half time they had three goals to their credit, while the Irish had failed to score.

The Scotchmen were the first to score again on resumption of play, netting number 4, and just before the close of the game Eddie Phalen secured the one and only goal for his team. Owing to unfavorable weather conditions, the players were somewhat handicapped and the attendance was small.

WORKERS FOR SECOND TIME REJECT GOVT. AGREEMENT

Walk Out of 60,000 Staged Noon Yesterday.

STRIKE DECIDED BY BALLOT.

BERLIN, July 6—More than sixty thousand of Berlin's two hundred and fifty thousand metal workers struck at noon to-day, following a ballot last night by which the Union rejected for the second time the agreement reached between representatives of the Government and the employees.

FRENCH ADMIRAL DEAD

PARIS, July 6—Vice Admiral Ferdinand Jean Jacques De Bon Long, chief of the French naval general staff, died at his home here to-day after a lengthy illness. He was head of the French naval advisory board at the Washington Armament Conference.

LIME QUARRIES MAY CLOSE DOWN

The Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, K.C.M.G., received a message from the manager of the limestone quarries at Aguathuna, Port au Port, advising that in consequence of strike conditions in Cape Breton it is highly probable that operations at the quarries will have to be suspended.

As some four hundred and fifty men are employed, the closing down of this highly remunerative employment will be a severe set-back, as with so many Newfoundlanders out of work, at this season of the year, at this one place, and many transient labourers in the Cape Breton collieries, who have to go out with the strikers in Sydney and other mining centres, the general outlook does not look promising for the continuance of industrial production.

GOVERNMENT HOLDS SPECIAL SESSION

HALIFAX, July 6—Premier Armstrong could not make any definite statement this evening on what action the Government proposes to take regarding the letters signed by McLachlan and circulated among the Cape Breton miners calling upon them to down tools in defiance of the Armstrong Government and in protest against the presence in Cape Breton of Provincial police, but said he would be able to talk after the Government session which has been in progress since this morning and was in session at a late hour to-night.

DEMPSEY TO FIGHT NEGRO

GREAT FALLS, Montana, July 6—Harry Wills, negro heavyweight, will be Jack Dempsey's next opponent, Jack Kearns, manager of the heavyweight champion, said to-day. Kearns said he would leave for New York to close negotiations for the match with Wills, to be decided presumably on Labor Day.

FIVE KILLED AS RESULT OF THUNDER STORM

"Hobos" Meet Death In Railway Freight Wreck.

FIVE DEAD; EIGHT INJURED.

Was Struck By Lightning While Standing In Porch.

PITTSBURG, July 6—Five persons were killed during a thunderstorm which broke over the city to-day. A man and woman were killed by coming in contact with live wires struck down by lightning, another was struck by lightning while standing in his porch, and two women were killed when their car skidded as they speeded to shelder from the storm.

CHICAGO, July 6—Five men "riding rails" on a freight train out of here last night were killed, and eight others were injured, when the train was wrecked at Kirkland. All were hobos. The crew escaped injury.

INTERPRETATION OF ACT IS NEW ONE, SAYS HON. JAS. MURDOCK

Minister of Labour Will Not Enter Into Argument With U. M. W. Secretary.

CLAIMS NO VIOLATION.

Holds That Lemieux Act Does Not Apply.

OTTAWA, July 6—That is a new interpretation of the Industrial Disputes Act," said Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, this morning, when his attention was drawn to a statement made by J. B. McLachlan, Secretary of the United Mine Workers, District 26, to the effect that the Lemieux Act applied only to disputes arising out of wage scales and hours and conditions of Labor. McLachlan claimed there was no violation of the Act and that the Minister was wrong in saying there was. "I am not going to enter into an argument with McLachlan," said the Minister, "his interpretation of the Act is a new one and not likely to find support in the courts."

MC LACHLAN MAY HAVE TO FACE CHARGE

Police Are Investigating Circular Letter Issed to Mine Workers' Locals.

SWIFT ACTION ANTICIPATED.

Quiet Still Prevails In Strike Area.

SYDNEY, July 6—Police officials were investigating to-day the authenticity of a circular letter purporting to have been addressed to various Island locals of the United Mine Workers of America by District Secretary J. B. McLachlan, and counselling them to throw down their tools in the face of alleged brutal assaults on innocent women and children by the Provincial Police. If officers of the Crown decide they can prove McLachlan's responsibility for the letter, and further that the matter contained in it lays the author open to being charged with an indictable offense, skift action may be anticipated. Quiet prevails in the affected area.

ESTABLISHES SCHOOL HOLIDAY

ST. ANDREWS, N.B., July 6—When His Excellency Lord Byng of Vimy, Governor General of Canada, responded to the address of welcome given him here to-day by Mayor Wren, he asked that the first day of the school year be made a holiday in honor of his visit. The school children assembled and joined in singing, "Oh Canada."

CHAPTER XIX.

"Miss Carlyon as An Actress"

"I don't like the idea of your going to the hotel," said Mrs. Garvock, with a sudden and quite genuine rush of hospitable feeling. "Won't you come up to The Lees"

Mrs. looked the surprise she felt.

"Very kind of you, I'm sure, but your son wouldn't like it—he could not be expected to. and I'd like to say here"—she added a little hurriedly, "that I was awful sorry when it happened. I would have done a great deal to prevent it happening, but I was quite powerless. It was a case of love at first sight, if ever there was one!"

Lucy rose up suddenly, and her mother observed her lips whitening.

"I spoke very straightly to Carlotta, and told her she couldn't expect to prosper after what she had done. It was a shame to treat a decent, honorable gentleman as she had treated Mr. Peter Garvock; but there! What was the use of talking to Carlotta? None at all! I don't believe there will ever be a marriage between her and Alan Rankine. If he was so desperate about her, he ought to have carried her off with him. I know what London is. And Carlotta has looks! She may do very much better for herself."

Mrs. Garvock smiled somewhat painfully, rose then, and said they must not detain her any longer.

"I thank you again for writing that kind little letter to me. I showed it to my son, and though he did not say anything about it, I am sure it pleased him."

A gratified smile came on Mrs. Carlyon's face.

"Did it? I should like to have seen him—only once, to tell him I had no hand in it at all. He was always very kind to me, Mrs. Garvock, and like a son to the Professor; and I do not care though Carlotta should marry a duke—which, indeed, might happen," she added, with a little unconscious smile, "but he never could be better nor kinder than Mr. Garvock was, in the time he came to this house."

They parted most amicably, and, as it happened, were not the last visitors from The Lees to call at the Clock House on that eventful day.

Peter heard himself in the town that the vans were before the Clock House door, and knowing that Carlotta had gone, he walked quite deliberately down the Sandgate, and into the house, just as his mother had done.

But Mrs. Carlyon shrank back a little at the sight of him, both because it was a very different thing discussing Carlotta with Peter's mother and with Peter himself.

"Oh, how do you do, Peter?" she said, in tones which her discomfort made a little shrill. Then she reddened furiously. "Mr. Garvock, I ought to say, but I forgot. Odd, that you should come! I've had your mother and sister this afternoon, to say good-bye."

"You have? So they knew you were leaving!"

"Not till to-day, I think. Mrs. Somebody, calling at The Lees, told them. I believe Sillars was the name. The Professor has gone, and I follow to-morrow. I'm going to sleep at the Station Hotel to-night, after I get all the stuff out. Your mother was very kind—she asked me up to The Lees to sleep, Pet—I mean Mr. Garvock."

"Please call me Peter," he said gruffly. "I like it. And I hope you will come up to The Lees. If you will tell me when you will be ready to leave the Clock House, I'll send a carriage from the hotel."

"Oh, how very good of you! Well, I think I will come," said Mrs. Carlyon, pleased with the little attention, and not at all concerned as to whether she ought to decline it in the circumstances. "I'm not fond of hotels. I got a pretty good dose of them in my touring days; though these, of course, were not very easy ones. I suppose you have heard the reason why we are leaving Ayr?"

Peter shook his head.

"Carlotta has gone on the stage!" same time narrowly observing him, to see how he would take the news. "She has gone on as leading lady with our old friend Graham Madox. And if you ask me, Mr. Garvock, I shold say that that's good-bye to matrimony. The kind of actress Carlotta is going to be has not time for that sort of thing in her life."

Peter Garvock's face flushed somewhat painfully, and, though intensely interested, he did not seek to pursue the subject, but turned it off by asking when he might order the carriage from the Station Hotel.

So that night the feud between The Lees and Stair had another precious little bit added to it.

It was told with great gusto how Mrs. Carlyon had spent her last night in Scotland under the roof-tree of The Lees, and, further. had been driven to the station next morning in the brougham, in company with Peter Garvock, who showed her as much solicitous attention as if nothing had happened and she was going to be his mother-in-law-after all!

CHAPTER XX.

An Oasis in the Desert

In due course the steamer arrived in New York Harbor.

As time was no particular object to the particular couple of passengers in whom we arei nterested, they had leisure and opportunity of watching the frantic efforts of these less fortunately situated to get out of the clutches of the customs. For some dark and mysterious reason, there had been an access of great activity and watchfulness in the customs department, and examinations which aforetime were conducted more or less perfunctorily were now gone into thoroughly, to the confusion of a considerable sprinkling of the saloon passengers.

The delinquents were principally women; and Rankine and Affery, standing by, had the fecility of beholding the collossal stacks of female apparel held up by inexorable Customs officers.

Afferry had a way with the officers, and their own luggage was passed practically untouched. The whole affair appeared to Rankine largely a travesty, as well as an unnecessary exhibition.

"A country that has to protect its tariff with such measures," he observed in disgust, as he turned from the spectacle of a fashionably-dressed woman in tears of mortification over her humiliation, "is badly in need of a new administration. Come on and let us get along, Affery. I'm fed up."

"Take it easy. She's got her deserts. I happen to know who the lady is. She's been defrauding the Spread Eagle steadily for at least ten years. Shouldn't wonder if this particular little show was arranged for her benefit. You see, she's really only a go-between. She sells the stuff after she gets here. But she's been copped this time, and no mistake. We will be moving."

He beckoned a cabby, made a bargain with him, and drove from the crowd.

It was a beautiful day, the air soft and balmy, the sky delicately blue; and Rankine's spirits were uncommonly good.

They had not again alluded to the conversation on the moonlit deck. Once or twice in the last hours they had spent together on the ship, Rankine wondered whether he had dreamed it all, or whether Affery had been romancing first and last.

Suddenly, as if divining his thought Affery flashed one of his quer sideglances at him.

"We're going to a decent boarding house I used to know on forty-second street. It's central, respectable, and cheap. Kept by a daughter of Israel. When they're good, they're very good. I shall stop till to-morrow night and then take the westbound express. You'll stop, I suppose, indefinitely?"

"I suppose so. Or at least, until I have got a look around."

"And trot out your intos—then you will see how good they are. We will meet later on, I expect, and compare New York notes. But you'd better not stop as long as I did, nor try too many berths. It's better, on the whole, to have a line and to stick to it. What's yours going to be?"

Rankine drew out his rather fat pocket book which he had been studying off and on with considerable anxiety during thec losing hours of the voyage. It contained the usual type of letters of introduction. one from his lawyers to a firm of equal standing in New York; one from David Sillars, written in pencil in the train, where he had met Rankine journeying up to Glasgow for the last time; and two from other Ayrshire friends more or less vaguely expressed. One of them, considerably to Rankine's disgust, had been sealed; for which reason, and acting on Affery's instructions, he had tossed into the sea. As it happened eventually, he had in a moment of pique, thrown away the only thing that in New York city, would have been of the smallest use to him.

Letters of introduction are of various kinds, but few are worth the paper they are written on. Most persons who have been reduced to making use of them have proved them humiliating, in some cases damaging to any particular cause they had at heart. Why thec ustom of asking them and writing them has not fallen into desuetude it is not possible to understand. There is nothing in this world to be had without payment, and very often the person who writes the letter of introduction knows perfectly wel the futility of what he is doing. It creates, in the mind of the person to whom it is presented, a feeling of irritation which it is hardly possible to put into words. Mostly the recipient is powerless to offer the kind of permanent help or service desired and expected and the utmost he can do is to speak a word of casual kindness, offer a meal or some other half-hearted hospiatlity.

Affery, who knew the ropes of city life and all the tortuous ways of the office-seeker, felt a profound pity for his fellow-traveller. But realizing that he must find his own feet and arrive at his level in common with the rest of humanity, he now proposed to leave him severely to his own resources.

COMMANDANT HURD DISCUSSES PLANS FOR COMPLETION OF NEW MATERNITY HOSPITAL

Commandant Hurd, who recently arrived here to inaugurate a campaign to raise funds for the completing and furnishing of the new Maternity hospital, gave a very interesting account of his experiences since leaving here last December, in conversation with a representative of this paper yesterday afternoon.

After proceeding here he proceeded to Moncton, and immediately plunged into the Xmas efforts for the poor. His efforts, coupled with those of Commandant Wm. Hargrove, of the Moncton Corps, resulted in some three hundred people receiving comfort and cheer on Xmas Day, who would otherwise have been hungry and destitute on this festive occasion.

After three weeks spent with his family, the Commandant was off again, his destination being Bermuda, where he arrived on January 15th by the s.s. Fort St. George.

Enroute to Bermuda he stopped off at Boston and New York, where he visited Army institutes and addressed a meeting of over four hundred Newfoundlanders in the Chelsea Citadel.

During his three months' stay at Bermuda the Commandant was kept busy and his work was highly successful, over eight thousand dollars being raised for the building of Army property on the Island.

While at Bermuda the Commandant met a number of Newfoundlanders, all of whom were delighted to see hi mand gave him every assistance in his work. Among others he met Hon. J. P. Hand, Sir Joseph Outerbridge, Rev. Canan Marriott, Rev. D. J. Saint, Rev. Adams and Commandant E. Hiscock.

The Commandant desires that special mention be made of Hon. J. P. Hand, who started the financial campaign with a donation of fifty pounds ($240) and Dr. Saint who placed his Church at the Commandant's disposal for a Sunday evening service, also Commandant Hiscock, commanding officer of the S. A. forces in the Bermudas, who heartily co-operated with him in his efforts, and did much to insure the success achieved.

While at Bermuda, the Commandant was received by His Excellency Sir Joseph Asser, K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., C.B., Governor of Bermuda, who spoke to him about the work of the Army, remarking that he was in France when Brigadier Haines of the Salvation Army, arrived to begin the work there, and that he had given him every facility for it, and had made enquiries regarding its progress from time to time. His Excellency said he had the highest regard for the splendid work of the Army in all parts of the world.

The Commandant produced a sheaf of clippings from the Bermudian Press, dealing with his work there, from which we have selected the following as being likely to interest our Readers. The Bermuda Mid Ocean, in a recent issue, says:

"Commandant Hurd has been the financial representative of the Salvation Army for the Maritime Provinces for over six years. During the last Near Newfoundland was added to the territory in which he is serving the Army. He spent three months of last year in Newfoundland, going there to finance the new Maternity Hospital. He did exceptionally well, having obtained about $15,000 in cash and pledges for the building and furnishings, so that now Colonel Martin, territorial leader for Newfoundland is able to go ahead with the building. It will be opened about next August. This year Bermuda was added to the Commandant's territory. On the 2nd day of February of this year, it will be twenty years since Commandant Hurd received his first commission from the hands of Commander Eva Booth.

"Comandant Hurd was born at Bay Roberts, in Newfoundland. When he was about three years old, his parents moved to St. John's, where they lived for a number of years. In those days in Newfoundland wages were very small, and although his father was a seven years apprentice and did light house building and all government work around Hospitals, etc., yet his wage was only $9.00 perweek, and they had a family of nine to keep, so that the Commandant at an early age of teh years had to go to work. This only gave him about two years of schooling, and at the age of 17, he left home and joined the old Portia of the Red Cross line, running between St. John's and New York. For about five years he followed the sea in the stewards' department and finally became head cook. Getting converted in April, 1900, he shortly after left and went to St. John's Nfld., where he was enrolled as a soldier. He went away to sea on the Black Diamond line again, and it was while on this trip, just because he was a Salvationist, the steward beat him. So when he got to Montreal he left the ship and became a soldier in the Montreal Corps. Here he applied for work as an officer in the Salvation Army, and later got word from Toronto Headquarters that he had been accepted for the work as an officer.

After fitting himself for the work the Commandant was stationed in different places in Canada. He attended the S.A. Congress in London, England, in 1914, and arrived back to Halifax three days before the war broke out. After three years in Halifax, Commandant Hurd was appointed financial representative for the Maritime Provinces, with Headquarters at Moncton. Up to the time he left Corps work, Commandant Hurd held the record for the biggest income for Self-denial for a Corps, $2,125.00 and the largest sale of Xmas War Crys, 6,000 copier, also the largest sale of Easter War Crys, 5,300 for one issue.

"As can be seen by the Commandant's early career, he had very little chance to acquire the necessary education to fit himself for any important position in life, but through his consistent life and hard plodding he has gained thec onfidence and approval of his superior officers who have advanced him and placed him in the important position he fills today. The Commandant is a fluent speaker, and has a strong voice. With his past experience and observation he makes his talks most interesting and profitable.

"The special meeting of the Salvation Army which was held in the Opera House on Tuesday evening, was the largest one held there by the Army for years. His Excellency the Governor was present and attended by Captain Chanter, A.D.C., arrived at 8.p.m. and was escorted to a seat in front of the platform, while the Princess Orchestra played the National Anthem. The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Robinson, and the Hymn "O God Our Help in Ages Past" was sung.

The Hon. S. S. Spurling took the chair. He expressed his high admiration of the work of the Army whose many years of experience fitted them for the work of looking after those that go astray.

"The Rev. Dr. Saint next spoke of the work of the Army and said that he was specially glad to be present because Commandant Hurd was a countryman of his own and that tho in his early career he had very little chance of education, by hard work and a Godly purpose, he had risen to the great position of usefullness that he occupied to-day.

"The Rev. Dr. Marsh, after the beautiful rendering of a solo by Mr. Earlstone Doe, "The Ninety and Nine," made one of his pleasant speeches in which he spoke encouragingly of the work of the Army and Commandant Hurd. After contributing several delightful selections and adding much to the pleasure of those present, the Orchestra was obliged to leave, receiving the thanks of the meeting from the chairman.

"His Exclency he Governor made a spech expressive of his thorough appreciation of the work of the Army, of which he had seen much in France, and had there placed every facility in its way. Until that time he had never known the Salvation Army and its work. He thought that if the Salvation Army in Bermuda was able to see their way to establishing a reformatory here they should have every support.

"The Hon. J. P. Hand said he would be behind the scheme. He had known Commander Hurd a very long time and was glad to support him financially. The Rev. W. F. J. Groves, rector of Pembroke said that he had always supposed that the quarters occupied by the Salvation Army here were their own, and he thought that the Commandant's scheme of providing them with proper quarters was very important and of public interest, and they should be prepared to subscribe to it. He also approved of the idea of the Reformatory.

"Commandant Hurd then gave a very eloquent address on the "Underskirt," telling his audience of many touching cases of hardship and of rescue by the Army. He then appealed to the citizens of Bermuda for help for the scheme that he had come to further, to provide a Home for the officers to live in."

When Commander Hurd left here last December, after a very successful campaign in which he succeeded in raising upwards of $15,000,00 towards the completion of the Maternity Hospital, there was still needed to complete andf urnish the Building a further sum of about $15,000.00. This the Commandant hopes to ge together during the next few weeks so that the hospital can be opened early in September. Regarding the furnishing of the building the commandant wishes to again call the attention of the public to his scheme for getting each room furnished by some separate individual or society in com memoration of some person or event. He thinks this would be a splendid chance for those who have lost loved ones in the great war to perpetuate their memory, and propose to have a brass plate put on the door of each room engraved with the name of the donor, and the name of the person in whose name the room is being furnished. The following is a sample of the inscription to be used.

This Room is Furnished by Mrs. MADELINE BAIRD,
In Memory of her Husband,
Mr. HUGH BAIRD

We append a list of the rooms to to be furnished and the cost of each, so that intending donors can see just what amount will be required for each room:

GOVERNOR PRESENTS ...CUP FOR BEST TIME MADE AT REGATTA

Last noght's meeting of the Regatta Committee was a short one, practically only routine matters occupying attention. When the minutes of previous meeting had been adopted the President reported that Messrs. Higgins, Ellis and Hiscock had called on H. E. the Governor, who evinced great interest in the Regatta and announced his intention of being present, and as a tangible expression of his interest had donated a cup for the crew making the best time for the day. His Excellency and Lady Allardyce will be present from the early part of the day and Lady Allardyce has graciously consented to present the prizes.

The matter of making a charge to tent holders was dropped, but the people who have tents must clean up the ground after Regatta or guarantee the cost of having it done. A communication was read from Mr. P. F. Collins in which he regretfully announced his resignation from the committee. The committee expressed its regret at losing a member who had always been an indefatigable worker in connection with our annual Regatta.

Secretary Ellis reported that in connection with the Junior Football Race he had written the League suggesting that only players now registered be eligible to row. No reply had been received.

Mr. E. Brophy, on behalf of the Truckmen, asked that their race be put on earlier, so that in the event of their rowing the championship they would have a respite. It was accordingly ordered that the Truckmen's Race be changed from 9th to 8th, and the 8th, Army and Navy, to 9th.

Mr. A. G. Williams proposed and Mr. J. J. Lacy, seconded that Rule 19 be amended to read that not more than two prizes be given for any race. The motion was unanimously adopted.

The President announced that collectors will start work the beginning of next week and he hoped they would meet with a hearty response. There being no further business the meeting adjourned until next Friday evening.

FISH PLENTIFUL

Fish is reported plentiful on the Southern shore by Mr. P. F. Moore, M.H.A., who visited many of the settlements in his constituency yesterday. One boat had 10 qtls. on trawls at Cape Broyle and at other places boats are making two trips daily.

The prospects for a good voyage are very hopeful.

Roads and Their Upkeep

We would draw the attention of motorists to an article in another column of this issue, reprinted from the Montreal Daily Star, in reference to an appeal issued by Hon. J. L. Perron, Minister of Public Works, for the Province of Quebec for the observance of speed laws on the publicly maintained roads of the province. As will be seen by its perusal, this article throws much light on the surprising extent of the ravages caused on highways by improper motor driving, and therein is the lesson that might be learnt with advantage by our own motorists. It is safe to say that the average man who drives a car over our highways gives never a thought to the all-important matter of giving these roads which serve him so well a "square deal," nor would it be stretching the truth to say that ninety-nine motorists in a hundred have never taken the trouble to estimate what it costs the state to keep the public highways in condition for them to enjoy the comforts of easy travel. If a road is such as to cause damage to a car, the motorist is the first to grumble, but it should be remembered that the car owes as much to the road as the road does to the car, and for that reason every motorist should, when he gets on a good stretch of highway, treat that particular stretch as if it was something he himself had made and wished to preserve.

Until the Newfoundland Road Commission came into being and took over the job of repairing and improving some of the most important roads in the vicinity of St. John's and around Conception Bay, there was scarcely such a thing to be found as a road fit to drive a good car over, but the Commission in the course of their three years of activity have wrought many miracles in the way of road making. We say miracles advisedly, because they have had to overcome almost insurmountable difficulties in the carrying out of the work to which they set themselves. Now that they have succeeded in giving this section of the country some decent highways, it is up to those who benefit from their efforts to at least co-operate in keeping what we have got.

The making of a good road is no light matter, even when there are available practically unlimited funds. Take, for example, the Quebec highways which are famous thruout Canada for the attractions they offer the motorist. The article already referred to says with regard to the Lakeshore highways: "These roads were made at a cost of $20,000 per mile. They cost $1,250 a year to keep in repair. The average repair cost for all roads in the province is $1,000 per mile a year." Now, compare these costs with the funds which the Road Commission find available for their work and the question must present itself, how do the Commission find it possible to make or keep in repair a single mile of road, much less give attention to many miles on four or five country highways which they have in the past year or two put in really excellent shape.

As in the case of Quebec Province, therefore, it is fitting that an appeal should go forth to those who use our own roads for their work or their pleasure to treat these roads as if they were their personal property, placed there at personal cost to them and to be maintained at like cost. Motorists undoubtedly like good roads just as they detest bad ones. There are many little ways, and big ways too, in which they can assist in keeping a road in shape once it has been put in shape, and it is up to them to exercise every care for the protection and preservation of those highways that have been made passable for motor traffic.

The Need For Action

The fair despatch which has been given to date to legislative business by the House of Assembly is an indication of the recognition of the people's representatives that what the country and the people want at this time is not empty discussion or destructive criticism, but something that will be of material benefit to those numbers of our people who are struggling for a livelihood.

The people want work quickly and no effort should be omitted by the Government or the Opposition Party to facilitate necessary measures to get the wheels of industry moving. The passing of the Humber project ensures the acceptance by the country of that project and it is only natural to expect that the contracting company will recognise the need for rushing development work in order to cope with the demand for and the necessity of employment, which was the fundamental reason for the Government's Humber industrial programme.

There are many men who are urgently in need of work.

Let everybody get busy now, and help out the general situation.

Bowring Park and Motor Traffic

The Advocate has to agree with the remarks of the News regarding the decision of the City Fathers to close Bowring Park to motor cars.

While, doubtless, that decision has not been reached without consideration, there are various reasons which seem to suggest the undesirability of depriving a section of the public from the pleasures heretofore enjoyed.

We have heard of no accidents from motor cars within the precincts of the park, and the park driveways are never so crowded as to make it dangerous or even annoying. A well-regulated system for motors, and the enforcement of a low speed could improve the conditions hitherto existing and would remove, we think, any objection or annoyances.

In the vicinity of Bowring Park are the best roads around the city. The drive through the park, from the point of beauty and pleasure, cannot be duplicated elsewhere. The action of the City Fathers debars from the park a large section of the public, some of whom cannot find the time to make long visits to the park, or cannot be expected to hire carriages when they possess motor-cars, and some of whom, through ill health or age, will be obliged to forego the pleasurable resort.

And tourists, who generally use motors for a quick survey of our countrysides, will not be encouraged in their visiting of the beauty spots around the city.

From the above viewpoints, we are obliged to question the wisdom of the decision reached regarding the park.

Day By Day In Every Way

Day by day in every way, the Opposition Press plays its little political game—and paints the horizon black—to suit its feelings.

The energetic display of political hypocrisy and pharisarcial journalistic probity does not go unrequited, despite the fact, very substantially impressed, that the people can discriminate between the unreal and the real, or between the assuming righteous prophet and the ordinary every-day human being.

There are certain types of individual who thrive on inflicting themselves upon the public, in whatever light the public is apt to regard them; and when we have the spectacle of the Opposition Press so righteously criticising, on bended knee, as it were the propriety of certain government actions, it is concluded that inherent vanity is thereby rewarded or that some consolation is secured from the fact, that for reasons of political spite, the public is penalized by the demonstations of the Opposition Press.

U.M.W. Officials Arrested

SYDNEY, N.S., July 7.—Dan Livingston, President, and J. B. McLachlan, Secretary of the United Mines Workers of America District Twenty Six, were arrested at strike headquarters, Glace Bay, last night, following the receipt of a telegram for Hon. W. J. O'Hearn, Attorney General of Nova Scotia, on a charge of violation Section 136 of the Criminal Code. The telegram was to J. M. McCormick, Sydney Chief of Police. It was as follows: "Warrants have been issued by M. B. Archibald, Magistrate for the City of Halifax, charging James B. McLachlan and Daniel Livingston with unlawfully publishing false tales whereby injury or mischief was likely to be occasioned to a public interest named by the Government and Provincial Police of Nova Scotia contrary to Section 136 of the code. Please arrest immediately if possible and wire. Chief Inspector Kennedy will arrive in the morning with warrants. Seek co-operation of Provincial Police if necessary. Section 136 of the Criminal Code of Canada says: "Everyone is guilty of an indictible offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who will fully and knowingly publish any false news or tale whereby any injury or mischief is or is likely to be occasioned to any public interest."

The charge is believed to have been based on statemnts against Provincial Police contained in a letter addressed to various locals over the name of J. B. McLachlan. The arrests were effected by Chief McCormick and one Deputy, who found the Union Leaders in a crowded hall and took them into custody before the eyes of the many assembled strikers. There was no objection as the men were taken first to their homes and later to a restaurant where, after a hearty meal, they were lodged in jail to await the arrival of the Halifax officer. Bail was refused.

"Public Should Assist In Road Upkeep"

Careful Driving of Cars Would Materially Lower Repair Bill. STOP SPEEDING.

(Montreal Star.)

Hon. J. L. Perron, Provincial Minister of Public Works, issued an appeal today for observance of speed laws by motorists on the publicly maintained roads of Quebec. Mr. Perron said that there is now one man for every ten miles of road on daily patrol watching out for signs of damage. The entire province is divided into thirty-six sections, each of which is under the direction of an engineer. Yet they report to Mr. Perron that they cannot keep up with the damage caused by speeding cars.

UPKEEP OF BRIDGES.

Mr. Perron also explained the position in which the provincial authorities stand in the matter of the upkeep of bridges. Referring to the recent fatality at a bridge near Longueuil, Mr. Perron said that for five years his department had been urging the municipalities involved to take action. The provincial government offered to meet half the cost of the bridge if the municipalities would defray the remainder.

"The government cannot act, no matter how much a bridge needs repair as long as it has not been built with the assistance of government funds," said Mr. Perron.

RECKLESS DRIVING.

Returning to the question of the upkeep of roads, Mr. Perron said. "Fines do not nearly meet the cost of reckless driving. At a conference on highway upkeep at Hamilton some weeks ago, all the delegates, who were mostly ministers of highways, confessed that they were helpless to meet the situation unless the public realized that the roads were their property and that they should treat them as such.

"Last night I was observing traffic on the Lakeshore highways. Although they are winding roads, the average speed was forty miles an hour, and the cars were passing by every minute. It was a warm night, and the oil and tar preparations on the roads were soft and easily damaged. It would be hard to estimate what the night's driving cost the province.

"These roads were made at a cost of $20,000 per mile. They cost $1,250 yearly to keep in repair. The average repair cost for all roads in the province is $1,000 per mile a year. On roads such as the King Edward Highway and the Quebec-Montreal Highway, where the province meets the entire cost, the upkeep cost is the same as on the roads between Lachin and Dorval. It is on roads like these, also, that traffic is greatest.

"Our patrolmen cannot care for the roads and at the same time check cases of speeding and overloading. Trucks have a legitimate place in highway traffic if the owners do not break the law by overloading. Bus drivers are filling a legitimate need, but some of them, apparently, do not realize that by speeding this season they are destroying the roads, and, therefore, their means of livelihood next season.

PROVINCE'S TASK

"This year the province is maintaining 1,500 miles of roads unassisted, and more in co-operation with municipalities. There are nearly 5,000 miles of roads which must be kept in repair. The various motor organizations have pledged me their aid, but they not include all motor owners in the province. It is up to the general public to realize that in the matter of helping to maintain the public highways they are all members of a club.

Another Appeal

To-day as never before our attention is being directed to the needs of our fellow citizens. Young and old are in the gaze of the public eye, and yet when the immediate welfare of the youth of our land requires personal touch and effort in the treatment and education of our girls and boys whose home training—should they be fortunate enough to have even a place to call home—does not tend to make them industrious competent men and women, we get merely a shrug of the shoulder or the rejoinder that though there is an interest so many other things are in hand that nothing can be done just now.

JUST NOW. Let me write in letters large enough to attract even the most indifferent! These very young folks can become either a blessing or a curse to our country.

Other countries are doing their duty in caring for and training them.

A survey was made of our City last year in the interest of the boys,—the Rotarians did that.

A Juvenile Protection Act has been placed on our Statute Books. —The Social Service Council worked for it.

The work amongst the girls has been started and something has been accomplished, but our hearts still cry out for the great need, and we are not going to give up but keep right on until the interest and sympathy of all who love our dear land is aroused and the work be made to flourish so that any girls who otherwise would sink in shame and misery may become happy women and thus make our country all we desire it to become.

Who will help!

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

Mr. Chairman:—

As the late Lord Salisbury once described this country as the sport of historic misfortune because of its unfortunate experience as a pawn in some international disputes, so we might even more truthfully apply the same phrase in describing this country's experience in regard to railway construction and operation. As I explained in my previous address, misfortune has dogged the steps of Newfoundland in her railway enterprise from the outset. The original venture of a railroad from St. John's to Hall's Bay with a branch to Harbor Grace fell into the hands of an American adventurer, whose finances collapsed by the time the line had reached Whitbourne. The attempt to carry it further had to be abandoned and only the branch to Harbor Grace was completed.

Newfoundland's first serious lawsuit in railway matters arose out of this. The line was to be built in five mile sections, and as they were completed we had to pay a subsidy of $30 a mile each year for 35 years. When the Company defaulted the Government of that day refused to make payments on that account. The Company took suit against the Government. The decision went against the Government, and the end was that Newfoundland had to pay this subsidy even though the Company had broken its contract with us. (See judgment published in Newfoundland Law Reports 1884-96 at page 147.)

Before Privy Council.

We took the matter to the Privy Council. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland was upheld with the rider that we had an action for damages against the Comptny. The Company was bankrupt so our right of action was valueless. The similarity of that situation to the present is very apparent. Ten or twelve years later, circumstances forced the Colony to buy back from the British bondholders this section of line from St. John's via Whitbourne to Harbor Grace, and we had to pay therefore the sum of £325,000 for 83 miles of road, approximately $1,170,000, or nearly 50 per cent. more than it cost. This was necessary to make this section of railway a link in the completed cross-country service.

Following upon the original venture in 1880 the construction of 20 miles of line to Placentia was undertaken. This was in 1887. This was begun as a Government work, managed by a Board of Commissioners, but it proved so costly that the whole country recognized that no further attempt in the way of Government construction could be entertained. Consequently, when in 1890 the construction of the line from Whitbourne to the Exploits River was undertaken, it was put out to contract, this contract being given to the late Sir R. G. Reid.

In 1893, before it was completed, it was seen that it would be necessary to carry the road across the country to Port aux Basques and this second construction contract was also given to Mr. Reid, coupled with a contract for the operation of the line for a period of ten years, three during construction and seven afterwards. In 1896, when the road was nearly finished, it became clear that no satisfactory operation of a cross-country line was possible while the line from St. John's to Whitbourne remained in the hands of another company, and then, as I have said, it became necessary to buy out the bondholders of the original line and work that section with the rest of the system so as to make a homogeneous undertaking.

Payment to Reids.

For this operation for ten years Mr. Reid was paid in lands, and he naturally, sought and secured the best the Island could provide. The extent of concessions given by the Government of that day to Contractor Reid, coupled with the fact that he also secured from them a street railway franchise for the city of St. John's in 1896, and with the further fact that he had still bigger projects in view, such as, for instance, a scheme to take over the sealing fleet and operate the seal fishery as a monopoly, aroused such feeling throughout the country that the Conservative Party then in opposition went to the polls in the autumn of 1897 and carried the general election on a policy of no further concessions to Reid.

At this stage in this review of our railway history, I enter the arena of what may be described as the modern phase of the railway situation, around which bitter controversies have raged and will probably continue to rage for many years to come.

I do not wish to say anything in this review to disturb the feelings of those on one side or the other of that controversy. I was not a party to it. I was then a schoolboy writing the London University Matriculation Examination in a room in this building adjoining the one in which I now address you. I do state, however, that nothing in the history of this country, except, I suppose, the Confederation election of 1869, provoked such bitter feling and left such unpleasant memories as what has come to be known as the "Reid Deal in 1898."

Reid Agreement of 1898

Everybody is familiar now with the main features of that agreement. It was made by the Conservative Government within three or four months after their election to office, as I have said, on a policy of no further concessions to Reid. It provided for an extension of Mr. Reid's operating contract from 10 years to 50 years. It sold him the railroad at the end of the operating period for the sum of one million dollars, which he was to pay at once in cash, as that sum according to the speeches made in this House on the measure, would amount at compound interest to $7,200,000 at the end of the operating period.

Our railway, which then consisted of the main line from St. John's to Port aux Basques, the branch from Whitbourne to Harbor Grace, the branch from Placentia Junction to Placentia, and the branch from Notre Dame Junction to Lewisporte totalled 606 miles, and, estimating the cost including stations, connecting roads at $20,000 a mile, it represented a cash outlay by Newfoundland of over twelve million dollars. According to the average citizen's view of this transaction we were selling this property for one million dollars was really only a figure of speech, because by the new contract we were undertaking to build seven miles or railway from the dry dock in the West End of St. John's to a point near Donovan's on the Topsail Road, to relay the road from St. John's to Whitbourne with 50-lb. rails, to pave Water Street in this city at a cost of $100,000, and to do other things which would absorb $450,000, nearly half the million dollars we were getting: this money being paid back to Reids as contractors for the various works.

In addition, Newfoundland was to give Mr. Reid 5,000 acres of land per mile for the operation of the entire system for the 50 years. Taking into account various minor obligations which translated into cash payments added to this, it meant that the million dollars which we would get from him would be largely paid out to him again under these other heads. Then we were giving him what proved to be in its practical application at any rate, a monopoly of the coastal steamship service for a fleet of nine steamers operating around the bays and sections of the coast to Labrador and across Cabot Strait, a monopoly which became so oppressive during the next few years that Sir Robert Bond was compelled to give a contract to the Bowring Company in 1905 for a competing steamship service in order to make it possible for the business people of the city and outports to keep their business enterprises going, because of the heavy charges exacted from them for freight and passage until this opposition service was started. But, in addition, our telegraph line was transferred to him with a provision for his purchase of the same after six years, and the Dry Dock was sold to him for $325,000 or about half its cost to enable it to serve as a deep water terminal in the West End for the railroad, which was diverted there from the East End.

Caused Public Outburst

I do not propose to-day to go into the discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of this contract. Eloquent and skilful pleaders did and could put forward strong arguments on both sides of the question, but the fact nevertheless remains that the introduction into the legislature of this measure was marked by the strongest outburst of public feeling this country has ever seen. Rich and poor, gentle and simple, city people and outport people, united in opposition to it as they never united before or since. One hears latterly comment about the growth of sectarianism in politics, but it is significant that the late Archbishop Howley in St. John's, speaking as a representative Roman Catholic clergyman; the Rev. Canon Temple, in Twillingate, an equally representative Church of England clergyman, and Rev. Mr. James, in Trinity Bay, an equally representative Methodist clergyman, were found lined up against the measure with scores of their fellow ecclesiastics and thousands of their fellow countrymen of every denomination in the Island.

Reason for Opposition

At this point it may be asked why did these gentlemen take this stand and my answer must be the words of the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in his famous memorandum in connection with this question when it was referred to the Colonial Office by Governor Murray. Here are the words of Mr. Chaberlain:

"I do not propose to enter upon a discussion of the details of the contract, or of the various arguments for and against it, but I cannot refrain from expressing my views as to the serious consequences which may result from this extraordinary measure. Under this contract and the earlier one of 1893 for the construction of the railway, practically all the Crown Lands of any value become, with full rights to all minerals, the freehold property of a single individual, the whole of the railways are transferred to him, the telegraphs, the postal service, and the local sea communication, as well as the property of the dock at St. John's. Such an abdication of a government of some of its most important functions is without paralell. The Colony is divested for ever of any control over or power of influencing its own development, and of any direct interest in or direct benefit from that development. It will not even have the guarantee for efficiency and improvement afforded by competition, which would tend to minimize the danger of leaving such services in the hands of private individuals.

"Of the energy and capacity and character of Mr. Reid in whose hands the future of the colony is thus placed, both yourself and your predecessor have always spoken in the highest terms, and his interests in the Colony are always so enormous, that he has every motive to work for and to stimulate its development, but he is already, I believe, advanced in years, and though the contract requires that he shall not assign or sublet it to any person or corporation without the consent of the Government, the risk of its passing into the hands of persons less capable and possessing less interest in the development of the Colony is by no means remote.

"All this has been fully pointed out to your Ministers and the Legislature, and I can only conclude that they have satisfied themselves that the dangers and evils resulting from the corruption which, according to the statement of the Receiver General has attended the administration of these services by the Government, are more serious than any evils that can result from these services being transferred unreservedly to the hands of a private individual or corporation; and that, in fact, they consider that it is beyond the means and capacity of the Colony to provide for the honest and efficient maintenance of those services, and that they must therefore be got rid of at whatever cost.

"That they have acted thus in what they believe to be the best interests of the Colony I have no reason to doubt, but whether or not it is the case, as they allege, that the intolerable burden of the public debt, and the position in which the Colony was left by the contract of 1893, rendered this sacrifice inevitable, the fact that the Colony after more than forty years of self-government should have to resort to such a step is greatly to be regretted."

A Weak Spot

I digress for a brief moment to invite the House to observe how that distinguished statesman, Mr. Chamberlain, put his finger on one of the weakest spots in this whole measure, the contingency, now unfortunately realized, that in the course of years the enterprise might fall into weaker hands than those which molded it into the attractive industrial structure it then presented and that disaster might thus come, not only on those connected with it, but on the Colony as well, and its whole future be prejudicially affected thereby. We are victims of just that situation of affairs to-day, which Mr. Chamberlain foresaw 25 years ago.

One hears and reads much these days of the need for mandates from the people to authorize the enactment of measures of outstanding importance. In 1898 there was no mandate to the Conservative Government for their Railway Deal. If that party was elected upon any policy it was on a policy of hostility to Reid, on a pledge to make no further concessions to Reid. That election took place on October 28th, 1897. On February 22, 1898, just four months later, the 1898 Railway Deal, as it has come to be known, was introduced into the Legislature. The country had never heard of this project before, even the members of the Government party in the House never heard of it until a few days before the House was to meet, and Governor Murray records in the correspondence from which I have just quoted that he was kept equally in the dark, because the negotiations were carried on between a few of the leading members of that administration and Contractor Reid and his sons. It was notorious, according to the newspaper reports of the time that the late Hon. W. J. S. Donolly, afterwards Receiver General, was one of the very strong opponents of the scheme.

The British Blue Book issued in connection with the matter and from which I am quoting, shows that this measure, unquestionably the most important the country has ever seen, was introduced into the Assembly on February 22, forced thru all its stages there by March 3rd, or within nine days of the original resolution; and that the Government pressed upon Sir Herbert Murray, the then Governor, that his consent to the Bill be given by March 12th.

"Indecent Haste"

A study of the correspondence shows that every effort was made to force this Bill through the Legislature with what might fairly be described as "indecent haste" although it involved millions of money, the future of the people of this country, and seriously affected the conditions and prosperity of future generations. In setting out these facts I do not wish to be regarded as in the least degree criticising the good faith of the Prime Minister of that day the late Sir James S. Winter, K.C.M.G., K.C., his colleagues, and his supporters in the Assembly, because they were led to believe by the Finance Minister of that date, Hon. A. B. Morine, K.C., that this contract was essential if the country was to be saved from bankruptcy on the 30th June next ensuing. Mr. Morine, in his turn, may have sincerely believed that this contract was absolutely essential to the solvent existence of the country. The statement may have been "critically correct," but I submit that the value of this utterance was nullified completely by the facts which did not become public until some months later, namely that Mr. Morine, the gentleman who made the statement, was not alone in his public capacity the Finance Minister of the Colony, but was in a secret capacity the solicitor for Contractor Reid under a 10-year contract at $8,000 a year without the knowledge of either his associates in the Cabinet or the members of the party supporting the Government in the House of Assembly.

Had the Government known at the time of the dual capacity in which Mr. Morine was acting or had those in the Assembly who voted for this measure known this fact I think it is not unfair to say that they would have thought twice before endorsing the measure on his special advocacy, no matter how powerful his argument in support of it. In the same way, I think it follows, in the light of the storm of criticism which was aroused, not alone at home, but also abroad, by its passage, by the flat-footed condemnation by Mr. Secretary Chamberlain, and by the unwelcome publicity which it gave the Colony and the blow it gave its credit in the markets of the world, that it is easy to believe the passage of this measure did little to help in stabilizing the colony's finances and that if it had not been passed some other method would probably have been adopted for saving the situation at the end of June then ensuing, as the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Bond, P.C., K.C.M.G., the Liberal chieftain, had saved the situation three years before, if indeed the situation in 1898 was ever really as bad as it was pictured by Mr. Morine in his speech in supporting the Railway Deal.

THEY TELL THEIR NEIGHBORS

Women Tell Each Other How They Were Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Woodbridge, Ont.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles. I would have headaches, backaches, pains between my shoulders and under my shoulder-blades and dragging down feelings on each side. I was sometimes unable to do my work and felt very badly. My mother-in-law told me about the Vegetable Compound and I got some right away. It has done me more good than any other medicine I ever took and I recommend it to my neighbors. You are quite welcome to use this letter as a testimonial if you think it will help some poor sufferer."—Mrs. EDGAR SIMMONS, R. R. 2, Woodbridge, Ont.

In nearly every neighborhood in every town and city in this country there are women who have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the treatment of ailments peculiar to their sex, and they take pleasure in passing the good word along to other women. Therefore, if you are troubled in this way, why not give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from roots and herbs, has for forty years proved its value in such cases. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. G

The great City of Detroit, Mich., (where, by the way, Henry Ford has the greatest of his great automobile plants) runs its own street car system. It has owned and operated the unified system for exactly a year.

In that year it has paid $1,200,000 on its purchase price; paid all other running expenses; set aside $4,000,000 in a sinking fund, and after all this shows a profit of $1,000,000. The million dollars has been used in improving the street railway, which by the way is rated as the largest municipally owned railway in the world.

In that year the city extended the mileage of tracks to 373, increased the total number of cars to 1,600, employed 6,000 employes and carried 476,000,000 passengers.

Which shows that when there is a desire to do it, and capable men are employed to operate, a municipality can and does successfully operate a public utility.

In that sharp note despatched by Lord Curzon, the Foreign Secretary of the English Government, to the Russian Government, one of the points made was that the Russion Government had attacked the Russian Orthodox Church and its clergy. Curzon's note was conceded by all Liberals in England, including David Lloyd George, former Premier, to be most ill-advised and lacking in good judgement. Howexer, here is an answer to the part dealing with religious persecution.

It was sent by the governing body of the Russian Orthodox Church to the Archbishop of Canterbury in England, and is signed by Antonin, Metropolitan of Moscow; the Vice President and Arch-Presbyter of the Russian Church; the Metropolitan Bishop of All Siberia; by the Metropolitan Bishop of Odessa and by other bishops of the church, as well as the Lay Administrator, Novikoff.

"The Supreme Church Council of the Russian orthordox Church has read that part of the British note addressed to the Soviet Government dealing with Russian Church affairs; and perceive therein a threat directed against the children of our fatherland. Therefore, the council considers it a Christian duty, in the name of the love and teaching of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, to give you enlightment as to the actual state of affairs.....

"The Supreme Council consider it necessary to bring to the knowledge of your Eminence the fact that religious life in Russia at present enjoys such freedom as never before under former governments of our fatherland....."

** *** **

This is enough to indicate the general spirit of the statement. It is most assuredly different from the countless stories of religious prosecution in Russia that we have been reading.

A beautiful poem by Joyce Kilmer. (And, by the way, I hope you read these poems I reproduce in this column.)

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;

A tree that loks at God all day
And lifts her leafy arms to pray;

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair;

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

The other day an airplane flew from one coast of the American Continent to the other coast, a distance of 2,625 miles, without stopping or landing once. Those two and a half thousand miles are flown in 26 hours and 50 minutes.

I fear that in late years we have been too surfeited with such achievements to properly realize the significance of that flight. I suppose there is a limit to man's capacity to be astonished.

It may help us to appreciate what this flight means when we remind ourselves that the famous non-stop flight which Captain John Alcock made across the Atlantic consisted of 1,960 miles—over 600 miles short of this latest flight, altho, of course, inestimably more dangerous.

Read the following statement. It was written by General John F. O'Ryan, who was called by President Wilson to command the 27th division of the American Army in France, and who, incidentally, was knighted by the British Government and decorated by every Allied Government.

"No matter," said Sir John O'Ryan, "how righteous the cause, the experience of a soldier at the front tends to lower his finer sensibilities. If any soldier came out of this war a better man than when he entered, it is in spite and not because of his battle experience. War is the denial of Christianity and of all the most sacred things in life. It exalts force. It thrives on lies."

Many Attend Art Exhibition

The exhibition of paintings by Miss Gwendolyn Mews, opened yesterday afternoon at the offices of T. A. McNab & Co., City Club Building, was attended by many interested visitors who viewed the exceptionally clever work of this talented young lady with evident pleasure and approval.

Lady Allardyce was amongst those attending and spent a considerable time inspecting the paintings. Delightful teas were served by the Girl Guides under the direction of Miss Dorothy Ayre.

Feildians and Star Draw

NO GOALS ARE SCORED

The Feildians and Star football teams put up a hard fight in last night's league game but in spite of many attempts on the part of both to score, no goals were netted. The Feildians pressed their opponents hard from the start and only the splendid goal tending of Browne saved the Star team from defeat. Ewing lost two excellent chances to score in the last half by placing the ball too high. The game was one of the best for the season and there was a very fair attendance of fans. Madden of the Star was put out of commission for a time by a kick but he was able to resume play.

Alleges Brutal Treatment

Editor, Evening Advocate,

Dear Sir,—I would like to draw your attention to what I consider very improper conduct on the part of two police officers while making an arrest on Cabot Street yesterday afternoon. They had followed a men, evidentity a foreigner of some sort, who gave them quite a chase. I do not know on what charge the man was being arrested but I do know from personal observation, that when they finaily overtook him they treated him with unnecessary brutality. Either of the officers could have handled the prisoner easily single-handedly but despite the evident disparity in size and weight, the two threw their prisoner to the ground and knelt on him to handcuff him, cutting and bruising his face against the gravel of the street.

Personally, I always like to see the police get every assistance in maintaining law and order, but when the minions of the law themselves resort to disorder in the performance of their duties, how can they expect sympathy or support, or how can we hope for that respect for the law which it its due.

Yours truly,

CITIZEN.

Smith, Misses Smith (2,) Master Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. Finney, Jno. Finney, Mrs. J. C. and Harold Andrews, G. Hall, W. Clarke, Miss V. L. Paris, Miss E. Clarke, Miss E. Bussle, Mr. and Mrs. D. Baird, T. Hallett, A. G. Ogolvie, Capt. G. J. Whitty, T. H. Dean, Rev. E D. L. Danaldson, W. J. Ranka, Mr. and Mrs. E. Wood and infant.

Should Secure Site For Cab Stand

Now that the West End and Central cab stands are in use, the only cabmen who are still compelled to use the street as a stand are the East End men. It has been suggested that the Council should endeavour to secure a lease of the vacant space opposite the Royal Stores to be used as an East End cab-stand and so have all the cabs removed from the street. It should be possible to secure this place, which has been vacant for years, at a very moderate cost and the improvement that would be thus effected would more than compensate for the outlay. Doubtless the owners would be willing to hire the site in question for this purpose.

It has been said that Sloan's Liniment will banish any pain. Sloan's has a great reputation all over the world, and its sales are enormous. All Union Stores are now stocking Sloan,s.

Situation in Cape Breton Grows Serious

LEWIS ADVISES RETURN OF STRIKERS TO WORK.

Bail Is Refused Livingstone and McLachlan.

HOLD OUT FOR RELEASE OF LEADERS

SYDNEY, July 8—The strike situation in the Cape Breton coal fields changed over night. Hughie Dan McLean, one of the leading spirits at New Waterford, told the Canadian Press yesterday that on Friday the men in his district who recently voted against the strike for the 1921 wages scale were wavering and might easily have been induced to return to work, but to-day they met and endorsed the resolutions passed at the Glace Bay meeting pledging them to stand fast until the two leaders, Livingstone and McLachlin, had been set free, and also calling upon the railway trains to refuse to move further troop trains into Cape Breton. Alex S. McIntyre, Vice President of the United Mine Workers, said the Union headquarters had yet to receive the telegram from Lewis, International President, calling upon the miners to return to work and published Saturday afternoon. In any event, he said, the strikers would stand fast, no matter how long the leaders remained in jail. The coke ovens and Blooming mill are being made ready to start work to-morrow.

SYMPATHETIC STRIKE POSSIBLE.

CALGARY, July 8—The situation is serious and anything may happen, declared William Sherman, President of District Eighteen, United Mine Workers, regarding the attitude of the Union toward the development in the Nova Scotia coal and steel strike. Asked if a sympathetic strike was possible, he said it certainly was. A general conference of all western locals is to be held shortly in Calgary or Winnipeg to decide sympathetic action.

BAIL REFUSED

HALIFAX, N.S., July 8—Stipendiary Magistrate M. B. Archibald, in the police court yesterday, refused the application for pail on behalf of Daniel Livingstone and J. M. McLachlan, preferred by their counsel, J. A. Walker. The accused, respectively President and Secretary of District twenty-six, United Mine Workers of America, are charged as follows:—"That they did in the city of Halifax on the sixth day of July, A.D. 1923, wilfully and knowingly, publish a false tale whereby injury or mischief was likely to be occasioned to the public interest, namely, the Government and Provincial police of Nova Scotia." The two leaders were arrested in Sydney Friday and brought to Halifax for trial.

PRESIDENT CONDEMNS WORKERS' ACTION

SYDNEY, N.S., July 8—The announcement that John L. Lewis, International President of the United Mine Workers of America, had requested the executive of District 26 "to take immediate steps" to have the miners of Cape Breton return to work, was made here Saturday. President Lewis telegraphed the District President, Daniel Livingstone, from Atlantic City, and termed the existing strike "unquestionably a violation of the existing agreement between District 26 and the coal companies, the parties thereto," President Lewis also termed the strike "a violation of the principles and policies of the United Mine Workers."

MINERS VOW TO STAND FIRM

GLACE BAY, N.S., July 8—At a mass meeting held here Saturday night striking miners from all locals enthusiastically vowed to remain on strike until McLachlan and Livingstone were released and also adopted the Caledonia local resolution calling upon the railway unions to refuse to move any more troop trains to Cape Breton. Chairman Angus Kenny McDonald conducted the meeting which was boisterous but orderly. International President Lewis and the Provincial Government were scored heavily by speakers and voices from the audience. At the close of the meeting the Chairman in advising the miners to commit no acts of violence against the troops added "any man who goes back to work after taking this vow sinks his principles to the soles of his boots. Comrades, I don't ask you to kill any man who goes back to work, I want you to kick him to death."

CANADIAN PREMIER TAKES REST

OTTAWA, July 9.—Hon. W. L. Mac Kenzie King, Prime Minister, left Ottawa yesterday for a rest, after the work of the parliamentary session. Mr. King has had no vacation since taking office, and intends having a complete rest for two weeks. Hon. W. S. Fielding will be acting premier in his absence.

SEARCH FOR MISSING DORIES

BOSTON, July 9.—Several dories of the Gloucester fishing vessel, Sibil are missing according to a brief wireless message received here yesterday. The number missing is not known, but the Sibil carried a crew of eight men.

The cutter Ossippee is going to George's Bank to aid in the search.

SENATOR THORNE DEAD

MONTREAL, July 9—Hon. Wm. Henry Thorne, senator for St. John, died at the General Hospital here at one o'clock this morning, from a complication of diseases. He had been in hospital the last six weeks, and was in his seventy-ninth year.

Senator Thorne was born at St. John, Sept. 12th, 1844, of united loyal stock on both sides. The original family came from New York at the close of the American war of revolution, settling in Granville, N.S.

The deceased senator was a leading worker and member of the Liberal Conservative Association, St. John City and the Province of New Brunswick, and was appointed to the senate during the Borden administration, 1913. He was unmarried.

SUCCESSFUL OUTCOME

LAUSANNE, July 9—An accord has been reached between the Turks and the Allies, and peace will probably be signed within this week. Thus the Near East Conference which has been in continuous session more than three months past, has had a successful outcome.

For a considerable period the Conference hung in the balance over the question of the Ottoman debt concessions and the evacuation of Constantinople and other Turkish territory by foreign troops. Both sides gave way in a measure at the end.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL ON TOUR

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 9—Governor-General Byng and party arrived Saturday night at Musquash, St. John County, and their special train remains there until to-morrow morning, when it will pull into West St. John at eleven o'clock.

The day was speunt quietly in tramping country roads and viewing hydro-electric developments.

The Fredericton Gleanor published Saturday a report that the provincial elections would be held in the fall, when the government, it is expected, would seek a mandate to go on with the development of the Grand Falls hydro project, and intimates also that prohibition will be an issue.

Government officials absolutely deny the truth of the rumor.

RESUME NORMAL RELATIONS

BELGRADE, July 9—Serbian representatives at Sofia have been instructed to inform the Bulgarian government that in agreement with its colleagues of the little entente, the Belgrade cabinet is disposed to resume normal relations with Bulgaria.

BRITAIN MUST MAKE CLEAR POSITION WITHOUT DELAY

LONDON, July 9—There is an impression that the present British cabinet cannot much longer delay the declaration of its policy in the Reparations question. This belief was strengthened by speeches made at Birmingham by L. S. Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty and Arthur Neville Chamberlain, Minister of Health. They both stressed the point that Britain must make clear her position without delay.

WILL RESUME NORMAL RELATIONS

BELGRADE, July 8—The Serbian representative at Sofia has been instructed to inform the Bulgarian Government that, in agreement with its colleagues of the little entente, the Belgrade Cabinet is disposed to resume normal relations with Bulgaria.

U.S. NAVAL FORCE

WASHINGTON, July 8—The United States will maintain at full efficiency during the next fiscal year a minimum naval force at sea of eighteen first line battleships, fourteen cruisers and eighty-four submarines, under a decision by the General Board formally approved to Secretary of Navy Denby.

KRASSIN'S SUCESSOR IS ANNOUNCED

MOSCOW, July 8—The appointment of Christian Rakovsky to succeed Leonid Krassin as head of the Russian legation in London is announced. Rakovsky was formerly President of the Ukranian Republic.

CHAPTER XX.

An Oasis in the Desert

"Leave 'em in their cosy corner till after I've cleared," he said, with a glance of good-natured scorn at the fat pocket book. "Just for four and twenty hours you and me will do our selves proud at my expense. I'll show you New York afore I quit it for ever."

Rankine was not favorably impressed with the boarding house kept by Mrs. Isaacstein to which he was introduced on Forty-second Street, and only the odd personal spel! Affery exercised over him induced him to enter it. A good deal in the second class accomodation on the boat had parred upon his susceptibilities, though he had done his best to fight against his oft-times rising choler and disgust. But when the odour of Mrs. Isaacstein's boarding house greeted his nostrils at the door, he was conscious of a sudden whiff of almost overwhelming disgust.

All the stairs of the New York boarding houses—even those of the meanest description—are heavily carpeted. No man or woman ever be holds these carpets lifted for cleaning purposes. Of course, it may be done in the dead of night, but most certainly they look as if they had lain there from primeval times, and had absorbed the dirt and odours of centuries.

It was a very tall house, with innumerable stairs. Affery, familiar with it, and apparently glad to hear that Mrs. Isaacstein was still in possession, hauled Rankine inside to interview her.

She received them in a front parlour of modest dimensions furnished in red plush. Heavy curtains were draped across the windows, and there was no suggestion of air of any kind in the place. Mrs. Issacson was elderly, shining, and fat. She had glossy black hair, crimped and brushed smoothly about her ears, where it met some large ear-rings composed of coral and gold. An immense medallion-brooch containing a portrait of, presumably, the late Mr. Isaacstein, adorned her ample bosom; her dress was of black satin, which has advantages over most other materials in that it does not show the dirt, and can be freely sponged without detriment. Her fat and not overclean hands had many rings on them, and when she saw Affery she smiled and expansive smile of genuine welcome.

"Ach, Mr. Affery, how do you do? It is lofely to see you again.

"May I introduce my pal, Mr. Rankine, from Scotland?. He is going to stop in New York, it may be for good. I want you to take him in and do for him with your usual beneficence. As for me, I'm off to-morrow."

"Away back to the ice and snow, Mr. Affery?" she said, shaking her head as she essayed to take in his companion with one of her most comprehensive glances. Apparently she was satisfied, for she nodded to him with much kindliness, and said she hoped he would not mind a sixth floor room, as it was all she had.

Rankine was on the point of saying he would try elsewhere, but a look from Affery deterred him. Afterwards, when he had gone through some of the lower grades of boarding house life in New York city, he owned that Affery was entirely right about the kind-hearted Jewess. Her house had points unknown and unshared by any others he struck.

But it was so different from anything in the way of a public hostelry he had ever made use of, that it can readily be understood how he shrank from it. In common with most men, boarding house life with its limitations and petty restrictions, its compulsory association with persons one does not under any circumstances desire to know, made no appeal to him. But realizing that for the present he had no choice, and that he was probably wise in standing aside and allowing Affery to arrange matters for him, he said he would be glad to look at the sixth-floor room.

He liked it, it was near the roof, and had the complete advantage of being cut off, in some considerable degree, from the particularly involved odors peremating the rest of Mrs. Isaacstein's establishment.

While he was contemplating the cheap furniture and the somewhat unsteady-looking bedstead, Agery made a swift bargain on the landing outside. Finally he came in and closed the door.

"See here, Rankine. You take my tip, and stop here. She's a very decent sort. She'll take you, on my recommendation for seven dollars a week, which includes breakfast and supper. You find your own mid-day meal at one of the quick-lunch counters. You can have a good meal when you get to know the ropes for a quarter, or even for ten cents, but I hope you won't come down to be a ten-center. It'll do till you strike something and it's a respectable address. I was here once for two years in my palmiest days, when I was a bar-tender at Joe Cassidy's, on Forty First Street."

"Is that the class who frequent the house?" asked Rankine rather dryly, imagining that Affery was taking rather much for granted where he was concerned.

"There are all sorts. She accomodates about a score of teachers, artists, and clerks of the better sort. You pay your money and take your choice. I'm not ramming it down your throat, mind, but I think you might do worse. Will you have up your stuff?"

Affery had left his, with the exception of a small handbag to which he was hanging at the moment, at the station depot whence he would take next day the West-bound train.

Rankine decided that in the meantime he had better agree. "I'll take the room for a week, anyway, Affery—paying in advance."

So Rankine became paying guest to Mrs. Isaacstein, and often afterwards, looking back on that day's transactions, he had to smile a melancholy smile at his own fastidious qualms.

Affery was perfectly at home; but that night Rankine had no chance of making the acquaintance of his fellow-lodgers, for Affery took him out to see New York, and they did not return till the small hours.

They slept the next day, when Affery had to make some purchases, and finally they stood together about half-past seven in the evening in the main track of the Central Railway, from which the train departed for the West.

Rankine was rather surprised that Affery had not again referred to the Yukon incident, and surmising that he had perhaps wounded more tender susceptibilities than he knew by his refusal, he ventured to bring the subject up again. Affery was filling a very fat cigarette case from a pasteboard box he had brought on Broadway, when Rankine said somewhat diffidently:

"I don't know how to thank you, Affery, for all your good fellowship—"

"Oh, stow it!" answered as if the matter was of the least possible interest to him.

He was looking very lean and haggard at the moment and had an odd, detached expression on his face as if he was scarcely a denizen of the ordinary world of men.

"Where can I find you if I should want to write, for I don't suppose you will write to me?"

"I won't. Letters complicate life. Just think of the oceans of unnecessary stuff that have deluged writing paper! The trouble of it is, none of it can be recalled. Some of it"—he added with a sort of a measured bitterness—"has made hell of a man's life. But if you've anything to tell me eyou think it would give me pleasure to hear, you can write to the Canadian Bank of Commerce, either at Vancouver or at Dawson City. They know me at both ends—for my sins!"

Rankine took out his pocket book to make a note, and at the moment something fluttered out—a picture post card he had got from Judy while he was waiting for her in London. It had nothing written on it but the day and hour of her arrival, but he had kept it because it was a picture of Stair, a particularly pleasing one of a soft, brownish tint, showing the noble frontage to the sea.

Somehow, though he had known of it being there, he had not shown it to Affery. He did it now.

"That's Stair," was all he said as he passed it over.

Affery's eyes had an odd expression in them as they were riveted to the picture.

"The place you told me of and which you have to leave?"

"The house of my fathers," answered Rankine simply, but when he held out his hand for it, to his surprise Affery pushed it into his pocket!

"The man who was born there does not need to carry a dime picture of it about with him. I'll keep it. Well—it's 'All aboard' Now. Good-bye. Stick to Mother Isaacstein as long as you can. She has points worth considering in New York City."

He held out an abrupt, almost unwilling hand which Rankine gripped folornly, realizing in one fell swoop, as it were, the utter desolation which would overwhelm him the moment the West-bound train steamed out.

"Say, Affery—perhaps it was a mistake, but—hang it all! —you know, I hadn't the right to glue myself on to you like that. Besides—"

"Besides—you didn't cotton to my yarn! Right-o! But we'll meet on the Yukon yet—nothing surer than that!"

They shook hands solemnly, and Affery sprung himself on to the footboard of the train and disappeared behind the attendant's back. Almost immediately the train moved out, and though he strained his eyes until its tail lights had disappeared, Rankine caught no further glimpse of Affery.

It was now only seven o'clock, and as he was without resources, and did not care to go down town alone, he returned by the quickest way to his boarding house in Forty-second Street.

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

Beginning of Trouble

I do not propose to enter into a discussion of this question, and will leave it by saying that this Reid Deal of 1898 sowed the seeds of the fatal disease from which Newfoundland has since been suffering in regard to her railway system. The first effect of the passage of this measure was to arouse such a bitter feeling in the country that the Conservative Government was destroyed two years after the passage of the Bill by a vote of want of confidence in which a number of members of that party withdrew from the Government and supported the Liberal Party then in Opposition, and led by Sir Robert Bond.

Sir Robert, on taking office, went to the country on a policy of the repeal of this measure, and in the election the following autumn he was returned with 32 seats against four, Mr. A. B. Morine and his two colleagues being elected in Bonavista and the late Mr. A. M. McKay being elected in Port de Grave. After Sir Robert Bond's accession to office he enforced an amendment to the contract of 1898 which virtually repealed it. Mr. Reid cancelled the clauses by which the reversion of the ownership of the railroad passed to him and went back to his original status of a contractor; his million dollars was paid back to him and the telegraph lines were secured from him under an arbitration. It cost us nearly a million dollars under one arbitration to pay Mr. Reid for betterment made to the railway in excess of his obligation under contract as he contended, and it cost us another one and a quarter million dollars to get back the telegraphs.

Centre of Controversy.

Furious controversies have raged during the past twenty years about this Amending Act of 1901, whether it bettered the situation or otherwise. I am not going to attempt to pass judgement upon it. I merely propose to put on record my own experience which is that I have never found a man in any walk of life, who had attained manhood at that time and was familiar with the political and other controversies of the period, who was willing that the Reid Contract of 1898 should remain on the Statute Book unaltered, except a few, a very few, of those who were directly concerned with its passage. Whatever it might have been in theory, in practice it developed into an insufferable monopoly.

Contractor Reid became in some respects a bigger power in the country than the Government itself. Service on the railway, however, inefficient, could not be complained of, because those who complained became marked men. Business men who expressed dissatisfaction with freight services were "black-listed" and lost any Reid trade they might previously have enjoyed. The secrecy of the telegraph system no longer existed, every man's messages were open to inspection by Reid hierlings, and where the messages conflicted with Reid interests the man concerned suffered in pocket if not in person. The coastal steamers were taken off their routes on the flimsiest pretexts and the ships diverted to private business of the Reid Company, the passengers, on some occasions, being put ashore at the nearest ports and left to shift for themselves.

Public Feeling Aroused.

It was the public indignation aroused by this sort of thing that brought about Sir Robert Bond's Amending Act of 1901 and when we hear criticism directed at that measure we should endeavour to put ourselves in the place of the electorate of that day and picture the feelings of a people who were trying to free themselves at any cost from the shackles of what they considered from bitter experience a domination which was threatening their very existence as an Independent Colony of the Empire.

Another criticism since made regarding the 1901 contract is that the action of the legislature in that year, in virtually abrogating the 1898 contract, injured the Colony in the money markets of the world because it indicated a lack of respect for contracts and the sacredness of contracts is the underlying principle on which loans are obtained and the credit of countries maintained. The answer to this must surely be that the circumstances surrounding the 1898 contract were of such a character as to be absolutely dangerous in itself to the colony's credit; to cast a reflection however, undeserved, on the good faith and honor of our legislators and to present Newfoundland to the world as willing to sacrifice its future for mere temporary monetary advantages. It was therefore the bounden duty of the people to retrieve their credit and to dispel the feeling or hostility from unbiased observers which this extraordinary meausre unquestionably provoked, as voiced by the press and the public men of the outside world. I venture to say that nothing has done it so much injury abroad, or so much injury at home, as the impression which this 1898 contract gave to the world at large; although I concede most of those who supported it at the time did so in good faith, and in the belief that without it the country would be ruined. Equally, I believe the method of operation of the railroad, especially after Sir Robert Reid's health began to fail, was decidedly harmful both at home and abroad.

Establishment of Grand Falls.

In 1905 as we know the Harmsworths established the paper mills at Grand Falls and in doing so they recognized that it would become necessary for them to depend on the railway system of the Colony for the transfer of most of their incoming supplies and to export all of their product over the railway system. At that time the idea was to use Lewisporte, which was within easy access to their mills, and which would have served all their purposes. Indeed, practically everything for the construction of the mills was brought in via Lewisporte, but owing to their inability to secure satisfactory rates for the carriage of the paper they manufactured, covering a period of years, they were obliged in self-defence to enter upon the construction of a railroad of their own, some 22 miles long, from Grand Falls to Botwood, and to build a shipping port at the latter place. This was a totally unnecessary duplication of the railroad line, it deprived the existing railway of a very large volume of business and it created a most harmful uneconomic competing agency, which was forced into existence only because the Harmsworths found themselves confronted with a monopolistic condition similar to that which prevailed in the coastal steamship service and which as I have already stated, compelled Sir Robert Bond to establish a competitive line of coastal steamers under the Bowring Contract.

By the construction of the Botwood railroad hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost during the past 17 years to what I will call the "Newfoundland Railway" and by the necessary establishment of the Bowring steamship service equally large sums have been lost.

In 1908, Sir Edward Morris, in offering himself to the electors of this country as the leader of a political party, went to the polls on a policy of branch railroad construction and this policy being endorsed, he undertook the construction of the branches, some of which have been built, namely, that from Shoal Harbor to Bonavista, that from St. John's to Trepassey, and from Carbonear to Grate's Cove, while work had been started on that from Deer Lake to Bonne Bay. The war began and rendered further progress in that respect impossible. The pre-war conditions of the world greatly stimulated railroad building both at home and abroad, and I would go further and say that pre-war conditions stimulated railway building not alone in Newfoundland but in other parts of the world to an extent that is now proving ruinous to the financial conditions of these countries.

.. .. ..Canada's Experience .. ....

In the neighboring Dominion of Canada, the Liberal government of Sir William Laurier in 1904, undertook thec onstruction of a second trans-continental railway from the atlantic to the Pacific to operate as a rival to the Canadian Pacific, and to open up new territory, especially

Legislative Council Has Interesting Debate on Humber Project Bill

MEASURE IS STRONGLY ENDORSED AND GOVERNMENT COMMENDED

The Legislative Council met at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon and passed the Humber Bill through the Committee stage as well as giving the Railway Bill its second reading.

HON. FRANK McNAMARA said that altho the bill was before the Upper House for discussion that chamber did not have the power to dot an "i" or cross a "t" in the bill. He stated that never was there a time when the need for employment was as great as it is to-day and therefore every move for the development of our resources and for the establishment of labor-giving industries should be encouraged. If, he said, the Humber proposition, altho it may not give as much employment as was anticipated gave as much as Grand Falls or Bell Island, it should receive the hearty support of the House. He thought that it was unfortunate the settlement of the railway dispute should mean the reversion of the system to the government, and while giving the Humber bill his fullest support, he could not vote for government control of the railway.

HON. SIR P.T. McGRATH, in a very able and comprehensive speech put the position as it affected both the Humber and Railway issues clearly before the Chamber. In reference to the observation of Mr. McNamara to the effect that the Legislative Council did not possess the power to dot an "i" or cross a "t" in the bills before them, he pointed out that the Council had nobody but themselves to thank for that. In 1915, when the Council was composed largely of business men, the government of that day brought in a bill to impose a profits tax on business concerns. When the bill went to the Upper House the business men, who were in the majority, rejected it. The speaker said those in the House who were then members would remember that he voiced a warning as to what the result would be. What followed was quite natural as no government could be expected to tamely submit to anything of that sort. The Legislature was prorogued, a number of vacancies in the Council were filled by men who could be relied upon to support the measure formerly rejected, a new session was called, and the Bill was put thru both Houses. Not only was that done but at the same session a Bill was introduced and passed taking from the Legislative Council the power to amend "Money Bills." The action of the Upper House in rejecting the Profits Tax Bill had left the impression that their action was due to the fact that the Bill would affect their own pockets.

Speaking of the Humber Bill, Sir Patrick said he agreed with Sir Marmaduke Winter that so far as concessions were concerned, the Armstrong-Whitworth Company was getting only what other companies in the past had got. He might have gone further and told the House that the same principle as to free entry of material etc., obtained in Canada, and the States, and, as a matter of fact, up to comparatively recently, we could get free entry for our seal pelts and oils into the United States if they were destined to undergo further manufacturing processes. In this connection, the speaker felt that there was no room for criticism of the government by the Legislature or anyone outside of it.

In connection with the Reids and the ownership of the West Coast lands, Sir Patrick said there was a complete misconception in the minds of the majority of the people on this point. The idea that Reids had got the lands they possess to-day under the 1901 contract was altogether erroneous. They obtained these lands under the 1893 Operating Contract and consequently became the owners of the lands in question. The lands given them under the 1898 Contract were bought back from them for 30 cents an acre under the Amended Contract of 1901.

An hon. member had stated in the House that people had been bought in connection with the Humber project. Sir Patrick thought that there was no warrant for such an observation. So far as the Legislative Council was concerned, there would be no sense in buying any member of that body for the simple reason that such a member could be of no assistance whatever in expediting the passage of the Bill and, furthermore, the project was not such a great bonanza for those who were going into it. It was, the speaker said, a decidedly good bill for the country and while it might not be as good as it was possible to get from every point of view, it was nevertheless, better than if it had been put into effect two years ago. By waiting for that length of time the government had been able to get the guarantee responsibility cut in half. When, two years ago, Messrs Blackstead and Greenwood had brought their proposition to the country, we were asked to guarantee the full amount with interest, the later being at that time not less than 7 per cent. The government very wisely refused to consider the complete guarantee and these men departed and have not been heard of since. Then the Armstrongs came here some six months later, having been represented by a Mr. Waite, who put their proposition before the public in a series of newspaper interviews and in addresses at public gatherings. This proposition also called for a complete guarantee of principal and interest and again the government very wisely turned it down. The general feeling towards it was one of opposition. As a result of another year's negotiations, the British Government were induced to bear half the burden of the required guarantee.

The measure, as it stands to-day, continued the speaker, has both advantages and disadvantages and there are certain features of it that call for serious consideration. When the Harmsworth Bill came before the House, feeling was very strong both in the Legislature and outside of it, and some thirty or forty amendments were offered, some of which were adopted. Sir Patrick said he attended a dinner in London given by the promotors of the present scheme and, being asked to speak he had warned those who were undertaking the Humber project that they must be prepared for something of the same kind. It has transpired, as all are aware, that the amendments offered were in reality surprisingly few. The advantages which the bill possessed were important. First, it is unlike the Products Corporation Bill (in that while the former project was one for the manufacture of carbide a commodity for which there was but an indifferent and unstable market, the present proposition is for the manufacture of an article for which there is constantly a growing demand in practically eery country in the world. There was perhaps, no better evidence of the keenness of Sir Edward (now Lord) Morris than his remark about the Products project to the effect that it was "too good to be true," when it was remembered that a year or two later there was almost no market whatever for carbide. When we produce newsprint we produce something that the markets of the world are demanding with ever-growing persistencey. In Canada the industry in the space of thirty years grew from an annual out-put of 1,000 tons to 1,500,000 tons, while the output in the States has had a correspondingly large growth. The second advantage which this project possessed was the fact that it had big interests behind it. In the original inception of the railway under the Reid regime, the Country had been fortunate in securing a man of the capacity and vision of Sir R. G. Reid to undertake the contractural work. He had certainly been the pioneer in the development of the Colony's resources. The next big factor in that development had been the Harmsworth enterprise which, in conjunction with Bell Island, had in 1913 when the mines produced one and a quarter million tons of ore and the mills at Grand Falls and Bishop's Falls were running to capacity, been responsible for giving fishermen a higher wage than they had ever received in pre-war days. Moreover, the Harmsworths put us on the map as a paper and pulp producing country and had given us advertising that was worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to us. We are now equally fortunate in having people of the financial standing of the Harmsworths to undertake the Humber development. To imagine that the Humber project was going to be a panacea for all ills was to be rather too optimistic, but there was no gainsaying that it had tremendous possibilities, more especially since, contemporaneously with this, the Harmsworths are making extension to provide for the output of an extra 75 tons of paper a day. Then there is the St. Lawrence pulp and Lumber Co. who are contemplating operations that will mean the output of 100 tons of pulp daily.

Another advantage was that the project was not under Reid control. The speaker was not disparaging the Reids when he said this but they are railway men and not paper makers. It may be said that the same applied to the Armstrongs, but it should be remembered that one of the subsidiaries of the Armstrong-Whitworth Co. made the paper-making machinery, and besides, their standing enabled them to secure the very best paper-makers and staff obtainable. The designating of the project as the "Reid Scheme" was absurd for, not only had the Armstrongs bought a controlling interest from the Reids, but they had personally put four or five million dollars into the undertaking. The speaker had heard it said that for this controlling interest the Armstrongs had paid the Reids three quarters of a million dollars. The total Reid holdings of lands in the country was in the vicinity of 1,800,000 acres or slightly under 3,000 square miles. In connection with the expenditures made by the Armstrongs in the initial stages of the project, the sum of $1,250,000 had to be spent to build a transmission line from the power plant at Deer Lake to the mills at Corner Brook. This would mean a yearly outlay of $72,000 as interest, but the company was reducing by two-thirds the cost of transportation on their output and incoming material and machinery by eliminating the twenty two mile haul in and out between Deer Lake and tidewater. It was true that this program meant the loss of nearly two hundred thousand dollars in earnings to the railway, but it increased the net earnings of the mills by over a hundred thousand dollars. Besides their outlay for transmission lines, the company were spending another million and a quarter in the building of the town at Corner Brook and half a million in the establishment of a winter terminal at port aux Basques. In all their expenditures amounted to nearly $5,000,000 which was altogether apart from the $18,000,000 to be raised by debentures as soon as the Legislature had given its sanction to the Bill. If any proof of the strength and bona fides of the Armstrong Whitworth Co. were needed more than we have, it is to be found in this fact. Sir Patrick said the tremendous labor-giving possibilities of this and similar projects could not be over-estimated. We would like to see this country in the position where we would not have to catch a single fish; we would then have a country to be proud of. There may be certain disadvantages to the Colony in the Humber project, the speaker continued, such as the guarantee, without which, however, we could not have got this industry started, and the possibility that in the first years of its operation the plant may not prove to be as paying a proposition as it would later. The Grand Falls mills were some years before they paid but last year the profits from these mills were £240,000 and besides paying the interest on their debentures, the company were able to pay two years' deferred dividends. Asked as to how many men he thought the Humber mills would employ, Sir Patrick said, estimating on the basis of Grand Falls, he thought they would employ 1,500 men permanently at the plant and from three to four thousand men in the woods. He closed his remarks by welcoming the Bill and expressing the opinion that if the country realized half that was held out for the Humber proposition it would be doing well. The brightest feature of the present situation was, he thought, that contempraneously with the project came the extension at Grand Falls and the beginning of operations by the St. Lawrence Pulp and Lumber Co. in the very near future.

HON. W. J. ELLIS also welcomed the Bill. He felt that the Prime Minister's efforts in bringing this great project to the country merited the warmest commendation. He was of the opinion from the first that this would help the Country to turn the corner and he had seen nothing since that caused him to change his mind. It was true, Mr. Ellis said, that no one liked the guarantee feature of the proposition, but on the other hand we may never be called upon to meet any part of that. He was of that opinion himself. The thing was more or less a Government venture and because of the extremely healthy nature of the business, it was a venture the Government were thoroughly justified in making. The Armstrong Co. is bound to do all in their power to make the project succeed because they, themselves, are so heavily involved in it financially. He wished to place himself on record as strongly in favor of the measure.

HON. DR. CAMPBELL said that so far as the railway was concerned, the Government does not subscribe in any particular to the principle of state owned or state controlled railways, and they are as anxious as any one to get our system into the hands of a good private concern. This was not as simple a matter as some people seem to think. The C. P. R. had been held up as an example of the success of private ownership, but this company could not be regarded as representative of the bulk of private operators. However, there was little doubt in the speaker's mind that a satisfactory solution of this difficulty would be forthcoming. Rome was not built in a day, and the Government had succeeded in getting one of the biggest industrial concerns in the world to come here and start development besides having cleaned up the railway mess that had been of many years standing. The Government, said Dr. Campbell, welcomed the introduction of British capital and British methods into the Colony. The seeking had been ours and the speaker was proud of the result. He believed with Sir Patrick McGrath that the time had come when the people should turn their eyes towards the land, for there lay the salvation and ultimate prosperity of this Country. There were great hopes, from the present indications, for big development of that immense body of copper ore at Great Gull Lake, and now that we have got British capitalists interested in the possibilities of the Island, there was no estimating what good things the future held in store for Newfoundland.

HON. R. K. BISHOP was heartily in accord with the Government in bringing the measure before the Country. The guarantee may be distasteful, but something had to be done to take the Country out of the rut into which it had sunk by lack of development. The fisherman can no longer catch fish enough in three months to support his family for the whole year. He did not agree with those who said that we would never be called up to pay any part of the guarantee, but even if we had to pay for two or three years that was no reason why the measure should not be given the fullest support.

HON. J. J. MURPHY welcomed the Armstrong enterprise most heartily. He had never seen any hope for this Country or her people from the fishery. It was, for the most part, slavery of the worst kind with little returns except for the few really successful fish killers. Newfoundland had many more attractive avenues of employment than the fisheries if the people would only grasp the opportunities that Nature has placed at our doors. We should be ashamed, he said, to be sending thousands of dollars to the States and Canada to keep the men and women of these countries employed making articles for us that we could easily manufacture ourselves. The fishery as a means of livelihood is not to be compared with such industrial enterprises as that which the Humber development will give our people. Compare the man who works at the fishery with the man who works at Grand Falls. The latter makes from $700 to $1,000 a year, while the former cannot make half that at the best of times. Under good management the Humber project should soon pay off the amount of the guarantees, and the speaker strongly approved of what the Government had done.

As far as the Reids and the Railway were concerned, Mr. Murphy said that the history of that matter from the very first was that the Reids had always had the very best lawyers while we as a people were easy-going and never cared what was happening. You cannot make a success of the Railway, he said, unless you electrify it, and now is the time to do that. When the railway was put there, we were not transmitting electricity at 150,000 volts as we are to-day, and he felt sure that the Armstrongs would find it to their advantage to electrify at least the western portion of the line. He did not see how they could avoid taking that part of the railway off our hands for the sake of their own interests. Getting back to the industrial phase of the discussion, Mr. Murphy said that the fishery must boil itself down to the survival of the fittest. There were certain fishermen, independent men who could year after year buy their own out-fits, who owned their own vessels and their own fishing gear, who would always make a success of that industry, just as there were others who could never hope to get out of the rut into which never-ending credit and the consequent hopelessness of their toil had placed them. The fishery should be left to those who could prosecute it with profit, and there were enough such to catch all the fish for which we can to-day find a ready market. The development of other industries is what we want to make a prosperous country, for the more industries we have the more revenue we will get. For that reason the Govrenment was absolutely justified in giving the Armstrong Whitworth Co. every encouragement they could give them.

The Committee then rose and the Chairman reported that the Bill had passed without amendment. It was ordered to be read a third time on Monday. The Railway Settlement Bill was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday.

The House then adjourned till 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Help the Fisheries and the Fishermen

In some of the observations of Hon. J. J. Murphy in the Legislative Council on Saturday there is much food for reflection. Mr. Murphy's opinion was that we have been depending too much upon our fishery, that too many of our men have been trying to eke out an existence by producing that for which there is a poor market, and that our past legislators have ignored largely the possibilities of other forms of production.

There are many features of the codfishery as an industry that would seem to bear out the truth of these contentions, not the least of which is the growing competition in the foreign markets from countries which can offer a cure of fish sufficiently like ours to pass as a good substitute and at the same time at a cost much lower than we could think of considering. In the present state of the European markets, the consumer is apt to pay more attention to price than to quality, and if they can get a good quality or even an inferior article at a much lower price than ours, they will certainly patronise such a market. They are not in a position to be fastidious and the demand for our particular cure of fish that existed in several of the best markets in pre-war days, to the almost entire exclusion of inferior qualities, is not so much in evidence. The fish that can be sold at the lowest figure is the fish that is now in demand in all the European countries where it is largely used as an article of food.

Because of this successful competition on the part of such fish-catching countries as Norway and Iceland, the hazard that has always attended the fishery for all our people is increased, and to-day we find that the fishery, which always bore the great burden of state, has not developed in earning power to the extent proportionate to the increased burdens which now obtain. The fishery therefore becomes a most difficult proposotion to many fishermen. Particularly is this so, as was pointed out by Mr. Murphy, in the case of those who are not in a position to outfit themselves and who must prosecute the industry as the mere servants of the merchants with whom they deal. These fishermen begin the season in debt and they almost invariably end it in debt because they cannot meet the double expense entailed by outfitting on credit and the hiring of every bit of gear with which to do their work. Should not this type of toiler be encouraged to the utmost by those who are responsible for the deplorable lack of business methods now existing re the exportation of fish?

The day will come in this country when the old methods of prosecuting the fishery can no longer be pursued on the old lines. The shipped man or the shareman cannot hope for anything like the wages he can earn on shore. As a matter of fact, there is not a great deal of difference between the wages a planter can pay his crew now and that which he paid them ten years ago. There is, however a vast difference between the cost of living in the two periods. The man who makes the fishery a paying venture to-day must have more to depend on to buy his supplies if he is to have any returns. Only a small per centage of those who prosecute the fishery in Newfoundland can do that, and that is why there are too many men engaged in the fishery, unless it was properly systemized in its exportation. The fishery therefore needs the help of other industries.

Every man taken out of a fishing boat and put to work on land industries means a help to the fishery. It also means a help to the country because that man will be earning more money ashore than he can fishing, and on the amount of the earnings of our people depends the extent of the Country's revenue.

When we get down to a yearly catch of fish that will be readily marketable at a decent price, those who engage in the industry, (and they should be the ones best suited to it from the standpoint of independence to the merchants) will find it a paying proposition and they will be in a position to pay good wages to their crews. On the other hand, while we continue to catch more fish than we can sell readily and profitably there will never be a living in the industry for the fisherman, because he will always be the victim of over-production.

The only cure for this condition of things is the increased development of our inland resources which will mean the production of such commodities as will find a ready market at good prices and the weeding out from the fishery of those who are better fitted for other pursuits, leaving that industry to men who will find it a profitable undertaking.

And for this purpose, the immediate co-operation of everybody is necessary not only in development of inland resources, but in working out a business system that will ensure highest prices for our fish.

The Fishery Outlook

To date the fishery reports are not at all encouraging. While a few sections report fair fishing, the general situation indicate results much below the average.

The month of July is the period which generally makes or mars a good fishery; and unless the fishermen receive their usual proportion of the voyage in this period, the outlook will not be bright for the rest of the season. This particularly applies to trap-fishermen, who depend mostly upon the first of the caplin season for their voyage.

The next couple of weeks will, therefore, be a determining period for the fishermen, particularly of the north, and it is hoped that prospects will brighten within that time.

In the event that we are confronted with a short catch of fish for those who are this year engaging in the industry, it will become more and more imperative for exporters to help the situation by co-operatively working together to ensure highest possible returns for this season's fish.

Strike Situation More Critical

The arrest of J. M. McLachlan, Secretary of the Sydney United Mine Works, and Dan Livingstone, by the Canadian military authorities, has aggravated the strike situation and, according to latest despatches, has resulted in bringing to the support of the original strikers those who did not actively endorse the walkout.

The incendiary statements credited to Chairman McDonald at the Miners' mass meeting at Glace Bay, the demand upon the railway unions to refuse transportation to further military forces and the expressed determination shown in the Glace Bay resolutions to stand fast until the release of McLachlan and Livingstone, create a critical situation insomuch as it is practical defiance of Government authority.

The attitude of the authorities so far have been a firm and determined one, and there is not the slightest indication of their retracting from the position taken.

It is therefore extremely unlikely that any solution will be early reached, although the position taken by President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America may serve to restrain the local unions in Sydney.

Splendid Program For G. W. V. A. Sports

The G. W. V. A. Annual Sports Day which will be held on Wednesday next, promises to eclipse all previous events of its kind. To date a large number of entries have been secured for the various athletic items the program of which is a fine one.

The chief item of interest in the list is the 10-mile road race, and judging from the interest displayed by the entrants it will be a close race. For the winner of this event, a handsome $50 gold Waltham watch will be the reward and the winners of second and third places will receive silver cups. The remaining runners who finish will be presented with Time Scroll Certificates.

The entrants will be conveyed to the starting point by motor cars which will leave St. George's Field at 2.45 p.m.. A medical officer and staff with a supply of restoratives, will be on hand throughout the race and every precaution will be taken for the safety of the runners.

In addition to the athletic events many items of a humorous character will be evident. These will include Captain Cuttle, the humorous donkey, mercantile field regatta and military police and defaulters' race.

This race will consist of two men in uniform who will detach themfrom the railing around the field and arrest the defaulters, who will have then started from the tape line. The two policemen who bring in their defaulter first will be winners, while the defaulter who keeps the two policemen out last and is the most difficult to arrest, will also be a winner.

Those veterans who through the fortunes of war, have lost a leg will also have a race. The prizes including Governor Harris' cup for football, are now on exhibition in James Baird's window and are a very fine collection.

The possibility of a dull moment will be offset by the presence of the C. L. B. Band, which will render appropriate airs during the afternoon. The G.W.V.A. ladies' auxiliary will provide refreshments which may be purchased at a reasonable figure so that everything possible for the entertainment of those who attend is assured. The energetic Sports Committee has been working tooth and nail to ensure a successful program and it is felt the public will do its part to ensure successful receipts and thereby help one of the most deserving organizations in this country.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

One of Upton Sinclair's latest works is "The Book of Life" in two volumes. I have just been reading it, and I cordially commend my readers to the work—it contains much solid common sense. It is divided into two main sections: The Book of the Mind, and The Book of the Body, and each of these parts is sub-divided into many chapters under separate headings.

** *** **

Bald-heads! All those whose hair is falling out! All who are having trouble with their hair! I have something good for you. It is a paragraph reproduced from Sinclair's book, and it deals with baldness and falling hair.

"I had been overworking," explains the author, "and was in a badly run down condition. I was having headaches, insomnia, ulcerated teeth, many symptoms of a general breakdown; among these I noticed that my hair was coming out. I decided that it was foolish to become bald before I was thirty, and that I would take a little time off, and spend a little money and have my hair attended to.

"I did not know where to go, but I wanted the best authority available, so I wrote to the superintendent of the largest hospital in New York, asking him for the name of a reliable specialist in diseases of the scalp. The superintendent replied by referring me to a certain physicion, whose home and office were just off Fifth avenue.

"He examined my scalp and told me that I had dandruff in my hair, and that he would remove this dandruff and cause my hair to stop falling out. He charged me ten dollars for the visit, which in those days was more money than it is at present. Being of an inquiring turn of mind, I tried to get my money's worth by learning what there was to learn about the human hair. I questioned this gentleman and he told me that the hair is a dead substance, and that its only life is in the root."

** *** **

"He explained that barbers often persuade people to have their hair singed, to keep it from falling out, and that this was an utterly futile proceedure, and likewise all shampooing and massage, which only caused the hair to fall out more quickly. It was even better not to wash the hair too often. All that was needed was a mixture of chemicals to kill the dandruff germs; and so I had the prescription put up at a drug store, and for a couple of years I religiously used it according to order, and it had upon my hair absolutely no effect whatever."

So Upton Sinclair began to do some thinking for himself, and experimented upon himself. He learned a number of things:

"First, the human hair is made by the body, and it is made, like everything else in the body, out of the blood-stream. It is perfectly true that the dandruff germ gets into the roots, and makes trouble, and that the process of killing this germ can be helped by chemicals; but it does not take a ten-dollar prescription, it only takes ten cents' worth of borax and salt from the corner grocery. (Put a little into a saucer, moisten it, rub it into the scalp, and wash it out again.)

"But infinitely more important than this is the fact that healthy hair roots are a product of healthy blood, and that unhealthy blood produces sick hair roots, which cannot hold in the hair. Most important of all is the fact that in order to make healthy roots the blood must flow fully and freely to these hair roots; whereas I had been accustomed for many hours every day of my life to clap around my scalp a tight band which almost entirely stopped the circulation of the life-giving blood to my sick hair roots. In other words, by wearing civilized hats I was literally starving my hair to death.

'As soon," continues Sinclair, "as I realized this I took off my civilized hat, and have never worn one since. As a rule I don't wear anything. On the few occasions when I go into the city, I wear a soft cap. Now and then I experience inconvenience from this—the elevator boy in some apartment house tells me to come in by the delivery entrance, or the porter of a sleeping-car will not let me come in at all. I remember discussing these embarrassments with ack London (the famous American writer) who went even further in his defiance of civilibation, and wore a soft shirt. It was his custom, he said, to knock down the elevator boys and sleeping-car porters. I answered that that might be all right for him, because he could do it; whereas I was reduced to the painful expedient of explaining politely why I went about without the customary symbols of my economic 'superiority.'

"The 'consulting dermatologist' had very solemnly and elaborately warned me concerning the danger of moving my hair too violently, and thus causing it to come out; but now my investigations brought out the fact that moving the hair, that is, massaging the scalp, increases the blood to the hair roots, and further increases resistance to disease.

"As for causing the hair to fall out, I discovered that the more quickly you cause a hair to fall out, the greater is the chance of your getting another hair. If a hair is allowed to die in the root, it kills that root forever, but if it is pulled out before it dies, the root will make a new hair. Every 'beauty parlor' specialist knows this; she knows that if a hair is pulled, it grows back bigger and stronger then ever, and so, to pull out hair is the best thing you must do if you want to get rid of heirs!"

Now, reader, don't you agree that I deserve a vote of thanks for having discovered the foregoing paragraphs in Sinclair's book and given them publicity? You do agree, if you have hair trouble!

A POLITICAL COMMISSION IN THE EAST

(Canadian Fisherman)

In line with our recent forecast, the standing committee on marine and fisheries of the House of Commons has unanimously recommended the appointment of a commission of seven members to thoroughly investigate and report upon the fisheries of the east coast. Concurrence in the report has been moved in the House by William Duff, M.P., but the motion was allowed to stand over when the leader of the Opposition requested that "if it is carried let it be on division."

Mr. Duff, chairman of the committee, feels that two years will be necessary to properly conduct the investigation, and to one who has any idea of the situation in the east, his estimate seems conservative. If the inquiry is not going to be thorough it would be a thousand times better to let things stand as they are. There have been royal commissions in the past and there have been resultant reports, but the upshot of the whole thing has been the building up of an extremely complex arrangement and the introduction of policies and regulations which, in the judgment of people concerned, are totally inadequate and unsuited to present day conditions. If it is the intention of the commission to clear away this debris, all well and good, but if it is intended to build a superstructure on the present foundation, all is far from good.

From past experience it must be appreciated that the ultimate report is not going to be satisfactory to all. It is a physical impossibility for any set of men to accede to the viewpoints of all and define any policy whatever. Some must be disappointed, but time must be taken to insure that the commission gets the proper and complete evidence to warrant that its final judgment on any particular question will be for the good of the industry as a whole. The lobster situation alone, as we remarked many times before, is a complicated issue that would engage the lifetime's attention of a battalion of Philadelphia lawyers to straighten out. There are numerous other questions almost as knotty, and any body of men who set out upon the task should be thoroughly alive to what they are up against.

It was the opinion of the committee that Quebec, as well as the Maritime provinces, should be represented on this committee, which view, considering the interwoven interests, we most strongly endorse. We must confess that we are not without misgivings on the score of a political commission. In the maritimes the people carry politics to a very fine point and the danger confronts us that politicians may be unduly swerved in their judgment. If the commission is to report in the interest of the industry as a whole it must be politically unbiased, which on the face of it, to put it mildly, is paradoxical as applied to the proposed arrangement. It would be our suggestion that the commission be composed of representatives of the House of Commons, men from the industry, with a chairman of independent standing, a judge or someone of equally discriminating talent.

There is positively no reason why the matter should not be frankly discussed now. It must be conceded that politics played too heavy a role in the Pacific coast inquiry. We consider it no reflection upon the individual members to say this, because it is the business of a politician to play politics. But considering the matter from the viewpoint of the industry, it is our opinion that the interests of all would be best served and without injury to any members of the House, by setting up a composite commission. We recommend this suggestion to the consideration of those who have the say so.

TOO MANY PUBLIC SERVANTS

Johannesburg Times: There is no doubt in our mind that South Africa spends more upon officials than it can afford under present conditions and under those likely to obtain in the near future: Remember there are only about 400,000 adult white males in all South Africa. Thousands of these must be included amongst the unemployed, the poor whites, the sick, the aged, and the non-producers generally. Deduct from the balance the public servants of all kinds, and the number of white men left to produce, or manage the production of, the wealth of the country, is extraordinarily small.

OBITUARY

Norman's Cove,
July 2nd., 1923.

MRS. JOSEPH KEATES

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me space in your much read paper, the Advocate, to record the death of my dear sister, Mrs. Joseph Keates, who passed away at the age of 37. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Skeffington and was loved by all who knew her; she is greatly missed in this little neighbourhood.

She leaves to mourn her sad loss, a husband, 4 children 2 sisters, 3 brothers, father and mother and a large number of relatives and friends, to whom the whole community extends their heartfelt sympathies.

Also her sister-in-law, Mrs. Hubert Keates, who passed away on the 25th after a very short illness, she was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Keates and now the vacant chair is left in the home, which never can be filled. She leaves several friends and relatives to whom her loss is a great one, also sisters, brothsr and husband and one little boy. Th the sorrowing, we render our prayers of sympathy.

Grim death has borne a loved one,
Away from our embrace;
And we miss the pleasant smiling
Of that dear sister's face.

On December the eight 1922,
While doing her daily work
Not thinking the hand of affliction,
Would soon upon her lurk.

But before that loving mother,
Did realize or know
Afflictions hand had laid her,
By paralysis, very low.

Four months and half she suffered there,
Her suffering no one knew;
She could not speak, but would not lift
Her tearful eyes to you.

Kind hands attended to her wants,
And watched by her side with care
Anxiously waiting for some word
To fall from those lips so dear.

Oftimes myself, I stood and gazed
Upon that loved one there;
And would leave that home with an aching heart,
And eyes bedimmed with tears.

Her children dear and friends she loved,
Likewise would gather there
Asking the God for Mercy,
Their mother's life to spare.

They knew it was hard to part from one
Who had oftimes them caressed,
And had lain her loving hands on them
To soothe them to their rest.

But lo, on April the 23rd,
In nineteen twenty three,
That young mother's life did ebb away
Into vast eternity.

We trust that mother is at last
Upon heaven's peaceful shore;
Singing the song with those she loved
Who had just gone before.

And for her loving children, four,
Who miss a mother's care
Our heartfelt sympathies go up,
To God in fervent prayer.

Also her loving parents,
Sisters and brothers too
Pray that at last we all shall meet
In that land beyond the blue.

Jesus lover of my soul
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll
While the tempest still is high.

Still harder to the husband
So sad and so bereft,
Was the death of his sister Annie
On April the 25th.

This fair young life was sapped away
By tubercular disease,
But she bore it all with patience
With calmnesss and with ease.

She told her friends and lovedones
She was willing to obey
The summons of death, when it should come
To bear her soul away.

She had been married a few short years
One child to her was given,
But now she's left the shores of time
We trust she is in heaven.

To the sorrowing husband left
Also her little boy,
Our prayers shall evermore ascend
To the Great God on high.

Friends left behind don't mourn the loss
Of those loving mothers dear,
They're now at rest, where no cares molest,
The weary sufferers ear.

Have faith in God, look straight ahead
Pray that at last we all shall meet
In that home beyond the skies.

Hide me, O, my Saviour hide,
Till the storms of life are past;
Safe into the haven guide,
O, receive my soul at last.

The Governor's Cup

Right here in Terra Nova we have got a solid man—
You may travel the wide world over, from "Bersheba unto Dan,"
And you wouldn't find another whose more friendly and more nice,
For he acts just like a brother, he's Sir William Allardyce.

He is paying much attention to our annual Derby day—
His gift I'm goin' to mention, 'tis a beauty, so they say.
And we'll meet him at the races,
and a cheer we will set up,
When "our boys" will take their places to row for his handsome cup.

Here's long life to him, and pleasure, and when he leaves
our Isle,
Many thoughts of him we'll treasure for his deeds and kindly smile;
To his Lady we will tender the respect that's due her here,
And may Providence defend her and her husband from all care.

Football Leagues Meet

SENIOR LEAGUE MEETING.

A special meeting of the League took place on Saturday night, President Higgins presiding, and representatives from the various clubs being present. Owing to the Masonic installation on Tuesday night by Baron Ampthill, the Feildian-C.E.I. game scheduled for that night has been postponed until the end of the season, this being done at the request of the players, many of whom belong to the above organization. It was decided to give the night to the Junior League.

The Football race again came up for discussion a representative pointing out that this race was a popular one with the general public, and thought it would be a pity to have it erased from the programme. It was further stated that four clubs would likely compete who would draw their own rules guaranteeing that none but bona fide footballers would compete, and asked the League to withdraw their objections to this race being on the programme. The League decided they had no objections to the Regatta Committee placing this race on the programme, but that the League could accept no responsibility as to the status of participants therein. The Committee will be written to this effect. Several other matters of minor nature being disposed of, the meeting adjourned.

JUNIOR LEAGUE MEETING.

The Junior Football League held a meeting on Saturday night when the race on the Regatta programme was discussed and rules governing same were made and will be sent to the Regatta Committee for their approval. Owing to the Feildian-C.E.I. game being postponed Tuesday evening the Senior League has kindly consented to pass this night to the Junior League and on this evening the contesting teams will be the Cadets and B.I.S. On Wednesday evening the T.A. and Wesley teams will clash. Wednesday afternoon will be a busy one for the League as there are Relay Races on three sports programmes, viz:—G. W. V. A., Ayre Athletic and St. Patrick's Garden Party, and fives in the latter also.

Officers Deny Charge of Brutality

CLAIM ALLEGATION IN SATURDAY'S ADVOCATE WAS FALSEHOOD.

The Inspector General communicated with the Advocate today to the effect that the officers who made the arrest on Friday afternoon last in connection with which a writer to this paper charged brutal treatment on the policemen, deny that they ill-treated their prisoner or rough-handled him to a greater extent than was necessary.

While we do not know if the writer of the letter published on Saturday is prepared to back what he wrote or not, we publish the Inspector General's denial in justice to the officers concerned.

Anniversary of '92 Fire

Yesterday, July 8th., was the anniversary of the great fire of 1892, which consumer half of the city and left 10,000 people homeless. The financial loss was estimated at $1,000,000.

St. John's had seen devastation by fire on four occasions previous to July 1892. In February 1816 a fire occurred which destroyed 120 houses and left 1,500 people homeless. In November the same year two fires spread havoc through the town destroying dwellings and business houses.

These were however only small as compared to the destruction wrought by the great ninth of June fire of 1846, which swept over three fourths of the city and left 12,000 homeless. The financial loss was about $5,000,000.

With the splendid equipment for controlling fires which St. John's possesses, fires such as those referred to are scarcely possible to-day.

Two Fire Alarms

At 2.15 Saturday afternoon the Central and East End firemen were called to the residence of Mr. W. P. Shortall, Gower Street, where a fire was discovered in the chimney. The application of the chemical extinguished the blaze before and damage was done and the "all-out" sounded at 2.15.

At 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon an alarm brought the Central and East End firemen to the residence of Mr. J. Larkin, Queen's Road. The fire was caused by an oil stove exploding in the kitchen, but before any serious damage was done the blaze was extinguished.

"La Canadienne" In Port

The S.S. La Canadienne which had been carrying out salvage operations at the wreck of the Marvale, arrived in port Saturday. The ship is at Mudget's Southside and has a quantity of goods on board which were salved. Quantities of hams etc., were on the market Saturday selling at the low price of 10 cents per pound and were quickly bought up. It is learned that the Marvale is now totally submerged and that there is not much likelihood of any further salvage.

If any subscriber does not receive his paper regularly please send in name, address and particulars of same so that the matter may be rectified.

A motor car driver was charged by Sergt. Bennett with not stopping his car while passing a street car from which passengers were alighting. The hearing was postponed till Wednesday.

A Prohibition Case postponed from Saturday, was further postponed owing to the illness of the defendant.

Jumped Over Wharf and Drowned

A message was received by the Justice Department this morning from Richard Vardy, Esq., J.P., of Hickman's Hr. saying that Alfred Martin aged 59 of that place had been drowned by jumping over a wharf at 6.30 yesterday afternoon. It was evidently a case of suicide.

Entered Store

The store occupied by Joseph Ellis, New Gower Street, was twice broken into during last week. Thursday night it was entered and some loose change and cigarettes were taken. Entry was made through a rear window. On Friday evening, the store was again entered by the same route. The thief made a better haul this time and got away with all the cash and a quantity of cigarettes as well as other goods. The police are now working on the case.

The D.D.G.M., Bro. G. T. Philips, congratulated Colonial Lodge on the progress attained, and stated that he hoped before long to see a Grand Lodge in Newfoundland. Bro. H. Sawyers, P.D.D.G.M. of Cabot Lodge, also congratulated Colonial Lodge, and gave the officers and members some good advice. Colonial Lodge has had a good term under Bro. Geo. S. Burling, and they are lokoing forward to a banner term under Bro. P. Dwyer, as Noble Grand and the other officers that he has to assist him.

OBITUARY

ALLEN DOWDEN.

St. John's mourns the loss of another of its most estimable citizens to-day, Mr. E. Allen Dowden, having quietly entered into rest at his residence 102 Circular Road, at an early hour yesterday morning. News of his demise was heard with profound sorrow for Mr. Dowden was a splendid character, and his loss will not only be felt by his immediate relatives but by the community at large. Possessing an attractive disposition, quiet and lovable, he had a host of friends, all of whom will learn of his passing with deepest regret. Although his illness covered a lengthy period, he was ever bright and cheerful and his death comes as a shock to all. For many years he had been an employee of Messrs. Harvey and Company's Butter Factory where he was highly esteemed by employer and employee. His home life was ideal and his form will be greatly missed.

He leaves a young widow and one little daughter, Phyillis, two brothers Thomas and Reginald, Mrs. G. H. Press, and Misses Jennie and Minnie Dowden. The funeral takes place this Monday afternoon at 2.30.

Saturday's messages from Labrador report N.E. winds, dense fog and no fish at Grady, Domino, Flat Islands and Battle Harbor. Flower's Cove reported fishing fairly good.

COLLAPSE OF SYDNEY STRIKE IN SIGHT

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS TO MEET

CALGARY, July 9—Labor organizations in Western Canada will meet in conference this week to discuss the Nova Scotia strike situation, and according to William A. Sherman, President of District 18., U. M. W. there is little doubt that the coal miners at least will go out on a sympathetic strike.

HAD HARD LUCK

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., July 9—Lieut. R. L. Maughan, attempting a coast to coast flight between daylight and dark, was forced down at 1.10, ten miles north of here to-day, when his machine went dead.

The aviator was uninjured, but the plane was so badly damaged that he will be unable to continue the flight, but he said he would try again next week or later.

THREE KILLED IN STORM

FARO, N. D., July 9—At least three persons were killed and damage estimated at a million and a half done by a terrible wind, hail and rain storm which swept over Dakota to-day.

WILL TROOPS BE WITHDRAWN ?

CALGARY, July 9—Every effort is being made by Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, to have troops at present in the Cape Breton strike area withdrawn as soon as possible, according to a telegram from the Minister to William Sherman, President of District 18, U.M.W.

NO BAIL ALLOWED FOR STRIKE LEADERS

HALIFAX, N.S., July 9—Application for bail in the case of James B. McLachlan and Daniel Livingstone, U.M.W. strike leaders, charged with spreading false tales, was continued this morning in the police court before Stipendiary M. P. Archibald, who refused to take the responsibility of granting bail and adjourned the hearing to Thursday. In the meantime the men remain in a cell at the police station.

JOURNALIST ACQUITTED

PARIS, July 9—Ernest Judet, French journalist, charged with conspiring with the enemy during the war, was acquitted to-day after ten minutes' deliberation by the jury.

President Lewis Wires Stern Message

Says Strike Violation of Agreement and of Principles of U. M. Workers of America.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 9—John J. Lewis, International President of the United Mine Workers of America, to-day received a telegram from Daniel Livingstone, President of District 26 of Nova Scotia, stating he had called a meeting of the Executive Board of the Union to-morrow to act upon Lewis's instructions to end the coal strike there. Livingstone's telegram was dated Halifax. Lewis today wired Alexander McIntyre, Vice-President of the Union District, to carry out the instructions contained in the telegram to Livingstone, while the latter was in custody. Lewis's message to Livingstone was as follows:

"Atlantic City, N.J., July 6th, 1923
"Daniel Livingstone,
Pres District No. 26, U.M.W. of A.
Glace Bay, C.B.

I am in receipt of your telegram sent in reply to my previous query stating strike of members of United Mine Workers has been in progress in District Twenty-six since Tuesday midnight in protest against presence of Provincial Police and troops who are in the district in connection with matters outside the mining industry. Such a strike is unquestionably a violation of the existing agreement between District Twenty-six and the coal company parties thereto. It is also a violation of the principles and policies of the United Mine Workers which has a record of fulfilling its contract and discharging its honorable obligations. The action of the district in also permitting the withdrawal of engineers, pumpmen and other maintenance men from the mines is most indefensible and constitutes a wanton destruction of property. The existing agreement in District Twenty six was negotiated by the officers of that district and ratified by a referendum vote of a majority of the mine workers affected. I previously advised you that formal complaint and protests had been lodged with the International Union by coal companies affected who asked that they be accorded good faith in compliance with agreement. In consideration of this complaint and in consideration of your admissions of the present astounding state of affairs prevailing within the district I request that you as President of District 26, together with your associate executive officers take immediate steps to have the men return to work so as to permit of full protection of property interests affected and an early resumption of mining operations. I will be glad to receive early advice from you indicating your full compliance with these directions. JOHN LEWIS."

1200 Steel Workers Return to Work

SYDNEY, N.S, July 9—Twelve hundred men were at work in the coke ovens and blooming mill of the steel plant to-day, it was announced at Besco headquarters, where it was said the company had sufficient stock on hand to continue the operation of the mill indefinitely. $t is anticipated there will be no difficulty in obtaining coal supplies. Water and gas are gaining slightly in the coal mines of the district since the fans and pumps are largely out of commission. The situation remains practically unchanged in the strike area.

AVIATOR'S BODY FOUND

PORT STANLEY, July 9—The body of Lieut. L. J. Roth was found in the basket of the ill-fated United States Navy "A" balloon, fourteen miles south west of here this afternoon. No trace was found of Lt. Hull, assistant to Pilot Roth when the balloon left Indianapolis Wednesday.

A Policeman's Problem

LONDON, June 26—The myrmidons of the law having written an order in council authorizing a policeman to demand the license of an airman "suspected of being under either the influence of liquor or drugs," the satellites of justice are wondering just how enforcement of the law is to be carried out in the event of non-compliance with orders to deliver. The only suggestion made so far is that there will have to be an addition to "Robert's" kit of a rifle, a signalling flag and a Morse lamp with a special course of signalling to enable him to bring in offenders.

CHAPTER XX.

An Oasis in the Desert

When he opened the door, the hot, acrid smell of food met him, and from various signs he gathered that the evening meal was in progress in the dining room. A black boy, whom he had not seen before, appeared presently with a tray laden with soiled plates.

He grinned pleasantly, and putting down the tray, stepped forward to brush Rankine's coat. It was a very friendly shining face above the clean white, linen jacket, and, in spite of himself, Rankine smiled back.

"To late, am I not, Sambo?"

"Only a leetle, sir. I'm jes gwine to bring up the chicken hash," he answered cheerily.

At an ordinary moment Rankine would have decided against the chicken hash—whatever that might mean—but he was hungry, and the fear of solitude was upon him; so, after washing his hands in a little cloak room off the passage, he ventured into the dining room in Sambo's rear.

To his surprise, he encountered a full table at the head of which sat Mrs. Isaacstein, still in black satin, though of a newer and shinier make. Eleven pairs of eyes in addition to hers were instantly turned upon the new-comes, whom she beckoned to her side. As his tall figure made its way up behind the chairs to the place reserved for him, an insensate desire to laugh took possession of him. He was no longer Alan Rankine of Stair, heir to the noble dignity and all the prestige of a great house, but a mere bit of flotsam on the sea of life in New York! He was boarder number nineteen, and latest protege of Mrs. Ikey Isaacstein.

How did he ever get himself into such a wierd position, and why had he been such a puppet in Affery's hands? He had good money in his pocket still, and surely it were better for a man to live for a few days in surroundings befitting his position than many days in such environment as this.

But what was his position after all? It was the question uppermost in his mind as he slid into his chair, with a word of apology to his landlady, and a distant bow to the assembled multitude.

A long, lean man with a pointed beard which gave him a ridiculous resemblance to caricatures of Uncle Sam, had been holding forth at the moment of Rankine's entrance, and now resumed in his slow, drawling voice:

"It's true what I was sayin" Mrs. Isaacstein. The great Amurrican continent ain't bein' developed on the right lines. That's why it's taken so mighty long to make good."

"Oh, come, Mr. Willis!" put in a small, clerky-looking person with weak eyes protected by enormous goggles which gave him the look of a caricature, too, "we can't allow that to pass. Can we, Miss Flojambe?"

Rankine started at the name, which certainly had no American sound, and following the direction of the second speaker's glance, he beheld a handsome, florid woman of very artificial appearance, slightly over-dressed, and quite evidently interested in him, for he met her eyes in a straight stare which slightly concerted him.

"Perhaps the new gentleman might help to refute or confirm Mr. Willis's statement that America is not regarded with sufficient respect abroad?" she said boldly, anxious to draw him into the conversation.

Rankine, though not naturally a conspicuously shy man in his own walk of life, felt his color rise. The whole situation seemed to him so ridiculous that in spite of himself, he smiled. After all, why not take the comedy with the tragedy!

So he answered solemnly, " I have not heard sufficient of the argument to entitle me to take part in the discussion. Buts o far as I am aware, sir, your great American nation is fully respected and appreciated—especially in the country where I came from."

The old bore who had started the discussion began to meander on about the attributes of the great American nation, and Rankine used the opportunity, while waiting for his portion of the chicken hash, to take a further survey of his fellow-guests.

They were a motley crew, just as one might encounter in any second or third-rate boarding house. Rankine's lips set themselves rather grimlyly as he asked himself whether this was his measure in the new country. Apparently it was the one set for him by Affery, who was a citizen of the world.

Suddenly, about half-way down the table, his gaze encountered a pair of pleasant grey eyes which met his in a somewhat quizzical smile. They shone out of a woman's oval face, freshly-colored and thus differing from the usual pale faces of the majority of the women. Her brown hair was neatly braided, and she wore a black frock with a little tucker of clean lawn at the neck and wrists, which gave her a somewhat Madonna-like look. She might have been about twenty-eight or thirty years of age, and, while not beautiful, or even pretty, Rankine decided that she was the only person worth knowing at the table, and that he would take the earliest opportunity of getting to know her.

She did no take any part in the conversation, which, indeed, was monopolized by the usual bores. But she listened with that quizzical expression on her face which indicated that she did mot miss a single point, and that, evidently, her sense of humor responded.

The chicken hash was followed by a weird assortment of pie of various kinds, and thereafter what they called biscuits and cheese; then an adjournment was made for coffee in what was termed the lounge, or drawing room on the opposite side of the hall-way.

Just at the door Rankine had an opportunity of a word with the woman who had interested him at the table.

"Don't take the coffee," she whispered with a little smile which illuminated her pleasant face like a sunray.

"Thanks awfully. Any other things to be barred in this queer house?"

"Just a few," she answered. "You will find them out in time."

"I have the pleasure of speaking to a country-woman, I am sure," said Rankine, with his most charming and deferential air.

She nodded brightly.

"My name's Dempster. I come from Pollokshields."

Rankine looked the surprise he felt.

"Then we ought to be friendly. I am an Ayrshire man. Where could we have a little talk?"

"There isn't anywhere here. the lounge will be occupied for the rest of the evening."

Rankine reflected a moment. The woman's face was so friendly, and he felt sod esperately lonely and out of it, that he could not forgo the chance of learning more of her.

"It seems early days—but the Scotch are clannish everywhere. Will you come out for a stroll with me?"

"Yes, with pleasure. I know New York well, and it's a lovely evening."

Rankine's face brightened, and he did not even resent being buttonholed by Wills and Co during the few minutes Miss Dempster kept him waiting.

They used these moments to good purpose, asking minute and personal questions which Rankine answered at random, giving them certain bamboozling particulars regarding himself, which they afterwards found it difficult to piece together.

"I have, vulgarly speaking, been pulling their leg," he said to Miss Dempster, when they got clear of the house. "Heavens, what a place, and what a people! May I ask if they are a fair sample?"

"What of?" asked Jean Dempster with a good-natured smile.

"The great American nation."

"Of that section of it—yes. The section which subsists on the border line. I've been at Mrs. Isaacstein's for over three years; so I've had a pretty good opportunity of studying the brand."

"But how have you stood it so long—and why?" he asked with a side-glance at the calm, clear profile of her face.

"Oh, well, it's a good boarding-house as such places go. It suits m purse and my employment. I'm at the head of a stenographer's office on Broadway. I have fifty girls under me. I have a good salary, but everything is dear in New York, and I sead money home."

"To Pollokshields?"

"Yes. To my mother and little invalid sister. That's why I live with Mrs. Isaacstein. She's the soul of kindness and honesty. You'll like her, after you've been there a bit—that is if you are going to stop; but somehow, you don't look like Mrs. Isaacstein's!"

"I tried hard to flatter myself that I did not, but the man who introduced me evidently thought I did."

"Who was it? Any of those there to-night?"

"No. A man of the name of Affery, whose report on Mrs. Isaacstein's coincided with yours. He's gone off to-night to the Far West. Ever seen or heard of him?"

Miss Dempster shook her head.

"Never. But there are hundreds who come and go. Are you settling in New York?"

"I don't know. To-morrow I have to present some letters of introduction which will probably decide my future more or less."

"You will like New York after you have got used to it."

"It seems like a place of incredible hustle. Does everybody live and move and have their being continuously at such break-neck speed? If they do, how do they keep it up?"

Miss Dempster smiled the calm smile of superior knowledge.

"Oh, that doesn't mean anything—it's just a pose! And for work! They don't begin to know what it means to work as we know it in Scotland. They are always talking about it, but they don't get any further. Oh yes—they keep tremendous hours; but that's because they haven't mastered the elements of conomy in work or business, or time. But you can't help liking them; and the better class are lovely people. I attend Trinity Presbyterian Church. I have some friends there worth their weight in gold. They are kind to me in spite of Mrs. Isaacstein's. I've met more real kindness in New York than anywhere else in the world."

Body Of Whale But Extremities Of A Tuatle

A strange sea monster was cast upon the Chilean coast by the recent tidal waves, which appears to be a cross between a whole and a turtle. Fishermen at Lurin, 25 miles from Lima, reported a huge cutacean floundering in the shallow waters of the bay. Then they sent out word it was an unknown monster of the sea, and that they had killed it.

The director of the Natural History Museum of the University of San Marcos and the official taxidermist made a trip to Lurni for the purpose of studying and classifying the strange visitor. They found an animal with the body of a whale, but with a head and extremities resembling those of a turtle.

After examination they came to the conclusion that it belonged to the family of "Balaenidae," cetaceans, inhabiting the South Pacific waters. It is supposed that it was carried along by the Humcolt and thrown upon the beach by the tremendous surfs following the tidal waves of the Chilean earthquake.

The specimen was brought to Lima for mounting, and will be preserved in the University museum.

Rev. Dean Jones Writes

The Rector of St. Thomas's has received the following from the Very Rev. The Dean of Cincinatti, which will be read with interest by the many friends of Dr. Jones in this city:

My Dear Mr. Earp—Please accept my sincere thanks for the kind message of goodwill sent to me by yourself and Wardens and in behalf also of your congregation. It was characteristically kind of St. Thomas' people to do just that.

I did not decide until to-day that I would accept the election to the Cathedral. Last week I went to Cincinatti to "look over" the field of service offered me, and to confer with Bishop Vincent. And the result of my visit and what I trust was God's guidance, was to decide this morning to go to Cincinatti. The opportunity is great. I hope my ability will be commensurate.

I am here at Rehoboth for a week serving on the Faculty of our Diocesan Summer School. Onr spare moments are used in keeping ourselves measurably cool under a sweltering sun.

With much love to your beloved congregation and its Wardens and Vestrymen, I remain,

Sincerely yours
EDGAR JONES.

Methodist Orphanage Garden Party

The Methodist Orphanage and College Garden Party to-morrow afternoon will be a central holiday attraction. The Ayre Athletic Field forms an ideal place for a picnic. Busy committees have been engaged in assuring a thoroughly enjoyable afternoon for all who attend. There is a capital sports program prepared. Several sideshows will add to the fun whilst the ladies will be both pleased and busy in supplying delicious teas and dainties for their patrons. As to the cause, could any be more worthy? The proceeds go to the Methodist Orphanage and College. Half holidays and holidays are always, when King Sol is kind, memorable. But they are doubly blessed when from the pleasures of the hours are reaper rich and continuous harvests of happiness, comfort and contentment for the fatherless and motherless. A holiday is soon spent and, whatever the personal gratification derived, that disappears with the setting sun. But a holiday whose results bring benediction to others through successive weeks and months is a holiday worth while; blessing both those who take part in its mirth and pleasures, and those—the children—who thereby profit; both those who give, and those who will continuously receive.

All that is needed to make to-morrow's Garden Party a thorough success, is the presence of those who count it a privilege and a pleasure to help the little ones who have no parents to meet their needs, and a fine warm, sunshiny day. The latter is beyond human control, but the prospects are bright, the former is for each one to decide, and if we gauge aright the warm-heartedness and generosity of St. John's, the answer is already given. Come one! Come all! There will be a cordial welcome for every visitor; a good time; and to help the widow and orphans surely carries its own and all-sufficient reward.

CHURCH BURNING CRAZE IN LONDON

Several Imposing Buildings Damaged and More Vestries Threatened.

LONDON, June 28.—The seventh attempt within the last few weeks to burn a church in South London took place last night when St. Leonard's, one of the most imposing edifices in the suburb of Streatham narrowly escaped total destruction. These conflgrations are believed to be the work of some religious maniac of ultra Protestant views, for in each case special attention has been given to destruction of the cupboards in which the clerical vestments are kept. Entrance in every case has been obtained through the window.

A recent attempt was made to fire a still more famous church building that of Holy Trinity in one of the most crowded parts of South London when a blaze was started in three places simultaneously, but the efforts of the firemen managed to subdue the flames before the building was destroyed. Since then two other churches have been set on fire as well as many vestries.

Distinguished Masons Were Warmly Welcomed to Canada

Among the prominent passengers arriving at Quebec on the 4th inst. by the 24,000 ton liner Empress of Scotland were the Right Honorable Lord Ampthill, G.C.I.M., G.C., C.S.I., Sir John Ferguson, K.B.E., Lieut.-Col. H. Hamilton Wooderborn, C.B.E., and A. A. Carlyle, prominent members of the British Masonic Grand Lodge of England, sent out by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, to officially represent British Massionary and attend the anaual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Canada, to be held in Toronto on Wednesday and Thursday, 15th and 17th of July. This deputation from the Grand Lodge of England has been deputed to carry greetings from the Grand Lodge and Masonic fraernity of England to the Grand Lodge and Masonic Lodges of Canada.

The distinguished party, who took passage on the Empress of Scotland from Southampton on June 27th, made the statement that they greatly enjoyed their sea voyage and trip up the St. Lawrence to Quebec. On their arrival they proceeded to the Chateau Frontenac, and from there will go to Truro, N.S., where they will be met by a deputation of the Grand Lodge of the Maritime Provinces, who will extend gretings to the visitors on behalf of the Grand Lodges of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Later, on arrival at St. John's, N.F., Lord Ampthill, asisted by his accompanying Grand Officers from England, will install the new District Grand Master for Newfoundland, Honorable John Robert Bennett, and then the party will return to Montreal, where they will visit one or more of the private lodges in that city, afterwards proceeding to Toronto to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Canada.

While the Duke of Connaught is the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge in England, Lord Ampthill, in his capacity as Pro-Grand Master, presides at all the big functions.—Montreal Star.

LABOR LEADERS WILL NOT APOLOGIZE TO COMMONS

LONDON, July 9—At a meeting of the Independent Labour Party at Glasgow Saturday. J. W. Wheatley, Jas. Maxton, Rev. Campbell Stephen, and G. Buchanan, the four labour members of the House of Commons who were suspended on July 27, each adhered to the decision not to withdraw the statements made or to apologize. A resolution was carried demanding the unconditional reinstatement of the members.

CHRISTIANITY OFF THE RAILS, SAYS DOYLE.

MONTREAL, July 9—This is the greatest thing that has happened in the world since the coming of Christ, declared Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, in discussing spiritualism and the more recent development of which he has become the apostle. Sir Arthur claimed that christianity has gone so far off the rails that it does not apply and that there is no communication with the saints now as was the case in early days.

REVOLUTION RAGES

BUENOS AIRES, July 9—The Paraguayan revolutionists are reported to have advanced within ten miles of Asuncion, the capital city, and government authorities, preparing to repel the threatened attack on the city, are calling for volunteers to reinforce the federal troops.

SENT TO THE CHAIR

NEW YORK, July 9—Mrs. Anne Buzzi was sentenced to-day to die in the electric chair for the murder of Frederick Schneider, Bronx contractor, last winter. She will be electrocuted during the week of August 6th

BYNG AT ST. JOHN

ST JOHN, July 9—Governor-General Byng and entourage arrived here this morning and was given a royal welcome by the civic officials and citizens. Bright sunshine graced the day and an elaborate program of festivities in honor of the King's representative has been planned.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

PEACE WITHIN A WEEK

LAUSANNE, July 9—An accord has been reached between the Turks and Allies, and peace will probably be signed within a week. Thus the Near East Conference which has been in continuous session for more than three months past, has had a successful outcome. For a considerable period the conference hung in the balance over the question of the Ottoman debt concessions and evacuation of Constantinople and other Turkish territory by foreign troops. Both sides gave way in a measure at the end.

Entertaining Masonic Visitors

This morning Lord Ampthill and the other distinguished members of the Masonic Fraternity who arrived here yesterday were taken for a motor tour around parts of Conception Bay by His Worship Mayor Cook, who is District Grand Master Designate of Scottish Jurisdiction, and were entertained at luncheon by him at Topsail.

The main ceremony, the installation of District Grand Master, Mr. J. R. Bennett, will be conducted by the Rt. Hon. Lord Ampthill in the Methodist College Hall at 8.30 p.m.

Brethren of all lodges in the Dominion, and transient brethren are cordially invited to be present.

Following the ceremony of installation, the members of the District Grand Lodges and visiting brethren will repair to the Masonic Temple where light refreshments will be served. On Wednesday morning the visitors will be taken for a motor drive and be the guests of the Prime Minister, Hon. Sir R. A. Squires at luncheon at Smithville. In the evening the newly installed District Grand Master, Mr. J. R. Bennett will entertain the Pro-Grand Master and distinguished visitors at dinner at his residence, Monkstown Road. At 9.45 p.m. a short meeting of the St. John's Lodge will be held at which the distinguished visitors will be welcomed. The meeting will be held in the Masonic Temple and will be open to all brethren.

Following this meeting, a reception will be held and all the brethren given an opportunity of meeting the guests. Refreshments will be served in the Banquet Room and at the close, Lord Ampthill will address the brethren, his final act of his Masonic visit. On Thursday the party will leave in the special car "Quidi Vidi" attached to the regular express en route to Montreal.

Arbitration on Liquor is Urged

New Plan to Overcome Dry Ruling off American Coast.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Informal negotiations have been commenced for diplomatic settlement of the question of foreign vessels bringing sealed liquor not for consumption in American territory waters into United States ports.

Counsel for one of the largest trans-Atlantic lines has verbally suggested to Federal officials here that liquor stores for the eastward trip be brought in under foreign customs seals and that United States customs men break the seals on departing ships at the three mile limit.

If this were done, it was suggested foreign governments might use their good offices to prevent ships of their registeries from engaging in rum smuggling off the Atlantic Coast.

Although no official would talk for quotation, it was said on good authority that such a propocal would receive serious consideration. The chief fear seemed to be that vessels of some minor powers might abuse the privilege in the same manner as it is alleged the diplomatic liquor privilege has been abused in Washington.

TODAY I AM REAL WELL

So Writes Woman After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Jamestown N. Y.—"I was nervous, easily excited and discouraged and had no ambition. Part of the time I was not able to sit up as I suffered with pains in my back and with weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, both the liquid and tablet forms, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash for inflammation. Today I am real well and run a rooming house and do the work. I recommend your medicine to every woman who complains, and you may use my letter to help any one else. I am passing through the Change of Life now and I keep the Vegetable Compound in the house, ready to take when I feel the need of it."—Mrs. ALICE D. DAVIS, 203 W. Second St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Often some slight derangement may cause a general upset condition of the whole system, indicated by such symptoms as nervousness, backache, lack of ambition and general weakness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine for such troubles. In many cases it removed the cause of the trouble.

The Airplane Attraction

LONDON, June 25 A golf putting competition from aeroplanes in flight is one of the attractions devised to entertain delegates of the British, French and Aero Clubs at the "aerial week-end" now being held at Le Touquet on the French coast. A special green has been marked out on the links for the aerial golfers. The hole, 16 inches in diameter, is surrounded by a broad white ring. The competitor must not come lower than 25 feet from the ground and must try and drop his ball—an ordinary golf-ball—into the hole.

A variation of this 'game' was tried out at Chicago the other day, with players on the ground playing the ball from where it was dropped by the ones in the plane.

The Need for Work

Every Man Possible Should Be Employed.

The Advocate understands that a very considerable number of men are now employed on the Humber operations.

There are not, however, such numbers employed as were reasonably expected to be employed. As a consequence, numbers of men throughout the country are today seeking employment on the Humber, but their representatives have been obliged to advise them, day after day, that very few passes are obtainable and that the operations, as at present, are not such as to require any additional numbers of working men.

The difficulties which confront the contracting company in the initial stages of such development operations must be realised, and it is hard to suggest that something more in the way of employment of additional men may be done at the present time.

Still, the fact must not be forgotten that the Humber undertaking was initiated by the Government and its responsibility was undertaken by the country, through its electorate, for the purpose of securing the utmost and earliest possible employment for the people in order to relieve them in these days.

The argument may have been reasonably advanced that no great operations or preparations for great operations were possible until the measures before the Legislature were finally ratified.

Ratification has now been practically made; and may we hope that the Armstrong Whitworth Co. will realise the urgent need, on the part of those requiring work, to make all possible haste to employ as many additional men as possible; and so justify the Government policy of undertaking responsibility for a programme that had for its purpose not only the establishment of a permanent industry in this country, but also the immediate employment of a large number of our people.

Important Legislation

The Humber and Railway Bills, having passed all their stages in the House of Assembly and Legislative Council, will doubtless be signed by His Excellency the Governor within a short period.

The finalization of these two measures marks a very important day in the history of this country. The Humber and Railway Bills are among the very largest measures ever enforced by our legislature, and the manner in which they were treated by both Houses, was significant of the high responsibility and importance attached to them by our legislators.

In the Government's Humber project, Newfoundland sees the birth of a great industrial enterprise, exceeding in its value and extent, the great paper and pulp establishment at Grand Falls.

The harnessing of the water-powers of the Humber and the erection of vast paper and pulp mills, with its attendant possibilities of development there, represents not only a new life to the western sections of our island, but may be expected to mark out a new line of progress for our whole country and so equalise the occupations of our people as to ensure them more valuable returns and, consequently, more reliable sources of livelihood.

Apart from the employment or wage-earning possibilities resulting from the erection of the Humber plant, which, at this time, will relieve a trying situation among the people, its permanent operation will go far to revolutionize the life of our people, hitherto largely confined to the hazardous fortunes of the fisheries.

Not to say that our fisheries are to be dispensed with; to the contrary, our fisheries must be encouraged to the utmost in order that the great majority of the people, who must go fishing, will be able to prosecute it with such advantage as to make possible a decent livelihood for themselves and families.

The Government's industrial programme so practically displayed in the Humber Bill will go far to encourage the fisheries by supplementing fishery earnings of the summer fishing season, by earnings by fishermen on industrial works during fall and winter months. This will relieve the fisheries and make it less hazardous to those who, by neglect of past governments, have been confined to ekeing out a bare existence at that industry, which has been cruelly injured by those who have bought the fish at sacrifice prices for the reason that their foolish business methods of exportation and sale sacrificed the prices which may otherwise be received from the markets abroad.

The recognition by the Government of the necessity of utilising our latend inland resources for the economic benefit of our people has taken a practical form; and, by the final passage of the Humber legislation, the Government have proven that the Humber was not "a visionary proposition," nor was it of that form of pre-election kite-flying, which has characterized so many election campaigns.

That the Opposition voted for the Humber measure is a proof that, in their eyes, the Humber was no longer a visionary proposition, but was such a sound, businesslike and necessary undertaking as to commend itself to their approval and merit their unanimous endorsation. This is a fact which constitutes a tribute to the business ability of the Government Party and is, truly, something of which they may be proud. The Oppositionists, who fought them through the troublous years since 1919, have been manly enough to record their votes for measures evolved by the Government in the teeth of the most difficult public problems by which a Newfoundland Government was ever confronted. The Opposition approval to the Government's policy was due to their real belief that the Government's industrial policy was a good thing for the people and the country; and for their attitude towards the measure and the despatch given to its passage, they should be commended.

As far as the Railway Bill is concerned, it is true that the measure was carried on a straight party vote. The Opposition voted against it. They may have considered it good politics so to do. That they did not suggest a better railway settlement and that they allowed the measure to pass practically undebated go to prove that the Government settlement, in their real opinion, was, under the circumstances, not so objectionable as they may wish the public to believe it to be.

The best justification for the railway settlement was, we think, the opinion of the eminent English counsel who separately advised against going into litigation against a company who, even in the possible event of a favorable decision for Newfoundland, would be unable to carry out obligations towards the country. Litigation would probably last for years at large expense to the country and at the great risk of a decision which would prove disastrous to the countrp; and the railway problems would still be unsettled during the period of litigation.

So from the moment when His Excellency shall formally assents to the railway bill to-morrow, the Reid Newfoundland Co. is severed from all our railway connections, and the railway reverts back to Government ownership. The Government will now be in a position to negotiate with other concerns regarding future railway operations.

Some Pertinent Questions for Editor of Guardian

St. John's,
July 9th, 1923

The Editor,
Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Through the columns of your esteemed paper, I would like to ask the Editor of the Bay Roberts Guardian a few questions. No doubt he will answer same in his usual straight-forward manner. Motorists as a whole can very well afford to disregard position taken by that paper in its issue of June 28th, with regard to work accomplished by the Motor Association of St. John's, because their work covering safety first, good roads, etc., speaks for itself.

I would like to point out to our esteemed friend of the Guardian, that position taken by him, is absolutely wrong, because the Legislation now in force was debated and passed by the entire Legislature and a matter so important as the good road movement cannot truthfully be said to have been the work of a few individuals.

Can the Editor of the Guardian point to any important road improvement in Conception Bay during the past ten years, other than the work undertaken by, or with the co-operation of the Road Commission?

Is it not a fact, that the roads in Hr. Grace District, particularly in Bay Roberts section, were and are a disgrace and discredit to any community?

Is it not a fact that the main line from St. John's to Carbonear was in a like condition?

Is it not also a fact, that if the total amount of the money that was expended, or supposed to be expended on these same main lines during past ten years, was properly handled and full returns given, that these roads would be in a far better shape than they are at present?

Is it not also a fact, that since the Road Commission has been operating that ninety per cent. of the Road Boards from St. John's to Holyrood are co-operating with the Road Commission to the fullest extent, and in this way have so improved the roads, as to bring considerable trade to their own section.

Is it not also a fact, that if the total amount of the money that was expended, or supposed to be expended on these same main lines during the past ten years, was properly handled and full returns given, that these roads would be in a far better shape than they are at present?

Is it not also a fact, that if the Editor of the Guardian would interest himself to the same extent, to secure the co-operation of the various Road Boards in Conception Bay, instead of knocking the efforts that are being put forward to better the roads in his own community, that infinitely better results would follow?

May we not also ask the Editor of the Guardian, if it is not a fact, that the wear and tear, cost of upkeep and reduction in tire expenses, does not more than offset the cost to each and every individual motor car driver, than the extra tax that he pays?

The Guardian must also recognize, that it is utterly impossible to secure under present conditions, the full benefit of monies expended as Government patronage for road building or repairs, and it was not until the road commission was fully in operation that the result of their labours has been appreciated.

Motorists wonder as to whether the Editor of the Guardian has ever driven his car over the Seal Cove line prior to its being rebuilt, and also if he has driven over the same line in July of this year. Surely he must be blind, if he cannot see the vast improvement that has been made, and might also recognize the impossibility under present conditions, of having this work accomplished under the old Government patronage system.

Motorists agree that Cars, Tires, Gas, Oil, Parts, etc., are all taxed high enough. Yea! too high, but even so, would any past Government, or the present one for that matter agree to the spending of even twenty thousand dollars by an independent body of men who are above party control, unless at least part of that amount was paid by themselves. No, Mr. Editor! You have the wrong side of the case. Come over and boost the good road movement; boost road improvement for your own district. Any crank can knock down, but it takes a strong man to build up.

MOTORIST.

MOUNTED POLICE REPORT ON DEATH OF ROBERT JANES

NINE HELD ON MURDER CHARGES AND THREE SUSPECTED

QUEBEC, July 4—That nine Esquimos are being held in the northern territories on charges of alleged murders and that the Canadian Mounted Police is investigating three other reported murder cases was the startling announcement obtained from reliable source, this morning.

As already stated the S.S. Arctic, which leaves on Saturday for the northern regions, will have on board a special julicial party, which had been delegated with powers to deal with the charge of murder laid against one Esquimo and the charges of complicity against two others as the result of the death of Robert Janes, a Newfoundland trapper.

At the Attorney General's Department this morning information regarding the whole affair was available for the first time and the details of the far north case made known. From the information gathered Robert Janes, a native of Newfoundland, who had established a post at Ponds Inlet, Baffin Land, was on the eve of returning after four years sojourn in that section of Canada, when he was shot at Cape Crawford, some distance from his post.

The shooting took place in March 1920 and according to the crime report filed by Sergt. Major Joy, of the Canadian Mounted Police, who investigated the affair, death was inflicted by one NOO-TAX-WAT-SOO an Esquimo, two other Esquimos, ROOH-RE-Way-Nak and Ah-Tee-Tak are claimed to have plotted the death with the alleged murderer and having paid him with white fox skins.

It is claimed in the report of the special coroner that Janes was persuaded by the three Esquimos to go on the ice at a few yards from his temporary home and that while he was there he was fired at. He fell to the ground and as he was trying to get up again the two Esquimos above mentioned finished him. The story was naively told by other Esquimos, who, however, added that Janes was mad and that the Esquimos were afraid that he would kill them as he had menaced them.

It took several months before the Canadian Mounted Police were informed of the affair and in March, 1922, an investigation opened and led to the arrest of the three men. The body of Janes was found at some distance from Crawford Cape. It was then also that it was disclosed that three Esquimos, who resided near Crawford Cape walked several hundred miles to get lumber to prepare a coffin for the dead man. It was these who advised the Canadian Mounted Police. In June last, the preliminary investigation, conducted by Sergt. Major Joy, acting as coroner, resulted in the indictment being returned against the three Esquimos.

A few weeks ago Sir Lomer Gouin, Minister of Justice, appointed L. A. Rivet, K.C., Montreal, as stipendiary judge, Mr. Leapold Tellier, as attorney for the accused and Mr. F. X. Biron, Crown Prosecutor, Mr. Falardeau stated this morning that most likely the case would not be heard before a jury.

DISREGARD FOR LAW

Washington Post: The stress that leaders thought throughout the country are laying on the menace of disregard and violation of the prohibition law is not misplaced. Prohibition has been written into the Constitution and enforcement has been written by Congress. It is the law of the land, and as such demands the support of good citizens. Disregard of one law makes for disregard of all law. Lawlessness of any kind is a challenge to the supremacy of government, which depends on the maintenance of the supremacy of law.

SOMERVILLE, N.P., June 29—(By Canadian Press)—After working for several hours on the family automobile and being unsuccessful in his attempts to fix it. G. Stave Schutzenhofer, of Floral Park, near here, was found by his mother hanging from a beam in the garage of the home.

Schutzenhofer, his mother said, had worried over the loss of his position and he appeared to her depressed also because he could not get the automobile in working shape. He had left the house for the garage some time before Mrs. Schutzenhofer investigated and found his body. She called a neighbor, who cut it down.

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

Canada's Experience

In the neighboring Dominion of Canada, the Liberal government of Sir William Laurier in 1904, undertook thec onstruction of a second trans-continental railway from the atlantic to the Pacific to operate as a rival to the Canadian Pacific, and to open up new territory, especially in the west, as the praries were then being largely settled by immigrants from Europe. Whether, without the war that railroad system would have paid it is idle for everybody to say to-day. The war stopped immigration, the war reduced production, the war took hundreds of thousands of the best and the strongest of young men from Britain and other European countries, young men of the material out of which successful colonists are made. The war killed more than 50,000 of Canada's best and maimed twice that number; the war killed or maimed probably five or six times as many more British boys from overseas who would have settled in Canada, so that it is absolutely impossible to say what would have happened if the war had not broken out. We only know what has happened since the war broke out.

In a large measure as a result of the appeal to arms made in Europe in August, 1914, we are not alone confronted with the railroad problem in Newfoundland, but Canada's railroad problem is quite as grave as is ours and quite as difficult of solution. This Government has been criticised and will doubtless be criticised further in this debate for having made grants of money to carry on the railroad and for providing stock and other equipment. In Canada they have been compelled to do exactly the same sort of thing, and finally they have had to do what we are now finding ourselves obliged to do: they have been forced to buy out the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern railroad systems and consolidate them with the Inter-Colonial as one system of National Railways.

Cost Canada Millions

The Canadian Governments, three of them in turn, Borden's Conservatice, Meighen's Coalition, and King's Liberal advanced millions of dollars to the Grand Trunk and the Canadion Northern Railways and found themselves confronted with the same problem as ourselves, namely, that if further sums were not provided the railroad would have to close down and the employees remain unpaid. They had to deal with this situation as we had to deal with ours, namely, making provisions whereby they took control of the railways and operated them more or less as Government agencies.

They had to go still further and they had to provide for the submission of monetary claims of the Grand Trunk to a board of arbitration, on which Board ex-President Taft, of the United States, represented the Grand Trunk, and they had to pay $10,000,000 for certain rights held by the arbitrators to be vested in the Grand Trunk in respect of certain of its stocks, while in addition to that, the Grand Trunk appealed to the Privy Council against that award and although the decision was against the Grand Trunk, it is recognized as entirely likely that before long Canada will have to make a substantial payment to the holders of this stock, not as a matter of right, but as an act of grace in order to allay the feeling of bitterness which prevails among these shareholders because of their view that they have been unjustly treated.

Decision of Privy Council.

The decision of the Privy Council in the Grand Trunk case was published in the London Times of November 16, 1922. It was read by Lord Birkenhead and it discussed exhaustively the whole history of that railway enterprise. I do not propose to read it because it is very lengthy, but my legal friends can find it in the Law Reports. It is merely necessary for me to point out that the recital of the chronological developments on that matter closely parelleled our own and that the steps we have taken here in Newfoundland from year to year to deal with our railway problems were almost identical with those which had to be taken in the neighboring Domonion of Canada about the same time. I would merely add here that whercas the decision of the majority of the Board of Arbitration, namely, Sir Walter Casselle, the judge of the Exchequer Court in Canada, who was the Chairman, and of Sir Thomas White, who represented the Canadian Government, was that the stock was valued at $10,000,000 the award of Mr. Taft who represented the Grand Trunk valued the stock at $48,000,000. This means that if the Privy Council had overturned the award the Canadian Government would probably have been obliged to pay the Grand Trunk share-holders five times as much ar they actually paid them.

This is important when we remember that the arrangement we have just made with the Reids is one by which they abandon all their claims and transfer us the railway, railway telegraphs, eight steamers, the express company, the dry dock, etc., for 20 years 5 per cent bonds of the face value of two million dollars, the Reids assuming all expenses and lost in connection with their flotation.

Litigation Expensive

We might have undertaken costly protracted litigation before the same Privy Council, but there was the possibility that the Colony might lose and have to pay an enormously larger sum than two million dollars.

On the other hand, it might be argued that we would win and be entitled to receive a large sum of money, but in the first place we were advised by some of the leading lawyers in England that the possibility of winning this action could not be assured and in the second place even if we won we were next faced with the question of how we were to secure payment of our bill of damages from a company which was admittedly bankrupt and had no substantial assets whatever to respond to any claim which we might make against it. That is to say, whatever private resources the Messrs. Reid might possess of their own, these were not liable for the debts of the railway nor for any judgment awarded by the Privy Council against the Reid Newfoundland Company as a Corporation as distinct from a partnership.

Nobody here or elsewhere will seriously dispute that the Reid Newfoundland Company, apart from the private fortunes, if any, of the individual shareholders, is hopelessly insolvent, and unable to meet annual operating losses. It seems therefore a proposition that answers itself absolutely, that our position would have been hopeless from the outset had we carried this case to the Privy Council, as even if we won we could not collect substantial damages, while if we lost we might be let in for an immense sum in order to satisfy the Reid claims and would also have to settle with them as to their future relations with our railway system.

No Failure By Government

We have been criticised because it is alleged that we promised to make the Reids carry out their contract and failed to do so. I deny that there was any failure whatever on our part. We have done everything humanly possible to compel the Reids to live up to their contract but we found ourselves in such a jungle of lawsuits and other complications combined with the fact we were dealing ing with a bankrupt outfit, that the task was hopeless.

These legal difficulties were not of our making—not a single one of them. We inherited every one of them. They were the outgrowth of 30 years of railroad contracts, amending contracts, and other agreements between the Reid Company and the Governments of Sir William Whiteway, Sir James Winter, Sir Robert Bond, and Sir E. P. Morris, down to the day we took office.

We had to move very cautiously and we did what I think the judgement of the whole country will approve of our having done—we took the best advice we could get in England as to our position, and acted upon it. One of the gentlemen who advised us on the matter was Sir William Finlay, a son of Lord Finlay, ex-Lord Chancellor, and himself one of the leading members of the British Bar. Another was Mr. Barrington Ward, K.C., an eminent English counsel who has represented Newfoundland in many important matters.

As a special additional precaution we obtained the opinion of Mr. (now Sir) Douglas Hogg, K.C., who shortly after wards became Attorney General in the Ministry of Mr. Bonar Law and fills the same position in the present administration of Mr. Stanley Baldwin. Sir Douglas Hogg, K.C., is rightly considered one of the most outstanding figures in the British legal world today, and judged to be one of the ablest who has ever filled the important office of Attorney General of England.

Dangerous Situation.

The opinion of all these gentlemen was that there were grave risks attached to arbitrations and appeals to the Privy Council on the matters in dispute between the Reid Company and this Colony and that it would be better for us, if at all possible, to settle the matter outside of arbitrations and litigation; and, even if it involved substantial expenditure, get rid of Reids and the paralyzing influence which their incompetent management of the railway system has had upon the trade, industry, commerce and general progress of this country for many years past.

It is not possible within the limits of the patience of the House to discuss the details of the immensely complicated situation which from a legal standpoint confronted us in regard to the obligations of the Reids on the one hand and their rights on the other. It will have to suffice for me to say, and I think my assertion will be confirmed by any legal man in this country who has had occasion at any time to study the questions arising out of those contracts, that they are most puzzling, contradictory and hopeless of reconcilation.

I admit that there are those who claim that we have strong claims against the Reids. On the other hand we have to ask ourselves if we are justified, in view of the pronounced opinions expressed by these eminent English counsels, in taking our dispute to the highest Tribunal of the Empire imposing upon the country a tremendously heavy outlay for legal expenses alone, and taking the risks of heavy damages against us if the decision of that Tribunal was adverse to our interests. Even if we won, we were no better off because they have little of practical value to respond to damages.

Nothing to Recover From

Everything the Reid Company possesses is mortgaged to the Bank of Montreal and as to the Bonds which we pay them under this settlement probably the entire net proceeds of their sale will be absorbed by the Bank in liquidation of indebtedness to that institution. Furthermore, even if we secured a decision in our favour there would still remain the necessity of acquiring some of the properties of the company such as the steamers for instance. These are covered by mortgages and we would have to purchase them from the mortgagees or secure other boats to carry on the service.

After studying the problem from every angle, we consequently decided that in the best interest of the country there was no alternative for us but to clear the Reids out at the cheapest figure we could make a clear cut settlement once and for all, between them and the country, and secure for the country the railroad and its allied services—it steam boats, its express company, its telegraphs and its dry dock.,

Today, for the first time in almost 35 years, the country can draw a free breath, it can say that it is through with the Reids as a transportation agency in this country. We felt that we could not in justice to the people of Newfoundland and our descendants permit the Reids to continue to manipulate this country in the future as they have in the past, in its politics, in its business, and in every aspect, until their association with it has done more to discredit Newfoundland abroad than any other combination of circumstances in our recent history.

Lest it be thought that I am exaggerating the seriousness of the situation, let me quote from a report by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who for nearly two years past has been in charge of operation of the railroad system. This report, which is very exhaustive and was tabled here last session as a Parliamentary paper, was summarized in the Canadian Railway Marine World for May, 1922, and I will quote from that report which gives all his facts in condensed form.

Too Many Miles of Road.

He shows in the beginning that we have too many miles of railway; and the traffic is insufficient; that we have too many non-paying branches; that the more business they do the greater is the loss. He also proves by comparison with Canadian conditions that the freight rates are too low and that the mail subsides are insufficient. His next point is that the maintenance of the road was starved until the past two or three years, when funds were provided by the Government to make the line safe for life and limb, and that the same conditions applied to the rolling stock.

Other factors which hurt us according to his report, were the abnormal cost of labor and material, and losses on the station agencies three out of every four of which he stated were not paying the cost of their maintenance. I quote here Mr. Morgan's observations on these points as summarized in the publication referred to.

Mr. Morgan's report is based on the assumption that the railway has been a losing venture from its inception, which is borne out by the figures given in an appended table showing the earnings and expenses of the line for the 18 years from 1904 to 1921 inclusive. In each of these years there was a loss, ranging from $19,162, in 1910 to $1,681,261, in 1921. The increasing rates of expenses to earnings began to amount up with the bringing into operation of the new branch line constructed in 1910, and to a still greater extent for 1918, when the increased cost of coal, etc., and higher wages due to the war took effect. In 1919 the earnings were 88% of the expenses; in 1918, 80%; in 1919, 69% in 1920, 52%, and in 1921, 45%. The totals for the whole period were:—Earnings, $14,317,343; expenses, $20,096,346; loss $5,779,003. Average of earnings to expenses, 70%. The report discusses the whole situation in considerable detail and assigns seven main reasons for the losses as follows:—

Mr. Morgan's Opinion

"Insufficient Traffic.—Nearly 1,000 miles of line have been built to serve a population of 250,000 a large proportion of whom live beyond its reach, and the balance live at points directly accessible to water transportation. The main industry of the colony is fishing, and as practically the entire population lives at tide-water there is very little traffic which could not move by water, and a great proportion does not. There are, so far, no producing mines to furnish a large and continuous tonnage for the railway, and the existing pulp and paper mills are as located that they have direct access to ocean transportation. All centres of population are located on excellent natural harbors, and as water transportation is admittedly cheaper than rail transportation, it is not to be anticipated that rail traffic will grealy increase, unless new industries are developed in the interior, where they would be obliged to depend on using the railway facilities now provided. The volume of traffic is also adversely affected by unnecessary and unfair steamship connection fostered by government subsides. In 1920-21, 20,850 passengers were carried, earning $737 a mile of road; and 27,006 tons of freight were carried, earning $681.68 a mile of road.

Excessive Gradients, etc.—Owing to the light construction of the line, the light gradients, over the entire line, it has never been possible to get an average train-load much over one-tenth of that obtaining on Canadian lines. The railway has a large amount of heavy gradients that most cases on the American continent, and while no high elevations are crossed, the line is a succession of gradients, largely 2½ per cent. A computation of the amount of elevation in feet over come by a train making a trip from St. John's to Port aux Basques shows the total to be 8,000 feet, a greater climb than is necessary on any transcontinental line in crossing the Rocky Mountains. This handicap cannot be overcome, owing to the physical character of the island making it necessary to touch at water level points, and to cross high ridges of land between such tidewater points. The railway is laid with high rails, and the bridges are of light construction, which precludes the use of anything but light locomotives; the capacity of the cars is low to conform with the narrow gauge of the tracks (3½ft.) and the light nature of the railway generally. Efficient handling of freight consists of getting a heavy carload and a heavy trainload, or in moving the greatest possible number of tons of freight with the fewest number of train miles. Train milage cost does not vary greatly on different railways. For 1920-21 the Newfoundland Railway handled its trains at a cost of $3.06 a train mile, a not unfavorable comparison with the C.P.R. and other lines, but when account is taken of the number of tons handled per mile run the comparison is most unfavorable, being 41, as against the C.P.R.'s 498. The Newfoundland Railway in 1929-21 earned $1.46 a train mile run against the C.P.R.'s $4.64. The result shows that the Newfoundland Railway carried on at a loss of $1.60 against a profit of 74c. a train mile on the C.P.R., or carrying the analysis still further. It cost the Newfoundland Railway 7½c. to carry one ton of freight one mile, while it cost other countries less than 1c. The revenue per ton mile for 1920-21 was 2.55c., representing about one-third of the cost of operation.

BACK TO TENNEYSON

London Times: Not long ago, the father, his armchair, and the poems he enjoyed in it, were red rags to modernity. Seeing them, you attacked, or cried: "Progress!" and passed on. Now you pause and smile upon their quaintness. Tennyson is already returning to power. The wicked parent is acquiring a halo of benevolence. Very soon revolutionary young women of the fashionable sort will put away their Oriental divans, and, and, leaning their heads against antique antimacassars, will read the "Idylls of the King."

A Quick Relief for Headache

A headache is frequently caused by badly digested food; the gases and acids resulting therefrom are absorbed by the blood which in turn irritates the nerves and causes painful symptoms called headache, neuralgia, rheumatism, etc. 15 to 30 drops of Mother Seigel's Syrup will correct faulty digestion and afford relief.

Not far off, possobly, is the day when the average man will possess his own private airplane, exactly as so many men in the United States, for example, possess their Ford motor car.

Do you know that Henry Ford manufactures his motor cars at the enormous rate of 6,000 cars a day? 36,000 cars a week? 144,000 cars a month? or over a million cars a year? And Ford is but one of many automobile manufacturers in America.

M. Defitine, a Frenchman, is the designer of a 15-horsepower airplane, and he paints the picture of the sky being filled with these aerial flivvers. He is trying to interest Henry Ford in the manufacture of the airplanes.

"My aviette can be manufactures as cheaply as a Ford by means of mass production," he declared, "and even if manufactured in small quantity can be sold for about $700. The great advantage of the light plane is safety It has a landing speed of only 18 miles an hour, and will land anywhere with a level space of 25 yards, or start off at the same speed in a similar space. Equipped with folding wings such as I am making," he concluded, "you can easily put a couple of planes in an ordinary Ford garage."

That 18 miles he mentions does not mean that that is the speed of the machine. He means that in landing the engine can be slowed down to 18 miles, and thus make landing very much safer than with a bigger machine or a faster engine. The advantage of being able to take-off from such short space is obvious to anyone. At present the average machine requires quite a little run to enable it to gain enough momentum to get the air.

Frank A. Vanderlip is an American multi-millionaire, financier, author, and philanthropist. He was President of the National City Bank of New York, has been sent on important missions to Japan and other countries by the United States Government, attended the Genoa Conference as unofficial American observer, and is well-known in America as a liberal-minded man.

Read these words he uttered in Washington recently at a distinguished gathering of the National American Council, where General Pershing was a listener.

"I am getting an obsession against the word 'patriotism," exclaimed Mr. Venderlip. "In Europe today one of the greatest troubles is that patriotism is transplanted into intense nationalism.

"America first. If in well-doing, fine. If in selfishness, not so fone. It is no finer to be selfish nationally than individually."

That last sentence is worthy of being inscribed in the capy-book of every school-child in the world. It is a lesson highly needed in this world.

Here is news to gladden the heart of all who despise religious hatred and enmity. It comes from Jackson Heights, L.I., in the United States, where twenty-one Protestant denominations attended religious services for the first time in the Community Church dedicated by Bishop Luther B. Wilson. The prayer was offered by a minister of the Dutch Reform Church, Scripture read by a minister of the Baptist Church, sermon delivered by a minister of the Episcopal Church, benediction given by a minister of the Presbyterian Church.

Membership in the church invludes the following denominations: Presbyterian Church of U.S., Presbyterian Church of Canada, Presbyterian Church of the South, United Presbyterians and the Independent Presbyterians, the Baptism Church of the North, the Baptist Church of the South, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the South Methodist Episcopal Church, the Uniterian Church the Universalist Church, the Congregational Church, the Dutch Reform Church, the Disciples, the Episcopalians, the Church of England, the Morabian Church, and four independent church organizations.

I do not wish to have it understood that I like to see everybody thinking the same or believing the samel don't. The only time all people agree is where they have no ideas anyway. No, I don't want unanimityofbelief. But what I do like to see is people who are not hating each other because they believe differently. If people of different ideas could get together to talk things over it would result in giving each man a width and breadth in his ideas that it is quite impossible for him to have when he mixes with people who believe exavtly as he does.

Atlantic Lodge Installation

The installation of officers of Atlantic Lodge, I.O.O.F. took place last night, the installing officer being D. D.G.M., G. T. Phillips, assisted by the following acting as Grand Lodge officers: Past Grands Charles Phillips, G. Phillips, R. Young, J. Carberry, W. Quick. The newly installed officers are:

N.G.—James Butler
V. G.—Charles Quick
R. S.—Walter Garf, P.G.

J.G.—R. Newell
R. S. V.G.—S. Butler, P.G.
L.S.V.G.—H. Patrick
R.S.S—Samuel Case
L.S.S.—Charles White

Just previous to the congratulatory addresses, the pleasing duty devolved upon the D.D.G.M. of presenting a Past Grand Jewel to Bro. Walter Garf and a combination jewel to Bro. A. Heath.

The annual convention of Oddfellows will be held at Dartmouth, N.S.

Extra Attractions at Mt. Cashel Garden Party

Friends of Mount Cashel will be glad to learn that this year's sports program promises to be of unusual interest. In addition to the football fives by the senior league teams and the pony and horse races as in years past, new features will be introduced by of exhibition pyramids by the well-known C.L.B. class.

Because of the dropping of baseball there will be served up this year a three-mile race on the field as well as a relay race by the Junior League football teams.

For both the latter events, handsome prizes have been offered. In view of the success of past years, the addition of these new features should tend to make the 1923 Garden Party a bigger success than ever before.

No Game To-night

Owing to the Masonic installation which takes place in the Methodist College Hall to-night, the league foot ball match between the C.E.I. and Feildians has been postponed in order to give the players who are Masons an opportunity to attend the function.

The game will be played at the end of the season.

The Junior League has been given the field for to-night, and the Cadets and B.I.S. teams will play.

Mr. C. W. Horwood of Grand Falls who was in town attending the funeral of his father, the late William H. Horwood, returns to his home by to-day's express.

YESTERDAY AT THE HOUSE

The House met at 3.15 p.m. yesterday and following the tabling of answers to questions etc., the House went into Committee of the Whole on Supply.

Minister of Finance and Customs Cave went thru the estimates, explaining the various votes and accounting for the increases and decreases in the estimates for the different departments, the amounts of which in many cases have been considerably reduced.

At the request of the Opposition Leader, no votes were passed and the Committee rose till this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Sable I. In Port

The s.s. Sable I., Capt. Murley, arrived in port last night. Only two passengers, Messrs Knight and Burke, came by the ship

The trip was a very stormy one, and the cargo consists of about 7 carloads of general freight and one of sheep.

Will Pass Over "Guard"

The formal ceremony of passing over the raceboat "Guard" by the C. C.C. Boat Club to the C.L.B. will take place at the race course to-night.

The C.L.B. Band will be present and will render a program of music.

It is expected that a large number of supporters of both clubs will be present.

Guards Victorious

In last evening's football game the Guards defeated the C.L.B. by three goals to nil. The game, like the attendance was perhaps the poorest for the season, the C.L.B. being outdistanced at every turn by their opponents.

LATEST

SYDNEY, July 9—Comparative quiet marked the progress of the coal workers' strike in Cape Breton up to midnight, while from Halifax came a glimmer of hope that a settlement was possible in the news that Rupert Curtis, International Representative of the steel works had left here for Halifax to interview Premier Armstrong and members of his government, with a view to effecting mediation between the strikers and operators.

So far as the steel strike was concerned on the other hand, a more serious turn of events came with the announcement that Pictou County miners had, at a mass meeting on Monday night, resolved to strike at midnight in support of the demands made by the Island strikers.

Information from Springhill was to the effect that miners in that section remained loyal to the international union fo far and had not announced any intention of striking, but a mass meeting is to be held there Tuesday night at which definite action would probably be outlined.

Disorders have been practically nil through out the strike area and further troops arrived during the day to reinforce those already there.

Twelve hundred men were working all day in the coke ovens and bloom mills, and Besco officials stated their belief that more could be obtained if it was decided to expand present operations.

CALGARY, July 10—It is with difficulty he is restraining miners of District 18, U.M.W. from walking out in sympathy with the strike, as a result of the handling of the Nova Scotia strike by the authorities, stated William A. Shereman, President, in a wire sent this morning to James Murkock, Minister of Labor.

LOCAL ITEMS

No matter what price you pay for your toilet soap, you cannot get a better quantity than Ivory. Yet Ivory is not expensive. You can buy it at the Union Stores for five cents a cake. There are larger size cakes too selling for ten and fifteen cents. Each is well worth the money and will please you immensely.

As good as any soap can be that's Ivory toilet soap. Yet the price it not high. Every family can afford Ivory soap. It is a sensible economical soap. No fancy wrappers or stylish boxes, just plain wholesome pure soap that's what you want isn't it? Ivory at all Union Stores now.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT

A young man was charged with the larceny of two cart loads of iron from Belvidere Orphanage valued at $23. It had been given to the Orphanage from the old Signal Hill Hospital and was stolen by the defendant and a man named Walsh who, has since left the country. The accused pleaded guilty and was sentenced to six months with hard labor.

An East End man was charged with stealing a britching strap and winkers from Chas. Lester. The owner did not wish to prosecute and the accused was reprimanded and let go on payment of costs and on suspended sentence.

Two boys were charged with the larceny of cash, cigarettes, tobacco and 25 yards cotton valued at $20. Through their counsel Mr. Higgins, K.C., they pleaded guilty. Mr. Higgins made a strong plea for leniency. They were fined $10 each or 30 days.

The evidence of a witness in a postponed Prohibition Case, was taken as the witness in qeustion was about to leave town. He is a native of Hopedale, Labrador, and said he had bought rum from the defendant at his house on Water Street, paying fifty cents a drink.

A REMINDER

Sir—I hope that my co-religionists will not forget to attend in goodly numbers at the Kilbride Garden Party, the proceeds of which will be spent in the cost of erecting the new Church.

I am sure that the generosity shown in the past will be in evidence on the occasion and that the Rev. Fr. Rawlins will have cause to be joyful over the success of the event. I have written this note as a reminder of the party which takes place on the eighteenth of the month, and before closing I wish to thank you very sincerely for your courtesy in giving it publication.—CITIZEN

St. John's, July 9, 1923.

Retirement of Dr. Bond

After fifty-two years of varied and influential ministry, the Rev. Dr. G. J. Bond retires from circuit work

A brilliant student of Mt .Allison he was the originator and first editor of The Eurhetorian Argosy. Serving a number of years in the Newfoundland Conference he was thrice its President and was also President of the Nova Scotia Conference.

After eight years of distinguished service as editor of the Wesleyan, he was elected editor of the Christian Guardian with promise of much success, but sore bereavement, followed by ill-health, obliged him to relinquish office at thec lose of his term.

Dr. Bond wields a classic and facile pen, is especially interested in missionary work, and is also a close student of current events, and it is hoped that in his now great leisure he may, for a long time, be able to take an active part in advancing the interests of missionary and other good causes.—Wesleyan.

Ranger Back From Labrador

The S. S. Ranger, Captain Abram Kean, returned to port Sunday morning, having been as far north as Smokey. It was impossible to get beyond there as a solid jam of ice extended up the coast. One June 27th the Ranger picked up the Seal's call for assistance and immediately went to her aid. At first it was thought the propellor was broken, but it was found later that the shaft had broken in two and the propellor fallen off. On the morning of June 28th the Ranger towed the Seal into Lord's Cove, the Silvia II., which is on an exploration trip to Stag Bay for the Aerial Survey Company, was spoken to. All the crew with the exception of one man were in excellent health. The man had his shoulder dislocated by being hit by the main boom, but he had been carefully attended to and was recovering rapidly. At the time the Seal met with the accident the ship was within fifty yards of the rocks, but a change of wind worked the ice inside and formed a barrier. Captain Kean reports the Labrador coast blocked with ice and very little doing with fish. Many schooners are along the French Shore awaiting an opportunity to get across the Straits.

OBITUARY

HECTOR ROSS

After a protracted illness, the veteran railroad man and master car builder, Mr. Hector Ross breathed his last at Topsail on Sunday evening, where he had gone only a few days previously. The deceased was born in Richmond, P.Q., in 1848. During C. P. R. construction days Mr. Ross began his career as a railroader, and during the building of that line as well as the Inter-Colonial he was associated in business with the late Sir R. G. Reid. He came to Newfoundland 32 years ago and worked for some time at railway construction, subsequently assuming the position of chief of the Car Building Shops of the Reid Nfld. Company, a position he held up two years ago, when failing health compelled his retirement. Mr. Ross was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church. One daughter, Mrs. Boyd Baird, and one son, Hector, of the firm of William Heap and Co. survive him. The funeral takes place this afternoon from the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Boyd Baird, Monkstown Road.

Picked Up Buoy

A message received by Mr. H. W. LeMessurier yesterday, tells of the picking up of a Canadian whistling buoy in Placentia Bay.

On last Saturday, Mr. Peter Shea, of Bar Haven, reported having seen a buoy in Placentia Bay.

Inspector Dee proceeded to search for it two miles from the Downs, where it was a menace to shipping, and towed it to Argentia. The buoy is an automatic whistler with fifteen fathoms of 1½-inch chain attached. It bears the Canadian official number 594.

The S. S. Silvia arrived at Halifax from New York at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. The ship leaves Halifax today and is due here early Thursday morning.

No Interference With Mine Workers Will be Tolerated

Other Districts Will Take Action.

SLDNEY, N.S., July 10 About five hundred troops and Provincial police occupied number 2 mine and Sterling at Glace Bay this morning. There were no disorders. The infantry went from Sydney in flat cars of the Sydney and Louisburg railway, and the mounted troops and provincial troops went out by road. The first troops to leave the city were the cavalry, the Royal Canadian Dragoons. These were followed by the infantry. Later nine flat cars left the steel plant for number two. The Steel Companw announced this morning that an additional one hundred and twenty-one men had been employed today at the steel plant. Col. Eric McDonald, Commissioner of Provincial Police, following his return to Sydney after the occupation of the two Glace Bay centres, made the following statement:—The Provincial Police are stationed at Glace Bay to prevent pickets from interfering with the men going on the plant. Whether they are officials, workers or strikers, every man has a right to go anywhere he pleases so long as he is not trespassing, any pickets attempting to interfere will be arrested. The same applies to the movement of coal trains. Barb wire was being strung to-day around the number two colliery area.

HALIFAX, July 10—Dominion Number 2, the heart of the colliery district, was being ocupied to-day by infantry and cavalry, assisted by an airplane circling overhead.

STELLARTON, July 10—All the miners in Pictou County coal area, with the exception of those employed by the International Coal and Railway Company at Stellarton, are out on strike to-day in protest against the arrest of Dan Livingstone and J. B. Mc Lachlan, of the United Mine Workers of America, and the presence in Cape Breton of armed forces of the Crown. About 1800 men are affected. The maintenance men had not quit their jobs up to a late hour Tuesday, and no attempt has yet been made at picketing by strikers.

NORTH SYDNEY, July 10—The employees of the Bras d'Or Coal Company, Toronto mine voted this morning to strike in support of the demand for the release of J. B. McLachlan and Dan Livingstone, Mine Worker Officials, now under arrest in Halifax.

TORONTO, Ont., July 10—Secretary Moriarity, of the Workers Party, with headquarters in Toronto, received a telegram from William Long, Secretary of the Workers Party in Alberta District, which says in part, that the sentiment in favor of immediate action in support of District Twenty-six is sweeping through Western Canada. All locals of District Eighteen U.M.W.A., are unanimous for immediate and drastic action.

EDMONTON, July 10—The Trade and Labor Council is calling a special meeting to deal with the serious situation in Nova Scotia. The Calgary Trades Council Executive is recommending to the general meeting that a resolution be sent to the Government protesting against the use of troops in the strike area.

ROTARY LUNCHEON

Rev. R. E. Fairbairn Adresses Rotary On "Esperanto"

At the Rotary Luncheon held yesterday at the West End Restaurant, the chairman of the day, Rotarian D. J. Davies, B.Sc. introduced the Rev. R. E. Fairbairn, who gave a very interesting address on "Esperanto for Commercial Use."

Rev. Fairbairn was accorded a hearty vote of thanks by the Rotarians for his very scholarly address.

Amongst the guests were Mr. Simpson, Lomond, Rotarian Alex. Mulligan of the Halifax Rotary Club, Mr. Jos. Ryan, Mr. George Hunt, Toronto, Rotarian Leslie Desmond St. John N.B., Mr. J. M. Darcy and Mr. Wm. Gilling of Boston.

The singing of the National Anthem brought a very pleasant hour to a close.

JUNIOR LEAGUE FOOTBALL

The result of last evening's Junior League Football game between the Cadets and B.I.S. was a win for the former by 2 goals to 1. There was a good attendance and the contest compared favorably with most of the major league games. Mr. T. Dalahunty was referee.

His Excellency the Governor and party as well as Lord Ampthill and party will attend the G.W.V.A. Sports this afternoon, weather permittinfg.

PORTIA SAILS

What's Wrong With Onr Youth?

This question was asked by Judge Frank J. Morris of the Central District Court yesterday when two boys of respectable families came before him on charges of larceny, the pair making up a list of four who had been arrested for theft.

"In the past two years," said the Judge, "I have tried more larceny cases than were tried in this Court by previous occupants of the Bench in any ten years." His Honor was at a loss to account for this moral retrogression in the youth of the present day, but he advanced the theory that it was due to the lack of that rigid discipline in the home that prevailed aforetime. In the majority of cases where youthful offenders had to be dealt with, they were not of the class that might be forced to the perpetration of robberies by want or led into crime by ignorance. In many instances they were boys with comfortable homes and respectable parents, and this fact rendered the crime wave of the present day all the more unaccountable.

BAD SMASH-UP

About 4.30 yesterday afternoon, a serious motor acident was narrowly averted on Duckworth St. East. Mr. Lionel Munn, was driving east along Duckworth Street, near the fire hall, when Dr. Donahue, accompanied by his son Jimmie, 5 years old, Messrs. Walter Chafe and S. Noah, were coming west, returning from Torbay. At the time a spirited horse recently imported was being led along Duckworth Street by two young chaps named Summers, and took fright at a street car which was coming down Ordnance Street. The horse shied and plunged and backed right into the dasher of Mr. Munn's car, which was immediately stopped. Dr. Donahue, who seemingly did not realize Munn's car was stopped, carried on and then apparently fearing a collision was inevitable, turned his car into the sidewalk and in doing so collided with a telephone pole which broke off at the base. The bonnet of the car was badly smashed in the collision and the flying glass of the windshield inflicted some cuts on the boy's face. It is probably due to Mr. Chafe's promptitude that the little fellow fared so well, for just as the car struck the pole Mr. Chafe grabbed him and pulled him into the rear seat.

Mothers Advise Their Daughters to Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Keep Them in Health

A Mother's Advice Restores Mrs. Hall to Health

Lindsay, Ontario.—"I had very poor blood and was bothered with pains in my side and back. I took kidney medicine for a while without success. I got pale, weak and nervous. My mother, who has used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a number of years with very good results, advised me to take it and I did. It did me worlds of good. I have gained twenty pounds and have not felt so well for a long time. You may use this letter as a testimonial to help others if you think it worth it."—Mrs. MARY E. HALL, R. R. 5, Lindsay, Ontario.

A Sickly Child

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WHITACRE, 621 W. Madison Avenue, Mahoningtown, Pa.

Every girl wants to be healthy and strong, and every mother wants her daughter to do well in school and to enjoy herself at all times.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for young girls just entering womanhood. Mothers may depend upon it. Remember it is prepared from roots and herbs, contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they will work in a healthy and normal manner.

For nearly fifty years it has been used by women of all ages, and these women know its great value.

Let it help your daughter and yourself. C

CHAPTER XX.

An Oasis in the Desert

"Have you been about the world much, then?"

A goodish bit. I made a bad marriage with a man who, I found, had already a wife living. I had to leave Scotland—you know what Scotch pride is! I've made a good living here and I'm saving money fast. Some day, I'll go back to bonnie Scotland, buy a little house at Hunter's Quay, and take my mother and Mamie down there for the rest of their lives."

Rankine, oddly moved by this simple recital, slightly raised his hat.

Jean Dempster's color rose.

"I'm sure I don't know why I should tell you all this about myself the very first moment we met!" she said, with a little catch in her voice, "but when Isaw you coming into the dining room to-night, I got a sort of fright. Something told me you were Scotch, and when I heard you speak, I felt my heart warmed. But I don't suppose you'll stop very long at Isaacstein's."

"I wonder!" said Rankine, as they turned into the white glare of Broadway. "Anyhow, New York isn't the howling wilderness it was a couple of hours ago!"

CHAPTER XXI.

The Pitiless Streets

Rankine now entered upon a very singular part of his career, for which his birth, upbringing, and former experience had in no way prepared him.

He had to face the world with such marketable accomplishments as he possessed, and discover what they were likely to bring him in the way of fame or fortune.

Many of lineage as high, of character as irreproachable, and of disposition as willing, have been forced by circumstances into that somewhat galling position, and have passed through all its searching grades of experience.

Rankilne's assets, roughly speaking, were a decidedly pleasing, even striking appearance, a good education, knowledge of horseflesh and out-of-door life in the country where he had been born. But of business he was singularly ignorant, and his three years in Bombay had actually taught him little, for the powers in authority there had quickil enough gauged his capacities, and had seldom made calls upon them. He was used as an ornament to the establishment, so to speak, and regarded as the man who was always willing to take the casual or unexpected visitor out to lunch, to do him well, and keep him in good humor until he happened to be required in the interests of business.

But in New York City Rankine found himself up against a very different proposition. When he descended to breakfast, considerably after the scheduled time for that scrappy and always hasty meal eaten together by the inmates before they scattered to their widely varied occupations, he found the table cleared, although the cloth still adorned it, and the room retained the mingled odors of coffee, bacon and fried potatoes.

No one was about, but when after some brief colloquay with himself, he rang a bell, black Sambo appeared, grinnig cheerfully.

"Breakfus is orf, sah; and de Missus gone down town."

"Oh, very well," answered Rankine reddening at the snub, and half disposed to raise a racket on the spot; but reflecting that he had probably struck one of the unalterable rules in a system of which he had no previous knowledge to guide him, he decided to go forth in search of his morning meal.

It was twenty minutes past nine when he left the house, and, though he was unaware of it, New York had been awake and at work for hours, and already broken the back of its working day.

The early summer sunshine lay, warm and golden, on the busy streets,, and the air of cheerful activity pervading both the atmosphere and the people, was not without its effect on Rankine.

Not liking the look of any cafes or restaurants he encountered in the immediate vicinity, though every corner block simply yawned an invitation, he made his way to Broadway, and entering a somewhat pretentious place with much colored glass tnd ornamentation about the outside, he ordered a substantial breakfast, reflecting that, owing to the lateness of the hour, it could serve as luncheon as well, and thus effect an economy.

While he waited for the meal in a practically deserted saloon, where could not escape from visions of himself in the morrored panels of the walls, he pullel out his pocket book and began to sort out the addresses. They were now practically reduced to four. The first one staring him in the face was to Mr. Findlay Macalister, at a number in Broad way, the very street in which he was at the moment.

To Findlay Macalister, then, he decided to go first, for, being a fellow-countryman, doubtless he would be more inclined and, probably more competent to give advise to a tender foot how to set about earning a living in New York.

CHAPTER XXII.

In New York

Rankine was interested in New York Street scenes as one would be interested in some moving paonrama from one disassociated actual experience. He was thousands of miles fro mthe scenes of his former anxieties and poignant emotions, and had thus lost the immediate sense of realism which had, in Scotland, and later in London, strung all his faculties up to the highest tension. He was passing through strange psychological experiences which were not destined to end for some considerable time.

His breakfast was good, but expensive. It cost him two dollars and a half—rather over half a sovereign in English money—but he was not hard up yet, and all the day was in front of him. He had had enough of the Isaacstein establishment, however, and decided, as he allowed the black boy to brush him down in the restaurant vestibule, that one of the questions he would put to Findlay Macalister would be relative to some inexpensive but thoroughly good hotel where he could live and keep his self-respect.

He sauntered down a little in the sunshine to finish the cigarette without which no smoking man's meal is complete, and made a very striking figure on the crowded sidewalks of Broadway, being the very picture of a travelling Britisher at his ease. It was eleven o'clock precisely when, throwing away the end of his cigarette, he entered the building wrhere his address-book had informed him he would find Findlay Macalister. It was the name he had got from David Sillars in the Glasgow train, and somehow it seemed more real and tangible than the rest, and therefore, being a purely personal introduction, was probably more likely to bear fruit.

It was one of the older blocks on Broadway, and, though it boasted sixteen stories, fell far short of the modern sky-scrapers.

The elevator man ran him up smoothly to the sixth floor, all of which pertained to the firm, the nature of whose business he did not know until he saw the title "Sugar Brokers" on the big copper plate, and then reflected that, of course, Sillars would be likely to be connected with that particular trade, owing to his plantations and his big interests in it both at home and abroad.

Arrived inside the first door and finding himself before a small counter with a green glass labelled "Inquiries," he was attended to without delay by a keen-faced, red-haired urchin who looked at him oddly when he inquired for Mr. Findlay Macalister.

"H ain't the boss here now," answered the lad in the most casual way.

"Indeed! Where has he gone may I inquire?"

A sort of flicker seemed to disturb the lad's eyelids, but he replied stolidly.

"Dunno, sir. 'E's quit—dead, I mean, afore I came here."

Rankine looked at once shocked and non-plussed, and thought it was a strange thing David Sillars should not have been aware of the fact. Imagining some secret malice in the boy's expression, he assumed a some what more peremptory air, which was not without its effect upon the youth.

"I want to see the head of the firm, then, if you please, and be quick about it!"

"Appointment, sir?" asked the boy, reeling off the formula common to his kind.

"No."

He shook his head.

"My boss don't see anybody, not without appointment."

"Oh, nonsense. Take him this card and be quick about it!"

The boy took the bit of pasteboard with obvious unwillingness. He had been more than once in the early stages of his own career at Macalister's, threatened with dismissal for a similar breach of office rules.

But there was something authoritative and compelling about this man, and deciding that he could not possibly be one of the office-seeking, pestering crowd, against which it was part of his duty to guard his superiors, he nodded and disappeared, leaving Rankine standing outside the glass screen feeling a little cheap.

In about three minutes the youth reappeared outside the glass screen, and invited the stranger to accompany him along the corridor to a door marked "Privat.e' There was, of course, access to it from the laybrinth within, but unaccredited callers were only admitted from the outside.

Ushered across the threshold of the room, Rankine found himself face to face with a middle-aged man of rather full figure and face, with the American cast of features— the heavy, clean-shaven jaw, the alert eyes, the general air of efficiency and wideawakeness characteristic of American men in their business hours.

"Morning, sir. What can I do for you?" he said brusquely, at the same time pointing to a chair.

"Unremunerative Branches—One of the most oppressive burdens which have been borne by the railway has been the operation or unremunerative branches, which appear to have been built without any reliable estimates as to their traffic possibilities or, if estimated, a gross error was made in assuming that they would produce sufficient revenue to make them self-sustaining. Such branches do, in a certain measure, provide business for the main line, but unfortunately the rates have been so low that the additional business produced has been handled at a loss. In general, it is a fact that the more business the railway handled the greater the loss involved; the years in which the earnings were highest were those in which the largest deficits resulted. The actual operating losses for the various branches is hard to determine, as no division of earnings or expenses has been made in the accounts, but a close estimate has been made from which it appears that the following annual losses may be expected on the four main branches: Trepassey—$113,000; Bonavista—$74,000; Bay de Verde, $54,000; Heart's Content—$37,000. Total —$287,000.

"Too Low Freight Rates—The railway has been operating under too low freight rates since its inception. The basis of freight rates was adopted from a comparison with Canadian rates in force in 1898; but even the low rates authorized by the 1898 contract were not actually made effective until 1918. From 1898 to 1918 a basis of rates averaging 11 per cent lower than the Canadian rate was in effect. The maximum rates which became effective in 1918, while producing an increased revenue, did not bring in anything like sufficient to meet the icreased operating costs. Between 1915 and 1921 the total expenses per train mile increased 227 per cent. and the transportation cost per train mile only increased 10 per cent. Canadian railways have from time to time been granted increase of rates, and while the present local mileage rates on the Canadian National railways are 48 per cent higher than those on the Newfoundland Railway, the C. N. Railways are not earning sufficient to pay operating costs.

"Insufficient Mail Subsidies—The Newfoundland Railway was carrying a mail for approximately $42,000 a year from 1904 to 1912, which was increased from time to time until in 1917 it was raised to $61,251.49, at which figure it has remained. In 1919 the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada granted an increase in the mail compensation to Canadian railways, averaging 116 per cent. The mail subsidy received by the Newfoundland Railway is too low and it should be greatly increased by the government.

"Deferred Maintenance—Expenditures for maintenance of road and structures averaged $184 a mile for 1904, and were maintained at a low level until 1918, when they amounted to $294 a mile. The result was that the railroad reached a condition where large expenditures were necessary to enable trains to continue operating. The expenditures since which ran from $415 a mile in 1919 to $575 a mile in 1920, and to $900 in 1921, have resulted in a great improvement in the physical condition of the property, but this high expenditure must be continued if the ground gained is not to be lost. The question of rail renewal has also to be faced. Some of the rails have been over twenty years in service, and as no charge has been made against operating expenses for deterioration of rails, new money must be provided for their renewal.

"Rolling Stock—Expenditures for locomotives and cars averaged 95 per cent. a mile of line in 1904 and were kept at a very low rate until 1918 when they were $267 a mile. Owing to the additional traffic diverted to the railway owing to the withdrawal of ships during the war, the locomotives and cars were worn out in service with the result that large additional expenditures had to be made, amounting to $334 a mile in 1919; to $530 in 1920 and to $690 in 1921. The condition of rolling stock is now nearly up to the standard of other lines, and expenditures on this account is likely to decrease rather than to increase.

"Unremunerative Agencies—A large number of agencies are maintained at points where the amount of business does not warrant the expenditure. At 44 agencies regarding which figures are given, there are stated to have been no receipts. 10 are not doing sufficient business to pay expenses; 10 are making little more than expenses, and the remainder are doing better.

"Cost of Labor and Material—The 1921 wage bill increased by 284 per cent. and the material bills by 283 per cent over 1915, and while the peak apparently has been reached, the downward trend has not yet afforded much relief.

Expenditures Required—Mr. Morgan points out that relief of the present condition can only be brought about by increasing the revenue and by reducing expenditures. The government should authorize an increase in freight rates to a maximum at least as high as now authorized in Canada, allowing the management to meet traffic requirements, , competition, etc., within the maximum, by reducing unnecessary steamship competition, thus diverting to the railway such traffic as naturally belongs to it, and by giving an increased compensation for carrying mails The railway management should inaugurate a more active and persistent campaign of traffic solicitation; should promote tourist traffic and the provision of accommodation therefor and should secure the co-operation of business men to aid in bringing the traffic to the railway.

Traffic should be restricted on the transinsular line during January and February and March and the traffic to and from Canada should be diverted to St. John's or to the partially completed new terminus at Argentia; only local trains should be operated between certain points, and a weekly mixed train between Millertown Junction and Port aux Basques each way; closing the Trepassey, Bay de Verde and Bonavista Branches, Locomotive and train mileage should be kept down to the lowest maximum; cars should be loaded fully and no freight train should run without full tonnage; trains should be made up on a tonnage basis instead of a car basis; locomotives should be helped to ascertain hauling capacity, and if necessary two locomotives should be used on a train, this being the only method of securing fair tonnage per train apart from securing full car load and maximum train load; every train mile saved means a saving of approximately $1.25 a mile for actual train operations. Coal, oil and other costs should be investigated, and their consumption placed on a basis of 100 mile runs. the necessary inspectors and instructions and coal-loading appliances should be provided so that savings may be made; agency stations where traffic is insufficient to justify keeping agents or operators should be closed; train crews should be reduced as traffic declines; monthly estimates of pay rolls be required and they should not be exceeded; and monthly reports for the guidance of the management should be made according to modern practice."

Still Applicable

The above is Mr. Morgan's review of the railway situation a year ago, and it has not altered appreciably since. His proposals to remedy the conditions which existed I shall deal with in due course. In the meantime I shall refer to the effect which the war had not alone on our railway situation, but on that of our neighbor Canada. With the coming of the war in 1914 conditions became very complicated in regard to railroad operations both here and abroad, In the United States the government ultimately took over the railways and operated them as a governmentd department. In Canada somewhat similar measures had to be taken. In this country we did not go far, but we had to permit the Reids to increase their rates for passenger and freight traffic and to overlook many inconveniences in conectio with the service in the interest of the greater obligation all had in view, namely the winning of the war.

It was not till after hostilities had ended that it became known that the Reids, in addition to exracting from the government every possible concession in these directions during the war, were also piling up huge bills for alleged extra services in the way of running additional trains and otherwise, which to our amazement, amounted to millions of dollars. This was only one bill, and it might be described as a bill of shadowy claims. They also furnished us with another bill for over $6,000,000 for more direct and specific claims, including their steamers, machine shops, locomotives and other equipment and everything which they claimed they had provided for the railway and allied services for the past twenty years. These claims are as follows:

Reid Proposition, 1919

In April, 1919 during the Premiership of Sir William Lloyd, the Reid Company made certain proposals, which were published in full in the newspapers of June 4 of that year. They wanted

(1) An advance of a million dollars on account of rolling stock and accommodation supplied to the date of the letter, April 22, 1919, "promising to pay interest on that sum until payment thereof to us is due under the contracts, and to replace any rolling-stock which may be worn out or destroyed in the interval."

(2) An advance of a million and a half dollars "to thoroughly equop the railway for giving the public efficient service; this sum to be expended subject to the supervision of the Government Engineer."

(3) An increase in the mail subsidy for the railroad by $200,000 a year to meet the interested cost of coal other supplies, and labor in operating the railway.

On May 5, they modified this proposal somewhat and suggested that the Government guarantee the principal and interest of bonds for $425,000 for equipment, observing that this was what the Canadian Government did for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railways; suggesting also that it would be preferable to have a bond issue of a million dollars backed by the Government's guarantee for these purposes. It should be noted, with regard to this proposition, that the Reids asked for two and a half million dollars to provide equipment for the railroad, but they were to continue in the control of the Railway with the opportunity of piling up further claims against the Government. It was in a large measure because of dissatisfaction due to this proposal of the Reids and to their attempts to secure other concessions that the crisis resulted which overthrew Sir William Lloyd's ministry, and the succession of Sir Michael Cashin, with the retirement of Mr. Coaker and his friends from that Party into Opposition. In the summer of 1919 the Reids secured from the Cashin Government a payment of $317,000 in cash in lieu of lands under the 1919 contract for branch lines; based on certain proposals of the Reids for carrying on the railway during the following winter. The balance of their claim under this head was $46,000, but this is cancelled under the present agreement. Of that amount they undertook to set apart $100,000 to purchase coal for operating the railroad that winter but instead of using it for that purpose they applied it to reduce their over-draft at the Bank of Montreal and left the railroad without coal, as a result of which the whole system had to be shut down for the winter of 1919-20 to the great inconvenience and serious loss of the public generally.

Squires Government.

In the fall of 1919, as everybody knows the party of which I have the honor to be leader was successful in the general election and we took over control of affairs. A few months later we were met with proposals by the Reid Company of a somewhat similar character. The negotiations respecting this took place in July and August, 1920. We declined absolutely to furnish the Reids with any money for any purpose in connection with the raidroad over which they would have sole responsibility. Finally as a result of protracted negotiations an agreement was reached which was embodied in a Minute of Council dated 5th August, 1920 Under this a commission was created to operate the railway for the financial year from July 1st, 1920, to June 30th, 1921. That Agreement was as follows:—

Copy of Minute, Executive Council

(Dated 5 August, 1920.)

Whereas the Reid Newfoundland Company have intimated to the Government that they are unable to continue the operation of the Reid Railway system throughout the country:

And whereas it is in the public interests that the Realway system should be operated and that railroad facilitaies be improved:

The Deputy Colonial Secretary is authorized to forward to the Reid Newfoundland Company the following letter which has been drafted by His Majesty's Attorney General, the Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C., and approved by the Executive Council:—

August 5th, 1920.

Sirs:—

Following upon the negotiations recently held between your Company and a sub-Committee "of the Executive Council, I have the hon or to submit to you for your confirmation the "following proposals of the Government for the operation of the railroad system of the "Colony:—

1. The railroad system shall be operated by a Commission to consist of six persons, three to be apointed by the Governor-in-Council and three by the Reid-Newfoundland Company.
2. To improve the present condition of the track the Government will provide such splice bars or fish plates as may be recommended by the Commission, but the said bars or plates shall be put on and affixed to the rails at the expense of the Reid Newfoundland Company.
3. For the purpose of increasing and improving the rolling stock and equipment of the system the Commission will provide the following:

6 Engines,
50 Flat Cars,
50 Box Cars.

A freight terminal at St. John's, West,

A freight terminal at Port aux Basques.

4. The cost of the last mentioned rolling stock and shipment will be met by the Government, but the amount thereof will be charged to the Reid Newfoundland Company with interest at 6% per annum from date of payment and the cost of raising the money.
5. While nothing herein shall be construed as any admission by the Government of any claim on the part of the Reid Newfoundland Company against the Government, now or hereafter, the amount so charged against the Reid Newfoundland Company as mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof, will be set off against any claims which the Company may legally have against the Government for improvements or otherwise under existing contracts.
6. The Government will be responsible for any loss sustained by the Commission on the operation of the railroad system exceeding the sum of $100,000, the Reid Newfoundland Company being responsible for any loss up to but not exceeding that amount.
7. This arangement refers to and deals with the railway system of the Company only, and not to be the operation of the steamers (except those plying direct between Newfoundland and Canada) or any other branch of the undertaking of the Company.
8. Any member of the Commission to have full access to the right to inspect and take extracts from all books, papers, documents, etc., of the Company, relating to the past or present operation of the railway, and all amounts charged or to be charged, against railway operating expenses and to admit the books of this Company in so far as any debt or credit relates to the operation of the railway system as defined in paragraph 7 hereof.
9. This arrangement will continue in effect for one year from the first day of July 1920, and it must be clearly understood that this arrangement, or any other arrangement arraved at the present time and anything done under any such arrangement shall be absolutely without prejudice to the rights and liabilities of either party under existing contracts and nothing done hereunder shall in any way effect the present legal position of the Company or the Government under any such contracts.
11. Should the rolling stock and equipment provided for in paragraph 3 hereof not be completed at the expiration of the twelve months herein mentioned, the Commission herein provided shall continue in existence for the purpose of supervising the provision and erection of such rolling stock and equipment unless otherwise agreed.
11. In the event of the President and or Vice President of the Reid Newfoundland Company acting upon the Commission. he or they shall act without salary as shall any number of the Executive Council appointed as a Commissioner.

"I have to ask you to be good enough to confirm these proposals.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) ARTHUR MEWS,
Deputy Colonial Secretary.

Messrs. Reid Nfld. Co.,
City.

The Hon. W. F. Coaker, Minister of Marine and Fisheries is appointed as the representative of the Executive Administration on the said Railroad Commiss'on, Mr. T. A. Hall, Government Engineer, to be the second Government representative on the said Commission.

Resulted In Deficit.

The operating of the railway under the Commission in 1920-21 resulted in a deficit of about $1,650,000 a some what larger sum than the previous year, due to large expenditures for the improvement of the roadbed and of the railroad generally. This additional expenditure was essential for the protection of the public as explained in R. C. Morgan's report already quoted. In addition we furnished the Commission with 1½ million dollars to provide additional rolling stock and equipment, all of which is our property. Even with this additional rolling stock there is not sufficient to handle present traffic requirements and the Armstrongs have ordered on their own account and for their own purposes thirty flat cars and twenty-five dump cars.

Annual Mt. Carmel Mass

As announced at all the Catholic Churches on Sunday, the annual Requiem Mass will be celebrated on next Sunday at 10.30 a.m. in the Mortuary Chapel at Mount Carmel Cemetery by the Rev. Joseph Pippy, P.P., of St. Joseph's. The majority of the family plots have been decorated, and in addition the whole cemetery has been thoroughly gone over. The neval and military plot is completed and forms a noble resting place for our gallant dead.

Best Possible Cure Sensible Marketing Methods Necessary This Year

Fishermen Should Be Protected

The desirability of an improved cure for fish and better marketing methods has always obtained. With the likelihood of a short catch this year, the necessity for an extra good cure by the fishermen cannot be too strongly emphasized.

Every precaution should be taken and every effort made to produce the very best article this year in order to get the maximum returns from what may be a voyage far below the average.

In other words, the fishermen must try, to some extent, to make up in quality what may be short in quantity.

The shortage in the catch, resulting from a possible poor fishery and from the smaller number of fishermen prosecuting the fishery, will tend to strengthen prices, which may be secured from abroad provided that this year's catch can be marketed under certain conditions.

These conditions, as the Advocate has often indicated, depend on the good sense and business-like conduct of fish exporters in their marketing of our staple product, as well as upon the general quality of the article they can offer to the foreign purchasers.

If the exporters will refuse this year to market the people's fish in some sort of co-operative fashion, the result cannot but have a most detrimental effect upon the returns made to Newfoundland by the foreign dealers and consequently upon the prices that the fishermen will be paid for their season's catch by the merchants.

If last year's procedure of individual competition among exporters be continued, if the fishermen's fish be rushed on consignment into quickly congested markets to face the further competition of other countries, if we are to be treated with the spectacle of eight or nine Labrador steamer cargoes chasing each other, unsold, across the ocean for market dumping purposes, then we cannot reasonably expect maximum local prices, though the cure of fish is improved by the fishermen.

We do not mean to say that it does not matter about the cure of fish even if the exporters, by their hitherto admittedly unsound business methods of marketing, are this year again determined to butcher the fishery business.

Even, under the present system, it is most strongly advisable to make the best of a bad job, by improving the cure to the utmost.

The good cure of Norwegian and Icelandic fish makes an improved cure of Newfoundland fish necessary, however unsound and suicidal Newfoundland marketing methods will continue to be.

If, however, our fishermen were not victimized by the lack of business unity and co-operative action, there would be such price results obtaining from a well-cured catch, as to offset any considerable shortage in the general voyage.

Therefore, all concerned, both fishermen and merchants, must see the necessity to do their utmost respecting this year's catch.

It is felt the fishermen will respond to the necessity of improving the cure, where an improvement is possible, and, in their interests, we hope that the merchants will not resign themselves to the continuance of a marketing system that will penalise the producers, at a time when every dollar is needed to keep the wolf from the door.

A Blow to U.M.W. Prestige

The action of the Cape Breton miners in calling a strike as a protest against the presence of Provincial police and troops in that district constitutes a serious blow to the prestige of the continent-wide organization to which these miners belong. As was pointed out by International President Lewis in his unequivocal message to District President Livingstone of Nova Scotia, the strike of the Cape Breton miners, occasioned as it was by something altogether outside of the mining industry, was a violation of the existing agreement between the District twenty-six (Nova Scotia) and the coal company as well as a violation of the principles and policies of the United Mine Workers. The unfortunate situation that has been created by the ill-advised walk-out of the Cape Breton coal workers, the tremendous and unnecessary expense that it must have entailed and the "wanton destruction of property" that has undoubtedly resulted all speak eloquently of the danger consequent on placing such power as the backing of an organization like the U. M. W. constitutes in the hands of persons who cannot be counted on to weigh well the responsibilities that rest with them.

So far as the organization itself is concerned, nothing could be more fortunate than the uncompromising attitude adopted by President Lewis towards the action of the officials of the Nova Scotia district to whom the precipitation of the unjustifiable miners' strike is directly attributable. His message to President Livingstone, the full text of which was given in yesterday's papers, must be accepted as a repudiation by the United Mine Workers of America as an international labor organization of the step taken by the Sydney officers, and it is to be hoped that the latter will lose no time in complying with his directions to take immediate steps to have the men return to work.

Some Facts re Road Commission's Activities

By the Secretary

July 10th, 1923.

Dear Mr. Editor:

I have been informed that in a recent issue of the "Bay Roberts Guardian," the Editor of that paper in objecting to the present Motor Tax, stated that the Act "Respecting the Improvement and Maintenance of certain Public Roads" passed in 1920, was put through at the instigation of a few people in St. John's, and apparently, in the Editor's opinion, the "Act" should not be binding on Motorists in the Outports.

Now, this is not a fair statement for the Editor of the Bay Roberts Guardian to make, and certainly does not represent the spirit which animated those who have endeavoured during recent years to bring about the movement for better roads. I want to say right here, and I would like for our good friends on the North side of Conception Bay to believe it, that the good road movement now being executed by the Newfoundland Road Commission is not a class, sectional, or party matter.

For the information of anyone who has not perused the Act, I might say that its scope embraces every main road on the Peninsula of Avalon, and I feel sure that the Editor of the Guardian is too broad minded and just to expect that with the limited means at the disposal of the Road Commission that all the important roads in that section could be rebuilt in the course of two or three years.

The main objective of the Road Commission has been to put a first class road from St. John's to Carbonear, which is about 67 miles. To date we have completed 30 miles of that 67, and I leave it to the judgment of any person using the road from St. John's to Holyrood to judge whether the work done, does or does not merit the support of all motorists, as well as the driver of all other class of vehicles.

I would also point out for the special information of people residing on the North side of Conception Bay, particularly those who own motor cars, that the attention and work of the Commission have been divided between the different roads radiating from St John's, namely Portugal Cove Road, Pouch Cove Road, the road to the Goulds and Ferryland, as well as the Topsail road.

If the Commission could have concentrated upon the one main highway around Conception Bay we would today have a boulevard built to Carbonear.

Now, as to the objection of Conception Bay Motorists to paying their tax. While personally I am not favourable to excessive taxation of any kind if avoidable, yet, I do not thing that the motorists of Conception Bay have any cause to complain of the treatment accorded them by the Road Commission since its inception. In the summer of 1921, the amount received as Motor Taxes from Conception Bay motorists was $75.00. The Commission that year spent $200.00 on the North side of the Bay. In 1922 the entire taxes paid by Motorists on the North side of the Bay amounted to about $800.00; the Road Commission expended about $2500.00 there. To date this year there has been approximately $400.00 paid by motorists north of Hr. Main, and this amount, I understand, is paid under protest, but the Commission has already expended $2000.00 in that section.

If the Motorists in the districts of Carbonear, Harbour Grace and Port de Grave want roads fit to drive a car on, they must in all fairness be prepared to bear their proportional part of the burden and if I judge the spirit of those gentlemen correctly, they will not expect the motorists of St. John's to pay taxes to build a decent highway around Conception Bay for them to drive their cars over without contributing in a direct way to the undertaking.

I have no hesitation in saying that if a person objects to what has been accomplished by the Road Commission, he either has no conception of the true situation, or is not animated by a desire to improve our present deplorable road system.

This is a matter in which we need co-operation. There must be an awakening. We have been asleep regarding this highly important phase of public activity. As a matter of fact so little interest has been taken up to the present time that one frequently hears of the work being accomplished by the "Motor Association," when in realiaty the Motor Club, or Association, has no direct connection with Road building and has absolutely no authority under the Act.

Our Newfoundland Road Comsion is similar to the Public Highway Commission throughout every Province in the Dominion of Canada, as well as in the United States.

Here, as in Nova Scotia, or other places, the Road Commission, or

Masonic Fraternity Hold Impressive and Memorable Ceremony

Last night's installation ceremony was the first time that Masonic Grand Lodge officers had officiated on such an occasion in the Dominions, a distinction in itself, but Newfoundland was particularly honored in that at the head of the delegation of distinguished Craftsmen who had come especially to instal the new District Grand Master, was the Most Worshipful Grand Pro. Grand Master, Baron Ampthill. His presence gave to the occasion a dignity and significance that was deeply impressive. The other Grand Lodge officers who graced the proceedings with their presence were Sir Thomas Ferguson, Grand Treasurer; Lt.-Col. H. Hamilton Wedderburn, Past Grand Director of Ceremonies; and Mr. A. E. Carlyle, Past Assistant Director of Ceremonies. Other distinguished brethren present included Mr. J. H. Winfield, Grand Master of Nova Scotia, and Mr. J. C. Jones, Grand Secretary; Hon. Tasker Cook District Grand Master Designate of the Scottish Constitution, and the officers and members of the District Grand Lodge S.C.

The ceremony took place in the Methodist College Hall, which had been specially fitted up and attractively decorated for the occasion. Altogether four hundred brethren attended; included in the number being representatives of all the Primary lodges in the Island.

The Pro. Grand Master and other officers arrived at the Hall at 8.30 and were received by a military guard of honor composed of members of the Craft who had served during the great war. To them Lord Ampthill spoke briefly, but in words that will ever linger as a pleasant memory.

The District Grand Lodge opened at 8.30, District Grand Secretary Edgar presiding. The distinguished visitors were received in due form, and following the entry of the Pro. Grand Master, who was greeted with an outburst of applause, the imposing and impressive installation ceremony was conducted, and Wor. Bro. John Robert Bennett was raised to the dignity of District Grand Master of Newfoundland under the English Constitution. Wor. Bro. W. A. Ellis was then installed as Deputy District Grand Master, after which at the request of the District Grand Master, the following officers of the District Grand Lodge were honored by being installed in their respective offices by the Most Worshipful Grand Master.

Wor. Bro. Hon. S.D. Blandford.

Wor. Bro. G. R. Williams.

District Grand Chaplain—Wor. Bro Canon Bolt, M.A.

District Grand Treasurer—Wor. Bro. W. N. Gray.

District Grand Registrar—Wor. Bro. Hon. Sir R. A. Squires, K. C., K.C.M.G.

District Grand Secretary—Wor. Bro. W. J. Edgar, P.A.G.D.C.

District Grand Senior Deacon—Wor. Bro. J. H. Thomas.

District Grand Junior Deacon—Wor. Bro. W. Barker, P.D.G.W.

District Grand Sword Bearer—Wor. Bro. J. Nunns, M.C.

District Grand Organist—Wor. Bro R. W. Spry.

District Grand Stewards—Wor. Bros. Dr. H. Rendell, R. F. Goodridge, W. Campbell, A. G. Osmond, T. E. Wells, J. P., S. C. Hussey.

District Grand Tyler—Bro. George Morris.

This ceremony having been concluded, the Pro. Grand Master extended his congratulations to the Rt. Wor. Bro. John R. Bennett, and took occasion to deliver an eloquent and inspiring address to the brethren. He also read the following message which had been entrusted to him by the Most Worshipful Grand Master, His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught to Convey to the brethren under his jurisdiction:

"I ask you to give my fraternal greetings and hearty good wishes to all Brethren under my jurisdiction whom you may meet in Canada and Newfoundland, and also to all Brethren of Canadian Grand Lodges who receive you.

I knew many of them when I was in Canada and I retain a very pleasant memory of their acquaintance.

Tell them all that I hope they are getting on as well as we are in England."

Congratulations were also extended to the new District Grand Master by the Grand Master of Nova Scotia and the District Grand Master Designate of the Scottish Constitution.

The District Grand Lodge was then closed, after which the brethren joined in singing the hymn "O God our help in ages past," which was followed by the National Anthem. A flashlight photo was taken by Messrs W. and J. C. Parsons. Thus concluded a memorable event in the annals of Freemasonry in this country.

The Banquet

Following the Installation ceremony the members of the District Grand Lodge entertained the distinguished visitors and other guests at a banquet in the Temple. The District Grand Master presided and a most enjoyable hour or two was spent around the festive board.

The following toast list was duly honored:

The King and the Craft—Prop. J. R. Bennett, D.G.M.; resp. The National Anthem.

The M.W. the Grand Master, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G.—Prop. J. R. Bennett, D.G.M.; resp. The National Anthem.

OBITUARY

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—Will you please permit me space in your valuable paper to record the death of my dear brother, Nelson Green, who died May 16th, aged 26, son of Mrs. and Mr. William Green, beloved husband of Annie Green. He has been ailing this two years, but he never gave up before last fall. He bore his sickness patiently, and was never heard to murmur or complain; he left it all in the hands of God, knowing God's will must be done. He leaves to mourn his sad loss a wife, two little children, a boy and a girl, mother, 5 sisters, one brother and many relatives and friends. He was laid to rest in C. of E. cemetery by our Minister, Rev. T. Hiscock. Here are the hymns that were sung to him. He chose them himself: 230, 446, 279, 535.

Dearest Nelson thou hast left us,
Left us for that land so blest,
Back to earth we would not call thee,
For we know thou art at rest.

We all loved you well, dear brother,
Oh, but Jesus loves you best,
And we know our dearest loved one
Have obtained a glorious rest.

Though our hearts are filled with mourning,
Mercy still is on the throne,
With thy smiles of love returning
We can sing "Thy will be done."

You are gone my darling brother,
But you will not be forgotten.
In heaven we shall meet you,
In that place so fair and bright.

No more sleepless nights, dear brother,
No more weary hours of pain,
You are resting now up yonder,
And our loss is but your gain.

For we know that you are happy,
Up among the angels' band,
And your voice with praise is singing,
Hallelujah to the Lamb.

SUSIE GREEN.

June 26, 1923.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—Please grant me space in the columns of your paper to record the death of Mrs. Joseph Fry, from Southern Bay, who passed peacefully away to the Great Beyond, June 16th, where there will be no more pain or sorrow.

She was 28 years old and was a great sufferer for the past year. She was never known to murmur or complain, but bore her sickness patiently. Her funeral was largely attended and wreaths encircled her casket. She leaves to mourn a sorrowing husband, three children, her father, one brother and four sisters. She was laid to rest in the Methodist Cemetery on June 18th by Mr. George Crewe (lay reader). To the sorrowing ones we tender our heartfelt sympathy.

Jesus the very thought of Thee,
With sweetness fills my breast,
But sweeter far Thy face to see,
And in Thy presence rest.

ENQUIRING INTO BOAT COLLISION

Mishap to Mapledawn and Brookdale Before Wreck Commissioner.

(Montreal Star)

Captain L. A. Demers, Dominion Wreck Commissioner, inquired yesterday into the collision on the afternoon of June 1, 1922, between the Mapledawn, of the Canada Steamships Lines, and the barge Brookdale, of the Century Coal Company, a subsidiary of the steamship company, Captain J. O. Grey and aCptain D. M. Dickson acted as nautical assessors.

Evidence by crews and onlookers was to the effect that the Newfoundland freighter had started her run to the Gulf when, off the King Edward pier, she met the Brookdale, in tow of the Sincennes-McNaughton tugs John Pratt and Matilda. The channel was crowded at the time, and in endeavouring to avoid the Harbor Commissioners' tug Aberdeen, which was towing a loaded scow from the Alexandra pier extension, the Mapledawn went too far to the southward. In the belief that the Brookdale was being towed down stream instead of up, the Mapledawn continued her course and speed and struck the barge in the stern. The latter went down almost immediately in thirty feet of water and was a total loss, estimated at $20,000.

A. R. Holden, K.C., appeared for the Mapledawn and Brookdale, and F. St. Germain for the Sincennes-McNaughton Line.

A large number of witnesses was heard as to the somewhat confusing circumstances of the accident, including Captain E. A. Stauffer and pilot, Damien Paquet, of the Mapledawn, with the boatswain, the wheelsman, one sailor, and the chief engineer of the same vessel.

For the barge Brookdale the chief witnesses were th captain, who said that last year he had been engineer on the Brookdale, but was now captain, and the present engineer, while the captains of the two tugs were also called. The captain and a sailor of the harbor tugboat Kennedy, which was moored alongside the Alexandra pier at the time of the collision, were also called, as onlookers.

After hearing a great deal of evidence, Captain Demers adjourned the hearing until to-morrow, pending the arrival of Chief Officer Raymond, of the Mapledawn, whose evidence was needed to complete the case.

Another session of the Wreck Commissioner's Court will be held here on Monday by Captain Demers, to hear the case of the Kamouraska, of the Dominion Coal Company vs. the Fanad Head, of the Head Line, which came into collision off Father Point Friday morning.

Brightening Drab Lives

London Telegraph: A vast body of women—and men, for that matter—are just waiting to be caught and labelled by those who will go and seek them out in their homes and take interest in their interests and brighten the monotony of their drab lives. To leave such a field to the Socialist women preachers is folly; but unless Conservative women emulate their example the bulk of these electors will assuredly be carrid off into the enemy's camp. Yet the natural instincts of women, unless all the philosophers and observers are wrong, are towards Conservatism, as long as they have anything which they feel is worth conserving, and the idea of violent change is abhorrent to them, cepecially if the upshot of such change is doubtful.

GOVERNOR'S DEVOTION TO DEAD DOG DIVIDES STATE AGAINST ITSELF

Governor Baxter of Maine, who started a storm of protest when he ordered state flag lowered to half mast during funeral of his dog Garry.

AUGUSTA, Me., June 21.—The august state of Maine is divided against itself over the matter of a dog.

It all started with Garry's illness.

Garry, an Irish setter, was the inseparable companion of Governor Percival P. Baxter. The dog and his forbears had been in the Baxter family for 37 years. When his master moved over to Blaine Mansion, the State White House, Garry went along.

Each morning the dog would visit the Capitol, and drop in to see his many friends in every office. In the executive chamber there was a special couch provided for him, and on it Garry would lie for hours at a time waiting for the Governor to finish his work. Then together they would walk over the hills and through the woods.

Some of the citizens thought the governor was paying too much attention to the dog. It was undignified, they said. But then President Harding got Laddie Boy, and they modified their views.

Garry became a veritable shadow of the governor. He trailed his master wherever he went, even on railroad trips. He enjoyed a special permit to ride in the coaches of the Maine Central railroad.

The governor, a bachelor, is an ardent lover of all animals. He sponsored the first anti-vivisection law by a legislature in the United States. He recently made possible a new bird refuge.

"My dogs and myself constitute my family," he says.

Last September, Garry became ill. He was sent to a Boston hospital and given the best of care. But it wasn't enough. The dog died.

The governor was heartbroken.

He ordered the flag at the State House lowered to half mast.

Immediately came a storm of protest. The state commanders of the G. A. R., and the American Legion, and leaders of other patriotic groups called the governor's action "ill-advised" and "unfitting." This was answered by the governor's friends.

"I seek to offend the feelings of none," said the governor, "but yield to no one the right to act according to the dictate of my heart. My faithful dog, unlike many of my human friends, never betrayed or believed ill of me."

And so the flag was lowered while Garry was laid away beneath a mound of earth at the foot of a granite boulder on a little Island. A copper tablet is imbedded in the rock commemorating his memory. Soon he will be forgotten by all, but the governor.

Yet the controversy, growing out of the governor's order, rages on. Some say it may even mount into a political issue.

Quebec Exporters to Appeal to the Federal Government.

QUEBEC, June 30.—"If the embargo on the export of pulpwood from Canada is put into effect it means local dealers will be placed on the street," yesterday said a local exporter who is in touch with every phase of the question. The matter will be taken up with Hon. Ernest Lapointe by a delegation of local merchants, who will ask him to secure protection for the industry.

The Quebec Board of Trade has also taken the matter up, and a formal protest will be forwarded to Mr. Lapointe, in a resolution asking that in the event of the bill being enforced a delay of 18 months be allowed in order that dealers may fulfill their present contracts and get rid of supplies on hand. It is pointed out that the delay is indispensable if the export business of the province is not be ruined.

JOB'S STORES, Limited

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I was talking to a young man from a Northern Outport. He was an intelligent fellow of ideas, and it was a pleasure to chat things over with him. Having (I don't recall how) gotten the impression that he was a union man, I was astonished when he spoke disparagingly of the F.P.U. and its President.

Our chat developed into quiet a friendly argument, I attempting to answer his points and he forever raising new ones. There was nothing bitter in his talk, but when at length we parted to our respective affairs I had the conviction that he was a firm anti-union and anti-Coaker man.

** *** **

I did not, it happened, meet him again until some weeks later, and then I came upon him in company with several other men. They were engaged in a warm discussion—and the subject, of course, had to be the F.P.U. and Coaker! What was a great surprise to discover him defending and championing Coaker and the Union just as warmly as I had done with him!

When, in the midst of his argument he suddenly sighted my amused smile, he looked sheepish and in a minute had quit the subject. I had found him out!

** *** **

More than once have I had the same or some similar experience. Men who were staunch, true -blue unionists and supporters of Coaker pretended to be strong anti-Unionists and Coakerites.

I recall an experience I had a couple of years ago. It was on the South West Coast—in Point aux Gauls near Lamaline, to be exact, Point aux Gauls is as fine an F.P.U. place as there is in Newfoundland, with a splendid group of union men to keep the grand old union on top. Would you believe me, I didn't meet one man there who wasn't an F.P.U. man; altho, I was told—, there were two or three in the place.

** *** **

Well, in Point aux Gauls this time quite a few men in a room in the house of some staunch union man, and we got to talking about the old, old subject of Coaker and the F.P.U. In a short while the argument was being carried on by two of us—a young returned naval reservist whose name I don't seem to remember, and myself.

I was surprised and interested in the eloquence with which he argued against the F.P.U. Really, I was just beginning to feel uncomfortable (and wished that we had such a fine fellow on our side rather than against us) when I noticed broad smiles on the faces of the delighted men sitting around the room. He had been fooling me all the time!

** *** **

I learned that he was not alone one of the most enthusiastic F. P. U. men in Point aux Gauls, but that in all Newfoundland there is no finer union man than he!

** *** **

A commercial traveler told me in all seriousness, once, just after he had returned from a business trip thru the North, that he had talked with hundreds but hadn't met one man who believed in the F.P.U|| or Coaker. I smiled in his face.

That's why opponents of the union, when they are going around in union districts during election times, report that they are going to win easily and that the F.P.U. men haven't a chance. So it looks to them. So they believe. They don't understand our fishermen. As a rule Northern men don't go around talking about Coaker and the union; especially not to strangers.

But they vote for the union every time! And it's better to have men who don't talk but vote right, than it is to have men who talk a lot but vote wrong! And, anyway, when it comes to the point of voting, how can a Northern man fail to vote for the union? How can they turn down the organization that has fought so hard and long for their welfare, and how can they turn down the organization that has fought so hard and long for their welfare, and how can they turn down the man who has devoted his life and ability to the task of freeing them from economic bondage and merchantile domination.

Yes, my hearties, the F.P.U. will live when most of us are dead.

Public Highway Commission, is prepared to accept suggestions when constructive and practical, from any Association which has the interest of this laudable movement at heart, and as a matter of courtesy to the Motor Association of St. John's, the Government asked to have three of its members nominated as Members of the Road Commission. The Association recommended Messrs. Collishaw, Soper and Harvey. These gentlemen were appointed, and have justified their existence on the Commission, particularly Mr. Soper, who has rendered great service to the Commission during the last three years without a thought of remuneration for the very valuable services rendered.

An erroneous impression seems to prevail regarding the collection of motor taxes by the Municipal Office in St. John's. The facts are: The Council having the machinery and expert knowledge of the work, has been empowered to continue the collection of taxes since the Road Commission came into power, as hitherto, the City retaining $5,500.00 of the taxes on cars and cycles, and the balance is passed over to the Newfoundland Road Commission. In addition to the amount named above, the Council retain the taxes on all Trucks, which at the passing of the Act were considered as operating almost exclusively within the City limits. If the total taxes amount to $20,000.00 the Council would retain $5,500.00, the balance $14,500.00 would be spent by the Commission on Outport roads. Therefore, there is no cause for prejudice in this connection.

In conclusion, may I ask my good friend of the Bay Robers Guardian, as well as all motorists in Conception Bay, to lend us a hand and co-operate with us, and in doing this get the good will and active co-operation of the Members for the various districts.

Our aim is to eliminate politics and apply business to the improving of our road system. We want less controversy and more work, as the disputes and misunderstandings of today will be forgotten tomorrow, but the permanent work performed in the way of giving people a decent road to travel over, whether he drives a motor car, or sits on the bar of a springless dray cart, will remain and be appreciated perhaps long after we have passed from our present sphere of activity.

Sincerely yours,
R. HIBBS,
Secty. Nfld. Rd. Commission.

MOTORIST BEFORE COURT

A large number of city motor car owners were before court this morning charged with various breaches of the street traffic regulations and the motor car Act. The Court was occupied with the hearing of the cases throughout the whole forenoon.

PROGRESS ON POWER PLANT

The men engaged on the United Towns Electric Co's new power plant at Seal Cove are now working overtime putting things in shape for the building of dams and the running of the flume. Already the outside work on the new staff house is nearly completed but the construction of the power house has not yet been begun.

LOCAL ITEMS

The funeral of the late Hector Ross took place last evening and was largely attended. The railway officials and chiefs of departments were prominent among the mourners.

You will love to wash and the children will love to lather up in this delightful creamy-white Ivory soap. It is real honest value. No soap is purer or better than Ivory than why should you pay more. At all Union Stores.

When you once use Ivory toilet soap you will wonder why you did not get to using it before for Ivory gives perfect soap satisfaction at little cost. Ivory is the purest soap and gives best value. At all Union Stores now.

"GUARD" PASSED OVER TO C.L.B.

The race course was visited by a large concourse of people last evening to witness the formal passing over of the race-boat Guard by the C.C.C. Boat Club to the C.L.B. At 8.30 the representatives of the C.L.B. who were to row the Guard across took their places in the boat and were addressed by Mr P. F. Collins, President of the C.C.C. Boat Club, who passed over the boat and in doing so extended best wishes to the C.L.B. for a successful day. He hoped that next year both Clubs would be able to build new boats and thus ensure the success of future Regattas.

Mr. Ern Chafe, President of the C. L.B. Club, in accepting the boat, thanked the C.C.C. for their kindness and hoped that the same success which attended the Guard in previous years would be in evidence this Regatta Day. Addressing the assemblage on the river bank, Mr. Chafe spoke of the need for a new boat and appealed for a generous response to the appeal nnnn bz mbmnnnnnm hm hh h hhh which would be made during Regatta week Cheers were then given for both Clubs and the Guard was rowed over to the C.L.B. Boat house from where it is hoped her success will be as great as that of the Blue Peter whose place she is takig. As the boat was being rowed across the C.L.B. Band, which was present, struck up the "Banks of Newfoundland."

BRILLIANT NFLD. STUDENTS

In the Faculty of Arts Scholarship lists for McGill University recently published, Newfoundland is well represented. In third year arts the James Darling McGill Scholarship was won by Warwick F. Kelloway, formerly of Perry's Cove, Bay de Verde, and whose parents reside in this city, who did probation work for some years both in the outports and on Labrador, whose success as well as that of two other Newfoundland boys, C. F. Davis and H. H. A. Gillingham has been already noted in press despatches.

The Wesleyan Mirror, published by the Wesleyan Theological College, Montreal has the following to say of these brilliant students:

THE DOUGLAS PRIZE IN ORATORY

The Annual Oratorial contest was this year made an item of the Jubilee celebration. Special interest was given the event from the fact that Rev. A. I. Terryberry, B.A., donor of the prize, was present in person and acted as chairman for the occasion. In outlining the purpose for which the prize was intended the chairman highly eulogized Dr. Douglas and his splendid manly powers. After the contestants had spoken, Mr. Terryberry spoke very commendably of the several addresses, and the pleasure it had afforded him to be present on such an occasion.

The judges were Rev. C. D. Baldwin, President Montreal Conference, Rev. W. Howitt, and Rev. Dr. W. R. Young. There were in all seven contestants. Mr. W. F. Kelloway was the successful aspirant. In a few brief sentences he made claim for the World's Greatest Possession in the person of Christ. The subject matter was well arranged and the manner of delivery was deserving of more than passing notice.

Scholarships, prizes honors and pass lists in the third, second and first year final examination, Faculty of Arts, McGill University, were announced this morning.

In the third year the First MacKenzie Scholarship goes to Edward R. Alexander, and the second MacKenzie Scholarship to Charles Brownstein. The Reford prize for English and Philosophy goes to John P. Bethel, and the James Darling McCall Scholarship to Warkick F. Kelloway.

The same issue of the Mirror has the following re other successful Newfoundland students:

CHARLES F. DAVIS, B.A., B.D.

Charles F. Davis, born in Newfoundland, matriculated at the Methodist College, St. John's, taught school for three years and then became a Probationer in the Methodist Church. Coming to McGill, he joined the class of '19. In 1916 he proceeded overseas. Returning in 1919 he continued his course and graduated in Arts 1922. The past year has been spent in pursuing M.A. course at McGill and completing B.D. course at Wesleyan. The latter degree was conferred at recent Convocation. His college activities have been numerous: President of the Students' Society of the Wesleyan College, twice President of the Newfoundland Club of McGill, Treasurer of the Snow-shoe Club, etc.

In the Inter-collegiate snow-shoe meet at Dartmouth and McGill, "Charlie" won two places, gaining two medals for his work.

When the first National Conference of the Student Christian Movement met in Toronto in January of this year "Charlie" was elected chairman of the sessions and certainly did creditable work.

His hobby—"Work and still more work"—no man has got through more at McGill and Wesleyan than he has during his career.

"Charlie's" favorite expression,—"By Gum," morning, noon, and night, he swears "By Gum."

Summing up our estimation of "Charlie" we can say that he is all man, and one who will do credit both to McGill and Wesleyan.

HERBERT H. A. GILLINGHAM

A poet methinks a man should be
With a poet's mystic eyes;
For his cradle looked out over the sea,
The old gray sea that lies,
Where ice flows south in the Arctic drift
In a lighthouse high on a beetling cliff
He opened his wandering eyes.

Contrary to all expectations of this man's birth and youthful years he has turned out to be a philosopher and not a poet.

Homer himself was not born in a more romantic land than that in which our friend was born and reared, and yet he speaks like Socrates instead of the ancient bard. Gill was born at Musgrave Harbor, Newfoundland. He gleaned his early knowledge at the Methodist College, St. John's, Nfld. In 1914 he was accepted as a probationer for the ministry.

Herbert came to Montreal in 1918. This past year he has held the office of president of the Theological Society, with credit to himself and the Society.

A true friend, with a generous heart and uncanny understanding of men withal.

CHARLES R. BLOUNT, B.D.

Charles R. Blount was born in Derby, England. He was educated at the Newark High School. In his early life he served as an apprentice in engineering, but the church made a claim on his young life and at the age of 18 he became an accredited local preacher.

In 1903 he volunteered for Missionary work and in December sailed for Newfoundland. He spent a probationary term of three years at Lewisporte, and entered the Wesleyan College in 1906, pursuing the ordinary theological course. After graduation he returned to the Ancient Colony to resume circuit work.

His college course did not terminate on receiving his diploma in 1908 but has been continuing through the years and in 1922 he returned to Wesleyan to complete the B.D. course, which degree was conferred at the recent Convocation.

Charlie is a boy amongst the boys, and during the session has won the esteem of all.

Bail Granted Labour Leaders

HALIFAX, July 11—Dan Livingstone, District President, and J. B. McLachlan, District Secretary, of the United Mine Workers of America the twos trike leaders arrested at Glace Bay last week on a charge of spreading false information, were to-day released on bail by Mr. Justice Chisholm, following their production in the Supreme Court of habeas corpus proceedings. Bail was fixed in the sum of $2,000 each and two securities of $2,000 each. The men are to re-appear in the Supreme Court Tuesday morning of next week at 9.30 o'clock when the matter will be further argued before the full bench; the Attorney General giving an understanding that the men will not be arrested during this procedure. The preliminary hearing scheduled for to-morrow must be adjourned until a decision is reached by the full bench of the Supreme Court. Bail had been refused in the Magistrate's Court. C. S. Harrington, K.C., of Sydney, to-day joined the defence. Securities were Dr. A. C. Hawkins, and Charles McIver, both of Halifax.

SYDNEY, July 11—The high light of the proceeding of the Nova Scotia Coal Miners and Steel Workers strike during the twenty-four hours ending at midnight, was the announcement that the miners of Springhill had rejected the sympathetic strike movement by an overwhelming vote in favor of remaining at work, at a mass meeting held during the evening, and largely attended. A confirmative vote will be taken by ballot later in the week, but general opinion seemed to believe the vote of the meeting indicated the feeling of all the miners in that local. There was no doubt of the sympathy of the miners for their comrades but, at the same time, they declared their unwillingness to abandon what they had gained in the way of organization by going against the instructions of their international representative. Rupert Curtis of the Steel Workers had interviewed Premier Armstrong and the Government of Halifax to-day, and that as a result Premier Armstrong would cisit Sydney to-morrow night and give his services in effecting any mediation between steel workers and employers that might be possible. The Conference with the strikers' representative was said to have been wholly harmonious and encouraging. In the strike theatre no untoward happenings marred the peaceful progress of the struggle in spite of the entry of the armed force into strongholds in Glace Bay.

DEMANDS RECALL OF MILITARY FORCES

OTTAWA, July 11—The immediate recall of troops from the Cape Breton strike area, and if necessary, the calling of a special session of the Dominion Parliament to deal with the matter, is asked in a letter sent by the Executive Council of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada to Premier MacKenzie King .A copy of the letter was sent to Hon. James Murodck, Minister of Labor.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

1200 Steel Workers Have Returned

SYDNEY, July 11—John MacPherson, one of the maintainance workers at Number 1 Colliery Dominion, was beaten by strike pickets early this morning while on his way to work. No other clash with pickets is reported. The total number of men at work in the steel plant is about 1300, a slight increase. At the order of U. M.W. officials four small independent mines operating in North Cape Bretin were closed down last night. The officials of the local unions of the coal districts met at Glace Bay this morning and considered calling out the maintenance men at the Waterford Plant if the Company did not permit a continuance of the water supply to Birch Grove. Mounted police prevented the picketing of the Sydney steel works this morning.

MINE WORKERS CONSIDER ADVICE OF PRES. LEWIS

SYDNEY, July 11—The chief interest in the strike situation centered to-day in the scheduled meeting of the Executive of the Mine Workers at Glace Bay to consider the request of International President John J. Lewis that they return to work, and in the possibility of the Coal Company making an effort to move coal from the 165,000 ton pile at No. 2 Mine, Glace Bay. This pile is heated in places. Should there be coal trains used they will carry military guards over the 15 miles to Sydney. Large numbers of warrants have been sworn our for arrests on charge of unlawful assembly of men said to have been the prime movers in the early disturbances of the strike.

NIXON'S ELECTION CONFIRMED

BRANTFORD, July 11—Hon. H. Nixon, Provincial Secretary in the Drury government, was elected by a fifty-two majority over J. M. Paterson, Conservative, in the recent elections in North Brant.

This decision was given after a recount of Nixon's votes. This is a difference of four all told, accounted for by the fact that two Patterson votes had been credited to Nixon in error.

BOY SCOUT PRESIDENT

ST. JOHN, July 11—Word was received here to-night that Colin H. Livingstone had been re-elected in New York as President of the National Organization of Boy Scouts of America, which enrolls 600,000 scouts and leaders.

Col. Livingstone is a native of St. John and has his summer home on the St. John River. He has been the first and only president of the Boy Scouts in the United States, having been re-elected thirteen times.

Unanimous Vote for Limitation of Armaments

PARIS, July 11—The French Senate this afternoon ratified the Washington Treaty for the limitation of armaments without reservation, by a vote of 287 to 3.

ICE NO LONGER A MENACE

WASHINGTON, July 11—The U.S. Hydroghaphic Office has notified the shipping lines engaged in the North Atlantic trade that ice no longer constituted a menace to the normal summer lines, and that ships might revert to the usual routes which are considerably shorter than those now being used.

AMERICAN SHIPS FIRST

NEW YORK, July 11—United States ships are to be given preference in the transportation of mails to Europe, it was announced to-day by J. J. Kelly, assistant postmaster at New York.

Instructions from Washington were to the effect that mails should be delayed twenty-four hours if by so doing it was possible to send them by United States ships.

When the Leviathan sailed last Wednesday she carried 7479 sacks of mail, much of it having been held over from the previous Sunday.

The British liner Aquitania which sailed a day before carried 17 sacks.

CONVENTION SPRINGS SURPRISE

SYDNEY, July 11—The Conservative convention at Sydney Mines, sprang a suprise yesterday afternoon by nominating Robert H. Butts, ex-M. P., to contest Cape Breton north in the bye-election of July 30.

Major J. W. Maddin, up to the hour of nomination, had been considered the nominee.

Butts had ninety-four votes and Maddin twenty-five on the final polling.

LIBERAL STANDARD BEARER

NORTH SYDNEY, July 11—At a convention lasting only thirty-five minutes, Mayor F. L. Kelly was chosen at Baddeck this afternoon as Liberal standard bearer in Cape Breton North and Victoria.

RAILWAY COLLISION

NEWARK, N. J., July 11—One unidentified man was killed and seven injured, when the west bound Hudson and Manhattan tube train collided with an east bound empty train at a switch near Harrison station today.

BALDWIN WILL MAKE STATEMENT

PARIS, July 11—The report that the statement on Reparations which Premier Baldwin is to make in London to-morrow will include the acceptance of the German proposal for an impartial international commission to examine into Germany's c apacity for payment is treated by French officials as incredible.

SCHOONER CAPSIZES

HALIFAX, July 11—The auxiliary schooner Arequiba, struck by a monstrous sea, capsized fifteen miles off Liverpool buoy this afternoon and two of the crew were drowned. Others, including Captain McLean, were picked up and landed near Port Mouton by the Red Cross steamer Rosalind.

One of the boats and both masts were carried away by the sea which capsized the craft, and left it a menace to navigation. One of the seamen, who managed to get a dory adrift, picked up two comrades, but the others went under with the overturning of the craft, and were not seen again.

The drowned men were Sinclair Thorbourne of Shelbourne and Harold Memeon of Liverpool. The saved were Captain McLean of Port Saxon, J. Thorburn of Shelbourne, brother of the drowned man, and Calvin Doane of Roseway.

MORE STRIKERS

NEW GLASGOW, July 11—Over sever hundred men were added to the ranks of Pictou County strikers here to-night by the walkout of Westville local members, who declared in favor of a sympathy strike, as a protest against thep resence of troops and police in the strike area, and in demand for the release of McLachlan and Livingstone.

EGYPTIAN PRINCE MURDERED

LONDON, July 11—An Egyptian Prince, Ali Aamel Farmhy Bev was found mortally wounded in the corridor of one of the principal hotels here this morning, and died later in the hospital.

The police arrested his French wife and arraigned her in Bow Street court where she was remanded for eight days for hearing.

ELEVEN KILLED IN EXPLOSION

ALTON ,July 11—Eleven persons, six of whom were women, were killed and 23 injured in an explosion late yesterday at the plant of the Western Cartridge Co., at East Alton.

Five of the victims were killed immediately while the other six died in hospital.

CHAPTER XXII.

In New York

He was favorably impressed by the looks of the stranger, just as he had been impressed by the neat and unpretentions piece of pasteboard bearing the name "Alan Fotheringay Rankine, Stair Castle, Ayrshire."

Rankine availed himself of the offered chair, but neither felt nor looked at his ease. There was neither welcome nor encouragement in this square-faced American, who bore the name of Arnold P. Ford.

"You're just over from Europe—et?" he asked with his pleasant drawl. "Anything we can do for you, sir?"

"You may be able to do something. I must explain to you first that it was a Mr. Findlay Macalister I hoped to see."

"He's gone," answered Ford briefly. "Died on his yacht in the Azores in the fall. But he ain't been at business, not more than a month at a time in five years."

"It was a friend of my own, and his—Mr. David Sillars—who recommended me to him. Mr. Sillars thought he could advise me as to my future."

"I'm sorry, but he ain't here," said the American stolidly, his interest beginning to wane. "What is it you want to know, sir? If I can be of any use to you, I'm willing, but this happens to be our mail day, and time's money, so to speak."

"I won't detain you, but get to the point at once. I'm seeking a secretarial post of some kind," said Rankine nervously, getting out the adjective on the spur of the moment. "Perhaps you could point out the ropes to me, if you haven't actually any thing to offer me here?"

A very faint smile flickered for a moment on the American's grave mouth.

"We haven't got anything here. I guess, nor won't have for as far ahead as the most of us can see. What this business wants, Mister Rankine, is reorganizing and cutting down. It's what I've been busy over since Mr. Macalister handed in his checks."

The words and the tone, if not exactly offensive, at least left Rankine with no excure for lingering in that particular office.

"Then I may say good morning, I suppose, with apologies for taking up your time. I should not have done it except for my friend Mr. Sillars, who informed me that the late Mr. Macalister would be disposed to advise me."

"He was disposed that way, Mr. Rankine," said the American as he rose from his chair. "It's what his business is suffering from to-day. If it hadn't been for his propensity for helping folks he would have been a millionaire. As it is he has made it difficult for any ordinary man to follow in his steps. Good morning, sir. Sorry to be so discouraging, but times are hard, and if I were you"—here he looked with a very straight, keen glance into Rankine's face—"I shouldn't stop no longer in New York City than it just necessary. There ain't room. You'll get busy quicker in almost any other city in the world."

He pressed the electric button, but before the call-boy answered the summons Rankine had made his exit, outwardly calm and dignified, inwardly fuming. Even the reflection that had he the good fortune to arrive while Findlay Macalister still occupied the managerial chair, his experience would doubtless have been more encouraging, failed to comfort him or take the keen edge off his humiliation and disappointment.

He had no stomach for further investigation of the employment resources of New York, and it required some effrot to pull himself together for the second venture. It brought him to a suite of palatial offices in the immediate vicinity of Fifth Avenue, where the firm of lawyers were located to whom he had been accredited by Mr. Samuel Richardson of Glasgow.

The principals of the firm, both of whom he saw, were prodigiously polite but promising nothing. They thought it unlikely that he would obtain the kind of post he was seeking, but promised to help him make inquiries. One of them—by name Unwin Gage—invited him to dine at his house in Brooklyn one evening the following week.

This interview did something towards restoring Rankine's self-respect, though it brought him no nearer the goal of his desires.

He paid a third call, equally futile and long before the day closed had come to the end of his personal resources.

There remained but the usual channels through which employment was to be obtained, and from what he had, in these few hours, learned of New York business methods he was not at all sanguine of his future success.

He found himself looking forward with an odd feeling of anticipation to his meeting with Miss Dempster at the boarding house. He retained his seat of honor by Mrs. Isaacstein, and could not therefore engage in any conversation beyond his immediate vicinity. Miss Dempster was at the very bottom of the table.

It was quite a pleasant meal, and, in spite of all depression, Rankine felt interested in his fellow-boarders. He listened to all their remarks with an intelligence sharpened by the thought that most of them were richer in experience than himself and could probably give him points regarding his own immediate goal. For they were all, without exception, enjoying a brief respite after a busy day. This reflection caused an access of respect in his attitude towards them, which certainly had been absent both from his demeanour and his thoughts on the previous day.

Even the bore, he felt, was entitled to a respectful hearing, for Miss Dempster had informed him that he was thec urator of a small museum, and enjoyed a very handsome salary.

When they filed out of the dining room he found Miss Dempster in the lounge, and they bade one another a friendly good evening.

"Well, have you had any luck?" she asked, for Rankine had confided to her during their stroll along Broadway on the previous evening that he had intended to start his search for work that very day.

"None," he answered in a low voice. "I should like to tell you about it, but the rain was pouring when I came in. Can we talk here?"

"No, we can't. I have a sitting-room upstairs. I had to, you know, in self-defence, for, if one has to live in a boarding house, one must have some haven to escape into. Will you come up?"

Rankine assented with the liveliest feeling of satisfaction. There was no nonsense at all about Jeen Dempster. A man could be perfectly as his ease with her, without the fear of foolish complications. Then the fact that she was in a sense a married woman, further defined the relations between them. They were simply fellow-exiles whom chance had thrown together—exiles belonging to a nation which is the most clannish on earth!

Rankine could not forbear a little exclamation of pleasure when he entered Miss Dempster's sitting-room for the first time. A little wood fire had been lit on the white tiled hearth, and its pleasant glow and crackle seemed to fill the room. It was not large, and it was simply furnished, but the colors were restful, and it was essentially a woman's room.

A work-basket stood open on the centre table, with a white blouse, on which she had been working when the gong sounded, lying carelessly across it. A lamp with a pink shade helped the suggestiveness, and Rankine felt a sudden sense of homelinss and comfort.

"I think it is most awfully good of you to treat me like this," he said gratefully, as he took the hair to whih she pointed.

"Oh, no; it's nothing. Heaps of Scotsmen and Scotswomen have sat in that chair. We have a Scotch Guild at our Church, and I look after the girls in it. I hope you will come to Trinity one Sunday and be introduced to Doctor Wardrop. You may smoke, if you like, while you tell me about what happened to-day. I knew directly I saw you come in that you had been disappointed."

Rankine, with increasing gratitude, took out his cigarette case and lit up.

"I haven't a very exciting story to tell. I've come to the end of my 'intros,' as affery irreverently called them. He was right about them every time. They're not worth the paper they are written on."

"I could have told you that," observed Miss Dempster quietly, as she took her seat at the table and began to finger her work again.

"Then how do people get work in a place like this?"

Jean shrugged her shoulders, but in her quiet eyes untold depths of pity lay. She was a very observant woman, and had had exceptional opportunities for the study of human nature; she had therefore had no difficulty in placing Rankine, and she wondered what could have happened at home to throw a member of what is popularly known as the upper classes so completely on his beam ends. Many social derelicts from Scotland she had had through her hands in New York; but then, they had sunk chiefly through their own folly or vice. This man, on whose face was set the stamp of clean-living and honorable dealing, had to be placed in a different category altogether. But he was not one you could question. She, however, could wait, having proved in her life that most things come to those who wait.

"The same way they get it in other places," she answered, and as she puckered her eyes to thread her needle nearer the light he saw that a good many lines were visible on her face and that her pretty hair was plentifully streaked with grey. But it was a strong, fine, womanly face, the face of a woman with a heart which the bitterness of life had not altogether seared.

"But first of all, of course, Mr. Rankine, a man—or a woman either for that matter—has got to know his job. Now if it's a fair question—and of course you needn't answer it unless you like—what is your job?"

"I haven't any. I suppose I must write myself down as a member of the great unskilled and unemployed community whom nobody wants," he answered with a swift bitterness.

Don't Play "Pat Ball" Tennis

Hints That Will Improve Your Game.

The majority of lawn tennis players, once they have attained a standard of proficiency that enables them to play the ball backwards and forwards over the net a few times, are inclined to be satisfied, with the result that they remain "pat ball" players instead of becoming virile tennis exponents.

If the game is to be enjoyed, and not made the excuse for an occasional half an hour of meandering about a court carrying a racket, a certain amount of trouble should be taken in improving your play.

Points for Quick Service.

Lawn tennis should be a fast game—and hard, wild slogging alone will not make it fast. When you are playing you should be on your toes all the time, never slacking until the final score has been called.

If you always try to get to the return that appears well out of reach, you will be surprised to find how often you can move faster than you think you can, and at the end of a few weeks your speed and footwork will have improved.

When playing a volley be careful not to allow the head of your racket to drop below the line of your wrist. If you do you will "spoon," thus losing all the power and "life" in your shot.

Even when taking a very low ball you should not drop the racket head, but bend your hips and knees in order to keep wrist and hand below the line of your objective. Your wrist should be absolutely stiff, as if you have any "give" in it you will, "slice" your return.

When serving do not be content merely to send the ball over the net. Try for speed and length, but if you do serve a "fault" let it be through the ball going out of court rather then into the net. If you watch players in public parks, you will see that four out of five service faults are the result of feeble, ineffective "dabs" with the racket that send the ball into the net instead of over it.

If these initial strokes were made with a little more energy and confidence, faults might still result, but in any case a certain proportion of the balls served over the net would drop into the right court.

Do not hit your service down if you serve over-hand, but if you find that you are getting into the wrong court time after time, try standing a little father behind your own base line.

If you adopt the underhand service, drive rather than lob the ball over. Do not bend the elbow, but keep a straight, stiff arm. An effective change from the ordinary underhand service can be obtained by cutting the racket across the ball from right to left.

This is useful when taking the initial stroke from the right-hand court, as if your service is directed towards the centre line it will cause the ball to break back sharply away from your opponent's back-hand.

From the left-hand court a similar stroke should be directed towards the side line, so that the break will carry the ball out of court.

If you put power into your drives, refraining from checking the course of your racket after the moment of impact, you will soon begin to wonder what induced you to be content with your slow "pat ball" game.

The Problems of Prohibition

Effective regulation of the liquor traffic is a problem which seems to defy the genius of legislators. In Canada and the United States, as in Europe, many forms of control have been tried but none with complete success. In an address at New Haven a few days ago Chief Justice Taft declared that four main charges could be maintained against the Volstead Act: It was "keenly sumptuary," it was hard to enforce, it took no regard of international considerations and it put in jeopardy all sectional, State and local issues because it created a party strong enough to wreck any legislation it opposed, whether within or outside the field of prohibition.

Ontario furnishes evidence in support of Mr. Taft's statement. Four years ago the Hearst Government which established prohibition sustained an utter defeat. In Toronto, which is overwhelmingly Conservative, four Liberal candidates were elected by majorities running into thousands. It is no secret that thousands of Conservatives had determined to "punish Hearst" for his action in imposing prohibition upon the Province. As it was in Toronto, so it was in other communities where a strong sentiment against prohibition prevailed. Sir William Hearst, like Mr. Drury, made a vain attempt to make the Ontario Temperance Act the chief issue with the electors. Opponents of prohibition accepted it as the chief issue, but prohibitionists themselves could not be persuaded to believe that they should overlook other considerations and concentrate upon a question which they regarded as settled.

Sir William Harcourt once said that in politics prohibitionists talked but seldom voted as they talked, while opponents of sumptuary legislation kept silence but voted in accordance with their convictions. This was illustrated in the general election in Ontario. It is unlikely that Mr. Ferguson will seriously modify or repeal the Ontario Temperance Act without the direct approval of the people. Nor would Mr. Hay, the defeated Liberal Leader, have done so if he had met with better fortune in the election. There is no doubt, however, that the bulk of the opponents of prohibition gave their votes to Conservative candidates not so much because they loved Mr Ferguson or the Conservative party, but because in that way they could best make their power felt and best ensure the defeat of a Government which, like the Hearst Government was pledged to maintain and enforce dry legislation.

Mr. Drury suffered as Sir William Hearst suffered from the united action of a body of electors who are opposed to Prohibition. It is fair to add that many of these electors have no love for the liquor business, nor any financial interest in it. They vote in devotion to a principle as truly as do honest prohibitionists. They may be wrong, but they are sincere and cannot be intimidated or coerced. Nor is it fair to denounce prohibitionists for sacrifice of principle if they refuse to make sumptuary legislation the sole issue in a political contest. It would be bad for the State if a single question could be made the supreme consideration in successive contests and if loyalty to prohibition could be treated as the holy test of fitness for public service.

There is perhaps no reason to fear that the attempt to apply the Volstead Act to foreign vessels will ever cause any dangerous complication between the United States and Great Britain or between the Republic and other foreign countries, but an unhappy situation has been produced and one wonders if Washington is wise to force prohibition into international relations. The moral authority of the United States is a great international asset which ought not to be reduced in value by doubtful measures which bring the American people into disfavor abroad. There is danger, too that our own relations with the United States may be affected by considerations arising out of the Eighteenth Amendment. Three Canadian Provinces have rejected prohibition. No system of freebootery in other ages was ever more thoroughly organized or carried on with greater skill and daring than the system of bootlegging which now covers the American Continent. The profits are as great as ever were the profits of piracy. A motor travels fast and so often escapes the vigilance of customs officers and law enforcing agents. If the wet area in Canada expands, the opportunities of the bootleggers increase and in the United States enforcement of the Volstead Act becomes ever more difficult.—Montreal Star editorial.

HOW TO SLEEP 3-IN-A-BED

YES, it CAN be done—but not like this.

The trouble is, most people go to bed with "something" on the mind—or ON THE STOMACH!

The answer is, no matter what the day has brought forth to upset your mind and digestive organs, take Beecham's Pills when you retire.

Though in no sense a "sleeping potion," this 80-years-famous household medicine so harmonizes the system that you can sleep in quiet and perfect rest, even in two feet of bed space.

Beecham's Pills are as efficient and harmless for children as for adults—sweetening the stomach, invigorating digestion and stirring liver and bowels to natural activity.

ADVERTISE IN THE EVENING ADVOCATE

Royal Death Will Not Affect Court Functions

By MRS. CECIL CHESTERTON.

LONDON, June 21 (By Mail)—The decision of the King that the death of his aunt, Princess Christian, the third daughter of Queen Victoria, is not to affect the immediate fixtures of the season, comes as an immense relief to London generally. The Courts are to be held, and the dresses worn are to be unaffected by the order of Court mourning which came officially into force on the 14th. The same rule is to apply to Ascot, and the great meeting—save for the absence of the King and Queen—misses none of its attractions, and the women appear in all the glory of frivolous lace and flimsy feathers. Had the King decided otherwise the season must have suffered a severe eclipse, with disastrous effects on society and trade. As it is, there will be little interference with festive arrangements.

Mourning will only be worn till June 30 when black and white will by the correct wear for a further week. Some few parties, The Duchess of Norfolk's, The Prime Minister and Mrs. Baldwin's have been postponed until early in July, but for the most part, there will, be little change in the entertainment list. The memorial service at Westminister Abbey last Friday was crowded with Foreign Ministers, Ambassadors, Cabinet Ministers, friends, representatives of the charitable and other organizzations, to which Princess Christian was so generous and sympathetic.

The death of Princess Christian leaves the King with two aunts living Princess Louise, widow of the Duke of Argyle and Princess Beatrice, whose husband, Princes Henry of Battensburg, known in later years as Mountbatten, died in 1896. Princess Christian, herself an accomplished musician, did very much to assist Paderewiski in his early and struggling days. It was she who gave him his first chance in London, and her influence and prestige assured him the success which ultimately grew to world-wide fame. Since the war she has been instrumental in starting a number of businesses run by ex-soldiers, their wives and independents.

Princess Maud's betrohal to Lord Carnegie is immensely popular. The second daughter of the Princess Royal and the late Duke of Fife, met Lord Carnegie at the wedding of Princess Mary and the news of their engagement was not unexpected. Princess Maud is keen on sports of all kinds, and is a fine golf player. She is also a clever artist, and has created some fine water colours. So soon as the Court is out of mourning, a series of society functions will be held in her honour. The Queen is giving a special ball, and it is hoped the young Princess will be able to attend the Duchess of Norfolk's party.

There was av ery fashionable attendance at Hurlingham on Saturday at watch the polo match between the Indian Tigers vs. Mcnimore. The latter team, which included Sir Philip Sassaan and Lord Dalmeny, were hopelessly beaten, the Tigers being vigorously applauded by the spectators. The interest of women in the sport is very keen, and the audience included some of the best known society beauties. Mr. Winston Churchill watched the play together with the Duke of Westminister and the Viscount Wimbourne.

There was a large attendance of golfers at Richmond Park on the same day when the Prince of Wales opened the new golf course, driving off from the first tee with a shot which he himself afterward described at "rotten." His Royal Highness announced that he would present a gold sovereign to the person who returned the ball to him, and there followed vigorous chase to the accompaniment of cheering crowds. E. T. Willerson of South America ultimately captured the ball which he later exchanged for one autographed by the professional J. H. Taylor.

Literary and dramatic circles were considerably intringued by a speech of Sir Thomas Beecham at the annual dinner of the Critics' Circle. Sir Thomas insisted that music has fallen to its lowest level in England, where he said there could be found but one competent performer on the French horn! Mr. Barrie ackman of the Birmingham Repertory Treatre thought that the famous conductor's criticism applied to London only. He contended that in the provinces music and the drama are very much aliv.e

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 12th., 1923.

Regarding the Fishery Our Staple Industry

We publish a letter to-day by "A Fisherman's Son," which, in a very clear and logical manner, defends the fisheries from what he alleges was an attack upon the industry by Hon. J. J. Murphy in the Legislative Council.

The Advocate is not prepared to say whether Hon. Mr. Murphy attacked the fisheries or not; whether he did or did not attack the fisheries is not the outstanding debating feature of the letter referred to.

"A Fishermen's Son" raises a much discussed question and, we thing, no reasonable man will deny the justice of most of his arguments. It reflects the contentions made by the Advocate for years.

Our fisheries have been, still are, and must continue to be the staple industry of Newfoundland. From the fisheries a large majority of our people must secure the means to live, and to clothe and educate their children. From the fisheries, the various other activities in St. John's and the outports have taken and must take their life.

The fisheries reflect upon the outport and city trade very quickly; and there is the proof of how really dependent the whole people are on the fortunes of our codfishery. If there is a poor fishery catch, if prices are low, if the fishermen cannot make both ends meet, how soon the revenue suffers and the whole people, whether fishermen or others, are affected.

With an average catch of say 1,500,000 quintals of codfish, and with so many of our population directly engaged in it, there is, as "A Fishermen's Son" points out no justification for neglect of the fisheries. There is, on the other hand, every reason why the matter of fishery development along newer and more business-like lines should receive the attention, particularly of the business section of the public.

That this attention has not been given, in anything approaching that united and patriotic spirit which its importance demands is as undeniable as it is regrettable; and has certainly resulted in the system, which for many years has victimized the fishermen, prevented adequate returns to our country and given foreign purchasers the opportunity of securing our product at great advantage to themselves.

There is, therefore, a most serious reason for development of the fisheries along lines that will make it a more paying occupation to those who prosecute it.

But, judging from the lessons of the past years, practical development results are most improbable, while there lives in this country a class of men, who for political, business or other reasons, are prepared to destroy any attempt to do such service to the general country.

But will the time arrive, when such men will see the imperative and vital necessity of sinking personal and selfish considerations for the good of the people?

There can be no argument, however, against the inland development of the country's resources. As many of our people as can be employed at other industries should be employed.

Congratulations

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—The co-operative organization in Nfld., known as the "F.P.U." has undoubtedly been recognized by the honour conferred on Sir W. F. Coaker.

Yours truly,
J. C. SEELEY.

A Fisherman's Son Deals With Fisherv Matters and Demands Square Deal for Our Producers

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir,—In the proceedings of the Legislative Council published in your paper some days ago dealing with the Humber Bill I noticed that some of the members of that august chamber, particularly Hon J. J. Murphy, were inclined to slam the fisheries of this Country and to treat them generally as a back number. I desire to say right here that the man who talks about our fisheries being a back number not alone does not know what he is talking about, but he does not realize what his ideas of the future portend.

I have nothing to say against Humber or any other development; by all means let the Government or private enterprise local or foreign, do all they can in the way of development, but let not our legislators nor our private citizens forget what we owe to the fisheries and the fishermen of this country. Newfoundland has existed for some centuries almost solely on the fisheries. She has had her ups and downs, but mostly our people have been at least comparatively well off.

When people start to give the fisheries a black eye now they should get in possession of some facts so that they may find fault with that phase of the industry wherein there is roo mfor fault-finding. It may be true that the fishery, that is the codfishery, can nol onger support all our people, it may also be true that some of those engaged in the fishery at the present time would be better clear of it, but that is no proof that there is anything wrong with the fishery. If it proves anything it is that we have not been developing the fishery as we should have been doing. We have not been keeping abreast of the times nor have we been suiting our methods of marketing to the needs of the consumers. In a word, we have allowed our fisheries to go to the dogs. No sane man can argue that he who pulls the fish out of the water is not a producer, nor can the contention be successfully advanced that he is not producing a marketable article. The fisherman works as hard to-day as he ever did and he makes as good fish as did his father or his grandfather. He performs his particular work in connection with the fishery industry as faithfully as did the fishermen of fifty years og. He furnishes an article of the only class for which there is any demand from those to whom he sells his catch. What more can the fisherman do? And if the fisherman does his part as faithfully and as well as did the fisherman of ten, twenty or forty years back, why is he not getting as good returns as the producer of two or three decades ago?

Will some of the many theorists who have time and again given their views on the question of the fisheries in lengthy articles in the press kindly enlighten me on this point? Perhaps Mr. Gosling or Mr. Morine or Mr. W. A. Munn will be good enough to supply the necessary elucidation. I know they will tell me all about exchange and about how poor the people who buy our fish are and about competition from other fish producing countries and the dozen and one other things that have grown thread-bare from being trotted out as explanations, but will they have the courage to put their fingers on the real trouble?

I repeat that those who want to develop our inland resources have my best wishes for success, but where we want development most urgently is in the fisheries. Other countries are developing their fisheries and why not we who have the best fisheries in the world? Market conditions are not always going to be what they have been since the end of the World War and it is up to us to be prepared for the improvement when it comes. We may make up our minds right now that we are always going to have this industry and that it is always going to be our chief industry, and for that reason it behoves us to put some of our developing energy into it and see if we cannot give those who engage in it decent returns for their labors.

Yours truly,
A FISHERMAN'S SON.

SEASON'S CATCH OF SEALS ALL SOLD AT GOOD PRICE

Ready Market for Seal Oil and Skins — Skins Make Excellent Bags, Purses and Pocket Books.

(Trade Review.)

ST. JOHN'S—We understand, that all the season's catch of seal skins and seal oil, the result of the kill of the past spring, when over 100,000 seals old and young were landed here and at Harbour Grace; have been sold and at figures which are satisfactory to the exporters.

In an article relative to these items or trade some weeks ago the statement was made that coats, etc. manufactured from the skins of our seals compared favorably with similar articles made from the fur of the famous seals whose haunts, or "rookeries" as they are called, are located at the Pribyloff Islands in Behring Sea. There was some misapprehension as to the matter.

In speaking to a gentleman, during the week who is much interested in the marketing of the sealing voyage, he said that the only seal indigenous to our waters from the pelt of which coats or such other articles of clothing can be made is the Bay seal. These, however, do not at all compare with the apparel manufactured from the seal pelts found at the Pribyloffs, the fur of which is very valuable and from which the most expensive costs are made, and suitable to the purses of only very wealthy people.

The wearing apparel of this kind made from the Newfoundland seal is not at all comparable to the other If it were possible to manufacture a superior article from our seal such would have been done long ago.

As a matter of fact the firm of Job Bros. & Co.., with commendable enterprise, made an effort in this direction some years ago and spent a deal of money in the effort. Some goods were turned out by the process employed, but it was conclusively proven that it could not possibly be made a commercial success. Only two firms in England and two in the United States manufacture our seal skins. They are tanners who have taken the trouble to investigate and have adopted a process of tanning by which the skins can be converted into excellent bags, purses, pocket books and other like articles but they yet have to discover how they can be adopted to the making of gloves.

It may not be generally know to our people that we are not the only Northern race who engage in a yearly seal hunt. The Norwegians also hunt the seal on the floes around Spitzbergan, the north of Norway and in the White Sea, and the species killed by them are akin to ours, the hood and harp predominating.

We, as a rule, secure better figures for our skins as they are somewhat of a better grade. We, it is believed, get the harp seal when it is younger than the same taken by the Norwegians so that the skins are softer and more tender and thus more easily handled.

There is always a good demand for the oil and skins we export and especially so during the last eight or nine years when the catches have been more or less restricted and no skins have been held over which was the case before that period when hundreds of thousands of pelts were the result of a spring voyage.

Nowadays our seal oil is used mostly in the manufacture of soaps and no inconsiderable portion of it is devoted to edible purposes being hydrogenated into a hard fat which is made a components of butterine and of other food stuffs.

Our informant further stated that we are always sure of a market for all—our oil and skins when the catch does not exceed the 300,000 mark.

Prime Minister Gives Luncheon in Honour of English Visitors

At 1.30 yesterday the Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, gave a luncheon at Smithville in honour of Lord Ampthill. More than one hundred guests attended, including His Excellency the Governor, Rt. Hon. Sir William Lloyd, Sir William Horwood, the members of both branches of the Legislature, and citizens prominent in church, the professions and commerce. An excellent menu was served. Two toasts only were honoured: His Majesty the King; and Lord Ampthill, whom the Prime Minister introduced as a "distinguished Imperialist."

In replying to the toast in his honor Lord Ampthill said he understood there were to be no speeches; but he craved permission to express the thanks of himself and has associates for the overwhelming honour that had been done them. He modestly claimed that they were persons of little consequence; they had come for one particular purpose only; and they greatly appreciated the honour done them as travelling Englishmen. One of the things that had struck him since his arrival here was that the people he had met know so much of England. It was true that the Dominions knew far more of England than England knew of the Dominions.

Referring to the Prime Minister's reference to him as an Imperialist, he said, to be an Imperialist was not so much a matter of political creed or doctrine, as of mental outlook. Imperialism is not a question of conquest but an attitude of mind, which comprises social, ethical and spiritual convictions. The true Imperialist is the man whose desire is to serve God by serving humanity. From the material point of view, the aim of the Imperialist was to see how our common heritage could be made secure; how to strengthen the unity which is making our Empire the greatest power for good that the world has ever known. One solution was to populave the Dominions with people of British birth. Britain has a surplus, more than she could well look after, on the other hand the Dominions, Australia particularly, were crying out for more population. Here was an opportunity to people these distant parts of the Empire with Britons and save them from being overrun perhaps by the yellow races.

Referring to the conditions in Europe, Lord Ampthill attributed them somewhat to the lack of really first class statesmen. In recent years mediocrity had ruled in high places, and he expressed the opinion that Great Britain had not had a great statesman since Lord Salisbury.

Concluding his remarks Lord Ampthill said he and his associates would return to the Old Country firm friends of Newfoundland and would on every opportunity say a good word for this country.

The luncheon terminated with the singing of the National Anthem. A photograph of the gathering was later taken in the grounds which will make an interesting souvenior of the occasion.

Despite the threatening aspect of the weather yesterday afternoon ,the G. W. V. A. decided to run off their sports and the event was very successful.

His Excellency the Governor, Lady Allardyce and party, Baron Ampthill and party and the Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, attended, being received by the G. W. V. A. President, Capt. A. B. Baird.

The C. L. B. Band, under Capt. Morris, was present and enlivened the occasion with excellent music, while the Ladies' Auxiliary served refreshments. Messrs Jim Herder and Gerald Halley tied on points for the Victor Laderum, and decided to run a hundred yards dash, which was won by Herder after an exciting contest.

The Events

100 yds. Dash—S. Parsons, G. Halley, J. Herder; time 11 seconds.

Junior League Relay—Won by B.I.S., A. Collins, R. Kent, G. Halley.

Football—Guards-B.I.S.; won by Guards.

Football—Cadets-Feildians, won by Cadets.

One Mile—Won by Skirving, Stone second; time 4.53 4-5. In this event Skirving was handicapped by about 60 yards which he made up in the third lap. The high wind prevailing prevented any record-breaking time.

ADVERTISE IN THE WEEKLY ADVOCATE

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

In June, 1921, we were confronted with this situation again, further complicated by the fact that Mr. Coaker, the Chairman of the Commission, found it impossible to continue to give the time necessary for that important and responsible work. It was equally impossible for any other member of the Government to assume the position, and his other duties made it impossible for the Government Engineer to properly exercise the functions of manager of the railroad which he had virtually become. Therefore, as we were determined that under no circumstances should the operation of the road go back into the hands of the Reids themselves, we arranged with the Canadian Pacific Railways to furnish us with a competent official from their staff to undertake the management. Such an official was found in the person of Mr. R. C. Morgan, who came to us in the summer of 1921 and remained with us until a few weeks ago. To his loyal, earnest and whole-hearted co-operation with the Government in the effort to operate the railroad and allied services as effectively as possible I would like to bear testimony here. We also invited Sir George Bury, a former Vice President of the Canadian Pacific Railways, to come here and advise us on the problem. With his report you are all familiar. In our negotiations in June of that year the Reids put before us the following proposition.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY.
(Statement By Mr. H. D. Reid. President of the Reid Newfoundland Co., Ltd.)

As we are meeting the Government for an informal discussion of the Railway Problem, I have thought it proper at the outset to lay before them the financial questions involved in carrying on the operation of the Railway.

The Problem has become one of such magnitude that in our opinion it has become necessary to consider it from two different standpoints,—(1) how to provide temporary financing, which is urgent, and (2), how to provide permanent financing to put the road on a paying basis, which must eventually be faced.

I desire to impress upon the Government the fact that the Reid interests during their twenty years' operation of the Railway have put into the undertaking SEVEN MILLIONS of dollars in COLD CASH, upon which no return whatever has been received. On the centrary, they have during that period suffered losses on the operation of the Railway amounting to approximately FIVE MILLIONS of dollars COLD CASH, not allowing for depreciation, which is very considerable.

It was always our hope that mining and other developments in the Island would take place soon enough to offset the comparatively small losses of our early years when the road was new, and so enable us after a short time to operate at a profit. As you know, the natural resources of the country have not made the hoped-for progress, and our losses continued gradually increasing up to the time when the War broke out, at which time they naturally became very much heavier.

Always hoping that the war would come to an early end, the Company continued to carry on and absorb these heavier losses and in doing so showed an evidence of good faith and intention which is unparallel in the history of railways during the war period. In England and in the United States the Government came to the rescue of the railways, and assumed the staggering losses which could not be borne by the individual Companies. In Canada, except the C.P.R., a very wealthy road, the Government were compelled to take over the railway systems permanently and operate them at a heavy loss. We, on the contrary, paid these losses ourselves, and as a result all our available moneys have been spent, and we are heavily in debt.

A review of the figures given in the statement which we are submitting tonight will show that it is impossible to expect any Banking institution to make any further advances for railway operation under present conditions. We have discussed this matter fully with our Bankers, and they advise not only that no further advances will be made for railway purposes, but that we must repay to them within a short time our overdraft of over $1,200,000, which they have already advanced to enable us to carry on.

Our operating loss for the year 1919-20 was exclusive of Depreciation and Interest	$1,334,000,00
On the same basis the estimated loss for the year 1920-21 under the Railway Commission is	$1,650,000,00
And on the same basis the estimated loss for the coming year is at least	$2,000,000,00

It is quite evident from these figures that some plan of temporary financing must be involved to take care of the immediate situation and enable the operation of the railway to be continued while a permanent plan is being considered to provide for the period which must elapse before the road can be put on a profitable basis.

The temporary financing should cover a long enough turn to enable the whole situation to be thoroughly studied, and the essential improvements to the Railway to be decided upon.

We are submitting to-night a statement, the figures in which show in a general way our ideas as to how both the temporary and permanent financing ought to be carried out, the guiding principle being that the Colony shall be called upon to make the lowest possible cash outlay for the next few years covering the period of reconstruction, and it will be noted that provision is made in the plan for the refunding to the Colony out of the permanent financing scheme of any moneys advanced for temporary financing.

The Company will, I can assure you do anything in its power to assist you in dealing with the problem and will be glad to co-operate along the lines indicated, or consider any other solution that may appear to you of greater merit.

June 17th, 1921.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Memorandum Regarding Railway

June 1921.

The most important question before the Newfoundland people at the present time is that of the railway situation. Briefly stated some constructive policy must be adopted in order to meet the situation.

The past history of the road and the outlook is such that no person could consider it possible to have any profit for some years and then only provided the main line, five hundred and forty eight (548) miles be improved, the new rails laid and a considerably increase in traffic.

There is little doubt but that the year from June 30, 1921, to June 30, 1922, will show the largest losss in the history of the road. This is due to present general depression and the difficulties attending operations of the present roadbed.

After June 30, 1922 however, the deficit would be considerably reduced compared with the previous year because of the general reduction in wages and supplies that will take place, the expected increase in traffic receipts and the improcement in part of the road which is contemplated in the plans at present being discussed. It is estimated that of the five hundred and forty eight miles of Main Line about one hundred miles will be improved each year. That is, it will probably be five years before the whole of the Main Line is improved and the new rails put down.

It is to be noted that the road was built to an old standard based on the traffic requirements of 30 years ago. The grade line which is abnormally steep follows closely to the ground contour. The embankements and cuttings are too narrow, consequently, in the barren and open sections of the country, notably between St. John's and Clarenville, Millertown Junction and Howley and West of Little River, the expense of operation is greatly increased by snow and ice difficulties.

The widening of the cuttings and embankments, the raising of the grades in low places, with additional ballasting and ditching, would greatly reduce the snow fighting costs, and help overcome the difficulty in operating, caused by the alternate freezing and thawing we get during the winter, between the months of December and April.

The Reid interests are desirious of continuing the operating of the road if the Government will give satisfactory financial assistance. They would naturally have a greater incentive than any other interests in bringing the railroad into an efficient and paying condition. They have large present commitmonts in the enterprise and can only hope to regain their past losses by an efficient and constructive administration.

The Reid interests have spent in cash on improvements and rolling stock about two million ($2,000,000) dollars, in addition to about $5,000,000 paid in cash towards deficits.

With the large expenditures on the railroad and considerable loss in operations, it is quite obvious that no bonds could be issued and sold by the railroad unless the principal was guaranteed and the interest payments actually paid by the Government to the Trustee under the Mortgage securing the Bond Issue. The plan, therefore, embodies this provision as to the security behind the Bonds.

The Government Railway Commission has been operating the railroad since July 1, 1920, and they will terminate their functioning on June 30, 1921. The year's operation under this Government body will show a loss of at least one million seven hundred and fifty thousand ($1,750,000) dollars.

While the Government has been operating the road for almost a year, which ends June 30, 1921, the arrangement provided that the rights of the Government and of the Reid Newfoundland Company, Limited would not, in any way, be prejudiced by the intervention of the Government Railway Commission.

Having fully considered the financial position of the Government, the public opinion, the position of the Reid Newfoundland Company, Limited, under the present operating contract the past deficits in operations, the indications, of the future financial results, and other matters, the conclusion reached is, that the plan now summarized, should be followed and commence on July 1, 1921.

(1) The Reid Newfoundland Company, Limited, meantime continued operating the railroad.

(2) The Newfoundland Government pay on the first of each month commencing July 1, 1921, and ending December 31, 1921, about $250,000 to meet the current cash requirements thereby enabling the Company to pay wages coal store and other bills, etc., without inconvenience.

This is a temporary arrangement and will remain in force until the Bonds, later referred to, have been sold, when part of the proceeds of the Bonds will be used to repay to the Government the monthly payments.

(3) A new company will be formed to be known as the "Newfoundland Railway Company, Ltd.," which will take over the road.

(4) The capital stock of the new company to be five million (5,000,000) dollars.

(5) Bonds to the amount of $11,000,000 twenty five (25) years seven per cent., are to be authorized and sold by the new company as required. The Government would guarantee the principal of the Bond Issue and pay to the Trustee, under the Mortgage securing the Bonds, the amount of interest as it is due, whether the new company should reach a profitable operating basis or not.

(6) A division of any profits should be on the basis of fifty (50 p.c.) per cent. to the owners of the $5,000,000 Common Stock and fifty (50 p.c.) per cent to the Government.

(7) The Government will have access to all the records and be supplied with all necessary information by the new company so that the government will know that all expenditures are applicable to the railroad.

PUTS HEALTH AND VIM INTO WOMEN

So Says Mrs. MacPherson of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brantford, Ontario.—"I was always tired and the least exertion would put me out for a day or two. I had a pressing pain on the top of my head, pain in the nape of my neck, and when I stooped over I could not get up without help, because of pain in my back. I did not sleep well and was nervous at the least noise. I keep house, but I was such a wreck that I could not sweep the floor nor wash the dishes without lying down afterwards. A friend living near me told me what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for her so I began to take it. With the first bottle I felt brighter and got so I could wash dishes and sweep without having to lie down. Later I became regular again in my monthly terms. I have taken ten bottles all told and am now all better. I can truly say that your wonderful medicine cannot be beaten for putting health and vim into a woman."—Mrs. JAMES H. ADDRESSES TO REV. DR. GREENE

Children's Address.

Reverend and Dear Father:

We, the little ones of your Flock, wish to express to you the joy with which our young hearts are filled, on having as our Pastor, you dear Reverend Father, whom we know to be, like your Divine Master an ardent lover of children; and who will, we trust, like Him take us into your fatherly heart, notwithstanding our many, many short-coming.

In bidding you an affectionate welcome, we pray for you many years in which to labour for our welfare. Trusting also that we may live up to the Teaching of our Reverend Father, and be to you ever a source of happiness and consolation.

Your respectful and devoted children of

The Convent School,
Witless Bay,

July 8th. 1923.

Rev. Dr. Greene Replies.

Rev. Dr. Greene in a very appropriate address replied, thanking all for the whole-hearted reception he had received. The warm enthusiasm of the people touched him deeply. He expressed his pleasure at being appointed to the ancient and historic Parish of Witless Bay, noted for its staunch, Catholic traditions, and layalty to Holy Church.

The assurance he had received of the continued loyalty, unity and co-operation of the people was a source of encouragement and satisfaction to him. He promised on his part, to do all in his power for the good people of Witless Bay, and that he would strive to be a father and friend to each and all.

He praised the talent and ability of the Convent children, shown by their most enjoyable performance; he thanked them also for their affectionate address, and asked them for their prayers for his success.

ADDRESS

To Rev. Dr. J. J. Greene, P.P., From The Parishioners of Witless Bay.

On behalf of the people of the Parish of Witless Bay, we desire to welcome you to our midst and to express our pleasure at your appointment by His Grace the Archbishop to this, one of the oldest and most historic parishes in the Island.

Witless Bay Parish, we are proud to relate, has had a long and distinguished record of devotion to the Church, and we can pledge to you the same co-operation and obedience that have existed for upwards of one hundred years between the people and your predecessors.

We appreciate the honor conferred on us by His Grace the Archbishop in restoring to us a resident Parish Priest and can assure you as his representative that Witless Bay Parish will not be untrue to the traditions of the past in its obedience, reverence and honor to the head of the Church in Newfoundland.

We are fully conscious of the honor conferred on us by your appointment. Your scholarly attainments have won for you high scholastic honors during the course of your study at the Eternal City, while your work among the poor of St. John's and particularly in connection with your Spiritual Directorship of the Star of the Sea Society, and your establishment of Night Schools in conjunction with the St. Vincent de Paul Society, have, not alone endeared you to the Catholic of the Metropolis but earned for you the respect and esteem of those who are not of our religion.

As the successor of the Rev. Dean Roche and of our former respected and energetic Parish Priest, the Rev. Father O'Brien, P.P., we feel assured that the Church in our midst will flourish both spiritually and temporarally, and that the record of the illustrious priests who have preceded you will be faithfully exemplified and lived up to by their successor.

In conclusion, we desire to reiterate the sentiments which we have already extended to you both personally and as the representative of the Church in our midst, and to promise you the same co-operation and loyalty which the people of this historic parish have ever extended to the Soggarth Aroon since the date of its inception. We trust and pray that you may long be spared to us, and that your stay may be fruitful in all that tends to theg reater glory and advancement of Our Holy Mother, the Church.

We desire you to accept this address and the accompanying purse as a small token of our esteem and good wishes.

Dated at Witless Bay, this eight day of uly, 1923.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I have little sympathy with the idea that one's own country shouldn't be criticised, or that the actions of one's own country should not be attacked.

There are many people who have the idea that whatever their country does must be right, and that therefore they should defend it. That is a totally wrong and base idea.

*** *** *** ***

I love my country for her virtues, not her vices. It is the good and not the bad in my or any country that I admire. I cannot and do not defend the defects of my or any country. I admire Right, Justice, Democracy, and despise tyranny, injustice, bigotry—and the country that happens to possess either of the quantities I mention meets my praise or condemnation as the case may be.

It is a most mistaken sort of patriotism—indeed, no patriotism at all—to exclaim: 'My country—May she be always right, but my country anyway!" I would say:

"My country—May she be ever right and deserve my love and respect! The moment she ceases to be right marks the passing of my respect for her."

*** *** *** ***

Love of one's country is a high ideal, true. But love of Right, Justice, Honesty, Democracy—this is a much higher ideal. My idea is that we should love our country only as long as she lives up to those higher ideals. Of course, we are apt to love her even if she falls short of them, just as we love our friends even with their shortcomings. But respect is another thing.

Then, there is another very high ideal—the love of mankind—the fellowship of all humanity. This is an ideal to which we have not as yet been very strongly educated, but we are slowly coming to it. When we love mankind—irrespective of race, color, nationality or creed—more than we love any particular part of mankind (even if that part be the people in our own country) then shall the world have gone far toward that ideal state which men have dreamed of for ages—"When the war-drums throb bed no longer, and the battle flags were furled. In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

*** *** *** ***

So far as Newfoundland itself—the soil, the surrounding sea, the climate—is concerned, such things don't matter, naturally. We could all love Newfoundland if each of us was the only person on the island. No man can live here long—man, that is, with heart and vision—without growing to love the wild, rugged grandeur of some of our scenery; and the peaceful country of the Codroy Valley; and the precipitous coasts with their myriards of sea-birds; and all the thousand and one things that make up our Newfoundland.

*** *** *** ***

But as long as there are people on the Island: so long as there is society, government, institutions; then something more than the land itself becomes necessary to make Newfound land a noble people.

As a people how much do we love Justice? Fairplay? Democracy? Free Speech? Free Press? Free Assemblage? Toleration? That's the important thing. How deep is our love and veneration of these great qualities of any great and noble society.

Let a people or a country be rich and powerful: let it spread itself over the face of the earth: let its commerce sail the seven seas: let its fame go around the globe: these things don't make a country great. The love of liberty and justice and democracy is what makes a people great the noble and with these qualities they are great and noble even if they number but a handful and are poor and cover but a tiny spot on the earth.

*** *** *** ***

So, therefore, who are the true patriots, the true lovers of Newfoundland? They who attack her weaknesses and show them up. They who advocate progress along the lines indicated above. They who advocate—and not advocate alone, but work for and support all attempts at—the extension of learning as a means to education (which is character-building) and the extension of our love of liberty and democracy.

*** *** *** ***

Newfoundland will never be a fit place to live in as long as there is one man, woman or child receiving less than fairplay and justice; as long as there is one child without full opportunity to develop his character and personality; as long as there is one individual unable to avail himself of the blessings of education; as long as there is religious or any other bigotry or intolerance.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE DAMAGES LAUNDRY ADJOINING HOUSES

Cochrane Street Was Scene of Big Blaze Yesterday

The Kam Lun Laundry, orner of Cochrane and Gower Streets, was completely gutted by fire yesterday afternoon, and the adjoining residences suffered considerable damage.

The fire started at 4.35 in the laundry, and it is believed it occurred near the ironing machine, as within a few seconds, a loud explosion occurred and that portion of the building fronting on New Gower St. burst into flames.

The firemen responded quickly on the alarm being sent in, and both trucks with the new aerial ladder were quickly on the scene.

The firemen realized that they were up against a big proposition. The locality is a congested one, and the block of buildings running along Gower Street, Pilot's Hill and Cochrane Streets were in imminent danger if the fire once got beyond control.

Some half a dozen streams were brought to play upon the burning building, but it took over half an hour of strenuous work by the firefighters, before the flames were subdued. As it was the fire was just making its way through the partitions separating Mr. James Cole's residence on Gower Street, and the concentrated efforts of the firemen undoubtedly saved this house from being enveloped in the flames. The greatest part of its contents, however, were destroyed or badly damaged by smoke and water and Mr. Cole and family are rendered homeless for the time being.

The residenc eof Mr. Charles S. Stranger, which adjoins the laundry on Cochrane Street, also suffered from smoke and water. Mrs. Stranger who has been ill for a long time past, received quite a shock and had to be removed to a neighbor's house. It was 5.30 before the fire was finally extinguished and then all that remained of the laundry was the charred walls.

The machinery and contents were completely destroyed, a large quantity of laundry, some of which was ready for delivery, went up in flames, and numerous customers of the establishment are out of pocket owing to the conflagration.

The laundry and contents were insured for $2000, which will not cover the loss.

Mr. Jas. Cole has $1800 on his house and furniture and Mr. Stranger is tlso insured.

YOUNG WOMAN ATTEMPTS SHARP PRACTICE AND IS NOW IN THE TOILS

A young telegraph operatoress a girl of attractive appearance and evident refinement and education was brought into town last night as a prisoner by Const. Tucker and appeared before Judge Morris this morning on a charge of having attempted to obtain twenty dollars worth of goods from Ayre & Sons by means of a certain false pretence. The story of the offence as told by the Inspector General is that the accused had been in charge of the Telegraph Office at Cook's Hr. where she met and became the friend of the C. of E. teacher. She sent an order from there, accompanied by the money, to Ayre & Sons, who forwarded the goods. Immediately on receipt of these she sent another order, this time without the money, and again received the goods for which she did not subsequently pay. In their efforts to get payment Ayre & Sons learnt that their customer had left Cook's Hr., neglecting to leave any forwarding address, but they ultimately learnt that a girl of the same surname but with a different Christian name was located at Lumsden. They wrote this girl asking for information about their delinquent customer and were informed by her that the latter had left the country, gone out west and was since reported dead.

Sometime later Ayre & Sons received an order from Lumsden for goods purporting to come from the former C. of E. Teacher at Cook's Hr. who had had for some time an account with them and to whom they frequently sent goods. They forwarded the goods, addressed to the teacher, to Lumsden, but were informed that no such person was or had been living there. Ayres then asked the Post Master at Lumsden if any other person had called for the parcel and were informed by him that the Operatoress, giving the full name of of their old Cook's Hr. customer, had asked for the parcel but had been refused delivery of it. Ayre & Sons then took action and the arrest followed. A wire to the teacher whose name had been used and who is now at Bonne Bay elicited the information that she knew nothing of the order. The accused who was not represented by Counsel denied any criminal intent, but was remanded till witnesses can be brought to the city.

Fatal Explosion On French Ship

One Dead; Another Seriously Burned—Vessel Sank on Banks With 2,000 Quintals of Fish

FISHERMAN PASSES AWAY ON INWARD TRIP TO THIS PORT

The French patrol ship Ville D'ys arrived in port this morning from the Grand Banks, bringing the Captain and eight men of the crew of the French banking vessel Bassilour, of St. Malo, which sank on the Banks several days ago, and two hours after a gasolene explosion on board caught her on fire.

In the explosion two of the crew were terribly burned and one of them, Joseph Daguerre, died yesterday morning on board the Ville D'ys which rescued the crew. The other injured man was taken to the hospital in the ambulance on arrival of the ship.

The vessel had 2000 qtls of fish on board when she went to bottom.

Joseph Daguerre, who was married and lived for some time on St. Pierre, will be buried in Mount Carmel Cemetery.

The French ship Ville D'ys, which arrived here this morning, will remain here till July 17th.

Last Night's Masonic Function

A further Masonic function took place last night, this time at the Temple. At 9.45 St. John's Lodge, No. 459, was opened in due form; the I. P. M., Dr. C. Macpherson, C.M.G., presiding, owing to the regrettable absence through illness of the W. M., Mr. E. S. Pinsent. There was a large attendance of members of the Craft. The meeting was brief, but the Lodge did itself honour by making the Pro. Grand Master, Lord Ampthill, and the members of the Grand Lodge accompanying him, honorary members. The Pro Grand Master delivered another excellent address to the brethren and his words will long be remembered.

Following the Lodge meeting a reception was held, which permitted the members of the craft to individually meet the Pro Grand Master and the other distinguished visitors. Refreshments were served in the banquet room.

Child is Killed by Motorist

FOUR-AND-A-HALF-YEAR-OLD MOLLIE HUMPHRIES IS VICTIM OF FACALITY

Mollie Humphries, aged 4½ years, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Humphries of 85 Cabot St., was killed almost instantly at 4.15 p.m. yesterday by being run over by a motor cycle driven by Charles R. Tuff of Scott Street. The accident occurred on Cornwall Avenue, near Shaw's Lane.

The little girl, with her eldest sister, Hilda aged 7, was being taken out for a walk by Miss Lillie Hussey, Mrs. Humphrie's servant. They left home during the early afternoon and were walking along the road, which, at this particular point has no side walk. When nearing Shaw'e Lane, the little ones who were walking hand in hand started to cross the Road together. They had gone but a few feet when they saw the motor cycle coming towards them. Hilda, the eldest, broke away from her sister and ran back, and Mollie attempted to follow, but was struck by the machine and thrown to the ground.

The unconscious little girl was immediately picked up and taken to O'Mara's Drug Store but it was found that life was extinct, and the remains were then conveyed to the morgue. The blow to the bereaved parents was a stunning one and both are heartbroken. Mr. Humphries is an accountant at Ayre& Sons, and to him, his wife and family the sympathy of all will be extended in their great sorrow.

The driver of the machine was placed under arrest by Sergt. Keefe, who was shortly on the scene and was taken to the station. He feels very keenly the tragic happening.

Last evening he was brought before the Clerk of the Court, Magistrate McCarthy. He was not asked to plead but through his counsel, Mr. L. E. Emerson, bail of $10,000 was allowed, the accused in $5.000 and Messrs. Reg Brown and M. Job Taylor in $2.500 each.

At 9 o'clock last evening, Dr. Anderson conducted a post mortem examination after which the body was coffined and removed by Undertaken Lawrence.

Willard Meets His Waterloo

NEW YORK, July 12—Jess Willard, the Kansas giant, former world heavyweight boxing champion, failed in his attempt at a come back tonight at Boyles Thirty Acres, when Luis Angel-Firpo, of Argentine, knocked him out in the eighth round of a scheduled twelve round bout that was to pick an opponent for Jack Dempsey, World's Champion. Willard put up a good fight, but lost his advantage in the eighth round when the Argentinain, feigning fatigue, broke in with a terrific onslought and finished the contest. One hundred thousand people saw the contest, the largest number to attend a boxing match in all history.

Liquor Pouring Over Boundary

Being Exported Faster than Prohibition Agents Can Stop It.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Liquor is pouring over the Canadian border faster than prohibition agents can stop it, R. Q. Merrick, divisional prohibition field chief for New York and New Jersey admitted today.

Thirty-three automobiles loaded with illicit liquor from Canada were captured in June by northern New York forces with headquarters in Malone, he declared, admitting that many other cars safely entered the State for want of a force big enough to stop them.

"No one will deny that rum running is going on at the aCnadian border but its extent is exaggerated," he asserted. "I admit that many newspaper stories about the illicit traffic are true."

According to the newspaper stories to which he referred, reporters at Malone, N.Y., checking for several nights the booze-weighed traffic on the Fort Covington Road, Lake Placid highway, "Northern Tier" route, Mary Reilly pike, and the rest of the 25 highways leading from the border, counted 50 to 150 rum cars speeding through between dusk and dawn.

Most of them carried Canadian ale with a sprinkling of whiskey, the cargoes from 200 to 360 quarts to a car—an average of 30,000 bottles nightly.

TRADE AGENT NEEDED IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Expressing the belief that it is quite correct that Canada is losing trade with Newfoundland because of the lack of a trade commissioner there, a president of a board of trade in Nova Scotia writes The Financial Post that "we have repeatedly asked the trade and commerce department to send a representative." The letter points out that there are trade representatives at Brazil, West Indies, Cuba, Jamaica, but not in Newfoundland, and the belief is expressed "we will continue to lose trade there until a live man is sent to look after it."—Financial Post.

Edmonton Miners Out

EDMONTON, July 12—The Drumheiler coal miners are out on strike to-day in sympathy with the Nova Scotian strikers and as a protest against the use of troops in Cape Breton. It will have no effect on the Edmonton field as the local miners are not affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America but with the Canadian Fedcration of Labor.

LATEST

OTTAWA, July 13—Hon. James Murdock, minister of labor, said today that efforts had been made to have troops sent to Cape Breton before a strike had been declared. He characterized this as an "unfair and indecent attempt to cow men into submission by the use of troops."

Mr. Murdock said Premier Armstrong and Hon. D. A. Cameron, provincial secretary, should make an effort to learn more about the human side of the situation. Representations of the Besco, he said, had received one hundred per cent. consideration from these members of the government, while the claims of the men had been ignored. Now an effort was being made to mislead the public by a flow of words.

The strikers have a case and a very strong one, declared Murdock, and they will beg iven consideration.

HAMBURG, July 13.—All Harbor employees went on strike yesterday because of difficulties arising over wages. All traffic has been suspended.

WASHINGTON, July 13—An authoritative statement has made clear that Washington had not been consulted by the British officials regarding the forthcoming reply to the German note on the reparations question; also that Washington volunteered no suggestions and the department officials declined to comment in any way on what the premier said.

TORONTO, July 13.—Orangemen from all parts of the Province turned out enmasse to celebrate the 12th of July. Large cities all reported great turn-outs, while smaller ones had proportionally large numbers taking part in the activities of the day.

The weather was ideal, and after the march many went to the various civic parks where lunches were served and speeches delivered. The afternoon was given over to amusement.

HALIFAX, July 13—In a Canadian press despatch fro mOttawa, Hon. J. Murdock, minister of labor was quoted as saying in a telegram to A. S. McIntyre, that his department had for several days been endeavoring to induce the provincial authorities to withdraw the troops fro mthe strike area.

Hon. D. A. Cameron, provincial secretary for Nova Scotia, said: "If Hon Mr. Murdock really did make the statement, he should know that the provincial government, under the Dominion Militia Acts, had nothing whatever to do with calling out troops or withdrawing them after they had been calle dout. The troops were called out, as the Minister of Labor must know, on the requisition made by His Honor Judge Duncan Finlayson, of the County Court, the resident judge in that section of the strike area where the troops are now quartered. If the Minister is in doubt, it would be well to consult the Department of Justice at Ottawa.

Baldwin in Commons Makes Statement on Reparations Reply

Action of France Has Reduced Payments to Allies

LONDON, July 12—Great Britain has informed France and Italy that she is ready to assume the responsibility of preparting the draft of a reply to the German reperations note. The reply will be submitted to the Allies with the least possible delay in the hope that they will agree to the terms. Announcement to this effect was made by Premier Baldwin in his statement to the House of Commons to day on Great Britain's reparations policy. The British Government, he said, invites the sympathy of the Allies and all interested states for a proposal which aims solely at the pacification of Europe and the recovery of an exhausted world. Premier Baldwin said it could not be made too clear, in the interest alike of the powers concerned and any who might hope to profit by exploiting the differences between them, that the sole ground of divergency was as to the best and most effective means of realizing the ends which were vital to all. These ends where the payment of reparations and the recovery of the security of Europe. To secure these ends, he said, the Allies, have grudged nothing in the past, nor will they grudge anything in the future. This responsibility, he went on, is acknowledged and shared in equal measure by the Allies but devolves especially on the French and British nations. We are as determined as any of the Allies that Germany shall make reparations for the damage done in the great war to the fullest extent of her capacity. We have never wavered on that point. The Government are conscious that as a business nation if we ask Germany to pay in excess of her capacity we shall not succeed. We are firmly convinced that measures which would result in the ruin of Germany would be fatal to this country, our Allies and the whole of Europe. The Allies are obtaining less reparations than before the occupation of Ruhr and these have to be enacted at the price of the dislocation of the German economic system and the probable future collapse of that system. Opinion throughout Europe, and not least in Great Britain is becoming more sensitive to these conditions, with alarm at their continuance. The recovery of the world is in danger and peace is at stake. Peace cannot be secured until three questions are settled; first, payment of reparations; second, settlement of inter-allied debts; and third, the security of a pacific Europe. From the beginning we have made it clear that in our opinion the ocupation of Rhur was not calculated to produce the maximum amount of reparations payments. Many of the consequences which were anticipated are in course of fulfillment. Germany herself is moving fast towards economic shaos. Dealing with the present situation in Ruhr, the Premier said the indefinite occupation of one country of the territory of another in time of peace was a phenomenon rare and regrettable, to which an hanaroble end should be found as soon as possible. The proposals set forth in the recent German note were inadequate, he admitted, but they should be explored and examined not ignored. In conclusion, Mr. Baldwin said so far as united action is possible we shall continue to pursue it. We shall confidently invite the sympathetic consideration of the whole of the Allies and all interested states to the proposals which will have no other aim than the pacification of Europe and the recovery of an exhausted world. Mr. Baldwin failed to state what the British proposals will be in the note the Government intends framing, nor did he say anything in regard to an International Commission to examine into Germany's capacity top ay.

THE OUTLOOK PROMISING

SYDNEY, July 13.—The Cape Breton strike situation reached the negotiation stage yesterday, when Premier E. H. Armstrong and Dr. Clarence McKinnen, Principal of the Pinehill Presbyterian College, Halifax, met with the Executive of the Sydney Steel Workers in the afternoon, and with representatives of the British Empire Steel Corporation at night.

Each conference lasted about three hours, but what transpired could not be learned, as the participants refused absolutely to to make any statement. It was learned, however, that one conference vouchsafed the remark that a step has been taken in the right direction.

There was no outstanding incident in strike circles to-day, the outlook for peace seems to be brightened according to local people who have passed thru many such crises.

Urges Withdrawal of Troops

OTTAWA, July 12—In a telegram to Premier King to-day, made public this afternoon, Mayor Morrison, of Glace Bay, urged the Government to withdraw the troops in the striks area and declared that the city will repudiate the expense of their maintenance.

The British say they are willing to move all warships when Angora ratifies the treaty, but desire the right to come back with up to two cruisers.

Agricultural Decrease Shown

OTTAWA, July 12—A decrease of ..... percent in the number of occupied farms in Nova Scotia in the decade from 1911 to 1921 is shown by the census of agriculture taken in the latter year. The value of farm property has increased eighteen per cent. in the last decade.

The Result of Patient Teaching

VANCOUVER, June 25—From infancy, Clara Johnsrud, a little Alberta child of 8, has been unable to hear, speak or see. To-day, after one year with the school for the Deaf and Blind she can speak a few words. To the patience, sympathy and subtle teaching of her teacher, Miss C. Conrad, is this due. When Clara entered the school she was unable to communicate with the world, except to indicate what she wanted to eat or drink. Since that time she has been built up physicially by a diet of wholesome food. Miss Conrad has not only succeeded in teaching this little girl a very considerably vocabulary, but has taught her to say a few words.

Miss Conrad also had charge of a boy from Halifax, Charlie Crane, who was deaf and blind. Recently for upwards of half an hour the boy recited a Bible lesson, answering with clear enunciation a chain of rapid-fire questions communicated to the palm of his hand by the fingers of his teacher. He is also able to write rapidly on the typewriter.

CHAPTER XXII.

In New York

"Not necessarily. You must have gifts that can be used somewhere. But judging from what I see, I do not think New York is the place for you. American business methods are very different from ours, and they affect a profound contempt for our capacities. I don't think you would fit in. If I were you, Mr. Rankine, I wouldn't stop here."

"But should I be better elsewhere? I have no technical knowledge of anything except estate management."

"You have always lived in the country, then?"

"Most of my life."

"Then if I were you I would go West and get on the land. There are plenty of ranches and wheat farms there, and the owners would be glad to get you. And there's a chance out there. In New York there is none unless you part with your principles and self-respect. That's what I honestly believe."

"It seems a poor look-out for the city," he said briefly.

"I wish I could explain, but I cannot. I've been here just on four years, and I've come in contact with all sorts and conditions. The standard is low—the moral standard, I mean. You have heard of the graft system? It's the curse of New York life from attic to basement. Don't stop here, Mr. Rankine. If you've got the world to choose from, get out into a bigger, fresher air. Into God's air—to put it straight I should if I were a man I'd go where I could help to build up, instead of pulling down."

Rankine listened, considerably impressed, yet Jean observed him set his jaw with a kind of doggedness which seemed to proclaim that he would conquer New York.

"Your friend Affery did not want you to stop in New York, did he?" she asked.

"No, he said it was a bad place to starve in," answered Rankine with a slight, hard laugh.

"Had he sampled it that way?"

"Apparently, from what he said. He had some extraordinary bee in his bonnet about gold in the Klondyke. He's gone out there to try and find some buried treasure a dead man had hidden, taking the secret with him to the grave. He asked me to join him."

"Well, and why didn't you? It would have been better than New York."

"I had several reasons, the chief being that it would have taken all my spare cash to get there; and from what I could gather there did not seem much prospect. Queer chap he was; but you couldn't help liking him. We were room-mates on the steamer and it was a godsend for me that he was tolerable."

From these words Jean Dempster gleaned what she particularly wanted to know—whether the man who interested her deeply had any resources behind him. She had decided that they must at least be limited, else Mrs. Isaacstein's house would never have received him. She now surmised that there must be a story of some poignant kind behind all this, for certainly he was not now in the circumstances or environment to which his birth entitled him!

"I can't understand," he said presently, "how, if you take such a low estimate of New York life, you drifted here, or that you stop in it"

"Oh, that's easily explained. I told you already I had to get away from from Scotland. America seemed the easiest and the quickest from Glasgow. And when I got here I found some good friends who have stuck to me. I made a good living; I know exactly where I am, and what my prospects are. The only change I shall ever made is to that cottage on the Clyde I told you about last night."

She smiled bravely across the intervening space at him, and he met her eyes with understanding sympathy.

"How long—if I may venture to ask the question—how long before you expect to migrate to Hunter's Quay?"

She drew in her breath with a little catch.

"In another three years I'm hoping to be able to do it. Mother and Mamie, they are working and saving too. I get two letters a week from them. I had one to-day. Have you written home yet?"

"No," he answered heavily. 'wrote on the boat, before we landed, the last night I spent on her. I am waiting. I must wait until I have something definite to tell them."

"Yes, of course; but they'll be very anxious," she said, and waited half a moment. But when he did not respond, she rose and, from a drawer in the little oak bureau, took out some photographs.

"The two I'm working for," she said, as she handed him the pictures—one of an elderly lady with a sweet face framed in a widow's cap, and ore of a little hump-backed girl with the pinched, thin face and haunting eyes so often seen in those who suffer.

"They're all I have in the world, and I'm all they have, but God is taking care of them for me til! I go back."

Rankine, more moved than he dared show, regarded the pictures with reverent eyes.

"You are a good woman. May you get your heart's desire!" he said quickly.

"And you yours!" she made answer. Whereat he rose rather abruptly and said he must not trespass on her time or hospitality longer.

She understood that a wave of remembrance had swept over him. Her deep eyes grew very pitiful. When the door closed, and she was quite alone, she sat quite a long time without putting in another stitch.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Friendship is a Sheltering Tree

Judith Rankine, curled up on the window seat of a little old-world house in Cambridge, was knitting her brows over a letter which had come in by the forenoon post.

It was not a long letter, and most certainly it contained nothing she wished to know beyond the assurance that Alan was quite well and working hard. But what he was working at, or whether he was achieving any success in that work, were the two points conspicuous by their absence of assurance.

It was November now, and all these months, although they had never been left absolutely without news of their dear vagabond, it was only news of sorts, and did nots atisfy.

There was undoubtedly something absent from these letters, some note of hope and definiteness which had, more than once, laid an ice-cold hand on Judy's heart.

"Now, I wonder," she murmured to herself, "whether Carlotta has got one to-day, and whether it is like that? I'd give much to know."

She read it all over again—from the mysterious Forty-second Street address to the signature—and then began to weep.

"There's something wrong! Something frightfully, hideously wrong! I'll have to go to Carlotta."

As she sprang up the door opened to reveal Christy, who had waited for what she considered a decent time before she came to inquire for him who was undoubtedly the dearest of her bantlings.

"Well, Miss Judy, an' hoo is he the day; an' when is he coming back?"

There was a monotony about Christy's inquiries, and she persisted in talking of Alan's journey as if it were a mere pleasure trip, a sort of grand tour of the world, such as young gentlemen of his class were wont to take in the old days before their education could be considered complete. It was admittedly difficult for an old retainer to associate the idea of serious or paid work being performed by a member of the family had served for two generations.

"He is quite well, Christy; but oh, I wish I know what he's doing, and that I could see him. I'm not comfortable or happy in my mind, Christy. I've got a horrid, sickening feeling that there's something very wrong."

"When is Miss Carlotty coming doon?" inquired Christy. "As like as not she'll ken mair."

It was an unwilling admission, and it had taken Carlotta a long time, and all her charm to win the suffrages of the hard-faced old woman who had mothered Stair. But she had won, and Christy, on the last quiet Sunday Carlotta had spent in the little house at Cambridge, had confided to Judy that "she wasna half bad, an' that, efter a', the laird micha ha dune waur."

Thereat Judy had laughed, and passed on the judicious commendation to Carlotta, who had received it with a starting tear.

"Carlotta is too tired to go anywhere on Sundays now, Christy. They're killing her up there in London with two performances three times a week, and rehearsals for the new piece. I thought her looking thin and tired the last time I saw her and I think I'll go up at 12.30. It isn't a matinee day, and I'll perhaps be fortunate enough to catch her. She's given up society functions for the time being, thank goodness, so, if she isn't rehearsing, she'll be at home."

Now that she had something definite to do, Judy seemed to wake up. To say that she was happy in Cambridge would hardly be true. Adaptable, both in nature and habit, she did her best to settle down, and not to grizzle. But the life was narrow, the house small, the lack of definite interest appalling.

Judy was undergoing that acute form of mental suffering—the forced inactivity of mind. She had made some friends, for Claude was both fond and proud of his sister, and had brought his own circle about the house. Then certain Scotch professors—some of them of high standing—and their wives had called, and there was a modest amount of social life.

CHALLENGING THE STATE

The coal miners of Cape Breton have hurled defiance at the Government and have challenged constituted authority. At a mass-meeting of the men held yesterday, it was agreed almost unanimously to forward what is pointedly called an ultimatum to the federal and provincial police and the federal troops are not withdrawn before midnight, the miners will join the steel workers and lay down their tools.

No Government could afford to submit to such a threat from a single group of workers, however equitable might be their demands. The soldiers and the police have been sent to Sydney by the federal and provincial authorities for the protection of life and property, and to check that lawlessness that is the corollary of inflamed speeches, the stirring of angry passions and the incitement to rebellion. By taking control of the plant of the British Empire Steel Corporation, the troops have restored quiet after two nights of wild rioting and dangerous unrest; and to withdraw the guardians of the peace would be to invite a recurrence of those scenes that occurred previous to the reading of the Riot Act.

By the demand for the withdrawal of the troops and the police, the miners declare, in effect, that they regard the militia as the weapon which the employers are able to command in their struggle with the men. Such a theory is vicious and harmful. The people of Canada have faith in the officers and men who are the guardians of peace, and only a prejudiced few will accept the clap-trap that they are recruited on the side of Capitalism for the upholding of the tyranny of one side in an industrial dispute. The militia are not at Sydney to take sides, to favor the cause of the employer or the men in their dispute. They are there as the representatives of the people of Canada to maintain that peacefulness which cannot exist if there is defiance of authority.

The citizens of this Dominion will not withdraw the troops because a handful of miner in Sydney, egged on by men of extreme views and dominated by an organization of largely alien control think that they are in the way. There is only one way for the miners and the steel workers to remove the troops and the police, and that is by showing that they have done with the dangerous dynamite of red doctrine, with these experiments in violent agitation, and that they return quietly to their homes.

(8) The new company is to undertake to effect the most economical operation possible. To this end it will reorganize the present organization and out of the proceeds of the Bonds provide such improved equipment etc., as will result in substantial reductions in the present cost of operations.

It is roughly estimated that the $11,000,000 of bonds will be used as follows—

During 1922	$3,000,000.00
" 1923	2,000,000.00
" 1924	1,500,000.00
" 1925	1,300,000.00
" 1926	1,000,000.00
" 1927	1,000,000.00
" 1928	1,000,000.00
" 1929	2,000.00
	$11,000,000.00

The annual interest ost of the above Bonds to the Government will be as follows:

During 1922	$210,000.00
" 1923	350,000.00
" 1924	455,000.00
" 1925	546,000.00
" 1926	616,000.00
" 1928	756,000.00
" 1929 and after	770,000.00

The real effect of this plan is that the interest payments in the future will practically be an additional subsidy. In the meantime, however, the railway subsidy for mail carrying should be substantially increased and, if so, the amount of such increase will be deducted from the monthly payments of about $250,000 to be asked under the tentative plan.

The disposition of the proceeds of $11,000,000 over the eight years, it is roughly estimated will be as follows:

	IMPROVEMENTS	DEFICITS
Year to June 30, 1923	$1,000,000	$2,000,000
" " " " 1923	1,000,000	1,000,000
" " " " 1924	1,000,000	500,000
" " " " 1925	1,000,000	300,000
" " " " 1926	1,000,000	No Loss
" " " " 1927	1,000,000	"
" " " " 1928	1,000,000	"
" " " " 1929	200,000	Probable profit ($200,000)
	$7,200,000	$3,800,000

Total $11,000,000

It is probable that the Bonds to be sold in 1922 may not be $3,000,000 but this matter can be better considered when the detailed programme of expenditures are properly mapped out. This has not been properly mapped out. This has not been prepared up to the present moment.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY STATISTICS, ETC., JUNE, 1921.

Important Points to be Prominently Kept in Mind.

Estimated loss 1920-21 (June 30th) excluding depreciation and interest charges	$1,650,000
Estimated loss 1921-22 excluding depreciation and interest charges	2,000,000
Estimated loss 1922-23 excluding depreciation and interest charges	1,000,000
Loss sustained by Reid Nfld. Company from 1901 to June 30, 1920	6,000,000
Total spent in Railway operations by Reid Nfld. Company from 1901 to 1920	7,000,000

Loss steadily increased and war conditions increased loss many times pre-war loss.

Impossibility of continuing on present basis is apparent.

BONDS GUARANTEED INTEREST PAYABLE BY GOVT.

Issue $11,000,000 25 years 7% Bonds.

Bonds to be sold as follows:

	BONDS	INTEREST PER YEAR
During 1922	$3,000,000	$210,000
" 1923	2,000,000	350,000
" 1924	1,500,000	455,000
" 1925	1,300,000	546,000
" 1926	1,000,000	616,000
" 1927	1,000,000	686,000
" 1928	1,000,000	756,000
" 1929	200,000	770,000
Total	$11,000,000
Annual interest after 1929		$77,000

In the event of the Railway Company reaching the stage of being able to make a profit, any division of profits should be on the basis of one half to the Government and one half to the Railway Company. If any Sinking Fund should be provided, it should not be accumulated until after, say the tenth year or about 1932.

Tentative revised estimated loss from 1901 to June 30, 1920, also actual money supplied by the Reid Newfoundland Company in connection with the operating of the railroad:—

ESTIMATED LOSS FROM 1901 TO JUNE 30, 1920.

Loss in operation to June 30, 1920, before allowing for depreciation and interest say	$4,200,000
Depreciation accumulation should be at least	1,200,000
Interest paid to June 30, 1920	600,000
	$6,000,000

ACTUAL MONEY SUPPLIED BY REID NEWFOUNDLAND COMPANY FROM 1901 TO JUNE 30, 1920.

Losses as above	$6,000,000
Less depreciation balance	1,200,000
	$4,800,000
Expenditure on Capital Account, say	2,100,000
Total Cash supplied by Reid Newfoundland Company upon no return whatever has been received	$6,900,000

ESTIMATED OPERATING LOSS 1920-1921

Loss Before Allowing for Depreciation and Interest

Loss per accounts 9 months ended March 31, 1921	$1,200,000
Estimated loss for April, 1921	150,000
Estimated loss for May, 1921	150,000
Estimated loss for June, 1920	150,000
Estimated loss for year ending June 30, 1921, before allowing for depreciation and interest	$1,650,000

POSSIBLE ADVANTAGES FOR YEAR 1921-22

Cheaper coal.
Increase due to higher passenger rates.
Increase due to higher freight rates.
Saving due to reduction in wages.
Less severe winter than season 1920-1921.

POSSIBLE DISADVANTAGES FOR YEAR 1921-1922.

Less volume in freight.
Smaller number of passengers.
Curtailment of operations at Grand Falls.
Less pulpwood moving.
Increased local water competition.
Increased foreign water competition.
More severe winter than season 1920-1921.

LOSS BEFORE CHARGING DEPRECIATION INTEREST PAID AND ALLOWING FOR OTHER ADJUSTMENTS FROM 1901 to 1920.

Period	Loss
21 months to June 30, 1903	$ 92,000.00
12 " " " 1904	92,000.00
12 " " " 1905	109,000.00
12 " " " 1906	112,000.00
12 " " " 1907	155,000.00
12 " " " 1908	162,000.00
12 " " " 1909	71,000.00
12 " " " 1910	19,000.00
12 " " " 1911	34,000.00
12 " " " 1912	133,000.00
12 " " " 1913	136,000.00
12 " " " 1914	206,000.00
12 " " " 1915	201,000.00
12 " " " 1916	167,000.00
12 " " " 1917	141,000.00
12 " " " 1918	346,000.00
12 " " " 1919	688,000.00
12 " " " 1920	1,335,000.00
Total loss 1901 before allowing for depreciation interest and other adjustments	$4,189,000.00

Above figures would be greatly increased if all proper charges had been included. The actual loss would be about $1,800,000 in excess of the total of the above, making a total of $5,989,000 or say $6,000,000.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY CASH REQUIREMENTS FOR SIX MONTHS JULY 1, TO DECEMBER 31, 1921.
June 1921.

On basis of Operating Cost as per accounts for six months to December 31, 1920 (last year), and allowing for the cash to purchase necessary coal for Railway and steamers to be delivered before December 31, 1921 (for season 1921-22) also for necessary improvements (on minimum basis), the cash requirement will be approximately	$1,512,797.30
Or a monthly payment, commencing July 1, 1921, of	$ 250,000.00

Details of the above computation are attached.

CASH REQUIREMENTS FOR OPERATION OF RAILWAY (INCLUDING STEAMERS COAL) FROM JULY 1, 1921, TO DECEMBER 31, 1921.

SUMMARY

Operating expenses for six months ended Dec. 31, 1920, as per accounts	$1,570,560.67
Deduct Fuel delivered to locomotive during the period	404,180.03
Operating expenses excluding Locomotive Fuel	$1,166,380.64
Add Fuel to be paid for during July to December, 1921, 62,540 tons at $12.00—including steamer's fuel. This fuel has to be purchased and delivered before January and it supplies the needs up to June, 1922	730,248.00
Cash expenses including Fuel requirements	$1,896,628.64
Less Estimated Earnings for six months to Dec. 31, 1921, 50 p.c. of same period during 1920 which were $958,724.52	479,362.26
Net cash required for operating during six months to December 31, 1921	$1,417,266.38
Add usual additions and improvements estimated as equal to those made during similar six months in 1920	45,530.92
Add very necessary Bridge Additions and Improvements as per statement	50,000.00
	$1,512,797.30

Monthly payments commencing July 1st, 1921, say—$250,000.

STATEMENT SHOWING RAILROAD EXPENSES AND EARNINGS JULY 1, 1920, TO JANUARY 1, 1921.

What Proposal Involved

This proposal, stated shortly, was that the Government should allow the Reids to form a new company to operate the railway system, with a capital stock of five million dollars, and raise bonds of eleven millions on the property, principal and interest to be guaranteed by the Government, the profits should any accrue, to be divided equally between the holders of the common stock, who would be the Reids, and the Government. The bonds would run for 25 years, the interest would be 7 per cent. the anuual interest cost to the Government would grow gradually from $120,000 in 1922 to $770,000 in 1929 and every year after until 1947, when the bonds would mature. There was also the provision for a substantial increase in the railway subsidy for carrying the mails. The existing Reid management would remain though we had an assurance, for whatever it was worth, that it would be "reorganized," the reorganization, of course, to be carried out by the Reids themselves. I need not say that we declined to consider any such proposal, and resolved instead, upon the policy of putting Mr. Morgan in charge.

In May of last year, as will be remembered, the Reids notified us that from lack of funds they would be obliged to cease operations unless we furnished them with money, and on our refusal to do so they shut down the railroad and left thec ountry for nearly a fortnight without any railway service whatever. But their attempt to extract money from us in that fashion failed as previous attempts had failed, and the utmost we undertook to do was to provide certain sums as certified by the Auditor General and put them in credit for a special account in the Bank of Montreal, from which they could be drawn only by the authority of the Auditor General whose department undertook audit control of railway operations.

Similar Situation

I remarked previously that in every respect I could find an appreciably similar case in Canada's railway problem. Take for instance this matter of the Reids notifying us in May, 1922, that they were without money to carry on and would have to suspend operations in consequence. The debates of the Canadian House of Commons for March 20, 1919, shows that on that day Sir Thomas White, acting premier, introduced resolutions for the appointment of a Receiver for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. These resolutions are lengthy. I do not propose to quote them in full, but there is one paragraph which is very significant. It sets out that on March 4, 1919, the Vice President of the said Company wrote a letter to the Minister of Finance of Canada in the following terms:

"I am instructed to inform the Government that in view of the fact that the increased rates applicable to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway have not been sufficient to meet the increased operating expenses, it will not be possible for that company to continue its operations when the present funds have been exhausted, which will be about the 10th inst."

Amount In Question

Another paragraph shows that "the present funds" mentioned above, were a sum of $7,471,393 advanced during the year to that Railway for certain purposes including the meeting of "deficit in operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway system, such sum being in addition to other large sums previously advanced under previous authority for similar purposes." Three years later, in May of 1922, the Reid Company confronted us with a somewhat similar letter drafted, I have no doubt from this letter of the Grand Trunk Railway to the Canadian Government and with the same idea, namely, that of extracting money from the Government for railway operations. In Canada the Government answered by throwing the railroad into the hands of a Receiver, and ultimately, taking it away from that Company altogether and making it a link in the National system of railways. Here we did not go so far. We arranged for a joint operation of the railroad for a certain period and continued it at subsequent periods so as to cover the twelve months terminating on the 30th day of June instant. In considering this matter we had in view the negotiations then pending with respect to the Humber enterprise, so thought it best to continue the joint control until the fact of the industrial development programme had been determined.

Now let me continue the comparison with the railway situation in Canada. The Canadian Government, when it was faced with an acute railroad problem of its own in the later stages of the War, attempted Commission control as we did and operated the system of Government railroads for two or three years by a commission of twelve gentlemen selected from the different Provinces, the member from Nova Scotia being Colonel Thos. Cantley, for many years President of the Nova Scotia Steel Company and well known in Newfoundland because of his frequent visits to Bell Island Iron Mines. That experiment did not meet the requirements of Canada, any more than it did with us, and the Canadian Government was driven, as were we, to seek an efficient practical railroader to take charge of the undertaking. It thinks it has found such a person in Sir Henry Thornton, previously General Manager of the Great Eastern Railway in England. He was induced to come to Canada last year, and was given full charge of the railroad system. He is now operating the Canadian National Railways with a free hand from the Government to do anything he thinks well in the effort to make these railways a paying proposition. It may be interesting at this stage to examine some aspects of the problem which confronts Canada in regard to its railways.

Canada's Problem

The Montreal Star published during March, 1922, several articles on Canada's Railway Problem. The articles were the work of Mr. J. L. Payne, formerly Statistical Expert of the Canadian Department of Railways, and Canals. Several years ago Mr. Payne was retired under the age limit by the Canadian Government after having spent over 50 years in its public service. Mr. Payne showed that in the year 1920 the Canadian National or Government Railways admitted a deficit of $70,331,735, but he contended that the amount would be nearly twice that by correct accounting because the official statement omitted charges that would be as genuine and necessary for correct accounting as those which had been included to make up that sum, as, for instance, the interest on the amounts which were raised to meet deficits and to provide betterment.

For those who think that we have been imprudent, injudicious and extravagant in our handling of the railway problem in this country, let me quote from his article. He says of the Canadian Northern, or Mackenzie and Mann system: "In 1918 it had a shortage of $11,674,187 after all fixed charges had been paid, and then the Government took it over. It was of course hopelessly bankrupt. What happened in the next two years? By the end of 1920 there was a deficit of $34,074,847. That is, the adverse balance by nearly 200 percent. By every fair test the Canadian Northern Railway system was in desperately bad shape for five years before the Government took possession of it, and it yielded infinitely worse results afterwards."

Says Use of Insulin Helps In Tuberculosis

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., June 21 (AP)—"The discovery of insulin for the cure of diabetes by Dr. F. G. Banting of Toronto, Canada, may be considered a great aid in the anti-tuberculosis campaign," said Dr. W. D. Sansum of the Potter Metabolic Clinic, Santa Barbara, Cal., today at the nineteenth annual meeting of the National Tuberculosis Association now in session in this city. "A good many cases of tuberculosis are also diabetic. Heretofore the treatment of diabetes meant a severe diet, often causing undernourishment, although the treatment of tuberculosis calls for the best nourishment possible. Cases affected with both diseases have in the past been nearly hopeless."

The use of insulin, Doctor Sansum pointed out, now frees such patients from all diabetic symptoms, and if tuberculosis is present, this may be treated with the best general diet that the market affords. One patient under the care of Dr. Sansum gained 35 pounds, and now weighs 15 pounds more than he ever has weighed. In every one of his tuberculosis diabetic cases, laboratory findings have shown progressive improvement. "It now appears," said Dr. Sansum, "that such patients have the same chance of recovery as have similar patients without diabetes."

GOETTINGEN, May 28 (AP)—The "shadow of the gallows" fell across the marriage altar at an unique wedding which occurred here recently. The bride was a daughter of a man sentenced to death, and both best man and bridesmaid were under similar sentences.

The groom had been condemned only to 20 years imprisonment. All four were fugitive Flemish who had been convicted by the Belgians because of certain Flemish tendencies and pro-Germanism.

Governor Assents to Bills To-Day

When the House of Assembly adjourned yesterday afternoon till Tuesday next, the Prime Minister announced that in the interim His Excellency the Governor would probably be ready to give formal assent to the Humber Development and Railway Settlement Bills, in which event the House would be called together by the Speaker. His Honor has summoned the House to meet at 3 o'clock this afternoon, when His Excellency will attend at the Legislative Council Chamber and give Royal assent to the two measures which have occupied practically all the time of the Legislature up to the present, and on which the future welfare of Newfoundland so largely depends.

To-day, therefore, sees the actual inauguration of the two most important undertakings with which the two branches of our Legislature have ever been called upon to deal.

France and the Washington Treaty

The ratification of the Washington Treaty by the French Senate by an almost uanimous vote, long delayed though it has been, marks another step, it is to be hoped, in the clearing up of the European imbroglio. For many months France has been the central figure on the political stage of Europe, for on her actions and decisions depend great issues. That she has at last ratified the Limitations of Armament Treaty, and that without reservations, must give the other Allied nations cause for hope that the republic will not remain as indifferent to the interests of the other powers of the Entente as her stand on the question of Ruhr occupation has seemed to indicate. In this connection, France's reply to the British proposal to frame an allied answer to the German Reparations Note will be awaited with interest. Viewing the matter sentimentally, there are few who will be found inclined to direct either blame or censure towards France for her uncompromising attitude towards her old enemy, but on the other hand, there are far greater and more important considerations at the present time than either sentiment or revenge, both which, it must be admitted, played a large part in influencing the momentuous step taken by France in the occupation of the Ruhr. However justified that invasion may be, legally and morally, however great the provocation may have been, it is open to question whether France's attitude is an advisable one even in her own interests. That it is prejudicial to the interests of the other European nations and particularly so to those of Britain there seems to be no room for doubt. It certainly does not make for the establishment of international peace and the prolonging of the chaos which has reigned thruout the European continent since the termination of the war and the consequent delaying of the economic recovery of the countries of Europe means the paralyzing of British trade and the indefinite postponement of the time when Britain will be able to collect her war debts.

Another phase of the question is, of course, Germany's ability or inability to pay the reparations which France now seeks to recover by force and which the republic is really in sore need of to rebuild the structure of her own trade and commerce to say nothing of the rehabilitation of her devastated areas. In the Ruhr Valley is to be found perhaps the greatest industrial hive in the whole world. Here are located factories to the value of a billion dollars turning out millions of tons of finished steel products of every description while the coal mines of the same territory produce fuel sufficient to supply the needs of half a dozen countries. When we couple with this the twenty-five cents a day paid to German working men as against the four and five dollars paid in the labor markets of such industrial centres as Great Britain and the United States, we cannot but realize that Germany in a very few years will literally have the world by the throat economically. That day will be hastened if it is found possible to evade reparation payments and inveigle her creditors into the belief that she is still wallowing in the throes of bankruptcy.

Whether the ratification of the armaments treaty have much or little effect on the general muddle, there is at least the consolation that so far as the settlement of international difficulties and differences is concerned the step is a forward and not a backward one.

Strike Settlement Negotiations

The Sydney strike situation has developed to a stage where a strike solution may be possible, even probable, if it were not for the fact that military forces occupy the strike area and that the strike leaders, McLachlan and Livingstone, are under arrest pending trial at Halifax.

The pronouncement of Mr. John Lewis, President of the Mine Workers' Union of America, wherein he definitely stated the Cape Breton strike was a violation of the agreement entered into by the workmen and the B. E. S. Co., as well as a violation of the principles of the International Union, would reasonably be expected to counsel the advisability of the strikers returning to work; as the Cape Breton local unions, irrespective of the advice of local leaders, would see the unwisdom of defying the President of their international organization. Such a course of defiance of high authority could not but result in the inevitable disorganization of the international body of unionism, and would certainly debar the strikers from any fund allowances forthcoming in the ordinarily approved strike periods.

It would therefore appear that the Sydney situation is not only critical from considerations as between the strikers on the one hand, and the Government and the B. E. S. Co. on the other hand. It has precipitated a very strained relationship between the Cape Breton local unions and the general organization of America, of which these local unions are only a part.

The Sydney strikers too quickly followed the leadership of men, who, apart from the unwisdom of acting without the consent of their international heads, overstepped the line of propriety by alleged appeals to strikers, which have landed them under the custody of Canadian law officers.

Now, the strikers themselves are placed in the disconcerting position of deciding as between their loyalty to their international authorities or loyalty to their local advisers.

Loyalty to local leaders, Mr.Lachlan and Livingstone, as expressed by the practical ultimatum issued to the Canadian authorities respecting the withdrawal of Crown forces and the release of the leaders, amounts to defiance of governmental measures for the ensuring of peace and the protection of a great industrial property.

Will the local unions submit to the International demand for return of the strikers to work?

Will the Canadian Government acquiesce to the demand for withdrawal of forces from the strike area and the release of McLachlan and Livingstone?

On their decisions will largely depend not merely a most serious future for one of Canada's greatest industrial plants, but may seriously affect our country as well.

The presence of Premier Armstrong in Sydney gives reason to hope that an early compromise may be possible out of the present maze of difficulties, and the appeal of the Canadian Minister of Labour on behalf of the workingmen may bring all parties concerned to view the situation impartially and with a sense of justice.

Trade With Newfoundland

(Financi al Post)

In connection with the complaints of importers in Newfoundland, that Canada has no trade representative there while the U.S. Consul is actively looking after American business interests, F. C. T. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce has written to The Financial Post declaring that "although Canada's exports to Newfoundland have increased, there has been a great falling off in purchases from the United States." Mr. O'Hara declares that the closing of the trade commissioner's office in Newfoundland in 1921, after sixteen years' experience has been justified.

It will be noted in the accompanying figure that in 1921, the year when the Canadian trade commissioner's office in Newfoundland was closed, imports from Canada were $14,841,561 compared with $18,767,238 in the previous year, but total imports fell from $40,533,388 to $28,909,727 in the same period, while purchases from the United States declined from $15,414,067 to $9,556,244. Mr. O'Hara points out that from 1912 down and including 1919 the imports from the United States into Newfoundland were greater than from Canada, but 1920 to 1922 inclusive the imports from Canada were larger than from the United States, also that the ratio in favor of Canada increased during these three years.

With further reference to the policy of the department of trade and commerce, Mr. O'Hara says that "so far as not having any trade commissioner is concerned, experience has proved that the expense of maintaining a commissioner in Newfoundland was not justified; practically all the business of Newfoundland is done in St. John's, he says, and the city has a population of a trifle over 37,000; the population of the whole Island is less than 260,000. The policy of sending a junior trade commissioner to Newfoundland, he adds, "enables the department to keep in sufficiently close touch with developments there."

All this, however, does not alter the fact that a representative of The Financial Post while in St. John's, received complaints that Canadian trade service was lacking and that conditions in this respect were favorable to the United States. The comparative figures of Newfoundland's imports may appear favorable to Canada, but in view of conditions there with the total imports reduced more than 50 per cent, between 1920 and 1922 the conclusion from statistics are not necessarily conclusive.

It is evdent that Newfoundland's purchasing power has been greatly curtailed by changed conditions which have particularly affected the fishing industry. However, this depression should not continue indefinitely and it is to be hoped that Hon. Mr. Robb, who has been putting aggressive business methods into his department, will closely watch developments to see if the appointment of a trade commissioner to Newfoundland would not be warranted in view of the feeling prevailing that the United States looks after its customers while Canada evidently assumes that orders will be given to Canada because of the British connection. Sentiment in Newfoundland will no doubt favor Canadian products but it is not to be expected that orders will be reserved for Canadian manufacturers if American competitors have a representative on the job ready to give better service.

It will be particularly important that Canadian manufacturers be well represented during the era of development of the country's pulpwood resources which is now opening. This will not only mean the erection of mills, but the supplying of the many needs of a new group of workers.

"Workman" Replies to "A Fisherman's Son."

Contends Fishery Insufficient For Future Requirements of Country.

St. John's,
July 13, 1923.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—I have noticed in your paper of yesterday a letter signed "A Fisherman's Son," in which he takes exception to certain remarks reported as made by a member of the Legislative Council respecting the fisheries.

It is not my intention to slap the fisheries. Quite the opposite. I agree with some of the opinions expressed in yesterday's letter, but there are, I think, lots of people who agree with me that we have heard too much about the fisheries, and that we have been depending too much on the fisheries and not enough on other resources, which, had they been given due attention, would be altogether just as valuable assets as the fishery is.

With all due respect to what the fishey has meant to the country and the country's revenue, I would like to ask the question: What has it meant to the men who have engaged in the fisheries for years?

What is their position to-day? Is it not true that they are in almost the same position to-day as when their fathers started many years ago?

If yesterday's writer contends otherwise, let him show in what respect the fishery provides or can provide for all the needs of the fishermen.

I have no patience with those who look with evident disdain on the fisheries as an occupation. Our fishermen are a type of men of whom a country may well be proud. Their occupation has developed in them the sterling qualities of manhood and daring which would make the people of every country great.

But, when "A Fisherman's Son" talks about fisheries and fisheries only, I am constrained, knowing the failure of the fisheries, to make the fishermen's life much better, to offer the opinion that we must look to other resources as well as the fishery and try to help out that industry by practical development elsewhere.

Yours truly,
WORKINGMEN.

When I peruse the conquer'd fame of heroes and the victories of mighty generals, I do not envy the generals,
Nor the President in his presidency, nor the rich man in his great house,
But when I hear of the brotherhood of lovers, how it was with them,
How together through life, through dangers, odium, unchanging, long and long,
Through youth and through middle and old age, how unfaltering, how affectionate and faithful they were,
Then I am pensive—I hastily walk away fill'd with the bitterest envy.

GREENLAND'S POPULATION

Acording to an official census completed by the Danish Government on Oct. 1, 1921, the results of which have just been made known, consisted of 274 Europeans, practically all Danes, and 14,081 natives. The natives number 6,729 men and 7,352 women. The area of Greenland is estimated at 2,170,000 square bilometres, of which 88,000 square kilometres are free of glaciers. The inhabitants live along the coast and on the adjacent islands that are not covered by glaciers. Commerce and the development of natural resources of the country are carried on as monopolies under the Danish Government and administered by a bureau under the Ministry of Home Affairs. During the calendar year of 1921 exports amounted in value to $620,000; the chief items were fish, furs, whale oil, graphite and cryolite ore.

AT THE CITY HALL

The weekly meeting of the Municipal Council was held yesterday afternoon. Mayor Cook presided and Councillors Outerbridge, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

After the minutes of the lest meeting were read and confirmed, the Mayor referred to the loss sustained by Councillor Dowden in the passing of his brother, the late Alan Dowden, and assured him of the sympathy of his fellow councillors

Councillor Dowden thanked the Board for their expression of sympathy on behalf of himself and relatives of the deceased.

A communication was tabled from the Deputy Colonial Secretary in which he stated that the government was prepared to give the Council the usual guarantee for a loan of $110,000, which will be expended in the following works:

Erection of new sanitary stables; settlement of outstanding claims for lands taken during 1921; protection of the dam at Gull Pond, Windsor Lake, and $50,000 to replace the present structure known as Job's Bridge.

A communication was also read from the manager of the Royal Bank of Canada to the effect that the Bank was prepared to advance the amount referred to.

Deputy Minister of Public Works, Harris, offered a large quantity of quarry spawls, building blocks, etc. The council has already made its contracts for the present season, but the offer will be given consideration, and, in the meantime, the Deputy is to be asked at what price he is prepared to supply the same.

Secretary Harris, of the Football League, in reply to the Council's communication regarding 'blind corner' at the junction of Newtown Rd. and Parade St., stated that same had been given consideration by the League and they were most willing to fall in line with the suggestion made. It was therefore ordered that the city engineer arrange to replace the board fence with wire. This, it is thought, will be an improvement, and eliminate what has been in the past a source of great danger to motor and other vehicular traffic.

The application of the British Aerated Water Company for an increased water supply will be acceded to, provided the company agrees to the usual extra charge for samp.

The Newfoundland Motor Association wrote in regard to the new traffic regulations, particularly that section dealing with the limited time for parking motor cars on Water Street. This, together with the petition received at last meeting from the taxi drivers, will be taken up at a special meeting.

Solicitors T. P. Halley, McGrath & McGrath, and C.J. Fox asked settlement of claims or their respective clients for lands expropriated for street widening purposes. These matters are at present under consideration, and will be dealt with as soon as possible.

The applications of the several brigades for permission to hold band-concerts in the city parks came up for discussion, and it was decided that the following nights be set apart for this purpose:

Bannerman—Tuesday and Thursday.

Victoria—Monday and Friday.

The matter of selection of nights for the respective bands will be finalized by the City Clerk.

The question of Mobile water power was the subject of considerable discussion. The Engineering Staff are now arranging for a survey of same.

Attention was called to the vacant property east of C. P. Eagan's Grocery, Duckworth Street, and the owners are to be notified to have a fence erected immediately.

Reference was made to other vacant lands in the city, and it was ordered that the owners be requested to have suitable fences erected.

The following communications were then read:

From Jonas Barter, Agent. S. P. C. A., complaining of the condition of Pleasant Street, LeMarchant and Munday Pond Roads and also Signal Hill Road.

From Messrs Colin Campbell, Ltd., asking that the vacant land in front of their premises be given attention;

From T. W. Collingwood, re the condition of the sidewalk, Allandale Road;

F. R. Emerson, asking that certain work in connection with the Dickenson memorial be undertaken by the Council.

All of the foregoing matters were referred to the city engineer for attention.

The following plans were passed subject to the approval of the City Engineer and conditional upon the applicants' conforming to the Municipal regulations: Dwelling, A. Payne, Mayor Ave.; Garage, H. Outer bridge, Circular Road.

The report of the City Health Officer for the week showed 12 new cases of Scarlet Fever and 1 Diphtheria.

Permission was granted Mr. Cornelius Kavanagh to erect outhouse, rear of his premises, 233 New Gower Street.

Reports of the City Engineer, Sanitary Supervisor and other departmental heads were read; and accounts for week ordered paid.

The meeting then adjourned.

MEEHAN & COMPANY,

Modernizing Mexico

The Government of Mexico have decided to spend about $20,000,000 on a huge irrigation scheme. A report from a reliable source in Mexico City is to the effect that the government has concluded arrangements for the construction of a vast irrigation project in the Yaqui River Valley section of the State of Sonora. Work on the project will involve the expenditure of about $20,000,000 and the employment of more than 70,000 laborers. More than 1,500,000 acres will be watered by the network of canals to be constructed, and it is expected that within this zone more wheat will be grown than in all the rest of Mexico. The contract also calls for the building of a railroad. The awarding of this concession, it is explained, is in line with the policy of the Obregon government to develop agriculture in Mexico along modern lines.

The Cause of Heart Trouble
Faulty digestion causes the generation of gases in the stomach which inflate and press on the heart and interfere with its regular action, causing faintness and pain. 15 to 30 drops of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup after meals sets digestion right, which allows the heart to beat full and regular. 50c. and $1.00 bottle at druggists. 9

Returned From The Dead

OTTAWA, June 26.—After an absence of forty years, during which time his relatives had given him up for dead and in which time he roamed through most of this continent, Clement L. Archambault, returned to the city Monday and with some difficulty persuaded his relatives living here that it was no one else but he. After that the fatetd calf was killed.

Naturally, Mr. Archambault finds Ottawa tremendously changed. Ottawa was nothing more than a miniature city when he left, he declares, and Sussex street was the main street then.

Since his departure he has prospected, hunted and travelled all over the country, working chiefly as a railroad man. According to his own admission he had "made his pile." He was now out sight-seeing and was visiting all his relatives. He has two brothers in this city. Mr. Archambault is at present employed with the Great Northern Railway in Seattle.

Prospero on Dock

The Government Coastal Steamship Prospero is still in Dry Dock where repairs are being made by men who handle huge steel plates as the carpenter handles a soft pine board. The damage to the ship is somewhat extensive and means a month or so on dock. About forty-five feet of the keel has to be renewed and thirty feet of the stem. Twenty-eight plates have to be renewed, most of them replacements, a few can be rectified and returned to position. The rudder has to be lifted and new pentals fitted. The propellor has to receive two new blades and the propellor shaft has to be withdrawn. The Engine Room Auxilliary has to be opened up and overhauled. Besides this there are numerous minor jobs, enough to keep a large force of men busy for some time.

Fox Hr. Reports Good Fishery

Dear Mr. Editor,

As it is seldom that the "Advocate" contains anything from this settlement, I would kindly ask permission to let your readers know how we are doing with fish.

Juke's trap has 100 quintals landed, having caught 40 quintals to-day, and there is good fishing with other boats and traps. It promises to be a good voyage for those than risked their money to fit out. If the fishermen can get a good price for their fish, it will be a big year for Fox Harbour, especially with the planters who have been able to fit out themselves, and consequestly own all their voyage.

I take the "Advocate" regularly and I am proud to read the Fishermen's Paper.

Yours very truly,
UNION SUPPORTER.

Fox Harbour,
July 0th, 1923.

Revisit Native Land

Amongst the passengers by the S. S. Silvia were Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Gushue of Cleveland, Ohio, who are revisiting their native land after an absence of some thirty years. Mr. Gushue is a son of the late Captain Michael Gushue of Harbour Grace, and Mrs. Gushue was formerly a Miss Wade of Conception Harbour.

After a fortnight revisiting once familiar scenes, and, attending to business incidental to Mr. Gushue's property interests in Conception Bay, return to their adopted land will be taken. Mr. and Mrs. Gushue are rejoiced to see the old homeland once again, and will meet cordial welcome from their relatives and friends of the days of "auld lang syne." The late Mr. Daniel Joseph Green, of Harbour Grace, was, we believe, a cousin of Mr. Gushue.

A MEASLY PRACTICE

How Working Girls Are Being Done Out of Their Pay.

The police tell us a story of a so-called business man in the East End of this city, who has for some time been carrying on a practice which he evidently thinks is clever.

He hires girls to work for him and at the expiration of the first week of their service he puts off paying them on some pretext or other till the following week. At the end of the second week something is framed on the girls and they are discharged with out receiving a cent of pay for their two weeks work.

These girls have time and again called at the Court to see if they could not get their money by legal action but on enquiry it has been found that the stock in trade of this "business-man" is imported through the agency of another company who retain the ownership throughout, so that the procurer of free labor would have nothing to meet a judgment in the event of a civil action.

The police are keping their eyes on this cheap skate, and while he might be able for a time to get away with the game he is playing, he should remember that there are more ways than one of putting a stop to a practice that is palpably illegal.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT

A 24 year old barber of Kilbride, drunk was discharged.

A 25 year old seaman of Tessier Place given in charge by his father for being drunk and disorderly in his house, was discharged.

A 37 year old laborer of Port Blandford charged with deserting his wife and five children since March 25th and not having contributed to their support since that date was remanded for eight days.

A 66 year old cooper, who has no home and was taken in for safe-keeping was remanded to the Penitentiary.

A 36 year old laborer of Wickford Street given in charge by his wife for using threatening language towards her was put under bonds in $100.

A 24 year old housewife of George's St. charged with being drunk was discharged.

A 30 year old laborer of Water St., West charged with refusing to support his wife and children and refusing to obey a sumons will be attended to by Probation Officer Noseworthy.

A motorist was charged with driving a car at a speed dangerous to the public. The hearing was postponed till Monday.

A young man charged with driving a motor car without having got his license renewed had to pay costs and take out his license immediately.

Five boys charged with maliciously breaking glass in the windows of the Congregational Church, will come before Court this afternoon.

Weather Reports

The following reports were received by the Marine and Fisheries Department yesterday:—

Cape Harrison, Smokey, Grady:—Fresh N.E. winds, dense fog.

Domino, Flat Islands:—Light North winds, cloudy, good sign of fish.

Battle Hr.:—Calm, showery, sign of fish.

Nipper's Hr.:—Fresh . Southwest winds, fair and warm, no fish.

The Glencoe left Burgeo at 9.20 a.m. yesterday. Passengers for the S.W. Coast will leave St. John's Saturday morning to make connections.

PERSONAL

Amongst the many business agents from abroad, there is one who is exceedingly popular, Mr. F. I. Whelan, of Boston, representing the Carter Ink Co. of this city. Mr. Whelan has a great liking for Newfoundland and its people. He will be leaving for his home by the Silvia to-morrow.

Good Fishery at Belle Isle and French Shore

Reports from Belle Isle., the Gray Islands and other places on the French Shore are to the effect that fish is plentiful and that schooners are doing exceptionally well. At Belle Isle several vessels are already nearly loaded and others are fast making up their loads at the Gray Islands. From Goose Cape to Cape Norman fish is plentiful in deep water and the prespects are exceptionally good.

Silvia's Outward Passengers

The Silvia sails at noon to-morrow for Halifax and New York taking the following passengers:—H. P. Hudson, W. F. Gilling, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Harris, C. G. Reynold, Miss Evelyn Lockyer, Miss Bride Dunphy, Miss J. E. Dove, Mrs. H. Zaniro, Miss J. Thorne, Mr. and Mrs. F. Huffman, J. Hillyer, M., Hillyer, H. Cummings, R. M. Stagg, Geo. B. Scarborough, J. Casket Had No Body

In connection with the landing at Trepassey by the schooner Silver Oak of a casket reported to contain a corpse, the following contradiction has been received by the Deputy Minister of Customs:

"Coffin landed here by Captain Power of Marystown was opened in presence of Constable Quinlan, nothing found in it. Coffin was hardwood, lead covered."

Presumably the coffin was being sent to someone and was washed off the deck of a schooner in the recent heavy gales. It is thought by some to have come from the wreck of the Marvale.

Will Be Arrested To-day

We understand the motor car thief who took Hon. T. Bona's car frm the R. C. Cathedral yard some evenings ago and ditched it over Doyle's Bridge on the Goulds Road will be placed under arrest this afternoon. It is said the accused was giving some lady friends a joy ride when the car left the road and was wrecked.

LOCAL ITEMS

A letter received from Offer Wadhams, Fogo District, states there has been a fair sign of fish with hook and line.

Two Ministers at Loggerheads

Attempt to Hand Over Land to C. N. R. Causes Row.

TORONTO, July .—A post-election battle between Hon. W. E. Raney and Hon. Beniah Bowman has resulted through the latter's refusal to submit to a proposal of the old U. F. O. Government, that court action be agreed to, looking to the handing over to the Canadian National railways some 3,000 square miles of the best remaining timber lands in New Ontario.

In 1917 Hon. G. H. Ferguson refused the grant by reason of non fulfillment of contract. Since then numerous applications have been made to the government with representations that if the grant itself is not to be made by this government, a fiat should be issued permitting the C. N. R. to sue in the courts for the 3,000 square miles. An alternative proposal was that the province should agree to the reference of a stated case to the courts.

Premier Drury and Attorney-General Raney favored either one or other of the above proposals. Hon. Beniah Bowman as minister of Crown Lands has steadfastly resisted their suggestion.

Last Friday, the flies were sent to the Attorney-General. Accompanying the files was sent a memorandum, the latter paragraphs of which read:

"Since this government has not been returned, the responsibility for continuing negotiations should undoubtedly rest with the incoming administration and I disapprove of any action being taken now." This was signed by Mr. Bowman.

Yesterday afternoon the minister of lands and forests sent another memo to Mr. Raney asking that any instructions which may have been given to Hon. Mr. Rowell and G. W. Mason be cancelled as the whole matter should be left for the decision of the incoming Government. This note is said to be in even stronger terms than the one quoted above.

The block of land involved is some two million acres in extent along the C. N. R., north East of the Mississauga forest, reserve. It is held now, by the Dept. of Land and Forests, that the province is entitled to the recovery of these lands and the equivalent value of the timber cut therefrom.

Winston Churchill Wins Two Apologies

LONDON, July 5.—Lord Rothermere's Evening News, and Socialist Daily Herald yesterday tendered unreserved apologies to Winston Churchill, former Secretary of State for the Colonies, when he sued them yesterday for libel regarding his expenses visiting Egypt as Colonial Secretary. They inferred that he spent over £4,000 on seven persons' expenses, whereas the money represented the amount spent on more than seventy people who had been invited to Cairo by the government for a conference to discuss this country's future policy in the Middle East.

Counsel stated that Mr. Churchill had himself paid £300 for his wife's expenses. The defendants on learning the facts had instantly published a retraction having, been misled by a hasty reading of the blue book.

A-Wearyin' For You

Justa a-wearyin' for you,
All the time a-feelin' blue,
Wishin' for you, wonderin' when
You'll be comin' home again.
Restless, don't know what to do.
Just a-wearyin for you.

Room's so lonesome, with your chair
Empty by the fireplace there,
Just can't stand the sight o' it;
Go out doors and roam a bit;
But the woods is lonesome, too,
Just a-wearyin' for you.

Comes the wind with sounds that's jes'
Like the rustlin' o' your dress;
An' the dew on flower an' tree
Twinkles like your steps to me;
Violets, like your eyes so blue—
Just a-wearyin' for you.

Mornin' comes, the birds awake
Used to sing so for your sake;
But there's sadness in their notes
That comes trillin' from their throats;
Seem to feel your absence, too—
Just a-wearyin' for you.

Evenin' comes, I miss you more
When the dark glooms round the door;
Seems just like you orter be
There to open it for me.
Latch goes tinklin' thrills me
Sets me wearyin' for you.

—Frank L. Stanton.

New Officer For Manoa

On the Manoa this trip there is a new officer, in the person of Mr. E. C. Wurtele, who takes Mr. Giles' place, the latter having been transferred to the Lake Ontario route. Mr. Wurtle has been with the Canada Steamships Company for over 20 years and has spent the greater part of his time on the Saguenay Line. This is his first run to this port.

Passenger By Silvia

Mr. Frederick C. Ely, one of the directors of the Florence Manufacturing Company, Florence, Mass., manufactures of Pro-phy-lac-tic Brushes, arrived by the Silvia yesterday. The Florence Company is probably the largest manufacturing concern of its kind in the world. Last year their output of pro-phy-lac-tic tooth brushes alone was over fourteen million. Mr. Gerald S. Doyle is the representative here for the company. Mr. Ely is accompinied by his wife and they will romain a few days in St. John's.

C. L. B. C.

Last night at headquarters the officers mess held a meeting to arrange for the annual camp on August 2nd. All lads going to camp will register their names next Thursday and receive instructions as to the necessary kit required. An additional mess hut is being built, and Major R. H. Tait, Camp Commandant, hopes to arrange for the installation of electric light, and telephone connection with the city.

This year's camp will be the largest for years. Major Dawe, of Bay Roberts Company, is sending twenty lads, and headquarters is now awaiting reports from other outport companies.

The C. L. B. Sports a few days ago netted $450.

Sunday next a Church Parade will be held at 930 a.m. and the Old Comrades and Spencer College Girl Guides have been extended an invitation to attend. The service will be held at Inspector Noseworthy's farm Kenmount Road; one of the Brigade Chaplains taking the service. Old Comrade Joseph Dewling, a resident of that locality, has undertaken, with friends there to prepare the grounds and give the Brigade a welcome. Q.

Paid Official Visit

Yesterday afternoon Commandant Huau of the "Ville D'ys" paid an official visit to M. League Football

The Star and the B. I. S. were the contestants in last evening's game. At 7.30 Referee Quick placed the leather in play. The Star occuied the western goal with the wind and a scorching sun in their favour; and though handicapped owing to illness of three of their regular players managed to score one goal through a free kick just before half time.

At the beginning of the second half the B. I. S. took matters into their own hands and repeatedly visited the Star goal. They had lots of opportunities to score but could not do so because of bunching. It was not until twenty minutes had elapsed that Hafley sent in the equalizer. This put new life into the game. The Star back division gave a splendid exhibition and saved their team from a heavy defeat. With only a few minutes to go the Star determined to try and score the winning goal. With the result that the back division was drawn well up into the Irish teritory. Constantine taking advantage of this drove the leather mid-field to Eddie Phelan who sent the ball whizzing into the net one minute previous to full time. Result B.I.S. 2, Star. 1.

"UNITED STATES OF RUSSIA" SEEK UNIVERSAL PEACE

LATEST

DUSSELDORF, July 14—French troops to-day made a surprise raid on Barmen outside the occupied area as a punitive measure for the kidnapping Wednesday of two French soldiers and sniping alleged to have been carried on by Germans against the forces of occupation.

Detachments of infantry and cavalry with one tank and a squadron of airplanes hovering overhead, reached town at six o'clock on Friday morning and left five hours later with a group of hostage including a director of the local state bank, police captain, burgomaster chief of police and minor officials. No opposition was encountered. About six-hundred French took part in the raid. Capt. Ralph Skinner, was 80 miles

BERLIN, July 14—The punitive action against Barmen to-day was viewed in unofficial circles as in the nature of a reply to the reparations statement in the British Parliament.

A local socialist paper said Baldwin talks while Poincare marches.

NEW YORK, July 14—Luis Angel Firpo, of the Argentine who added Jesse Williard's scalp to his string last night before a record crowd at Boyles thirty acres, was to-day looking around for more world's to conquer. A series of conferences, however, failed to bring any nearer a meeting between the Argentine Angola and Dempsey and indication pointed to probability that Firpo would have to learn a few more of finer points of the game in future test matches before being considered worthy as contentend for premier title.

In this case Firpo wants to meet Harry Wills, new Orleans colored Pugilist, who chased Dempsey a year before making a vain attempt at acquiring the champs belt.

For last night's fight Willard received one hundred and seventeen thousand dollars balm, while Firpos' share was eighty five thousand.

All inquiries regarding Job work, Advertising and Subscriptions should be addressed to the Business Manager of the Advocate.

THE GULF REMAINS

PARIS, July 13—The feeling that prevailed in oficial circles this morning was that Premier Baldwin's speech on the reparations situation did not absolutely close the door to an understanding with Great Britain, although there was an immense gulf between the policies of the two countries which the courteous and friendly phrases of Premier Baldwin did not hide. The press also resents what it regards as the British Premier's undue leniency with Germany.

No More Troops For Strike Area

OTTAWA, July 13—Peremptory instructions have been issued by Hon. E. M. McDonald, Acting Minister of Defence that no more soldiers are to be sent from any place in Canada to the Cape Breton strike area.

More Defiance

DRUMHELLER, Alta., Jully 13—The strike situation here is unchanged to-day. A wire was received from President W. A. Sherman, of District 18, U. M. W. A., ordering the men back to work, but no notice was taken of it.

A Tremendous Majority

WINNIPEG, July 13—The referendum on the Moderation League' Bill was approved by a majority of exactly forty thousand electors of Manitoba, according to the final returns tabled to-day. The vote polled totalled one hundred and seventy-six thousand, the largest ever in the Province.

WINNIPEG, July 13—Western Canada will require approximately twenty per cent more harvesters to garden this year's crops than were needed last year according to present indications. This means the importation from Ontario, Quebec, and Maritime Provinces and British Columbia of some sixty thousand harvesters.

American Idealism Is In Danger

DES MOINES, July 6—America will suffer a loss of idealism in the future because of the prominence given to huge salaries and fees paid to movie stars, prize fighters and baseball players, according to Clarence Hamilton, of Boston, in addressing to-day's session of the International Christian Endeavor Convention here.

"Modern heroes as pictured in the newspapers and magazines are not very desirable characters for our boys and girls to emulate," said Mr. Hamilton. "Practically all of them are placed upon a money-making basis. Character and achievement count for little with them. The prize-fighter who can deliver a punch to knock his opponent senseless is given many big headlines before and after the effective punch is delivered and for that punch he gets fame. Likewise the movie stars who go through some capers and simulate virtues which they do not possess, are heralded as great men and women because they attract buyers of tickets to box-offices. The same is true of the baseball players.

"Boys and girls and young men and women who emulate these weaklings termed and pictured as heroes and heroines, are building on sand. The real heroes are those who are contributing to our physical and mental and spiritual well-being. The value of their work can not be appraised with the dollar sign. The idealism of America will suffer if the false standards of value are accepted by a large proportion of our American youth.

The Fishery Outlook

The fishery outlook appears somewhat better, and from several sections of the coast reports forthcoming are encouraging. There is not, however, that general sign, which would indicate a good fishery; and as the season is advancing, it is hoped that the encouraging reports coming from the southern section of the country will extend all over the country, particularly north.

Who Is John Lewis?

(Halifax Citizen.)

Now that John L. Lewis, International President of the United Mine Workers of America, has decided to take a hand in adjusting the difficulties that have arisen in District No. 26, it will be interesting to know some thing about the miners' leader. John Lewis has ordered that the miners of the District '26 live up to the agreement made with the British Steel Corporation. But the Convention at New Glasgow refused to abide by this decision and ordered a strike vote to be taken.

John L. Lewis is one of the most able leaders that the Labor movement has yet produced: shrewd, adroit, resourceful, a dangerous opponent either at the bargaining table or on the industrial field.

He was born in Lucas, a small Iowa mining town, on Feb. 12, 1880, of Welsh parents. His father was a blacklisted coal miner in the Big Screen Strike of 1882 and was forced to go to Des Moines. Those were the times of the ten and eleven hour day and a minimum wage of $1.60.

In 1901 he was elected legislative representative of the Illinois miners. For five and a half years he was general organizer and field representative of the American Federation of Labor, in which capacity he handled the Calumet copper strike and the Akran rubber workers' strike.

In 1919, during the illness of Federation President Hayes, he took charge of the bituminous coal strike, winning an unprecedented 27 per cent. increase in wages. In 1920 he was elected president of the Mine Workers by a huge majority.

In 1922 he was in charge of the anthracite coal strike, which he carried to a successful conclusion.

John Lewis regards a contract as a sacred obligation. "The U. M. W. will abide by its agreements."

Lewis' career and character are similar to those of John Mitchell, leader of the Pennsylvania coal strike of 1902, which started with the operators' declaration: "There is nothing to arbitrate." The strike was finally settled by arbitration.

Lady Astor's Bill Passes Commons

LONDON, July 13—Lady Astor's bill restraining the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons under eighteen years of age passed the third and final reading in the House of Commons to-day.

ARMSTRONG HAS SCHEME

SYDNEY, July 14.—Premier Armstrong, as a net result of two days' negotiations with the British Empire Steel Workers' representatives, will attempt to introduce a system of co-operation between operators and employees here, similar to that which maintains in Whitley and other English industrial centres.

The Executive of the Steel Workers told the Premier they would give his plan serious consideration.

The Whitley plan has prestige, given it by the endorsation of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress. Briefly, it would provide in a plant like that at Sydney, for the appointment in each department of a men's representative to meet periodically with the management to discuss and advise in all matters concerning the men's demands and working conditions.

The plan is said to be not out of harmony with unionism.

Negotiations Are Proceeding

LIVINGSTONE IS BACK.

Union Leader Returns, But Few Knew of His Coming.

SYDNEY, July 13—Negotiations instituted yesterday by Premier E. H. Armstrong and Dr. Clarence MacKinnon, of Halifax were resumed today. The Premier and Dr. MacKinnon met again this morning with the steel workers and number of company officials for the purpose, Mr. Armstrong said, of obtaining statistics. Dan Livingstone, President of District 26, arrived at Sydney this morning, but as few knew of his coming there were not many at the station to met him.

A Stone Storm

HARTNEY, Man., July 13—Thousands of acres of crops, telephone and telegraph lines and automobiles were damaged in a storm that swept Western Manitoba yesterday. Hailstones fell so large they broke automobile windshields and many farmers had their entire crops buried deep under the huge stones and ruined.

Historic Celebration at Pictou

QUEBEC, July 13—Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, accompanied by several other officials left Quebec this morning on the Canadian Govt. steamer Lady Grey for Pictou, N.S., to assist at the ceremonies there in connection with the anniversary of the landing of Hector with the first Scottish immigrants to Canada, over a hundred and fifty years ago. The function commences Sunday and will last the whole week.

Another Storm

SASKATOON, Sask., July 13—The entire farm of F. . Howship, house, stable, granaries and a half dozen smaller buildings, was wiped out by lightning and wind shortly after six o'clock Thursday night, when a violent tempest swept down upon them leaving only scattered ruins a minute later. The buildings, hay cocks, and chicken coops were blown incredible distances. The farmer and his family escaped narrowly. Other farms nearby were unharmed.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Friendship is a Sheltering Tree

But to Judy it was dust and ashes. She read so many hours a day, and, for some unknown reason— to stead her mind, she said—had taken to the study of Greek. But her mind, long dissipated by the hundred and one minor practical details of housewifely life, did not rrpidly incline to the classics, and Claud openly laughed at her.

The miscroscopic house, so quaintly built and furnished, with which everybody fell in love, was perfectly managed by Christy, with the aid of a young Scotch girl she had lured from the service of a bigger house in the neighborhood. It simply ran on wheels, and cost remarkably little. To Christy it was nothing more than a play, which had to be made the best of until all the wanderings of the Rankines should cease, and they should be restored to the house of their fathers with dignity and splendour.

She cherished a dark and unreasoning hatred against the inoffensive and completely satisfactory tenants of Stair, whom she invariably referred to as "the folk", as if they were the dirt under her feet.

Carlotta had been a very bitter pill for Ann Christy to swallow. and it was not until Judy, hoping to close her mouth, took her to see "The Searchlight," that she actually swallowed the pill whole. She sat out the performance—a queer, little old woman, in a bonnet of abyegone day, and a little white shawl about her shoulders to give her a more dressy appearance. And she never spoke a word! But more than once Judy detected tears on the withered cheek, and once she shook her fist openly at the stage.

When the performance was over, her sole comment was "She's terrible clever that can dae you, Miss Judy. An' she looks like an angel ooten heaven.

The next time Carlotta came to Cambridge there was a noticeable change in Christy's demeanour, even of a sort of servility which indicated a surrender, shall we say, of matter to mind? Nay, it was surely something higher! It was the soul of the unlettered woman that had responded to the spirit and genius of Carlotta. Anyhow, the conquest was complete.

Judy's faith in Carlotta was complete, and the love between them had never faltered once They both possessed that rarest of all gifts—the capacity for a perfect friendship.

Judy's spirits insensibly rose as the train sped swiftly over the Great Northern line to London and Carlotta. A visit to or from her never failed to act as a charm and an inspiration. She had an entirely different kind of philosophy from that possessed by Judy, and their natures seemed to fit into one another with the best possible results.

Carlotta was now living with her father and mother in one of the smaller houses in the Bloomsbury Square which she had once indicated to Judy as being the most desirable place for an abode in the whole of London. In the receipt of a large salary, the salary of a star, in fact, she could have afforded something more elaborate and expensive; and her compeers frequently expressed surprise at the simplicity of her life. She drove to and from the theatre in a hired brougham, and was guilty of none of the extravagances common to her profession.

No photographs of Miss Margaret Tenderton in her latest motor car, or in her country garden, were to be found in the illustrated papers. She lived as quietly as if she had been a school girl.

Devoted to her art, she certainly was, and made daily advances toward perfection in it. Graham Madox had frequent occasion to bless the happy day when Viola Fancourt left him in the lurch, and brought him Carlotta in her place.

Judy took an omnibus part of the way from King's Cross, and walked by the short cuts, which frequent visits had made her familiar with, to Carlotta's house, arriving there soon after two o'clock.

A page boy opened the door; and, knowing her, admitted her without a moment's hesitation. He was aware that his mistress never denied herself to Miss Rankine.

"I hope you are quite well, Rawson?" said Judy, her natural habit of kindliness to servants asserting itself. "And I hope Miss Carlyon is alone?"

"Yes, Miss, she's all alone; for master and missus hae gone to Reigate for the day."

"Oh, indeed. Then I may go up. Is she in her own sitting room?"

"I believe so, miss. Shall I go and see?"

But Judy, perfectly familiar with the house, declined his escort, and ran lightly up the stairway, and along the corridor.

Carlotta had taken the drawing room floor for her own use, and had converted the smaller hall into a study. It was shut off by folding doors, and looked very cosy and inviting with the glow of the firelight on its white walls and delicate pink, Aubusson carpet.

It's Judy, Carlotta!" said Judy's eager voice in the doorway.

"Oh, you blessed woman!" cried Carlotta in tones which left Judy no doubt about her welcome. "I was at this very moment writing to you! Have you just come up and have you had any lunch? I believe they could bring you up a chicken bone now. I've finished mine."

"I had it before I left," said Judy, as she returned the sisterly kiss, then held Carlotta off, to look at her more closely and critically.

"I did say to Christy they were working you to death! You look quite white and thin."

"I'm perfectly fit, my dear. I've had no letter this morning, and it's mail day. I suppose you have not had one eihter, and that is why you have come."

"I have had one, and that Is why I've come," stid Judy, as she pulled it from the inner flap of her handbag. "There it is. Sit down and read it, and tell me what you think."

Carlotta sat down on the edge of a straight-backed chair on one side of the fireplace, while Judy squatted on a low Ottoman stool, covered with black satin.

Carlotta came to the end of the letter, leaned her chin on her hand, and looked into Judy's eyes.

"Well, she said, "there isn't much in that. Something wrong, Judy!"

"Horribly wrong! You feel it, don't you? What do we want to know about birds in Central Park, or the squirrels on Manhattan!"

"Madison Square—isn't it?" put in Carlotta, with a little smile, as her eyes reverted again to the meagre sheet. "In a way it is worse than no letter, this. It seems to open countless doors."

"Shut them, you mean, surely?"

"No—I mean open them. Alan has something to hide, Judy. How are we to find out what it is?"

"Ask me another," said Judy savagely. "And don't look at me like that, Carlotta! Alan's my brother, and I'm feeling pretty cheap about him. Why we don't even know what he is doing! You can't imagine what I'm feeling about it!"

"Can't I?" asked Carlotta, and a smile just flickered for a moment about her pathetic mouth. "Well, perhaps not. We must do something, Judy."

"Well, what can we do? What kind of letters does he write you, Carlotta?"

"Oh, love letters, but they're getting shorter and shorter; and I say—something's got to be done."

"The suggestion will have to come from you, then. If only he had the money, Claud might go out in the holidays; only he has just taken a post as travelling tutor to Lord Lyndale's two young boys, and they are going to Davos on the eighteenth of this month, to stay till the end of January."

He can't afford to lose that—besides, it wouldn't do any good, Judy. But I've something to tell you. Mr. Madox has signed on for an American tour, and we open in New York on the fifth of February."

"Carlotta!" cried Judy, with a little shrill note in her voice. "You are the most astonishing person! You are actually going to New York in less than two months' time!"

"Eight weeks to-morrow. It was only settled by cable yesterday."

"And you will see Alan?"

"I hope we'll both see him," said Carlotta, firmly. "You'll come, Judy—in fact, you must! I should be lost without you. You will—won't you?"

"At your expense, Carlotta!" said Judy in a low whisper. "I want to, most frightfully; but there's just a wee bit of pride in the background that won't let me."

"We must find that wee bit of pride in the background and grind it to invisible powder," siad Carlotta cheerfully, "for I have quite set my heart on it. We shall be three months away. Christy can surely exist withoutyou for that time."

"Oh, yes. Christy could exist perfectly without me! We could let the house for that matter—nothing could be easier— and she could go home to Ayr and see her folk. Why, that is just what we will do, and the rent will pay my passage!"

Carlotta shook her head.

"I want you to come with me as sister, Judy, and no question about the money. I need somebody to stand between me and the people I don't want to see. Let us put it that way. I promise you that you shall more than pay for your passage," she added, with a little laugh in which Judy joined.

"You certainly are wonderful. But shall we tell Alan?"

"Not a word. If we did, something warns me that either we should find him gone, or something else untoward will happen. We shall be our own private detectives, Judy, and find out together just what Alan is doing in New York."

Judy turned away her face, and looked for a moment dolefully into the dancing flames.

"Carlotta, she said presently, but without turning round, "what do you think he is doing?"

"Nothing—or at least nothing which is going to count in the long run. I've known it for a long time, and he's just on the point of giving up. If we don't go soon, or there is not something done, Judy, the last tragedy of Stair will be worse than the first."

Judy wrung her hands; and in her kind eyes deep shadows lay.

"Life is most frightfully hard, Carlotta. Why should we have all this happen to us, as a family? What have we done to deserve it? Nothing very special, I'm sure!"

"Nothing. But there is nothing surer than that every human being has to pay something on account sooner or later. Perhapps, on the whole, it is better to make the payment soon than later."

I'll Tell the World

IT was in the spirit of "pass the word along" that Frank E. Johns, a well-known Montreal traveller, penned us the following letter:

"Now I am going to give you an unsolicited testimonial. Heretofore I have had a profound contempt for patent medicines, particularly so-called liniments. One day last fall after a hard day's tramp in the slush, I developed a severe pain in my legs and like a man who has never had anything wrong with him physically, I complained rather boisterously. The good little wife says: 'I will rub them with some liniment.' 'Go ahead,' I said, just to humor her. Well, in she comes with a bottle of MINARD'S and gets busy. The pain disappeared in a few minutes, and you can tell the world I said so." 18 possible to translate this sentiment into an actuality. The contract which gave the Reids this land is 30 years old. During that time they have parted with much of that land. The Harmsworth enterprize at Grand Falls is founded largely on lands and water powers acquired from the Reids. They have sold lands also at various times to promotors of other enterprises amongst us. The Minister of Justice at last session in a reply to a question from the Opposition, pointed out that previous Governments had permitted the Reids not alone to sell considerable areas of their lands, but also several of their steamers, for example, the Lintrose and the second Bruce, and part with other assets as well.

Matter of Contention

It may be contended that the Reids were given too much land by those responsible for the contract of thirty years ago. It may be contended that in the drafting of that contract it should have been provided that the Reids should not sell the lands granted them or that these lands should be liable to forfeiture under certain circumstances. All sorts of contentions both reasonable and absurd have been and undoubtedly will continue to be made with respect to the Reid contract of thirty years ago and contracts since, but we have to face the contract as they are and the legal situation as it exists. The specific security which the Colony had for the breach of the Operating Contract was the sum of $250,000 which Mr. Reid was to deposit in cash or satisfactory securities. Under the 1898 contract he was allowed to substitute a mortgage on the Dry Dock in lieu of cash or securities. The Dry Dock is being taken back from the Reids under this settlement. It is a matter of no importance as to whether it is argued that the dry dock is being taken back under this forfeiture clause or not. The fact remains that it is being taken from the Reids. I am advised that the fact that the contract contains reference to this specific security does not prevent the Colony from making a claim for damages. On the other hand, I am advised that in view of the enormous claims of the Reid-Newfoundland Company against the Government, claims valid or invalid, as the case may be, and the chance which this Humber development gives of forcing the Reids to settlement on terms which it would have been impossible to expect them to consider were it not for the fact that they cannot secure the Humber development program unless they make a railroad settlement, this is the opportune time for forcing a final and complete adjustment of all matters outstanding, and entirely eliminating the Reids from all transportation, telegraph and dockage services in Newfoundland.

No Cash Payment

There is to be no cash payment whatever to the Reid-Newfoundland Company. Under this settlement the Reid-Newfoundland Company must accept Newfoundland Government Bonds for a term of twenty years, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum of the face value of two million dollars. As to how much cash they secure for these bonds by their sale in the bond markets of the world, is a matter for themselves. Interest is one and a half per cent less than the interest on the Newfoundland Government loan of 1921 and several preceding loans and one half per cent less than the interest on the Newfoundland Government loan of 1922.

I have already read to the Committee the list of the assets and valuations submitted by the Reid-Newfoundland Company to the Government last autumn. In that list of assets the dock was not included, but it is included in this settlement. The Reids valued these assets, not including the dock, at $6,533,687.58. If in the event of arbitration the Reid Newfoundland Company were successful in securing on account of this estimate the same percentage of their claims under this head as they succeeded in securing in previous awards, these assets would represent in cash substantially over two million dollars. For the information of the Committee I submit statement of rolling stock and equipment furnished me by Mr. H. J. Russell.

Statements and Summaries

This shows the total rolling stock value to be $2,414,483.19. Of this total the Government already owns $1,048,587.30. Rolling stock to the value of $1,365,895 is claimed to be owned by the Reid Newfoundland Company. This Reid Newfoundland Company owned rolling stock is transferred to the government under this settlement.

Memorandum of Steamers

I also submit memorandum concerning Reid Newfoundland Copany steamers furnished me by Mr. Russell. It will be noted that the present estimated value is £221,000 sterling, and that the amount of insurance carried is £208,000 sterling. In my opinion this estimated present value is very excessive and the amount of insurance carried very much greater than the present market value of the steamers though it may not be in excess of their replacement value. I cannot conceive it probable that reputable marine insurance underwriters would assume a risk of £208,000 sterling on these eight steamers if the replacement value of the steamers did not reasonably approach that figure.

As a study of the matter of claims, arbitrations and award between the Reids and the Newfoundland Government may be of interest I submit the following memorandum:

Memo. re Reid Arbitrations, Claims and Awards.

7th October, 1902. Award by Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, P. S. Archibald and C. C. Gregory:

Total claim by Reids $2,022,622.23
Less items in respect of which no award was made and which were left to remain Reid property Hotel at St. John's, $15,358.94; Quarry property and Benton Mill property, $136,605.54 151,964.48

Net amount of claim dealt with $1,870,657.85

Amount awarded Reids for rolling stock, stations, etc.. or about 45 per cent. of the claim, $485,130.00.

14th February, 1905. Award by P. S. Archibald, Edward Blake and Donald Macmaster.

Total claim by Reids, re Telegraphs, ... $3,188,898.00
Amount awarded as compensation for loss of Telegraphs 1,503,100.00 or about 47 per cent. of the claim.

When the railway dispute came to a head in May, 1922, and it was evident that the parties to the dispute must either arrive at an amicable settlement or become involved in immediate litigation of some kind, it was verbally stated on behalf of the Reids that their claims against the Government in the event of litigation would including interest, exceed fifteen millions of dollars.

If they had the same success in such litigation as they had in the case of the 1902 Arbitration and the Telegraph award of 1915, the proportionate amount they would recover would be about seven millions of dollars, as against which we would have such amount as the arbitrators might award as being due Newfoundland on account of damages and general indebtedness.

Other arbitration proceedings may be recalled:

1904, 1 Mar. Judgement for Reids on special case stated to the Supreme Court under an arbitration respecting the fixing of ports of call for the South Coast steamer (N.L.R. p. 34.)

1904—15 June, Judgement for Reids on similar special case as to right of Government to withhold subsidies from the Virginia Lake (N.L.R. p. 47)

1904—18 June, Judgement for Reids on appeal to Supreme Court from order of a judge appointing a third arbitrator for the Telegraph Arbitration. (N.L.R. p. 48.)

1908—12 Feb., Judgement against Reids on their application to appoint ex parte a third arbitrator on a proposed arbitration as to the alleged wrongful withholding of subsidies for the Ethic and Dundee.

This matter of subsidies has been a fruitful source of trouble. The records of the Colonial Secretary's Department and the Department of Posts and Telegraphs are full of letters of protest from Reids against what are claimed by them to be breaches of the railway contracts on account of the withholding of subsidies, and generally it may be said that ever since 1901 the Reids have been continually putting themselves on record as protesting against numerous matters which they alleged were breaches by the Government of its obligations towards them.

I recommend this solution of our railroad problems to the Committee as one of outstanding success, a settlement which it would have been entirely impossible to secure had it not been for the fact that no satisfactory progress could have been made in connection with the Humber development program in which the Reids are largely interested had they not been prepared to come to these terms in the matter of railroad settlement. When I addrssed the Committee on the Humber resolutions, I pointed out that the resolutions then laid before the Committee were a business proposition pure and simple for acceptance or rejection on their merits and without any regard whatever to present or past political history and associations. I now submit these railroad resolutions in the same spirit.

No one realizes better than myself the bitter personal and political controversies which have raged around all matters with which the Reids have been associated during the past thirty years. It may now be difficult for some of the older members of the Legislature, gentlemen who were themselves associated with the debates and controversies of the past thirty years, particularly in connection with the '98 and 1901 contracts, to get down to the consideration of the settlement with the same freedom of thought as those of us to whom the '93, '98, and 1901 contracts are matters of history only, but I feel quite sure that my honorable friends of the Opposition will deal with this program purely as a business proposition without marring the discussion and prejudicing sane business judgement with the personal and political bitterness which the '98 and 1901 contracts particularly have left in the minds of those both inside and outside the House who have taken a continuous active interest in political affairs during the past quarter of a century.

Railway Improvements To Cost Many Millions

CHICAGO, June 20 (AP)—The Pennsylvania Railroad system has begun a series of improvements to cost more than $125,000,000, according to an announcement made by the road here recently. Work has already begun on improvements costing more than two million dollars in the northwestern region, which includes most of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio.

The largest single improvement will be at 55th Street, Chicago, where the tracks will be elevated at a cost of $616,22. Another expenditure, of $121,379, will be made just four blocks south, at 59th Street, where the Pennsylvania shops are located. Facilities for making heavy repairs to freight cars will be installed in these shops so that disabled cars can be put on the tracks promptly, in accordance with the present campaign to keep all equipment in constant service.

Pennsylvania Railroad coal docks at Sandusky, O., will have their slip deepened to permit the entrance of large ships and allow continuous passage to other crafts.

A second track will be extended from Webbs to Walbridge, Ohio, with a 125-car capacity siding at Webbs, at a cost of $400,000. This improvement will expedite the handling of freight from Toledo and relieve the Toledo yard from considerable congestion.

At Ft. Wayne, Ind., a 110-foot turntable will be installed to replace at 75-foot turntable, which has become inadequate for the large, modern engines. This will cost $68,068.

The announcement says that these improvements are in accordance with the nation-wide campaign being conducted by the American Railway Association to have all railway equipment in constant service for the expected traffic this summer, when the present business boom will reach its height.

OBITUARY

HENRY RYAN.

To The Editor,
The Evening Advocate,
St. John's,

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me space in your much read and esteemed paper, The Advocate, to record the death of my dear father, Mr. Henry Ryan, who passed peacefully away at the age of 77, on the 7th of July.

The deceased kept the Government Telephone Office at Pouch Cove for many years, and his courtesy and goodwill gained for him the esteem and friendship of all the residents here. He was connected with church work for many years until recently, when his health failed him.

He leaves to mourn five sons, three daughters, two sisters and one brother besides a large number of relations and friends. The vacant chair is left in the home which never can be filled. The whole community extends their heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved sons and daughters.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. A. E. Tulk, in the C. of E. Cemetery.

Dearest father, thou has left us
And your face we'll see no more;
Bue we hope to meet in Heaven,
On that bright and happy shore.

O children do not weep for me,
My Saviour called me home,
He called me to that blissful land,
Where parting is unknown.

Call not back the dear departed,
Anchored safe where storms are o'er
On the border line we left him,
E'en to meet or part no more.

On that bright and happy morning,
When all shall be gathered home,
We shall see the dearest loved one,
Safe where death can never come.

Pouch Cove,

"Goliath" Al Smith

DES MOINES, July —(A.P.)—Governor Al Smith was called the "Goliath of the Wets" in the address of R. A. Walker of Chicago, at the International Christian Endeavor Convention here to-day.

"The Wets are the Philistines of the present day," said Mr. Walker. "They have won a temporary victory and they have selected as their big blustering champion, the Governor of New York, who is heralded as their leader, just as was Goliath, the defiant champion of the Philistines. He is challenging the Drys to battle. The modern Philistines apparently have things going their way and many of the Drys are relatively in the same position as King Saul's forces, fearful of results.

"Have we Drys so soon forgotten that the "bottle is the Lords?" Are we standing in fear of the results when we have God and truth on our side. Who is there among the Wets that can stand against truth?

"Let 'Goliath' Smith beware. Somewhere in the ranks of the Drys there is a David with mighty faith and a trusty sling. In the sling will be placed the stony votes that will hit the Goliath between the eyes—whether that Goliath at the next election be Al Smith or some other champion of the Wets. Whoever the Goliath of the modern Philistines may be, he will be politically dead after election—possibly after the presidential primaries.

"The Wets are like frogs, they make a lot of noise but their noise means nothing.

"Let the mighty Christian Endeavor host continue in their prayers and on election day use the sling and stone of their votes to kill the ambition of the Wets to control of this country."

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, JULY 14th., 1923

The Union Record

The Fishermen's Union has come down through the years since 1908, with a record beyond reproach and which can bear the test of closest scrutiny.

While we see many unions or organizations upsetting the general order of things and following with no good results, the exhortations of irresponsible leaders, the greatest organization of fishermen in any country of the world, pursues its purposes in a quiet, democratic manner, having regard for the general welfare of the whole country and for the trying times through which our country has been passing.

There are some who have tried very persistently to cast reproach on the F. P. U. and its activities since its inauguration for various reasons. Very few of these people really believe what they have said or written. They have sought to discredit the Union for their own particular ends of political or business ambition; and have not, in most cases, conscientiously spoken their own minds regarding the Union.

For fifteen years the northern people have had the Union in their midst, and, on three separate occasions, have been confronted with the crisis of deciding for or against the continuance of its existence amongst them. In 1913, in 1919 and on May 3rd last, the people always stood by the Union. They were intimately acquainted with the Union and realised what it has meant to them during their years of struggle for a livelihood. They always trust the Union President and, to-day, remains just as firm in believing in his sincerity of purpose and his genuine regard for the real interests of this country.

The years since 1908 have been a period of constructive work, and the structures that have been raised and the "union links" which bind the north together do not only bespeak the real genius of the Union President; it demonstrates the possibilities of effort and achievement of which the fishermen race can be capable, when their endeavours are associated with sterling leadership and true loyalty.

So the F. P. U. is great to-day; and its fishermen members are strong because of it. In almost every settlement along the northern coasts, the F. P. U. flag flies from an F. P. U. hall. In most of the larger settlements F. P. U. stores are operating, and from Port Union headquarters radiates the Union trade and spirit which solidifies the whole

In all the crisis occurring of recent years, the Union influence has been directed fearlessly towards the country's good, as far as it has been possible to see.

The past has shown the fishermen the necessity of calm, collected thought in the programme for their own general good.

To-day there may be seen, in some countries, the unwisdom of misdirected union energy creating public turmoil and strife. The fishermen should be proud, to-day, that their organization may not be reproached on that score.

They have pursued the aims of their organization with due regard to the true interests, not only of themselves, but of the whole country.

The Lesson of Unionism

Consideration of the Cape Breton steel and coal strikes which have had their effect on these industries thruout the Dominion naturally gives rise to the thought "is the strength which unionism supplies always directed towards the accomplishment of the greatest good for the greatest number?"

Unfortunately, it is not. The real worth of such organizations as the United Mine Workers of America, the Canadian Federation of Labour and others that have made their influence felt throughout the industrial world in recent years depends upon the wisdom or otherwise of their leaders.

Unions may achieve inestimable good for their members or they may bring about incalculable evil, according to the manner in which their strength is directed.

In this great question of Unionism the fishermen of Newfoundland are vitally interested. Since the inauguration of the Fishermen's Protective Union some fifteen years ago the toilers of the deep, on whose labors the prosperity of our country so largely depends, have attained a power which could not otherwise have been theirs. By wise leadership, the F. P. U. has brought many benefits to its members; its policy and aim have ever been to build up, never to destroy. By virtue of that same wise leadership, the Fishermen's Union has given its members a unique position amongst the fishermen of the world in that they to-day own the most influential commercial enterprise in the country, and are no longer at the mercy of those who for so many years reaped large profits from the results of their toil.

The policy of the F. P. U. and its leader has been "the greatest good for the greatest number" and so long as that policy persists, the Union will remain an impregnable fortress between the fishermen and their enemies.

Immediate and Genuine Effort Needed

The Humber programme of the Government was finally disposed of yesterday when His Excellency the Governor gave assent to the Humber measure.

As the Advocate has remarked before, this industrial undertaking has been secured by the Government, at the price of considerable responsibility by the country, for the purpose of supplementing the fisheries and providing employment to as many men as possible.

It will be expected that construction operations will now be undertaken speedily in a genuine, earnest attempt to secure such returns to the people as were desired by the Government and the people when they endorsed the Humber proposition.

Baldwin's Statement

Premier Baldwin's speech in the House of Commons on the Reparations situation will bring to more definite and practical result the problem which has been causing a strained relationship between the Allies, particularly between Britain and France. The occupation of the Ruhr Valley by French forces was made without the consent of Great Britain. Indeed, Britain passively resisted the Ruhr occupation, and for reasons, which the results of that procedure, though not admitted by France, have proven to be well-founded.

The British position is founded on the realisation that her future and the future of the warring nations will be best preserved by the renewal of trade relations and such interchange of commerce, as will place industry once more on its feet and will enable the enemy to make the largest possible reparations for war damages.

The French mind is naturally swayed by a more embittered feeling against the Hun, who sprang at the throat of France in 1914, and who stands at her door to-day.

While both Britain and France agree that Germany shall pay to the utmost, the two chief allies differ as to the means by which Germany shall be made to pay

The question logically arises: Is Germany bluffing or not? Is the German Government genuine or not when they advance the position that she cannot fulfil her obligation to pay?

If this were once decided, solution would be more easily reached but many months have passed without the dispelling of doubt in this respect. In the meantime, the world drift towards economic difficulties has continued.

Premier Baldwin's action may lead to a solution which will be satisfactory to both countries, and may relieve France of the uncomfortable position she finds herself respecting the occupation of the Ruhr territory.

UP BY THE HUMBER SIDE

Cheer up, my fellow countrymen, the glorious dawn is breakin',
There's happiness and contentment for the toilers on our shore.
Oh, dear old Terra Nova, from her slumbers did awaken,
And now for all in future there are better times in store.
Oh, dear old Terra Nova, from her slumbers did awaken,
And now for all in future there are better times in store.

No need to go to foreign lands, 'mong strangers to be toiling,
No need to be an exile many miles across the tide,
For the face of great prosperity and plenty will be smiling,
In that dear land which gave you birth up by the Humber side.

Her wealth for many ages, it had been allowed to slumber.
But now her hills and mountains with the woodsman's axe will ring
And peace and sweet contentment, then will reign around the Humber,
As pleasing as the little birds who hail the dawn of spring.

Cheer up and pitch your doubtings, to the winds, and raise your voices,
In praie of Terra Nova, here, and o'er the ocean wide.
Now all those who love their country sure to-day their heart rejoices,
For they know her robe of glory lies up by the Humber side.

St. John's, July 11th, 1923. TERRA NOVA.

Another View on Road Matters

St. John's,
July 12, 1923.

Dear Sir,—I have watched with close interest the newspaper discussion in which the Daily News, the Bay Robert Guardian and a correspondent to your paper have figured, regarding the matter of the activities of the Newfoundland Road Commission.

Speaking as an outport man, I think there is a feature of the question, which has been overlooked by both sides in expressing their respective opinions.

Everybody knows the value of good roads to a community, and no one should know it more than those people whose settlements do not possess such an asset; and this is one of the reasons why I think I should express what I consider is the reasonable attitude of outport opinion on the matter of road building.

The right of the outports to make themselves heard in this discussion cannot be questioned; for as one of your correspondents said, while it might be important to provide good roads to motorists, the man who sits on the bar of a springless dray-cart is, of necessity, an interested party by being a taxpayer into the funds of the country.

It is not my desire to treat this matter from a party standpoint. I understand both parties in the House a few years ago unanimously agreed to the support of the Road Commission and its work of building good roads in the Avalon Peninsula, particularly around St. John's, providing that the Commission raise, through taxes on motorists, funds that would be a part of the whole amount available for road purposes, the other part to be taken out of the general funds of the Colony.

When the people of sections outside of the Peninsula of Avalon are contributing to the funds of the country, it is, to say the least "rubbing it in" to continue a further lengthy discussion of motor roads; and the question arises, "When are other parts of the country going to get their share."

Yours truly,
"OUTPORTS."

London Letter

By MRS. CECIL CHESTERTON

LONDON, June 27—(By Mail)—This has been a King's Ascot. His Majesty's success in the Royal Hunt Cup with Weathervane at the long odds of 20 to 1, was even more popular than his triumph of the opening day with Knights of the Garter. It was the out side public who followed the King, the racing crowd for the most part forgot Weathervane altogether. There have never been more georgous costoms worn at any meeting, and this year the picture frocks in delicate pastel shades of lace and muslin, big hats and artistic wraps gave the English type of beauty the exact setting which emphasizes its points. They were not all picture frocks, however, tailor-mades were well to the fore, and black and white was a favorite combination.

One of the events of the week has been the dinner given by the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The guests who included Lord Dunfermline, Viscount Mersey and the Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, M.P. were much intrigued by Mr. Beatty's speech. He insisted that what Canada seemed to need was "a balance immigration." Especially was this the case at the present moment when the flood of unrest which has swept through Europe has even touched the Dominion, and sent many skilled workmen over the border to the United States. One of the speakers deplored the absence of Canadian competitors in most of the International sports tournaments. The speaker had apparently forgotten that Mr. Hilton Belyea, the Canadian amateur sculler, has come over here to win the Diamond Sculls from the American, Walter Hoover, and that according to latest reports he stands a good chance of doing so.

The Harrow Historical Pageant is likely to have a considerable influence not only on the English Public schools, but on the English countryside. Lady Curzon is taking a part in the pageant, and it is understood that other public schools are to follow Harrow's example, and that Eton and Winchester are to stage a special pageant.

Political circles are much amused at the announcement that Mrs. Hilton Philipson, or Mabel Russell, as she is better known, M.P., will quit the House of Commons for the stage, for one day only, to help at the Theatrical Garden Party. The latest women candidate for St. Stephen's is Miss Louise Owens, for twenty years the confidential personal secretary of Lord Northcliffe. She is going to throw in her lot with the Conservatives, and has already arranged with Mr. Stanley Baldwin and Lord Derby as to a prospective constituency. She is interested, I understand, in the industrial development of Canada.

The stream of arrivals for the International Horse Show at Olympic, London, has begun. As usual, Italian competitors in the jumping events are very numerous, the Conte di Bergelo at the moment being first favorite. It was at last year's Horse Show that he met the Princess Yolanda, King of Italy's daughter, and now his wife.

Breaking The Speed Laws

Despite the many warnings that motorists have had against the dangers of speeding, the practice has not ceased nor is it likely to until very drastic measures are taken to put a stop to it. This morning two drivers of cars were fined fifty dollars each for driving "at a speed and in a manner dangerous to the public." In inflicting these comparatively heavy fines Judge Morris is undoubtedly doing his part to safeguard the public against irresponsible motor drivers, but it seems that something even more than a fifty dollar fine is necessary to convince certain motorists that others besides them have rights on the public streets and thorofares. Judge Morris this morning said that he would in future, in the case of second offenders send the guilty ones to prison without the option of a fine. This will unquestionably prove the cure, and if he administers it to suit the needs of the speed mania, His Honor will have the gratitude of the whole public.

In this connection citizens have it in their power to protect themselves against speeders, in that any two citizens lodging a complaint against a motorist against whom they are prepared to testify, can secure a conviction against such motorist and have him fined.

VICTORIA, B.C., July 4—Young women who would become the wives of settlers in a new country and be willing to do their share of pioneering would find a paradise in the Toba River country, north of Powell River, according to word brought back by Provincial Government investigators.

"We are asked by the settlers to make an examination of the agricultural prospects of their region," says the report. "The greatest need is women settlers. They needed to give the men inspiration and keep things in order. There can be no real settlement without them."

MONTREAL, Que., July 5—Protest against young children from charitable institutions being permitted to sell tags on the streets was made by the executive of the Child Welfare Association at a recent meeting. The resolution then passed asserts this is a form of begging which is detrimental to the moral welfare of the children and that it tends to teach them to see in this method an easy way of making a living.

Who Said Hail Stones?

To-day's public despatches contain much news that is sensational, some even appalling. We are told in a message purporting to come from Hartney, Manitoba, of a storm in which "huge stones"—we hesitate to believe they were hail stones—fell and broke wind shields of motor cars, besides crushing the crops into the ground and destroying them. Another message describes how in Saskatoon an entire farm, including house, stable, graneries, half a dozen smaller buildings, hay-cocks and chicken coops "were wiped out" by lightning and wind. Marvellous to relate, the farmer and his family escaped unscathed, but no doubt they were securely quartered in the cellar. Still another despatch comes to hand from St. John's, Nfld., announcing the fact that yesterday Governor Allardyce assented to the Humber and Railway Bills passed by the Legislature and describing what these Bills are. We await with awe and interest the receipt of future messages from the same prolific sources of sensationalism.

S. A. Annual Congress

Commissioner Sowton, Territorial Leader for Canada East and Newfoundland, accompanied by Lieut. Colonel Morehen, arrived by the S.S. Silvia on Thursday to conduct the Annual Congress. In connection with this year's Congress Gatherings Colonel and Mrs. Cloud, who have been appointed by General Booth as the Sub Territorial Leaders for the Salvation Army in Newfoundland, will be given a welcome. The Colonel is coming to Newfoundland after 37 years active service in the Army, all of which have been spent in the British Isle. During the last five years he has had oversight of the work in Wales. He will therefore have in his new appointment his first taste of Colonial Warfare.

The opening service of the Congress begins to-night at the No. 1 Citadel, New Gower Street, when a special meeting for Field Officers, Local Officers, Soldiers and Recruits will be held; the three City Corps united. On Sunday morning there will be a monster parade of all City Salvationists, visiting Officers and No. 1 and 2 Troops of Life Saving Guards. Starting from the Citadel, New Gower St. the procession will proceed via Hamilton Street, LeMarchant Road, Long's Hill, Theatre Hill and New Gower St. to No. 1 Citadel, where there will be a united Holiness Meting conducted by the Commissioner.

At 3 p.m. a Public Reception will be held in the Methodist College Hall, presided over by His Excellency the Governor, Sir William Allardyce, supported by a number of prominent citizens. In connection with this Reception the new S.A. Leaders for Newfoundland will be installed by Commissioner Sowton. At 7 p.m. the Commissioner will preach in the Methodist College Hall.

! ! ! ! !

Cheers for Bob Smillie, the great and beloved leader of the Scottish coal miners! Robert Smillie, M. P., he is now. If ever in all Breat Britain's parliamentary history there was a man who should be in the House of Parliament, that man is Bob Smillie.

Smillie, M.P., was elected by a majority of 7,000 votes—a majority of that number, note. He polled 20,053 votes, while his oppenent polled 13,087. His opponent was a man who was nominated and supported by both the Tories and the Liberals—and Labor licked them both! Just before the election the Labor forces organized a "Twenty-Thousand-for-Smillie Club," and it is remarkable to note how they predicted Smillie's vote.

Oh, it cheers to see Labor coming into its own like this! Rejoice with British Labor, ye hardy fishermen-toilers of Newfoundland. Their fight is yours, and yours theirs!

! ! ! ! !

Robert Smillie is one of the greatest labor leaders in all Great Britain, and has been for forty-five years. He was an associate of the late and greatly beloved Kier Hardie, founder of the Independent Labor Party, the backbone of the present British Labor Party which has over a hundred and fifty labor members in the British House of Commons.

Smillie, like James Ramsay MacDonald, leader of the Official Opposition in the House of Commons today, and Chairman of the Labor Party, opposed the Great War with all his might, and naturally came in for a great deal of opprobrium on that account. However, he stuck to his beliefs, like any true-blue man will do, no matter what the beliefs be. My hat is off to the sincere man who stands by his honest convictions, even though I hate or despise the convictions.

! ! ! ! !

Smillie was the miners' brilliant star at the famous Sanky Commission hearing of facts concerning the coal industry of Great Britain. The manner in which he marshalled his witnesses proved him a great general and leader.

The miners of Britain had for years complained bitterly of conditions in the mines, and demanded of the Government that the mines be nationalized, or made the property of the nation rather than the private property of a few dozen fabulously wealthy owners.

Lloyd George, then Premier, said to them: "Here, I will apapoint a Commission to take evidence about this thing, and I will abide by the report of that Commission." So Justice Sankey, perhaps the most eminent jurist in all England, was appointed Chairman, and the fun began. The mine owners brought in their witnesses and gave their evidence. And the miners brought in their witnesses in hundreds—poor, worn-out miners, little children, old decrepit women: a pitiful army of wage-slaves who told a story of sordid slavery under conditions unfit for animals, let alone creatures of God.

! ! ! ! !

"Do you do anything useful at all?" Smillie would ask gently of dukes and lords and industrial monarchs, "to deserve the income you have from the ownership of the coal mines?"

Well, the Sankey Commission reported that the only fair and practical thing it saw to be done about the coal mines was to nationalize them. Do you think therefore that Lloyd George kept his word and nationalized the mines?

He hasn't so far.

! ! ! ! !

But—the ranks of the Labor party are swelling, swelling, swelling. Soon they will take over the reins of government. Then———

Conditions Are Dull In Foreign Markets

But Hopes are Held for Future Betterment—Italy Eager to Obtain Supplies New Fish.

(Trade Review)

ST. JOHN'S.—During the week The Trade Review was informed by one of the principal fish exporters that the very latest news from all the foreign markets was that conditions were dull just now, though hopes are expressed for a slight future betterment. England was looking for salt fish a month ago, but is now well supplied.

As regards the prospects in Spain, he says, the Spanish dealers do not want any of our fish and are making no enquiries as to prospective sales for the coming months; showing unfortunately as far as that country is concerned, a very poor outlook.

Since codfish in Italy has been put on the free list, the importers of cod there have been making many enquiries as to Newfoundland goods. They are especially eager to obtain shipments of the first supplies of our small shore (new) fish and ther are not lacking indications that a very decent market awaits us in connection with shipments of this class to Italy when it is available.

Limited Sale for Labrador.

Speaking of Labrador he observes that there is keen competition between exporters of Grance and Iceland in the sale of the imitation Labrador soft cure fish and the general belief is held that there will be only a limited sale for our Labrador if the price is not a lower one than we have been quoting. If we ask anything over the price which our competitors from France and Iceland are offering their catches then the sales for our fish of this grade will not amount to much. We are "up against it," our informant believes, in this grade of fish and must keep chose tab on the quotations of our very alert rivals if we are to dispose profitably of the fish taken off the coasts of our now celebrated dependency.

Relative to the Greek market a great improvement has been evident for a while past in the sterling exchange rates. The drachma which had depreciated to 400 to the pound sterling is now obtainable at 150 to the pound sterling; but with such fluctuation evident it is very doubtful if this rate of exchange can be maintained for any considerable time; but it is thought, if matters turn out favorably, there will be far better prospects for the future in the Grecian market than for many months in the past.

Improved Cure Necessary.

The gentleman to whom we allude, is one of those public spirited individuals who has the best interests of the country and its people uppermost in his thoughts and he stressed the subject of the cure of our catch both Shore and Labrador. After all he rightly remarks fish is a food and an article of consumption indispensible to the peoples with whom we deal. We here in Newfoundland are justly particular as to the food stuffs we require and will pay liberally for our flour, meats, butter, fruits and vegetables, when we are assured that we get the best and purest of goods. The European peoples, though like ourselves, struggling against adverse conditions resulting on the great war, will not expend their money on inferior goods either of fish or flesh and we should leave nothing undone to offer to them codfish of a quality which they will readily buy. We are well aware, to our sorrow, that we have been gradually driven from our Mediterranean markets by the improved cure of this Icelandic and French fish and unless something is done and done right now to improve the cure of our Labrador fish we will keenly regret our remissness in this respect and may have to record serious losses on shipments before Xmas.

An Anti-War Resolution

TORONTO, June 25—"Resolved:—That no pictures which glorify war or which tend to perpetuate feelings of prejudice or hatred against people of other countries, be hung in schools."

This Resolution recently passed by the Parent-Teachers' Association, composed of delegates from 28 societies of Vancouver, was brought to the attention of women here by a letter to the Globe written by Lucy Woodsworth, wife of the Labor member for Winnipeg. She is hoping that every school section in the country will take this question up. She realizes that the I.O.D.E., in exhibition these war pictures, is actuated by highmotives, but she does not believe in the principle and considers that the Vancouver resolution has significance for Canadian women.

Doctors Interested In The New Discovery

(London Paper)

Prof. Dreyer's announcement in a lecture at St. Mary's Hospital of his discovery of a new vaccine for the treatment of consumption is the talk of the medical world to-day.

The Professor states that he has found a way of removing the sheath of fat from tubercle bacilli—a sheath that has prevented the germs when administered as vaccine having the desired effect in stimulating the body to make an antidote to the poison.

Ground for Hope

The new vaccine has been tried both at the Brompton Hospital and the London Hospital, and though it would be premature to say a new "cure" has been found for consumption, the evidence available warrants the hope that science had made a stride towards the conquest of the white plague.

The vaccine, The Evening News understands, has been tried on patients of both sexes and in several instances the dose has been repeated after varying intervals.

The cases selected were all serious and of long standing.

The result of the vaccine treatment was to arrest the progress of the disease and improve the patient's condition and powers of resistance.

Official Caution.

"There have been various forms of treatment for consumption by inoculation for many years," said Mr. Frederick Wood, the secretary of the Hospital for Consumption at Brompton, to The Evening News today.

"The results from most of them, however, have been very disappointing.

"Dr. Dreyer's is one of the latest forms and it seems to hold out a better prospect of success.

"At the same time, we must wait for further evidence before we can tell how far the new hopes which have been raised will be justified.

"It is an essential part of the treatment of consumptives to build up the physical resistance of the patient, and when a patient improves we cannot be certain how much of the improvement is due to the new form of treatment and how much to other things.

"It is also too soon to say whether the improvement will be permanent," continued Mr. Wood.

"About 2,000 patients go through the Brompton Hospital in a year and it has 500 in-patients now and a waiting list of 150. Cases are transferred to a sanatorium at Frimley as soon as the patients have improved sufficiently to take part in the special course of graduated exercises provided there.

Mr. Wood emphasised that the cost of the upkeep of the hospital and sanatorium is £75,000 a year, and that more money is needed for research.

Good Apple Crop Prospects

OTTAWA, June 27.—The prospects for apple crops throughout Canada are good, according to the Fruit Branch of the Department of Agriculture for the Dominion. In British Columbia the crop is estimated to be 15 to 20 per cent. higher than in 1922. In Ontario the crop will probably be the same as last year, in Quebec, 50 per cent. of 1922; in New Brunswick, 75 per cent. of 1922, and in Nova Scotia is estimated to be 10 per cent. heavier than last year.

As for potatoes, the acreage in Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan is about 97 per cent of last year's acreage. British Columbit has 95 per cent. of last year's acreage in that province; Ontario, 93 per cent.; Quebec, 97 per cent.; New Brunswick, 92 per cent., and Nova Scotia, 94 per cent of last year's acreage.

Heavy Trade Balance Against United States

Imports were $228,000,000 More Than Exports For Last Five Months.

The total merchandise exports from the United States for the five months beginning January 1, 1923, were $1,628,175,477; the imports were $1,765,757,586, showing a balance against them of $137,582,109.

The total net imports of gold and silver since January 1, 1923, were $91,241,635. The total merchandise and gold and silver balances against the United States were, therefore, $228,823,744, for this period.

The net movement of invisible exchange for the same period, of course, cannot be estimated, but it will probably show further adverse net balances. In this connection one item of increase volume during the last four months has been the withdrawals of American currency for export to Europe.

Must Apply The Golden Rule

DES MOINES, July 6—When America can bring about industrial peace in this country by the application of the Golden Rule, they can solve the problems of the world, according to A. J. Shartle of Boston who spoke tonight at a session of the International Christian Endeavor Convention.

"The teachings of Jesus when applied to human relations will solve all disputes," said Mr. Shartle. "The trouble is that men and nations are blinded by greed and are not willing to do unto others as they would that men shall do unto them. Remove greed, fear and suspicion from the hearts of men and peace will result.

"The greedy employers because of their love for money can see only their interests and if permitted to do so will grind down their employees because of love for money. The greedy employees will likewise cheat in their rendering service and deliver as little work for the most pay possible Where this unfair dealing spirit is supplanted by the spirit of good will based upon the application of the Golden Rule, there is peace and prosperity and happiness.

"The Golden Rule works where it is worked. As an abstract principle it is no better than healing medicine corked up in a bottle. We, as Christions, should preach with more earnestness the application of this Golden Rule and when we in America by its application can bring about industrial peace here we can solve the problems of the world.

"It is because of the faith we have in the efficacy of this principle that we are bold enough to suggest a programme of world peace based upon good-will."

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

Here I would stop to call the attention of the House to the similarity beween this situation and ours. The Canadian Northern, he says, has been in desperately bad shape for ve year before the Government took it over. That was the position of the eid ailway before we took it overpun Reid Railway before we underook Commission conrol in 1920. Now let us go a step farther. Mr. Payne says "the pinch of trade depression did not set in until early in 1921. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Northern earned $21,036,090 more in 1920 than it did in 1919. It had been strengthened by a tremendous expenditure of money advanced by the public treasury. Yet it showed deterioration in every department. Its rail load, already ruinously low, deiined from 361.4 tons to 353.2 and when that happens, without extraordinary and unconpuerable causes, it indicates a fatal defect in management."

Uses Strong Language

In his review of the Canadian competent critic used very strong language, and no parallel could be more instructive than that afforded by the example of this railroad in Canada and our own railroad in Newfoundland. Mr. Payne says "the building of the first Canadian Northern Railway was a sound enterprise." So was the building of the first Newfoundland railway, and had the late Sir. R. G. Reid retained the vigor of mature manhood some years longer than he did, we would not, in my opinion, be discussing in this House to-day, any measures in terms like that of the present. The following is a quotation from Mr. Payne's published statement:

"When our analysis is complete we shall see that both our trouble and our danger have had their origin in a series of blunders. We had just emerged from a period of successful railroad building, and had begun to realize the benefits which the Canadian Pacific had brought to the Dominion, when the notion seems to have become general that the way to promote national growth, swiftly and surely, was to multiply railway mileage with all possible speed. The thought that we might over-build was not entertained. But we did over-build, nevertheless. We constructed thousands of miles of line more than we could possibly assimilate.

"The building of the first Canadian Northern was a sound enterprise. It did not to any serious extent parallel any existing road. Even when it reached a total of 3,000 miles it was still a good business proposition, with a favorable grade and a remunerative traffic. If at that stage some omnipotent hand had been laid on its owners, Canada would not today be confronted by the most puzzling and alarming problem which any country has been called upon to solve.

"The projectors must be judged by performance; for what they did in the succeeding ten years were the acts of men who had thrown reason to the winds. In the history of civilization there is not such another story of folly and blindness, as that which arose out of their subsequent operations. They not only wrecked their own fine promises of success, but they are in a large degree responsible for a situation which has in it all the possibilities at this moment of wrecking a nation.

"What is the frankly told story of the Canadian Northern? It is simply that it was built almost on public money. Its owners had very little financing to do which called for skill; and such skill as was necessary they could buy. Theirs was the omnipotence of money, and o ther people's money at that. They did not have to go after capital. It was thrust on them in hundreds of millions.

"They did not lie awake at night worrying about what became of this huge system, which in a few swiftly passing years grew from 3,000 to nearly 10,000 miles. That was the concern of the endorsers. The owners let contracts to themselves, and probably saw to it that the difference between he contract price and the actual cost was saisfactory. No matter how temporary in character were the roads which they built, nor how inadequately they were equipped, it is conceivable that their interest began and ended with earning the subsidies. The result was that, by 1914, they were at the end of their tether. While it lasted neither conspicuous genius nor business principles were necessary to keep the thing going.

"In 1914 these promoters we at the door of the government begging for $60,000,000 to keep them afloat. They got it. There was a bludgeon which compelled many a suspicious and hostile member of parliament to support the vote. But why take up more space telling the full sickening story of this road, which was doomed from the moment its owners had their cursed dream of a great rival system to the Canadian Pacific? We are more concerned at the instant with the awful drain on the public treasury which has been necessary in order to hold up this hastily built system, and keep it from collapsing under its own weight. The facts in that relation ought to tell every thinking man in the country just what was the character of this railway as laid at the door of government, practicalyy in 1914.

Huge Railway Loss

"On pages 10 and 11 of the last Public Accounts of the Dominion, will be found the complete facts with regard to what the Canadian Northern has cost the people of Canada since it broke down in 1914. It had cost them something like $300,000,000 before that in cash and lands and guarantees. But worse was to come. Between 1914 and 1921 it was given advances of $286,687,833. (He supplies the details, but I have not included them.) This shows:

"Total advance since 1914	$268,687,883
"Total cost prior to 1914	$300,000,000
"Total cost to people of Canadian Northern system	$568,687,833

"Note that no interest to Government is included in these figures.

"One of the first things to arrest attention should be the fact hat Governmen paid $35,000,000 for the common stock of the Canadian Northern, although it did not represent a penny of investment, and the possession of which carried with it the liability of probably the most bankrupt concern in the world.

"It is only by comparison that one may grasp the significance of these figures. Let it therefore be said that from Confederation down to 1914 when we had 795 miles of railway in operation in the Dominion, the total amount of cash aid given to all roads was $178,834,529.. It took $90,000,000 more than that in seven years to bolster up the Canadian Northern after it was built and in operation. Yet in 1920 it had receipts $36,000,000 greater than in 1914.

The original agreement of 1881 gave $25 000,000 in cash to the Canadian Pacific syndicate, and, through acquired charters, and in every other way, the Canadian Pacific did not receive from the public treasury of Canada $50 000,000 in aid. Let those who wish to know the facts measure that sum against the moneys advanced to the Canadian Northern, and they willsee that the latter has received enough to construct ten or twelve Canadian Pacifics. And then let them compare what the Dominion has in the two roads—one a bulwark to our national credit, and the other a sink-hole without bottom. Nobody knows nor can know, when we shall be at the end of our losses on account of the Canadian Northern, and nobody now living ca possibly live log enough to find out."

One of Several

The Canadian Northern ailway, however, is only one of the four units making up the system now known as the Canadian National ailways. The second is the Grand Trunk, operating from Montreal westward through Quebec and Ontario, but as to that there is the evidence of competent authorities that the Grand Trunk of itslf was a sound financial proposition. It headed itself for bankruptcy when it undertook the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific ailway, an extension of the system from Ontario to British Columbia. This railway and the Canadian Northern were built into Western Canada at the same time, in addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway which already seruced that section.

Mr. Payne points out that, as with us, "Boom times were on us, optimism ran high, practically everybody believed that we could not build railways fast enough." This Grand Trunk Pacific line was constructed between 1904 and 1914, and he says "It cost the Dominion about $200,000,000 to build the Grand Trunk Pacific railway and in addition advances were made to that road since totalling $122.80.700." These advances took the form of loans, investments, interest, receiver's accounts, etc., details of which he publishes. They show, however, that the total cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the people of Canada was roughly $323.000.000 without allowing a cent for the interest the government had to pay and will have to pay annually on the principal of these loans.

THE Lotion for Skin Disease

AT ALL DRUGGISTS.

In addition to that, he says, the Grand Trunk has itself got advances of $28,000,000 up to 1920 and further advances of $57,000,000 in 1921, making a total of $85,000,000 given to that railway by the Canadian Government, and that not allowing for any interest charges whatever. He then goes an to say that in order to keep these three railroads afloat, the cost from the beginning of the war up to the end of 1921, the Canadian public had to pay as follows:

To the Canadian Northern	$267,000,000
To the Canadian Grand Trunk Pacific	123,000,000
To the Canadian Grand Trunk	85,000,000

a total of $475,000,000. But he further shows that in addition to these amounts there were capital charges on account of the Government railways fram 1914 down to date of $148,000,000 more and on account of the Inter-Colonial Railways and its subsidiaries a further sum of $140,000,000 was incurred for the same period.

Financial Mess

Although he estimates that $763,000,000, including interest, was spent in these seven years from 1914 on account of the railways of Canada other than the Canadian Pacific—a sum representing roughly one-third of the entire public debt of the Dominion to-day. I might go on indefinitely quoting figures to show the appalling financial mess into which Canada's Railway system has resolved itself, but I have quoted enough to satisfy the House that the broad sweeping, general criticisms directed against my government for its alleged failure to more successfully grapple with the railway problem is entirely unwarranted and that the real fact of the matter is that Newfoundland, like Canada, is the victim of a situation for which the direct responsibility cannot be fastened on any one person, one group or one government, but which has grown up within the past 30 years as a result of the development of the country, the demands for railway extension and the expansion of the transport agencies, steam boat facilities and other services, all designed in the best interests of the people, but unfortunately having miscarrid as the continued result of undue optimism and great post-war depression. In the United States similar conditions have grown up within the past ten years and I could quote from authorities competent to pronounce on American railroad conditions, but I feel that it is not necessary at this present moment. I may be permitted, however, to quote from the Empire Day Number of the London Times issued under date of May 24th last, a review of the conditions of the South African Railway. It will be found on page 5 under the head of Financial Tasks, sub-head South Africa, where the following statement is made: "The latest estimate of the results for the year 1922-23 indicate a deficit of £1,350,000 of £1,000,000 more than originally estimated. The accumulated deficit now amounts to £2,300,000. The Provinces have also got into the deficit habit. The Cape Province is £145,000 short, the Orange Free State $126,000, the other Provinces showing smaller deficits. The total public debt of South Africa is now £99,250,000 and increase of over £7,000,000 in a year."

I might explain that the Union of South Africa has a narrow gauge railroad of the same width as ours, 3 feet 6 inches and the total lineage is 11,0000 miles. This railway has been accumulating deficits for some years and its situation is somewhat comparable to our own.

Cost In Canada.

The latest official figures respecting the operation of the Canadian National Railways are those which were presented to the Canadian House of Commons on the 27th of March last and reported in the Canadian newspapers of the following day. They cover the working of the system during 1922 and they show that the operating revenue from all sources was $234,111,090 for that year, a reduction of approximately $2,000,000 as compared with 1920, while the operating expenses were $229,917,540, a reduction of approximately $16,000,000, so that after taking into account non-operating income and deductions from gross income the year's business showed an operating surplus of $2,638,000. Of course, in this statement no account is taken of the interest on the capital sums which the railway system represents, but it is of importance to note that the condition of the Canadian National Railway for the past year, though serious enough, was $14,000,000 better than it was the previous year. In connection with this I might remark that Sir Henry Thornton, the new President and General Manager of the system, in a memo, included in the statement of Hon. George Graham, the acting Minister of Railways, "expressed his faith in the future of the enterprise, promised that savings would be made by the reorganization which had taken place since he had assumed office, under which he divided the railway into three regions—east, central and west—for more effective operating of the road, and gave details of plans he had under way to ensure better business on the one hand and increased economy on the other, and he appealed to the Canadian public to exercise patience and afford an opportunity to his organization to make good and justify its expectations."

Prime Minister's Address on Our Railway Problems

Comparative Statement.

It is gratifying to me to be able to report to-day a somewhat similar improvement in the position of our own railway, even under all the difficulties with which it has to contend. I have had prepared a statement showing comparative expenses, earnings and losses for the 10 months ending April 30, 1922 and 1923, the figures for May not yet being available. This statement is as follows:—

	1922	1923	1923	1923
	Ten Months Ended April 30		Decrease	..Increase
Total Expenses ..	$2,505,654.45	$2,150,638.49	$355,015.96
Total Earnings ..	1,567,437.38	1,621,618.99		$54,181.61
Loss	938,217.07	$529,019.50	$409,197.57

You will note that there is a decrease in the expenses of $355,915.96 and an increase in earnings of $54,181.61, as compared with the same period for the previous year. There has also been a reduction in loss on operation amounting to $409,197.57. Owing to exceptionally severe winter conditions during the months of February, March and April of this year, the expenses do not show very much reduction as compared with these months of the previous year, but you will not that, notwithstanding this, there is a total reducion for he ten months of $409,197. I am informed by the management that business has improved greatly since May came in and should show considerable improvement over last year.

Favor a Trial

The present Liberal Government of Canada has decided to give the policy of government ownership and operation of its National Railways a fair trial, though some of the keenest minds in the country like Lord Shaughnessy and Sir Joseph Flavelle, strongly advocate a return to company ownership and operation. In 1917 Lord Shaughnessy prepared a memorandum analysing the railway situation in Canada as it then existed and suggested a plan of dealing with it. He forwarded his suggestions to Sir Robert Borden, the Premier, for the consideration of himself and his cabinet. Again in 1921, Lord Shaughnessy sent to Premier Meighen a memorandum on the railway situation suggesting a way out of the Difficulty. He did so, he said, "to assist if I can in the solution of what is beyond doubt the most serious and menacing problem that faces our country."

This is the attitude of a patriotic Canadian towards his country's railway problem, yet in Newfoundland we have an element which would have the public believe that no other country but our own has such a problem on its hands, and that here it is due solely to the fact that the present governmen is in charge of affairs.

Practical Pronouncement

We have to consider the question as to the program of the government with respect to railway operations. I am of the opinion that the pronouncement of Mr. C. R. Morgan upon our railway situation is the most important practical pronouncement which has yet been made. I consequently again quote from the article which appeared in the "Canadian Railway and Marine World" an article already referred to and from which I have read quotations at length. Mr. Morgan's line of thought as set forth in that article is as follows:

"Remedies Proposed: 'As the experience of about 20 years," Mr. Morgan says, 'operation of the railway has demonstrated that the contract made in 1898 cannot be carried through its fifty year term, as no private company could possobly absorb the losses involved; the facts should be faced and the old contract should be abrogated on terms fair to all concerned. All claims should be waived in settlement to be made. The ownership of all physical property should be vested in the Government, which now owns nearly al lthe right of way track, structures and certain of the rolling stock. As the steamships now owned by the Reid Newfoundland Co. are a necessary adjust to the Colony's transportation system, these should be acquired by the Government, so that they may be managed in complete harmony with its rail system, and rates and routes adjusted so as to best serve the Colony's interest. The present division of the ownership confusing, unconomical and unsatisfactory, tending to creation of conflicting claims, which will undoubtedly lead to costly litigation in the future. With the ownership of the steamships and railway consolidated in the Government, they would be free to operate, or lease to any contractor, as would best serve the interest of the people; duplication of service should be eliminated; conflicting rates harmonized; competition of outside steamships met; to the end that traffic on which the people of the Island pay the freight charges shall be carried by the Government boats and railway, so that the money will go to the citizens of the Colony instead of being paid to outsiders and spent in Canada or elsewhere. While it will soon be necessary to face the question of large expenditures for improvements, particularly the relaying of the line with heavier rails, it does not appear that this is the proper time to undertake such expenditures in a large way; interest rates are receding; material and labor rates are on the downward course, making it reasonable to expect that such improvements can be done more cheaply if postponed for a while. The operations of the railway is in course of readjustment and has not yet reached a settled basis; the trend of traffic following war conditions cannot be foretold with certainty, hence it appears wise to carry the railway along for a year or two with only moderate expenditure on capital accounts, taking care only of such items of improvement as are imperative."

Not In Public Interest

I am personally strongly of the opinion that Government operation of transportation facilities in Newfoundland would not be in the public interests. On the other hand, the railroad service must be maintained in continuous and efficient operation until such time as a efficient railway program satisfactory to the Government and the country has been formulated and ratified by the Legislature.

The Resolutions which I have submitted to the House are intended to confirm an agreement between the Government and the Reids for the settlement of our railway difficulties. It is dictated largely by a realization of the fact that in the best interests of the country the eliminaion of the Reids from the railway had become imperative, and also by the fact that, to put it bluntly, the Armstrongs would have nothing to do with the Humber enterprise while the railway remained in the position that there was a contingency of "shut-downs" and "tie-ups" such as we had experienced during the past few years.

THE RAILWAY AGREEMENT

The main provisions of the Agreement may be summarized as follows:

1. THIS Agreement is subject to the approval and confirmation by the Legislature of the Colony of this Agreement and of two Agreements of even date herewith made between the Government and Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, Limited.

2. The Company and its subsidiary companies shall retire absolutely from all transportation (including express) operations in from and to the Colony and from the Docking business in Newfoundland.

3. THE Company shall convey and assure or procure to be conveyed and assured to and vested in the Government free from encumbrances:

(a) Its eight steamships, Kyle, Meigle, Sagona, Glencoe, Argyle, Clyde, Home and Petrel with their apparel, tackle and furnishings;

(b) The assets and goodwill of its express business;

(c) The Dry Dock and premises (subject to the rights if any of Newfoundland Atlantic Fisheries Limited) with all buildings, plant, machinery, equipment, stock in trade and the goodwill of Newfoundland Dockyards Limitid, but excluding bills receivable and payable by the latter Company at that date of transfer; the Company to procure the surrender of the existing lease in favour of the St. John's Light and Power Company, Limited, on the provision of the new sub-station referred to in paragraph 8 (d);

(d) All stocks of railway steamship express and telegraph supplies and material on hand belonging to the Company;

(e) All buildings, rolling stock, equipment and accommodations including telegraph lines provided by the Company under the Railway Contracts or in connection with the railway steamship or express services (including the terminal facilities enjoyed by the Company at North Sydney).

4. The Government and the Company shall respectively be relieved from all claims whatsoever which either party may have or think it has against the other with respect to any matters whatsoever affecting or incidental to the Railway Steamship telegraph express or dock services and from all obligations and liabilities past, present or future, in connection with the construction provision equipment maintenance or operation of the said services or any of them or heretofore imposed upon the Government or upon the late Sir Robert G. Reid, or upon the Company by any statute or by any contract or agreement whatsoever; and by way of illustration only, and so as not to exclude any other items the following matters shall be included under this head:

(a) The claim by the Company that the Government is under obligation under the Transportation of Timber Act 1904 to provide the Company with over two hundred and seven thousand acres of timber land;

(b) All claims if any by the Company for transportation or other services over and above contractual requirements either during the war period or at any other time;

(c) All claims if any by the Company in respect of the competition of the Government in freight and passenger transportation;

(d) All claims if any by the Company in respect of subsidies unpaid and of moneys due and unpaid on operating account under any contracts or agreements relating to the operation of any of the said services;

(e) All claims if any by the Company in respect of moneys due and unpaid on Branch Railway Construction account;

(f) All claims if any by the Company for damages in respect of breaches by the Government of all or any of the various contracts and agreements relating to the establishment and operation of all or any of the said services;

(g) All claims if any by the Government in respect of construction and operating contracts including operations under the Railway Commission and subsequent temporary operating contracts and whether for debt default or damages.

5. AS the final and complete consideration for all matters included in this settlement the Government shall pay to the Company in bonds of the Colony at par maturing in twenty years bearing interest at five per cent. per annum and charged upon the funds of the Colony the sum of Two million dollars or at the option of the Company the equivalent of that sum in sterling money of Great Britain calculated at the rate of exchange prevailing on the date of the passing of the legislation hereinafter mentioned. Such payment shall be made within a reasonable time after such legislation as may be necessary for the confirmation of this Agreement and the creation of the said bond issue has passed the Newfoundland Legislature.

6. THE said railway steamship telegraph and express services shall be taken over by the Government as a going concern provided however that all debts due or claimed to be due on operating account to or by the Company shall be deemed to be included in this settlement. The Government shall be entitled to the balances to the credit of the Company's Railway and Steamship Account and Newfoundland Express Company Account in the Bank of Montreal.

7. THE Company shall procure that St. John's Light and Power Company, Limited, hereinafter called the Power Company, shall for itself and its assigns enter into a contract for not less than ten years nor more than thirty years for light and power for the Railway terminus and dock at a discount of twenty five per cent. off its regular rates to ordinary customers or at its lowest rates to any customer whichever shall be less.

8. TO protect such contract and ensure a continuous supply of light and power for St. John's the Government shall

(a) Subject to existing rights if any introduce legislation authorising the grant to the Power Company of the water powers of Pierre's Brook and Tor's Cove Brook (now held by the Company under an approved application under the Crown Lands Acts) as a reserve supply free of royalty or other charge until developed, after which the same shall be subject to an annual royalty of fifty cents per horsepower used;

(b) Introduce legislation to enable the Company to assign and mortgage its franchises under the St. John's Street Railway Charter 1896 and otherwise in order that necessary capital for improving the power plant and street railway may be secured;

(c) Subject to the approval of the Government Engineer or of persons from time to time nominated by him which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld permit the Power Company to carry its transmission lines along the right of way of the Trepassey and West End Branches of the Railway; and

(d) Provide the Power Company with a free site either in the Municipal Basin or on the dump or made land west of the Gas Works for the erection of a new Sub-Station at St. John's and the provision of terminal facilities for the street railway before requiring possession of the present sub-station and street railway terminal.

9. THE settlement contemplated by this Agreement shall be a complete final and absolute settlement of all questions and disputes outstanding between the Government and the Company on railway steamship telegraph express dock and other matters, and is intended to cover every relationship between the parties and exclude all possibility of arbitration or litigation between the parties in connection with anything which has happened prior thereto.

Light and Power Company

There is but one feature of this agreement which may call for explanation, and it is that relating to the St. John's Light and Power Company. That company is, like all the rest of the Reid enterprise, in a run-down condition. It is proposed to reconstruct the flume at Petty Harbor, to reconstruct the Stree Car sysem in St. John's and to extend its operations. In order to do this the Company needs money. It can secure that money only by an issue of bonds on the property. These bonds will be sold and with the funds thus obtained the reconstruction will be undertaken.

The power plant at Petty Harbor is now at the limit of its capacity. In the interests of the city it is necessary that additional power be provided. We are formally confirming to the company their rights to water power on the Southern Shore where they propose to install additional works for generating electricity at a point near these rivers, and to bring that power into St. John's. We propose to give them a right to erect poles along the Trepassey line of railway for the purpose of carrying that power.

By confirming to them this water power and these rights, the proposal will be rendered much more attractive to outside investors from whom they expect to raise the money to reconstruct the system and St. John's will be assured of a certain supply at all times. It may be recalled that two years ago last February the flume was damaged to such an extent that the city was without light or power for several days: and that at frequent intervals following droughts the same thing occurs.

This then is the agreement for the settling of our railway difficulties and assuring efficient electric light and power services for the city. Legislation alone gives it the force and effect of law and provides for the issuing of twenty-year five per cent. debentures for $2,000,000 which are to be paid to the eids in full and final settlement of all claims and demands. These bonds they accept at par in settlement of all claimsrdlu par in settlement.

Reid Lands

Some information with respect to the Reid lands may be of interest to the committee.

By the railway operating contract of 1893 the late Sir R. G. Reid was granted 5,000 acres of land per mile of railway in consideration of his operating the railway for ten years from 1893 to 1903. That transaction was closed twenty years ago.

In 1904 (by 4 Ed. VIII. Cap 13, the Transportation of Timber Acts), the Legislature took back the timber rights on 415,226 acres of the Reid lands within three miles of the sea (Sec. 4) and directed the Governor in Council to issue to the Reid Newfoundland Company in exchange perpetual leases for one-half that arceage or 207,613 acres of timber land (Sec. 8). These lands have not been given to the Company though the Act was passed nineteen years ago. The Te Reids now give up their statuary rights to this land.

The result is that the Reids do not hold and have not since 1904 held all the lands to which they were entitled in respect to the operation of the Railway from 1893 to 1903.

An extra 5,000 acres per mile of railway was granted to Sir R. G. Reid by the 1898 contract (clause 16) in respect to the 50 years operating period, but these lands were taken back for a cash consideration by the Bond Adminstration under the 1901 contract (clause 5).

Estimated at an approximate mileage of 530, this would amount to 2,650,000 acres, for which they received $859,000, a payment of about 33 cents an acre.

No Lands Granted

No lands have been granted under the 1909 contract (clause 6) though cash has been paid to the contractors in respect of part of their claim, therefore, under the provision of clause 8. As the branches would be operated about 40 years while the main line operating contract was for 50, the land grant for the branches was 4000 acres per mile. The position as to these lands was, however, complicated by the non-completion of the branches and the Reids got from the Government in 1918, after my retirement at the end of 1917, an amount in payment for lands admitted to be due and based upon a figure of 28 cents an acre. The Government contended that this was a payment in full, but the Reids dispute this and say itw as only a payment on account, and claim a further sum. That claim for whatever it was worth, is also extinguished by this settlement.

Grants issued to the Reid Newfoundland Company, dated 6th May, 1904, purport to convey to the Company 2,499,770 acres previously granted under the authority of the Railway Operating Contract of 1893, would make a total of 2,558,800 acres to which the Company was entitled under the Railway Acts of 1904 and and 1893.

After the issue of the grants in 1904 it was discovered, however, that owing to errors in the plans in the vicinity of Grand Lake there was a shortage in the areas of lots at that place amounting to 28,594 acres, so that the area actually held by the Company at present under the grants issued to them is 2,527,206 acres. All the lands covered by these grants are lands to which the Company was entitled under the terms of the Railway Operating Contract of 1893 which as I have already stated was completed in 1903.

Somewhat Indefinite

I cannot find it stated definitely in any of the Railway acts that the lands were to be granted as part payment for construction or, if there is any inference to this effect, what proportion was to be on that account and what proportion as consideration for the operation of the line.

It appears doubtful in any case whether the Government can recover any of these lands from the Contractor on account of failure to operate after 1903. The grants were issued under the authority of the Railway Operating Contract of 1893. Section 25 of that contract provided the following penalty for non-performance on the part of the contractor of any of the conditions contained in the contract:

"In he event of the failure of the Contractor to perform the services provided for in this contract, or any of them, the Contractor shall forfeit the security before-mentioned and the government may enter upon and take possession of all railways herein referred to."

The security referred to in this section was the sum of $250,000 in money or bonds which had to be deposited under the provisions of the Contract of the northern railway.

Sec. 34 of the Railway Construction Act of 1893, which authorizes the construction of the Northern and Western Railways provides that this security deposited under the Northern Railway Contract shall remain and be accepted as sufficient security both in the said contract and the present (1893) contract.

Impossible Proposition

I sympathize and am in complete accord with the sentiment which suggests that we should get our lands back, but I regret to say that it is not

Regatta Committee Does Much Business

The regular weekly meeting of the Regatta Committee was held last night in the T. A. Hall, a fair attendance being present. President Hiscock presided, and after the minutes had been read and adopted, Secretary Ellis read a letter from Councillor Vinnicombe thanking the Committee for their vote of condolence on the death, recently, of his sister.

A communication was read from Bowring Brothers granting full permission for the use of the grounds on Regatta Day.

The Junior Football League, at the request of the Committee, forwarded the following rule governing their race, which was inserted in the rules and regulations.

"Those only shall row in this race who have been registered with the Newfoundland Junior Football League for their respective teams up to and and including July 7, 1923. The decision of the League as to qualifications shall be final in all cases."

A request was received from Messrs M. . Maddigan, (C.C.C.); L. Stick, (C. E.I.); E. G Ewing (Feildians); B. J. Hart (Star); representing the above football teams, requesting that the Committee have the senior football race reinstated on the program, as this race was always popular and they stated that the four teams represented were ready to compete. The Committee agreed to give the race a place, but they accepted no responsibility regarding the status of players, as also the League, which notified the committee regarding their attitude on the matter. The captains of the teams will be asked to attend next Friday night's meeting when they must have a rule governing the race ready for submission to the Committee.

It was announced that at least four Juvenile crews were practicing, with a possibility of a fifth. In view of this it was decided to include this race in the program.

The Commercial Cable Athletic Association, through Secretary Butt, asked for a place in the Mercantile race. The Committee was of the opinion that this crew were not eligible for this race, but could row in the Amateur race, and the Secretary was instructed to notify them accordingly.

A communication was received from Arthur Johnson asking that a swimming race be included as a large number of competitors were anxious to have this race again put on the program. The committe could not see its way clear to accede to the request, but thought that as a number of clubs have been formed, they may arrange a meeting some afternoon or a half holiday during the season, when members of the Committee would render all the assistance possible in the carrying out of their program.

The Guards Band were given permission to hold band concerts on the green Monday evenings between now and Regatta day.

It was decided that the following crews will enter on Friday night next: Amateurs, Senior Football, Junior Football, Mercantile, Juvenile, Intermediate and Intermediate Fishermen.

Mr. A. G. Williams gave notice that at next meeting he would move that all members whose names are on the list, and who are not taking an active part in the Committee's work, be eliminated from the Committee's list.

A vote of condolence to the family of Councillor Dowden on the death, recently, of his brother, was passed and placed on the records of the committee.

After minor matters had been discussed the meeting adjourned till Friday night next.

All collectors start work in earnest on Monday next, and will report at the next meeting.

Has Wife Too Many

Ex-Soldier and Policeman Is Charged With Bigamy.

FIRST WIFE IN ENGLAND.

"Robert Haynes, for that you at "the S.A. Training College, Springdale St., St. John's, feloniously did "marry and take to wife one Annie "Harvey of Bell Isld., C.B., Dorothy "your former wife to whom you were "previously married being then alive. contrary to the statute in such cases "made and provided."

The above was the charge read out to an ex-soldier and ex-policeman by Judge Morris in the Magistrate's Court this morning.

The accused married while over seas, leaving his wife in England and to have married Miss Harvey in this City in the early part of the present year. He was remanded on $4,000 bail till the Crown is ready to proceed with the hearing.

New Trap Picked Up

The following message was received by the Fisheries Dept. this morning from the Sub-collector at Blanc Sablon:—"Captain Elms of the Alice M. Pike picked up a new trap in the Straits. I presume it belongs to some one in the district of St. Barbe from Flower's Cove to Bonne Bay. The Captain is satisfied to deliver trap to owner."

Wheels of Fortune on The Race Course

At last night's meeting of the Regatta Committee the folowing correspondence relating to the use of wheels of fortune, etc., on the race course was read:—

St. John's, Nfld.,
July 7, 1923.

Hon. F. J. Morris, K.C.,
Judge Central District Court.

Dear Judge Morris:—I am directed by the Regatta Committee to forward you copy of Resolution, duly passed by them, as follows:

"That this Committee respectfully suggest to His Honor Judge Morris that in their opinion, permission to aperate Wheels of Fortune on the Boat Clubs, be granted only to the Boat Clubs, directly concerned in Regatta work."

Soliciting your kind consideration for the above.

I have the honour to be,
Your Obedient Servant,
(Sgd.) CHAS. . ELLIS.
Hon. Secty. Regatta Committee.

Charles J. Ellis, Esq.,
Hon. Secretary, Regatta Com.

Sir:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of copy of resolution passed by the Regatta Committee in reference to granting permission to operate wheels of fortune on Regatta Day.

In reply thereto I beg to say I will be guided by the opinion of the Committee as set forth in the resolution and will grant permission to operate Wheels of Fortune on the Race Course be granted only to the Boat Clubs directly concerned in Regatta work.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. J. MORRIS,
Judge C. D. Court.

requires less work than ordinary hard wheat flours.
DON'T KNEAD IT TOO MUCH.
It goes together quickly and easily, requiring only two or three minutes' beating in the sponge or batter, and a few minutes' kneading in the dough until it becomes smooth and elastic.
It does not require a second kneading after it has risen in the bowl or basin—simply close the hand and punch down thoroughly.

Wedding Bells

POPE—THOMAS.

The marriage of Miss Violet K. P. Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Thomas, Barne's Place to Mr. Charles E. Pope, Chief Officer of S.S. Manoa and son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Pope was solemnized at 7.30 this morning at Queen's Road Congregational Church by the Pastor, Rev. T. B. Holden. The bride was attended by Miss Jennie Pope, sister of the Groom, while the bride's brother Mr. A. H. Thomas, performed the duties of best man. Following the ceremony the party drove around Quidi Vidi Lake and after an enjoyable wedding breakfast at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Pope left by motor for Kelligrews on the way to Colinet to spend their honeymoon.

To the young bride, who was the recipient of many eloquent tokens of esteem in the way of valuable gifts and to her popular husband, the "Advocate" tenders hearty congratulations.

Drowned off Ferryland

News of a drowning fatality was received by Mr. H. W. LeMessurier yesterday in a report from Mr. W. J. White, Sub-Collector at Ferryland. On Monday, July 9th, when the schooner Dorothy I., of Bellcoram Capt. Ralpr Skinner, was 80 miles off the land, Capt. Skinenr's brother Alfred, was engaged with some of the crew in hoisting the mainsail and accidently stepped in part of the coil of the down-haul of the main gaff, which lay on the deck. He tripped and fell overboard. One of the crew instantly threw a rope overboard which covered the unfortunate man who, however, did not make any attempt to grasp it. The crew put a dory overboard at once but Skinner had gone under and they were unable to find his body. The unfortunate man was 39 years old and leaves a wife and two children.

Methodists Summon Committee of Forty

COMING FROM ALL OVER CANADA TO DISCUSS CHURCH UNION

Telegrams were sent out last week from the Methodist Church Offices in Toronto for the purpose of summoning from distant provinces and from Newfoundland the members of the Methodist Committee of forty on legislation in connection with Church Union to meet in Toronto on July 16, and also to meet with the Presbyterians and Congregationalists in a joint committee on Church Union on July 17.

The revision of the draft bills for submission to Parliament and to the Legislatures of the nine provinces and of Newfoundland will be initiated at these metings, each of the churches having already suggested minor amendments to the draft bills as submitted to the Methodist General Conference, Gongregational Union and the Presbyterian General Assembly during the year.

Home's Report

Capt. Norman of the Home sends the following reports of fishery and weather conditions in the Straits:—Whiteley's crew at Bonne Esperance have 1500 qtls. codfish landed. From Bonne Esperance to Battle Harbour nothing has been done to date. The weather has been too stormy to allow boats to operate. On the Newfoundland side of the Straits the fishing is good, but a scarcity of salt is reported.

First Aid Life Savers To Get Recognition

OTTAWA, July 7—The Director General of the Canadian Branch of St. John Ambulance Association announces that the Executive has decided to recognize meritorous acts of first aid whereby human life has been saved.

The awards will consist of two medals, one of gold and the other of silver, and they will be awarded annually, if, in the opinion of the Executive, they have been merited.

This public recognition of saving life by First Aid is new in Canada, and, as it does not include the saving of life from drowning or in any other manner than by the use of First Aid, there will be no clashing with any similar awards for life saving. This distribution will be made among the certificate holders of the Association, who now number over seventy-four thousand men, women and children.

Board of Trade Meeting Monday

A special meting of the Board of Trade is being held on Monday at 3 p.m. to consider the advisability of asking at the present session for the amendment of the Registration of Deeds Act by making it compulsory to Register liens on book debts. As this is a very important matter, in which practically the whole commercial community is interested, a large attendance is expected.

C. E. Orphanage Garden Party

TAKES PLACE NEXT WEDNESDAY

A most enthusiastic, though very poorly attended meeting of men in connection with the C. E. Orphanage Garden Party, which takes place next Wednesday afternoon at the Orphanage grounds, was held at the C.L.B. Armoury last night. The various reports received were most satisfactory, and in spite of the aparent lack of interest by the male workers, it is hoped to make the day successful. The C.L.B. are looking after the sports programme which will include football sixes, a pony race, a mile, 100 yards dash, Girl Guides relay race while the C.L.B. Gymnasium squad will give an exhibition. Mr. W. J. Higgins will be asked to act as Field Captain again, and the C.L.B. officers will assist.

His Excellency the Governor will be asked to give his patronage and attend. Reports were received from the ladies that they have their arrangements well in hand. It will be remembered that last year the receipts were small owing to the rain, but this year with fine weather it is hoped to make up the deficiency. The ladies and gentlemen who are working for the Garden Party will meet on the grounds at 7.30 Monday evening.

Motor Thief Pleads Guilty To Charge

Smashed Car Valued at $1600.

Thomas Dormody, a 19 year old mechanic of the city, was arrested under warrant by Detective Peter Lee last evening and appeared before Judge Morris this morning charged with stealing from the R. C. Cathedral yard on July 9th a motor car owned by Hon. Thos Bonia, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs valued at $1,600.

The accused, although he was not called upon to plead; admitted his guilt and was remanded for eight days.

Cadets Defeat Guards In Championship Game

The biggest gathering seen at St. George's Field for years attended last evening's football clash between the Cadets and Guards which was virtually the championship game.

The contest was an exciting one from start to finish and no goals were scored in the first half in which the Guards had much the best of the play.

About ten minutes from the final whistle the Cadets, after being hard pressed throughout the period, were awarded a corner which was nicely placed, resulting in the first goal. This seemed to demoralize the Guards who let a second goal thru their lines a minute or two later. Both goal keepers did splendid work, especially Walsh of the Cadets whose coolness certainly saved his team from defeat.

The game ended with the score Cadets 2—Guards 0.

MINING TOWNS ARE FIRE SWEPT

Thousands Rendered Homeless; Loss $1,500,000

Germany Regards Baldwin's Statement As Sympathetic

FIRE WIPES OUT WHOLE TOWNS WEST

One of Largest Electric Hoists In World Is Burnt.

WALLACE Idaho, July 14—The little towns of Burke and Mace, mining centres, were swept by fire which started about one o'clock yesterday afternoon and devastated nearly a mile and half of homes, stores and mining works. No deaths were reported up to midnight last night, but the entire business section of Burke was destroyed and virtually every home is in ruins. The loss is estimated $1,500,000. Mace suffered less seriously owing to the wind being in the right direction. A thousand persons are said to be homeless, many losing all their possessions in the mad scramble for safety. The electric hoist of Hecla, one of the largest in the world, was burned.

Baldwin Has Hearst's Approbation

NEW YORK, July 14—The Hearst newspapers abandoned their customary hostility toward Great Britain and supported Premier Baldwin's statement on the reparations situation. The Journal editorially says England is entirely right, and Premier Baldwin expresses in restrained forceful but unmistakable terms the moral sentiment of the civilized world in protest against France's attitude. It goes on to say that France is to-day the disturber of the peace of the world.

NEW AERIAL RECORD

LONDON, July 14—F. T. Courtney won the aerial derby for the King's cup which ended here to-day, completing the 800 mile course at an average of 149.3 miles per hour, an increase of nearly 20 miles per hour over last year's record.

Cox In N.B.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 14—The city of St. John and the Province of New Brunswick to-day extended a hearty welcome to Governor Cox, of Massachusetts, when, accompanied by his wife and party, he arrived by steamer. He leaves Monday for Pictou to take part in the Hector celebration.

RAILWAY GUARANTEE

OTTAWA, July 16—Arrangements are being made for an issue in Canada of twenty-two million, five hundred thousand dollars in bonds of the Canadian National Railway Company, it was announced to-day by Hon. W. S. Feilding, Minister of Finance. The bonds will be guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Canadian Government which owns all the stock in the Company, and these bonds are to be issued for the purpose of equipping the line with necessary rolling stock.

Quebec Promised a Blue Sky Law

Probably Result of Some of the Labrador Gold Area Swindlers.

MONTREAL, — Quebec Province, with its traditional conservative population, has perhaps been less a hunting ground for unscrupulous stock promoters than some other parts of Canada. Nevertheless there have been many shyster schemes foisted on the public and when the associated boards of trade of the Eastern Townships met last week numerous lowing in the wake of high pressure of stock selling plans were told. It came as something of a relief to the business men present to hear the Hon. Jacob Nichol, K.C., Provincial treasurer, announce that the next session of the provincial legislature would probably see blue sky legislation introduced. The Prime Minister and the provincial treasurer have been looking after the matter and have come to the conclusion that the selling of worthless securities should be stopped.

The action of the Government has probably been brought to a head by the activities of various companies selling leases, stocks and other securities in connection with the Labrador placer gold area. The Premier, the Hon. L. A. Taschereau, undertook some time ago, to publicly warn the people of the province against rushing into wild cat schemes in Labrador. The opening up of the Rouyn gold field in northern Quebec is undoubtedly going to have the effect of starting many questionable p romotions and the action of the province in introducing blue sky legislation at its next session should nip in the bud a great deal of this evil work.

PARIS PRESS RIDICULES THE REPARATIONS STATEMENT

PARIS, July 14—The British Premier's statement of policy lost some of its sugar coating for the French newspapers overnight, and yesterday the editors had become rather aired with a strong touch of sarcasm and some ridicule in their comments. In German official quarters the statement is frankly appraised as a sympathetic utterance and one destined to have an early and perhaps decisive bearing on the Ruhr impasse.

BOOK PAPER PRICES MAY GO UP, IT IS STATED

MONTREAL.—Advances in book papers are foreshadowed, it is thought by the action of some of the mills in withdrawing price lists. For some time past, it is stated, there has been little or no profit in this class of business owing to the high cost of production. Meanwhile the mills say that sime orders are desirable and others undesirable and having regard to this prices will be regulated by the mills according to the value of the order. Some of the Ontario companies have increased the price on coated board by 20 per cent., including lines that the used largely for street car advertising etc. If the withdrawal of price lists in other lines foreshadows an increase, bond paper, ledgers, writing, etc., will be effected.

The demand for newsprint is still very strong and mills continuing to run at capacity. Advertising is running at the highest level known and publishers in the States are using print paper at a rate probably never before maintained over such a long period as thus far this year.

FRANCE IS FIRM

SENLIS, France, July 16.—Premier Poincare to-day proclaimed the French Government's unalterable decision to resolutely stand for the complete execution of the Versailles treaty with the German debt at one hundred and thirty two million gold marks, as agreed upon by the Allies at the London Conference, and against any international committee to replace the Reparations Commission.

U.M.W. GIVES NO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Crisis May Yet Be Precipitated

Blast Furnaces to be Re-Started

SYDNEY, July 16—A period of quiet is expected to prevail in the Cape Breton strike area by those best informed of conditions, while the two features expected to precipitate a crisis are the action of John L. Lewis, International President and the contingency among the miners which will be furnished by a scarcity of money and empty larders. Help in the latter case has come in small measure, it is understood, from other American Unions, but it is a fact that the U.M.W. International will give no financial assistance to the strikers.

SYDNEY, July 16—The British Empire Steel Company announced tonight that they would restart number seven blast furnace to-morrow. All the blast furnaces have been idle since the strike of last June. The coke ovens and blooming mill have been operating a week, the latter on a supply cold ingots on hand when the strike began. To-nights announcement said that when number seven furnace was producing several open hearth furnaces would be relighted for making steel and it also said it was expected to increase the number of men employed in the plant.

POLITICS MAY KEEP L. GEORGE IN ENGLAND

Canadian Trip of Ex-Premier Likely To Be Called Off.

LONDON, July 14—Lloyd George former Premier, cannot make definite arrangements for a visit to Canada, although he is most eager to do so. Everything depends on the outcome of political and other matters during the next month or so. He is receiving hundreds of invitations from Canadian societies, but can accept nothing definitely.

They Aim For a Saloonless Nation

DES MOINES, July 5.—Resolutions were introduced at to-night's session of the 29th International Christian Endeavor Convention commending President Harding for his support of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act and pledging support to candidates for public offices and to the party that make unequovocal commitments to their enforcements.

The resolution was introduced at the instance of the executive cimmittee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor under whose auspices the convention is being held.

The text of the statement follows:

"Prohibition has vindicated itself. In spite of great handicaps, its benign effects are now apparent in the setadily declining death rate as revealed in the bulletins of life-insurance companies, in the 74 percent decrease in drink cases with their attendant problems coming to charity organizations, and in the growing moral tone of our community life.

"The great cities of our far-reaching coast lines and wide extending international boundaries, present serious difficulties in law-enforcement and cannot now be expected to reflect the prohibition sentiment of the nation. For some time to come they will continue to deceive themselves and our visitors from other lands, who would rejoice in the repudiation of national prohibition.

"Even these vast and cosmopolitan communities record unmistakable benefits accuring from the closing of saloons and bars,—benefits that will increase steadily with the strengthening of the spirit and agencies of law-enforcement.

"For the bootlegger, we have only slightly less condemnation than for its patron. The latter, from the standpoint of individual morality, is essentially the worse, while in citizenship he is a greater menace. Striking at one law, he slashes all. He gives heart to every evil doer, and by the measure of his influence weakens the protecting wall that surrounds his life, his liberty and his temporal goods.

"In law-enactment the supreme issue of the hour joins. The forces of nullification are active and determined. They have united powerful interests at home and abroad to embarrass public officials to break the moral of conscientious enforcing agents and to discourage public sentiment. They have found a spokesman in the Governor of a great state.

"We declare here that state rights are greater than state rights, and that no state has rights which prohibition does not strengthen. We stand for liberty under law. We pledge ourselves anew to the Constitution of the United States. We commend the President for his repeated statements in support of the Eighteenth amendment of the Volstead Act.

"Speaking for four million enrolled young people, citizens and citizens-to be, we further declare that no candidate for public office and that no political party, failing to make such unequivocal commitment, has the right to expect or will receive our support and votes.

"We believe that total abstinence is the only consistent attitude for a Christian and that the agitation for a modification of the Volstead Act to leagalize light wines and beers is a subterfuge and blind; those who advocate it now were but a short time since the stalwart defense of the open saloon and the liquor traffic. It is a dishonest issue.

"As the ultimate solution of the liquor problem for this nation was national prohibition, for which Christian Endeavor declared in 1911 with its militant slogan, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920,' so the ultimate solution of the problem for all nations is world-wide prohibition. We have reaffirm our declaration of 1919, for "A Saloon less World," and pledge the full strength of our movement to the achievement of this high goal."

TWO STEAMERS SUNK

LONDON, July 16.—Three steamers were in collision in a North Sea fog today and two of them sunk, while the third proceeded with minor damages. The Eldorado, Swedish, hove to in fog, was rammed by the Spanish steamer Sheridan, came along and rammed both amidships. She later lowered the boats with her own crew and those of the Eldorado, all of whom were taken aboard the Sheldan and sent aboard a tug that came out from Yarmouth.

RUSSIA IS "LOOKING UP" FINANCIALLY

Revenue Will Meet 80 Per Cent. of Govt. Expenditure Next Year.

MOSCOW, July 14—Soviet Russia is emerging from a currency crisis. Eighty per cent of expenditure from the Government treasury next year will be paid with revenue and the remaining twelve per cent with an emission of paper. The country is trying to do business on about ten per cent of the gold value in circulation in 1914.

Big Sports Events

LONDON, July 14—Ex-service men from all parts of the British Empire day for the big sports programme held under the auspices of the Imperial British Legion, and among the prominent persons were the Prince of Wales and Earl Haig. The Australian team won the mile raley race, the chief even of the afternoon.

Revolutionary Escapes Prison

BERLIN, July 14—Capt. Ebrhardt, who took an prominent part in the Kapp revolt of 1920, escaped from the Federal prison at Leipzig where he was awaiting trial on a charge of high treason.

Steamer Is Missing

MONTEVIDEO, July 14—A wireless despatch from the British freighter Trefusis, which had been sending out calls for help, said the steamer had repaired her engines and was continuing to her European port of call. Considerable anxiety was felt for the safety of the Brazilian steamer Caceres which left Santos July sixth. No news has been received from her since the recent storms.

Love's Renunciation

CHAPTER XXIII.

Friendship is a Sheltering Tree

"But Alan will soon be thirty-three Carlotta, and he's not had much of a chance! Now, I wonder how Peter Garvock is feeling?" she added presently, a new and rather vicious note creeping into her voice. "I hope he is nice and comfortable in his mind."

"You never hear from them, I suppose?" siad Carlotta, in a voice which indicated but a languid interest.

"I? Oh, no! But I had a letter from Edie Sanderson the other day. Bobbie's wife, you know. And she says that the Garvocks are very intimate at Stair, and that Peter goes there a lot."

"Perhaps he will console himself said Carlotta, absently. II' say, Judy, you have kept faith with me? You have never dropped a hint to Alan about what I am doing now?"

"I haven't though I have wanted to dreadfully. And when all these lovely pictures came out in the illustrated papers, I simply ached to post them to him. I was only deterred by the reflection that, if he did not happen to be flourishing at the moment, they might make him feel worse. But of course, if we really are to go to New York, he'll have to know—won't he?"

"It will be time enough to decide when we get there," said Carlotta diplomatically. "He still writes from the 42nd Street address. Graham Madox could easily send somebody to interview him. I have thought of it—insurance business hasn't a very hopeful sound about it, Judy. Somehow one always associates it with a sort of shabby, out-at-elbow person who calls at doors and makes himself rather a nuisance."

"Don't said Judy, with a catch in her voice. "It hurts. It hurts most awfully, Carlotta. Haven't I thought it all out, and pictured him in all sorts and conditions of occupations! Don't let us talk on that tack, Judy, or we shall find ourselves dissolved in tears presently," she remarked, in a melodramatic voice.

"Right-o," assented Judy, cheerfully. "But when I look at you, Carlotta, you're so awfully pretty, and such a dear, and to say nothing of your appalling cleverness! I don't see—I don't see—the smallest hope for Stair—"

Carlotta strode back to Judy, to where she now stood on the hearth-rug. Taking her by the arms, she shook her with genuine force.

"Listen, Judy. Never talk to me again like that. Never, do you hear, as long as you live? I belong to Stair—do you hear? And don't you forget it! I see it in my dreams. I hear the waves betaing on that bit of surf beyond the Ladies' Mile. And I see the sun on the windows—my windows, Judy— yours and Alan's and mine! Now, do you hear, and do you promise to hold that tongue of yours forever and ever, except to speak comfortable words—for oh, my dear! we are two lonely, heart broken women, who need comforting; and if something doesn't happen to cheer her soon, Margaret Tenderton will cease to charm the British public!"

"So now you see what your mission is in life—to keep me up to the mark and able for work, and no grizzling. Now let's sit down and calculate what clothes we shall require for an Atlantic voyage and a brief season in New York."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Out of the Depths

Jean Dempster, walking to and fro between her work on Broadway and her boarding house in 42nd Street, had each day to pass the Manhattan Theatre, on whose most prominent notice boards, early in the new year, this annpuncement was printed in large, arresting type:

"Graham Madox, with Miss Margaret Tenterden as his leading lady, in their latest London success, 'The Searchlight,' will open at this Theatre on February 5th."

Many such legends had Miss Dempster paused to glance at outside the door of the Manhattan and other theatres, for she loved a good play, and just very occasionally, when more than usually tired of the monotony, she would pay for a couple of good seats and take somebody a little worse off than herself, and to whom the evening would be a treat, to share the pleasure.

From the first moment when she had read in "The Sun" a brief epitome of the plot of "The Searchlight," she made up her mind to see it. There were incidents in the story closely resembling those of her own life, in fact, the motif was that of a woman who had married, in perfect good faith, a man with a wife still alive.

She was determined, therefore, to see "The Searchlight," but about five days before the company arrived she had an astonishing piece of good luck. A business man, who brought a good deal of his typing to her office, called one day and offered her two stalls for the first night which he was unable to use himself, as he had to take his wife rather hurriedly off to Florida for the winter.

It had been a long winter, and harder than usual. Snow was piled on the sidewalks on the day the steamer arrived in port with "The Searchlight" company on board, twenty-four hours behind time, having been delayed by terrific gales, with fog and snowstorms. Consequently, instead of having two clear days before starting work, the players had to prepare hurriedly for their first introduction to a New York audience exactly twenty-four hours after their arrival in the city. As most of them had been very ill on board it was an ordeal of a very searching andc rucial kind, and Graham Madox, himself something of a wreck, was consumed with anxiety and distrust. Fully aware that he had run it rather fine, he had yet been unable to help himself or to leave London a day earlier.

Jean Dempstr carried her tickets home inside her muff that day with a very lively sense of anticipation, though she had not yet decided whom she would ask to accompany her.

It may be said that Rankine had gone forth fro mMrs. Isaacstein's since the month of August, and as Jean walked home enjoying the nip in the air, she was thinking of him with an odd kind of pity, not unmixed with anxiety. She had neither heard of nor seen him for over six weeks, and from what she knew of his late experiences in New York she understood perfectly that he must still be down on his luck.

She had tried to keep a hold of him because she liked him, and because she had sufficient knowledge of what life in New York is for such as he, to be fully aware that her friendship might be the only anchorage open to him; but like Affery, she had got so far and no farther with Alan Rankine.

She knew that he had suffered from family misfortunes and reverses, that his future was dark and uncertain, and that he was quite friendless, in New York; but he had never talked to her of his intimate affairs. successive situations in the cleric- During the two months he was at Mrs. Isaacstein's he had had three al line, none of which he had retained. When ousted from the last one he had left Mrs. Isaacstein's and taken a lodging in a street a grade lower—Jean did not ask where no. why, simply because she knew. They had met occasionally until lately, and would go sometimes on Sunday for a stroll in the park, but after a a time that too ceased, and for the last few weeks she had not known either where to locate him or what he was doing.

She was wondering which of the crowd at the table she would share her luck with and had very nearly decided upon the bore, when Sambo came round to her chair and whispered something to her which made her start.

They were now at the cheese course, so she had no difficulty in excusing herself. She ran up the stairs with a step as light and fleet an any girl and inside her sitting room door saw Rankine bending low over her wood fire in the act of warming his hands. She had come so swiftly and quietly that he did not hear her, and for just a half a moment she lingered on the threshold, taking stock of his tall figure, now very gaunt and thin, of his haggard face and shabby appearance, and her heart, as well as her eyes, almost overflowed. There are few more pathetic pictures than that presented by the poor gentleman alone in an apathetic world! With an effort Jean recovered herself, and stepping forward into the room, said cheerily:

"Well, this is a sight for sore eyes, Mr. Rankine! And I'd like very well to have some account of you, and to ask you whether you think you have behaved so well to yours truly?"

He wheeled around suddenly and his smile, though brave was somewhat pathetic. He drew off a worn woollen glove and came forward to take her outstretched hand. He had been through many experiences during the last few months, but he had not forgotten the instincts of his upbringing, nor grown careless of his personal appearance. He was very shabby, for he had now only one suit of clothes.

Jean's assumption of gay badinage died under the intentness of his look, the pathos in his eyes.

"Don't look at me like that," she said falteringly. "Have you been down on your luck again? Of course, I knew it, but why didn't you come and tell me?"

"I couldn't," he answered quietly. "And now I've only come to say goodbye."

"Won't you take your coat off and I'll make the coffee?" she said with an unsteady note in her voice. Don't you remember the first night we met in this very room, and how you praised it?"

"Oh, I remember it, right enough. You were very kind to a stranger who had no credentials to offer—tho he has fewer now!"

WHERE DIVORCE IS MADE EASY

Except, perhaps, Russia, under the Soviet regime, it is easier to get divorce in Norway than in any other European country. If a married couple want to part, Norwegian law grants a divorce without inquiring the reason; but as security that the step has been well considered, it provides that a year of separation must intervene between the application and the actual granting of the decree.

The husband and wife have first to apply to a magistrate. He sends them to a conciliation board, and if this body cannot bring them together again they are granted a separation order. At the end of the year the Ministry of Justice is compelled to make the divorce absolute, if asked to do so by either party. The whole proceedings are very cheap, the cost ranging from about one to twenty-five dollars.

In certain of the states of the United States of America and Australia, divorce is pretty easy, but it is easiest among certain so-called uncivilized peoples. Among some Siberian tribes, for instance, a man need only uncover his wife's head and walk away. The Eskimo has only to leave his house and stay away in pretended anger for a day or two.

In Nepal a woman can divorce her husband at any time by simply placing a betel nut under his pillow and taking her departure. Two chopsticks broken in the presence of a witness are sufficient to divorce a couple in Cochin China.

message from Geneva some ago told of the creation of a curious kind of matrimonial record by a well-to-do farmer of Ararau, the capital of the canton of Aargau. It told how he had just married his "wife" for the fourth time, after divorcing her on four separate occasions.

The farmer married another woman during one of the intervals, but divorced her a months later. His original wife returned to her parents and remained quietly with them until her former husband came to ask her to remarry him. The message said that the couple, who are still young, were undoubtedly in love with each other, and were now on their fourth honeymoon. They had been married, divorced, and honey-mooned on four separate occasions during eight years. It is hoped that they will now settle down to married life.

NEW YORK, July 4—Finding a string of pearls in the gutter outside the Biltmore Hotel, two young men tossed them to the door attendant, thinking they were "only dirty beads." John Hussey, the attendant, however, kept the necklace and watched the papers. A few days later an advertisement appeared offering a reward for the return of a lost string of pearls, and to-day Hussey is richer by $250.

S. A. Congress

New Territorial Commander and His Wife Arrive.

The annual Congress of the Salvation Army started with a swing at 8 p.m. Saturday, when the welcome meeting to Commissioner Sowton and Lieut-Col. Morehen was held in the New Gower Street Citadel.

Although the meeting was of a special character, members of the army only, being admitted, the citadel was practically filled and a hearty burst of applause greeted the Commissioner as he stepped on the platform, accompanied by Colonel Morehen and Staff Captain Tilley.

After a short service of singing and prayers, the Commissioner addressed the gathering. He spoke of the great pleasure he felt at being again privileged to visit Newfoundland, regretted that it was impossible to have Mrs. Sowton accompany him this year, but assured those present that she was with them in spirit. He referred in eloquent terms to the newly-appointed sub-territorial leaders for Newfoundland, Col- and Mrs. Cloud, and predicted for them a very happy and useful term here.

Colonel Morehen then sang one of his favorite choruses and briefly addressed the gathering. He received a great ovation from the officers and soldiers present, which showed the affectionate remembrance in which he is held by those who worked under him when he was Divisional Commander here some yeare ago. He expressed much pleasure at being back here again and hoped the Congress would be a success. He brought warm Salvation greetings from Mrs. Morehen and assured the congregation that she would pray for the success of the Congress meetings.

The band then played a selection, after which the Commissioner preached an impressive sermon from 1 Cor., 16-13. Space will not permit a report of this masterly effort which was listened to with rapt attention by the congregation. Words of encouragement, counsel, instruction and advice abounded, and all present received a distinct spiritual uplift from the discourse.

Sunday morning at ten o'clock the city salvationists and visiting officers assembled outside the No. 1 Citadel, formed up in procession and proceeded to the residence of the Territorial Commander where they were reviewed by the Commissioner, who introduced Colonel and Mrs. Cloud, the new teritorial leaders.

The Colonel briefly addressed the comrades, expressing the pleasure it gave him to be in Newfoundland and his hopes for a successful stay here.

The procession then proceeded back to the citadel, where a united holiness meeting was conducted by the Commissioner who again greatly inspired his audience by his earnest explanation of the various influences which tend to draw the soul away from God and lessen its ability to help and bless mankind.

All roads led to the Methodist College Hall on Sunday afternoon, where a public reception was tendered Colonel and Mrs. Cloud. His Excellency the Governor presided, and with him on the platform were Lady Allardyce and Captain A. Stewart Goodfellow, A.D.C., also Messrs I. C. Morris, C. E. Hunt, Captain A. Kean and Rev. R. J. Power.

The meeting opened with that well known hymn, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," which was sung heartily by the congregation after which Rev. Dr. Power led in prayer. Commissioner Sowton then introduced their Excellencies to the congregation and expressed the great pleasure he felt in being back to Newfoundland again. H assured their excellencies that wherever the Salvation Army was established, even in the smallect centres, its spirit was the same, and it was always ready to lend a helping hand to those in need. He referred to the splendid progress made by the Army in this country, but felt that the time was ripe for still greater advances, and he had no doubt that these would be brought about under the leadership of Coloned and Mrs. Cloud.

His Excellency the Governor then addressed the gathering. His happy references to the early days of the Army drew much applause from the audience. He also referred to the new Maternity Hospital which he said would fill a long felt need, and he wished the Army much success in all branches of its work.

He then introduced Colenel Thomas Cloud, the new sub-territorial Commander, who made a splendid impression upon the audience in his maiden speech. The Colonel has a fine appearance and wears a smile which radiates sunshine and good-fellowship. He is an energetic, perhaps we should say fiery, speaker, and judging from the expressions heard on all sides after the meeting, the Colonel has already been voted by Newfoundland Salvationists and the public generally as the right man in the right place. Of the Colonel's address, space will not permit us to say much. He stated that he believed his apointment was the Will of God and would, therefore, be the means of blessing his own soul and land. He drew an illustration from the experience of the Apostle Paul, when he landed on the Island of Melita, he found a fire lighting for his comfort, and immediately set about finding some sticks to keep it going. In the same manner on comign to Newfoundland he had found a work in progress, organized and brought to its present standing by devoted men and women, many of whom were his personal friends, or, to use a slang expression, his pals, and it would be his earnest endeavor to keep the work going on or to use the scripture illustration, "gather a few sticks for the fire."

Mrs. Cloud then spoke a few words and captivated the hearts of all presentby her graceful and winning manner. That she will be a tower of strength in Newfoundland is a foregone conclusion.

Mr. I. C. Morris, in a few well-chosen words moved a vote of thanks to His Excellency for the very able and interesting manner in which he had presided over the gathering. The motion, which was seconded by Mr. C. E. Hunt, M.H.A., was carried by the congregation standing and clapping hands heartily. His Excellency in responding to the vote of thanks, commented on the smart appearance of the life-saving guards. He was especially interested, he said, in all movements for the training of boys andg irls for better citizenship, and added that Lady Allardyce was especially interested in the Girl Guides and was greatly pleased to see the fine troop of Guides present. He also spoke for a few monents on the word 'Service' and told of some acts of service to mankind performed by our present Sovereign and the Prince of Wales which presented a splendid example to their subjects and which those present would do well to follow.

The meeting then closed with the Doxology, and the Benediction by the Commissioner.

The spacious College Hall was packed for the night meeting, standing room being at a premium and many being unable to gain admission. Hearty singing, fervent praying and holy enthusiasm, were the outstanding features of the meeting. Colonel and Mrs. Cloud spoke and sang, adding fresh laurels to those won in the afternoon, and giving unmistakable proof of their zeal for the advancement of God's work and the salvation of mankind. The Commissioner's sermon was based on 1 Chronicles, 12-12. In eloquent and fervent language he pointed out the great need of immediate attention to spiritual matters. He was there he said as an ambassador of Christ, and to those present who had not obtained God's pardon for their sins, he wished to deliver a message that had been delivered to David: "Now, therefore, advise thyself what word I shall bring again to Him that sent me."

The large audience present hung intently on the Commissioner's words, and it was evident that many hearts were touched and many were resolving by Divine Grace to lead better lives. The visible results of the meeting were fourteen persons seeking salvation at the penitent form.

Colonel Martin rendered valuable assistance at all the meetings and his old-time choruses were taken up and sung with a vim by the Salvationists. He was as usual in his element in the prayer meeting at night and kept things at the boiling point all through.

The Congress will be continued today with a series of meetings for officers only.—R.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

C. L. B. Cadets

The Church Lads Brigade Cadets held an open air church service yesterday morning at 11 o'clock at Inspector Noseworthy's farm, Kenmount Road. The Battalion was under command of Lieut.-Col. Walter F. Rendell, C. B. E., and the service was taken by the Rev. Canon Bolt, M.A., as Brigade Chaplain. On arrival at the farm the residents there, Doctor Carnell, Messrs. Joseph Dewling, Noseworthy and others had the beauty spot decorated with flags—the country homes of the former being most attractive. The lads marched out Pennywell Road way and returned via Freshwater Road headed by their Battalion Band and the "Old Comrades" were under the orders of President Ernest Chafe. The bugle band did good work but they were not up to full strength unfortunately. The service was most impressive. Drums were piled and covered with the Battalion colours—and the quiet stillness of the countryside was broken by the music of the Brigade with their many friends who had gone out to join them in the service of prayer and praise.

The sermon was a most oppropriate one for the occasion, the subject being "Miracles of the five loaves and two fishes" referred to in St. Matthew, Chapter 14, Verse 17. The preacher's address was a strong appeal to the lads to be faithful in their various walks of life, to be faithful in small things for the reward would be great, for one often builds better than one knows. Who would have thought that when the C.L.B. movement was started in 1891 that it would have grown to such proportions the world over as it is to-day—doing so much good for boy life; and those ladies and gentlemen who planned and completed the C.L.B. Armoury in St. John's never knew, when they started the Armoury, how useful that Armoury would be to the Brigade's training; how that the Brigade later on would form the neucleus of the First Newfoundland Regiment.

At the conclusion of the services a collection was taken up and the Battalion marched back to their quarters. "A" Company was under command of Captain Snow and "F" Company in charge of Captain Phil B. Rendell. Before being dismissed Lieut.-Col. W F. Rendell expressed his apreciation of the attendance of the Old Comrades, whose loyal support is highly appreciated by all ranks. Thanks are also due to Inspector Noseworthy for the use of his farm and the residents of Kenmount Road. Forty lads volunteered in response to a call from the Orphanage Garden Party Committee, to act as stewards to the lady table holders of that function, which is being held on Wednesday.

The National Anthem brought to a close a most successful drum head service and parade.

Requiem Mass at Mount Carmel

The Annual Requiem Mass at Mt. Carmel Cemetery, was held at 10.30 a.m. yesterday. The attendance was a record one and the cemetery was never in better condition, the people going to special pains to beautify the holy acre for the occasion. The celebrant was the Rev. Fr. Pippy, who preached a timely sermon on "Devotion to the Souls in Purgatory." The Rev. Preacher in his opening remarks, explained the Catholic Doctrine on Purgatory, and exhorted the people to show their love and affection to their departed friends by assisting them by their prayers and good works, and he showed how this particular devotion which was so pleasing to God, helps those who always practice the devotion.

A BRIGHTER OUTLOOK

THE BRIGHT SIDE OF THINGS

The Telegram of Saturday states there is a "greater feeling of optimism abroad."

The Advocate hastens to agree with the Telegram's statement and sees no greater confirmation of it than in the changed attitude of that newspaper. And we do trust that this "greater spirit" will remain, not only generally, but within the precincts of the Telegram newspaper, which hitherto has been seeing as through a glass darkly.

For the first time in four years, the veil has been lifted and our contemporary once more tells the world it sees the sunrise.

The words of hope and faith, and encouragement, spoken by the Telegram, are needed in those days. Some of us have been bravely preaching that faith for years, in times made more miserable by cries of blue-ruin and hopelessness. But these "cries in the night" may have happily past now that the Telegram wakens refreshed to see the dawn of better times.

It is better late than never; but who knows that had the optimistic strain been heard through all the press before, the hearts of the people had not been cheered to new life and that the Telegram's words had not been earlier justified!

Yes, the worst has passed. Our country has come through the hardest period in her history; but, like other countries, faces a future of many problems which, too, will be overcome, all the more certainly because we have learned the lessons of the past.

What have we learned?

One thing, there is. It is impossible to do justice to the country and to play fair with the people whom we should serve, while blue-ruinists parade themselves around and politicians knife each other. Too long has this country's good and the people's interest been sacrificed on the altar of political hatreds and jealousies, and the time has come when a higher form of patriotism should be the boast of those pretending to have the people's interests at heart.

That is why the Advocate is entirely in accord with the Telegram's exhortation to Hope and Cheer. It bespeaks the willingness to meet the future in that spirit which faces difficulties and overcomes them.

For the benefit of those who may not have seen the Telegram's editorial of Saturday we print it below.

There is a greater feeling of optimism abroad and we trust will remain. We have been passing, it is true, through a period of depression, and despondency is depicted on many a face that hitherto never showed a sign of care. Newfoundland has experienced crises as critical as those of to-day; disaster has time and again visited her, but like the everchanging sea by which she is surrounded, and from which the people of this Island inherit their disposition, she too has been transformed, and her dark days have been followed by days of greater splendour. So it will be again.

Already, if we are in the mood to observe the signs, there is a glimmer showing beneath the black cloud. Grand Falls is enlarging the scope of its activities at Glovertown and Bishop Falls, and the Alexander Bay project is being revived. At Bonne Bay a pulp making industry is being started, and Gull Pond promises to become a centre of mining activity in the near future.

Yesterday his Excellency the Governor assented to the Humber Agreement, which apart from our fisheries is the greatest project ever launched in this country.

Our chief industry always has been, and always will be, of an uncertain nature, and this cannot altogether be changed, but it can be modified and rendered more stable by the strict enforcement of rules governing the cure of the fish, and by a system of co-operation in the disposal of the catch.

There is no purpose served in anticipating difficulties that may never arise. There is nothing attained by living over again the dangers that are past. Let us live in the present. The trees that last winter were gaunt and bare are shrouded in green, the fields are clothed in the rich promise of autumn, the lakes have burst their icy bonds and are ripples of silver. Go out and see them to-morrow; forget the business worries and for one day find hope and faith in the face of Nature.

Avaunt dull care!

TRADE IMPROVEMENT

Another of the various encouraging signs visible at the present time is the arrival of the Furness Liner Digby with 1350 tons of general cargo for St. John's. This is the largest cargo by any Furness steamer that has been brought from England to this port since 1916.

It goes to show that we are getting back to ordinary pre-war trade relations with the old country. Most of this cargo, with the exception of a small portion for the Humber Valley operations, consists of goods for Water Street stores.

These goods are intended of course to supply our local requirements, which means that our local trade is improving.

With a busy season on the Humber, in Grand Falls, on Bell Island and other places, the year's outlook will be fairly good, providing the general catch of fish will measure up to the average.

SEQUEL TO NORTH ATLANTIC RESCUE

Newfoundland Government Honors Canadian Liner's Commander

PRESENTATION AT LIVERPOOL

A very interesting ceremony took place on Tuesday, July 3rd, at the officer of the Mercantile Marine Service Association, Liverpool, when Captain G. C. Evans, O.B.E., late Commander of the Canadian Pacific liner Metagama, was the recipient of a handsome pair of binocular glasses, which have been awarded him by the Newfoundland Government in recognition of his services in rescuing the crew of the St. John's schooner, Ida M. Cunningham, on the afternoon of February 14th, 1923, during a heavy north-westerly gale. The presentation was made by Captain E. Elliot (Vice-president of the Association) in the absence of the President, Captain G. C. Oakley.

The Secretary (Mr. Thomas Scott) read the story of the rescue for which the award has been made, which was as follows:

The "Metagama" when homeward bound, picked up a wireless message that the fishing schooner "Ida M. Cunningham" had blown adrift in the neighbourhood of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, with the request that all ships should keep a lookout for her. This was done and in the afternoon of the 14th Feb., during a north-westerly gale with a high sea, the "Metagama" sighted the schooner with her sails lost, auxiliary engine disabled and generally helpless, her crew of five men making signals to be taken off. By skilful manoeuvring, Captain Evans brought his ship to windward of the schooner, enabling the distressed crew to launch their own boats and reach the Metagama in safety, where, suffering from cold and general exhaustion, they received the utmost care and attention, and were eventually brought to Glasgow none the worst for their terrible experience.

Captain Evans has since retired, and was a very old and trusted Commander in the steamers of the Canadian Pacific, having sailed out of Liverpool for many years, first in the Beaver Line and continuing when that fleet transferred to the now famous Canadian Pacific, where he has had a long and successful career, having commanded the Lake[illegible], Manitoba, Virginian, Missanabie, and Empress of Scotland, and had the satisfaction on his retirement of having earned the good wishes and appreciation of his owners.

A member of the Association for many years, Captain Evans was appointed to the Council in 1910.

During the war he acquitted himself so well that he was appointed an Officer of the Order of the British Empire "in recognition of his bravery and devotion to duty."

Continuing, the Secretary said the particulars of the rescue which he had sent to him by Captain J. V. Forster, O.B.E., R.N.R., of the Canadian Pacific Liners, and he at once submitted them to the Newfoundland Government who had always been very generous in acknowledging the services of their masters and officers. They had responded by sending a hand some pair of binocular glasses bearing the following inscription:—

"Presented by the Government of Newfoundland to Captain S C. Evans, O.B.E., of the R.M.S. Matagama, in grateful appreciation of the services rendered by him in saving the crew of the Newfoundland vessel 'Ida M. Cunningham,' in the Atlantic Ocean, on the 14th. of Feb. 1923."

The Chairman in making the presentation, said they were glad that the Newfoundland Government had recognized Captain Evan's gallant conduct, and they hoped he would be long spared to enjoy his well-earned retirement.

Captain Evans, in responding, said he hoped that the Chairman and Council of Merchantile Marine Service Association would convey his thanks to the Newfoundland Government for their handsome present. He considered that it was earned very easily. They merely saw the craft helpless, and they gave the crew the chance to get aboard. In fact, his officers and men were rather disappointed that they had no boat drill. It was very very cold, somewhere about zero, and many of those present knew what a north west gale of the Newfoundland Coast was. He had taken part in one or two rescues of that kind, and Captain Murray, whom he was pleased to see present, would remember one of them in which they had carried out hard work to earn their award.

Captain J. Dobson (Marine Superintendent of the Canadian Steamships Ltd.), who represented Captain Forster, in proposing a vote of thanks to the chairman, said that Captain Evans had been long associated with the Canadian Pacific, and with the Beaver line previous to the Elder Dempster line, taking over the steamers. He could speak personally of Captain Evans, having known him for over twenty-five years, and during the whole of that time he could testify that Captain Evans had gone through with a clean record, and he thought that the presentation was a very fitting wind-up to a very fine career. Speaking on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Lines, he could assure them that it would give them the greatest possible pleasure to know that Captain Evans had been recognised in this manner, and altho Captain Evas was retiring from the service, they hoped they would often see him in Liverpool, and that he would not completely sever his connection with the Company.

Captain P. D. Murray, in seconding the motion, said it was a very great pleasure to see his dear old friend, Captain Evans, and to convey from the members of the Council their congratulations to him for his well-earned life-saving award. Captain Evans and himself were old ship mates and they had also been shipmates in life-saving. To be in a February gale in the North Atlantic was not the pleasantest place at about 4 o'clock in the morning, but they once had a trip between two ships when they could not see either ship, and the waves were like mountains between them. The fact that Captain Evans took the crew off and got the boat back to the ship in safety testified to his good seamanship. They also went on board the sinking ship in the hope that they might take her into port with a prize crew, but the ship went down before the next morning, and consequently Captain Evans and himself had to cross the Atlantic for many years. They, as the Council, appreciated the action of the Newfoundland Government, who always recognized the bravery of sailors. Captain Evans and all who had been in the Atlantic trade, knew what a fine body of men were the Newfoundland fishermen. They went out in weather in which an ordinary person would not go. They had come to him in a dense fog off the island of Belle Isle, asking for assistance to be sent to the sister of one of the fishermen who was on shore sick. He had not seen anything else since leaving Ihistrahull, and the fishermen asked for the bearings of the shore where they wanted to go. After the fisherman left them he fired the last shot he had in his gun, and the chief engineer said that was their reward. (Applause.)

OBITUARY

DR. A. B. LEHR.

The passing of Dr. A. B. Lehr, dentist, at Southcott Hospital yesterday, removes a familiar form from our midst. It is nearly forty years since the deceased came to the country, and located first at Harbor Grace, where he practised his profession with fair success. Later he travelled somewhat throughout the country, and then finally settled in the city, where he won a reputation as a reliable and efficient dentist. Dr. Lehr was twice married, his first wife being Miss Fitzgerald of Harbor Grace, and by whom he had two sons, Harry and Andrew, both of whom survive their parents, the former following in his father's footsteps and becoming a successful dentist in New York, the latter still residing in this country. The second wife, was Mrs. Wing, who survives her husband. The funeral takes place at 2.30 to-morrow from his late residence, Water Street.

MR. JORN DAY.

The passing of Mr. John Day, at the General Hospital last night, after a protracted illness, has learned with deepest general regret.

The deceased had been an employee of the Reid Nfld. Company's Electrical Department for a lifetime, having joined that Company when it took over the old Electric Light Co., and at the time of his death occupied the responsible position of foreman linesman, enjoying the esteem of his employers and his co-workers. Mr. Day was an active member of the Rifle Club and during the war years, did yoeman service in training members of "Ours" on the range and in armouries. He was also an active member of the Regatta Committee from which he will be missed, as he was an energetic and painstaking member.

He is survived by a widow, four sons and four daughters, of whom Mrs. E. Murphy and Mr. Ralph Day reside in the city, the others being in New York, Canada and Scotland, and for whom there will be general sympathy.

The funeral takes place to-morrow, Tuesday, at 2.30 from his late residence, 16 York Street.

Oldest Newspaper In Britain

The London Gazette, Great Britain's oldest and most official newspaper, has been in existence for 258 years, and its first delay in publication occurred only recently, owing to a labor dispute.

While its title is familiar to most people, its pages are read by few. Yet in many respects there is no more interesting paper in the world.

It is the only newspaper whose statements are accepted unreservedly in the witness-box, and the only journal in which certain people are compelled to advertise. On the other hand, many people could not secure advertising space in it even though they offered thousands of pounds for the privilege.

There are many more remarkable features about the Gazette. It is the only paper which can boast of possessing an editorial staff of Cabinet Ministers, by whom much of its "copy" is written. The Lord Chamberlain may not inaptly be termed its chief reporter. Kings and queens have contributed to it. No newsboy has ever shouted its name in the streets, and it has never been sold at a bookstall.

In Cromwell's time the Gazette took the form of two separate news sheets, the "Mercurius Politicus" and the "Puplique Intelligencer," the two papers being combined under the one title—the London Gazette—in 1665.

Its infancy was fraught with various difficulties, mostly financial, to cope with which its editor did what many have done since—doubled the price. A month or so later the Plague drove the Court to Oxford, and with it the Gazette, the "London" in the title being exchanged temporarily for "Oxford."

Since then the London Gazette has had little cause for complaint. It has recorded the births and deaths of kings, queens, princes and princesses; the fall of thrones; the winning and losing of battles by sea and land; the passing of great men and women; the granting of commissions in the Services to hundreds of thousands of officers; the bestowal of distinctions of every grade; the degradation of knights and others; the findings of courts-martial; bankruptcies; together with offcial news and despatches of every description.

A Dramatic Chapter.

One of the most diverting chapters in its story was written on the night Saturday, September 30th. 1854. The editor was sitting in his office, when a messenger arrived with the request that he would go at once to Downing Street to see the Duke of Newcastle, Secretary of State for War.

The editor found the Duke greatly excited. "We have glorious news," he said, announcing the result of the Battle of the Alma. "But, alas, nobody knows it and I don't know how to let them know it!"

The London Gazette had been published two days before, and the editor suggested making the announcement in the theatres. He himself hurried to the Mansion House, where the Lord Mayor rose from his bed and, on hearing the news, called for a cab and dashed off in his night attire to a meeting of the Sheriffs in Bishopsgate.

"It was an extraordinary sight," the editor recorded. "The Lord Mayor burst into the room in the middle of a speech and, brushing the speaker aside, read out the news to the astonished and delighted company."

With the coming of the telegraph and telephone the great days of the Gazette were numbered. Yet, altho' its circulation to-day is smaller than that of any other newspaper, its authority remains undiminished and unquestioned, while its potency for making an unmaking careers is as great as ever. It is still published twice weekly, and on the same days of the week as it was 258 years ago.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

In the British House of Lords recently Lord Birkenhead made a savage attack on the British Labor Party which in the last general election in Great Britain, a few months ago, elected so many members that it came next to the Government itself and beat the various factions of the Liberal Party, including the Lloyd George Liberals, combined, and is today the official Opposition in the British House of Commons, and James Ramsay MacDonald, leader of the Labor Party, is Leader of the Opposition and receives official salary for that position.

** *** **

Lord Birkenhead attacked the Labor Party chiefly on two points: its attitude toward the House of Lords itself, and the fact that it got its finances from union members thruout Great Britain.

"If the Labor Party that had grown up on Kier Hardine lines obtained a majority at the next or subsequent election,' said Birkenhead, "the House of Lords would have completely ceased to function."

** *** **

Well, bless his soul, that wouldn't be a calamity to Great Britain. It would be only following the inevitable line that history has shown the House of Lords to be following. As the years go on the House of Lords is becoming increasingly unpopular and is losing its power and authority.

Why, one of the things that made Lloyd eGorge so popular in his time was the way in which he clipped the wings of the House of Lords. True, in so doing he incurred the deadly hatred of that august body, and that hatred formed the basis of the force which eventually undid him.

** *** **

The House of Lords is an anachronism—it is something that is out of place. If you saw a man in a great city using flint and poweder to light his lamp with, you would say that the flint was an anachronism. If you saw a man go hunting with bow and arrows, you would say that his weapons were an anachronism. They are ancient, antequated and out of date. The fit place for them is in a museum. They are out of place in our modern civilibation.

So exactly with the House of Lords in this age of democracy. The whole trend is toward pure democracy—that is to-day, the trend is toward direct rule by the people thru their elected representatives,—represntativs who are responsible to the people and who are mere servants of the people.

The House of Lords is not elective. Worse still, it is heredity. That is to say, there are certain people who inherit seats in the House of Lords simply because their father or grandfather happened to hold one there.

** *** **

It was a great sign of the decadence of the House of Lords, the other day, Stanley Baldwin was chosen Prime Minister of Great Britain. The man considered most likely to get the position was Lord Curzon. The King and his advisors decided, however, in view of the fact, that the Opposition consisted of the Labor party (which, naturally, has no members in the aristocratic House of Lords), and that therefore if the Prime Minister were a man who held only a seat in the House of Lords and not one in the House of Commons, he would have facing him in the House of Lords no members of the official Opposition. In courtesy and deference, therefore, to the British Labor Party and its 150 mmbers in the Commons, Kink George called on Stanley Baldwin to be Prime Minister and form a cabinet. In so doing King George and his advisors showed themselves to be possessed of much wisdom and sound commonsense.

So far as Lord Birkenhead's second point is concerned, here again he has not a leg to stand on. The funds for the running of the British Leader Party are not donated by big business men, by Lords, by big brewers and rum manufacturers, or by any such people. That is how the funds of the old-line parties are received.

The funds of the Labor Party are raised by levying on the members of the various unions, on the members of the Fabian society, on the members of the Independent Labor Party (the Socialist wing of the British Labor Party) and the cooperatives, certain small amounts.

Thus the funds of the British Labor party are raised from millions of individuals, the great bulk of them poor people. It is thus a people's party in more senses than one. No, my Lord Birkenhead, you have no legitimate argument against the British Labor Party.

All true lovers of those things which made England great—namely, freedom, justice, democracy—are looking to the day (not far off) when the British Labor party will rule Great Britain.

OTTAWA, July 7—The establishment of merchantile houses in the large cities of Canada, to assist in the development of Canada's export trade, was predicted by J. E. Ray, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Manchester, England, in an interesting address to the Rotary Club here recently. He stressed the fact that the volume of a country's export trade was one of the chief contributors to its greatness.

Mr. Ray considered that the growth of Canada's export trade had been remarkable. This country was still in its youth and it was faced with possibilities. Much of Canada's success in foreign fields had been due to abnormal conditions. He had nothing but praise for the manner in which Canadian exporters and manufacturers had taken advantage of trade conditions in these countries.

Lord Carnarvon's Hill-top Grave

The wind-swept grave of the Earl of Carnarvon, in the green-turfed top of Beacon Hill, a solitary eminence in the Hapshire downs, is unique in England.

But hill-top graves of famous men are to be found in many other parts of the world.

Who among those who have read the epitaph Robert Louis Stevenson wrote for himself can ever completely forget the haunting beauty of the lines which are to be found inscribed on his lonely sun-touched tomb on one of the heights of the Samoa which he came to love so dearly?:—

"Here he lies where he long'd to be:
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."

Another poet who lies "under the wide and starry sky" is the American "Poet of the Sierras," who, at his own request, was buried on the top of an eminence in the Rock Mountains close by the cabin he inhabited. The monumental pile marking his grave was erected by the poet himself.

Dr. Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, who died some months ago, explicitly stated that he was to be buried on the bleak top of Beinn Bereagh, in Nova Scotia.

The simple grave of General Colley marks the spot where he and a gallant little band of comrades were surprised by a Boer ambuscade, and may be seen on the rocky summit of Majuba Hill. "Here Colley fell" is the brief but eloquent inscription on the cairn of stones raised there.

After College, What?

Boston Globe: The real worth of graduates, now emerging from the class-rooms to take their places in life, depends upon their learning, much of what most of them understand as yet very little. They know about set tasks, but they do not know the exactions of a job. They have missed association with many varieties of the human race which the boy or girl who has gone from school to work understand perfectly. Their trouble will be in getting on with people as they are. This ability is already possessed by most of the non-alumni. They, too, need broadening, but of a different sort. Having learned many of these things not contained in books, it is incumbent on them to seek to round out an education, already valuable, by what books can teach.

JOHN, N.B., July 6—"Miss Canada," otherwise Miss Winifred Blair, of this city, on the invitation of the Cleveland Board of Trade led the ball given recently by that body, jointly with Miss America. Miss Blair was gowned in a lovely robe of pink satin, chosen for the event. She has not been lured from her typewriter, although offered an opening in the movies. She has been in demand at numerous festivities in the Maritime Provinces.

The Outlook for Religion

(By the Most Reverend F. H. DuVernet, Archbishop of Caledonia, in the Montreal Star.)

The outlook for spiritual religion is full of promise. The philosophy of visible materialism is everywhere giving place to the philosophy of invisible energy. Men are beginning to realize that all energy, whether it Le radiant, vital mental or moral, flows from a common source, and that this source is spiritual. It is the destiny of the material to be the manifestation of the spiritual, but matter in itself can never be the ultimate reality. God is Infinite Energy in ceaseless activity, ever creating with wisdom and goodness. The highest form of energy known to us is love, and love is always the outcome of personality. God is Love. God is Light. God is Spirit. When this is our conception of God we have no difficulty in realizing how He is unceasingly operating through all the electric energy, all the vital energy, all the mental energy, and all the moral energy in this Universe. "Heaven and earth are full of His Glory." In God we live and move and have our being. In us God lives and moves and manifests His Energy. In Christ God gives us the supreme revelations of His Infinite Love. The essence of Christianity is the Spirit of Christ, and only as we possess and manifest this Spirit are we worthy of being called Christians. This Spirit should be the great bond helping to bind together all individuals, all classes, all races and all nations.

With this new conception of God and this fresh statement of the essence of Christianity we predict that there will be ag reat revival of spiritual religion, but it will not be religion expressed in exactly the same forms and ceremonies used by our grandfathers. Understanding better the psychological significance of these forms and ceremonies we shall grasp better their spiritual meaning. We know that it is as visible and auditory suggestions that they help to release the latent energy of our soul where God binds communion with our spirit. The Church has nothing to fear from the onward march of knowledge. Psychology as the Science of Human Behavior as dependent upon Human Mind is furnishing the Church with a scientific method of relating spiritual truths to the lives of men and women and children, according to their age, sex and race. Religion can now become a reality to al sorts and conditions of people whereas before it was generally supposed that only the favored few of a mystical temperament could ever become the saints of God. If the Church is to gain and not suffer from the onward march of knowledge, the clergy must keep abrest of the times. The atmosphere of thought in which we live to-day is different to that of the middle ages. The language of scholasticism in which much of the theology of the Church was formulated is rapidly becoming an unknown tongue. The Truth of the Everlasting Gospel needs to be proclaimed in terms of modern thought.

While we should be very slow to abandon customs hallowed by centuries of use, yet we should be willing to carefully modify them to better adapt them to present conditions.

We are so constituted that we cannot concentrate our minds for very long at a stretch. Psychology would suggest to the Church the value of "the optional pause" interspersed at intervals throughout the service. "Be still and know that I am God"

Apparently there is an immense amount of oratorical effort wasted every Sunday throughout the country a better use is not made of the supreme law of the sub-conscious mind, whereby an idea on the surface of the mind becomes an energy in the depths of the soul. It is well to pray that the words which we have heard with our outward ears may, through God's Spirit, be grafted unwardly in our hearts, but it is equally desirable to understand the psychological process whereby this is done.

It thrills us with hope for the transformation of character and the uplifting of Humanity when we see that the Divine Spirit never fails to work in acordance with the natural laws of the Human Mind.

Successful Bank Man

HALIFAX, July 7—A. K. Harvie, who has been appointed to the management of the St. John branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and who is expected to assume his new duties in the course of a few days, was, prior to this appointment, Inspector of Maritime and Newfoundland branches, with headquarters at Halifax.

Mr. Harvie had a wide experience in various offices of the bank in the Prairie Provinces. During the war he served with distinction with a western infantry unit, having been awarded the Military Cross and mentioned in despatches. On his return he was appointed assistant inspector, Winnipeg, and with the establishment of a superintendent's department at Calgary, he was promoted to senior assistant inspector there. Since October, 1921, he has been inspector of the Maritime and Newfoundland branches of that bank. Mr. and Mrs. Harvie, during their residence in Halifax, made a very wide circle of close friends and were always extremely active in charitable, social and athletic circles. Their departure from this city will be greatly regretted.

L. O. A. Parade

The two hundred and thirty-third anniversary of the battle of Boyne, 1690-1923, was celebrated this year with much enthusiasm. Thursday, July 12th, Boyne Day, officers and brethren of Royal Oak L.O.L. 1282, assembled in Victoria Hall at 8 p.m. Many prominent leaders of the Order in this country were present, including the P.G. Master, Bro. F. G. Bradley, L.L.D.; Jr. D.M.G., E.A. Crowther; Grand Secretary, Jordan Milley; P.P.G.M., Hon. W. H. Cave; P.P.G.M., Sir. R. A. Squires. A message was read from P.P.G.M., Donald Morrison, California, regretting his absence and conveying best wishes and also a contribution to the Benevolent Fund of each lodge. Sam. R. Penney, W.M. of Leeming Lodge, occupied the chair and declared the joint meeting open, and briefly referred to the "day we celebrate," when William III. defeated James II. at Boyne, and thus dealt a fatal blow to the Stewart cause.

A special feature of this year's celebration followed an announcement by Bro. R. Ivany, W. M. of Royal Oak Lodge, 22, that a very energetic committee of ladies had made preparation for a united celebration of Orangemen and ladies of the Orange Benevolent Association at the Synod Hall to take place at 9 p.m.

The event at the Synod Hall will be long rembered in Orange circles, particularly the address by the Grand Master and also the address by Past Mistress Bastow.

The G. M. presented Bro. Thos. Noseworthy of Royal Oak, with a P. M. Jewel. Bro. Noseworthy made suitable acknowledgement.

Songs. speeches, refreshments, a jolly crowd—the time slipped by all too swiftly.

The closing event of the Anniversary took place on Sunday, July 15th, when members of the city lodges and a large number of visiting brethren headed by the M.G. Band, paraded to Wesley Methodist Church for Divine service. The society was met by the officials and welcomed by the pastor, Rev. J. G. Joyce, B. A., S.T.B., who occupied the pulpit, assisted by Rev. Bro. Mercer.

The subject of Mr. Joyce's sermon was "Orangeism and the Kongdom of God." The discourse was very carefully prepared, full of thought for reflection, forcefully delivered, and truly a message for the day in which we live.

Return to the hall was made by way of LeMarchant Road and Long's Hill to Victoria Hall. A vote of thanks proposed by P.G.M. Bradley, seconded by P.G.Jr. Deputy Crowther and carried unanimously: "That this gathering tender their best thanks to the Pastor, officials, organist and choir of Wesley Methodist Church."

In many quarters where the true nature of the Orange Association is not properly known, its designs and objects have by some been misunderstood and by others misrepresented. "The Loyal Orange Association is formed by persons desirous of supporting to the utmost of their power the principles and practices of the Christian religion, to maintain the laws and constitution of the country, afford assistance to the distressed members of the Association, and othwise promote such laudable and benevolent purposes as may tend to the due ordering of religion and Christian charity, and the supremacy of law, order and constitutional freedom."

"It takes its stand upon the glorious principles of the Revolution of 1688; it lays its foundation in the field of British liberty; it distains the badge of faction, and knows no emblem save 'The Altar and the Throne.' "—S.R.P.

The Caraquet which was wrecked on Northern Reef Bermuda last month was insured for 40.000 pounds according to "Fairplay."

Two Nfldrs. Killed By Train at Chelsea, Mass

John Edward Joyce, aged 18, of 123 Marleboro Street, Chelsea, and Charles Moore, of 8 Fitz Terrace, Chelsea, cousins, while walking home together from work at 5.12 last evening, were instantly killed by the Rockport express on the Boston and Main Railroad a few feet west of Arlington St. crossing in Chelsea.

The young men were walking along the inbound track and facing the train that struck them. For a few seconds their attention was distracted by a passing outbound express, and the cloud of dust and cinders covered the approaching inbound flyer from their view until just under the Braidway bridge. Then it loomed suddenly out of the dust, and struck them before they realized they were in danger.

Both boys were employed by the Pope & Cottle Lumber Company on Carter St., Chelsea and left their work at 5 o'clock. It was the Moore boy's first half-day's work for the concern. N. F. Moore and his family have lived in Chelsea four years.

Moore was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Moore and also leaves three brothers, James, John and Oswald, and five sisters, Annie Flora, Mamie, Carie and Susan.

The Joyce boy leaves his parants, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Joyce, three brothers, William, Max and Gilbert, and two sisters, Jessie and Elsie. Both the victims of the accident attended the Bellingham Methodist Church—Boston Paper.

Both of the above young men are from Freshwater and their funerals were held the following Sunday, interment being made at Woodlawn.

Ill Luck Follows Danish Schr. Centaurus

The Danish schooner Centaurus, which left Hr. Buffett on February 7th for Oporto and has not reached her destination, has now been posted as missing and it is presumed was lost with all hands. It will be remembered that a mutiny occurred on board the vessel while entering Hr. Buffett, and the Captain shot one of the crew dead. Both the captain and mate were placed under arrest, but after an investigation here, they were allowed free, it being held that the officers of the ship acted within their authority. The crew thereupon left here and rejoined their vessel which sailed on what was to be their last voyage. One of the vessel's crew was a young lad aged 14, who acted as cook and was a nephew of the captain.

Regatta Notice

With but two weeks from Wednesday, interest in the annual Regatta is growing daily, and hundreds of people now visit the course each evening to see the crews practising.

The repairs to the Mary have been completed by Bob Sexton, and he says she is now the equal of any other boat that will be on the pond.

On Friday night no less than five boats were on the pond at the same time.

The Guard's amateurs are looking up and the other crews will all be out this week.

The fishermen's race will as usual be amongst the most interesting events. The Portugal Cove men are hard at practice. Blackhead has a good six for the Mary and the Outer Cove will row the Cadet.

The C.E.I. Football team have a strong six, and will have to be reckoned with.

Three crews of Truckmen will have a spin to-night.

St. Bon's and St. Mary's are very popular crews.

The Methodist Guards Band will give a concert to-night, weather permitting.

"Canada's Best Flour"

requires less work than ordinary hard wheat flours.

DON'T KNEAD IT TOO MUCH.

It goes together quickly and easily, requiring only two or three minutes' beating in the sponge or batter, and a few minutes' kneading in the dough until it becomes smooth and elastic.

It does not require a second kneading after it has risen in the bowl or basin—simply close the hand and punch down thoroughly.

Women In Board of Trade

TORONTO, July 5—Miss Lucy Brooking, Superintendent of Alexander Industrial School, in a recent report given of the work said: "To correct the faults, mental physicial and moral, engendered and strengthened by inadequate and evil surroundings, is growing increasingly difficult through the policy of the larger city courts in parolring girls again and again after committing six offences. While juvenile delinquency is said to be on the decrease, the percentage of girls sent to the school from Ontario cities is on the increase."

The Ontario Lesson

LE CANADA.—The farmer government, having the most exclusive tendencies, did not know how to satisfy the wants of the population as a whole, who have therefore found it necessary to return to the old parties which gave better results. Moreover, the farm group had no experience of governments, just as is the case in the other provinces of the West, where uneasiness is showing itself more and more. The result of this inexperience is that the debt in Ontario has been increased by $150,000,000, in only four years of farmer government a record, said someone, which has never been equalled in the annals of British parliaments. It is an experience which has thus cost the people of Ontario dear and a lesson to those provinces which have not yet wished to launch out on a similar adventure.

St. Joseph's Regatta

A special meeting of the men of St. Joseph's parish was held Saturday night to make arrangements for their annual Garden Party and Regatta which takes place on August 8th. Rev. Fr. Pippy addressed the gathering and outlined the many details in connection with the affair. Mr. P. F. Collins, President of the C. C. C. Boat Club on behalf of that organization assured Father Pippy of their full support. As at present arranged there will be seven races, as well as a dory race, which will start from the bottom of the lake. There is also a possibility of a swimming race being included to start from the head of the Lake and finish at the C.C.C. Boat House. Even a ladies' race is mooted. A further meeting will be announced.

Serious Violation

The postponed hearing of the case of a motor-car driver charged with a breach of the street traffic regulations viz: failing to stop when a street car was putting off passengers, was concluded this morning when the evidence of Const. Parsons, Conductor Parrell and motorman Avery was taken. The action was taken by Sergt Bennett who was on the street car at the time and whose timely action saved a lady who was about to alight from the car from stepping directly in front of the passing auto. His Honor imposed a fine of $5.00 and said that the conduct of motorists in failing to stop when passing a street car that has come to a standstill to let passengers off or on is not only a breach of the law, but a violation of ordinary decency and courtesy.

Motor Thief Is Fined $200.00

The young man Dormody, who pleaded guilty on Saturday to taking Hon. T. Bonia's motor car from the Cathedral year on July 9th., was this morning fined $200.00, which represented the extent of the damage done to the car when he ditched it. In default of payment of the fine, Dormody will have to serve seven months' imprisonment. Mr. C. E. Hunt appeared on behalf of the accused.

NOTE OF THANKS

Mr. Eli Haynes and family desire to express their heartfelt gratitude to the many kind friends who in various ways evidenced their sympathy in the death of their beloved wife and mother. They also wish to thank the following for floral tributes to adorn her casket:—The Employees of the Union Publishing Co., Mrs. Thorne, Mrs. Escott, Mrs. Young, Mrs Anthony, Mrs. Pike, Miss Jessie Dodd, Mrs. J. Jenkins and Mrs. J. Janes.

Sentenced To Six Months

A young man named John O'Brien was this morning sentenced to six months imprisonment in the Penitentiary with hard labor, having been arrested on complaint of his mother for obtaining the sum of twenty dollars belonging to her under false pretences.

The amount represented the monthly cheque paid her by the Pensions Board since the death of another son who was killed in France during the war, and the accused called for it, saying that his mother was ill. The young man had previously been convicted three times on charges of obtaining money under false pretenses and served terms of from 6 to 12 months imprisonment.

Digby In Port

Ship Has Biggest Inward Cargo Since 1916

The Furness liner, Digby, Captain F. W. Chambers, D.S.C., 7 1-2 days from Liverpool, arrived at 7 a.m. yesterday. The ship had a fine run out, with the exception of Friday night when some delay was caused by fog.

The Digby has 1350 tons of general cargo for this port, the largest inward cargo by a Furness boat since 1916, which is an indication that we are beginning to get back to pre-war trade with the Old Country.

The following passengers came by the ship: Miss D. M. Alderdice, J. D. Arnaud, A. H. Atkins, A. B. Baird, N. Baird, Lt.-Col. A. E. Bernard, Sir E. R. Bowring, Miss J. D. Bruce, Captain J. H. and Mrs. Campbell, W. R. Cheshire, T.S. Isaacs, A. Johnson, A. W. Knight, Miss M. Kennedy, Mrs. G. Knowling, Jr.; Miss P. F. Knowling, J. E. Leonard, W. Moore, F. H. Morgan, Mrs. A. M. Munn, B. S. ATTEMPTS AT TRAIN WRECKING IN C. B. FAIL

Attempts Are Made to Wreck Sydney Trains

SYDNEY, July 16—A rail was removed from the Sydney and Louisburg Railway near Dominion number one through the night by unknown persons. The removal was discovered before the Sydney and Louisburg express came along and the train hands put it back in place. Work has commenced on the restarting of number seven blast furnace and four open hearth furnaces.

SYDNEY July 16—Archie McInnes, a sixteen year old boy, was arrested by civil police officers near Dominion number one while in the act, the police state, of putting iron into a switch of the Sydney-Louisburg railway. The arrest was made near the trestle, and it is thought had the train been derailed, it would have plunged into the gulch below.

Irish Dock Strike

DUBLIN, July 16—A strike on the docks of the Irish Free State ports has begun today. James Larkin, Irish labor leader, recently deported from the United States, apparently is directing the operations of the striking element.

Champ. May Meet Firpo

NEW YORK, July 16—Promoter Tex Rickard to-day made a definite proposition to Jack Kearns, manager for Jack Dempsey, that the heavyweight champion meet Luis Firpo in Buenos Aires. Kearns said he would give a decision on Wednesday. Rickard said his agents in the Argentine capital had assured him November would be a good time for the fight and that eight hundred thousand dollars gate receipts waited the match between Firpo and Dempsey or between the latter and Harry Wills, the negro, who has been seeking a match with Dempsey.

King and Queen In Scotland

LONDON, July 16—King George and Queen Mary paid their annual visit to Scotland last week, taking up their residence in the famous Holyrood Palace, in Edinburgh. The new Duchess of York and the Duke accompanied the monarchs on all occasions. The Duchess is of Scottish lineage.

To Rescue Explorer

NOME, Alaska, July 16—Harold Noice arrived here yesterday enroute to Wrangle Island to rescue Allan Crawford, of Toronto, and his associates who have been marooned on the island two years. Crawford led the Stefensson expedition which went to claim Wrangle Island for the Canadian Government. Noice said he believed the Canadian Government would ultimately pay for the expedition but that so far Stefansson was footing the bills.

Post Favors Complete Co-Operation With France in Forcing Germany to Pay Chronicle Says Poincare Is Slapping Door Against Britain.

LONDON, July 16—A bad impression was made by Premier Poincare in the address delivered at Senlis yesterday, which is generally regarded as an indirect reply to the outline of Great Britain's reparations policy made by Premier Baldwin in the House of Commons last Thursday. There is a widespread disposition to treat it as intended rejection of the views which Mr. Baldwin projected The only favourable comment is made in the Morning Post which favors maintenance of the Entente at all costs, and declares the only policy promising satisfactory results for Great Britain is whole-hearted co-operation with France to force Germany to pay. The Daily Chronicle treats the speech as finally slamming the door against Great Britain and indignantly charges that France is seeking nobody's interests but her own, paying no regard to the manner in which Britain industry is suffering from her selfish action, and asks, how it is possible to maintain the Entente under such circumstances.

BALDWIN'S NOTE WAS MEANT FOR U. S. A. ALSO

LONDON, July 16—In reply to Commander Joseph Kenworthy, Premier Baldwin said the recent note on reparations was addressed to the United States as well as to the British and Allied Governments, but that no recent convention had occurred between representatives of British and United States Governments in regard to reparations or the present European situation.

If any subscriber does not receive his paper regularly please send in name, address and particulars of same so that the matter may be rectified.

MANY CHURCHES ARE REINSTATING R.C. CEREMONIALS

LONDON, July 16—The tri-annual convention of the Anglo-Catholic Congress in London during the past week brought into public notice the enormous increase in the use of incense and such artistic ventments in the celebration of High Mass in London's High Churches. It was stated there were twenty Protestant Churches in the centre of London where confessions were heard. The Anglo-Catholic movement is an attempt to reinstate Roman Catholic ceremonies into the Church of England without losing the nationalism of the Church or coming under the sway of the Pope.

The s.s. Manoa arrived at Charlottetown at 8 a.m. yesterday, after a fine run of 43 hours from here.

Predicts Close Contest

WASHINGTON, June 29—(By Canadian Press)—Latest advices from Minnesota are that the contest over the senatorship to succeed the late Senator Knute Nelson will be close. Letters arriving in Washington this week from persons who have been on the ground indicate the result is doubtful and that Governor Preus, the republician nominee, will be given a hard race by Magnus Johnson, the farmer-labor candidate.

According to the advices reaching here, not only is there much dissatisfaction among the farmers, which strengthens the farmer-labor party, but there are factional troubles among the republicans. Governor Preus has a strong organization but there are a good many republicans who are not altogether pleased to see the governor sent to the Senate and have him dominate the republican politics of Minnesota for an indefinite period.

Senator Mores, chairman of the republican senatorial committee, is soon going to Minnesota to aid Governor Preus. It is doubtful, however, whether the voters of Minnesota will care much for outside intervention, especially from eastern conservative republicans. Some of the President's utterances on his western trip will be distributed in the state in the hope of helping the republican vote, and especially what he had to say as to agriculture.

Committed For Trial To Supreme Court

Robert Haynes, against whom a charge of bigamy was preferred in the Magistrate Court a few days ago, came before Judge CeCarthy for preliminary hearing yesterday afternoon.

Following the examination of several witnesses, the accused was committed to the Supreme Court for trial.

Meeting Postponed

The special meeting of the Board of Trade called for yesterday afternoon to deal with the matter of the Registration of Liens on book debts was postponed, as sufficient members did not put in appearance. President Outerbridge, therefore, announced that this matter would now be left to be dealt with by the council of the Board, at their regular weekly meeting on Friday.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Out of the Depths

"He had all the credentials I wanted, or ever will want," she said lightly as she pushed up the biggest, most comfortable rocker to the side of the glowing fire, conscious of nothing but a certain blitheness to see him there again. "And now, please, just begin telling me what you have been doing since I saw you last."

"It's a story which won't bear telling. Better leave it at that," he answered. "And I've come to say god-bye because I'm going west to-morrow night by the midnight train."

"To-morrow night?" she said rather blankly, thinking all at once of her little plan about the theatre which had crystallised the moment she saw him.

She knew then what she had been hoping and waiting for!

"Have you got a permanent on, then?

"The offer of one, at least; and heaven send I may be able to keep it! For I haven't had much luck in New York."

"What kind of a job? You don't mind my asking you—do you?" she asked, pausing in her delicate, woman's task of arranging cups and saucers. "I feel somehow that, if I haven't exactly the right, yet I ought to know, for last time I saw you there was something in your eyes I didn't like to see. It isn't the first time I've seen it in a man's eyes in this big terrible city. It generally means one of two things."

"What are they?" he asked.

"Oh, never mind just now. Light up that and smoke it till the coffee is ready," she answered as she handed him the little, square cigarette box of cedar wood with which he had become familiar during the first weeks of his sojourn in New York. "Yes, it's pretty full. None of my bigger club boys have been up lately, and I don't encourage the little ones in the weed, though most of them don't wait for my encouragement! So you're going West? How did it come about?"

"It's a longish story, but I needn't bore you with it. I was working at a warehouse on the East Side. It was an export warehouse, and there happened to be a Scotchman in the firm. I didn't see him at the beginning. I was engaged by one of the managers, or foremen, or whatever they call them; he was the most awful outsider on God's earth! Scotch too, but there must have been a hybrid strain in him somewhere. One of the things I shall do when I come out top dog," he added grimly, "will be to make a little call on Mr. William Donaldson and get even with him. No for what he did to me, but for his bullying and swearing at the nippers and the women that haven't the chance of answering back."

"There is a kind of man who should nerer have any power," put in Jean quietly as she rested her elbow from which her soft lace sleeve fell away on the table.

"You're right! And when it's a Scotsman, the brand somehow is particularly objectionable. He took a fiendish delight in grinding at me. He got to know somehow that I had—shall we say seen better days? How he got at it I'm sure I don't know."

"He loked at you, I suppose—the same as the rest of us did," answered Jean. "Do you think you look like a packer or a sorter, or whatever you were down in the factory?"

Rankine did not even smile.

"At last I got to the end of my tether one day, and I let out on Donaldson for cuffing the ears of a nipper who hadn't done anything to deserve it. We were in the thick of a most glorious shindy," he added, with the first gleam of a smile, when in walked a man I'd never seen before. I don't know how long he had been there, but evidently he had observed a few of the lightning streaks and heard the thunder which was going to cost me my job. I didn't care if it sent me to Sing Sing at the moment, so long as I got even with Donaldson. I saw from his face that the new-comer was somebody. He pulled himself together all of a sudden and began to cringe—as worms like him do cringe to their superiors. Then he began to tell his lies about me. I stood by listening, and when the new comer turned for confirmation to me I just shook my head. "He's my superior officer,' I answered at last, and I hope I managed to put into my voice a bit at least of the contempt and loathing I felt. 'My word don't count against his, no man's does in this inferno, but if you happen to be anybody that matters I'd advise you just to put a few questions as to Donaldson's treatment of the young ones and women here. It amounts to criminal cruelty, and if I knew anybody who would listen to me and take action, I'd cheerfully speak up. I've nothing to lose by it, and they might have something to gain.' "

"Donaldson glared at me like a fiend incarnate, and began to speak rapidly in that thick voice of his with the accent of the gutter in it. The man in the tweed suit waved him to be silent. I could see that he was chewing something over and over again in his mind and trying to arrive at some conclusion. Also he looked very steadily at me. I met his stare, for, as I said, I had othing to lose, and I enjoyed the burst-up in spite of the fact that very probably it would give me another taste of a bed on the Madison Square benches in a temperature hovering around zero!"

Jean Dempster's face blanched slightly.

"You don't mean to say you've been down as far as that!" she said.

He nodded gravely.

"Oh, yes, I've sampled it all. When I see Affery again—I shall see him, I suppose; at least he said so, and there was a sort of finality about all he said which made him not quite canny—I shall tell him he was right and that New York is not a good place to starve in."

"But it was wrong, hideously wrong to do it," said Jean, "when you had a friend here, more than one, but certainly one, who could have help!"

"I'm down, my dear, but I don't take money from a woman," he said with a kind of steady sadness. "Well do you want to hear the rest of this first-class yarn?"

"Yes, of course. Please go on."

"Fordyce listened and gave Donaldson a look which made him fade away faster than any worm I've ever seen wriggle out of a path. Then he invited me to come to his office and talk to him. I did for a whole hour—not about myself, but about the system I had found prevailing in that particular factory and which I had taken an oath on myself to expose when the moment should come, and the man. I didn't exactly know how I was going to do it, Miss Dempster. A hobo—"

"Don't say it, Mr. Rankine!" It's a horrible, hateful word—just as tramp is in our country!"

"But it's what I am ,or was, not long ago; and even now I'm merely a permit on another man's bounty until I make good—which, I am sure, few do in this horrible country!"

"You remember what I told you about New York the first night you came?"

"I do remember. It has burned into my brain right on through this ghastly year! Well, I was telling you I talked to Fordyce. He believed it right enough, though I had no credentials to offer him."

"Except your face and the something—the something above the common which has never left you. if you had a hole in your boots and rags on your back it would still be there," said Jean.

Rankine smiled very faintly.

"You've been a good friend—one of the sort who puts grit into a man every time! I wish I could have afforded not to lose you, but the only way in the circumstances was to get myself lost—you understand?"

"I needn't pretend I don't. But it was wrong all the same," maintained Jean stoutly. "Well, and what did Fordyce do? I suppose he's one of the millionaire Fordyce's. He was mixed up in rather an unsavoury divorce case just before you came. It was one of the Newport scandals; immediately after it he went on his yacht for a long cruise."

"I don't know. All I know is that I found him a decent sort. He expressed his thanks for what I told tim, and said he would make it his business to verify my statements. But these they accepted as they stood—for an unexplained reason I cannot fathem—and this morning Mr. Danoldson quit."

"Good. And you stan on, I hope, and by keeping Mr. Fordyce's eyes open, get your chance?"

Rankine shook his head.

"Nothing on this earth would keep me here, Miss Dempster; for it seems to me there is only one thing worse than being a hobo in New York, and that's to be one of the millionaires! I want money, God knows, and I want it badly; but not that kind of money! Besides it's not in my line, and Fordyce was quick enough to see it."

"Then what is he going to do for you for giving him the chance to clean out his Augean stables on the East Side?" asked Jean feverishly."

"He's paying my passage out West, and is accrediting me to a man he knows on a cattle ranch in Alberta, and I board the train to-morrow night. I've taken his money as a loan. It's the only one I owe, or ever shall in New York. Fordyce understood. I don't know what his private character is, but he has been a gentleman to me."

"For which, God bless him! Of course I know all about his family. It hasn't a savoury record; but it bears out what you say—that it isn't easy to be a millionaire in New York. Money, too much of it seems to bring a curse along with it."

Having relieved himself of his story, Rankine's face relaxed a little and he took one of Jean's cigarettes.

"If you and I had the distribution, I wonder how it would go—et? How much is it you need for Hunter's Quay?"

"Ten thousand dollars would do. I have five."

GYPSY MAIDENS SOLD FOR $2,500
And Even Then Husbands Who Buy 'Em Sometimes Kick.

Wichita, Kan.—A 1923 love market where it is alleged four gypsy girls were sold in marriage by their fathers for a cash consideration of from $2,500 to $3,500 each, was revealed in statements of one of the young husbands to Sheriff Chester Conner.

Two gypsy girls, said to be Anna and Mary Sperro, sisters, were sold to Tom and Miller Costello, brothers, according to Sheriff Conner's information. Two sisters of the bridegrooms, Wolkey and Rosa, were also sold to the brothers of the brides, whose names were given as Steve and John Sperro.

A wild celebration of the quadruple marriages brought the sheriff to the gypsy camp. Leo Mike Mitchell, 21, was taken into custody. He says he bought his bride some time ago.

"I paid her father $2,750 cash for her, and now she won't work. She's got too many other husbands. I want to find her old man and get my money back," the husband added.

The girl denied that she had been sold. Leo Mike's story was corroborated by his father.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE."

Cause of Early Old Age

The celebrated Dr. Michenhoff, an authority on early old age, says that it is "caused by poisons generated in the intestine." When your stomach digests food properly it is absorbed without forming poisonous matter. Poisons bring on early old age and premature death. 15 to 30 drops of "Seigel's Syrup" after meals makes your digestion sound. 10

Impressive Ceremony at Littledale Academy

Yesterday morning, at Littledale, a favored few were permitted to be present at a most imposing ceremony. Eight young ladies came up to the Altar, dressed as brides, and declaring their desire to become the Spouses of Christ, were given the black robe and the white veil, which marked their consecration to the works of charity to which the Sisters of Mercy devote themselves. Others, with their Novitiate finished, were admitted to the pronouncing of their vows, some temporarily, some perpetually, which made them willing victims to the cause of Christ, in whose imitation they immolated themselves for Him.

The ceremony was a very touching one, and the sorrow naturally felt by loving parents who gave their dear ones to Christ, was forgotten by the Heavenly peace and joy which God sent into their hearts in reward for their sacrifice of their beloved ones.

In the absence of His Grace, Rt. Rev. Mgr. McDermott presided, and blessed and gave the Postulants the robe of their dredilection, and received the vows of the new daughters of Mercy. He was assisted by Rev. Fr. Duane, and Fr. Flemming of New York, Rev. J. J. Rawlins, Chaplain; and Revs. Dr. Carter and Flynn of the Cathedral.

After the completion of the ceremony, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Fr. Duane, of the Jesuit Order, who developed the idea that today's ceremony, with its consecration of human hearts to the ideals taught by Christ and to the unselfish devotion towards the poor, and the suffering of Christ was an assured proof that the world's claim of the failure of Christianity was absolutely unfounded.

This was followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament by the Rev. Father Flemming, of the New York Province of the Jesuit Order. The Sisters who received the Habit are:

Miss Creusa Giovaninni, known in religion as Sr. M. Julian.

Miss Clare Downey, known in religion as Sr. M. Finton.

Miss Agnes Armstrong, known in religion as Sr. M. Xaverius.

Miss Iree Collins, known in religion as Sr. M. Regis.

Miss Margaret Edwards, known in religion as Sr. M. Monica.

Miss Kitty McCarthy, known in religion as Sr. M. Chrysostom.

Miss Alwice Hyde, known in religion as Sr. M. Zita.

Sisters M. Thomasine, Assisium, Edward, Bonaventure, Celestine, Assumpta, Loyola, Liguori, made their vows and received the black veil.

Sisters M. Alphonsus McNamara, Aloysius Rawlins and Ignatius Molloy were admitted to Final Vows.

Expensive Job

Keeping London Landmarks Clean—Spring Cleaning of Tower Bridge—Twenty Tons of Paint.

London.—Keeping London clean is an expensive undertaking. Few people know, for example, that every hundredweight of refuse removed from dustbins in the metropolis costs the local authorities a fraction under six pence. Every day 5,000 tons of dirt and dust are collected by means of 1,320 vehicles.

Some of the asks that now confront London's army of Spring cleaners are gigantic. Take Victoria Station. Cleaning the station, which has a bigger area of glass roof than any other station—Waterloo alone excepted—occupies the best par of six months. Over 45 tons of paint, made up of 34 tons of white lead and eleven tons of linseed oil, are used, at a cost of approximately $200 a ton.

One of the biggest Spring cleaning jobs ever undertaken was the dusting and renovating of the British Museum Library. Two hundred and fifty men were kept busy for 21 months. Redecorating the dome and walls of the great reading room took 250,000 leaves of beaten gold.

Another big renovating job carried out periodically is Spring cleaning Tower Bridge. Twenty tons of paint are used in the process, which occupies roughly five months.

Keeping the House of Commons clean costs $8,500 a year. The carpet-beating bill alone totals nearly $2,000, while window cleaning runs into $1,250.

CREWS SHIPPED

A party of eleven men were signed up to-day by shipping master M. J. Ross, four for the S. S. Canadian Victor, Captain Davis, bound for Cardiff, and seven for the S.S. Bernard M., Captain Des Lauriers.

The following who arrived here on Saturday from Alamoter, Newfoundland, were for the Canadian Victor: William Organ, Wilson Grey, Ambrose Billard, Alex Organ. With the exception of Gus Quirk of North Sydney, the men for the Bernard M. are from other Cape Breton towns; Akron Robinson, Gus Quirk, Bernard Buffet, Leander Boucheleau, Henry Stone, John Reardon and John D. McKenzie.—N. S. Herald.

The Cure For Divorce

DES MOINES, July 10—The family altar, worshipped by families daily in homes, will prevent divorce, according to Rev. Stanley B. Vandersall of Boston, who spoke today before the International Christian Endeavour Convention here. "An analysis of the homes that have been wrecked would no doubt show that family prayer was lacking in those homes," said Rev. Vandersall.

"The seeds of divorce can find no fertile soil in the homes where father, mother and children each day repair in unity of spirit for divine blessing," adder Dr. Vandersall. "Divorce courts are a necessary part of our governmental machinery, but if the family altars are established in all the homes in America the divorce courts will be driven out of business. It is true that some benefit would follow the enactment of laws making it difficult to get divorces, but this will not cure the divorce evil. What is needed is something to promote love and goodwill. Family prayer will do that very thing."

Cooperation between public school officials and religious groups to promote systematic religious education of children, was urged by Dr. Hugh S. Magill, of Chicago at to-day's session. Dr. Magill pointed to the youthfulness of criminals and evidence that a large proportion of children are not taught biblical truths and standards.

"A plan is being worked out in a number of cities," said Dr. Magill, "by which both the state and the churches can cooperate in giving school-children both the general and the religious education needed which is fair and equitable alike to Jew and Gentils, Protestant and Catholic. The purpose is two fold: To train the youth of our country for a life of service and good citizenship and to bring them into the churches.

"The separation of the Church and State is a fundamental principle of our government, but this does not mean that the state can get along without the Church nor the Church with the State.

"What more patriotic service can be rendered than to train up the youth of America in an intelligent understanding of the Bible."

Bowdoin Arrives at Battle Harbour

MacMillan Encounters Very Rough Weather Off Labrador

COLLISION DANGER

Explorer Allows Members of Crew To Keep All Pelts

NEW YORK, July 11.—By Special Wireless from Mac Millan's Arctic bound ship The Bowdoin, by Captain Donald B. MacMillan:—"We have just arrived at Battle Harbor after a stormy and hazardous voyage. As we neared the strait of Belle Isle the weather became gradually worse and we were bucking a strong northeast wind accompanied by thick fogs which made navigation difficult. Added to this was the ever present danger of collision with the hundreds of icebergs which are floating south from the North Atlantic. I have never encountered so many before at this season of the year.

Reports here indicate that the ice conditions are extremely bad farther north, especially along the coast of Labrador. We shall probably remain here three or four days to await a change in the wind and weather that will drive the ice off the coast.

BLUE FOXES DEARER.

NEW YORK, July 11—The departure from Maine for the Arctic of Donald B. MacMillan, famous explorer and special correspondent of the Montreal Star, introduces a new factor in the market of fur futures.

The cost of blue fox skins has increased almost tenfold—in the Arctic. Once they cost eleven cents, if bought from the Eskimos; now the natives ask a dollar. But the southern prices indicate that Dr. MacMillan's crew will make a point of bringing all they can.

Dr. MacMillan is the first explorer to allow members of the party to keep all the pelts they obtain. As the expedition is going into the land of the blue foxes, this decision should mean a considerable financial benefit to the crew.

Dr. MacMillan believes that each man with a line of traps should get one blue fox a week. These pelts, raw, bring about $250 each in the United States, or $350 or more as a starting point for the finished piece in New York. In addition, it is possible to obtain many more by trading with the Eskimos.

Not many years ago the Eskimos would turn over a blue skin for a few cents' worth of goods. Now, however, the price has gone up. The Eskimo expects about a dollar's worth. Oil, firearms, tobacco and food are first in the hearts of the Eskimos. Sometimes, though, when their food supply is large, they are eager to swap for cheap trinkets and toys.

Matt Henson, the Negro who stood at the North Pole with Peary and who now is a Federal employee in the custom house in New York, once had a coat, or kooletah, made of eleven blue fox skins. You could just about put your own figure on such a coat in a Fifth Avenue shop window.

If promptness, courtesy, first-class work and right prices will get your trade then we are in line for it. Union Publishing Company, the big purchasing public jlst try this paper should be marked plainly "FOR THE EVEN- EVENING ADVOCATE.

Canada's New Railway Loan

The announcement in yesterday's messages that arrangements are being made for a twenty-two and a half million dollar bond issue of the Canadian National Railway Company for the purpose of raising the necessary funds to equip the line with rolling-stock comes as no surprise. That the Canadian Government should be the guarantors as to principal and interest for these bonds is but natural also since the Government itself owns all the stock in the company up to the present time. Furthermore, if we are to judge from the experience of the past, the Canadian Government, unless something remarkable transpires in the next few years, will undoubtedly be called upon to meet the full amount of this loan, both sinking fund and interest. In a word, the Canadian Government are making preparations to go another fifty millions or so in the hole in respect of the Dominion's pet white elephant.—The National Railways.

When Canada, during the regime of Sir Wilfred Laurier, undertook to go into the railway business nearly twenty years ago, the Dominion entered upon the most unfortunate phase of its history. No doubt at the time the National railway project was launched there was much to recommend it as likely to become a great asset to the country and little enough to warn those who were embarking upon it that they were preparing for those who were to come after them a perpetual heritage of financial perplexities. The history of the Canadian National Railways from the very start has been one of unending travail for successive governments which have been called upon to shoulder the added burdens of financing other roads at the cost of tremendous annual outlays and which had finally to take over such railways as the Grand Trunk and Canadian Northern and consolidate them with the National Railways whose deficits were making appreciable additions to Canada's public debt.

That this new loan to be raised by a guaranteed bond issue is merely throwing good money after bad, there is hardly room for doubt but the only other alternative is to scrap the whole outfit which is of course out of the question. Canada must go on paying the price of an experiment of twenty years ago until she can either make the roads pay or get them into the hands of private contractors, both of which possibilities seem at present to be extremely remote.

Newfoundland's railway problems have had, in a very small way, many features that characterise those of the neighboring Dominion, for, while past governments in this country did not commit the indiscretion of attempting to operate the railway as a national undertaking, they nevertheless sowed the seeds which have produced such prolific harvests of difficulties for this country in the twenty-five years that have elapsed since 1898. When we see what Canada is up against to-day we have a great deal to be thankful for that those who at present control the destinies of this Colony have been able to find such a satisfactory solution for our problems as that embodied in the measure which passed the Legislature a few days ago and in the further plans for the future whose early maturity is confidently looked for.

Governor Pays Visit To Boy Scouts' Camp

Yesterday the Boy Scouts' camp was visited by His Excellency the Governor, the Chief Scout, who was accompanied by Commissioner Le-Messurier and Major Bell.

His Excellency made an official inspection, after which he addressed the lads. He expressed himself as greatly pleased with the splendid appearance of the lads, who greeted him with the scout yell.

Later, His Excellency visited the Girl Guides' camp which is situated on the island nearby. The Guides rowed the Governor across and he inspected that camp. He found the girls happy and healthy and thoroughly enjoying the outing. Returning to the Scout camp, tea was served by the ladies from Gower and Cochrane Streets, after which His Excellency returned to the city, greatly impressed by his visit.

The following visitors were also at the Scout camp yesterday: Rev. H. and Mrs. Johnson, Rev. C. H. and Mrs. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. John Leamon, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Peters, Mrs. C. H. Hutchings and Miss Helen Hutchings, Mrs Holloway, Mrs. A. Mews, Miss Mews, Mrs. E. Lindsay.

Aunt Jane is Heard From Again

Chane Island,
July 6th, 1923.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—I hope you printed my last letter to you about Jim's visit to Port Union, as Jim sez he wants everyone to know about the place there and how the people received the Governor and his lady.

Jim sez that the man who hasn't seen Port Union doesn't know what Sir Wm. Coaker has done for this country.

He sez that where there was nothin but rocks and small trees there is a good size town, and he never stops talking about the way it is lit up at nights.

He told me all about cooking by electricity, without any wood or coal, and how the woman at the hotel just turned the button on a flat piece of metal about the size of the collection plate we use in our church on Sundays. As soon as the button is turned the little wires get red hot, then you put on the kettle of cold water and before long the steam is coming out of the bib. Jim makes me so mad when he talks about these things that if he doesn't stop soon I'll pack the old carpet bag, and book my ticket for Port Union. It must be a great blessing for the people of Port Union and Bonavista to have the electric light, and to be able to cook without fires. Jim tells me they have little heaters so that they can turn on or off the heat any time they like, and there is no ashes to clear up after the fire is put out.

There was a crowd in the house the other night when Jim was telling us about his trip, and some of them doubted Jim's words, which nearly meant a row, as Jim gets hot under the collar when anyone says he's telling lies.

He tells such a wonderful story about Port Union that sometimes I think he must dream some of it.

Sir William promised Jim a picture of the Governor and his Lady standing on the wharf, and if you see Sir William tell him not to forget it and if he has a picture of Port Union to send one so I can see what the place is like. The carpet slippers Jim brought me fit alright, but I had to cut the toe out of one of them as it hurt my corn, and Jim should have told the man who sold it to him that I always get one shoe a size larger than the other so as to have solid comfort.

Jim thought he would meet Mr. Grimes at Port Union, but he didn't. He sez it does him good to see George smile, and he thinks Mr. Grimes must be a nice fellow in the House of Assembly as he has a smile on him all the time.

Of course the man who is on the side of the Government can afford to smile when he thinks how firm the Union stuck to Sir Wm. Coaker and his candidates in the northern districts.

Everyone that was on the opposite side felt sure the Union men would be slack this time, and when you think of how bad times are, and how hard the men who are against the Union worked to win, it was certainly a surprise to us when we knew that the Union elected eleven men north.

The men who made bets against the Union must be sore now, and I hope they learned a lesson that they won't forget as betting is bad for anyone who doesn't win; and I think it is a sin to throw good money away.

In my last letter I mentioned about what Lady Allardyce said about fireless cooking. If you see her Ladyship ask her if she will write a letter now and again to the Advocate telling us women what we should do to make our homes more healthy and our husbands more agreeable, for Jim sed she sed if the women will make their homes bright and cheerful their husbands will be better satisfied and would be glad to be home with their families.

Now I don't think she sed it that way, but Jim likes me to think that he is perfect and that I am not as good a wife as I think I am.

If Lady Allardyce would write us about the Girl Guides and Fireless Cooking I am sure every girl and woman in the outports would read her letters and learn something, as I'm sure a woman like her Ladyship must have learned a lot travelling round with the Governor.

Jim was telling me he went to the Union meeting one night at Port Union and before the meeting opened they showed moving pictures on the screen. We cannot have moving pictures at meetings here as we have no electric light, but I remember one time we had moving pictures in our house, and while Jim was moving them he let one fall on the floor and broke it, so now where we are papering the walls he tells me that I better do the moving pictures, as his hands are not steady enough.

Its true he's not steady, but I think he is glad he dropped that picture as it is an excuse for not doing anything in the house when we are cleaning up. I think Jim is getting steadier now that he can't get his jar of rum; But at the same time I sometimes think it would be better if the men here could get a jar now and again as it used to be great fun at weddings and at Christmas time, but I suppose it is better for the young people that the liquor is prohibited.

Jim told me he saw lots of bottles on the train and several young fellows from St. John's asked him to "have a drop," but he never had any use for moonshine, so he refused. Of course that's what he told me, but I wouldn't like to offer him a drop of what I keep for sickness, and I am sure he had more than one drop during his trip to Port Union.

I don't know what I can write about, but when the fishing season is over I'll let you know how the Union is getting on in this place.

Yours truly,
AUNT JANE.

The Strike Situation

The absence of any definite news regarding the Sydney strike situation may be taken as an indication that negotiations are still continuing successfully and that, in the near future, the news will be flashed that the strike is settled and the men have returned to work.

The strike was a practical revolt against the authority of the International Mine Workers of America, whose President openly declared it was a violation of the principles of the international organization as well as of the agreement between Sydney operators and employees.

By following their local leaders as against the well-reasoned advice of President Lewis the Sydney strikers have estranged themselves from the general sympathy of the international unions and cut themselves off from the strike allowances ordinary in such cases.

According to yesterday's despatches, the strikers will consequently suffer from a scarcity of money and empty larders. The strike, therefore, should end shortly, if the Armstrong negotiations can present anything to the miners in the way of a compromise.

Sir William F. Coaker,
Port Union,
Newfoundland.

Dear Sir William:

Permit me to congratulate you and your colleagues on your re-election to the District of Bonavista against such opposition, and more especially upon the great honour that has been conferred upon you by His Majesty the King.

Long may you live to enjoy it and to uphold the traditions of the good old F.P.U., of which you were the originator. Hope my congratulations will not be too late in reaching you as it was just recently I heard of your knighthood.

I remain,
Yours very truly,
NICHOLAS MILLEY.

Interesting Notes From Middle Brook

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir.—On July 7th the Home League held a sale of work and raised the sum of $60.00.

On July 11th the C. of E. people held a pie social and dance and raised the sum of twenty-two dollars., which was given to Mr. Geo. Chant as a gift from the C. of E. people of everyone high and low, rich and this place, as a slight token of appreation of his long stay with us as a school teacher. Mr. Chant, while with us, performed his duty faithfully and well. He associated with everyone higt and low, rich and poor. He made no choice, and was cheerful at all times, although he had some trouble, when Mrs. Chant was ill for a while.

He was as a father to the children, and they would wish him to stay longer, but his time has expired as a teacher. A man teaching for thirty-three years should get a good pension from the Government for his faithful service, The people of this place all wish Mr. Chant and family joy and happiness during their remaining days. And I must not forget Miss Madge Chant. We do heartily thank her for the faithful service she rendered as organist in the church. God willing, we will meet again some day. The family left for Greenspond on July 12th, where they will make their future home.

We do not know who the next teacher will be.

The S. A. officers and teacher left for St. John's on a short visit to attend Congress.

Miss Eva Squires left for St. John's a short while ago.

Since last writing, death has visited us and taken from us an aged man of 97 years, in the person of William Lane.

Thanking you for space and wishing The Advocate every success.—A. COLLINS.

Mysterious Margaret Lindsay Case Puzzles the Federal Authorities

DID "FISH FANGS" SLAY MARGARET LINDSAY?

Montreal Girl Met Foul Play In Far Labrador.

Victim Was Missing Year,—Bullet Hole Found in Corpse

POPULAR IN LIFE OF SOCIAL BOSTON

Government Expedition Will Seek Out Slayer of Girl—Public Demands Revenge.

(Montreal Standard.)

CURLING, Newfoundland.—Discovery of the bullet in the body of Miss Marguerite Lindsay, found in the woods near Cartwright Harbor, Labrador, has only deepened the mystery of the death, nearly a year ago, of the society girl acting as a volunteer teacher in the Grenfell Labrador Missions.

That she was the victim of a band of murderous "Fish Fang" Eskimos is now more plausible solution than it seemed last Fall.

Veteran missionaries familiar with the native languages and trappers and friendly Eskimos are endeavoring to clear up the mystery and the Newfoundland Government is showing active interest. If it is found that the "Fish Fangs" murdered her, an expedition will probably be sent to Labrador to arest the guilty Eskimos.

Protest Unheard.

Missionary Sellers of the Cartwright Mission, who accompanied the body to this port on the Steamer Sagona, intimates that the young woman was murdered. He has with him a written report of his investigations up to the time of leaving Cartwright which he will tender to the Department of Justice at St. John's.

Miss Lindsay was popular in Boston London and Montreal society. She attended school near Boston and was a member of the Sewing Circle and Vincent Club in 1918. Later she attended St. Andrew's College in England. Her parents are wealthy and live in Montreal.

Miss Lindsay was last seen by Miss Rennette Styles, a Vassar graduate, who was also a volunteer teacher, on August 4 1922, when she started out for a walk. Miss Styles protested that she ought not to go out alone, but her protest went unheered.

When night came and the young woman had not returned a searching party was organized to hunt for her. Day after day the search went on, but no trace of the missing girl could be found. Friendly tribes, trappers, fisher folk, and missionaries scoured the bleak Labrador wilds, but in vain.

Believe Girl Slain

How the bullet-holed body was found as soon as the snow had melted this Spring, what marks were on it, if any; who found it and where, are matters dealt with in Dr. Sellers report to the Newfoundland authorities. He refuses to disclose his facts to the public, but intimates that she met with foul play.

It is thought probable here that friendly Eskimos during their Winter trapping in the long Labrador trails picked up information which they told to the people at the Cartwright Mission when they came in with their furs.

OTTAWA, July 16—Delegates are now on the way to Ottawa from various Dominions and possessions to attend the British Empire Forestry conference opening in Ottawa, July 5. It is the aim of the conference to find means to make the British Empire self sustaining in its timber supply, and the conference will take stock of the Empire's timber resources and discuss means for conservation and reforestation.

Dangers and Mysteries of the Sea

Loss of C.P.O.S. Steamer "Marvale" Reminds of Trageries of the Deep—Unexpected Disasters That May Cause Loss of Shipping and of Life—Perils From Gales, Fire, Ice Collision, Stranding, Derelict, Tidal Wave, Etc.

(Family Herald.)

To the landsmen it must seem strange that, in all weathers and under all conditions, big modern ships continue to meet trouble at sea, writes Carr Mitchell in a London paper.

In heavy weather it is to be understood, but even when nothing fiercer than zephyrs blow across the face of the ocean, ships still send out their S.O.S.

There are daily official reports of marine disasters which always contain news of three or four new wrecks.

Disaster at sea can be reckoned under eight headings—gale, fire, ice, collision, stranding, derelict, tidal wave, and, for a better name, the unexpected.

Fire is generally the outcome of spontaneous combustion. This happens with cargoes of coal and with closed up reserve bunkers, such as are always carried on big liners.

A fire caused in this way happened some months ago on a White Star Liner and caused considerable alarm on board, but fortunately no casualties. There was also the City of Victoria, which was on fire in mid-Atlantic very recently, and from the same cause.

Ice is one of the deadliest foes of every seaman, for, although some old "shell-backs" say that they can smell it, there are few others who have such a keen scent, and the consequence can be seen in past records, which prove that in every one of the many cases of ice wrecks neither the officer of the watch nor the look-out man has seen the berg before it was too late to avoid it.

There is another danger which happened to a sailing vessel some time ago in the far South Atlantic, when all unsuspectingly she sailed into the cul-de-sac former by the long projecting arms of a big berg.

Each arm was 10 miles long, and in weather that was none too clear she gaily ploughed her way into what nearly proved to be a frozen deadhtrap, a huge letter U in ice.

When the captain found where he had taken his ship he made haste to get out again, but the arms of the big berg were clising on him, and it was by no more than a quarter of a mile that he escaped ere the towering cliffs of ice collided with force, sufficient to squeeze a Ddeadnought out of all recognition.

Curious Collisions.

Most people imagine that collisions at sea occur only in fog. A great number do, it is true, but by no means all, for vessels collide with each other from all manner of curious reasons and in the clearest weather.

An outstanding cose occurred some years ago, when an a perfectly fine summer's evening a coasting steamer was crossing from Land's End to the Irish Sea.

Another steamer was sighted coming in from the Atlantic, and no more than casual notice was taken of her, as by the rule of the road at sea it was her duty to keep clear.

But she didn't do anything of the sort, for when both vessels had approached each other closely enough, it was seen from the coaster that a fight was taking place on the other vessel's bridge, and general pandemonium seemed to be reigning. The outcome of the scrap was that one man was knocked down the bridge ladder while the other staggered to the wheel and deliberately ran into and sank the coasting steamer.

The story was a disgraceful one of a long orgy of drinking which the captain and senior officer had indulged in during the long voyage from the Far East. A junior had managed to bring the ship home somehow or other, and by a sad mischance the captain in a very uncertain mood had heard the order given to alter course to avoid the coasting steamer, and straightway asserted his authority by force. Needless to say, a term of imprisonment was served by more than one member of the crew. This, is the only instance of such a thing happening at sea.

The stranding of ships accounts for a greater amount of tonnage than any other form of disaster, although of course, stranding is frequently attendant on cases of collision, fog-bound ships, or break-downs.

A big London-New Zealand mail steamer was outward bound some years ago, and one fine morning was skirting the West Coast of Africa, somewhere between Las Palmas and the Gold Coast, when without the slightest warning she hit a sandbank and came to a standstill.

An Uncharted Danger.

It was a rare case of an uncharted danger, and by the very worst luck imaginable this ship had found it. Small though it was, it was sufficient to hold that unfortunate vessel until she finally became a total wreck.

Another still more remarktble mishap was that of a London cargo steamer proceeding outwards through the Red Sea. The captain was the sole navigator and very foolishly kept his charts in his cabin, where no reference to them could be had by the bridge officer, so that the correst course of south by east was somewhat altered and given verbally to the officer of the midnight to 4 a.m. watch as east by south.

ust before daylight the vessel struck and the growing light showed her to be hopelessly trapped among the scores of small islands that borde the south-east side of the Red Sea. How she had managed to get so far remains one of the mysteries of the sea, but in any case she remained there, and was soon skinned clean of everything moveable by the hostile tribes that swarm the islands north of Babal-Mandeb.

Derelict disasters are not common but when they do occur there isn't, as a rule, a great deal of hope for the unfortunate vesel which strikes one, for in the majority of cases both ships iand derelict go to the bottom together.

There are, however, always a number of these ocean death traps on the trade lands of the Atlantic, in the Bay of Biscay, and the English Channel.

For instance, a recent "Notices to Mariners" gives authentic information on the position, description, and general appearance of six derelicts, three in the Atlantic, one in the Irich Channel, and two in the Bay of Biscay.

Have pity on the vessel which strikes either one of them, for at full speed it doesn't take much resistance to rip the bottom plates out of the biggest ship, and should this happen in heavy weather the crew's chances of safety are not over-whelming.

The Unexpected.

Last but most troublesome of all is the ever present possibility that the unexpected will happen to a ship on the high seas.

What form it may take it is impossible to say. It may be the sudden shifting of several tons of cargo and the resulting dangerous listing over of the vessel, or perhaps faulty steering of the vessel, or rudder, or perhaps a propeller that from no apparent cause suddenly drops off and goes to the bottom, leaving the ship helpless. It may be that the vessel posses over a magnitic ocean bottom and her compasses suddenly go mad and show anything but the correst course.

Then again it may be that brand of unexpectedness which took the ill-fated Waratha out of human ken, whatever that was, or that, which a few months ago disposed of the crew of the German trawler Seefahrt when the British steamer Earshall found that vessel in the neighborhood of the Norderney Light vessel apparently undamaged and in workable condition, but without a single member of the crew. The unexpected took everyone and nothing has been heard of them since.

All these things have happened on more than one occasion to vessels on the high seas, and will again, everyone of them possibilities of dangerthat afect the big modern ship equally as much as they did the frigates that Anson first took round the Horn.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

Read these wise words of Adolph Lewisohn, a well-known New York lawyer, and ponder over them:

"We spend," he says, "a tremendous amount of money every year all over the country in building new court-houses, maintenance of courts, judges, attendants, criminal lawyers, district attorneys, prisons, wardens, kepers and all other enormous expenses connected with this work.

'I would not be astonished if it amounts to at least several hundred million dollars a year.

"I would like," he declares, "to cut this money in half and see it saved for the prevention of crime. I would like to give all the people good educations, have plenty of Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association, playgrounds, parks, recreation for the people, young and old; instruction in home gardening, good housing facilities and many other things.

'Then we would greatly reduce the number of our prisoners."

Paste that in your hat. Whole books have been written to say no more than Mr. Lewisohn said in those few dozen words.

With unmatchedquantity of that thing called 'gal',—a soul-less, tyrannical corporation if ever there was one—declared that the twelve-hour day was best for the workers—that a ten-or a eight-hour day would not be so "good" for them.

Regarding Cary's claim that the twelve-hour day was not injurious to the workers in the steel industry—and there are more than a million of them—the statement said:

"The testimony of competent investigators, including eminent engineering societies, is ignored, and the conclusion is put forth without supporting data by the Steel people, that the 12-hour day has not of itself been an injury to the employes, physicially, mentally or morally."

The statement then proceeded to scorch the Steel trusts and employers. It is good to see religion ond the churches on the side of the workers once in a while.

Talking about twelve-hour days has made me tired and lazy and I conclude by quoting a piece I came across the other day, entitled: "The Ninety and Nine."

THE NINETY AND NINE

There are ninety and nine that work and die.
In want and hunger and cold,
That we may revel in luxury
And be lapped in the silken fold,
And ninety and nine in their hovels bare.
And one in a palace of riches rare.

From the sweat of their brow the desert blooms
And the forest before them falls;
Their labor has builded humble homes
And cities with lofty halls.
And the one owns cities and houses and lands,
And the ninety and nine have empty hands.

But the night so dreary and dark and long
At last shall the morning bring,
And over the land the victor's song,
Of the ninety and nine shall ring,
And echo afar from zone to zone;
"Rejoice, for labor shall have it's own!"

WINNIPEG, June 27—Mrs. V.S. Mac Lachlan, secretary of the Women's Institute Branch, of the British Columbia provincial Department of Agriculture, in an interview the other day stated that possibly the most interesting feature of the work in her province at the present time was the co-operation between the British Columbia Products' Bureau, which is putting on a "Buy B.C. Campaign," and the Women's Institutes and the Department of Industries, which is under the finance department of the province. The British Columbia Product's Bureau is sending a speaker, under the auspices of the Women's Institutes, throughout British Columbia to interest the women where quality and prices are equal to give their preference in buying first to British Columbia products, whether of field or factory, their second preference to field or factory products from any part of Canada and their third to those products from any part of the British Empire.

In regard to the Oriental question of British Columbia Mrs. MacLachlan said: "The women of British Columbia are asking the women of Canade to stand united on this question. Every ninth baby born in British Columbia to-day is a Oriental. British Columbia may be characterized as the first line of defence and we are asking the women of Canada, through this federation, to send up reinforcements, especially along the line of urging their members in the Federal House to stand firm on this question."

Musical Treat

Music lovers of the city are promised an exceptional treat on Tuesday of next week when a Recital will be given by Miss Mews and Capt. J. H. Campbell, M.C., in aid of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides movements.

The Recital will be under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency the Governor, the Chief Scout, and Lady Allardyce, Island Commissioner for Newfoundland Girl Guides. It is only a few evenings since Miss Mews charmed a city audience with a musical treat, her glorious voice being heard to full advantage in a program of rare excellence and variety. Capt. Campbell is an old favorite. He has on many occasions given freely of his talents, and it has ever been a delight to hear him sing. With two such artists taking care of the program there can be little doubt that the Recital will prove a most successful one in every particular.

S. A. Congress

Officers' Councils were held yesterday at 10 a.m., 2 and 7 p.m., in the Citadel, Adelaide Street. The Commissioner spoke words of counsel and advice which were listened to with great attention by the officers. Col. and Mrs. Cloud, the new territorial leaders also gave several addresses which deeply impressed the audience.

At 5 p.m., the officers assembled at the S. A. College where they were entertained at luncheon by the leaders of the city corps. After the needs of the inner man had been supplied speeches were given by several officers representing the different branches of Army work, and all expressed their appreciation of the help and counsel received from the Commissioner since the opening of the Congress and extended a hearty welcome to Colonel and Mrs. Cloud.

The Commissioner thanked the speakers for their kind words of appreciation, and also thanked the ladies for the splendid repast provided.

Colonel Cloud also spoke briefly. The Commissioner and Colonel Morehen left by to-day's express enroute to Toronto.

Congress will be continued by Col. and Mrs. Cloud, who will conduct officers' councils to-day and Wednesday, finishing up with a life-saving demonstration at the No. 1. Citadel Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Football Under Difficulties

Despite a steady downpour of rain the Saints vs. C.L.B. game, scheduled for last evening, was played before a dozen enthusiasts who braved the storm to witness the clash. Never probably in the history of the game has such a match been played under such conditions. Pools of water covered the field, and it was impossible to do any shooting, and, as was to be expected, the match was far from interesting. Nevertheless, under the circumstances the teams did exceptionally well, the match resulting in a win for the Saints by a score of 1 to nil, Hopkins scoring the only goal, in the first period.

The players were drenched by rain which was at its worst between 7.30 and 8.30. The Feildians and B. I. S. are the contesting teams to-night.

The Senef Reports

The Coastal Department received the following message from Captain Barbor, of the S. S. Senef last evening:—

"Just arrived at Grady. All ice from Indian Tickle North. Moving slowly along shore. There is a good sign of fish from Cape Charles to Indian Tickle. Impossible to work lines satisfactorily owing to ice. Good hauls when they get traps out. About 30 schooners fishing from Battle Harbor to Indian Tickle. Holton reports loose ice in shore, open water outside. Weather fine."

There is still no news of the Watchful, but it is believed she has reached her destination and is prevented by wireless trouble from reporting her position.

New York Director Leaves

Mr. J. H. Ruffin, New York director of the Imperial Tobacco Co., (Nfld.) Ltd., who has been here in connection with the business of the Company, left by to-day's express, accompanied by Mr. T. V. Hartnett, who will go across country with him.

Mr. Ruffin, who is also connected with the British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd., was very favorably impressed with the splendid business being done by the local factory which has for some time been working at full capacity from 7 a.m. to 6.p.m.

Mr. Hartnett, the local manager, says he never saw business better, and his opinion is that there is plenty business in Newfoundland to-day for the man who goes after it in the right way.

Fortunes Won Are Sometimes Lost

Sudden wealth has fallen into the hands of the lucky winners of big Derby sweepstakes. We can imagine them to-day living on a transfigured world. One turn of fortune's wheel and they are at liberty to do the things they have only dreamt of doing.

But what happens to these favorites of fortune? They leap into fame, stand a moment envied by all, then they fade into obscurity with their Derby riches. Do they live happily ever after, rich and respected, or, with heads turned by too sudden good fortune, give up their work, gamble away their capital, and sink to poverty and an early grave? writes an observer in the London Daily Express.

Many of the stories told are certainly apocryphal.

About twelve years ago a friend of mine won the first prize in the Calcutta Sweep. After selling half his chance he still netted over £40,000, which he promptly invested in gilt-edged securities.

DOGGED BY LUCK.

A year later I was home on leave in time to see the Derby, and while havinging my hair cut the barber inquired wether, in the course of my travels, I had ever met Mr. X. the previous year's sweep winner:—"Drank himself to death in less than three months, he did."

This was said with such an air of finality that I had not the heart to contradict; but it was disinctly news. The evening before I had been dining with the man in question—very soberly—at his club in Pall Mall!

For some reason which will never be properly explained, railway men are exceptionally lucky in sweeps.

I could quote dozens of instances. One old friend, an official on the Indian State Railways, made a regular hobby of winning them. He began in a small way by getting a prize in the big Australian sweep on the Melbourne Cup. A large part of the money he set aside, and used to buy up tickets wholesale in every sweep or lottery he ever heard of.

THREE WIVES.

So far as I know he never won the big brize in the Calcutta Sweep, but once his horse ran third, and on several other occasions he drew starters which brought him in substantial sums.

Many years ago a prize in the Calcutta Sweep was won by three servants at the railway refreshment room at Kalka, on the way to Simla, who of their scanty earnings had scraped together enough to buy a ticket in partnership.

The Goanese butler returned to his anchestral home in the picturesque old Portuguese settlement, to live in great state of anclestry, a J.P. and officer of the local militia. The Mohammedan khitmatgar also retired from business and married three new wives to make up the full complement allowed by the Prophet.

The third, and perhaps the wisest, was a native Christian, who invested much of his minings in building a church, which the authorities agreed to keep up for him at the public expense. I do not know whether he is still living, but for many years, armed with a letter of thanks from the bishop and a subscribtion book, he used to meet all trains and gained a handsome income by collecting contributions.

NEW YORK, June 29—(Canadia Press)—So long as her husband only spanked her when she was reasonably protected by her clothes, Mrs. Julia Assowska didn't mind so much, but she thought it was going too far when he slapped her on a hot day when she was rather short on protective clothing. Accordingly she appeared to the law, which put her spouse on probation for six months.

OBITUARY

Yesterday morning, at his home on Bannerman Street, there entered into rest Mr. James Oakley, a well-known figure in the business and commercial life of the country. Born at Greenspond some sixty-six years ago he resided there for some years and then came to St. John's and entered the employ of P. Rogerson & Son, and afterwards took over the management of the Sailor's Home, and with his wife, ran it until it closed its doors and was absorbed by the present Seamen's Institute. He then returned to commercial life and took a position with Harvey & Co., Ltd., and managed the Rose Blanche business of that firm. He returned to St. John's a few years ago and worked as superintendent of Harvey's freight shed until about two months ago when illness laid him aside.

He hoped against hope for recovery but such was not to be, and yesterday morning he passed peacefully away. Mr Oakley was twice married, first to Miss Mary E. Caines, daughter of Joseph Caines, of Greens pond and second to Miss Jessie Payn, who survives him. He also leaves four daughters and two sons, the issue of his first marriage, and one son from his second marriage. The daughters are Mrs. W. K. Mercer and Mrs. Frank Warren of St. John's Mrs. J. E.Bouney of the United States and Mrs. Hayward Parsons of Cartwright, Labrador. and the sons, John in the United States and James and Winston at home. He is also survived by five sisters and three brothers, to all of whom The Advocate extends sympathy.

A CALL FOR CARPENTERS

(Halifax Citizen)

A telegram has been received from Hamilton, Bermuda, offering jobs to twenty carpenters at $4.50 per day of nine hours. The offer includes free transportation to and rom Halifax, and free board.

For the past three months or more, a large number of carpenters and other skilled workers in the building trades have been leaving Halifax, with the result that if building operations were to be resumed to any considerable extent, the contractors would find it difficult to secure skilled help, especially at the low wages being offered in some of the building trades.

Carpenters who desire to take advantage of this offer from Bermuda are asked to get in touch with Albert Lake, financial secretary of the Carpenter's Union, 20 Smith Street.

Junior Football League

The Junior Football League held a meeting on Saturday night. After some routine business had been disposed off it was decided to postpone the games on the next three Wednesday ecenings owing to the fact that on these evenings the Garden Parties in aid of C. of E. and Mount Cashel Orphanages and the Regatta will take place. The games scheduled for these nights will be played on the first available dates.

The Senior League has very generous in allowing the Junior the field whenever possible, with the result that up to date the schedule is much further advanced than anticipated.

The Junior League will play fives at Kilbride and C. of E. Orphanage Garden Parties on Wednesday.

Celebration at Pictou is Enthusiastic

PICTOU, July 17—Record crowds are attending the celebration of the landing of the ship Hector at Pictou one hundred and fifty years ago. Sailors are acting in the capacity of traffic cops, and keeping things moving nicely. Soldiers in gay kilts formed a body guard of honour to the Governor General and the immense crowd gave him a hearty welcome. A welcoming address was read by Major Floyd, while Warden John McKay, read an inscribed address extending the welcome of the County and expressing loyalty to the Governor and His Majesty the King. A brief reply was made by His Excellency. Two beautiful bouquets of flowers were presented to Lady Byng by Miss Genevieve Anderson and Miss Nancy Moore.

BRITISH S. LEAGUE IS IN SESSION

Nfld. Seconds Haig's Nomination.

GREETINGS SENT TO LOCAL VETS.

R. N. R. Interests To Be Looked After.

LONDON, July 18—The Biennial Conference of the British Empire Service League with representatives of the Organized Association from fourteen Dominions and Colonies in attendance was opened here yesterday by the Duke of Devonshire, the Secretary of State for the Colonies and presided over by Field Marshal Earl Haig. Colonel Nangle and Capt. G. Whitty, representing Newfoundland in re-electing Haig Grand President, Newfoundland seconded the motion. In the evening a banquet was given the delegates over which the Prince of Wales presided. This morning the delegates were received in audience by His Majesty the King, after which luncheon was tendered the delegates by Newfoundland under the chairmanship of Colonel Nangle. The toast to Newfoundland was proposed by the British Legion on behalf af the Mother Country. The sister Dominions are sending greetings to the War Veterans of Newfoundland. The luncheon was attended by a most representative gathering. This afternoon the Minister of Pensions outlined the policy of the British Government in connection with Imperial Sailors and Soldiers in the Dominions and gave the assurance that the problem presented by the Dominion delegates, would be given a sympathetic hearing. The Newfoundland Royal Naval Reserves pension problems will be adjusted.

Schooner Blake Was Dismasted

(N.S. Herald.)

The liquor laden schooner Blake, owned by Ernest Young, of North Sydney, formerly of Newfoundland, and commanded by Captain Legge, was towed into Halifax on Thursday minus masts, riggings and sales in a gale of wind fifty miles off Liscombe on Tuesday and having drifted landward in the rough of the sea for twenty-four hours. She was taken in tow by the steamer Wabana and towed to the mouth of Halifax harbor, where a French trawler inward bound took her over and took her in shortly after.

The Blake was proceeding to St. Pierre, and on Tuesday, sailing off the coast of Guysboro with all sails set under a not unusual stiff south southwest wind was, within a minute, demasted and derigged.

Captain Legge said that the first indication that they were in for trouble was the snapping of the jibstay and within a minute the main mast had gone overboard carrying everything with it.

ATLANTI CITY, July 17—International President, John L. Lewis, of the U.M.W.A. to-day notified the officers of District 26 at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia that the charter of the district had been revoked by him to be effective to-day for refusal of officers to call off the strike of the miners at that place. All officers and board members of the district are automatically deprived of their offices and a provisional district created to function under direct authority of the International Union. Silby Barrett of Glace Bay has been designated provisional President. Instructions will be issued acording to Mr. Lewis's announcement for all striking miners to return to work at once. All Unions continuing in defiance of these instructions will be summarily dealt with in conformity with the laws of the United Mine Workers.

MONTREAL, July 17—An appeal for financial assistance for the miners of Nova Scotia has been sent throughout the Dominion and in Montreal.

SYDNEY, N.S., July 17—A bolt was dropped from one of the rails after the Sydney-Louisburg express passed over it this morning near the place where rails were moved yesterday. The Company's officials do not regard it as an accident. The power line from Waterford to Glace Bay was short circuited through the night and six or seven hours were required to repair it. The Dominion Coal Co. steamer Daghild is loading at the International pier, while two others are waiting in the stream. Ernest Curtis, representative of the Steel Workers International Organization criticized Premier Armstrong's action in giving out a statement to the press in spite of his agreement to do otherwise.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Out of the Depths

"Ten thousand dollars? How many pounds—eh? A man who has not had more than an odd greenback in his pocket for so long has to do an arithmetic sum every time thousands are under discussion."

"I need, roughly speaking, about three thousand pounds," said Jean.

And I need thirty! But as things are looking now I'm likely to go on needing it to eternity."

"Oh, surely not. The West is more hopeful. Fortunes are made there—clean fortunes—by men who deserve them. Made in the good old way, too—by the sweat of the brow. You'll do it, Mr. Rankine, and perhaps—who knows?—you won't be the worse for your New York experiences."

"There is only one thing in my New York experience that I don't want to bury, and that's the memory of your kindness," said Rankine with a quick note of fire in his voice.

The color rose swift and warm to Jean Dempster's face, and she rose hurriedly and said she wondered what was happening to the coffee.

"Stuff and nonsense! What did I do? she asked presently when she recovered herself. "Why, just nothing! You wouldn't have taken even a dime from me, and you've made me walk many a time because you hadn't the money for car fare and could not endure my paying for it. Not that I minded. I'm a good walker. But I knew just how you felt about it. I've had to go without meat too, sometimes when we were out—just for the same reason."

The Scotticism seemed to warm his heart and he smiled again. Hope had come back to him and the horrors of the last months—which would never fade from his memory, but would colour his whole future attitude towards life—were already growing a little dim.

"It didn't do you any harm, judging from appearances," he said, for never had Jean Dempster loked more womanly and attractive. "As for me—one good thing New York has taught me, and that is how little food a man actually needs for the day's work."

"Now what about to-morrow night? Are you really going off by the train as you say?

"Yes, it leaves the Central exactly at midnight."

Her face beam a little wistful as she stood behind the cheerful little coffee machine, waiting for the fragrant beverage to bubble up.

"I've got two tickets for the new play at the Manhattan. Couldn't we go and have a meal together somewhere and go there for a kind of last ploy?"

"I've no clothes," said Rankine heavily, "except what I stand up in; and they're not fit for the company of a lady at a place of entertainment."

"That's for me to judge. They are stalls," she added as she walked to te bureau drawer to get them out. "I only got them to-day from a man who can't use them. But I can call at the theatre to-morrow and exchange them for seats in a cheaper part of the house where evening dress is optional. There will be a good deal of paper in the house; they'll be only too ready to make the exchange I don't doubt."

"I'd like to come, dear woman; and—yes—I will—provided you let me pay for 'the meat,' " he added with a whimsical note in his voice. "I can do that if you will be content with a moderate hostelry, without encroaching on Fordyce's charity."

"Don't call it that," she said. "It hurts. Besides, it isn't charity. You gave him a certain valuable information, which, unlike some of them, he appeared glad to get, though it was unpalatable. He wants to pay for that and he's entitled to pay for it."

"You would have made a grand advocate and a special pleader, my dear; and if ever things get evened up, you will be at the head of the profession. About Fordyce, Miss Dempster— he doesn't look as you would expect a man to look who can count his money in millions."

"None of them do—they've got to pay somehow," she answered swiftly. Well, is it arranged about tomorrow night? Where shall we meet, and when?"

They spent some little time discussing the plans for their little outing, and when it was all arranged and Rankine said he must go, as he stood up she put one straight question to him.

"Mr. Rankine, all this time your home letters have been coming here, and I've sent them faithfully to the address you gave me. They think you are still here, of course. How much have you told them?"

"Nothing," he answered in a fierce undertone. "And it's the business of my life to see that they never do know anything. So if—by any extraordinary chance you should be put in the witness box you'll be a witness for the defence—won't you?"

"Defence of what? You haven't done anything but what's fine and noble since you've been here. You need no defender—"

"But you'll keep it dark? It would—it would—kill them—"

And with that he went away.

All their arrangements held good next day. Jean called at the theatre at the lunch hour, and had no difficulty in making the desired exchange; and at seven they met in a little Broadway restaurant of modest dimensions with which Jean was familiar, and over their meal they discussed many things but chiefly Rankine's prospects.

In a glass of very modest Burgundy they drank success to Hunter's Quay and to Stair.

When the curtain rose they were in their seats.

In the first scene Graham Madox was in his chambers at Lincoln's Inn late at night, knitting his brows over an anonymous letter calculated to wound him in his dearest part.

Rankine, so long absent from every form of amusement, felt himself oddly stirred at sight of a man of his own class evidently in the grip og some strong mental emotion. Not a work was spoken on the stage, yet somehow so electric and wonderful was the personality of the great actor that the air seemed already charged with invisible forces.

Then, quite suddenly, the door at the side of the room opened and a woman entered, clad in evening dress though she wore a hat and was enveloped in a voluminous cloak of black velvet, whose fine lines swept from her figure in indescribable grace.

Jean, a keen playgoer, was intent with her opera glasses, studying the woman's beautiful face, for, in common with many others, her curiosity and interest had been whetted both by paragraphs and pictures of the new company coming to storm New York.

Suddenly she heard a strange, muffled sound by her side—"Good God!"

When she loked aroung her companion had arisen, and she could just behold the shadowy outline of his tall figure making its way, amid sundry growls and protests, along the crowded line of the circle where they sat.

It was her last sight of Alan Rankine for many a long day.

CHAPTER XXV.

Dead Sea Fruit

From her seat in a box, safely behind a curtain of blue plush, Judith Rankine was a witness to Carlotta's second triumph, and her conquest of New York hearts. She was that rare product, an actress wholly natural and unspoiled, and the discerning were quick to discover and acknowledge her womanliness and charm and sincerity. The depth of purpose of which her heart was full somehow communicated itself to her impersonation of the wronged but forgiving woman, and her grip of the audience, from the first to last, was consummate.

Unconscious of herself, she was fully conscious of the greatness of her art, and the belief that she was in the same city with the man who had first awakened all the springs of her being, and undoubtedly brought her powers into play, helped to give fresh and passionate life to her presentment.

Judy in her corner, while not withholding her meed of appreciation and affection for the woman whom these months of comradeship—almost of kinship—had taught her to love, was also fully conscious of a singular depression, even of a strange shrinking from the very gifts that set Carlotta apart.

Carlotta was the cynosure of all eyes. Upon her utterances one of the most brilliant audiences New York had ever seen, hung breathless.

But where was Alan? Some inner witness of the spirit assured Judy that things were not well with him, and nothing surprised her more than her own strange feeling of lassitude, of reluctance, even, to seek him out and learn the full truth.

They had only been a few hours in the city, and these had been whirling hours in which there had been scarcely space or opportunity for aught but arrangements for the theatre. Realizing that for the moment everything must be subordinate to that, Judy had quietly stood aside, helping and encouraging where she could, aware that a few hours more or less could not make any possible difference to them.

She was neither a wet blanket nor a grumbler, and she believed that Carlotta was not less anxious and concerned than herself—nay, she knew, for she had seen her in the hours of abandon ad anxiety, and had glimpsed the hunger of her heart.

FIGHT ON TO STOP MOVIES BEING SHOWN

SHELBY, Mont., July 6.—Shelby now is staging a fight for the movies of the fifteen-rounds, which Tommy Gibbons went with Jack Dempsey.

Government agents are playing hide and seek with the movie men who have the pictures in their possession, fearing an attempt will be made to "smuggle" them into another state contrary to the law against interstate transportation of fight films.

Four secret service men are on the trail of the movie operators, but they could not prevent the disappearance of the films.

It is reported several copies left here in a mysterious automobile which set out for the Canadian border lately.

It is presumed that the Government agents have blockaded the roads. They are expected to seize the films if an atempt is made to smuggle them.

The movies now seem to be the sole hope of the losers in the financial fiasco which developed in Shelby's effort to stage a world championship battle. It is believed their increased value—as a result of Gibbons' staying fifteen rounds with the champion—may help he promoters to pull out of the mire.

Notes From Squid Tickle

(To the Editor)

Dear Sir,—As I wish to make a few notes in your widely circulated paper, the Advocate, please grant me a little space, as a Union man, and a constant reader, I appreciate your work very much.

The good old summer months have rolled around once more, a time of the year when everybody is looking forward for some means to provide for their family the coming winter, whether on land or sea; which, we trust will not be withheld from us. When the Humber gets in swing it will mean prosperity to the country, but all must have patience, as the world was not made in one day; neither will the Humber be in full swing in one month.

Everybody seems to regret the loss of our schoolteacher and lay-reader, Mr. C. Tucker, as he took his leave on Sunday for St. Philips, his home, to spend his holidays. He had been with us all the winter, and has performed his work well, with both the day school and church reading, and I have the public of the place with me in saying that we could not have a better teacher than Mr. Tucker, as he was liked by the children, and will be greatly missed by young and old. Quite a crowd assembled on Mr. Oldford's wharf on Sunday evening to bid adieu while leaving by motor for Alexander Bay, to go by train, which showed the esteem in which he was held by the people, and if it is his wish to take up his work again with us we trust Dr. Blackall will grant him that privilege. The writer wishes him the best of holidays.

Mr. Owen Vivian and Miss Lily Oldford, both of this place, were united in the holy bonds of Matrimony on June 2nd in the school chapel of Squid Tickle by the Rev. C. H. Humphries. It is understood they will make Grand Falls their future home shortly. We wish them every success upon their new venture.

Busy times are in store for most all of us, as the caplin have paid us a visit and every one seems to welcome them, as without them it would mean poor crops.

We see by the Advocate that congratulations are still pouring in from every nook and corner of Newfoundland to Sir W. F. Coaker upon the honour bestowed upon him by His Majesty the King, you are worthy of such honour, and may you live many years to enjoy it is the wish of the writer to Sir W. F. Coaker, K.B.E.

Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor.

EIGHT SEAMEN DIE FROM EXPOSURE IN OPEN BOAT

The last drop of water had been drunk and the last biscuit eaten when the second lifeboat of the British steamship Trevessa arrived at Port Louis, Island of Mauritius, with sixteen survivors. Twenty-four men got away in this lifeboat from the Trevessa just before she sank a month ago in the Ihdian Ocean, but eight of them succumbed to the hardships they were forced to endure in the small open boat.

Chief Officer Smith told of the terrible sufferings the men went thru'. He said that of the eight men who died four began drinking sea water when they could no longer withstand their thirst. They collapsed from exhaustion and the last of them died in sight of land.

The Daily ration was one biscuit for each man and a few drops of water. They added to their original meagre water supply by catching rain water. When they landed, the survivors, gaunt and some of them with long beards, sank to their knees and thanked God for their deliverance. Then their first request was for water. All of them had badly swollen feet, owing to constant immersion in salt water.

It was four o'clock in the morning when fishermen encountered the second boat in a perilous position. They took it in tow, reaching shore five hours later. The crew were so weak that they had to be disembarked on stretchers and conveyed by motor to the nearest hospital.

The four men who drank sea water and died were Indians, four Britons shortly after succumbing to heart failure. On Indian died within a few hours of sighting land.

The difficulties were accentuated by the lack of a compass, which was out of action, and also by a southeast trade wind which was erratic in direction and velocity, sometimes compelling the reefing of a small sail. Fortunately there was a sextant aboard but it was useless during the last few days when the weather was roughest, preventing them from making for Rodriguez. Smith describes his comrades' behaviour as 'simply excellent.' The survivors are rapidly recovering.

Running on Reef.

It was to the Government steamer Secunder, which calls at Rodriguez five times annually with supplies, that fell the distinction of saving from destruction on the reefs the survivors of the Trevessa who arrived at Rodriguez Island in No. 1 boat with Capt. Foster. Owing to the plague in Mauritius, the Secunder, with passengers on board, had been lying in quarantine for five days in the outer anchorage at Port Louis. The Secunder was due to leave June 18, when a suspected case of the plague on board caused a delay of 2 hours. The vessel arrived here on June 21, and on the evening of June 26th the loading was practically completed. The following day the sun was obscured by heavy clouds, and the sea was boisterous. About 7.30 in the evening one of the two policemen on duty on board sighted a lug sailed craft astern of the ship making straight for the dangerous reefs a hundred yards away. Constable Gretry hailed the strange craft, and a voice replied: "Shipwrecked; twenty-three days at sea."

Constable Gretry, another man and three local fishermen immediately jumped into the Government boat lying alongside, shouting meanwhile to the occupants of the strange boat to let down the sail, as it was heading for the reefs. They quickly made their way to Foster's boat, and on boarding it asked for two men to help row the Government boat back to the Secunder. On taking the Trevessa's boat in tow they found that the two men who came forward were too weak to give them any help. One of the fishermen, named Roussety, climbed into the boat and with astonishing strength poled her into a pass leading to a jetty, while the Government boat rowed back to the Secunder. Foster and the men landed at the jetty and were taken to the police station in a state of collapse. First aid had to be rendered to the wireless operator, and three of the crew were sent to the hospital in an almost unconscious condition.

The captain and three officers on board were taken to a residence and the others were lodged in an empty house, which was turned into a hospital. All the survivors have since left by the warship Colombo for Mauritius and are completely recovered. Thanksgiving services were held before their departure.

Had it not been for the providential delay of the Secunder at Port Louis, and had Constable Gretry not seen the boat from the Secunder, the survivors would have been driven into dangerous reefs, where owing to their weakened condition, all would have perished. A local fisherman was drowned on the same reefs only three days before and his body has not yet been found.

Owe Lives to Captain

In an interview with Captain Cecil Foster, commander of the S. S. Trevessa, which sank in the Indian ocean on June 3, the Reuter correspondent obtained further details of the ill-fated vessel, which constitute one of the most wonderful stories for generations of the undaunted spirit of British sailors, both officers and men.

Captain Foster at the outset explained that he was unable to supply a detailed narrative of the loss of the vessel owing to difficulty in deciphering his log, which was naturally kept in the roughest and readiest fashion. The pages of the log were soaked with salt water, which blurred the writing.

He said that he lost much time during the first five days in keeping company with the chief officer's boat, sailing ahead of it at night and waiting for it during the day. Although the second boat was under full sail the captain's boat was under reefed sail.

"Besides quenching our thirst in rain water," he said, "we bathed in salt water, wore wet clothes and sucked buttons and pieces of coal. We also sucked the salt water through our nostrils and kept our heads wet."

After recounting the many mishaps to the boat, such as the mainmast being carried away, and the breaking of the tiller, the captain said:

Fed on Fish Spawn.

"We tried to feed the crew on the fish spawn which was floating on the sea during the calms, but it was too salty to use. We were all very sore owing to the cramped position in which we had to sit day and night. Not one of us was able to stretch our legs because the boat was so crowded.

"When we landed here we found we had nearly lost the use of our legs. Our feet were swollen from lack of blood circulation, otherwise most of us were comparatively well. We had enough water rations to last another week with care. I put plenty of cigarettes, tobacco and matches in the boats before deserting the ship, and these helped considerably to keep up the spirits of the crew. We had 1,000 cigarettes and two pounds of tobacco left when we reached this island."

The captain mentioned that one of the ship's cats, a beautiful black Persian, of which he was very fond, was put in his boat with four newly-born kittens, when they were leaving his vessel, but it jumped back on to the Trevessa and went to the bottom of the ocean.

Although most of the crew of Captain Foster's boat were in a state of collapse, they had enough strength left to cheer when they sighted land. Their undaunted spirit was manifested in many minor incidents. Able Seaman Scully, between 60 and 70 years of age, refused to lie down when others of the crew were in need of rest and sleep. He sang songs and "spun yarns" to his comrades when they were very despondent, cheering them and keeping up their spirits. Another able-bodied seaman, when the meagre rations were being served out, sang: "I'd Like to Have Some Ham and Eggs, Please."

The crew of the Trevessa are unanimous in attributing their safety to the tact, cheerfulness and strictness of Captain Foster and his officers. They declare that the steering of the crowded open boat to a previously decided pin point on the ocean 1,800 miles away, with only two sextants and a wrist watch on board, was an act of seamanship which calls for the admiration of the world.

Married at Sydney

The marriage of Miss Eva Parsons, of Rose Blanche, Newfoundland and Mr. E. S. Andrews, of North Sydney, was solemnized at the Baptist church on Thursday evening. The Rev. Gordon Vincent performed the ceremony. The couple were attended by Mrs. Robert Reid and Mr. Harold Andrews. After the ceremony a wedding supper was served to the immediate relatives and friends.—N.S. Herald.

NEW YORK, June 30—(Canadian Press)—Charles Johnson returned home recently and found his family in tears over a report that he had been drowned in the East Rockaway Canal. Hastening to his office he was further chagrined to discover another man in his place.

NECESSITY FOR UNITED EFFORT

Protect The Producers and "Serve The Country"

Business Progress depends upon unity. Let all join together so that each individual may get the benefit of the experience of others.

This is the business doctrine of the future as stated by Mr. H. E. MacHold, Speaker of the Assembly of the New York State, at a business men's luncheon in New York recently.

There is no doubt that therein lies a lesson for the business men of this country, who are subjected to the same necessity of getting together for the general benefit.

The real interests of Newfoundland and the main majority of its producers are as much dependent on such a reasonable business conduct as is any country under the sun.

We have been carried along, largely, by the fishermen and the fisheries. The fishermen and their dependents are the large majority of the population. They have subsisted, have clothed themselves, and have striven to educate their children to some extent, and are looking to their future requirements, from what they can gather from the bosom of the deep.

The wherewithal to do this has been given them by the merchants in exchange for their fish; and the amount paid the fishermen has depended on what the merchants chose to give the fishermen from the proceeds of the foreign marketing of the staple product. The marketing system as admitted by most of our prominent fish exporters, and known to the whole country, has been conducted on lines which are opposed to sound business reason and subjected to the merciless results of individual business competition. The system has been in direct contravention to the ideals of that business unity, upon which business progress logically depends.

Every year, as soon as the new fish is available, the rush to market starts and the attempt is so made that the markets are glutted by huge quantities of fish that should be spread over a period of months, and regularly controlled in its exportation according as the markets required it. That is the difference between senseless individual competition and the methods that could be evolved if our exporters worked together in business unity.

Give the country a chance; give the fishermen a chance. Place our exportation business on a better business basis; and don't victimize the producers by adherence to condemnable business conduct.

That should be the object of our business men at the present time, if they want to serve the country and secure the maximum of business success, and bring about a reapproachment between themselves and the fishermen.

The worn-out methods of the past were inadequate to our fathers. They are doubly inadequate, when the costs of living weighs almost unbearably upon us.

This year the fishery is thus far failing. Less people are catching fish and less fish will be caught by the average man. Will the same state of affairs continue, or will our exporters see the justice of giving the men a chance by getting themselves together in business harmony and understanding?

The modern idea should be to unite. Then the whole country will profit and everybody will benefit from the experience of others.

LEWIS'S LATEST ACTION

The President of the International Mine Workers' Association, Mr. John L. Lewis, has taken still stronger action regarding the Sydney strike situation.

When Mr. Lewis telegraphed the Sydney local unions that their strike was a violation of the principles of the U. M. W. A. he was endangering himself on the good opinion of a very large wing of the organization of which he is the head.

The local unions in Sydney by their actions have defied Mr. Lewis in preferment to McLachlan and Livingstone, both of whom are pending trial for alleged utterances against the forces of the State. They have ignored the advices of the highest authority and heeded the irresponsible exhortations of local heads.

By their action, Pres. Lewis has been confronted with a most critical problem. With his authority defied, his position has been imperilled. He has shown he was endangering himself to be the man for the situation, however, by his latest notification to the officers of District 26 at Glace Bay, which is to the effect that the District Charter is revoked, and all local officers and heads dismissed, as a consequence.

Under the new and provisional authority that will be under the direct control of the international union, the strikers will be called upon to return to work.

Will the strikers defy Pres. Lewis and stand by the dismissed officials?

Will they defy Pres. Lewis and imperil their relations with the International Union?

IS THIS LIMITATION ?

Viscount Grey, in the House of Lords a few days ago, made the first reference to Japan as the power against whom the Singapore naval base and dock were being constructed. In asserting that it was necessary for England to build up its air force, he said that nevertheless this policy was initiating a race in armaments which would lead to the next war, from which European civilization would not recover.

In the east, he said, would be the real war, in which the United States and the British Empire would be on the same side. It was significant of the great tension existing, due to the difference over reparations, that there was more open talk of the danger of war in the Upper House than had been heard for many days.

The matter of the new naval base at Singapore was introduced in the debate by Lord Haldane, who asked pointedly whether it was aimed at Japan or the United States. Lord Grey then, in a remarkable utterance, named Japan. The debate was occasioned by Lord Wimborne asking more expenditure on the air force than on the navy, and by Lord Gorrell asking the Government to take steps to end the competition in armaments.

Lord Grey argued that the Government had no choice but to increase the air force. He said:

"Having regard for our vulnerability to attack from the air, it is absolutely necessary we should have adequate means of defense. But, essential as this expedition is, it is the beginning of a new competition in armament which will inevitably lead to another war, worse than the last, and from which European civilization will not recover.

Lord Grey urged the Government to take all possible steps for the international limitation of armaments, which can be brought about, he said, only through the League of Nations.

EMBARGO STIRS U.S.A.

The threatened embargo on the export of pulpwood by Canada to the United States is causing no little anxiety amongst paper interests in the latter country.

Recently a number of the leading American paper manufacturers met in New York and formed a committee for the protection of the paper industry in the United States which is threatened should the Canadian embargo go into effect.

A cable despatch having reference to this move of the paper-makers says:

"The new organization will not confine its membership to the American Paper and Pulp Association, but will include nearly all the big companies, both organized and unorganized. Manufacturers already enrolled represent more than half of the total productive capacity of the country, it is said.

"Commenting on the proposed Canadian embargo, Chairman Stokes said: "If made effective, it will involve the entire paper and printing industry in the United States. The price of pulpwood would at once begin to rise toward war time levels and more than a million cords of wood a year would be added to the drain on our own fast diminishing pulpwood resources.

"The paper and printing industries, every branch of which would be affected, have a total product valued at three billion dollars a year and employ more than half a million wage earners."

OBITUARY

Deer Island, B.B.,
May 5th, 1923.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your paper to record the death of my dear father, Robert Glover, who departed this life on April 20th. He had reached the age of 75 years. As he was only sick a few days, death came almost suddenly to us, and we did not think that his end was so near. But God in His wise providence saw fit to take him, and we would be submissive to His will, and say His will be done. Since youth he has always tried to follow his Master.

We can say he will be missed, because his seat is empty.

No more on earth we will hear his voice, but we rejoice to know that he has left the church militant and joined the church triumphant. And there he shall meet the many friends who travelled with him here, and long ago reached that blissful shore and best of all His Saviour was waiting to welcome him into the city where there is no more sorrow, no more sin, where all is peace and joy, and he shall dwell with Jesus evermore. He was laid to rest on Sunday, April 22nd, in the Methodist Cemetery. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. C. L. Mitchell, took his text from Ezekiel, 7 chap., 3rd verse. He leaves to mourn three sons and three daughters, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn for him.

Thou hast left us dearest father,
Left us for that land so fair,
Gone at last to dwell with Jesus,
For we know that thou art there.

Yes we loved our darling father,
Ah but Jesus loved him best,
And we know our dearest loved one
Has obtained a glorious rest.

A LOVING DAUGHTER.

Murder and Torture Are Charged by Ship Master

MANILA, July 17—Sensaional charges of cold blooded murder and torture of Moros on Island of Basilan by members of the Philippine constabulary stationed there have been laid before Governor General Leonard Wood by Captain Dolpan, of the Inter-Island steamer Midget. The Governor has ordered a sweeping investigation.

MANILA, July 17—A climax in the political war between Governor General Leonard Wood and Filipino officials came to-day when the Cabinet and Council of State tendered their resignations in a body and they were accepted.

Customs Cruiser Boards Schooner—Cargo For Pictou Festival.

QUEBEC, July 12.—The Scottish celebration in honor of pioneers of the land of the heather in Canada, to commence in Pictou, N.S., July 15, will have to be held minus the 'Scotch' the shipload of bottled delegates, comprising some 800 cases valued at about $40,000, having been diverted by one of the biggest seizures made in the waters of the Dominion. The seizure was made when the liquor craft, the W. C. Kennedy was noticed off schooner, was endeavoring to run her cargo ashore.

The patrol ship Margaret was doing regular duty in the Straits, when he W. C. Kennedy was noticed off Pictou Harbor, acting in a suspicious manner. Captain La Couvee immediately ordered a search party to board the schooner and, after examining the papers, found her holds loaded to the hatches with whiskey. The schooner was taken to Pictou, and the illicit cargo ransferred to the Margaret, after which the schooner was subjected to a heavy fine and released by the customs cruiser.

The W. C. Kennedy's clearance papers showed her destination as being Nassau, Bahama Islands, but this it is alleged, was nothing but a blind, for, after leaving port, she proceeded to St. Pierre, Miquelon, and loaded her wet cargo, returning to the Nova Scotian coast to await a favorable opportunity of disposing of it.

OBITUARY

Catalina,
June 18th, 1923.

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Please grant me space in your paper, the Evening Advocate, to record the death of my dear brother Moshack Hart, who passed away on June 12h. He was 42 years of age and leaves to mourn his sad loss a wife, 5 young sons and one daughter, a mother now residing at Sydney, C. B., five sisters and three brothers, and many friends. He was a staunch member of the F. P. U. He was laid to rest on the 14th inst. in the C. of E. Cemetery at Brooklyn, B.B., by the Revd. George Hall.

I wish here to thank all the kind friends most heartily who came and waited on my dear brother in his sick days. Also the brethren of the F.P.U who took charge of the funeral matters, all of which was well done. I also extend my thanks to Miss Hutchings, the Church of England teacher at Brooklyn, for closing her school and presiding at the organ during the burial service, and for rendering the Dead March In Saul as the body left the church. I also am grateful to the many kind ladies who sent wreathes to place on his casket.

Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor.
I remain,

Yours very truly,

RANDOLPH HART.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY RANKS THIRD IN CANADA

Analysis of its Progress Issued by A. E. Ames & Co.

Nowhere else in the world are there such ideal conditions, on such a splendid scale, for a foundation of a great and enduring industry, says A. E. Ames & Co., in a pamphlet on the pulp and paper industry in Canada. Capital invested in the pulp and paper industry towers over every other manufacturing industry in Canada. The capital invested in 1919 was over $347,000,000. This had increased to over $379,000,000 at the end of 1922. The next industry, that of log products, had an invested capital of $199,000,000 in 1919. Next came the manufacture of agricultural implements with a capital investment of $101,000,000 in the same year. The only industry to exceed the pulp and paper industry in the matter of capital invested was that of electric light and power which, however, is not usually classed as a strictly manufacturing industry.

In the value of annual production, according to comparative figures for the year 1920, the last available, there were only four manufacturing industries with annual production exceeding $200,000,000. These were as follows:

Packing industry with a production of $240,000,000.

Milling industry with a production of $239,000,000.

Pulp and paper industry with a production of $236,000,000.

Log products industry with a production of $207,000,000.

In the next industry the value of the products was $126,000,000.

In outlining the solid foundation on which the industry rests, the pamphlet says it has an abundance of raw materials, adding that while the arable land of the Dominion is estimaed at 350,000,000 acres, it is estimated that no less than 600,000,000 acres of the total land area of the Dominion is covered by forest growth of which 250,000,000 acres is of merchantable size. The balance is of younger stands of timber suitable for pulpwood, etc. The total pulpwood resources are estimated at present at 1,250,000,000 cords without taking into account future benefits of regrowth or reforestation. The rate of regrowth has been estimated a from 2 per cent. to 3 per cent. per annum under proper scientific supervision.

The present consumption of pulpwood from Canadian forests including that used for Canadian mills and that exported for use in United States mills is approximately 4,000,000 cords per annum.

Natural Timber Reserves.

By the very physical character of vast sections of Canada, nature has set aside areas which she has unfitted for agriculture and which, to be of economic value, must be permanently devoted to the development of forests, the conservation or water powers and the production of mineral wealth.

Of Canada's total area of over 3,700,000 square miles, it is estimated that 2,000,000 square miles is of the broken character such as is familiar in Northern Ontario and Quebec. This broken area stretches from Labrador through Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan and northward to the Arctic. This, by its broken, rocky nature, is fundamentally unsuited for agriculture, and that portion lying within the timber zone constitutes a great area which nature has seemingly decreed shall be permanently devoted to supplying our needs in forest areas we shall, at the same time, conserve the abundant water power resource to be found in the numerous lakes and rivers of this northern area. In addition to this reserve there is the vast area of the Pacific coast and important areas in the Maritime provinces in the East.

Because of the fact that coal in Canada occurs either at the Pacific or Atlantic coast or in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the industrial structure in Canada and particularly as related to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, rests, to an unusual degree, on the utilization of water-power. Fortunately, these water-powers are abundant and are well distributed throughout the Dominion an what is perhaps more important, they occur in greater abundance where coal is lacking.

Canada's water-power resources have by no means been fully estimated. It has, however, been carefully calculated that Canada has, at least, 18,255,316 h.p. is in the province of Ontario. Canada ranks second to the United States only in the total water-power available. In respect to present development Canada ranks second to Norway only, and had in 1922 an installation of 315 h.p. per 1,000 of population.

THE WATCHFUL REPORTED

Reached Stag Bay on June 22nd—No Ice North of Stag Bay

Last evening, Mr. James Foley, manager of the Coastal Deptrtment, received a wireless from Capt. Bragg of the Watchful, stating that the ship arrived at Stag Bay on June 22nd.

The message further states that there is no ice north of Stag Bay.

The message came via Holton and Fogo.

Mr. H. W. LeMessurier also received a wireless saying the ship had reached her destination. There was considerable uneasiness felt by relatives of those on board the steamer, owing to the delay in receiving news from the ship and all will be pleased to know that she is safe in harbor.

The Watchful carried down the special police and customs officials who will be stationed at Stag Bay while the gold claims are being worked.

BAND CONCERTS

The C.C.C. band held its first concert in Bannerman Park last evening, and a large gathering of people enjoyed the excellent program rendered.

The C. L. B. band had arranged to hold a concert at Quidi Vidi, but owing to the threatening weather it was postponed until a later date.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND GARDEN PARTY THIS AFTERNOON

The annual Garden Party in aid of the C. of E. Orphanage takes place at the Orphanage grounds this afternoon. The inclement weather during the last two evenings greatly interfered with the arrangements, but last night a large number of willing workers were on the grounds interesting. The football matches ed.

The C. L. B. is in charge of the program, which promises to be very interesting. The fotball matches have been arranged as follows:—

Seniors—Star vs. Feildians; C. L. I. vs. Guards.

Juniors—Gaelic League vs. Scouts; Holy Cross vs. Wesley.

The Mount Cashel and C. L. B. bands will be in attendance. The various stalls will be well supplied and the most delicious teas will be served.

As the Orphanage is badly in need of funds owing to the Garden Party receipts last year being very short, it is hoped there will be a large attendance and that the weather man will be more generous.

You will love to wash and the children will love to lather up in this delightful creamy-white Ivory soap. It is real honest value. No soap is purer or better than Ivory than why should you pay more. At all Union Stores.

When you once use Ivory toilet soap you will wonder why you did not get to using it before for Ivory gives perfect soap satisfaction at little cost. Ivory is the purest soap and gives best value. At all Union Stores now.

Kilbride Garden Party

Extensive preparations have been made to accomodate the large gathering who will assemble at Kilbride this afternoon to take part in the annual Garden Party.

The pony faces promise to be very exciting whilst the football fives and other side attractions will complete a very interesting program.

The C. C. C. band will furnish the music in their own good style.

We understand that a special train will leave for the grounds at 3 p.m. All that is needed, therefore, is a fine day to insure success.

S. A. Congress

Yesterday morning's session was conducted by Commissioner Sowton, who gave his final charge to the officers.

The Commissioner's visit this year has been one of short duration, but his words have been a means of blessing, and inspiration to all who have been privileged to hear them.

They left by yesterday's express enroute to his headquarters at Toronto. A large gathering of Salvationists were at the station to wish the Commissioner and the Colonel God speed, and many wishes were expressed that they might soon find it possible to pay another visit.

Colonel Cloud, the new territorial commander met the officers in council this afternoon and night. His fiery eloquence as he graphically described the difficulties of the average officer and how they can be overcome, was a great inspiration to those present. The Colonel has an attractive personality and a keen sense of humor which makes his talks most interesting.

His illustrations are mostly drawn from Biblical characters and incidents which he describes in everyday language. Both the Colonel and his wife are fine singers and the work of the Army in Newfoundland will undoubtedly make rapid progress under their leadership.

Taxi Drivers Protest To Council Against New Regulations

A special meeting of the Municipal Council was held yesterday afternoon to meet deputations from the Taxi Drivers and Cabmen with a view to hearing their objections to the Regulations recently published.

A largely-signed petition was tabled, setting forth several reasons why the Regulations were not satisfactory to the Taxi-drivers and the public generally, and asking that same be rescinded.

Messrs. Pelley (on behalf of the East End Stand) Kane and Bishop (West End Stand) and Miller (Central Stand) explained the views of the various taxi-drivers and stated that the transfer of the stands to Duckworth Street had seriously injured their business. They asked if matters could be arranged so that they would be again permitted to park their cars on Water Street at the same places as heretofore, i.e., opposite the Post Office, Court House, and fronting the G.W.V.A. Building, Telegram Office, etc.

A deputation from the Cabmen, (consisting of Messrs. Neville and Hickey (West End and Lawlor and Dunne (of the Central) was present, and these gentlemen in turn put their case before the Council. The representatives of the West End Stand complained that in their present position off Water Street their business had been considerably affected, and further that the stand was not large enough to accommodate the number of cabs. They suggested that some be permitted to stand in front of the Post Office as formerly. Messrs. Lawlor and Dunne on behalf of the Central men stated they were quite satisfied with the place allotted to them, provided the space in front of the Court House is kept open, as defined in the Regulations, and neither cabs or motors be permitted to park there.

The Mayor informed the Deputations that the protest made by them would be given consideration, and the decision of the Council made known to them as soon as possible; but in the meantime the opinion of the Inspector General is to be obtained as regards traffic conditions on Water Street.

Fishery Reports

The following fishery reports have been received by the Board of Trade.

Greenly Island to Forteau—Mr. J. Butt reports for the week ending July 7th that 1000 quintals have been landed to date. Only three traps are operating and 130 dories and skiffs and 60 boats are engaged. The fishery prospects are fair, with plenty caplin. The weather has been very cold, and the prevalence of scattered ice has interfered with trapping.

Straits of Bell Lsle to Red Bay—Mr. F. H. Hennessey reports that only one trap has been put out up to July 7th. The fishery prospects are not good, the weather being cold and foggy with lots of large icebergs about, making it bad for trapping.

Change Islands to Hare Bay—Subcollector A. J. Hoffe states that to July 13th, 700 quintals had been landed in that section, with 100 qtls. for the week. About 50 traps and 80 skiffs are operating. The prospects are not bright. A few trawls are getting from 1 to 2 quintals a day but on the whole the fishery is very poor.

Low Point to Bryant's Cove—700 qtls. have been landed up to July 13, for 8 traps and 15 boats. Bait is plentiful and fish is scarce.

Carbonear to Crocker's Cove—145 quintals have been landed to date for 10 traps and one boat, with 100 qtls. for last week.

There was considerable fish going on the local grounds yesterday and both traps and hook and lines did well

From The Masthead

By The Lookout

Goodness knows I'm in sympathy with the schools and colleges of this city: I've always had a good word for them and always defended them where I've heard them attacked.

Perhaps, therefore, it is because I admire them so much and respect their mission so deeply that I attack them today on a certain point. It is constructive criticism, however, and not merely destructive.

** *** **

I was talking to a certain occulist—an eye specialist—in the city some time ago. He told me that he had made to the principal of a certain college an offer to pay the college free visits regularly for the purpose of examining the eyes of the pupilss with a view to correcting defective eyesight where present and, if possible preventing it where likely to occur.

His offer was refused, and refused in a manner well calculated to stir the temper of any man interested in the welfare of our schools and the children and pupils in them. He gave nothing that could be called a reason for refusing to accept the offer of the occulist, and so the college loses the benefits of free inspection every month or so of the eyes of its students.

** *** **

Now, that action appears to me to almost inexcusable. There is not in the world one solitary argument against having regular inspection of the eyes of all the pupils of all the schools. There are very many arguments in favor of it. Goodness alone knows how many cases of defective eyesight might be cured before they become worse, and how many defects might be prevented from eventuating, if this regular inspection were instituted.

While the child is young his eyes, like all the other parts of his body, are plastic and easily formed one way or the other. A defectthat originates in a child is likely to cling to him all his lifetime, unless corrected while he is still young.

** *** **

Once the eyesight begins to be impaired, it becomes steadily and often quickly worse and worse. Every year that the child goes on with the eyesight unattended adds to the time during which he will have to wear glasses when he does wear them.

For example: I wear glasses, and have been wearing them for some years. I shall have to wear them yet for a good many years, and it is quite possible that I shall always have to wear them.

I went on for several years with defective eyesight before I saw an occulist, and duding those years the damage was being done. Had I had my eyes attended to while I was as yet young, it would mean that today I'd not be wearing glasses, except perhaps, on special occasions when I was doing special eye-work.

There are hundreds like me.

The S.S. Home left Humbermouth at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The Strike Is Called "Mad Adventure"

Wolvin Assures Lewis of Besco Co-operation.

SYDNEY, July 17—In a scathingly denunciatory message, President John L. Lewis, of the International Union U. M. W. A., revoked the Charter of District 26, appointed Silby Barrett, former International Bard member as Provincial President with instructions to order the men back to work at once, and advised President R. M. Wolyin, of Besco, of his action with the request that his officers co-operate with the Provisional U.M.W. Executive. President Wolvin immediately sent assurance of co-operation. This is the latest phase of the Steel and Coal strike in Nova Scotia. Concellation of the charter was effective Tuesday, President Lewis referred to the action of the Livingstone Executive as a 'mad adventure,' and bitterly denounced the officers of the District for "incitation, encouragement, and conducing the sympathy strike. Your deliberate breach of existing contract between miners and operators of Nova Scotia is indefensible and morally reprehensible," he declared. Little comment was heard in Sydney when the news was received, but Silby Barrett said he would be ready to issue a circular of instructions Wednesday.

DISTRICT OFFICERS DEFY M.W. PRESIDENT

Lewis Will Not Be Allowed To Do With Cape Breton District As He Did With Kansas Is Statement of McLachlan.

SYDNEY, July 18—"We are not going to be cancelled, that's all," was J. B. McLachlan's statement when asked regarding President Lewis's action in cancelling their office. Mr. McLachlan arrived this morning from Pictou. Dan Livingstone is expected to arrive to-night. When he was asked regarding the situation, he replied that Lewis would not be allowed to do with this District, what he did with Kansas, and that no Americans were going to dictate to him what should be done.

The Best Man Won, Says Canadian Oarsman

QUEBEC, July 18—It was a great race, said Hilton Belyae, of St. John, speaking of the recent diamond scull at Henley. He arrived last night from England and shortly after proceeded to his train. He is going direct to St. Catherines, Ont., to defend his Canadian title at the regatta which takes place in about a week. In reference to losing at Henley Belyea stated that the better man had won and he had nothing to offer in the way of excuses.

Love's Renunciation

CHAPTER XXV.

Dead Sea Fruit

There was a supper after the play that night, and Judy, watching Carlotta's quiet, rather abstracted demeanour while all the more congratulations were being showered upon her, loved her more and more. She believed now that nothing could spoil her or cause her to swerve from her allegiance to Alan.

The thing amazed her beyond all power of speech or thought. For Carlotta had great gifts. She was richly dowered both in mind and body, and Judy's relentless, sisterly eyes had long discerned that Alan was a very ordinary man. But happily for the world, which is largely peopled with ordinary folk, the ordinary man or woman is not cheated of love's gifts, which have naught to do with the head, but all with the heart.

Judy was glad at last when they were able to get to bed, in the small hours of the morning at the Holland House.

"What a night it has been," she said, as she lingered a moment in Carlotta's room, "and what a queer place is New York!"

Carlotta, a little wan now about the eyes and mouth, smiled a little unsteadily.

"I never, no never saw anything like your evasion of the reporters, Judy! It's positively great! So calm, so dignified! Just staring them through and through as if they did not exist, and hardly obstructed your view. You discomfited them completely."

Judy laughed.

"You see, they got it into their heads that I was a sort of chaperion or duenna, or something, and they might ask me all sorts of questions. Some of them, I fancy, have gone away thinking you travel about with a first-class idiot, or a deaf mute!"

"And that is of no consequence! But I rather think they went off with a very different opinion—that they had met their match. Oh, I am so tired, body and soul and spirit. I should like to go to sleep for days and weeks and years, and wake up in the old Clock House bedroom at Ayr, and get up to look out at the heads in the morning sun."

"Don't greet, Carlotta! For heaven's sake don't greet! For I am just about at the end of my tether" said Judy confusedly. "Sleep all day tomorrow if you can, my dear. I'll tell Mrs. Baddeley on no account to disturb you."

"Mrs. Baddeley was Carlotta's elderly maid, an acquaintance of old Cambridge days, to whom meeting with Miss Carlyon had brought untold ease and comfort.

"Good night, then, dearest and best. Oh, Judy, how empty it all is! Pray hard—wont you—that to-morrow may be bright, for I am mortally afraid of to-morrow!"

Judy held her close, and they kissed one another, almost as two lonely children might; and the New York which had gone to bed to dream of Margaret Tenderton, and to awake to envy her, did not know that she cried herself to sleep.

Judy awoke bright and early and was relieved to har from Mrs. Baddeley that Carlotta still slept.

"Just like a child, Miss Rankine! But she does look white and tired yet. I hope she'll sleep on, for I do not see how she is to keep on with this life if she doesn't get her proper rest. It's more than flesh and blood can stand."

"Watch her well, Mrs. Baddeley, I am going out as soon as I have breakfasted, to explore New York."

As a matter of fact Judy's exploration was confined to the smallest possible area. A judicious question put to the waiter in the dining room soon put her on the right track for Forty-second Street.

New York is not a city of great distances, and those who know their London are amazed at the ease and speed with which places can be reached on foot.

It was a glorious morning, and tho the temperature was low, the rare quality of the air somehow communicated a certain buoyancy to her spirit as she set out on foot to discover first-hand news of Alan, and mayhap, meet him face to face. At the back of her mind there was a strange feeling of remoteness, which assured her that the meeting was not imminent as she imagined.

She was interested in the pushing, eager crowd on Broadway, and wondered why they went so late to business, not aware that business had begun long before, and that the pushing habit was characteristic of New York, where is is everybody's business, apparently, to be in a hurry, without any particular reason or object.

When she came to the house of Mrs Isaacstein in Forty-second Street,—the only address that Alan had ever given them—she surveyed it with the keenest interest, and was, on the whole, not repelled or disappointed with its appearance. At least, it loked eminently respectable, if dull.

Her heart beat a little quicker as she ascended the steps and pulled the bell. It was answered immediately by Sambo, and finding herself at close quarters with a large and shining face, Judy stepped back slightly, not yet used to the sight of the alien race.

"I wish to set Mr. Rankine, please if he is in the house."

Sambo, grinning affably, shook his head violently.

"Mr. Rankine no here, mam. not a great while. Come in an' see the missus—she knows."

Judy accepted the invitation, aware that her disappointment was slight after all! Somehow she had expected some answer of this kind. Anything else would have seemed all too easy and out of the question. She followed Sambo, in his gaily-colored jacket, for which he only exchanged the white one when his table duties were over, and he had to dust and clean silver in mysterious regions beyond.

He ushered her into the little business room, which was very close and warm from the steam heat, and setting a chair with all the easy courtesy natural to his race, he went to find his mistress.

In the clear light of the morning Mrs. Isaacstein seemed to look more than usually Hebraic. Her frock was very shabby, her lace collar soiled and a little awry, her jewellery tawdry and a little out of place; but her smile was one of real kindliness and welcome.

"Mr. Rankine you ask for? Ach, he haf left us quite awhile. So far back as last August."

"But you know where he is, surely?" stammered Judy. "I am from Scotland, and we have been writing to him here all those months."

"I don't know his address at this minnit. And he haf not been here for—oh, so long!" she answered, not aware of his visit to Jean Dempster on the previous evening, for she herself had been spending the evening at a restaurant with some Jewish friends. "It is Miss Dempster who knows all about him."

"Oh, yes! My brother has told me about Miss Dempster. Is she in the house now, and could I see her?"

"She is at business, miss. On Broadway, at the Dormer building, fourth floor. It is not far, you can walk there. So you are from Scotland, and Mr. Rankine's sister? You are not so very like him. Ach, but he was a beautiful gentleman!"

Judy could not muster a smile at this left-hand compliment.

"The Dormer house, Broadway? I have just come down Broadway I suppose I must have missed it?"

"No doubt, miss. She does not come home to lunch. None of my boarders do. We meet, a family, at seven each evening. Some of them haf been here for years and years."

Judy, foreseeing the deluge, prepared to beat a hasty retreat.

She was not specially attracted by the house or its chatelaine, and as she left the doorway she involuntarily muttered "Poor Alan!" not aware that he had reached the depths which by comparison, made Mrs. Isaacstein's establishment appear like a palace.

Her spirits dashed, but not quenched, Judy proceeded to locate the Dormer building, which she found to be a skyscraper of quite moderate dimensions, and ascending by the elevator to the fourth floor, she discovered a door with the words "Ackerman's School of Stenography" printed on it.

Pushing it open she was confronted by a small glass partition with a little window in it, labelled "Inquiries." When she tapped at that a bell-boy quickly came to attend and to take her name and business.

"Tell Miss Dempster Miss Rankine wishes to see her," said Judy rathe. curtly, and then stood, while the lad took away her message.

Presently someone spoke to her from behind, and Judy turned quickly to behold a quiet, pleasant-faced woman, not quite young, who bade her good morning.

"Please come to my room," she said, and the Scotch roll in her tongue somehow oddly comforted Judy's rather forlorn heart.

"I am sure we ought to shake hands," she said, "for my brother has told me about you in his letters."

Jean warmly gripped the small, slim hand in its perfect-fitting glove, and then went out rather hurriedly, leading the way along the corridor to another door marked "Private." Holding it open, she signed Judy to pass into a very warm, cheery room, with a Turkish rug on the floor, and pretty office furniture, which a woman's hand had arranged to the best advantage.

"So you are his sister," she said abruptly as she closed the door. "When did you come? And were you by any chance in the Manhattan Theatre last night?"

"I was in a corner of the box on the first tier, behind the curtain. Did you see me?"

"I didn't, but I wondered whether he did."

"Are you speaking of my brother?" asked Judy, paling slightly.

Jean Dempster nodded.

"I am. He was in the theatre last night along with me—but it is a long story! Won't you sit down and undo your furs? You have noticed, I don't doubt, how hot all the houses are in New York, and we have to be careful about wraps."

She spoke quite steadily and casually, but the color had risen in her cheeks, and quite evidently she was a little agitated, even excited.

CANADA'S EMBARGO ON WOOD PULP

State Department of United States May Protest.

WASHINGTON, July 13—The U.S. Government is giving serious consideration, it is officially said, to the action of tht Canadian parliament in authorizing an embargo on wood pulp. The state department will doubtless address a protest to the Canadian Government indicatingthat such an embargo would be burdensome to American newspapers and consumers of wood pulp in this country. Retaliation will not be threatened, though it is not overlooked here that the United States Government is clothed with large powers to retaliate in the new tariff act.

"The Truth About the Strike at Cape Breton"

HALIFAX, N. S., July 12.—(By Andrew Merkel, Canadian Press Correspondent)—I went to Cape Breton last week on instructions of the general manager of the Canadian Press, in order to go over the ground personally in an endeavour to arrive at an appraisement of the situation, "scrupulously fair to both company and men."

I confess I carried with me certain definite views as to the seat of the trouble, based on my daily contact with reports coming out of the Cape Breton area. I have returned with those views either extremely modified or completely reversed.

The most striking impression one receives upon being swept into the maelstrom of the conflict is the vehemence with which the miners believe that everybody's hand is against them. This is fundamental. One mentions the newspapers—"to hell with the newspapers," the Minister of Labor—"to hell with Murdock," their own international leader—"to hell with Lewis."

The deep underlying reason for this state of mind I found to be the persistent spreading, day in and day out, of "false tales" to the discomfort of the men. The coal pile at Dominion No 2 is reported to be in imminent danger of destruction. Investigation shows it to be in no abnormal danger of destruction. The mines are reported to be rapidly filling with water. Investigation shows that they are not rapidly filling with water. Five thousand miners hear their leader speak. Next day they find that words have been put in the mouths of these leaders which they know were never uttered. This sort of thing happens every day.

When I told a group of young miners in U. M. W. headquarters, Glace Bay, that the newspapers of Canada wanted an absolutely impartial account of the situation, I was promptly hooted down and backed into a corner by a small forest of menacing hands.

"To hell with the newspapers."

I questioned J. M. McLachlan closely regarding the statement: "To hell with the property of the Dominion Coal Company," he is credited with having made at the conference with Hon. D. A. Cameron, the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia. He said:

"I am morally certain that I did not make that statement, in so many words. There was a crowd there. Some one else might have made it. What I have said before and what I might have said at the meeting was: 'When you put the property of the Dominion Coal Company in one scale and the wives and children of workmen earning thirty cents an hour, in the other, then, I say to hell with the property of the Dominion Coal Company.' "

Colonel Eric MacDonald, Commissioner of Provincial Police, had occasion to dictate in my presence a brief statement to the same stenographer who took down the McLachlan statement, and when the typewriter copy came back it contained several mistakes. Colonel MacDonald explained that the stenographer was inexperienced. It is possible, in my judgement, that the stenographer did not take down or transcribe correctly the statement attributed to McLachlan. But that is really not the point I wish to emphasize.

Colonel McDonald explained to me that it so happened that he and the stenographer were late in arriving at the meeting. They entered the room unknown to the miners' representatives who were facing Hon. D. A. Cameron with their backs to the wall The stenographer dropped into a seat in the rear of the council room When the men discovered the presence of the stenographer they left the room, believing themselves to have been tricked. "To hell with the Provincial Government."

If the attitude towards me by W E. Gray, assistant to the vice-president of the British Empire Steel Corporation, with whom the newspapermen are called upon to deal, is the attitude adopted towards their employees by the officials of the British Steel Corporation, I can quite understand the temper of the men. Mr. Gray is perhaps the foremost authority we have in Nova Scotia on coal-mining. He is courteous and obliging. But he consistently refused to lay his cards on the table when dealing with me and he undertook, quite as a matter of course, to tell me what should or should not be sent out to the daily newspapers of Canada.

When he handed me a typewritten copy of what purported to be a letter over the signature of J. B. McLachlan, charging atrocities against the provincial police, and I asked him for some evidence of the letter's authorship and publication, he thought I should accept his word that it was perfectly all right, giving me the impression that it had been unearthed by the company's special police force.

The provincial police spent half the next day ascertaining that the letter was enclosed in an envelope addressed to the vice-president of the corporation and delivered personally by Dan Livingstone at the company's office in Glace Bay. No doubt Mr. Gray was in possession of this information when he first handed me the letter. Certainly he should have been if he wished to ensure its immediate publication. But it seems that he wanted to score for the company's police.

When Mr. Gray handed me the John L. Lewis telegram, instructing the miners to return to work, I promptly wrote a bulletin crediting him with having given out the information, and laying my cards on the table. I showed him this bulletin. His comment was: "You mustn't use my name," the contention being that the miners should not be informed that Lewis had sent a copy of the telegram to the corporation.

Because arguing the point only meant a waste of time, I said "All right" and because I felt that by dismissing his conteition I had given him an undertaking not to mention the corporation, I rewrote the bulletin. Now I am impressed that John L. Lewis did a perfectly legitimate thing in sending the corporation a copy of his message to Dan Livingstone. The corporation, as one party to the contract, had appealed to the executive head of the other party to the contract to respect his obligations under the instrument. The method adopted by Lewis in replying to the corporation was to send it a copy of the telegram he had addressed to the U. M. W. district executive. I believe that if this had been made clear, the miners would have appreciated the reasonableness of the procedure adopted by Lewis.

Instead the obvious reaction to the publication of the telegram on the part of the miners, before it had been given out by the district executive, was that it had come through corporation channels. More 'evidence' they insist that Lewis is double-crossing them: "To hell with Lewis."

What I saw in Cape Breton convinced me of the importance of operating within the strike area a mobile force, acting as an auxiliary to the local police force. This is being supplied by the provincial police under the command of Colonel Eric MacDonald.

If this force were not operating the men would be in charge of gates to the steel plant and the maintenance of law and order in the district would be taken out of the hands of the properly constituted authorities and vested in an irresponsible body of men. Colonel MacDonald restored the proper balance when he charged through the crowds assembled before No. 4 gate, a week ago last Sunday night. Since then there has been no attempt to interfere with the due administration of law.

The soldiers, on the other hand, seemed to me to be ineffective, thru the limitations properly set about their activities. The record of soldiers in Cape Breton has been that when they have not been fraternizing with the men they have been the target for all manner of minor abuses on thepart of the men. This has a tendency to bring the forces of the Crown into disrepute and to undermine respect for authority.

That the Cape Breton miner has a wholesome respect for properly constituted authority, I have no doubt. It will be recalled that the men charged with raiding the stores of the company last year were convicted by juries of their fellow-workmen.

The soldiers are now in ocupation of Dominion No. 2, ostnsibly the men feel, as a result of alleged interference on the part of the pickets with the officials of the mine, but really to protect the shipment of coal from the pile totalling 165,000 tons, in the immediate vicinity.

The miners of Cape Breton are at the end of their financial resources. They will not be supported by their international union. Their credit in the ordinary course of events will become restricted, possibly to the vanishing point. If the strike is prolonged, hunger will show its head. The miner possesses an inherent regard for authority, but it is conceivable that a point might be reached where respect for authority would break down. I counted upwards of 200 automobiles at a ball game in Glace Bay. A few of them were very high-priced cars. To-day the miner steps aside and is deluged with dust from the cars which continually flash along the Glace Bay-Sydney highway.

The Cape Breton miner seems to have a penchant for replying in kind. When he is lied about, he wants to lie about the other fellow, and immediately takes the matter up with one of his labor publications. When he is particularly aggrieved he yells 'Soviet,' and as a last resort, has been known to trot out a Red banner, "to inform the corporation what is going on in union circles." But before he gets hungry, and before that pile of coal, bought and paid for, it is true, by the company begins to dwindle under the protection of steel-helmeted soldiers, an earnest endeavor should be made to reason with him in a fair field with everything open and above board.

I have written nothing of the demands of the steel workers precipitating the trouble. I do not believe these are of prime importance. It is my considered judgement that first and foremost the need is for straightforward, even dealing.

Strikes in Cape Breton have been settled before. This strike will be settled in the course of time. But it will not be permanently settled, no matter what the basis may be, unless the men become seized with the belief that the company have the will and the authority to deal fairly and openly with them.

The situation is so be-devilled today, that the process will undoubtedly take a long time. But a start will have to be made some time. With Alex S. McNeill, the new general superintendent of the coal company, a man in whom the men have every confidence, in the saddle, this should not prove a difficult problem.

Millions of Men Save Shaving Time, Now

We ask you to try what they tried

Quicker shaves now save time for millions of men. Easier shaves save skin irritation for millions of faces.

These men did what we ask you to do: they tried, at our expense, the shaving cream which has 5 distinct ways to give better, quicker shaves:

PALMOLIVE SHAVING CREAM multiplies itself 250 times in rich lather.

Without rubbing in, this lather softens any beard in one minute.

It doesn't dry—lasts 10 minutes on the face.

Lather-bubbles, strong-walled, hold hairs erect for easier cutting.

Produces a lotion-like after-effect—soothing to skin.

Try it. Our expense. It cost 18 months' time—136 experiments—to perfect this cream for you. Test for yourself our claims. Mail coupon.

Kilbride Garden Party

HORSE RACES WERE KEENLY CONTESTED

The Kilbride Garden Party attracted a large gathering yesterday afternoon. The grounds had been attractively decorated for the occasion, and the various tents and stalls with their stocks of good things presented a very pretty picture.

Amongst the visitors during the afternoon were Sir. R. A. and Lady Squires, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Mc Dermott and many of the city clergy, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hunt and many others. The different sideshows, including wheels of fortune, etc., did a rushing business, while the many tea tables were well patronized and the proceeds it is expected will equal those of last year.

The big attraction on the sports program were the horse and pony races which provided plenty of thrills. The horse races were run in heats, the course being in charge of Rev. Bro O'Regan and Messrs W. Brennan, Alan Williams and P. Meier. In all, three heats were run, and in the finals John Nolan's horse came first, Gibbs' second and Fahey and James tied for third place.

The pony race was also well contested, five ponies competing, and resulted in Jackman & Greene's pony driven by W. Baird, taking first prize. Butler's came second and Tobin's third.

The Junior football fives were won by the Holy Cross who played off with the B. I. S., and after playing three periods, won by a goal. The drawing of the Kilbride Derby will take place within a week, as a large number of stubs are still outstanding. The result will then be announced. The C.C.C. Band were in attendance during the afternoon and provided the musical part of the program.

The Garden Party concluded last night with a dance in the club house which was largely attended.

The proceeds go towards the building fund of the new church which is now almost completed and is a very handsome structure, and a splendid monument to the energetic Pastor, Rev. J. J. Rawlins and his parishoners.

WESLEY PICNIC

The anual Sunday School picnic of Wesley Church held yesterday at McDougall's field, Blackmarsh Road, was a decided success. Motor trucks and cars were very kindly placed at the disposal of the board of management at 10.30 a.m., and in half an hour all the children were conveyed safely to the field.

The usual games were indulged in and in the afternoon and evening a special sports program was run off. The ladies of the church, who very kindly served teas were kept busy with customers as were also the younger people who were in charge of the usual refreshments.

Return to town was made by motor cars and trucks after spending a most enjoyable day.

Damaged In Collision

Last evening one of the Royal Company's busses, while enroute to the Kilbride Garden Party, collided with a cab owned by Mr. I. Gibbs, which was also bound to Kilbrade.

The accident occurred near the grounds one of the near wheels of the cab being completely demolished. Both drivers claim they were on their own side of the road.

HUMBER OPERATIONS AND EMPLOYMENT

Why Are Not More Men At Work?

A few days ago His Excellency, Governor Allardyce, assented to the Humber Bill and thereby finalised that measure.

Under the provisions of the Humber Bill, Newfoundland bears a very serious responsibility, which would never have been undertaken by the Government and the people of the country, were it not for the fact that the people required and demanded work because of the growing failure of existing industries to meet their requirements.

On several occasions, the Advocate has appealed to all concerned "to get a move on" and justify the initiation of this Humber industry by meeting some of the demands for employment throughout the country.

Up to date there is no large indication that any serious effort is being made in the Humber Valley to meet the Government's desire regarding the employment of numbers of men. From all over the country, telegraph messages are pouring in to the representatives of districts telling of the fishery's failure to date and seeking work on the Humber operations.

The assurance that every district would have a considerable number of Humber passes has not been realised by district representatives, through no fault of theirs.

They have been bitterly disappointed in the whole matter; and it is certainly not surprising that they want to know who are responsible for the reason why men are not being taken on in numbers justifying such a huge undertaking by the Colony.

Why is it?

Have the contractors been slow in starting the operations there? Are they unmindful of the fact that the country has taken a heavy responsibility in the undertaking, which can only be justified by the returns which were expected to be given the people for employment on the Humber?

If that is the situation, then we say it is time that the Government drew their attention to that aspect of the matter and ensured some practical results immediately.

Before the measure was ratified there may have been justifiable reasons why work could not be undertaken seriously. Surely, such reasons do not obtain now; and yet the same inertia continues and representatives look in vain to the management for passes, and the people's appeals cannot be acceded to.

It may be advanced that there are many more men working on the Humber than we know of. If that is so, where have they come from and what has happened to the Company's arrangement regarding the employment of men?

The Advocate does not take this position in any carping manner but is compelled, on behalf of men seeking employment, to speak fearlessly its mind, in the hope that more initiative will be displayed in the Humber Valley, and that Government obligations in the matter will not be overlooked.

The people want work.

The best should be done to give them work.

1000 men should immediately be employed by the Paper and Power Co. in logging operations at Grand Lake. Camps, roads &c. should be built, which would employ a large number of men. House building should be started at the new town, which if done, could employ another thousand men.

What is being done to hasten this aspect of the operations? Will some one get a move on? The time has come for such, and the electorate expect such to materialise at once.

A Struggle For A Livelihood

"Give the fishermen a chance."

They are to-day struggling for a livelihood. They are to-day trying to pull from the ocean's breast the fish which has meant to their fathers and them their source of livelihood.

From before sunrise till long after sunset, they toil, and in many sections of the country, are to-day toiling with very little returns.

"Give them a chance." Help them."

They are the country's greatest asset. Terra Nova cannot afford to lose them.

Their fight with the sea, their life on the sea, its storms, its winds, its fog and perils have made them men of such a race as no other country may possess.

Shall Terra Nova lose them?

Not if those concerned with the fisheries will act with intelligence and reason and justice, and will not allow vindictive individual competition which paralyses to continue in place of the co-operation, which would so greatly assist; and not if public men will think less of the game of politics and more for the country's good.

The one sincere and genuine effort to give our fishermen the highest possible advantage from their industry was sacrificed on the altar of political intrigue, and jealousy, reckless of the price our toilers had to pay and are paying to-day.

Is it too late to make another attempt to help them? Is it too late for the merchants, most of whom admit the ruinous results of the existing system of handling fish shipments to secure by co-operation what the country will certainly lose by incoherent action?

Or, must the toilers, with the likelihood of a small catch, face the future as the inevitable sufferers of the unwisdom and injustice of others?

The next month or two will tell; and, in the meantime our toilers must toil, let us hope, not in vain.

MORE CONCILIATORY

According to some of to-day's despatch, there is a change noticeable in the French attitude towards the note which Great Britain will propose as the joint allied reply to Germany on the question of Reparations, and that there is reason to hope that the French will treat the British draft in a more considerable spirit than might have been indicated byPresident Poincare's address at Senlis and the general attitude of the French Press.

There is no doubt that Premier Baldwin's statement regarding Britain's policy, although couched in restrained and courteous terms, has impressed itself on the French mind.

The French experience in the Ruhr has been far from successful and the passive resistance to the French occupation has made it a very costly venture and has not tended towards the peace of Europe.

It is unbelievable that the French Government will precipitate a crisis with Britain that may create the disruption of the Entente, the existence of which must be the very basis of France's policy and the only hope for the preservation of peace in Europe.

The following analysis of a long statement of the London Daily Mail may enlighten our readers as to the real existing situation:

ATMOSPHERE OF WAR.

The statement declares that France will evacuate the Ruhr in proportion to the payments made to her on reparations which will permit France to reconstruct her devastated regions and eventually meet the demands of her creditors.

It reaffirms energetically that France neither desires nor intends to annex territory.

Avowing readiness to examine any proposals made in good faith by the German Government, it says it is impossible that such examination can begin while what Germany calls passive resistance continues.

"The crimes and continual murder caused by this resistance," adds the statement, "has created an atmosphere of war, which would prevent any peaceful or coherent negotiations.

"Passive resistance has, moreover, constrained France to take a series of measures, which had not been at first enforced and which France asks nothing better than to relax or modify in such measure as the situation allows."

Charging that Germany is the creator of passive resistance, it declares that Germany alone can enable the population of the occupied territory to regain their claims.

A SYDNEY VIEW

As an expression of the Canadian newspaper attitude on the Sydney matter we print below an extract from the Montreal Daily Star:

SOLDIERS AT SYDNEY.

It is a thousand pities that "politics" is being thrust into the already sufficiently dangerous situation at Sydney, N.S. The sharp-shooting between ex-Minister of Labor Robertson and Minister of Labor Murdock—and their light artillery—is perilous frivolity in the presence of a grave problem. Is there nothing so sacred or so threatening to the nation that the politicians will hesitate to make capital out of it?

What the thoughtful leaders of organized Labor will see very clearly is that the general public have a real interest in protecting property—no matter who owns it—and in preserving law and order. When the general public insist that the authorities perform these two duties, they are not taking part in the controversy between immediately concerned employer and employee. They are merely looking after their own elemental and universal interests. Every other employer and employee are in the same boat as the general public. In fact, they are part and parcel of the same general public.

That is the whole story of the sending of the troops to Sydney. The authorities apparently think that their aid will be needed to effectively discourage disorderly conduct. Of course, the authorities may be wrong. Law and order might be safe enough without this show of force. But, in that case, no harm is done. The soldiers are not there to provoke or promote disorder—they are there to do absolutely nothing unless somebody breaks the law. If there is no law-breaking, the soldiers will have a holiday—and we sincerely hope that they may.

Two excitable Labor leaders are in jail for saying that the troops have been themselves disorderly. Their cases will be tried. If they are right, then the guilty men must be punished. If they have wantonly slandered our soldiers, then again the guilty men must be punished. Even-handed justice must be dealt out to everybody.

OBITUARY

MRS. AMELIA COLLINS.

There passed away yesterday an estimable old lady in the person of Mrs. Amelia Collins, at the age of 84 years.

She had been somewhat ill for some months, but in spite of a short sickness a few weeks ago, seemed to have almost recovered her usual health, when the end came quickly shortly after dinner yesterday, and she passed to that home "not made with hands," there to be reunited to those loved ones from whom she had been separated for so long a time. Mrs. Collins was the daughter of the late James L. Mews, sometime Magistrate at Old Perlican, and the last of a large family. Her brothers George W., William, Stephen and James Mews were well-known here. Her husband John Collins and a son predeceased her many years ago. She had lived to more than the allotted span, had passed through trials with Christian fortitude, and died with calm confidence in the eternal promise that "Heaven's morning breaks" to those who "abide with Him," and that—

With the mourn
Those Angel faces smile
Which she has loved long since
And lost awhile.

The funeral will take place on Friday at 2.30 p.m. from the Wayside Nursing Home, 126 Merrymeeting Road.

JAMES MURPHY.

Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy of Ship Harbor profoundly mourns the loss of their dear son, James, who died in Grand Lake on June 29th.

The deceased left home in May, bidding adieu and fond farewell to his parents and relations and scarcely a month had elapsed when the sad tidings of his death came. He died of pneumonia.

The writer and all acquaintances of the deceased join in condolence with parents and sister, who mourns his loss.

ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

H. M. S. Constance Dance To-morrow Night

AT THE C. C. C. HALL

The officers and crew of the H. M. S. Constance no win port are giving a dance from 8.30 to 11 at the C.C.C. Hall, King's Beach, to-morrow night.

It is a peculiar and rather regrettable fact that a seaport town such as ours does not possess and organisation similar to the Navy League of Canada, and kindred bodies in the United States whereby we could extend the hearty welcome and entertainment we should like to the senior branch of the Service.

The absence of such, however, has commendably prompted a number of our well-known enthusiastic heads of patriotic and public committees to be responsible for a certain number of ladies being present—the only regret being that the short time at the disposal of the volunteer Welcome Committee precludes the possibility of personally addressing a formal invitation to each of the ladies who are being asked to attend.

The ship's orchestra will dender a delightful program of very latest English and American dance numbers, and the hall is being tastefully decorated in the manner for which the Navy lads are noted. Some delightful new novelty dances will be introduced—similar to those now the vogue in England—and a delightful and most pleasant evening is assured to those who will have the good fortune to be present.

Chinese Cut-Throat Looters the Worst Kind of Devils

MORE HORRIBLE THAN ANY FICTION PIRATES.

Modern Pirates of the Sea—Vivid Description of the Chinese Bandits Who Prey on Helpless—All Sorts of Deviltry—No Quarter to Victims—Yellow Fiends Terrorize Shipping.

By ROBERT BLATCHFORD

LONDON, England.—"Piracy on the High Seas!" The legend seemed to shout aloud from the morning paper, so that all the other headlines; recording the tame adventures and sordid crimes of a prosaic and degenerate age, paled their ineffectual fires.

Pirates! I sat up hopelessly and gave my best attention to the story. It turned out to be a rather bald, but by no means uninteresting narrative.

It appears that the Chinese steamer Taishun, bound from Hong-Kong to Shanghai, was looted by pirates who had come aboard as passengers, the coup being executed at sea, about fifty miles off Swatow. The first officer and one seaman were seriously wounded, and the pirates got away with more than 60,000 dollars' worth of loot.

Yes, for in the "'sixties" Chinese piracy was enjoying a trade boom and the British Navy was busy in Eastern waters. It was somewhere between '66 and '68 that a small gunboat, the Algerine, fell in with a fleet of pirates and had a merry time. The gunboat mustered only about 30 men, and she fought and chased 13 junks with 800 men and 130 guns. Some of the junks escaped, but many were burnt or taken.

By the way, it was the officer of this same gunboat, Lieut. Arthur, whose name, owing to an act of gallantry, was bestowed upon a since famous port, after the Taku bombardments in 1860. I don't suppose the young fellow imagined at the time what a storm centre Port Arthur was destined to become.

National Industry.

Piracy has always been one of the national industries of China, and the locality of the Taishun affairs is notorious. Fifty miles off Swatow means the mouth of the Formosa Strait. That part of the China coast, from Canton River to Hang Chow Bay, a stretch of nearly nine hundred miles, is deeply and closely serrated with gulfs, bays, harbors and river estuaries which have for more than a thousand years afforded shelter to generations of pirates to the manner born. Here the junks could lie at the watch or take refuge from pursuit, and here they could sally forth to prey upon commerce trading between Tonqun and the Yellow Sea.

The island of Formosa itself enjoyed for centuries a reputation as evil as San Domingo, Port Royal, or the haunts of the Sea Dykes in the Malay Archipelago. So notorious did Formosa become as a nest of pirates and wreckers and so daring and atrocious were the piracies carried on in the Straits that at last the Japanese Government interfered and held up the island until the Chinese promised to put an end to the nefarious trade. That was in 1873 or 1874. But as Chinese promises are not always fulfilled the piracies continued, and the Japanese finally annexed the island and ruined the business.

This, happily for Japan, happened before the I.L.P. found its feet or some British comrade would have called upon the Japanese Government to evacuate Formosa and remove their militarist heel from the necks of the native gentlemen adventurers.

It would be in the late 'sixties that I read the narrative of a French lady who was captured by Chinese pirates off Amoy, in the Pescadores Strait. She was a passenger in a Chinese ship and was held to ransom. What became of the crew and officers she did not know, but she was taken on board a junk and was shut up below decks in semi-darkness for six or seven weeks.

Cupidity, and Dirt.

Then one morning she woke late, and remarking that a strange silence reigned in the junk she crept from her narrow pen in a state between hope and fear, and there, at the top of the companion-way, in the full glare of sunlight, stood a British bluejacket, bareheaded, barefooted, and holding in his hand a nacked cutlass. The pirates had forsaken the junk and the sailor was one of a boating party sent to board her.

The lady's comment upon beholding that apparition has remained in my memory: "Overjoyed, I returned to my prison and prepared for my return to civilization by clearing my nails with a splinter of wood."

A curious adventure, I think the picture of the sailor, barefooted, with a drawn cutlass in his hand, standing upwright in the white sunshine, is worth preserving. After more than half a century his figure seems still alive. Perhaps he was one of the crew of the Algerine. The lady did not say.

In piracy, as in other mtters, East is East and West is West. The Chinese corsair is not picturesque. He is remarkable for ferocity, cupidity, and dirt. He has no feeling for his art, no graphic nicknames on his messmates. One cannot envisage a Chinese "Black dog" or "Billy Bones." He is just Ah Sin, silent, murderous and inscrutable.

I have a photograph of a group of prisoners. Their smooth, expressionless faces, featureless as an egg, are more repulsive and terrible than the fiercest scowling whiskerando of piratical melodrama. There is something inhuman in their aspect. One would as soon look for mercy or consideration from a cobra or a crocodile. They would kill or torture, as they would plunder or burn, without emotion and without haste. They are the worst kind of devils; cold devils. I have never seen the influenza bacillus, but I should think it would look very much like a Chinese pirate.

Cut-Throat Thieves.

The fact is the Chinese pirate is too modern, he is too close to us, he is too hideously and horribly real. He leaves nothing to the imagination. Those men who looted the Taishun would just be a common crowd of slant-eyed Chinks. They would come shuffling forward, an unwashed, ugly crowd, with knives drawn and revolvers ready, and having robbed the ship and locked the passengers under hatches would shin into the boats and pull away; a low-down swabbery of lcut-throat thieves, the wharf-rats of Canton River and the fever-haunted creeks of the Fokien seaboard. I don't suppose they had any more glamor to them than a New York pickpocket.

But when you come to our pirates, the sea wolves of our childhood, you come to romance. You get light and color and character and background. "Fifteen men on the dead man's chest;" you would not expect a song like that in the junks. No. That kind of thing belongs to the blue seas and the painted sails off the Spanish Main. There you get puncheons of rum, sacks of gold doubloons, talking parrots, long brass nines, the wild island and the Jolly Roger.

You get, to come down to brass tacks, a pirate legend as picturesque and dramatic as the legend of the noble Red Man and the Romances of Gustave Simard. You get the pirates and the Indians of our imaginative childhood; the sea rovers and prairie braves of the glorious land of make-believe.

You get John Silver and Captain Flint and Ben Gunn. You get Avery and Singleton and the handsome buccaneers which Frank Brangwyn paints so well. These highly decorative swashbucklers are as fascinating as Bluebeard or Sinbad, and about as real. We see them still through the rosy spectacles of childhood, in the glamorous light of other days.

Our Mild Ruffians.

To be sure, Robert Louis Stevenson's pirate hint darkly at deeds of terror and violence. Behind their singing and their grog looms the indefinite but terrible figure of Captain Flint, but, after all, they are only romantic forms drawn boldly on "the painted cloth." In comparison with the genuine sea ruffians of Port Royal or the Barbary coast they are about as mild as Peter Pan's Mr. Since.

Like most other Englishmen, I have always loved pirates—the pirates of romance. What a blood-curdling villain is El Captaine in Conrad's story! What a peerless pair are his plain Mr. Jones and Riccardo. Then we have Washington's old Buccaneer, from whom Stevenson's drew Billy Bones; and we have John Silver and Pew and Israel Hands.

But I don't think any of the "Treasure Island" pirates are comparable with the dirty little Cockney ruffian in "The Wreckers." Do you remember how, when he is about to attempt the murder of the missionary at his own table, he looks up and reads the text: "Thou, God, seeest me?" And his comment is; "Well, God, You are going to see something funny."

That is one of the truest touches in pirate literature. That is just a streak of the vile soul of a real flesh-and-blood blackguard. But that filthy gutter rat does not intrigue us; he disgusts us; whereas the Defoe pirates and the men of "Treasure Island" never disgust us. We only read them as in a translation.

The fact is that all pirate stories are fairy tales, really. And we enjoy them as such. What is more surprising is that with regard to pirate literature we never grow up. As children we still cherish their infamous but delightful memories.

The other day a boy of six asked my grown-up daughter if she would like to be eaten by a wolf, or, as he expressed it, by a "woof." He said that for his part he would not mind, for he would have a sharp knife in his pocket, and when the "woof" had swalloked him he would cut his stomach and come out. There we have the child's outlook in the matter of wolves and lions and Red Indians and pirates. They are figures in an imaginative game he plays for his own delight and glory.

Land of Make-Believe.

We have retained something of that mental attitude towards the pirates of fiction. We are not afraid of them, really, and never were. We are not horrified by their ferocity, their cruelty, their crimes. Like the Three Bears and Little Red Riding Hood, the witches in Macbeth, they belonfl to the beautiful land of Make-believe.

We go back to that playground of our childhood and see again the Cyclops, and the great Roc, and the Forty Thieves, and Robin Crusoe's Sallee River, and we join the gang of mutinous robbers on the good ship Hispaniola in the chorus of "Ho, ho, ho and a bottle of rum," and never so much as suspect that the clever Robert Louis Stevenson has beguiled us into playing with his toys.

So, as I have said, the headlin, "Piracy on the High Seas" in my daily paper caught me by the heels, so that I forget the "flu" and found myself back in the Formosa Strait and the early 'sixties.

Fifty miles off Swotow! So. I would risk a small bet that there are one or two Japanese destroyers taking a great interest in those waters as I write these lines. We may have a strong weakness for Billy Bones, but there is no sentiment in our dealings with Ah Sin. Piracy on the High Seas is a back number.

HELP FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Mrs. Holmberg Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Viking, Alta.—"From the time I was 15 years old I would get such sick feelings in the lower part of my abdomen followed by cramps and vomiting. This kept me from my work (I help my parents on the farm) as I usually had to go to bed for the rest of the day. Great times I would have to walk the floor. I suffered in this way until a friend induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had very satisfactory results so far and am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends. I surely am glad I tried it for I feel like a different person now that I don't have these troubles."—ODELIA HOLMBERG Box 93, Viking, Alta.

Letters like this establish the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They tell of the relief from pains and ailments after taking it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs contains no narcotic or harmful drugs and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills in this country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials prove this fact.

If you doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario, for Mrs. Pinkham's private text-book and learn more about it.

C. of E. Orphanage Garden Party

Ideal weather conditions helped to make the C. of E. Orphanage Garden Party, held yesterday afternoon a brilliant success.

The Orphanage grounds were decorated in a fine manner and numerous tents dotted the landscape around. In addition to refreshment and supper tents, there were many variety stalls, book stalls, flower stalls and other adjuncts of a well organized affair such as this was. There were side-shops of every description and as they were all well patronized a considerable revenue was derived from this source. Wheels of fortune proved so to many and formed a lucrative arret to the general fund raisers.

The C.L.B. and Mount Cashel Bands were present and discoursed splendid music, which was thoroughly enjoyed. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce visited the grounds during the afternoon and were received by the menagement.

A very fine sports programme was run off and occasioned considerable interest. The events were as follows:

100 Yards Dash:—Won by A. Parsons, time 11 1-5 seconds; C. Press second.

Senior Football 6's:—Star vs. Feildians. Won by Feildians, 3 goals.

Guards vs. C.E.I.. Won by Guards, 1 goal.

Girl Guides Relay:—Won by Bishop Spencer Troop, (Misses D. Sellars, R. Goldstone, H. Bayly.) Girls Friendly Troop second.

Junior Football 5's:—Gaelic vs. Scouts, won by Gaelic, 2 goals to 1.

Holy Cross vs. Wesley, won by Wesley, 2 goals to I corner.

1 Mile:—Won by C. Stone, time 5 min. 7 2-5 seconds; R. O'Toole 2nd. (This race was the finest seen for some time. There were three entrants. O'Toole took the lead followed by Stone at 3 feet. This position was held throughout the race until within five feet of the tape when in the final spurt Stone nosed ahead and won about a foot. This was O'Toole first run with spiked shoes and his performance was very creditable.)

Mercantile Regatta:—Won by Harvey's Longshoremen.

Final Football 6's (Senior)—Guards vs. Feildians, won by Guards, 1 goal to 2. corners.

Final Football 6's (Junior):—Wesley vs. Gaelic, won by Wesley, I goal to I corner.

Pony Race:—Won by Skinner's pony, Hutton's second and Osmond's third.

The C.L.B. Pryamid Squad, under Instructor Rendell, gave an exhibition which was creditably performed and won marked applause.

A miniature Golf competition tied between Messrs. Hugh Garland and Dan. Kelloway was won in the play-off by Mr. Garland. The prizes were presented at the conclusion of the affair, by Mrs. (Hon. Tasker Cook., who congratulated the winners on their success. The officials were:

Judges of Pony Race:—Rev. Bro. O'Regan, A. Lester, Esq., T. Curran, Esq., M. Tobin, Esq.

Starter:—E. J. Goodland, Esq.

Herald:—B. Colton, Esq.

Committee of Management:—C.L.B. Cadets' Athletic Association.

Mr. W. J. Higgins, K.C., was Captain of the field and, in his capable manner, performed his duties well.

At the Orphanage at night a dance was held which was attended by a very large gathering. The C.L.B. Orchestra under Captain Morris, played a fine programme which was thoroughly enjoyed and continued until an early hour this morning.

The Nfld. Quarterly

We thank the publishers of the Newfoundland Quarterly for an advance copy of their summer issue which is more than usually interesting.

The articles are of the high standard that has won for the Quarterly an enviable reputation in the literary field. They include contributions by such well-known writers as W. J. Power, Albert N. Holmes, A. A. Parsons, J.P., Dr. Arthur Selwyn-Brown, W.F.C., R. A. Young whilst among the Editorial articles the "The New Government," with illustrations, "Sir W. F. Coaker, K.B.E., M.H.A.," "The New Speaker," "commemoration Day,".

The illustrations are new and indeed interesting and the summer number of the Nfld. Quarterly makes the best kind of souvenir to send to Newfoundlanders abroad.

LATEST

SYDNEY, July 19—While four thousand miners at a Glace Bay mass meeting to-night declared themselves in favor of remaining on strike in spite of the Lewis cancellation order revoking the charter of their district organization, only one lone miner voting loyalty to the international, the miners of Westville quietly met at a closed conference and declared to return to work on Friday morning.

No response is being given this, the first break in the strike, and coupling it with the sentiments voiced at Glace Bay when McLachlan said that if they came down to the last loaf they would go back to work and recuperate for another strike, offers the first real hope of immediate peace.

A Springhill despatch states that Robert Foster, personal representative of John L. Lewis, passed thru that town this afternoon enroute on official business, to Glace Bay, which he will reach to-morrow morning. This is the first intimation that Lewis had sent Foster and the news was given out by relatives whom he met at Springhill.

Silby Barrett, Provisional President of District Twenty-six, said that the Glace Bay meeting was the final effort of the strikers, and he predicted that the majority of miners would swing back to their allegiance to the International Union.

McLachlan at Glace Bay spoke for solidarity. "Dont get divided," he warned, "fight to the last loaf of bread; then go back and renew your strength, but don't divide." Of Lewis, he said, "John L. Lewis is not the United Mine Workers. The rank and file of the American miners are with you."

John McDonald, of Toronto, a radical,, also advised the men to go back to work, socially forced to yield this time. He advised also against "fireworks."

All the speeches denounced Besco, the Nova Scotia Government and John L. Lewis.

Life Saving Guards

Demonstration At S.A. Citadel

In spite of the many other attractions, a good crowd assembled in the S.A. Citadel, New Gower Street last night, to witness the Life Saving Guards demonstration which marked the closing of this year's Congress.

Col. Cloud presided and a feature of the meeting was the singing by himself and Mrs. Cloud of a song composed by him when he first received his appointment to Newfoundland.

The programme consisted of drills, exercises, tableaux, etc., all of which were performed in excellent style and drew frequent and hearty applause from the audience.

During the evening the Colonel enrolled five Guards, who have passed the beginners test and are eligible to become regular members of the troop.

This item was of special interest as, owing to the fact that this ceremony is not usually conducted in public, many present had not seen it before. The address of Guard Leader Cave on the principles underlying the Guard movement was very interesting and instructive and undoubtedly gave many present a new conception of what the Life Saving Guards Organization stands for. At the close the Colonel heartily thanked the Guard leader for the splendid entertainment given. Guard Leader Cave in replying thanked the Colonel for his interest in the Guards and felt that it would be an incentive to them to do work in the future.

The meeing closed with the singing of the National Anthem. R.

Child Is Badly Scalded

At the C. of E. Orphanage Garden Party yesterday afternoon a little girl named Philips met with a severe accident. Late in the afternoon the little one,w ho was only about five years old, was standing in one of the tents in which the supplies for the supper tables were being prepared, when in some manner a kettle, fell off a stove and the hot water went over the child's legs which were scalded severely.

Dr. Anderson, who was present, attended to her injuries afterwards taking the suffering child to her home. The child's legs were terribly scalded and she suffered much pain.

French Seizure of 26 Billion Marks In Ruhr Is Reported

Passive Resistance Will Not Waver, say Berlin Authorities.

DUSSELDORF, July 19—Owing to the Rhine Metal Works at Dusseldorf being occupied by French troops, several thousand workmen immediately went on strike in protest. The French seized twenty six billion marks in transit for Weisbaden. The money is thought to have been payment to idle railroad employees. The Berlin authorities are quoted to-night as saying Ruhr passive resistance will not waver regardless of what action British may take towards reparations problem.

Wheat Pool Is Favored For '23 Crop

SASKATOON, July 19—Premier Herbert Greenfield and the Alberta Cabinet have decided to support the Sapiro wheat pool plan for marketing the West's 1923 wheat crop.

REGINA, July 19—A committee has been appointed and immediate steps are being taken to organize and put into operation a voluntary pool in time for hauling this year's crop.

The Pictou Celebration

PICTOU, July 19—The Hector celebration transferred its activity to-day to New Glasgow, for most part, after sculling races and minor events here this morning; nevertheless huge crowds took advantage of the splendid weather and spent the day in outings of every description on land and water. A feature of Athletic events was breaking of maritime pole vault record, by Len MacDonald, formerly of Pictou, now of Sydney, who made a new record of eleven feet five and three sixteenths inches. Record was formrely held by William Halfpenny of Charlottetown, eleven four and half feet. George Walker of Charlottetown took third place in sword dance and highland fling in Highland Games. Charlottetown did well in junior and intermediate sports held at New Glasgow in the afternoon, but King's College and Antigonish carried of fthe bulk of prizes. McCuggan, Charlottetown Abbies, won hundred yards dash in eleven seconds, and came third in running high jump for seniors, Hattie of King's wining. McCassie of Charlottetown won the four forty for seniors in sixty five seconds. McCassie also won the pole voult, making eight foot six, hundred and twenty yards dash.

White Scores Knockout

NEW YORK, July 19—Charley White Chicago, lightweight contender, tapped Ritchie Mitchell, Milwaukee boxer to-night, in brief but slashing battle, before a crowd of more than ten thousand in Velodrome but scored a technical knockout in the fourth round, when Mitchell's seconds tossed the sponge in the ring.

New Glasgow Celebrates

NEW GLASGOW, July 19—This was New Glasgow's big day in the Hector Celebration. Large crowds gathered to meet the Governor General, headed by the pipers band. The 78th Highland Artillery and naval forces paraded through the streets. The huge civilian parade with many artistic floats representing industries of the town, paraded from Trenton to New Glasgow. It was the biggest thing of its kind ever seen here.

Races Postponed

PICTOU, July 19—Rough water caused the postponement of the rowing events scheduled for to-day when all shells entered in of the four oared junior contest were either swamped or returned to the floats full of water.

Mining Fatality

SPRINGHILL, July 19—Jacob David, polish miner, was instally killed and Richard Walsh dangerously injured in cave in of shaft of number two slope at fifty four hundred feet level this afternoon. David was thrown thirty feet by force of explosion accompanying cave in, and Walsh was buried in debris. The mine will be idle till after the funeral.

Hibernians to Fight K.K.K.

MONTREAL, July 19.—A declaration of the Ancient Order of Hibernians as an active militant force pledged to fight to a finish with the Klu Klux Klan is confidently looked for when it is expected a resolution based on Hon. Patrick O'Donnell's disclosures before the convention will be brought forward for adoption. Judge O'Donnell, of Chicago on account of the work done by the American Unity League made a strong indictment of the Klu Klux Klan as a body treasonable to the state.

Curzon Will Act Without Approval of French Govt.

LONDON, July 19—More than two hours were given by the British Cabinet to-day to a careful examination of the Government's reply to the German reparation memorandum as drawn up by Lord Curzon, Secretary for Foreign Affairs. A number of modifications were made in the reply and supplementary documents will be given further examination by Curzon and associates this afternoon, and it is hoped the note will be in the hands of the Allies before the weekend,

PARIS, July 19—The German Government is striving to have the forthcoming British note on reparations convey to the French Government Germany's willingness to cease passive resistance in the Ruhr, subject to certain concessions on the part of France. This information reached the French Government on what is regarded as unquestionable but unofficial authority.

More Men Returning To Work

1750 Are Now Back at Steel Plant.

SPRINGHILL, July 19—Miners at Westville went back to work this morning and other mines in Pictou fields will follow suit, according to a message received at Springhill this morning. It is expected that a majority of the mines in the mainland will side with John L. Lewis against the MacLachlan faction. John Foster, International organizer from Indianapolis, has gone to Cape Breton where he will aid Silby Barrett in straightening out the existing tangle. MacLachlan is expected to conduct the fight against the Lewis edict. W. J. Calleagy and B. A. Frampton, both U.M.W. officers, reached Sydney this morning and left for Glace Bay to consult with Silby Barrett. More men returned to work this morning, numbering about fifty. There are now 1751 men working on the steel plant, and eighteen hundred tons of coal were moved from bank number two yesterday.

British Reply On Reparations Is Now Ready For Submission

Germany Also Wants Conciliation.

LONDON, July 19—A draft of British note to Germary was completed today, and it is expected one sitting of Cabinet will suffice to secure approval of the Ministers in which case it will probably be despatched to the Allied Governments and to Washington on Friday. It is generally understood the document will not see the light of day until in the hands of German Government, date of which will depend on length of time Britain must wait for replies from Allies. France may employ delaying tactics but it is believed that after waiting reasonable time Curzon will despatch not to Germany without approval of France.

Dead Sea Fruit

"In a box, were you? Then I don't see how he could have seen you," she went on. "I am sure he did not look that way, and if you were sitting with your back to the circle, your face would not be seen."

"But why are you saying all this?" asked Judy. "What happened?"

"The curtain had just gone up, and we were intensely interested, —both of us. It was the moment when Margaret Tenterden—the wife, you know—comes on in her evening frock, with that beautiful velvet coat on. Every woman's eyes were glued to it at once. Suddenly I heard him say "Good God!" and the next moment he was gone!"

"Out of the theatre!" cried Judy, with a little gasp. "But of course you know where he is?"

"Yes, at this moment he is on a West-bound train—let me see—somewhere between Toronto and Winnipeg."

"Tell me everything!" said Judy faintly, as she sank down on the edge of a chair, her eyes cleaving to Jean Dempster's face.

Jean regarded her steadily for a moment, as if seeking to gauge her depths, and so arrive at some decision regarding how much she shuld or could tell her. She sat down in her own armchair before the desk, and asked quietly:

I suppose you know that your brother has had a pretty hard time in New York?"

"We have gathered that he has not been the success that he expected," answered Judy rather painfully, for it cost her something to sit there, opposite this plain working Scotswoman, and hear her discuss Alan so casually—as it seemed to her.

"Six months is hardly long enough to achieve success—at least honestly—anywhere," said Jean in the same steady, quiet voice. "And your brother did not get in with the right kind of people."

"He had several introductions. Some of them quite good, we thought at the time."

"They were no use at all. He did not even get a simple suggestion from them."

"Then tell me what he has actually been doing, will you"

"He has tried a good many things. He had a secretarial post for a few weeks, but the Syndicate burst up They took him because they said he looked like a duke, and would impress callers. That was quite good while it lasted--

"That was at the very beginning of course, when he wrote in such good spirits?" suggested Judy.

Jean nodded.

"From that he went to a clerk's post, poorly paid, and with no prospects. After that there were other things, but as he left my particular boarding house in August, I don't know every step of the way. I had not seen him for nearly two months; certainly not for a considerable time before Christmas; and when I wrote to him at Christmas he did not answer, though he called at the house for his Christmas letters."

"And how did you happen to meet him last night? Was that accidental?"

"It was, and it wasn't. You see, the night before last he called at Isaacstein's to bid me good-bye, as he was going out West."

"To a fresh post of some kind?" asked Judy, with a glimmer of hope, though she was much distressed to hear that they had missed him by so few hours.

"Not exactly a post. A rich Scotsman has sent him to his brother's ranch in Alberta, somewhere beyond or near Calgary, and he arranger to go off by the midnight train. I had two seats given me for the Manhattan, and we went together, as a sort of ploy for the last time. I suppose that he went direct from the theatre to the station. Of course it was too late for me to go to the Central after the theatre came out, though I was tempted."

"He didn't write, then, or send you any explanation?"

"None."

"Then what is to be done now? Did he give you the address of the Alberta ranch?"

Jean shook her head. By this time, she had made up her mind about Judith Rankine, and her heart was warming to her. Her eyes were so true and kind, and her voice, with its little note of distress and forlornness, appealed to her mightily.

"He was not a man who talked much about himself or his affairs," Jean said. "For instance, he did not tell me he had a sister."

Judy looked through the window, with a far-away expression in her eyes.

"I am not much surprised at that, after what you have told me. Of course, it was all very different from anything he had ever known. Surely it was a frightful mistake for him to come to America!"

"It was a mistake for most of them to come," assented Jean quietly. "Your brother isn't the type that makes good here. He's too fine. What he suffered—but there, I don't want to go on like that, and he never spoke of any of it, anyway."

"But what are we to do?" said Judy, wringing her hands a little "Can't we find or go after him?"

"Who are 'we'?" asked Jean, on the spur of the moment.

"Miss Carlyon—that is Miss Tenterden and I,' said Judy quickly. "I don't know how I am to tell her! Is there no way of finding out where the Alberta address is; and how far it is out there? Could I go and come in a day or two?"

Jean Dempster smiled and shook her head.

"I'm not sure of the exact distance, but it's nearer two thousand miles than one thousand from New York, Miss Rankine."

"Two thousand miles!" echoed Judy, in incredulous amazement. "Why, that is as far as we have come!"

"Further. But this is the land of immense distances. You can't go there after him, Miss Rankine, unless you have both time and money. But I could get the address for you, I think, though he did not give it to me. I know the name of the man who has sent him out. I could not out his address for you, if you would like to go and see him yourself; but, on the whole, I wouldn't advise you to."

She added this as an afterthought, reflecting that perhaps the millionaire Fordyce—if all the stories about him were true—would not be likely to spare her feelings.

"I'd rather not go and see him. How did my brother get to know him?"

"He was in the employment of his firm and had a row with the manager about some abuses he found there. He hadn't learned to shut his eyes to abuses. I don't think he would ever learn that—would he? The man's name is Fordyce. He has a factory on the East Side. I can easily get at him on the telephone, or by letter, or interview, if you would like his address."

"Of course I should like his address. I must get it. We must cable to him or something."

"Very well, Miss Rankine. I'll find it all out for you some time to-day. And where can I send it?"

"We are at the Holland House."

Jean scribbled it down on the edge of her tablet, and at the moment the bell-boy brought an urgent message.

"I am sorry, but I have to attend to my business, Miss Rankine," she said, as she rose. "I wish I had something brighter to tell you about your brother."

Judy' face was now very sad, and her eyes rather hopeless.

"We have both been uncomfortable in our minds about him for a long time, and, as you have been so very kind to Alan, I ought to tell you that Miss Tenterden is his promised wife."

Jean Dempster stood still in the middle of the floor, as if petrified with astonishment.

"That lovely lady who doesn't look as if she was an ordinary human being at all! Oh, Miss Rankine, isn't it a frightful tragedy?"

"You have said the right word. And God knows what the end will be! Then you will try and get the address for me? I shall have to go home now and tell Carlotta."

"You don't think me rude if I ask a question, Miss Rankine? What brought him to this? Of course anybody with half an eye could see that he was not an ordinary man at all—that he was a gentleman—as well as one by bringing up and training."

"Misfortunes. I can't go into it all. It's a long, sad story. I hope we shall meet again— we must! Carlotta will wish to see you, Miss Dempster. I don't know how to thank you. I do not think I can even try! But I'm thankful—oh, so thankful!—he had a friend like you here."

"I did my best," said Jean simply. "And, oh, I've seen such a lot of mothers' sons stranded out here! It's cruel, I think! I wish something could be done to prevent it!"

"How did you come here? I suppose your family are with you?"

Jean shook her head.

"No. I left Scotland to get away from my old self. I've had my share of tragedy. I'm fed up with it! I've seen little else."

"It has given you the understanding heart," said Judy. and moved by an uncontrollable impulse, she leaned forward and touched Jean Dempster's cheek with her lips.

CHAPTER XXVI.

His Wife

Several times that afternoon Jean Dempster 'phoned to the East Side Factory asking for Mr. Fordyce. Various officials and subordinates inquired her business, but to each and all Miss Dempster replied that she must talk with Mr. Fordyce himself. Finally she had to leave her office without meeting with success, but left her name and number to be passed on to him the moment he was available. Upon reflection she added that the business was urgent, and that Mr. Fordyce would probably think so when he heard it.

She went home to Mrs. Isaacstein's feeling oddly detached from all her fellow-inmates and from the whole ordinary current of her life.

Judith Rankine had not told her much, but Jean had intuitive faculty largely developed, and had small difficulty in piecing the story together. It was, however, though true in some essentials, considerable wide of the mark.

DARTMOUTH PERRY BOAT COLLIDES

With British Warship In Thick Fog.

(Halifax Citizen)

What might have been a collision, resulting in the loss of many lives, occurred yesterday morning, when the ferry boat Halifax collided with the British warship Constance. The Constance was swinging on a hundred fathom of chain: and the big ship full 300 feet long swung,, by reason of the current, right across the ferry path. The fog was thick: the ferry boat was going at slow speed: every precaution was taken by the men in the wheel house to proceed with safety; but with a ship the length of the Constance, riding at the end of 300 feet of chain, and that in the danger zone—a collision was bound to occur.

Had it been the Chebucto— a boat far mare difficult to slow down—there certainly would have been a disaster that would have made this community sit up and take notice It would have been another catastrophe that would have brought to mind the horrors of that terrific collision of 1917, that burned and drowned more than 1600 people.

AT THE CITY HALL

The weekly meeting of the Council was held yesterday afternoon. Mayor Cook presided and the full board of Councillors were present.

After the usual preliminaries of the meeting, the following matters received consideration.

Messrs. McGrath & McGrath, Solicitors, on behalf of St. Michael's Orphanage, asked that a definite time be set for the arbitration on land expropriated by the Council some time ago. The City Engineer's Department is at present preparing the necessary plans and other data on the many properties expropriated, which will be tabled at the next regular meeting. Arrangements will then be made for the arbitrations with a view to settlement of claims.

S. O. Steel & Sons wrote calling attention to the damage done their premises through surface water. The City Engineer will investigate the the matter and report.

Permits to repair dwellings were granted as follows: H. Parsons, Pleasant Street; C. F. Chancey, Alexander Street, subject to the approval of the City Engineer.

James Shield's application to rebuild stable, Portugal Cove Road, was referred to the Department of Public Health.

The following plans were passed, subject to the approval of the City Engineer and on the usual conditions:—Dwelling: J. R. Chalker, Quidi Vidi Road; rear extension John Larkin, Queen's Road.

The Mobile watershed was again the subject of discussion, and it was ordered that a survey of the property be immediately proceeded with.

Orders were given for the removal of the old fishmarket, Steer's Cove, and the placing of the new market on the site decided upon.

The City Engineer's report for the week was read. He stated that the work on the new pipe line was very satisfactory, 1600 feet of excavation being done and 900 feet of 20 inch pipe laid to date, and that the balance of the work would likely be completed within the next week. He also stated that the Venturi Meter recorded a waer supply of six and a half million gallons per day, and that the Lake level has fallen .85 ft. below crest.

The oiling of streets was talked over, and it was suggested that Military Road, from Cavendish Sq., to Victoria Street, needed attention in this respect. If the allocation will permit, this work will be proceeded with.

Notice of motion was given for the adoption of Rules and Regulations in connection with Bowring Park.

Report of the City Health Officer for the week showed 10 new cases of Scarlet Fever.

The City Engineer was instructed to prepare and submit at the next regular meeting plans and specifications for the New Sanitary Stables.

Requisitions for the various Departments were acceded to, and payment of accounts for week authorized.

The meeting then adjourned.

Premier Baldwin's Pronouncement on Reparations Reply

IN HIS reparations statement in the House of Comons last week, Premier Baldwin laid stress at the start upon the thought that there is but one ground of divergence among the powers concerned with reparations, and that this was to the best means to attain the ends vital to all—the payment of reparations, and the re-establishment of the security of Europe. The Allies had grudged nothing in the past nor would they grudge anything in the future to ensure these ends, he said.

"This responsibility," continued the Prime Minister," is acknowledged and shared in equal measure by France, Italy, Belgium and ourselves. Perhaps it may be held to devolve in more special measure upon the French and British nations by virtue of the great sacrifices they made side by side in the years of trial, by the intimacy in fact and memory which unites them to-day, and, not the least by the experience these two ancient civilizations hav shared thru out the centuries.

A similar community of thought and action binds us in the present emergency to our other Allies whose interests are in no respect divergent to our own. In a common desire for settlement and pacification, and still more for no further or unreasonable delay, we can speak together frankly and with the full comprehension of partners bound by an equal destiny to thes ame task. The whispers of interested parties cannot be allowed on either side of the Channel or in any part of Europe to deflect us from that duty by any reservations or by carefully fostered misunderstandings. In all we are about to say or do, His Majesty's Government is moved, as we know the heart of France to be moved—and the same applies equally to our other allies—by the single desire that good-will between the nations who have endured together shall be maintained and that each shall obtain what is her due.

"We are as determined as any of our allies that Germany shall make reparations for the damages done in the great war to the fullest extent of her capacity. We have never wavered on this point. I do not believe our people ever will. Indeed, we go further, and we are ready, as we have said on many occasions, as was reported in Paris in January last, to use every measure to compel Germany to pay up to the amount of her capacity.

"We are conscious, however, as a business nation, that if we ask Germany to pay in excess of her capacity we shall not succeed. We and our allies will be the main sufferers and we are firmly convinced that methods which can only result in the ruin of Germany would be fatal to this country, to our allies and to the whole of Europe.

Loyal to Alliance

"From the beginning we have made it clear that in our opinion the occupation of the Ruhr was not calculated to produce the maximum amount of reparation payment for the Allies. In January we made in Paris an offer which we regarded as a very generous settlement in order to avoid what seemed to us an economic disaster. That offer was rejected by our Allies and since then we have stood aside, animated by a spirit of sincere loyalty to the alliance which has been, and continues to be, in our opinion, the main security for Europeean peace.

"Many of the consequences which were then anticipated are in course of fulfilment. The Allies are obtaining less reparation than they did before the occupation and what reparation they are receiving is being exacted at the price of the growing dislocation of the German economic system and, as seems probable, of the future total collapse of the system itself.

"The French and Belgian governments assure us that their whole object in occupying the Ruhr is to secure the payment of reparations. If that be so, the difference between us is one of method rather than of aim, but we are convinced that the indefinite continuation of this state of affairs is fraught with gravest peril.

"Germany herself appears to be moving fast toward economic chaos which may itself be succeeded by ruin. Local populations are in many cases suffering severely, and there are genuine apprehensions of a shortage of food.

"Nor is this a situation that concerns Germany alone. In proportion as the productive power of that country is exhausted, so does the recovery of her credit and the payment of her debts recede into the dimmer distance.

Paying the Price

"Every country in Europe is paying the price for this condition of affairs. One country pays in a steadily falling exchange, another in diminished trade, a third in increasing unemployment. If we were called up on to state or defend the case of our own country alone, we could without difficulty demonstrate the serious effect already produced upon British trade. In spite of very great expenditure by the State (the figure is some £400,000,000 since the armistice) we have still unemployment on a large scale in this country. Not alone does our devastation continue instead of being repaired, but it continues increasingly as the moral effects spread among our people.

"Public opinion throughout Europe and not the least in Great Britain, is becoming more and more sensitive to these conditions and alarmed at their continuance. It is not too much to say that the recovery of the world is in danger and that the peace for which so many sacrifices were borne is at stake.

"It is in these circumstances that the necessity for action has been increasingly impressed upon His Majesty's Government. The exchange of friendly conversations, useful as they are, does not appear to lead all cases to positive results. It is becoming evident that the attitude of the principal parties concerned must be more clearly defined.

"If the situation has been at all correctly described in the preceding paragraphs it cannot be left to right itself. There will, I believe, be a general agreement to these propositions:

"That the period of conflict should as soon as possible be terminated;

"That the indefinite ocupation by one country of the territory of another in time of peace is a phenomenon, rare and regrettable in itself, to which honorable end should as soon as possible be found;

"That thed ebtor should not merely bec alled upon to pay his debt but should be placed in a position where he can do so;

"That his capacity, where it is in doubt, should be tested and determined and that united efforts should be made to accomplish these ends.

Great Questions

"Peace will not be finally obtained and recovery will not be ensured until a solution has been found to these three great questions. They are:

"1—Payment of reparations;

"2—Settlement of inter-allied debts;

"3—Security of pacified Europe.

"To these questions the attention of the world should be turned.

I npursuit of these aims His Majesty's Government is so far from desiring to deprive France and Belgium of their legal claim that they wish to assist them in their realization. Our desire is for advance, if it can be made, and for finality, if it can be obtained. And in these aspirations, as well as in our view of the general situation, we are hopeful of obtaining the concurrence of France and Belgium, no less than that of Italy.

"Indeed we have every reason to believe that the views of the Italian Government are in substantial agreement with our own. What then are the steps which we think ought to be taken?

"The German note of June 7, in reply to the definite suggestion which was addressed to the German Government, proposed an investigation of Germany's capacity to pay, by an impartial body, coupled with an engagement to pay the amounts determined in the manner that might be proposed. It further contained the offer of a series of concrete guarantees.

Should be Examined

"We do not think these suggestions whether they be adequate or not, should be ignored. We are unable to agree that correspondence of this nature upon matters affecting the interest of all should be wholly one-sided or that proposals which may be found to contain in themselves germs of a possible settlement should be treated with indifference.

"We hold that they should be examined and explored in order that we may discover whether there lies within them a possibility of progress. Understanding that the French and Belgian Governments are not disposed to take the initiative in suggesting a reply—although we would have gladly welcomed any such action on their part—we have informed these governments, as also the Italian Governments, that we are willing to assume the responsibility of preparing a draft reply ourselves.

"Adhering, however, as we do to the view which we expressed on the last occasion, that united action is better than separate or isolated action, we shall submit the reply with thel east possible delay to our allies for their consideration and remarks, and we indulge in the hope that we may be able to arrive at agreement with them on the terms."

The 'Advocate's' Attitude

Considerable interest has been created over the Advocate's frank statement of yesterday regarding the Matter of Humber employment.

The Advocate does not retract one word spoken yesterday. The Advocate means all it said. There is justification for the attitude taken; and we believe we have a large section of public opinion behind us.

The men who want work and who have been expecting work on the Humber will certainly agree that the time has come for somebody to "get a move on."

If the existing condition of affairs continue, disappointment will increase from day to day, not only with men requiring employment but with the district representatives whose life is harassed with the worries of looking after the needs of their constituents.

There is no intention, on our part, to take the position that the Humber Industry must, perforce, find employment for the numbers of men, which are daily increasing because of the practical failure to date of our fisheries in certain sections of the country.

That would be unreasonable.

The truth is, however, that even the most limited expectations regarding the numbers to be employed, have not been realised; and because of this comparative failure, many men have not been providing for the future, who reasonably expected work as soon as the Humber measure was ratified.

The fishery has failed in many sections. It will not be an average voyage unless the balance of the season is attended with extraordinary fishing. The season is advancing and the months are getting fewer during which workmen must earn enough to make both ends meet.

There are very many who have earned nothing for months and are living on the hope of employment.

These men do not want to be paupers; nor do they want assistance from the Government. The Government can't afford it anyhow. Circumstances of the past few years demanded Government action in this way; but an end was sought to make such assistance no longer a necessity. The Government hoped and the people hoped that the initiation of the Humber Policy and the speeding of its construction operations would greatly relieve them of the burden of looking after general relief throughout the country.

They still hope it; but they cannot continue to do so unless the Humber construction work shows greater signs of practical good by the employment of further numbers of men.

Surely the obligations which the country has undertaken entitles it to some consideration regarding present urgent requirements of numbers of our workingmen.

What Will France Do?

Exchanges to hand by yesterday's mail contain more extended reports of Premier Baldwin's reparations statement than were afforded us through the public despatch, and the impression left by a perusal of the British Prime Minister's sixteen-minute speech is that while the attitude of Britain on the reparations question is set forth in the most conciliatory teams, there is nevertheless a very evident determination to fearlessly pursue the only course that can lead to results satisfactory to the majority of the nations concerned.

The British reply to Germany is now prepared and has been given, after some slight modifications, the approval of the Cabinet. It is hoped to have it in the hands of the Allies by to-morrow.

What will France do?

On the answer to this question great and grave issues depend.

The concensus of opinion seems to be that the French Government will not recede from the stand it has already taken. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that although France must have known what attitude Great Britain would take before Premier Baldwin made his statement, it did not offer in advance any conciliatory compromises which would have prevented so grave and divisive a step as a formal declaration of British policy distinctly out of sympathy with French policy. Hence if the French Government could not see its way to act before the Ministerial statements, there would seem to be nothing in them calculated to induce M. Poincare and his colleagues to act now.

Premier Baldwin intimates that Italy already is in practical agreement with British policy. The fact that he knows this shows that there have been conferences with the Italian Government. It is incredible that similar conferences have not been held with the French and Belgian Governments. Yet Mr. Baldwin is not able to announce agreement with them. This would seem to indicate that France and Belgium have already heard, and failed to agree with, the coming British proposals.

On the other hand it may be that the French will come to the conclusion that—no matter how convinced they are that their Ruhr policy is right and the British method wrong—they will still stand to gain more by keeping in shoulder touch with Britain and Italy than by continuing alone their pressure on the Ruhr. This is the best hope left for a harmonious conclusion.

Another hope of amicable settlement lies in the possibility of France's acceptance of the proposal for an indepent investigation into Germany's ability to meet the reparations demands. In the words of Premier Baldwin, the difference between Britain and France is one of method rather than of aim, and the hope so generally expressed is that in their consideration of the British reply to Germany, the French leaders will be influenced rather by the spirit of reason than that of intollerance.

BUY COAL NOW

Householders in various Eastern Canadian towns and cities are being advised to buy in their winter stocks of coal without delay and so avoid the unpleasant contingency of being confronted with a fall shortage in addition to greatly increased prices.

The present and forecasted strike troubles in the anthracite and bituminous coal areas of Canada and United States will, it is believed, have a serious effect on the next winter's coal supply, making it advisable for those who are in a position to do so to get in their winter coal now. If short stocks and high prices prevail during the coming autumn, Newfoundland will suffer in common with other consumers, and the warning that is being voiced in Canada might be harkened to here with beneficial results.

Terra Nova's Rugged Beauty

For many classes of our people this is the season of holidays.

In the summer, the spirit of recreation moves abroad; and on holidays and after the daily work numbers of people go countrywards to enjoy the freshness of our country climate and to admire the natural beauty of our scenery.

All over the country our school boys and girls are freed from their monotonous school tasks, and are in our woodlands and countrysides, near our sparkling lakes and rippling streams or on the broad bosom of our encircling sea, gathering rest and storing up energy for another year's work.

By all means let them enjoy themselves amidst our natural and rugged beauty.

Some of these may enjoy themselves to the full, but others cannot be spared from the necessary struggles in our summer season to get the wherewithal to live during the winter months. Many a fisherman's son must leave his school tasks and begin his holidays in the midships of a fishing punt. Life is hard to these lads. The salt sprays beat in their faces and tell of the hardship and roughness of their fathers' lives. Though beset with dangers on every side from morn till eve, the fisher's task is such a manly vocation, as creates sterling character and fits one for the struggles of life.

All honor then to the lads who help their fathers by going down to the sea, and thereby wresting a livelihood from the ocean's breast. There, they too, can see the rugged windswept beauty of our coasts and learn, in manly contact, Nature's own lesson.

But not only the school boys and girls, clerks from behind the counter, office hands, business men and all classes of workers look with eager eyes countrywards to scent the country breeze and recuperate from their daily tasks.

Even, from over the seas, journey large numbers of tourists to find delight under our summer skies.

We have a beautiful country; bare and rugged though it may sometimes be. We should love our land of the caribou, our salmon and trout streams, our wooded hillsides, silver lakes and dancing streams. The ruggedness of our winter, beautiful in itself, accentuates the summer beauty of Terra Nova; and the snow-burdened trees, the swirling snowdrifts, the glassy icebergs and the cold west winds are but the forerunners of summer splendour and sun-warmed breezes.

Those whose minds are wracked with business worries, those whose feet are tired with the race for a living are taking, in their turn, their holidays and seeking, for the most part, the quiet spirit of the woods, which moves in the green valley or beside the brook as it steals its babbling way amid the tangled woods or over moss grown stones.

The quiet will do them good. Terra Nova won't fail them. Those who see our beauty always long for it again and we long for it more and more when we wander from our native shore.

The snow laden land of winter is also a glorious summer land, for the canvas tent, the tree shaded country hut.

Let those who cannot go on a holiday not covet others who go to rest from care and work.

Go to the woods and hills!

If thou art worn and hard beset
With sorrows, that thou would'st forget,
If thou would'st read a lesson that will keep
Thy heart from fainting and thy soul from sleep,
Go to our woods and hills. No tears
Dim the sweet look that Nature wears.

Losing Trained Teachers

The Minister of Education in New South Wales, says an exchange, has a serious grievance in connection with the training of girl teachers who after being given a four years' course in the training college and getting degrees in arts and science "go and get married" without the slightest regard for their agreement to give service in return for their training.

Heretofore, Newfoundland has not had any such grievance as this for the simple reason that but very few of our girl teachers have been given professional training by the State or through any other agency. Should the problem arise at any time in the future it would be as well if the head of our Educational Department took a leaf out of the book of the N. S. W. Minister, who says that in future he will hold by his bond even unto the limit of heartbreak, and if any gentleman wants a bride from his department he must pay for her perfections.

Good Luck For Union Vessels

The news as seen in another column that two Union vessels are returning home with full cargoes of fish from Wolf Bay is the first encouraging northern report we have seen this season.

Captains Charlie and Peter Blackwood, both of Brookfield, B.B., will therefore be the first arrivals from the fishery, and the fact that they have been sent out from the Fishermen's Headquarters at Port Union will add to the interest created by their good fortune.

The Union Trading Company has done a lot of outfitting this year and we trust that all their other schooners will be as fortunate.

This instance is interesting from the fact that it shows how thoroughly Port Union can serve the interests of the people. They build the vessels, send them to the fisheries, and export their fish in their own bottoms.

F. P. U. Schooners Secured Loads of Fish at Wolf Bay

ARE RETURNING TO PORT UNION.

Sir Wm. Coaker has received a telegram to the effect that the F. P. U. schooner, Gull Pond, Capt. Charlie Blackwood, is now returning home with nine hundred quintals of fish. This represents about a full load. The schooner Gull Pond was launched at Port Union this spring and her good luck at the fishery will be heard of gladly by our Union friends.

Sir William has also been advised that the schr. Mischief, Capt. Peter Blackwood, who also outfitted at Port Union, is returning with 800 quintals. Both schooners secured loads at Wolf Bay.

Address and Presentation

TO THE REV. CHARLES LENCH:

Rev. and Dear Sir:—

It is with no mere formality that we approach you at this time when the close relationships which have united us "The Methodist Community of Bonavista" with your good self and family for the past years are to cease as far as personal contact is concerned. Nevertheless, that blessed tie that binds our hearts in christian love knows no bounds of time and space and the inspiration of your work, and the compelling force of your personality have linked us together. The material evidences of your labor are before us while the deeper spiritual evidences of your Ministry will ever be perpetuated, we hope and trust, in the ever deepening sense of generations to come of what is required to fit them for the Greater Citizenship of the land which lies beyond, the haven where we all would be.

We recognize that no Temple can be too good for the worship of Him whom we endeavour to serve, and when you set your hand to the building of the new Church, we joined hand in hand with your mighty efforts, and we rejoice that this object has been the means of keeping us together for more than the alloted time.

We sincerely wish, and we would be more than delighted if you could have complied with our request to spend another year with us. But we realize that domestic circumstances, namely, the serious illness of your dear daughter who is now at the Sanitorium made it quite imperative for you to make the change, as you would be nearer St. John's where the Maternal and Paternal love could be more demonstrated by occasional visits to the Institution.

In passing, kindly allow us to offer our sincere appreciation to your good wife who has done excellent work in connection with the W.M.S. and other institutions for good that she has been identified with during her stay among us. Her labours here have been a splendid asset to the Methodist cause of Bonavista.

We realize Reverend Sir and thankfully acknowledge that to your unreserved enthusiasm is due the beautiful edifice in which we now worship.

We appreciate your untiring efforts in collecting monies locally and outside for the completion of the Church, also your energetic and enthusiastic work in every possible way towards the upbuilding and upliftinf of Methodism in our town since your advent amongst us.

The Church will ever be identified with your name.

We extol your ability as preacher and lecturer and pay tribute to your talent as a sweet singer of Israel, and your exceptional traits of character which have lifted you to such a high place in our esteem.

Words cannot convey all that we wish, nor can gifts measure all our regards for you, but as a tangible expression at our parting, may we ask your acceptance of the accompanying purse. It is a gift which means something more than formal compliment. It registers cordial approval of your excellent work on behalf of our community.

It is intended as a small acknowledgment of your many services during the past seven years that you spent in our midst.

It is an evidence of the confidence reposed by the general public in you, and of the special regard of those whom we have the honor to represent, namely, the Methodist of the Community, and we ask you to receive Reverend Sir, from our hands, this purse, and receive with it, for yourself, and on behalf of your good wife and family, our best wishes for your individual welfare, the welfare of your household and the prosperity of the noble and devout church that you represent.

May your future labours in the Master's vine-yard be crowned with abundant success just as your past work has left an indelible impression for good in every circuit in which you have ministered.

Signed on behalf of the congregation.

REPLY.

GENTDEMEN:—

I cannot express how grately I appreciate this evidence of your good will towards my family and myself. During the seven years of my sojourn among you, we have tried to serve you to the best of our ability. The last four months has evidenced the wisdom of our efforts. We leave you with the prayer that God's blessing may rest upon you more and yet more abundantly.

Detroit Is Busy "Wet" Centre

DETROIT, Mich., June 29.—Beer and liquor are obtainable at scores of places in the heart of Detroit, in road houses, in the outlying districts and in restaurants, soft drink establishments and similar places in the city and in Ecorse, Wyandotte and other down river towns. But more than fifty per cent. of the illicit beverages sold is made in and around Detroit.

This is the consensus of opinion of rum runners, police, federal and local peace officers and Canadian customs officials. The bootleggers who are selling alleged Canadian whiskey claim that it is genuine Canadian—but they stand alone in their assertions.

The runners who are operating boats across the Canadian river—and they are openly and steadily at it—admit that hey are NOT transporting much whiskey.

An operator sat in his boat at Petit Cote, the Canadian terminal for the beer running fleet, taking on a load.

"Whiskey running is falling off," he said. "In the first place there is little demand. The Americans are apparently getting all the whiskey they want, but it isn't coming from Canada. Our customers over there don't ask us for whiskey. They want beer."

This operator averages about four hundred gallons of beer a day in his out board motor row boat. He makes, at fifty cents a case, about $655 for four trips. He clears his boat from the Canadian port with regular clearance papers, labelled "Beer for export." When he leaves port he can't go back until his cargo has been discharged, and he has been coming in and out for three years.

Customs officials at Windsor, who are in close touch with the amount of liquor and beer taken out of the country, refuse to disclose figures. But one of them said, "anyone who thinks they are running large quantities of whiskey is crazy."

The cafe and road house owners, and proprietors of other establishments on this side where liquor is sold, do NOT get their "hard" liquor from Canada, is the claim of the runners. Many of them buy it as Canadian liquor, but it is actually made in Detroit and fitted with counterfeit labels.

Canadian distillery officials scoff at the stories of great quantities of whiskey going across the river. They claim that they have more business than they can handle, and that it would be exceedingly difficult for anyone to get the men to smuggle. In fact, there have been cases reported to the customs officials where attempts were made to smuggle alleged Canadian liquor from Detroit into Canada, to be disposed of in Windsor. One shipment was confiscated. It was tested and found to be alcohol, colored and flavored.

Detroit is wet. One can order beer by the case, and it will be delivered to his home. It is possible to obtain whiskey in many hotels. In the heart of the city, beer, wine and whiskey are sold openly. Synthetic gin is plentiful. But tracing down every possible source, and the conclusion invariably reached is that not more than 15,000 or 16,000 gallons of beer and whiskey—and virtually all of it is beer—are coming across or under the Detroit river. Home brew, sometimes disguised as brewery beer, "faked" whiskey, in Canadian labelled bottles, and synthetic gin, in bottles labelled as pre-prohibition gin, are dispensed freely.

But more than fifty per cent of Detroit's wetness is manufactured in Detroit.

Training Immigrants As American Farmers

LONDON, June 25 (By mail to the Canadian Press)—Professor Robert Wallace, of Edinburgh University, a teacher of agriculture of over forty year's experience, and who over thirty years ago drew up for the then Premier of New South Wales the system of agricultural education which was soon after inaugurated in that State, is convinced that the new scheme of training farmers proposed to be established in various parts of the States, is useless. Six thousand British emigrants, specially selected, are to be treated under the scheme, if eventually adopted.

No such admittedly plausible venture has succeeded in any part of the world, declares Professor Wallace, because it is fundamentally wrong in principle. Practical farming cannot be learned when inexperienced men and boys are crowded together in comparatively small areas without room to work and without a sufficient staff of men of experience who possess the faculty to instruct them. No the one and only way to get the desiderated thousands of new settlers (the six thousand being only the "forerunners of others") on to the land, is to start with an organization which will, on the immigrants' arrival distribute them far and wide, wherever, in short, labor is urgently wanted on the land by the present occupiers belonging to the responsible class, who will prove to be the best possible teachers, is the opinion of Professor Wallace. This would undoubtedly take a large amount of skilled organizing, for it would be necessary to keep in touch with the newcomers while they are learning their business, in view of the Government guarantee to provide them later with farms. The cost would, however, be infinitely less than that of the proposed scheme, which is to cost nine million pounds.

Another fundamental mistake of the proposal, Professor Wallace adds, is confining it to "men and boys." "No new country can ever be settled," says the professor, "either from the agricultural or social point of view, without thousands of women of the right sort, representing all classes in social life. Under a well-devised and efficiently directed scheme of immigration such as I indicate, many middle-class women could be placed as lady helps, on the Canadian system, in households where they would be heartily welcome; and the girls of the servant type could be placed where they are wanted."

Consumption Cure Highly Promising

New Vaccine Is Receiving Trial By Doctors In England.

The striking success of Professor Georges Dreyer's vaccine against consumpion has prompted the Medical research Council to arrange a series of trials of the treatment by doctors in various parts of the country.

"There is good ground for hope that a very important advance in the curative treatment of tuberculosis and of some other diseases has been made," said the Medical Research Council in an official statement published in the London Daily Express.

This is probably the most definite statement concerning the possibility of curing consumption ever made by so eminent a scientific body. Many claims of cures for tuberculosis have been examined in recent years, and scientists have always been extremely cautious against raising unfounded hopes.

"FAVORABLE"

The statement continues:

"When it had been shown by experiment that small animals, when infected with tubercle bacilli, were improved or lost the signs of active disease after the use of Professor Dreyer's new 'antigen' or vaccine, arrangements were made for trials of this treatment under suitable control at three hospitals in London. The results which have been obtained hitherto have been favorable almost without exception.

"No final opinion can be passed on these resulas, highly promising as they now seem to be, until a longer period has elapsed. In cases of tuberclosis disease of the glands and of the skin it can be said already that the results of this treatment have surpassed any known to have been attained regularly by other methods.

"Encouraging results have also been gained in the treatment of infections like those in puerperal fever and other septic conditions. Until these laboratory and hospital results had been achieved publication of Professor Dreyer's method was withheld.

SMALL COST.

"Much has still to be learned af the best modes of application of the treatment, and it is not ready yet for general use. For the series of trials now in view supplies of the new vaccine will be prepared for distribution at the Oxford School of Pathology.

"As soon as the progress of the patients under treatment has been sufficiently watched and recorded, full publication will be made of the clinical results which have been obtained. If these justify the hopes which have been formed, and lead to a wide use of the new treatment, it is believed that, by arrangements which have already been made by the Medical Research Council, adequate supplies of the necessary 'antigen' will be ready at small cost."

Wife Says Uncle Sold Her

Woman, 24, Declares $500 Was Paid by Husband, Now 65.

LA PORTE, Ind., July 12.—Alleging that she was "sold" to her 65-year old husband, Mrs. Sarah Baker, a 24 year old wife, has filed suit for divorce in the Porter Circuit Court.

Mrs. Baker claims that her uncle, who was her guardian, forced her to marry James C. Baker when she was 18 years old and received $500 payment from the old man.

Threats of death from her uncle, she said, made her accept the unhappy union and similar threats from her husband have since kept her from leaving him. She has one child, a son, 1 year old.

Wider Seps to Inform Public of T.B. Needed

LONDON, June 27 (by mail)—An important reserved judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice McCardie in the King's Bench on the subject of the letting of furnished houses. He found that the tenant of a furnished house in St. Alban's was justified in renouncing his tenancy and quitting the house, because, though the landlady's agent had expressly warranted that the house was reasonably fit for immediate occupation, in fact there was a substantial risk that the house and its contents were so infected with tuberculous bacilli when let as to constitute an actual danger to the incoming tenant.

The plaintiff, Mr. Brian Merrick Collins, of Argyle Lodge, Harpenden-road, St. Albans, had claimed from Mrs. Elsie Hopkins, a widow, the return of £88 odd being the first instalment of the rent of a furnished house. The Poplars Blenheim-road, St. Albans, hired by the plaintiff from the defendant. His Lordship awarded the plaintiff £130 damages and costs. Judgment was entered by the plaintiff accordingly. A stay of execution was granted.

Mr. Justice McCardie, in his judgment, said that the plaintiff's case was that on October 14 last he signed an agreement to hire The Poplars for six months at 5½ guineas weekly, payable in two instalments. On October 9, before signing the agreement, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant by her agent, expressly warranted that the house was reasonably fit for immediate occupation.

The plaintiff and his wife occupied the premises on October 26. The next day they ascertained that the defendant's husband, who had previously occupied the premises, was suffering from tuberculosis, and he subsequently died in Switzerland. Acting on medical advice the plaintiff vacated the premises. The defendant admitted that her husband had resided in the house, but denied any such representation as that alleged and any bearch of contract.

QUESTION OF WARRANTY.

His Lordship said this was an important matter both to the parties and to the public. In the case of an unfurnished house ordinarily there was no warranty of fitness of occupation. Special circumstances might create such a warranty, but normally no warranty existed. The rule, however, was different with regard to the letting of furnished houses. Not only was there an implied warranty, but it was a warranty which tended in a most striking fashion for public good and the preservation of public health, which should be extended rather than restricted. The result of the decisions on this point seemed to be that there was an absolute contractual warranty in the nature of a condition by the person who let the house to the effect that it was fit for habitation.

It was not enough for the landlord to say that he only believed the house safe for habitation; it must in fact be safe for habitation. On the other hand a tenant could not renounce his contract because of the mere apprehension of risk. If the risk were a serious one no one could doubt that the tenant might remove, because a man should not be called on to expose his wife and children to peril.

There was a serious conflict of testimony, and distasteful though the duty might be, he must express his view. He had no doubt whatever that the evidence of the plaintiff and his wife was correct; they were witnesses of truth.

He doubted whether the terrible prevalence of consumption in this country was fully realised. It was an appalling scourge, and one person in seven die from it. It was the largest single cause of death between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five. What was the cause of this terrible scourge, The answer lay in the one word "infection." All infection was caused by tubercle bacilli. When a sufferer spat he ejected the bacilli in millions; so, too, when he coughed or sneezed. They were the seeds of death, and could not be resisted.

A DEADLY ASYLUM.

Probably the majority of cases of the disease were due to direct personal infection. The sputum was the most deadly asylum of the bacilli. It was dangerous when wet, but more dangerous when dry, because in the latter state the bacilli became free in millions. Invisible, sinister, and often unsuspected, they polluted the air and mingled with the dust. The public had not been made sufficiently aware of the peril, and he had no hesitation in saying that a large number of persons were infected by other means than by personal association with those suffering from the disease.

In the case before him, he was dealing with a private house. It was stated by the defendant that her husband slept on the balcony of the house, and only used the ordinary rooms of the house to a small extent, and that various steps were taken by her to disinfect the house. He was sorry to say he was unable to accept the evidence of the defendant; and he was of the opinion on the evidence that the house was left in a state which rendered it a dangerous harbour and asylum for tuberculous bacilli. He had come to the conclusion that he ought to accept the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, not only on the question of fact, but on the medical aspect of the matter. In his view the plaintiff acted wisely on the medical advice he received in getting out of the house.

CONCLUSIONS OF FACT

His Lordship stated his conclusions in the following order:

(1) He was not satisfied that the house and contents were free from tuberculous bacilli on October 26, 1922.

(2) He was satisfied that there was a substantial risk that the house and its contents were so infected with tuberculosis bacilli on October 26 as to constitute an actual danger to the plaintiff and his household.

(3) While recognising the difficulty of inference on this point, he should hold, if necessary, that in fact the house and its contents were so infected with tuberculosis bacilli on October 26 as to render it unsafe for occupation.

He therefore ruled that the house was not reasonably fit for habitation. It followed, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to renounce the tenancy and quit the house, and that he was entitled to damages, which he assessed at £130.

In conclusion, his Lordship added that far wider and more effective steps should be taken to inform the public of the ways in which the disease of consumption was spread, and to tell them the steps by which the risks of infection might be lessened.

A mere copier of nature can never produce anything great.

Simplicity of character is no hindrance to subtlety of intellect.

The mind always fears an evil the more when it is not known.

These make good doctors; a cheerful mind, rest and a moderate diet.

Neither our own help nor the world's help can we know without trial.

The innocence of the intentions abates nothing of the mischief of the deed.

He is well constituted who grieves not from what he has not and rejoices over what he has.

A miser grows rich by seeming poor—an extravagant man grows poor by seeming rich.

It is the common vice of all that in old age we become too much devoted to money.

Reading without thinking may indeed make a rich commonplace, but 'twill never make a clear head:

No man is born unto himself alone,
Who lives unto himself, he lives to none. —Quaries.

Neglected calumny soon expires. Show that you are hurt and you give the rumor the appearance of truth.

Not only is fame unsatisfying in itself, but the desire for it is apt to lay us open to many troubles.

Nothing but the right can ever be expedient, since that can never be true expediency which would sacrifice a greater good to a lesser.

No Fishing Vessels North of Emily Hr.

The Shipping Dept. received the following message yesterday from Captain Barbour of the Senef: "Arrived at Holton, no ice north of Indian Harbor, no sign of fish from Grady to Cape Charles. No fishing vessels north of Emily Harbor."

Star and C. E. I. Draw

In last evening's match the Star and C. E. I. Played to a draw, the score being 1 to 1. The game was good in spurts only, the high wind affecting the play somewhat.

Ten minutes from the start of play, in a scrimmage in front of the Star goal, J. Hart handled the ball, and a penalty was awarded which was placed by George Hunt and was too much for Power, who made a good attempt at saving.

On the ball being centred, the Star team rushed matters, and Doran, who was substitute for W. Hart, and played a splendid game, passed to Hogan, who in less than a minute, scored the equalizer. The C. E. I. lost a good many openings in the first period from corners, but the Star defence was too good.

In the second period no scoring resulted, though the C. E. I. made many good attempts, and played well against the wind. The Star defence was good, but their forwards were slow on the ball.

To-night the Guards and Saints are the contesting teams, when the game of the season is anticipated.

To Replace "Advance"

Messrs A. E. Hickman Company, Ltd., were advised recently that it is the intention of the owners of the ill-fated 'Advance,' which was lost near Halifax Harbor, to put another steamer on the Boston-Halifax-St. John's route in a few days.

No advices as to what steamer will be coming have been received. In some quarters it is stated that the 'Alliance' will be coming, but no confirmation of this can be had.

Inter-Town Football

The inter-town football series will be played at Grand Falls about the 18th of next month or after the regular league games have been played. The team will be selected from all the regular league teams and as heretofore, the party will go out by special car, and will play a series of three games.

Mr. R. E. Innes is in charge of all arrangements and the team will be announced in the course of the next couple of weeks.

WEDDING BELLS

CHURCHILL—ELLIS

A very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Thomas's Church yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock by the Rev. E. C. Earp. The contracting parties were Miss Elsie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Churchill, Quidi Vidi Road, who was married to Mr. Eric, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ellis, Southside. The bride carried a beautiful boquet of sweet peas, smilax, stock and fern, entered the church leaning on the arm of her father; the organist, Mr. S. Lewis, playing the wedding march.

The bride was attended by her sister, Jean, and Mr. S. K. Lumsden performed the duties of best man.

After the ceremony the bride and groom accompanied by the guests, motored to the home of the bride's parents, where refreshments were served, and the usual toasts were duly honored.

The young couple later left by motor for Topsail where the honeymoon will be spent.

SYDNEY, July 20—Five hundred miners, comprising the Caledonia local U. M. W., voted to-night to return to work and will report at the mines Monday. They delayed that long, they said, in order to give other striking miners a chance to consider the situation, hoping that all might return to work in a body.

Stellarton miners will meet to-morrow, Friday morning, to decide whether or not to obey Lewis' order that they return to work.

The main body of Cape Breton miners, including the Sydney Mines local which met to-night, will remain out for the present in defiance of Lewis' orders.

Silby Barrett, Provisional President, and his associates will hold an organization meeting to-morrow morning and will send a formal order to Livingstone and his officers to vacate the U. M. W. headquarters and hand over the property of District 26. He will give them until Monday to carry out their order and will then take legal action if the request is not met.

The general belief in Cape Breton is that the strike is disintegrating, while paramount interest is centred around the warfare between international headquarters and District 26.

LONDON, July 20.—After a spirited debate in the House of Commons to-night on the merits and demerits of the Singapore naval base, the government obtained a victory by carrying the naval estimates under closure by two hundred and seventeen to one hundred and thirty.

Opponents of the Singapore project bitterly complained that it was against the spirit of the Washington agreement and would lead to competition in armament and future wars.

L. S. Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty, insisted that all the delegates to the Washington Conference realized that Britain retained full freedom of action regarding Singapore, which had always been a naval and military station.

LONDON, July 19.—Another Cabinet Council has been summoned for to-morrow to further consider the British reply to Germany on reparations, it was announced to-night.

MOTOR SCHOONER SALVED

The motor schooner Grace and Lou of Weymouth, N. S., 20 tons, Whitemaster, stranded at St. Paul's Island, has been salved by the C. R. Lake of Fortune, and brought into Channel with the crew all on board. The schooner has clearance papers dated June 8th, from Sandy point, N. S., to St. Pierre.

St. Bon's Association Elects Officers

The adjourned annual meeting of St. Bonaventure's Old Boys' Association was held last night at the College, when the election of officers for the ensuing term took place and resulted as follows:—

President—W. R. Howley, K. C. re-elected.

Vice-President—J. G. Higgins, re-elected.

Asst. Vice President—Rev. J. J. Pippy, re-elected.

Treasurer—T. S. McGrath, elected.

Secretary—Gordon Muir, elected.

The election was conducted by Rev. Bro. J. E. Ryan, President of the College, who congratulated the Old Boys upon the interest they have taken in all matters pertaining to the College. A meeting of the Association will be held in September when a sub-committee appointed to go into the matter of a re-union of all Old Boys will report on a suitable programme in connection with the affair.

The Cause of Cancer

Washington Post: One dread scourage of mankind still remains to be eliminated, namely, cancer. In Dr Mayo's opinion, the great task is to learn the cause of that disease. The cause once known, the remedy would quickly follow with many of the best minds of the world intent on the solution of that problem and with the wonderful advance in laboratory methods.

No matter what price you pay for your toilet soap, you cannot get a better quantity than Ivory. Yet Ivory is not expensive. You can buy it at the Union Stores for five cents a cake. There are larger size cakes too selling for ten and fifteen cents. Each is well worth the money and will please you immensely.

At 4.25 yesterday afternoon the Central and Western Companies were called to the residence of Mr. G. Langmead, the Jeweller, Water Street, where a quantity of soot in the chimney was on fire. No damage was done and the "all out" signal was sent in at 4.30 p.m.

Railways Order 2,000 Box Cars

C.N.R. and C.P.R. Spending Several Million Dollars on Equipment

HELP MOVE CROPS

New Stock Will Hold 60,000 Instead of 40,000 Pounds

Canadian railroads are placing large orders for new rolling stock at a cost of several million dollars.

Both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National systems have given orders for one thousand freight cars.

The order by the Canadian National System has just been placed. Part of the one thousand cars will be constructed by the Canadian Car and Foundry Company. The orders specify sixty thousand pound cars with steel frames. They are much larger than the average freight car which runs about forty thousand pounds.

DIFFERENT TYPES.

The Canadian Pacific requisition calls for cars of different types varying in size. They will be used in the transportation of the crops, which are expected to be unusually large this year.

The order placed by the Canadian National has been distributed with different companies. R. C. Vaughan, Director of Purchases and Stores, would not announce further particulars.

The Canadian Pacific cars are being built at the Angus Shops.

Body of Missing Child is Found In Harbor

FOUR YEAR OLD ARCH PEDDLE MISSING SINCE JUNE 10th, BELIEVED DROWNED NEAR RAILWAY TRESTLE.

The body of little four year old Archibald Peddle, who had been missing from his parents home since June 10th was located in the waters of the harbor last evening by the Watchman at Baine Johnson's Southside premises. About 8.40 he noticed the body floating near the breakwater. He immediately notified Police Headquarters and Constables Wade and Walsh were desptached to the scene and conveyed the remains to the morgue. The little body was in a badly decomposed state, having been in the water over five weeks. Dr. Anderson who viewed the remains at the morgue pronounced death due to drowning.

The little fellow who was only four years of age, was last seen alive on the evening of June 10th near the round house, and it is believed he fell into the water near the trestle and the swift current from the river carried the body down the harbor. His father and mother are distracted over their son's untimately end, and much sympathy is felt for them in their trouble.

New Officers Installed at No. 2 Corps, S.A.

Adjutant and Mrs. Strickland, the newly apointed officers of the No. 2 Corps were installed at the meeting conducted in the Adelaide Street Citadel last evening, by Commandant Earl of Grand Falls. A goodly crowd attended and the service was bright and interesting all through. Several of the local comrades spoke words of welcome to the incoming officers assuring them hearty support and co-operation in their work for the advancement of God's Kingdom.

Adjutant and Mrs. Stickland heartily thanked the speakers for their expressions of welcome and assured one and all that they would give the best that was in them for the building up of the work at No. 2. Mr. Neccombe, a sailor from H. M. S. Constance, who is also a Salvationist, was present and spoke and sang. His description of his experiences before and after conversion was most interesting and was followed with close attention by the audience.

We welcome Adjutant and Mrs. Stickland to the city and wish them a term of happiness and usefulness amongst us. R.

Navy Tteam Defeats City

The rugby match between a city team and a team from the H. M. S. Constance, attracted a large number of enthusiasts to the Ayre Athletic Field yesterday afternoon.

A good exhibition was given, and the game resulted in a win for the ship by a score of 12 to 5. The city excelled in their forward line, controlling the scrims much better than their opponents. The navy on the other hand, starred in their quarters and half line.

IS BRUTALLY ATTACKED, BUT SHIELDS HIS ASSAILANT

Digby Blacksmith May Die as Result of Injuries.

DIGBY, July 20—George Porter, aged 72, a blacksmith, was found terribly injured by a blow on the head, at 10 o'clock Thursday morning, in a shack near Bear River, in which he has lived alone during the last ten years. He had been separated from his family a few hundred yards away during that time, but was on friendly terms with them. Not being seen since Tuesday night, and an investigation by relatives found him lying on a couch in the shack in a pool of blood. A smith's tongs nearby was evidently used in the assault which doctors say is likely to prove fatal. The police are investigating.

DIGBY, N.S., July 20—George H. Porter, an aged blacksmith, who was found badly battered in an unconscious condition in his home near Bear River yesterday, declined today to divulge the identity of his assailant, when questioned by Chief Inspector Horace Kennedy of the Halifax detective force. Porter has not yet gained full consciousness, and is is hoped he will be more talkative as the stupor disappears.

DOCK STRIKE SHOWS CHANGE FOR WORSE

Ship Sailings Are Cancelled.

Strikers Threaten to Let No Tugs Move To-day.

Liverpool Dockers Will Return To Work.

LONDON, July 20—No sign yet of a breakdown in the dockers strike here. Ernest Belin, Secretary Transport Union, said to-night that the situation was full of difficulties owing to the menacing attitude of the head section strikers against those who are wavering. The starting of the Sardonia from London to-morrow by way of Southampton to New York, has been cancelled. Strikers said to-night that on Saturday not a tug nor a lighter would be moved at Tilsbury Docks. The decision of the Liverpool dockers to return to work is considered a hopeful factor in the general situation.

CHAPTER XXVI.

His Wife

Such a restlessness was upon her that immediately after dinner she left the house again and went in the direction of the Manhattan Theatre, hoping to be fortunate enough to secure at the eleventh hour some obscure seat in the house, from which she could watch Miss Tenterden. It was not as a great actress that she was interested in her, but merely as the woman who mattered in Alan Rankine's life.

She was fortunate in finding a corner at the elevtnth hour, and she had just settled herself comfortably when she saw Harry Fordyce, the man she had been trying all afternoon to get into communication with, enter the stalls. He was quite alone, and for the few moments before the curtai nwent up she had an excellent opportunity of studying his face.

He had no looks, but only a certain rugged power; and, in spite of all the stories which had been circulated about him, she could find nothing evil or repellent in his face. He looked grave, and even bored, and, though several around him would have been pleased with his notice, he studied his program intently, and spoke to none.

After the curtain went up Jean, under the spell of what most of the critics were agreed was one of the finest bits of acting New York had ever seen, forgot all about him. It was not until after the close of the second act that she noticed that Fordyce's stall was quite empty, and, that, quite evidently, he had left the house. Perhaps she was not surprised; for it was a poignant story, and some of Carlotta's winged words might have pierced the joints of his armour.

Jean studied the play even more intently the second night than the first, and she watched Carlotta with a tender and painful interest which, of course, had its origin in her interest in Alan. Jean had not known how deep that interest had been until now, when he had drifted out of her life. It was not a love interest in the ordinary sense. She believed that she would never feel that kind of interest in a man a second time. But she had honestly liked him, and mothered him, as she had mothered many another forlorn unit in that great difficult city. And she wanted desperately to know the whole story and to follow it to its end.

Her eyes ranged round the crowded tiers of the audience without finding Judy, who was not in the house, but had stopped at home tow rite exhaustively to Claud, who had returned to Cambridge, to tell him how they had just missed Alan. Judy now blamed herself bitterly for allowing these fateful hours to be swallowed up carelessly; even Carlotta's calm pronouncement that that too had been writtn in th book of dstiny failed to satisfy or comfort her.

Jean Dempster did not sleep soundly that night, her pillow was dream-haunted, and she awoke unrefreshed.

About an hour after she had begun her business day someone rang her up sharply on the 'phone.

"You, Miss Dempster?"

"Yes," answered Jean shortly.

"Fordyce speaking. You rang me up at the factory yesterday, I believe, several times. What did you want?"

"Only an address, Mr. Fordyce," answered Jean in her pleasant Scotch voice, "the address to which Mr. Alan Rankine had gone out West."

"Oh," came somewhat doubtfully over the telephone, and the listner quite evidently hesitated. He had had a good many affairs in his life requiring extreme caution and reserve regarding all his movements, and it was natural for him to hesitate over this. Quite possibly a woman was at the bottom of Rankine's plight and he might be glad to get away from her.

"Say—you're Scotch, aren't you?"

"Yes, same as you," answered Jean. "That's my excuse for venturing."

"Well, where are you speaking from now?"

"My office in the Dormer House, on Broadway."

"Oh! business woman?"

"Stenographer's office."

"Right. I'll come around inside an hour or so, on my way back to lunch. Cant give you that address off-hand—well—for various reasons."

"Thank you, Mr. Fordyce. I'll be here."

Now that was destined to be a momentous morning in Jean's life, and, all unconscious of it, she pursued her usual avocations in her quiet, methodical manner.

Her desk was cleared and her office spick and span when her caller was announced.

He loked at her keenly when he entered, and they exchanged brief salutations.

"You know the chap?" began Fordyce, sitting down of the edge of the chair Judy had occupied yesterday.

Jean inclined her head and was pleased with what she saw.

He was a man of forty or thereabouts, with a somewhat heavy figure and a square, good head, with immense determination in his clean-shaven jaw. But his grey eyes were not so hard as they might have been. They were quite soft and kindly as they rested on Jean Dempster's pleasant face.

"Do you know the chap?" he repeated, and watched her face to see the effect of the question.

"I know him quite well. He boarded at the house where I live when he came to New York last May."

"Only then! He must have descended rapidly then. What was it?"

Jean did not immediately reply.

"I don't want the address for myself, Mr. Fordyce," she said presently and with some irrelevance. "I'd like you to understand that. If Mr. Rankine had wished me to know his whereabouts he would have told me As a matter of face, I supose he would hae told me only hel eft me rather hurriedly that last night. I suppose he did take that train?"

"Why, yes, I guess so. He had all his tickets, anyhow, and I said good bye to him at Sherry's, at half-past two in the afternoon."

"At Sherry's?" inquired Jean with uplifted brows.

"Yes—he had as much right there as the most of them," he answered with a slight, dry smile, "in spite of the fact that he hadn't a stiver to pay with. Who wants the address then, if you don't."

"His sister, and someone else."

"His sister! But I understood from him that he had no people here. In his circumstances a man doesn't want his people about. Did she cable or what?"

"No. She is here in the city, stopping at the Holland House."

"On his track?'

"Partly. Yes—I think that is why they came.

"Who are they?"

"I don't think I am betraying any particular confidence in telling you—especially after you've been so kind to him. I saw you at the Manhattan Theatre last night, Mr. Fordyce. Well, let me tell you that Mr. Rankine is engaged to Miss Tenterden."

Fordyce whistled in his amazement.

"Well, I never! Engaged! She's a fine woman—but then, he's a fine man. What was the racket, do you know? What brought him down to the hobo stage? Couldn't get a word out of him!"

"And he didn't tell me much," said Jea nreflectively.

"I could bet my bottom dollar it wasn't drink," observed Fordyce.

"No, it certainly wasn't drink. Sheer misfortune—family misfortune and ill-luck. He is the head of one of the oldest families in Ayrshire, his sister told me that much; and there ought to be estates, but I do not know what became of them."

"One more chapter added to the history of this inferno!" observed Fordyce with a sort of light bitterness. "Well, I must say I liked the chap, and I'm eternally obliged to him besides for something he did for me down east. Did he tell you?"

"Yes," admitted Jean after a moment." he did.'

"Ive chucked that bounder and bully Donaldson, and I'm looking into things. Fact, Miss Dempster, one half of the world doesn't know how the other half lives. I'm not trying to excuse myself, mind! I haven't the right, for I've been right down there in my time too, and I ought to have known."

"You have been abroad though for a long time," said Jean on the spur of the moment, and then colored, remembering that she was encroaching on personal ground.

"Yes. I've been out of New York just fifteen months. But I'm stopping here for a bit now, and I'll spend the most of it on East Side. I find that work tastes sweet after a while of play. It's what we were born for, Miss Dempster, and the moment we stop work, see!—the devil steps in and has his innings."

Jean smiled her grave, kind smile which has comforted many.

"We are certainly happier working," she admitted. "The difficulty is to apportion it fairly."

"How long have you been out? You sound," he added with a smile, "as if you might have left Broomielaw yesterday!"

"I've been here just four years."

"All your people here, I suppose?"

"None of them. I live at a boarding house on Forty-Second Street. It was there I met Mr. Rankine. A man he met on the boat brought him to the house. But, of course, he could not be at home in Forty-Second Street."

"He's had to be at home in a lot of queer places, I doubt! But he'll do all right out West. I hope he'll find the man I've sent him to. I cabled that he was coming."

"How good of you! But then the Scotch don't leave anything to chance," said Jean, smiling. Wouldn't you call at the Holland House and see Miss Rankine?"

"I can't do that. I don't want her thanks. He'll pay me back. Actually made me take an I.O.U.! And I took it, too. Here's the address."

He took a card from his pocket case and wrote the words on it, then passed it over and rose.

"Well, I suppose our business is at an end. I'm glad I came. And if I hear anything of Rankine I'll Ring you up or come out and see you if I may. Do you do well here?" he asked, glancing interestedly round the homely little room.

Ethel Barrymore Divorced

Famous Actress Says Rich Husband Often Beat Her.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 12.—Ethel Barrymore Colt, famous for more than a quarter of a century as an actress, was granted a divorce from Russell G. Colt, son of the late Samuel P. Colt, in the Supreme Court. Neither principal was present.

Under its terms Mrs. Colt is to have the care of her three children. But it is understood that Mr. Colt will be allowed to have them with him at stated periods.

The divorce was granted on the ground of failure to provide support, the deposition was filed with testimony of "extreme cruelty" beginning six months after her marriage on March 14, 1909. She said that Mr. Colt had struck her on numerous occasions and as a result of "brutal treatment she suffered a nervous shock and required medical treatment."

Love come at dawn when all the world was fair,
When crimson glories, bloom, and songs were rife;
Love came at dawn when hope's wings fanned the air,
And murmured, "I am life."

Love came at even when the day was done,
When heart and brain were tired and slumber pressed;
Love came at eve, shut out the sinking sun,
And whispered, "I am rest."
—William Wilfred Campbell, in "Live."

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

Many Crews Enter

A largely attended meeting of the Regatta Committee was held last night, and judging from the enthusiasm displayed and the record number of entries to date, there is every indication that our derby this year will be the most successful yet held.

President Hiscock was in charge, and the reports of the various collectors were encouraging, but a large amount is still required. Amongst the subscriptions received was a cheque for $15 from the Truckmen's Union.

The President announced that he interviewed Sir Edgar Bowring since his arrival, and he was most enthusiastic and assured the President that anything the committee required, that was in his power to give, could be had for the asking.

Mr. C. W. Ryan reported that he had already received fifty applications for ground.

The C. L. B. Old Comrades, asked leave to have slot Boxes on the course Regatta Day, where voluntary subscriptions towards their new boat could be received. This request was acceded to, and the Committee will do all possible to assist the Club.

The President referred to the loss the committee sustained in the passing of the late Mr. John Day, and a resolution of condolence was forwarded to the family of the deceased.

The following crews then entered:

Amateurs

Cadet—W. Ryan, cox; G. Squires, stroke; C. R. Duder, D. Ferguson, F. Boggan, C. Crosbie, T. Chalker.

Guard—J. Hussey, cox.; T. Penney, stroke; F. Gidge, H. Brown, C. Keats, A. Wight, S. Ryan.

Juvenile

Red Lion—E. Skiffington, cox.; A. French, stroke; P. Edstrom, F. Wilcox, Wm. Squires, A. Snow.

Three other juvenile crews were present but having no certificates they were not passed and will come before the committee again on Friday night next.

As there will be several heats, owing to five boats competing in at least three races, it was decided on Motion of Mr. W. J. Higgins that the preliminary heats be rowed at 9.30 a.m. on Regatta Day, so that the regular program can start at 10.30 a.m.

The motion of Mr. A. G. Williams to have the names of all members who were not taking an active part struck off the list, was passed, and the names of five were removed.

After some minor matters had been discussed, the meeting adjourned till Friday next, when the official program will be arranged and the balance of crews will enter.

Gloucester Invites Newfoundland To Be Participant In Race

Contest Is Open To All Bona Fide Two Masted Fishermen.

GOLUCESTER, July 20—The fishermen's race for Sir Thomas Lipton's Trophy to be held in connection with the Gloucester Tercentenary Celebration on August 27th, has been thrown open to all two masted fishing schooners without restrictions, it was announced to-day. The contest will be sailed under fishermen's rules without limitations as to waterline lengths, spare, ballast, ets. Invitations were sent to-day to fishermen in the Maritime Provinces to take part. The race is for Lipton Trophy and cash prizes, of which five are offered.

In connection with the Gloucester ter-centenary celebration races for fishing vessels referred to in the message below, it is interesting to know that Mr. Kenneth J. Ferguson, Chairman of the Race Committee has sent a cordial invitation to Newfoundland to be represented by one or more fishing schooners.

There will be no restrictions on the water line or overhaul length, sail area, spars, ballast, etc. It will be boat for boat. The race is open to any bona fide two-masted fishing schooner in the world. The following are the prizes:—1st, Sir Thomas Lipton trophy and $1000 in cash; 2nd. Colonel Prentiss Cup and $800 in cash; 3rd, $800 in cash; 4th, $600 cash; 5th, $400 in cash.

Pretty Governess Slain In Her Room

POLICE ARE BAFFLED BY THE MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

Tramp Breaks Down and Weeps, But Denies The Crime—Negro Also Questioned.

SCARSDALE, N. Y., July 12.—Suspicion has fastened upon a ragged, penniless tramp and a Negro with a red-stained purse as authorities scoured the conutrysides for te muhrderer of Dorothy Kaufman, a young and pretty governess from the Mennonite Colony in Westover, Md.

Miss Kaufman was hacked to death in the country home of Magruder Craighead here.

The tramp, riding a bus between White Plains and Dobbs Ferry, boasted to the driver that he was a "slasher," and recently had cut up a State trooper in a knife battle.

The driver told police about it and to them the wayfarer, giving the name of Anthony Amundsen, admitted he was homeless and had slept under the stars within a mile of the Craighead home the night of the murder.

Taken to the Scene.

Led to the room where the governess was slain, Amundsen surveyed the place, handled the butcher knife and denied all knowledge of the crime.

Later he broke down and wept, but did not reveal anything. He was taken to jail for further investigation as a suspected person.

The Negro under suspicion is "Charlie," employed as a handy man by Howard F. R. Mulligan, a New York attorney, who lives near the Craighead home. According to Mr. Mulligan "Charlie" when hired on the day of the murder, showed him a blood-stained purse, explaining it had belonged to a br other killed in the World War.

It was disclosed by an autopsy before the body was taken to the girl's former home for burial that she had not been assaulted, nor had she been robbed.

Other Theories Advanced.

The "jealous suitor" theory, which has been advanced, is losing plausibility, police said, for Miss Kaufman, here at least, has shown no special fondness for young men.

Two other theories remain to be worked out; the first that a Mennonite admirer pursued her here from Maryland; the second that she was slain by a stranger who meant to rob the Craighead home, but weakened before completing the job.

The crime was discovered by Madeline Harmer, daughter of a neighbor, when she returned from a dance at an early hour in the morning to spend the rest of the night with Miss Kaufman.

Dollar gasoline might have a tendency to stop some people in the race for the crossing.

There's one thing funnier than a country fellow in the city; it's a city fellow in the country.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, JULY 21st., 1923.

The Issue Is Clear

The Telegram editorially referred yesterday to the Advocate's expression of opinion regarding Humber Employment.

That paper ornamented its remarks with the political colouring usually expected at such times. As far as this paper is concerned the Humber matter is now outside the range of party politics and has become a matter of national importance and national responsibility. That is why we are treating it fearlessly and intend to treat it fearlessly.

In doing so, we have no apologies to make regarding our endorsation of the Humber Proposition while it was yet before the country and in the sphere of party politics.

The Advocate believed in the Humber Industry then, and believes in it to-day.

The Advocate realised the necessity of industrial development to supplement the fisheries and help the people; and stands firm by the Government's industrial policy in that respect. There is no doubt that the urgent need of assisting the people by giving them the opportunity of earning something outside of the fisheries is even more apparent now than it was a few months ago.

The comparative failure of the fisheries, the absolute blank which exists in scores of our fishing settlements render strong action imperative by all concerned in the Humber undertakings in the interests of the people requiring work.

This is not a time for half hearted action; nor for the playing of the despicable game of politics.

The summer is going. The people want work. They face fearful times if they do not get the work which we were led to believe could be offered them. If some of these toilers cannot be given monthly wages soon, the season will be so far advanced that their earnings will not suffice to pay for even the barest kind of a livelihood for themselves and families.

Therefore, we emphasize the urgency and the extreme necessity of somebody "waking up" and justifying the obligations which the Government and the people themselves undertook when they caused the Humber measure to become the law of this country.

Away, now, with the excuse that Humber operations should not be undertaken in earnest, because there was a doubt of ratification. Away with inertia or protracted action.

The country wants immediate action and the people want returns; and the Advocate insists that the country and the people are entitled to consideration more especially at a time when the fishery has failed and when those who handle fish matters are sitting in upholstered armchairs, discussing the co-operative action of sensible business men of other countries,—and doing nothing.

The Telegram states this paper attempts to shift the responsibility on the Armstrong, Whitworth Company. Inasmuch as that company is responsible we blame them for the protracted action and the general disappointment now existing regarding work. It is true more practical action was expected, more employment was thought to be forthcoming; and many of the people's representatives believed they could have better met the urgent appeals of their constitutents for the chance to earn their bread and butter by giving a good day's work for a fair day's pay.

Why the failure? Upon whose shoulders should the responsibility of this failure be placed?

The Advocate has no intention to dictate as to opertions in the Humber Valley. It is presumed that matter is in the hands of an expert management there; but surely, those in charge realise that the greatest possible effort should be made to meet the country's necessity now.

What about logging operations on Grand Lake? Could not preparations for logging be made there now? In our opinion a thousand men could be employed there immediately. If the industry is to start within the time specified by the agreement, the timber must be provided. Then why delay the logging work? Why do not the Company ask now for men for this purpose.

Then, again, there is the building of the town, which could take another thousand men! Why delay this work, when numbers of men are facing starvation throughout the country.

Again, it is most essential that Newfoundlanders be given the preference of employment over others, providing they can do various works efficiently.

Yet, we hear Englishmen are being imported in certain numbers and set to work. If this is true, it is certainly not good enough, and this paper does not intend to silently endorse such a state of affairs.

Earnest action and fair play are required and demanded We have waited patiently. We have waited long enough.

The Deadly Inertia

When Will The Rip Van Winkle Slumber of Exporters End?

From Western Canadian provinces comes the news that active preparations are being made for the advantageous marketing of this year's wheat crop, and that some at least of the farming districts are adopting the Sapiro idea of voluntary pooling.

In this connection we are constrained to ask what are the exporters of our own staple product doing to ensure the profitable marketing of this year's codfish catch? To all appearances local exporters are again, or still, suffering from that deadly inertia which has resulted so unsatisfactorily in the past for all interested in the fishery and particularly for the fishermen themselves.

The fishery is now in full swing and it will be but a matter of a few weeks when the first shipments will be ready for market, and meanwhile those in whose hands lies the marketing of our catch are sitting back in idleness while the fishermen struggle day and night in danger and discomfort to wrest from the ocean that harvest on which the majority of our people depend for a livelihood.

No doubt as soon as the first cargoes are ready for shipment the exporters will throw off the weariness that is keeping them inactive now and enter wholeheartedly into the mad scramble which will, as was the case last year, result in the glutting of markets, competition among the Exporters themselves and the consequent cutting of prices.

Valuable time which might be used by our merchants in getting together with the object in view of formulating some means whereby at least some portion of the Colony's marketing disappointments may be obviated, is being frittered away in useless and unproductive occupations.

The behaviour of our Board of Trade as the governing body of our industrial activities is in marked contrast to that of similar organizations elsewhere, and the only conclusion that can be drawn from their all too-apparent lack of interest in the vital question of the marketing of this year's codfish is that they are only concerned with the profits which they will make at the expense of the industry and to the detriment of the fishermen. While our men of affairs are handling world problems from their comfortable chairs in the Board of Trade Rooms, the one matter of vital importance to this Colony goes unconsidered and undiscussed.

A Vital Necessity

The need for compulsory education in this Country is becoming more and more apparent as time goes on. This need is evidenced most strongly by the statistics supplied in the annual report of the Minister of Education which show a deplorable lack of interest in the education of our children on the part of those whose first duty it is to give this matter their close attention.

On parents, of course, devolves primarily the responsibility of seeing that their children attend school regularly while in those places where there are resident pastors of the various churches a great deal is expected of them in the way of encouraging, or enforcing where necessary, better school attendance. When we see schools reporting a total enrollment of say eighty-five or ninety pupils and an average attendance of from forty to forty-five, we can only assume that there is something radically wrong. That the defect cannot be laid at the door of any particular denomination in any particular community or locality is proven by the fact that the evil is general. It is common to the sections adjacent to and remote from the centre of educational endeavour as well as to the larger towns and smaller villages.

It may be that in many, perhaps most instances, pastors, parents and teachers are not as keen on getting good attendances at our schools as they should be, but it must not be forgotten that the combined influence in this respect of all three is less powerful than would be a strict law of compulsory education. Until we get this, we can hope for no great strides in the education of the Country's youth. It is important that we should have properly trained teachers, well equipped schools and competent inspectors, but none of these essentials is calculated to induce larger attendance or stimulate the children's interest in what the majority regard as a detestable grind.

Neither will any efforts to render less monotonous the daily school routine serve to reclaim the delinquent boy or girl and induce them to attend regularly. Unfortunately, there are many children who have to be forced to attend school just as there are many parents who must be forced to send their children to school. For these nothing but compulsion will be of any avail. That it is feasible to have a system of compulsory education without in any way interfering with the denominational status of our schools few will doubt, nor, we believe, are there many who can offer any serious objection to or argument against the policy as a means of "speeding up" education and getting better returns for the money expended for educational purposes.

Report of Dept. of Education

The annual report of the Department of Education for the year ending June 30th, 1922, which was tabled in the House by Hon. Dr. Barnes on Tuesday last contains an abundance of statistical and general information relative to matters coming within the scope of the Department whose activities during the period covered in the report are shown to have been fruitful of no inconsiderable results.

The number of schools in the Island is 1,139 as against 1,107 for the previous year, or an increase of thirty-two schools. The total number of teachers under all boards is 1,570, of which 1,164 are women. This represents fifty-nine more than were engaged in the profession in 1921. There is a decrease in the number of pupils of 436, the present total being 55,152, as against 55,588 for the previous year. Out of this number there is a daily average attendance shown of only 33,596, which evidences a serious discrepancy in the matter of attendance. The total amount voted in 1921-22 for education was $817,177.03, which meant a decrease of $17,745.20 from 1920-21. Last year's vote represents a cost to the Government per capita of population of $3.11.

In his very comprehensive report which is embodied in the general report of the Department, the Deputy Minister, Dr. V. P. Burke deals in a scholarly manner with the various phases of our educational problem, outlines the further needs of the Colony in respect of the training of the minds of the youth and describes in an interesting manner the progress that has been made in the past three years. In dealing with the question of the proper training of teachers, Dr. Burke says "Too many persons even amongst those who should know better are seemingly of the opinion that any little girl with a preliminary grade certificate without training, without experience, without knowledge of the main objectives in education, and without any idea of where or whither her efforts to teach her pupils will lead them, is quite capable of moulding and developing the Country's most precious possessions—the children of the people. In my visits to schools," he continues, "I have often met well-meaning and zealous young girls in charge who, while doing their best, yet not having sufficient knowledge of teaching or of those taught, were hindering rather than helping, and injuring and crippling mentally for life bright boys and girls who, with proper teaching, would become most capable men and women, a credit to themselves, a source of pride to their parents and most valuable citizens of their country. Realizing these things as they are, it is indeed a pleasure to be able to report that efforts are being made to rectify some of these faults by those who have the responsibility of guiding and directing the Country's educational endeavours. A new spirit is beginning to find its way about in the land, teachers are beginning to realize that children are more important than books, that right methods must go hand in hand with good subject matter, that more and more attention is given to education, that education is becoming in every civilized community more and more the chief function of the State, and that the methods and traditional practices of fifty years ago are not always the best possible in this, the third decade of the twentieth century."

The work of the Normal School is commented upon in eulogistic terms in Dr. Burke's report, and while much good has already resuited from this branch of our educational activity, the completion of the new Normal School Building is eagerly looked forward to as marking the beginning of the end of the defective system that has obtained for so long in this country.

SYDNEY, July 21—Three Cape Breton U. M. W. locals voted overwhelmingly last night in favor of returning to work, it was announced, by instructions from John L. Lewis. They were No. 16 colliery at New Waterford, 88 to 3; Mechanics local, 90 to 31, and a Harbor local 25 to 2, the latter two being both in Glace Bay.

It is understood that the maintennnce men will return to-morrow, and that the collieries will be re-opened on Monday.

The Princess local, on the opposite side of the harbor, decided at a stormy meeting, to await the announcement of the old executive before taking action. The Livingstone executive met at Glace Bay and will meet again to-morrow. They would make no announcement to-night but it is reported on good authority that they advocated returning to work and reorganizing.

Other locals expected to vote on the Lewis order to-morrow.

There was considerable excitement at Dominion No. 4 to-day when two hundred strikers held up a company man who was finally admitted to the plant after the police had charged and dispersed the pickets.

A mass meeting to-night, called by that section of the city aldermen who represent labor in Sydney, passed resolution to the effect that the government of Nova Scotia be requested to appoint a commission to investigate the affairs of the British Steel Corporation.

Another resolution protested against Premier Armstrong "accepting the word of a few irresponsibles as reflecting the opinion of the citizens of Sydney," during his recent visit here.

Withdrawal of Troops

MONTREAL, July 20—Letters from Cabinet Ministers in answer to resolution passed by the Montreal Trades and Labor Council condemning the use of troops in the Cape Breton strike area were read last night at a meeting of the Council. Hon. Mr. Murdock, Minister of Labour expressed his desire of settling the strike without troops and that the points at issue be settled by conference. Hon. E. M. McDonald, Acting Minister of National Defence pointed out that under the military act troops can only be withdrawn on request of the authorities who had called them out which in this case had been the County Judge.

German Resistance Is Weakening

DUSSELDORF, July 20—French headquarters express the conviction today that the German resistance in Ruhr is weakening. No sabotage was reported in six days. The French are closely watching plans for Communist demonstrations announced for various parts of Germany for July 29th. General Degoutte will forbid any such demonstrations in Ruhr, it was announced.

When things do not come your way it's a sign you ought to be going after them.

CHANGE OF LIFE LOSES TERRORS

For Women Who Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Greenville, Pa.—"I took your medicine through the Change of Life and it did wonders for me. I was down in bed when I started to take it and weighed 95 pounds. I had hot flashes and was so nervous and weak that everything would get black and I could not see. I would sit and cry and did not know what I was crying for. Since I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel younger than I did ten years ago, and my friends all tell me I look younger, and I owe it all to the Vegetable Compound. I do all my housework for a family of seven now. I will be glad to answer any woman who writes me in regard to my case."—Mrs. JOHN MYERS, 55 Union St., Greenville, Pa.

Many letters similar to this have been published testifying to the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They are sincere expressions from women who describe as best they can their feelings before and after taking this well-known medicine.

Many times they state in their letters their willingness to answer women who write them. It is an offer dictated by gratitude and a desire to help others.

Battering-ram of The Air Is Latest Terror Let Loose

The most fearful air weapon yet devised is being made secretly for the leviathan airships designed to carry a "brood" of fighting 'planes, writes a correspondent in the London Chronicle.

This new terror will be a heavily-armoured, steel-prowed "air-ram," which, launched at an immense height from the mother air-ship, will rush down, guided by a solitary man sitting protected within its hull.

Without guns or any weapon save a knife-like, cutting bow, the pilot of the "ram" will seek as his quarry the big, slow-flying "troop-planes," or transports, or he will swerve in deadly attack towards a hostile battleship of the air.

Before he strikes his blow he will have the power, by operating interior mechanism, of drawing in his telescopic, metal wings.

AFTER THE BLOW.

Then, with a fearful final plunge, like a great projectile, he will steer, not at the hull of the craft he seeks to cripple, but at vlunerable wings or control surfaces.

Through these he will cut and rip his way, and the great craft he has rammed, stricken and put out of control, will reel earthward to destruction.

Meanwhile the "air-ram" will extend its wings again and check its pell-mell descent. The pilot will be able, after starting a powerful interior engine, to bring into action previously-shielded air-screws, and by aid of these he will steal upward, regaining his mother airship, and then preparing for another devastating dive.

IS THERE ANY DEFENCE?

What is the defence against such a weird weapon as this—a veritable "bolt from the blue"?

Its great reinforced bow and metal hull, or "hide," will be invulnerable to anything like machine-gun fire.

It is an axiom of war that to every move there is a counter-move; but what is the counter-move to the flying ram? Probably we shall find that the strategists will say the only effective answer is to seek out and destroy, before it can come within effective range, the vast mother airship which will carry the dreaded "ram."

But, as she will keep at immense heights, and hide as much as possible behind clouds, this will be easier said than done.

Out Concing Cone.

Oh, hell—
I'm well!

"Do it today," is a good motto, but the chap who can say "I did it yesterday" has a still better one.

Bonus Suggested For Canadian Coal

Wolvin Has Scheme to Supplant Anthracite From United States.

(Financial Post)

On the question of a substitute for antharcite coal, President R. M. Wolvin, of the British Empire Steel Corporation, has written to Senator McLellan, chairman of the Fuel Committee at Ottawa, stating that investigation indicates that there are certain seams of coal in Nova Scotia producing coal that will make a satisfactory household coke and that the gas produced from this Nova Scotia coal while coking can be cleaned and the sulphur removed so that it can be used either for fuel or illuminating purposes. Mr. Wolvin suggests a subsidy or bonus to encourage the industry.

Coke ovens can be built in Quebec, Montreal and Toronto where sufficient Nova Scotia coal can be cheaply transported by water during the navigation season to provide full year operation of the coke plants. These large cities need the gas produced in the making of coke and the other by-products, tar creosote, benzol, etc., find a good market in Canada. The coke produced will be used in the cities and shipped to other consuming points in Eastern Canada.

The coal for Toronto should be transhipped in Montreal by rapid discharging especially equipped docks from 1,200-ton ships to the canal vessels now returning without cargo from Montreal to Port Colbourne.

It will be necessary for the Canadian Government to assist this new business by bonus on coke produced from Canadian coal or by subsidizing such plants using Canadian coal in a way possibly similar to the Dry Dock Subsidies.

A proper development of these coke ovens would permanently provide a substitute for a large portion of foreign produced anthracite now used in Canada. It would make Canada more self-contained and less dependent upon the United States. It would keep a large amount of money in aCnada that is now spent outside and would develop Canadian resources and by increasing the output of coal would assist in reducing the average cost of producing all bituminous coal in Canada.

Slayer of Rasputin New Beauty Expert

THREE PRINCESS ARE RUSSIAN PRINCE'S MANICURES.

PARIS, France, July 12—Prince Yusupoff, who is declared to have killed Rasputin, opened a beauty shop in the fashionable Faubourg St. Honore with three Russian princesses as manicurists. Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, who recently sailed for New York, is reported to be his financial backer.

The prince has been broke since an Armenian ran off with his jewels recently following a gay party in his London apartment at which he exhibited royal jewels variously estimated at from $3,500 to $29,000 in in value.

Prince Yusupoff has been called the man who fired the torch of the Russian revolution. Son of the late governor general of Petrograd, husband of Irene, daughter of the Grand Duke Michael, and a graduate of Oxford, his ancestors were Tartar kings of the time of Peter the Great.

Rasputin was a bogus Russian monk who exercised a sinister influence over Czar Nicholas and his czarina, particularly the latter. The current belief is that Rasputin was slain as the result of a plot among the nobles.

At the close of a merry supper at which he was a guest he was handed a revolver and told he must die. Instead he fired on the nobles and was shot down and his body thrown in the Neva.

Riots, revolution, the Czar's abduction, the slaying of the royal family, and the whole train of events leading to the development of Soviet Russia followed.

HARDING'S WORLD COURT PLANS MEET WITH LITTLE FAVOR

WASHINGTON, June 29—By Canadian Press)—President Harding's St. Louis speech on the world court will probably prevent U. S. participation in the world court for an indefinite period. It may prevent this country from joining the court at all.

In some quarters not overfriendly to the administration the President is being charged with a purpose to drop the world court issue for the sake of preventing a serious breach in the republican party. Whether this was in fact the purpose of the President will doubtless be a subject of controversy. When he presents his plans to the Senate and seeks to have that body sanction the reservations he has proposed, he will find an entirely different alignment than the one on the original world court proposition.

Utterance of democratic senators here, though most of the members of the Senate are out of Washington, indicate that the democratic forces will not support the plan of the President. Some of the democratic senators say openly that the President's plan will not get through the Senate. In the present Congress, the democratic strength is not much below that of the republican strength, and if any considerable proportion of the democratic senators turn against Mr. Harding's reservations to the court proposal, they will fail, and with them the proposal to join the court.

All manner of discussion has arisen in the press and in political circles whether the President has retreated on the world court. His St. Louis speech indicates that he does not intend to make a fight to force the Senate to support it. It is generally felt here that when the world court question is brought up in the Senate next session, it will be found the foreign relations committee will be slow in dealing with it, and that it will be met with prolonged delays which will prevent any final action before the 1924 campaign. Between delay in the Senate and the difficulty of getting foreign nations to accede to the plan of Mr. Harding, there is much doubt here whether anything will come of it.

The Doctor Knows

Doctors who know Minard's by the work it does are unhesitating in their praise of its healing and soothing qualities.

Dr. Jos. Aug. Sirois, of St. Isidore, Que., writes:—"I have frequently used Minard's Liniment and also prescribe it for my patients always with the most gratifying results, and I consider it the best all-round Liniment".

C. A. King, M.D. also recommends Minard's in the following words:—"I have used Minard's Liniment myself as well as prescribed it in my practice when a liniment was required, and have never failed to get the desired effect".

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

The Pulpwood Situation From Canadian Standpoint

(Financial Post)

Parliament empowered the Ottawa government to prihibit by Order in Council the export of pulpwood cut on private lands, and Press dispatches from the U. S. show considerable anxiety as to the effects of such an embargo. A New York dispatch, for instance, says that—"a decisive blow will be dealt to the American newsprint industry. Many mills, now almost entirely dependent upon Canada for their pulpwood, will be forced to close down. The gravity of the situation to the United States newsprint industry is emphasized by the fact that since 1912 production in this country has been practically constant, while Canada has increased her output three times. Exports from Canada to this counrty were 83 per cent. of her total newsprint output in 1922."

While the question may seem complicated at first sight, it is really a simple one. The difference is not between Canadian and American industries fighting one another to obtain a practical monopoly, for the great bulk of the pulp factories in Canada are American owned; the fight is between two classes of American paper-makers—one class which was far-sighted enough to build its plants in Canada, the other which relied on getting its pulpwood from Canada for manufacture in the United States.

Pulpwood Situation

There is no question of hostility against the United States. American paper manufacturers have been very cordially welcomed here and will continue to be—but the Canadian position is that while these natural resources of our country are being developed by foreign capital for foreign use, we should have at least employment of Canadian labor, purchase in Canada of supplies used in the business, and as much other benefit as we can fairly claim. To aid in this policy, an embargo on pulpwood, it is believed, will bring the remaining American paper manufacturers into line with their more far-sighted competitors who have already established factories here. Even under the embargo, United States paper manufacturers will have an advantage, for Canadian paper firms have to pay the 6 per cent. sales tax under the recent Bill, from which United States firms are exempt, while the taxation on Canadian business generally is much more heavy than that on United States business. The present policy of sending raw materials across the line for manufacture compels many young Canadians to go over the border to work on that raw material, and this is one of the causes of the serious loss of our young manhood to the United States.

In Canada, we have a huge country, a small population, and a heavy debt. These facts show that it is ordinary prudence to obtain the greatest possible benefit from our natural resources. The fact that we hold much of the world's remaining reserve of pulpwood is a fact which should aid in statesmanlike conservation of that resource. The proposed embargo does not go far enough. It should next take in pulp, so that all paper should be made in Canada, and an export duty imposed on paper with which to pay for forest protection and reafforestation.

It is not antagonism between conflicting "Big Business" of two countries which has brought this situation: it is a condition in which ordinary business foresight, fair play and development of our own country meet in an extraordinary combination. All that is required is that the Canadian people shall enter intelligently into what is meant by the use and exploitation of their natural resources, and once that is accomplished we shall have justice to Canada as the first claim on our thoughts before we consider generosity to other countries.

Baseball at Grand Falls

According to Mr. J. B. Orr, President of the Baseball League, who only recently returned from a fishing trip to the west coast during which he had occasion to spent a few days in Grand Falls, baseball has taken on a new lease of life in the Papar Town. They have formed a League consisting of three teams, viz: the Scouts, captained by A. Coen the popular catcher; the C. L. B. with C. Lemoine in charge and the C. C. C. are being controlled by Sebat Foran. Our old friend Darby is pitching for the Scouts and is as good as ever. The citizens are taking a keen interest in the game, and the g rounds have been put in first class condition and have been newly fenced.

On Thursday last, July 12th, a game between two picked teams captained respectively by Darby and Foran was played for a special cup, which was won by Foran's team.

There was a very large attendance and a splendid brand of ball was handed out, Coen, Darby, Foran, and Brown being especially good, while young Roy Petrie, just back from Lenoxville College, was in fine form, Brown played center field, and A. B. Carter held down first base for Foran's team in good style.

Mr. C. W. Morse is still taking a keen interest in the game, and is looked upon as the manager for all the teams. He takes a special interest in the younger players, who step into the arena for the first season.

Red McVane, Mr. Orr says, looked fine and dandy, and is umpiring better than ever. His "Play Ball Boys" sounded great. The Paper Town folks are hoping to get together thois season to compete for the inter-town trophy which was won by Grand Falls last year. They assure the visitors a good game and will confer the freedom of the town upon them.

Dance on Rosalind

The Officers of the Rosalind gave a dance on board the ship last night which was attended by the majority of the round-trippers, as well as a number of people from the shore.

The dance which was held on the after deck proved a most enjoyable affair. The ship had been especially decorated for the occasion and an array of multi-coloured lights added to the scene.

The Mount Cashel Band, through the courtesy of Rev. Bro. Ennis, supplied the music, and this aggregation of young musicians who have already made a name in musical circles, excelled themselves last night, and were called upon for repeated encores, which were gladly given.

During the evening refreshments were served in the saloon by Chief McPhie and his staff and the affair concluded shortly after midnight.

A New Steamship Service

Messrs. T. Basha & Sons of Curling, have recently been appointed agents for the Clarke Steamship Co. Ltd., of Quebec. Japanese In B. C.

New York Herald: On the subject of immigration Great Britain and Japan have a "gentleman's agreement. But this does not prevent Japanese already present from raising an average of nine children to the family, nor does it affect the Japanese custom of producing families large not only in number but in capacity to work. Thus Oriental fecundity and industry are to be the crux of a problem which is becoming more and more acute in Canada.

Guards Are Victorious

The result of last evening's football game was a win for the Guards, who defeated the Saints by 3 goals to 0. As a good game was anticipated, there was a large number of fans present. For the first twenty minutes of play, the Saints kept the Guards' defence busy, but the period ended without any scoring being done.

In the second half, the Guards, with the wind in their favor, took the offensive, and three minutes from the kick-off, Rose, on a pass from Quick, netted number one for his team.

The other two goals were scored by Macklin and Quick respectively.

During the last period, Foster, the Saints' centre-half, was seized by cramps and had to retire.

The Guards's captain offered to drop one of his team ,but the Scotsmen decided to finish the game with the odds against them.

French Banker Has Big Trip

The French Banker Gange Petit arrived from the Grand Banks yesterday afternoon. The vessel has her rudder badly damaged as a result of heavy weather early in the week, and will require a new one.

The Petit reports fish plentiful on the Banks, and the fleet of French ships are doing well.

The ship has 130,000 fish, or about 4,500 qtls., on board, and as soon as repairs are effected she returns to the banks to complete her trip.

The s.s. Reindeer, with 8,400 tons of ore for Philadelphia, sailed from Bell Island yesterday.

Navy Dance Was Enjoyable Affair

The dance in the C. C. C. Hall last night held by the officers and crew of H. M. S. "Constance" was a splendid affair and proved most enjoyable. Special leave had been granted to all the ship's personnal and all turned up at the hall where, in response to invitations, a large gathering of young ladies from the city were present. The music was supplied by the ship's orchestra and consisted of all the latest dance music of England and America and it was rendered in perfect rhythm and time. The hall presented a very pleasing appearance owing to the work done by the sailors during the day.

The walls and ceiling were draped with flags and colored lights abounded. Early in the evening Captain Campbell visited the hall and was received by the entire assemblage with cheers and the lusty singing of "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

During the evening refreshments were served and when the affair terminated at 2 o'clock this morning all present had enjoyed a really fine event. The affair was chaperoned by Mesdames McKeen, Syme, Outerbridge (2.) and Miss May Furlong.

The hearty thanks of all our city folk who were privileged to attend is tendered the officers and crew of the "Constance" who have proved themselves true sports and gentlemen and the hope is entertained that they will soon revisit us when, perhaps, a return dance will be tendered them.

You can always draw the queen: if you have the jack.

Flight Attempt Failed

SALT LAKE CITY, July 0—Lieut Russel Maughan in his second attempt to cross the Continent between dark and dusk, was again forced to give up the effort on account of trouble to machine. At one point he was forced down with leaky oil pipes that had nearly suffocated him. After effecting repairs he resumed flight with a chance of success, but a message from the air mail station at Rock Springs at five o'clock said he landed there unable to continue.

Mount Cashel Garden Party

For a quarter of a century the Mount Cashel Garden Party has been the big event of the year, and the thousands who annually patronize the fete, come away feeling that more could not have been done to make the day thoroughly enjoyable. The Garden Party takes place this year on Wednesday afternoon next, at the Orphanage grounds, when it is hoped to have a record attendance.

In October next the Orphanage celebrates its 25th anniversary, and within the past month, the various Catholic societies have come together and decided to fittingly and appropriately celebrate the event. The good Brothers all through the years have rendered yeoman service on behalf of the young lads, who have been committed to their care. It is therefore fitting that at least once a year citizens of all classes in the community are given the opportunity to show their appreciation of this splendid and unselfish work which goes quietly on from day to day.

For months past the ladies' committee have been preparing for next Wednesday's fete at Mount Cashel, and they will be in a position to cater to unlimited numbers.

The sports program will, as usual, provide plenty of interest and will include a three-mile Road Race, Pony Races, for which ten entries have already been made, a trotting race, and football fives.

The C. L. B. Pyramid Squad will also be in attendance, and the affair will undoubtedly be the big attraction of the season."

Kyle's Passengers

The following passengers arrived at Port aux Basques on the s.s. Kyle and are on the incoming express:—P. J. and Mrs. Garland, Mrs. E. Penney, Miss C. Boland, Miss Doyle, Miss K. Bell, Mrs. H. D. Ash, Mrs. M. C Buell, Mrs. J. Snelgrove, Miss B. Noseworthy, Rev. D. W. Johnstone, Miss E. Dalton, Mrs. C. A. Leverman, M. Doyle, W. J. Hill, A. A. Cotter, Mrs. G. Gordon and son, W. J. Morgan, J. The Broad Cove Regatta

We understand the annual Broad Cove Regatta, an event in which a great deal of interest is always manifested, will be held this year on August 22nd. The program of races will include two-oared and four-oared races and motor boat race. The Broad Cove Band will be in attendance and refreshments will be served on the grounds. There will also be a dance in the Orange Hall at night. Messrs Solomon, Eli and Richard Squires have been appointed by the committee as collectors, and they have already begun taking up subscriptions to defray the expenses of the Derby.

Lord Morris and the British Empire Exhibition

The Facts Regarding the Action Taken Against Him and Other Directors for 'Conspiracy'

Last month paragraphs were published in the local newspapers in reference to an action for "conspiracy" stated to have been taken against Lord Morris and other members of the British Empire Exhibition by a Mr. Bradbury. As some sensational rumours have been current as to this matter, information has been sought from England regarding it and the following statement is given as representing the exact facts in the matter. While the action is described as for "conspiracy", and the suggestion is made that Lord Morris and the other two gentlemen "conspired" to bring about the removal of Mr. Bradbury from the Board of Directors of the Exhibition, it would appear that his removal was the result of action, not by Lord Morris and the other two gentlemen, but by the British Government, through the President of the Board of Trade at that time (three years ago), who is now Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Stanley Baldwin. The case is being defended on behalf of Lord Morris and his associates by the Solicitors of the British Empire Exhibition, and it is not regarded seriously by anybody concerned, and it is very unlikely to ever come up for trial. The statement is given below:

The facts with regard to Mr. Bradbury's connection with the early history of the Exhibition are as follows:

Mr. Bradbury was one of a number of gentlemen who promoted the idea of the "London Great Exhibition" in 1919. At the same time there was in the field a rival in the shape of the "British Dominions Exhibition" each of these organizations having for its object the promotion of a Great Imperial Exhibition in London. Each was also desirious of obtaining the approval and support of His Majesty's Government. They ultimately agreed to amalgamate after a certain amount of work had been done by each, and from the two bodies a joint committee was formed for the purpose of promoting the "British Empire Exhibition," and united under the Chairmanship of Lord Morris. Mr. Bradbury, who signed the agreement to amalgamate as representing the London Great Exhibition was a member of this joint committee for the British Empire Exhibition. It was in fact upon his proposal, according to the regular Minute Book, that Lord Morris was elected Chairman.

This Joint Committee directed its first efforts to securing the approval of the Board of Trade to the projected Exhibition. As a result of repeated requests from this Committee approval was given, and a representation of that Department, Colonel Cole, was appointed to the Committee (November, 1919.)

Subsequently the Board of Trade agreed to submit to Parliament a bill to enable them to participate in the Guarantee Fund to the extent of £100 000 under certain quite definite conditions which were as follows:—

(1) The appointment of the General Manager to be approved by H. M. Government.

(2) The Executive Council to be enlarged and strengthened and the final list to be subject to the approval of the Board of Trade.

(3) All regulations in connection with the Exhibition such as those affecting the participation of the Dominions, India, the Colonies and Protectorates and the entry of British Exhibition etc. to be subject to the approval of the Exhibition Division of the Department of Overseas Trade.

These conditions imposed by the Board of Trade were accepted by this joint Committee of which Mr. Bradbury was a member. Mr. Bradbury was in fact present at the meeting at which Mr. Wintour's name was submitted for appointment as General Manager, and on several occasions he personally pressed Mr. Wintour to accept appointment, Mr. Wintour having been recommended by the Board of Trade.

Before long, however, it was discovered that Hr. Bradbury was acting independently of his colleagues on this committee and apparently endeavouring to create or resuscitate a separate organization to run the Exhibition on lines acceptable to himself. The attempted without the knowledge of the Committee, to register articles of association, which the Board of Trade learning on reference to the Committee that this action was unauthorized, declined to approve. Mr. Bradbury also arranged, again acting without the authority or the knowledge of his Committee, for the issue of an appeal for guarantee, using for that purpose copies of letters from His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and from the Board of Trade, the publication of which had not been authorized either by the sender or the recipients. In view of this clear evidence of improper conduct and of the unlikelihood of Mr. Bradbury callaborating harmoniously with his colleagues, the then President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the present Prime Minister refused to approve the inclusion of Mr. Bradbury's name in the list of members of the new Executive Council submitted in accordance with No. 2 of the Government's condition stated above.

From that date, now nearly three years ago, Mr. Bradbury's efforts to damage the Exhibition have been unceasing. He has circulated very exaggerated statements of the services rendered by himself in the inception of the exhibition and the scurrilous charges against those in charge of the present organization including some of his former colleagues.

The plain fact of the matter is that Mr. Bradbury importuned the Government for many months to give their support to the Exhibition and to nominate a representative on the Joint Committee. The Government at length agreed to do so, but attached definite conditions, the effect of which was to impose upon the Committee a degree of control over the organization of the Exhibition which Mr. Bradbury apparently found inconvenient. To this is clearly traceable in his name being struck off the list of the new Executive Council by the President of the Board of Trade.

ST. JOHN'S WILL BE STOPPING PLACE IN 'ROUND WORL FLIGHT

St. John's will be included in the route of the world air flight next spring which is being organized by the Legion of Frontiersmen, under the direction of Major General Right Honorable Lord Loch, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., and M.V.O., according to Capt. H. E. Steele, who is now in Montreal.

This will be the first all round the world flight when it is completed. Several others have been attempted, and it is the purpose of the above organization to make the flight the accomplishment of the British Empire. The plane will carry two aviators, Capt. Norman McMillan, M. C., A.F.C., and Capt. C. H. Malins, O.B.E. The air ministry of England has given sanction to the flight.

In connection with the air flight an advertising ship has been launched in England. This ship, also called the Frontiersman, will place depots in the north Pacific for the use of the airplane. To make this possible a scheme has been arranged whereby the ship will exhibit British and Canadian goods in the Aleutians, Alaska, Siberia, China, Japan, East Indies and South America.

The ship has already sailed. It is partially manned by young men from universities in England, under the direction of Capt. Roger Pocock, ex-member of the Mounted Police who served during the war in Canadian and Imperial forces. The route of the airplane will very slightly differ from that of the ship, being more direct. The plane will start from London, and will pass through France, Egypt, Mesopotamia, India, Singapore, Japan, Canada, Newfoundland, Greenland, Iceland, Scotland, and back to England. The ship will exhibit goods from the various parts of the British Empire.

CHAPTER XXVI.

His Wife

"I've nothing to complain of. I work hard, but I am well paid, and my employers trust me."

"Who's at your back?" Is there an Ackermann?"

"Only Mrs. Ackermann now, She's a widow, and lives at Jersey City."

"I see. Well, good day. I'm glad I've met you. Perhaps we'll come across one another again. Engaded to Margaret Tenterden! No wonder he was in a hurry to quit before she saw him! The poor beggar hadn't even a dress suit left, and very few of the other sort!"

"Only one," put in Jean, "because he told me so."

"You don't say so! Wish I had known—but there! he wasn't the sort one could present with a wardrobe. Good-bye, and thank you again. It's pleasant to hear the old brogue! I have not been in Scotland since I was a boy, but my old mother came from Cumnock, and she spoke its lingo till the day of he death, though she died in Fifth Avenue.

He went out with that, and Jean was left with a pleasant sense that life somehow had become enriched. Yet, twenty-four hours before, had she been asked, she would very probably have declined Harry Fordyce's acquaintance!

Her day was not over yet, nor had she heard the last of the extraordinary story with which she had come in touch.

About four o'clock, as she was drinking tea in her office, Mis Tenterden was announced. Jean sprang up, flushing all over her face, for it was no ordinary happening to have such a well-known figure call there in quite a friendly manner.

"Oh, good afternoon!" she said as she hastened to set a chair for the elegant figure in its enveloping sealskin wrap, at the same time thinking that she had never seenanything so beautiful or fascinating in her life. "How good you are to come. You are quite alone? I suppose Miss Rankine told you about me? She was here yesterday."

"She did. May I shake hands with you, Miss Dempster, and say 'Thank you?' I don't know all you have done, but I'm sure, now that I see you, that it is a great deal more than we shall ever be able to acknowledge or repay."

"No, no!" said Jean, confusedly. "I have done just nothing; only spoken a friendly word now and again to Mr. Rankine. Of course I saw at once that he was not in the set at the boarding house, and that he belonged to a different world from mine. But he was Scotch—and lonely—and that was all. I should like to have done a great deal more, only, you understand, it was not possible. But won't you sit down? I am so pleased to see you, and of course it is a very great honor, and I'll never forget it."

"Don't talk like that. I can't listen! I had to manoeuvre to get to you alone this afternoon, Miss Dempster. But I felt I must see you without Miss Rankine. She told me part of what you told her yesterday, and I've come to hear the rest."

She sat down quietly, opened her coat, and threw it back, so that the delicate white satin lining showed against the cheek which was quite as fair.

Jean's color fluttered in her face. She had had many grey days in that Broadway office— days in which life seemed stale, flat, and unprofitable. but surely this one recompensed!

"What did she tell you?" she asked, sitting forward, with eyes fixed intently on Carlotta's beautiful face. Her heart was sore over the relentless fate that had parted Alan Rankine from a creature so rare and desirable.

"Why, just that he had had very hard times here, and that we had been too late to see him. Did he actually only leave the city last night?"

"Only last night, by the midnight train. I have had Mr. Fordyce here to-day to confirm that."

"Mr. Fordyce? Oh, yes, Judy did mention his name. The man who sent him west, wasn't he?"

"The same. One who has painted New York pretty red more than once, if one is to believe all one hears. But I came to the conclusion to-day that probably the biggest half of the stories about him were lies. He's very straight, and he's unhappy too—if I am any good at reading faces."

"You are wonderful, I think. The sort of woman people instinctively trust. It's one of the greatest gifts in the world," said Carlotta.

"Oh, no!" cried Jean, shrinking back. "How can you say that when you know what your own gifts are? I was at the theatre last night again. I've seen a lot of actresses, most of the great ones here, and some who have come with distinguished records from Europe, but I've never seen anybody like you."

"In what way?"

"Oh—the way you grip people. You simply lay hold of them! I don't wonder he couldn't bear to look at you, knowing you were parted for the time being."

Who are you talking about?" asked Carlotta rather sharply.

Why, Mr. Rankine, of course! Did not Miss Rankine tell you he was in the theatre last night, and that directly he saw you on the stage he simply rose and fled?"

Carlotta's face blanched.

'No, she did not tell me. He was in the theatre last night, you say! How didn't I know? Oh, what a cruel shame! And now he is far away. He really did go on that train, you think?"

"I'm afraid there isn't a doubt about. Mr. Fordyce told me he had all the tickets, and now he is at least six hundred miles away."

Carlotta dropped her cheek on her hand and her face became strangely old and sad.

"It's all a frightful tragedy. How did it happen that he was at the Manhattan last night? Surely It was the very irony of fate. From what Judy told me I should not have imagined he had any money to spare for theatre tickets."

"He hadn't," answered Jean promptly, and she explained how it was.

"You saw a great deal of him, did you not, Miss Dempster? He often spoke of you in his letters."

"I saw a good deal of him at the beginning, but not latterly. I was feeling anxious about him just before he turned up the night before last to say good-bye."

"He had bad times, had he not? Much harder than he allowed us at home to know about."

"I'm afraid so," answered Jean, realizing that nothing could be gained by hiding things, and that Miss Tenterden had come determined to know the truth. "But one thing you may be glad and proud about, Miss Tenterden—right through he never lost his grit nor that fine sense of honour which made him different from the usual run of men one meets. And I'm sure he'll come out on top yet. I'm most frightfully sorry for you. Of course, I'm only a humble working woman, and I know I have not the right to speak to you like this, but I see your heart is in your mouth. I've been through a lot, Miss Tenterden—far more than you have any idea of, God forbid that you should sample my particular brand of suffering. I gave away all I had to a bad man, and I'm left stranded here, so far from home! Now, you, in spite of what you are, and though you have a world at your feet, can be sure that whatever Alan Rankine may be doing, or what the upshot may be, he will never be unworthy of your love, nor of any woman's."

Carlotta rose a trifle unsteadily to her feet.

"Thank you, dear woman—thank you very much! You have suffered a lot, you say? Have you seen things even up then in life? Do you think—do you think this horrible tangle will ever come right?"

"Sure thing," said Jean cheerfully. "God's in His heaven and all's right with the world."

"You see I feel it all so frightfully," Carlotta went on nervously, as she fumbled with the fastening on her coat, "because it was through me he lost his home and his place in Scotland. Some day, perhaps—some happier day—I will tell you. And yet—I would lay down my life cheerfully for him; and all I have accomplished is to make him a wanderer on the face of the earth, and to send him to the uttermost ends."

"But he'll come back from the uttermost ends, maintained Jean, her kind face positively shining. "Just you wait and see!"

Her homely speech, the hearty confidence with which she spoke, put some odd kind of courage into Carlotta's troubled heart.

This morning I thought everything was dark, and even Miss Rankine, who is the best friend I have in the world, could not make me feel any better! I even felt that I must get-away from her for awhile, for—for—well, there are wheels within wheels."

"There must be," assented Jean. "It's the most extra-ordinary and the most fascinating story I ever heard tell of."

"And nobody knows what the end will be," said Carlotta, with a wan little smile. "I suppose you wonder why I should come here and ask all these questions?"

"I don't wonder in the least, for you see, Miss Rankine told me that you were engaged to her brother."

"Engaged?" repeated Carlotta, looking straight into Jean's kind eyes, "I'm his wife!"

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Haven

The days wore on, and March ushured in spring to New York, in a blaze of unexampled splendour. But it found little response in the hearts of the two women from Scotland, who, with each dawn, hoped for news of the wandered on whom they had staked so many of their hopes.

The success of his brief season at the Manhattan had far surpassed the hopes of Graham Madox. While fully aware of his own powers, which had won hi mrecognition on the other side, Madox was eager to acknowledge it. Her sharp eyes discovered when she had the opportunity of seeing them in one another's company often, that it was other than an artist's pride and affection Madox felt for his beautiful colleague.

"That man is in love with you, Carlotta," she said, rather shortly, one day. "The simplest way out of the difficulty would be for you to marry him and be done with it."

Sometimes poor Judy was sharp of tongue and bitter of look! But consider her position! A pensioner on Carlotta's bounty, compelled to stop In New York until the end of her season, without active occupation or object in life, with little to do but brood every allowance must be made for her. Even the most perfect friendship in the world is bound to feel such a strain.

Colonel and Mrs. Cloud

CONDUCT INSPIRING SERVICES AT NO. 1 CITADEL YESTERDAY.

The services at the S. A. Citadel New Gower Street yesterday were conducted by Col. Cloud, the new Territorial Commander, assisted by Mrs. Cloud and the headquarters staff. The Colonel and his wife have a splendid record of successful evangelistic work and that this will be abundantly maintained during their stay in Newfoundland is a forgone conclusion.

At the 11 o'clock meeting the Colonel and his wife sang feelingly and Mrs. Cloud spoke briefly of her experience in seeking after the blessing of Holiness. The Colonel read several verses from the First Chapter of Nehemiah and drew some very helpful lessons from the Prophet's experience for the guidance and blessing of the people present. That faithfulness to God will be abundantly rewarded was shown by the experiences of such Bible characters as Joseph, Daniel, the three Hebrew Children, and others. The Colonel spoke in an earnest and forceful manner which gripped the audience as he described the great power for good which a truly sanctified man or woman can become in this world and the blessings they may enjoy. Three persons knelt at the penitent form seeking the blessing so graphically described by the Colonel.

At 3 p.m. a meting of praise and testimony was held in which a number of persons testified to the happiness enjoyed in the service of God. Colonel and Mrs. Cloud spoke and sang in their usual happy and interesting manner which was greatly enjoyed by the congregation.

At 7 p.m. the Colonel spoke to a crowded audience on three Bible Characters viz: Ashen, Judas and Simon Peter. He described the temptation which assailed these men, their fall and its disastrous consequences. The redeeming feature in Peter's case, namely his repentance, was dealt with very graphically and the congregation was left in no doubt as to the desirability of seeking God's pardon for their sins and being restored to His favour. Many hearts were touched by the Colonel's words and ten persons sought salvation at the Mercy Seat.

Valleyfield,
July 9th, 1923.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to record the death of my dear grandmother, who passed to the great beyond on June 30th. She was a great sufferer for the past two years, and she was waiting for the Lord to take her home. She will be greatly missed by all who knew her. She was 72 years of age. She leaves to mourn a husband, three sons, two daughtrs, 18 grandchildren, and a large number of relatives, and friends. She was buried in the Church of England Cemetery. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. T. Hiscock.

July 14th, 1923.

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Editor,—Will you let me have space in your valuable paper to record the death of our dear brother, Roland Pearce, who passed away peacefully on July 8th, after two years illness. His funeral service took place on July 10th, and was conducted by Rev. Canon Bayly. He was a member of the Orange Society and was loved by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn him a loving mother and father, four brothers and two sisters, and a number of friends, and we all hope to meet him some day on a happier shore.

As we stood around his bed-side,
And death shadows gathered near,
There was joy amidst the sorrow,
When he said I have no fear.

The Bishop's Visit to Baine Harbor

Baine Harbor,
July 19th, 1923.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Please grant me space in your widely read paper for a few short notes from Baine Harbor. First I may say the lobster fishery is very poor on this coast as well as the codfishery. Trappers are meeting it very scarce to date.

On Saturday, July 7th, we had a visit from our beloved Bishop and the Revs. Tulk and Elliott. On Saturday evening Confirmation was held and seven candidates received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, and took on new strength for the battle of life and for the conquest of sin. Before and after the laying on of hands the Bishop spoke and pointed out very plainly what is required of those who receive such a gift and the things they should do and not do. He told them that Confirmation would strengthen them for three things, first that they might live a life to the Glory of God; second that they may live for the good of man; and thirdly that they might save their own souls.

On Sunday, it being a very stormy day, with rain and a high wind, Bishop White was delayed from proceeding further up the coast, but as the old saying goes, its an ill wind that blows nobody good. The people of Baine Harbour were glad when they had the head of their Church present at its three services. The Bishop preached at morning service an impressive sermon from the Acts "Ye are witnesses for Christ." With plain words he pointed out the duty of a christian and what witness bearing for Christ means.

There was Children's service at three o'clock and the Rev. Tulk had a talk to the children. First he paid a warm tribute to the people of Baine Harbor in the way they keep their Church and Church property; then to the children as to their duty as members of the same. He told them a story of an old French soldier who as he sat lonely by the bank of a river thinking of France his beloved country was passed by a crowd of old men, whose cry was "We were the soldiers of France," but this old lonely soldier saw the day when they would die like himself, and there would be nobody to defend France from the enemy. But presently he saw another crowd and the song they sang was we are the soldiers of France, but he could see the day when they too would be dead and still no one to defend his beloved France. But as he was still thinking and growing sad for the fate of his country he was passed by another crowd of young men and the song they sang was we will be the soldiers of France, then was the old soldier glad because his beloved country was safe in their hands.

To my mind this story has a deep meaning to members of the church, both young and old, and as the Rev. Tulk said the Church of Christ will be what we make it—an influence for good or something for everyone to pity. If we are going to make it an influence for good we must hold with what is right in any shape or form, or else the Church loses its strength.

At evening service Rev. Tulk preached from St. Luke "Two men went up in the Temple to pray." It was a sermon worth listening to. He showed the difference between these two men of the Gosple and why one's prayers were accepted and the other's rejected. Thus was brought to a close a day that will be long remembered by the people of Baine Hr.

By thanking the Editor for space and wishing Sir William Coaker and the Advocate every success in this present year.

I remain, yours truly,
ANGUS RODWAY.

Paper Makers' Fear Not Well Founded

Supply of Canadian Pulpwood Will Not Be Cut Off Forthwith.

TORONTO, July 13.—The Toronto Globe says this morning:

"The fear of the paper manufacturers of the United States that their supply of Canadian pulpwood will be cut off forthwith is not well founded. The Dominion Government has taken power to prohibit export, but no embargo will be imposed until a commission, the personnel of which has not yet been announced, makes inquiry into the conditions under which export is carried on and the probable effect of prohibition on Canada's trade with the United States."

WASHINGTON, July 13—The threatened embargo on the export of Canadian pulp would not interfere with the shipment of woodpulp to the United States, but would stop the movement of pulp wood, it is understood here. If that were done, United States paper mills which manufacture their product direct from spruce logs would be vitally affected. The matter has been closely studied from the legal standpoint by officials in Washington who admit that Canada is within her rights in laying the embargo.

Some U.S. paper mills have bought many acres of Canadian forest. But if the embargo becomes effective the United States owners of these pulpwood lands will not be able to obtain wood from them for use in U. S. mills. They would be forced to the alternative of either selling their Canadian timber lands or moving their mills from the United States into Canada.

Official figures show that about 40 per cent. of the paper made in the United States is manufactured from domestic spruce obtained in the United States and about fifteen per cent from imported Canadian spruce.

The declaration idea behind the granting of authority for the embargo is conservation of Canadian pulpwood forests. Heavy inroads have been supply pulpwood for Canadian and American mills.

Official figures show the U. States consumes annually about 1,000,000 cords of Canadian pulpwood.

The belief is expressed by officials here, however, that back of it all is a desire of Canadians to build up the pulp industry of Canada.

Helping Russia To Be Good

(Westminster Gazette)

Whatever opinion we have of the Soviet as a system of rule, it is plain that it has no serious rival in Russia, and is accepted by the mass of the people there. The form of government that Russia chooses for herself is her own affair, and whatever it be we have no claim to interfere, and only refuse relations to our own injury. The true method of modifying the Russian ways of government is to make it worth while for Russia to become a good member of the family of nations. If we treat her as a pariah, a pariah she will remain.

The Flagship Calcutta Arrives In Port

H. M. S. Calcutta, flagship of the North American fleet, arrived her yesterday afternoon from Pictou, where she had been attending the Hector Celebrations. The Calcutta is flying the flag of Rear Admiral Seymour, who is on board. The ship will remain here till Friday next, after which she leaves for Forteau, where the Raleigh was lost last year. The Constance which was here all last week called yesterday morning.

The "Big" Issue In U. S. A.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—(By Canadian Press)—Signs multiply that Congress will be greatly embarrassed by the wet and dry issue next session, to say nothing of the fact that this issue is now embarrassing the administration, various state governments and the party chieftains.

The recent expression of Senator Borah in which he indicated apprehension lest the wet and dry question become the overshadowing one when Congress meets again and in the political situation, is symptomatic of the feeling here among many public men.

Thus far, it is uterly impossible to see the end of the ship liquor complications. This is true regardless of the fact the administration is talking of asking Congress to change the law so as to admit ship liquor on foreign vessels under seal and Secretary Hughes is talking of making treaties with foreign powers which will permit ship liquor to come into this country under seal provided the three mile limit is extended to twelve miles.

But the recent Supreme Court decision in which it interpreted not merely the Volstead Act but the prohibition amendment to the Constitution was sweeping in the extreme. It gave so sweeping a construction of the amendment and held its inhibitions to be so rigid that many good lawyers here do not believe it can be made more lenient by treaty or by legislation.

It is, of course, true that by failing to legislate for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment in one particular and another Congress can by indirection nullify it. But will the drys permit that? Moreover, the administration has raised objections to the non-enforcement policy of Governor Al Smith of New York State. For the federal government to advocate what amounts to non-enforcement of some of the provisions of the eighteenth amendment under such circumstances is not easy. It might become highly embarrassing to the administraion if the drys in Congress should condemn any shading down of the law or non-enforcement of any feature of the dry amendment.

Many believe the wet and dry question will be up next session in numerous ways and that it will consume, so many months of argument and discussion in both houses as seriously to interfere with other subjects that need attention, such as the railroad and transportation problem.

"BOY BANDIT" GETS AWAY FORM PRISON

RICHMOND, Va., July 17.—Prison authorities found early today on the western side of the state penitentiary, a rope, a ladder and footprints that told the story of the escape of Benjamin Liverman, 17, known as the "Boy Bandit," who was serving 53 years for burglary and robbery crimes.

The young desperado has been missing since last Wednesday and it has been disclosed that he found a hiding place within the grounds and scaled the walls last night. He had help from the outside, according to officials at the penitentiary, who voiced the belief that he could not have made his escape otherwise.

He was sentenced from Norfolk, Va., and entered upon probable life-term last March. He is wanted in Providence, R.I., and other cities for similar offences.

REPORTS POOR FISHERY NORTH

Steamer Brings Large Number of Passengers

The Coastal Steamer Portia, Capt. J. Field, arrived from the Northward at 3.30 p.m. yesterday, after calling at all ports. The ship reports the fishery outlook as most discouraging and at present is practically a failure. The only place where fish has made an appearance in any quantity is at Cook's Harbor and Quirpon, and at the latter place operations are hampered by the prevalence of ice.

The ship brought a small freight and the following passengers:

Messrs F. Yetman, W. H. Reid, A. Canning, J. Hearn, T. Doyle, J. Budden, E. W. Breen, E. Dawe, Dr. Thompson, E. P. Rowsell, F. W. Dart, Rev. Fr. Casey, H. Ashbourne, S. Torraville, H. Simms, M. "Of course, the motor car is popular in your little city, the same as elsewhere?"

"You betcha!" answered the gent from Jimpson Junction. "About forty per cent of our men folks own flivvers now. Twenty per cent more are trying to swap for 'em or get 'em on credit. One per cent is an idiot and don't know what they are for, and most of the rest are suspected of plotting to steal 'em."

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, MONDAY, JULY 23rd., 1923.

Sir Richard Squires Resigns

At Government House at noon to-day Sir R. A. Squires tendered his resignation as Prime Minister and Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

It is understood that His Excellency has been advised to call upon Mr. W. R. Warren, K.C., to form a ministry.

Good News From Sydney

The foreign despatch to-day foretells the cessation of the Sydney strike and the return of the miners to work on Tuesday.

This is most encouraging news and will be gladly heard by very many of our people, whose relatives have been thrown out of work by the Cape Breton situation.

A prolonged strike meant danger to this country, which is largely depending upon the Sydney coal supply. It would have been almost calamitous to have some of our industries closed down or adversely affected at this period when every man employed counts and every possible dollar earned is necessary.

The strike settlement, therefore, comes as a relief to Newfoundland.

The local unions of Sydney have evidently seen the unwisdom of following local leaders at the price of severance with the International Mine Workers' Association of America.

Latest News of the Fisheries

ANOTHER LOAD OF FISH.

Sir Wm. Coaker has received word to the effect that the F.P.U. schooner, Standard Cull, Capt. Gideon Bown of Badger's Quay, is returning from the Straits with 1000 quintals of codfish.

Following upon the news that Capts. Charlie and Peter Blackwood are returning with good voyages, the Standard Cull's success will be pleasant news to our Union friends. The Standard Cull was outfitted from Port Union.

Lumsden advises Sir William Coaker that on Saturday there was a good sign of fish there, all traps secured from five to eight quintals.

The S. S. Portia reports the northern fishery as very discouraging, and on the whole almost a failure.

BANKER ARRIVES

The Gloucester schooner Hesperus arrived in port from the fishing grounds this morning. She hails for 4,000 pounds halibut and 1000 lbs. codfish. The vessel is taking 17 hogsheads salt at Job Bros. & Co.

A later message from Lumsden says that fish has struck in there and traps are now securing from 10 to 30 quintals.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SIR WM. F. COAKER

Indian Burying Place,
July 10, 1923.

Hon. Sir W. F. Coaker, K.B.E.
Dear Sir William,—

Please accept my warmest congratulations on the honour that our Most Gracious Sovereign, King George, has bestowed upon you. Newfoundland has reason to be proud of such a man. Your name should be written in letters of gold. May you live long to enjoy your knighthood.

RICHARD MAY.

Sin W. F. Coaker, K.B.E.,
St. John's.

Please accept my hearty congratulations, on the honour conferred upon you by His Majesty the King. Long may you live to enjoy it; and I trust that all your efforts for the welfare and upbuilding of your native land will be crowned with abundant success.

Yours truly,

JOHN E. COLLINS.

Regarding the Humber

Sir W. G. Armstrong Whitworth & Co. Axplain Activites There

For the past few days the Advocate has discussed the matter of Humber Employment and expressed the disappointment, which is general among those requiring work, that no greater numbers of men are employed to date. Following our frank opinion on this subject, Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company have issued to the press a statement regarding Humber operations, which for the benefit of our readers, we publish below. The report shows that considerable works have been undertaken and states that general satisfactory progress is being made.

Why then are there not more men employed?

It may be that there are many more men in the Humber than we know about? If so, where do they come from?

The various works undertaken should bear out our contention that no serious effort has been made to meet the appeals for labours; as from the Company's report it appears that there are lots of work to be done.

The conclusion of the reports states work will be in full swing by the middle of August and we hope that the disappointment now prevailing will be removed by a genuine effort to help the people before the season is too far advanced.

The following report has been received from the engineer in charge of the works for Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., Limited, in connection with the Humber River developments:—

At Corner Brook, where the paper mill is to be erected, temporary buildings to accommodate the engineering and clerical staffs and five hundred workmen are practically completed, and temporary machine shops and stores are well under way. The filling in for the mill site is proceeding satisfactorily. Railway tracks have been laid and the steam shovel is at work and over 3,000 cubic yards of dirt is being moved daily The new wharf which, when completed, will accommodate large ocean-going steamers, is now 70 p.c. completed. All the plant and equipment for driving and preparing concrete and wooden piles in connection with the mill foundations and paper store houses is erected, and work will begin on the first of August. The road to the new quarry, which is to be opened up at Corner Brook, is built and everything is ready for the machinery and stone crushing plant, which arrived at Humbermouth to-day.

Main Dam, Junction Brook.—All plant required for the construction of this dam has arrived and is being assembled on the site. The excavation work has already begun and concreting will commence during the first week in August.

Main Canal.—The heavy excavating machinery is on the site and is now being erected. Work has already commenced on the canal with regard to the formation of embankments and satisfactory progress on this section of the work is reported.

Power House and Penstocks, Deer Lake.—All plant arrived at Humbermouth to-day and work will begin in ten day's time. Preliminary work on the foundations of the power house is already in hand. The area required for the penstocks and forebay has already been cleared and preparations are in hand for commencing work.

Railway Diversion and Construction of Sidings.—The main railway diversion is practically completed. All necessary sidings are nearing completion. Over 17 miles of track have been laid.

Town Site, Corner Brook.—The main roads have been staked out and clearing begins next week. Draining or filling in of swampy areas is already commenced.

General.—The general progress made in every department of the operations is regarded as satisfactory by the contractors, and by the middle of August work will be in full swing.

The New Paper Town

Hotels, Hospitals and Other Buildings Will Be Attractive and Commodious

More Than 1800 Men Now Working; Maximum Number on Construction Will be 3000; Pulpwood Cutting Will Begin This Autumn

Major Jennings, representative here of the Sir. W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. told The Advocate this morning that there are now employed on all construction works at Deer Lake and Corner Brook, something more than 1800 men. The actual number of Newfoundlanders on job is 1810, of which 514 are at Corner Brook.

Asked by us if it were correct that workmen are being imported from England, Major Jennings said that there were not more than twenty-two Englishment at work there. Besides the 1800 men who are divided up amongst the various contracting companies, employment is given indirectly to a large number of others thru sub-contracts for piles and other necessary timber.

The Town Site

Major Jennings showed The Advocate plans for the new town which is now almost fully laid out. All the available level space at Corner Brook is being taken up, but in some sections there is a deal of swamping, filling and clearing of brush, to be done before road-making and other work can be begun. Building will begin this autumn.

Staff-house, Hospital and Hotel

The three buildings that will be first undertaken will be the Staff-house, Hospital and large boarding house for workmen. The plans of these, which we were also shown, are attractive looking and commodious buildings, modernly equipped and up-to-the-minute in every particular.

The Hospital will have accomodation for fifteen patients, will have four private wards, operating room, emergency ward for accidents, sterilizing room and the very best equipment. There will also be a special ward to be used in cases of suspected infectious disease.

The Staff-house will be another splendid building, containing in all, forty-two bedrooms. Many of these have private baths, the others being fitted with running water, hot and cold. There are also sitting rooms, dining rooms, billiard room, pool rooms etc., while accomodation will also be provided for the wives of any of the staff who are married.

The working men's boarding house will be a large building containing bedroms, baths, dining and recreation rooms.

The work of erecting these buildings will start immediately. In the meantime the men are quartered in shacks so situated as not to interfere with the building of the town. There is also a temporary hospital in operation.

When construction operations are in full swing, the maximum number of mey employed will be about 3000, but this will not be for several months yet. In the meantime it is understood that the Power and Paper Co. will start pulpwood cutting during the autumn. Major Jennings said, with regard to the employment of men, it was the Company's desire to take on only such men as they can find constant employment for thruout the winter.

The Cadets and C. L. B. are the contesting teams in this evening's game of the League series.

Annie Laurie's Home

Maxwelton's braes are bonnie,
Where early fa's the dew;
And 'twas there that Aannie Laurie
Gied me her promise true.

But it was at Craigdarroch that Annie Laurie lived after she was married to Alexander Fergusson, the prosperous laird she chose in preference to the fervent but erratic Douglas of Fingland, who wrote the song that made her noted. So the promise she gave the poet wasn't so true, after all.

The estate of Craigdarroch, Dumfriesshire is for sale, according to a recent report from Scotland, and the resultant attention that has been drawn to the place where Annie Laurie made her home has revealed many intimate details in the life of the Nithdale heroine.

In response to queries made about thirty years ago by Andrew Carnegie Capt. Cutler Fergusson who at that time was the laird of Craigdarroch, and a grandson of the Fergusson made famous by Robert Burns' poem, "The Whistle," wrote as follows:

"My ancestress, Annie Laurie, was unquestionably the heroine of the famous ballad. She was born Dec. 10 1682, in the manor house of Maxwelltown, and baptized a few days later in Glencairn kirk. Her father was Sir Robert Laurie, bart., of Maxwelltown, and her mother, Annie Delsell, granddaughter of the first earl of Carnwath. She married in April 1709, Alexander Fergusson, laird of Craigdarroch, and was the mother of one son, Alexander. She lived to be nearly 80 years old."

After her husband's death she became the Lady Bountiful of Nithsdale. Under her direction the present mansion at Craigdarroch was built, and she laid out the Gregorian gardens at the rear of the house, which still are preserved. The historic estate, which embraces 2,700 acres, has been in the hands of the Fergussons since 1398. Here Annie Laurie lived, transformed from the poetry of song to the realities that were hers as mistress of Craigdarroch.

Among her many letters still preserved there is only one reference to Douglas of Fingland, poet and lover who wrote his fervent lines to Annie Laurie. Her cousin, Mrs. Riddel of Glenriddel, had mentioned seeing Douglass at a ball in Edinburgh. Mrs. Fergusson wrote in reply: "I trust he has forsaken his treasonable opinions, and that he is content."

Proper Manners—

Married at Boston

The wedding of Miss Florence Dwyer, eldest daughter of Sergeant and Mrs. A. Dwyer of this town, to Mr. B. B. Stafford of St. John's, was solemnized in Boston recently. Miss Dwyer has been nursing in Boston for about seven years and visited her parents last summer. The wedding was a quiet one and the happy couple left by the Majestic and are at present visiting France. They expect to return to Boston by the same steamer and will from there return to St. John's where they will reside, next month. Both of the contracting parties are well-known and popular here, and their many friends will wish them a long term of martial happiness, in which wish the Standard joins.—Hr. Grace Standard, July 20th.

Has Dempsey 'Gone Back' or is Gibbons a Dangerous Heavyweight Contender?

Critics of the Game Disagree as to the Showing Made at Shelby, But They are Unanimous the Champion Must Fight Oftener If He Would Retain His Title.

Criticis who sat at the Shelby ringside are widely at variance over the fight between Jack Dempsey and Tommy Gibbons. While many are of the opinion that the champion has "gone back" due to his two-year lay-off from ring activities, others are just as positive he is as good as he ever was and give unstinted praise to Gibbons for sticking it out the full fifteen rounds.

The fact of the matter is that Dempsey is as good physically as he ever was, and is an improved boxer, but the long lay-off may have affected the timing of his punches. On the other hand one must remember this is the first time Dempsey has ever fought a really clever boxer with speed. At close quarters, when they were in clinches, the champion fought in his old-time form, but when it came to the open fighting, when he attempted to box with Gibbons, he looked terrible. Ten out of every dozen leads missed the challenger by a wide mark. Frequently you could see daylight between Dempsey's fist and Gibbons.

Too much censure must not be given to Dempsey for this, because Gibbons is without doubt the best boxer and one of the fastest men at his weight in America, if not in the world. Dempsey, with the lone exception of his fight with Georges Carpenter, has been used to fighting with big, bulky, slow-going heavies that furnished admirable tarets for his mighty wallop. If he had been able to land such a wallop on Gibbons he undoubtedly would have knocked Tom out, but there's the rub. You can't land such a blow in the clinches and when they were fighting in the open Gibbons made him look foolish. Dempsey never even rocked Tom on his pins, much less knock him down. No man ever has sent Tom to the canvas.

How Dempsey Fought.

It was evident after the fight had progressed a few rounds that Dempsey, always boring in, looking for any advantage, was determined to wear Gibbons out and then deliver the haymaker. And he came mighty near doing it with those rabbit punches and blows to the kidneys in the clinches. Those blows, (which would never be allowed in New York or New Jersey, where the game is under rigid control) together with the high altitude, had Gibbons weary in soul and body at the end of the thirteenth round, and that he managed to stick thru the next two speaks worlds for his boxing ability. After Gibbons stepped out in the eleventh and failed in his attempt to put Dempsey to sleep his fighting may be aptly described as a masterpiece of defensive work.

While Gibbons was clever enough to duck, dodge, block and sidestep eleven out of twelve of the champion's blows, it must not be supposed that Dempsey did not get to him. He did. On the jaw and to the body. Next to the speed, skill, cleverness and wonderfully cool head displayed by Gibbons, the most striking characteristic of the challenger's ring work was his stamina and endurance, his unflagging, dogged, imperviousness to Dempsey's blows—his tremendously courageous stand against the man whose furious fighting qualities have driven fear into the hearts of all who have faced him. Gibbons showed he had the fighting heart of a lion. Weakened and weary, he stood up before the champion in an effort to trade blow for blow. And it was not until the closing rounds, when nature demanded that he protect himself if he were to survive, that he affected a studied defense. This defense defied Dempsey's most diligent efforts.

Tho Dempsey never even knocked the challenger down there is no question as to his right to the decision of the referee. He had at least eight of the rounds to Gibbons' three, with four about evenly drawn.

Must Fight Oftener.

In its relation to Dempsey's future ring activities the bout showed clearly that Dempsey must follow a more active career if he is long to remain champion. The failure of Dempsey's body blows to "get" Gibbons is declared by some to be indication that Dempsey's hitting power is waning—that the champion's terrific punching strength is leaving him as a consequence of the life of ease and luxury that is his as champion.

While this is possible, there is no reasonable justification for such a deduction. It is more reasonable to recognize Gibbons' surprising powers for assimilating punishment than to detract from the great showing of the defeated challenger.

Nevertheless, the fact remains that Dempsey must have greater ring activity. More frequent bouts are necessary if the champion is to preserve his wonderful fighting qualities at the proper edge.

It is natural that there should be talk of a return bout. Gibbons himself believes he is entitled to it, and the public would like to see them come together, but let us hope for the lighter man's sake that rabbit punches and blows in the back during clinches are barred. But if Gibbons never wins the championship he at least has the distinction of accomplishing that which no other man has ever accomplished—that of standing up for fifteen full rounds before the Utah Mauler.

THE PROBLEM OF CHURCH UNION

TORONTO, July 16—The Presbyterian Church Union Committee are pointing out that Canada seems to be marching in step with Scotland in the movement for Church Union. Reports of the progress of the proposed union of the Established Church and the United Free Church read very like reports of the church union situation in Canada. The following is part of a news desptach from Glasgow:—

"This year's assemblies have brought the union negotiations so far that the end should be reached within another year or so. There will be an enormous amount of work to do after the churches are officially united, for a special commission of some kind will have to be set up for the arrangement of the disposal of the temporalities and there will have to be considered also the big question of reducing the number of churches. There are far too many churches, especially in small towns and country places. There are frequently three where there is hardly a congregation for one. In the large towns and cities the duplication of churches is not noticed so much, but in some of these the number could be reduced with advantage, especially in the central parts from which the population has moved to the suburbs within recent years. It is estimated by men who have gone into the matter that union would make possible the ultimate abolition of two or three hundred churches, and that in each case better work would be done by one church than ever can be done by two;

There is one difference, however, between the church union situation in the two countries; in Canada the problem of settlement is much less complicated, for there is only one minority to contend with, while in Scotland there are two minorities. The despatch above referred to, in discussing the situation, says:

"What will the minorities in both churches do? Will they decline to fall in with the union and form themselves into one or more independent bodies? If they do they will have no legal claim on the property of any kind, for the two assemblies, having learned the union of the Free Church and the United Presbyterians, have taken the precaution of getting an act of Parliament approving union, so that no claims for property can be made afterwards by minorities. But it is quite probable that two small dissenting churches may arise out of the Union, and that, as a result, Scotland may actually find itself with more sects than before."

Property rights seem to be hopelessly involved, for the despatch goes on to say: "As for the present Free Church, it is the remnant that refused to join with the United Presbyterians, and it claims to be the original Free Church of 1843, which then claimed to be the real Church of Scotland Free. So that it says, if there is to be any re-allocation of the temporalities of the present Established Church it must come in for its share. This is a curious old country, anyhow."

ST. PIERRE TRIP BY BOAT ENDS DISASTEROUSLY

MOTOR LAUNCH SINKS AFTER GASOLENE EXPLOSION.

Three Men Are Badly Burnt.

A trip to St. Pierre undertaken by three young men of the city, named Ryan, O'Neil and Coady had a disastrous ending on Thursday evening, when the motor boat in which the trip was being made and occupied at the time by the three St. John's men and two men belonging to St. Mary's Bay, named Cheeseman and Dready, was set fire to by a gasolene explosion and burnt till she sank. The accident occurred in golden Bay.

The boat, which was about 4 tons, was returning from St. Pierre when the accident occurred. On Thursday evening the boat was seen making towards the land, when Cheeseman and Dready, who were fishing in the vicinity, boarded her and were asked to pilot them to a safe anchorage for the night. This they did, and after the boat was anchored the men were sitting in the cabin, when, due to a lighted match being carelessly thrown into a tin of gasolene, an explosion followed which enveloped the little craft and O'Neil, Cheeseman and Dready were severely burned about the face and hands.

They succeeded to reaching the shore safely in their boat, but their motor boat was completely destroyed and sank. Coady and Ryan escaped injuries, and with their companions came to town by Saturday's train. The injured men are now at Southcott Hospital where they are doing well, and all are thankful that they escaped with their lives.

Lightning Causes Damage at Dock

The heavy lightning which was experienced in the city Saturday afternoon did some damage.

At the dry dock the lightning ran along the pipes leading to the machine shop covering the air compressor and burned up the wires etc. on the wall, putting the whole outfit out of commission.

A staff of electricians were kept busy for a couple of hours effecting repairs. Fortunately the compressor was not damaged.

Left Holton For Stag Bay

Mrs. J. J. Collins, wife of Mr. Collins, of the Marconi Company, received a message from her husband Saturday morning, which stated that he was leaving Holton on Major Butler's yacht for Stag Bay. The message was dated Friday, so it is presumed the party is there now. Mr. Collins will start operations at once on the erection of the wireless station and within a short time it is expected we will be receiving daily reports from the gold seekers.

Parliamentary Elections at Bermuda

GREAT STRUGGLE IN PEMBROKE, J. P. HAND DEFEATS DR. HARVEY.

In the recent election at Bermuda, Mr. J. P. Hand, the young Newfoundlander and old St. John's boy, was successful in being returned for the House of Assembly. Mr. Hand has made quite a name for himself in the commercial activities of his adopted home, and his entry into politics has also been with marked success. The Hamilton Gazette has the following to say concerning Mr. Hard's victory.

"Mr. J. P. Hand had a cordial reception on rising to return thanks. His position he said was a very difficult one. He, unlike all the other candidates had not been born here. That made the honour they had done him the more valuable to him. He came here a young man in search of health. He found it and much more besides. He had prospered and now they had done him the greatest honour possible to any man. They hal elected him to the House of Assembly, a distinction greater than any other in his opinion. Yet his election was tinged with regret for, though he was glad to have won he was sorry to have defeated a distinguished and honourable gentleman like Dr. Harvey (Cheers.)

Dr. Harvey had done good services for his country and he left the House with an unsullied reputation and with nothing but credit to his character.

He was convinced that the Tourist Trade was our greatest asset, but nevertheless he hoped that some commission would be appointed and an attempt made to restore Agriculture to its former high place. (Cheers.) He thanked them for their support and announced his intention of devoting himself whole heartedly to the service of the community."

The Advocate congratulates Mr. Hand and wishes him continued success.

Aouse is Totally Destroyed by Fire

The residence of Mr. Harry Stone, a farmer living on the Cockpit Road, was completely destroyed by fire yesterday morning.

The fire was first discovered about 1.30 a.m., and the family, who retired early in the night, had a narrow escape in getting out of the burning building. The fire started on the roof near the chimney, and it is believed was caused by a defective chimney.

The flames spread rapidly, and residents from the road were quickly on the scene and rendered valuable assistance in saving the furniture from the burning building.

A telephone message to the Central Station brought out the motor pump but the machine was of no use owing to the scarcity of water in the vicinity. All that could be done was to stand by and see the building being destroyed.

The reflection from the burning building was seen for miles around and the western portion of the city was lighted up and hundreds of citizens were attracted to the spot even at that hour.

After burning for nearly two hours all that remained was the smouldering ruins, of what was once a fine old residence. It was a landmark in this section of the city, and was over three-quarters of a century built.

The loss to Mr. Stone is a serious one, as the house was only partly covered by insurance and there was nothing on the furniture or contents.

DOCK STRIKERS REFUSE TO HEAR UNION LEADERS

Hall Is Emptied as Officers Rise to Address Audience.

LONDON, July 23—The continuance of the dockers strike led to what was almost a unique incident in the history of trades unionism. The strike has not had the sanction of the official union leaders and a meeting was called in East London to enable Ernest Bevin, Secretary of the Dock Workers Union, and Harry Gosling, leader of the transport workers, to explain their attitude in refusing to sanction the strike. Five thousand dock workers responded and crowded the hall to overflowing. When Bevin and Gosling ascended the platform there was silence, but before they could speak the storm broke, the entire assembly hooting and hissing them. One unofficial leader arose and invited the audience to leave the hall as a showing of lack of confidence and faith in Bevin and Gosling. In seventeen minutes the hall was empty.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Haven

Carlotta's patience and loving kindness were infinite; but at length she began to feel some fret of the spirit.

No letters had come from Alberta, and cables had merely elicited the information that nothing had been seen or heard of Alan Rankine there.

He had disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him; and in her darker moods, Judy inclined to the idea of suicide. Carlotta, more optimistic because more wise, did her best to cheer her.

"I had already refused Graham Madox three times before you and I had ever met, child," she answered, calmly enough, though she was hurt both by the words and by Judy's tone.

"But he can ask you a fourth time. I see it in his eyes!" answered Judy ruthlessly. "And nobody could blame you if you accepted him. Why, it would be just an ideal arrangement.'

Judy had got some of the stage patter at her finger ends, and had learned a great many things about the private life of its devotees which had astonished her not a little. Perhaps the greatest eye-opener had been the colossal nature of the work, its arduous exactions, its austerity. There could not even be a moment's slackening, and sometimes she wondered how Carlotta could stand it, and be invariably so cheerful and bright.

It may be said that there was one flaw in the friendship between these two. Carlotta, out of a mistaken idea of sparing Judy's feelings, and perhaps making the future more bright and complete, had withheld from her a full confidence.

Judy was yet unaware of the fact which Carlotta, in a moment of emotional abandon, had communicated to Jean Dempster, and had immediately thereafter repented of doing so and had laid a vow of secrecy upon Jean.

Judy did not know that Alan and Carlotta had been married at a London registry office on the morning of the day that he left London, and that Carlotta considered that she and all her earnings belonged to Stair. Had Judy been aware that the objective of Carlotta's life was to do her part in the redemption of Stair, she would have understood the practice of the small economies, which sometimes both puzzled and irritated her.

Carlotta smiled her far-away and most provoking smile as Judy reeled off her arguments in favor of a closer allegiance between Madox and his leading lady. She understood that Judy had much to try her, and thus forgave the pin-pricks of the every-day life which both were beginning to feel just a little trying and irksome.

It was Jean Dempster who was Judy's stand-by in those days. The acquaintanceship had made great strides, and often while Carlotta was at the theatre, Judy would slip down to Mrs. Isaacstein's for a chat with the countrywoman who understood her, apparently, better than Carlotta.

New York is a levelling place, and Judy, amid all the strange new whirl of her life, had almost forgotten the trammels of the old days, when she had known just this one or that, and had had her social list marked down with a blue pencil, in a county wherein Stair could not only hold its own, but might lead, had it been so minded.

Carlotta understood Judy far better than Judy imagined, and with the unerring intuition of the born student of human nature, laid her her finger on the sore spot. Instead of making an answer to the jibe about Graham Madox, she leaned her elbows on her knees and looked across the floor space of the hotel sitting-room of which they were both so heartily sick.

"Judy, darling, the matter with you is that you want to go home."

"But I can't," she answered, dismally, not even trying to refute the suggestion. "You won't finish for another month, as least; and I heard Mr. Madox saying on Sunday, that he only wished he could add another month to that! As likely as not he will add it, and then where shall I be?"

"At Cambridge, my dear, I hope," said Carlotta firmly.

"Then you want to get rid of me!" cried Judy, in hot rebellion. "Of course I quite understand."

Carlotta, with an infinite patience, crossed the room and knelt by Judy's side, laying her kind, compelling hands on her arms, and forcing the dark, rebellious eyes to meet hers.

"Listen, dearest. I've been watching you all these weeks, and I knew that it must come. When we agreed to take this trip together, everything was different. We expected to find Alan here, and that you would have his companionship and all th concerns of his life to interest you. We have been disappointed—" and here a little catch broke from her voice for an instant, but she made a gallant effort to recover herself. "It is cruel to keep you here, and unnecessary besides. Don't look at me like that, Judy. We can't afford to drift away from one another—we daren't. And for that reason, you are going home."

"And when I am gone Graham Madox will have you all to himself, and the inevitable will happen! Nothing can prevent it, Carlotta. It would be better—far better!—just to accept fate. You are great on the fate-line, anyway! I am sure that Graham Madox is your fate."

She spoke hardly, but her heart was melting in her breast, for the lovely face, so near her own had a haunting, pathetic look, which it was not in Judy's nature to resist.

"You dont believe that in your innermost heart, Judy. You may have ceased to love me, perhaps I've been trying, but you believe in me yet, I hope and trust, or couldn't go on—" "But Alan is dead! There can be nothing surer than that! He never went to that Calgary ranch. He has never been heard of since, and worse than all, he has made no attempt to send back Fordyce's money—because Jean Dempster told me—and that proves beyond all doubt that he is dead. I know him beter than you, and that his pride is as high as the heavens."

Carlotta rose to her feet. Her face had whitened a little, but her eyes never lost their serene and steadfast look.

"Judy, If Alan were dead I should know. He is alive. He will come back to us and things will right themselves at Stair. Don't ask me how I know, because I can't tell you; only it is here—deep down—the only thing that keeps me going," she said, pressing her hand to her heart. "Try to hold on for a little longer. And now go and get your hat and we'll do the steamship offices. It's a crowded season, but perhaps we shall be lucky enough to get you a berth in Saturday's boat."

Judy loked for a moment at Carlotta's face, and her own was a study.

"Carlotta, I do believe you're the best as well as the greatest woman in the world! How dare you treat a little beast like me so nobly! Why don't you knock me down and trample on me? It's what I deserve! I won't go! I'll see it through. I'd be a worm if I took you at your word!"

"You are getting a little mixed in your metaphors, my dear! But the Atlantic breezes will clear your brain again," said Carlotta with a smile. It is all right, isn't it? And you will not drag Graham Madox in again, will you? His place in my life is what it always has been, and ever will be, I hope—that of a good friend and faithful comrade. He is perfectly safe, Judy, and so am I."

With that Judy professed herself content, and they sallied forth together to the steamship office and got a berth on a steamer sailing on the following Saturday.

"Alan's boat," said Judy, with a strange note in her voice. "And for his sake I ought to go second class."

But Carlotta would not hear of that and a comfortable stateroom was duly engaded and paid for that very day.

Upon the completion of that transaction, Judy's spirits visibly rose, and that very evening about eight o'clock, after Carlotta had gone to the theatre, she took the street car to Mrs. Isaacstein's to tell Jean the great news.

She found Jean alone in her sitting room, in which there was a wealth of flowers.

"You are a very extravagant woman, Miss Dempster!" she said, as she touched the sweet spring blossoms with tender hands, their delicate perfume bringing back a swift vision of Stair woods in April, carpeted with primrose and daffodil.

"Say, rather , I have an extravagant friend," answered Jean. "But I think I've put a stop to it."

"Admirer?" smiled Judy. "Flowers seem to be one of New York's chief extravagances. Miss Tenterden gets waggon loads of them. What money they cost, too! Just twice as much as the same flowers in England or Scotland!"

Jean nodded, and drawing up the most comfortable chair, asked Judy to sit down, and said that she would make the coffee.

Every visitor to Jean Dempster's sitting room knew that cunning little coffee-making machine which she manipulated with her own clever fingers, thereby producing a nectar fit for the gods.

"You look ever so much brighter than when I saw you last Saturday. Had any good news?"

"I'm going home on Saturday," anewered Judy unexpectedly.

"Oh!" said Jean, interestedly. "But Miss Tenterden's season itn't over ——"

"Not for a month. But she's sending me home. I didn't know how desperately I wanted to go until we were at the steamship office to-day. And I never know a more understanding person than she is! Her intuition is uncanny, sometimes."

"The artistic temperament," murmured Jean, on the spur of the moment. "But she'll miss you most frightfully!"

YOUNG DAUGHTER MADE WELL

Mother Tells How Her Daughter Suffered and Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vancouver, B.C.—"My daughter is a young girl who has been having severe pains and weak and dizzy feelings for some time and had lost her appetite. Through an older daughter who had heard of a woman who was taking it for the same trouble, we were told of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My daughter has been taking it for several months and is quite all right now. It has done all it was represented to do and we have told a number of friends about it. I am never without a bottle of it in the house, for I myself take it for that weak, tired, worn-out feeling which sometimes comes to us all. I find it is building me up and I strongly recommend it to women who are suffering as I and my daughter have."—Mrs. J. McDONALD, 2947 26th Ave. East, Vancouver, B. C.

From the age of twelve a girl needs all the care a thoughtful mother can give. Many a woman has suffered years of pain and misery—the victim of thoughtlessness or ignorance of the mother who should have guided her during this time.

If she complains of headaches, pains in the back and lower limbs, or if you notice a slowness of thought, nervousness or irritability on the part of your daughter, make life easier for her.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for such conditions. C

THE GRAND LODGE SESSIONS

TORONTO, July 16.—With upwards of 1800 delegates from all parts of the Dominion of Canada and fraternal delegates from Great Britain and the United States in attendance, the 6th annual communication of the Grand Lodge A. F. and A. M. of Canada in the province of Ontario which opens in Massey Hall here on Wednesday, July 18, and closes with a monster banquet on Thursday night promises to be one of the most important in the history of Canadian masonry. It is forecast that the business of the communication will be comparatively light, but important matters are scheduled for discussion principally the mode of electing the district deputy grand masters. At present the regulation is to have the deputies chosen some time previous to the Grand Lodge will come before the assembly for a decision. This proposal is not a new one as it was before the annual gatherings on several occasions and was rejected.

Notable among the fraternal delegates is Lord Ampthill, Pro-Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England, who is attending the communication at the direction of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England. Lord Ampthill arrived in Canada two weeks ago for the gathering at Toronto. He will be fraternally received here on the opening day of the communication by Lt.-Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., of Belleville Ontario, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Canada. At the same time Col. Ponton will welcome grand masters from the various provinces of Canada and several jurisdictions in the States. On Thursday night at the close of the business of the communication St. Andrew's Lodge, which last year celebrated its hundredth anniversary, will tender a monster banquet to the fraternal and out-of-town delegates with Lord Ampthill as the principal guest.

The General Purposes Committee will meet today and tomorrow, to prepare reports of the sub-committee for the sessions of the Grand Lodge Prominent in the reports will be the statement on the creation of districts and the redistribution of lodges, of which there are now 560 in 34 dismembership of 100,000 in Ontario tricts. The reports will also show a alone.

Col. Ponton, who has been Grand Master for the past two years will retire at this communication and will be succeeded by Deputy Grand Master W. R. Drope, of Grimsby, Ontario. For the office of Deputy Grand Master there will be a contest between John A. Rowland and A. J. Young both of Toronto. For the office of Grand Senior Warden the candidates are J. W. Millar, H. G. French, Dr. W. E. Struthers, R. A. Woodleigh, E. J. Redpath and J. Hudson Mr. French and Mr Millar are said to have strong support for the position and the contest will likely prove a close one. For the office of Grand Junior Warden the only candidate who has to date definitely announced himself is W. F. Montague, of Hamilton, and for Grand Chaplain Rev. Dr. R. C. Blagrave of Peterboro is the only contestant. E. T. Malone, K. C., will be re-elected to the office of Grand Treasurer, and W. M. Logan Hamilton, will be re-elected Grand Secretary. For the position of Grand Registrar, Edwin Smith and R. L. Shriner, of Toronto, will face the ballot.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, TUESDAY, JULY 24th., 1923.

POLITICAL

Sir R. A. Squires presided over a meeting of the Liberal Party at 5 p.m. yesterday and said good-bye to his associates. Mr. Warren, who had been invited by the Governor to form a new administration, met the full Party at 9 o'clock last evening.

Sir W. F. Coaker proposed Mr. Warren as Leader of the Liberal Party, which proposal was seconded by Mr. Cave and carried unanimously. The Party decided to stand as a unit at the back of the new Leader.

Mr. Warren will likely be in a position in a couple of days to announce the new administration.

The House will meet briefly at 3 p.m. and an adjournment will likely be made covering several days.

Mr. Warren has been in public life since 1902, when he stood in a bye-election for Trinity and was returned. He has taken a part in every general election since. He, therefore, with the exception of Sir M. P. Cashin and Mr. Woodford, has had the longest legislative experience of the 36 men at present holding seats in the House.

Mr. Warren will have to shoulder responsibilities which probably exceed any yet cast upon a Prime Minister's shoulders in this country. That he will do his best no one doubts. That success will follow his efforts all will confidently pray.

He is assured of the loyal support of Sir William Coaker and the whole Government Party.

The Industrial Outlook

What The Country And People Need.

The Advocate interview with the representative of the Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., has thrown a portion of light on the matter of Humber operations; although it certainly does not dispose of the fact that there are many hundreds of disappointed people looking for expected employment there. The actual number of Newfoundlanders now employed is 1810, of which 514 are at Corner Brook. This number includes ordinary workmen only. The staff consisting of work bosses, official clerks, etc., number about 200 additional men.

The Advocate is glad to note that the report that Englishmen are being imported in large numbers to the exclusion of Newfoundlanders who can efficiently perform certain works, is not founded on fact. There are only 22 Englishmen at work on the Humber.

In addition, therefore, to upwards of 2,000 men already actually employed, there are very considerable numbers of other workers employed through sub-contracts for piles, and necessary building materials.

From information gathered yesterday, it is concluded that the arrangement regarding employment, which was to be carried out through the representatives of the various districts, has not been adhered to, and large numbers of men have been employed directly.

The employment of upwards of 2,000 men is no inconsiderable matter in such times as these, and certainly proves that the Humber Industry is something for which we should be thankful.

There is no intention, on our part, to consider that the Humber Industry is a philantrophic institution. It is a strictly business proposition. Newfoundland surely desires it to be such a proposition. Responsibility in the undertaking demands sound business methods in every respect.

This paper intends to speak on behalf of anxious workingmen facing a very short fishery catch and with no means to provide for the coming winter. If ever we needed a Humber and other development propositions, we need them now. If the Liberal Party's industrial programme can be speeded to the fullest possible action, the Advocate believes that, even despite comparative fishery failure, the "problem of living" for our people can be solved. That is why this paper insists on earnest action and the co-operation of Government, operating companies and all concerned. The motive for such action should be the mutual responsibility and interest which all parties have for the welfare of our country.

It will be one of the prime duties of the incoming administration to impress upon the Paper and Pulp Company the urgency of starting preparations for logging at the earliest moment, and we note that the Company has this matter under consideration now.

From 1000 to 1500 men could be employed in logging operations and about an equal number of men could be employed building the town.

The town building operations' cost is not provided for under the Humber agreement and must be defrayed by funds specially raised by the Pulp and Paper Co. This will take a reasonable time to arrange: though the town building preparations are well underway now.

Owing to the increased freight and passenger traffic resulting from Humber activities, the railway returns during the last months have leaped considerably. As time advances, this fortunate condition of affairs will cause the railway to be converted from a losing to a paying proposition. This will mean much to the country.

To sum up, then, the Humber project already employs 2000 men, with the likelihood of early employment of 2500 men on logging and town building works. These numbers will not include outside men engaged through sub-contracts and by railway and other additional activities. The importtance to the country of this industry will be thus realised; and the Advocate's recent stand regarding the necessity of speeding up employment will be now seen as justifiable a well as in the interests of the working people.

In addition to this new industry, which will certainly save the Government from the burdensome expense of undertaking emergency measures as were necssary before this industrial development was initiated, the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. is expected to employ 2500 men in operations at Grand Falls, Bishop's Falls and Alexander Bay.

The Advocate understands negotiations are well advanced for the establishment of two pulpwood and sawmill industries in White Bay, which will employ from 2000 to 2500 men, and which may be undertaken in the very near future.

The coming months will see a great boom in the sawmill trade throughout the country, and everywhere great activity will result by demands for building material from the Humber and other industrial development works.

It is estimated that the Humber works will require in the year from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 feet of lumber for construction purposes.

The pit-prop contracts of Mr. M. E. Martin, in Bonavista Bay, and other sections will further employ from 500 to 750 men.

In all, upwards of 10,000 men should be working this season on industrial operations in this country, not including large numbers ordinarily working on Bell Island and other places to which we have not referred.

Reckoning the earnings of each man as $200, the total returns to workmen would be $2,000,000, or say one-quarter of the total value of an average fishery catch. This is a very substantial supplement for the fisheries and will be the means of saving the serious situation arising from a short fishery.

By the earliest employment of greatest possible numbers of men on such undertakings, the industrial programme of the Liberal Party will be thoroughly justified and demonstrated to be the means of providing for our people and helping the country on the happy road of prosperity.

It will also be encouraging to know that a staff of engineers have been for some time engaged in making plans for the establishment of another 400 ton paper and pulp industry on the Gander Lake. All water powers and lands have been secured and the pulpwood resources exist in such quantities as to make an indefinite supply for operations.

In all probability the next session of the Assembly will see the finalization of another great industry that will employ several thousand men in construction and operation.

Why then, should we fear? We have the resources. Let us hasten their development and employ our workers.

THAT IS THE POSITION THE ADVOCATE TAKES.

A Distinction Without A Difference

The Advocate is in entire agreement with the views expressed by the Telegram yesterday with regard to the beneficial influence which united action and whole-hearted encouragement are bound to exercise upon our staple industry, the fishery. We agree, too, with that paper when it says: "Too long has the pall of politics shrouded our vital issues, too long has a political atmosphere stifled the best motives of our most energetic men. We look with jaundiced eyes upon every suggestion and seek for a motive in every act, however broad-minded and beneficial that act may be. We have become the slaves of the professional politician and have danced too long to the tune which he pipes."

In the foregoing the Telegram has cleverly diagnosed the trouble that has been sapping the life blood of the fishing industry for several years past, and that inertia of which we spoke a few days ago is the outcome, in many instances, of this very political narrowness. The Telegram prefers to term "misdirected energy," what we call "inertia," but it is a distinction without a difference. The point is that our exporters are not doing anything to ensure improved marketing of this year's catch of fish, and because they make no attempt in this direction the Colony is going to be up against the same unbearable conditions that prevailed last year and the year before.

The exporters have not benefited by the experiences of the past. They have drawn nothing from these experiences on which to establish a system that will be likely to endure. Apparently they have but a luke-warm interest in the whole affair. Their attitude cannot be strictly classed as "misdirected energy" because they exhibit no energy of any sort where our staple industry is concerned.

"I See England As An Orchard," Says Premier

Stanley Baldwin Delivers Great Speech at Oxford to the Students.

Mr. Baldwin, the Prime Minister, Spoke at Oxford in connection with the Rhodes Scholarship Trust. He spoke not on politics, but dealt with principles, and we feel the speech issued is one that readers will like to preserve with that famous one on "Courage" delivered by Sir J. M. Barrie some months ago. Mr. Baldwin said:—

"The world has learned a great many things during the last few years, but it has learned nothing more certainly than this, that it is far easier to destroy than to create, far easier to break up than to build. The common civilization which all of us inherited is that old civilization of Western Europe which for 17 centuries has been built up thru the blood and tears of generations of men, of saints and soldiers, kings, and statesmen, and we are seeing that civilization cracking to-day.

"The whole world, consciously or unconsciously, not vocally, none the less in reality, is looking for salvation from the subject of this toast, the British Empire and the United States of America. Now, why is this, and what is the link that binds together the British Empire and the United States of America that men should look to us in this way?

"I see it myself in the form of an allegory. I see England as an orchard which has sent forth its growths from the old stock to the uttermost corners of the world, where, under other climes and in other conditions the fruit ripens, similar fruit, but different fruit growing in the Dominions to the peculiar influences of each Dominion, while in the United States of America that stock has had many grafts upon it.

"That accounts for this, that the quality of that fruit may be different and will be different in kind from ours, but, as we believe, no less fragrant, though the fragrance will be our own. However fine that fruit may be, there will never be one scintilla of envy or jealousy from the people of the Old Country or of the Dominions.

"Yet there are elements in the old stocks which persist, and whose very persistence qualifies the English speaking people for that trust that the world reposes in them and for that hope with which they are regarded. As I see it, there may perhaps be four chief qualities, persistent, consistent, among the English-speaking people. They have alike, from long inheritance, an inate sense of justice. It may that one of us and sometimes the other, fails to live up to our ideals, but the ideal is there, and justice is one of the profoundest elements of our character—the desire for it, the eagerness in search of it, the giving of fair play to our own people and to other people.

"Secondly, there is that real democratic feeling of valuing a man for what he is. There is, thirdly, that sense of political freedom, neither degenerating on the one side into licence, nor, on the other hand, retrograding into tyranny, and,, as has often been said, the price of that liberty is eternal vigilance, without which we shall leave that razor edge of perfect liberty for one of those two pitfalls which, I have indicated, lie in wait for us on either side at all times.

Opportunity for Service

"Lastly, besides political freedom there is the love of spiritual freedom, a belief that men in the English speaking races can worship in their own manner, and underlying everything in the English-speaking peoples there has always been, in a greater or less degree, and there is to-day, that belief in God and in the responsibility not only of the individual, but of the nation, for his actions and their actions on earth.

"Now I believe that in those four principles that I have laid down, you have the fundamental principles that guide all our people alike. You have the consistent product of the stock which gives us, in my belief, the strength of character which gives people the feeling that we can be trusted, that we are a support and that gives us the opportunity of service to the world.

"It always seems to me that what is true of individuals is true to a great extent of nations and groups of nations, and, just as, once upon a time, long ago, when a man, as an excuse for not having done what he ought to have done, said, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' and that was held to be no excuse, so it is with nations, and as selfishness in an individual in time leads to the atrophy of his higher nature, and to fatty degeneration of his lower nature, so I believe that in the true course of progress we shall all of us—the nations in our empire and the United States—in our several ways, while each pursuing our own development to the uttermost of our power come to unite whatever justice calls us thruout the world and wherever there is peace to be ensued.

"If there is building to do in the world it is we in the long run who will have to do that building, and whether the time is come now, or whether it is in the future, let every one of us here cherish at least that ideal, in the firm conviction that soner or later opportunity will be given to us for its realization. But for the men who have to lay their hands to that task they will want the courage of a Pitt and the faith of a Lincoln.

"For our peoples let us trust that each one of us here, as we go out into the world, may make it our chief aim to help and bring about that end. Let us hope that all the English-speaking peoples may be found, each in their own place, to live a life of glorious service for their own peoples and of common service for the good of all mankind."

The previous evening, in a speech at the Parliamentary Press dinner, the Prime Minister said:

"I feel very much like a small insect under a microscope. Everything that I do or think, or say, is laid bare. But I remember so well what a dear old friend of mine, William de Morgan, said many years ago. He was not a scientific man any more than I am. He was fond, as I am, of literature and the arts, and, as myself, would far rather have written one of Keats' sonnets than invented poison gas or the gramophone.

"He had a scientific friend who used to study ants through a microscope, and he told me with great joy that his friend had discovered on close examination that they really were idling frightfully. It may be that when you can study me you will be able to reproduce for the public all those blemishes and faults of character which I have endeavored with some success hitherto to cover up, if not hide. I do not think that in this present House of Commons the kind of oratory to which people used to listen in the old days would be of the slightest use. We live in an age when the Parliamentary machine always runs the risk of being clogged, owing to the amount of work that has to be done, and it appears to me that the most necessary qualification of a leader of the House and of Ministers in the Government is to have the capacity of getting the business through. And that business can be got through only by business-like habits and business-like speeches. By that I mean speeches that really do deal primarily with the matter in hand, that are straightforward and honest; that do not try to cloud the issue; and that do not put in any unnecessary trimmings."

Westminster Hall Opened By King

Famous Structure Was Built By William Rufus

LONDON, July 17—(Canadian Press Cable)—In the presence of a great throng including members of Parliament and diplomas and representatives of the various sections of the Empire the King this morning reopened Westminister Hall after the restoration of its famous roof, the result of eight years work.

His Majesty pointed out that the dangers and defects in the roof had been made good with the least possible interference with the design or material of the original roof and he expressed the hope that centuries of new life had been given this masterpiece of British architecture.

Westminister Hall was built by William Rufus (1056-1100) and altered by Richard II. (1367-1400). It was the only portion of the Parliament buildings that escaped being destroyed by fire on October 16, 1834. Westminister Hall has a magnificient open roof of carved oak and is used as the vestibule of the Houses of Parliament.

LONDON LETTER

By MRS. CECIL CHESETRTON

LONDON, July 2—(By Mail)—The Horse Show this week divided interest with the Theatrical Garden Party, held in the grounds of old Chelsea Hospital. Founded by Nell Gwynn, ("Nell of Old Drury"- it is a kindly and a peaceful home for the veterans of our wars. Fine old soldiers, still erect in their scarlet coats,—enjoyed all the fun of the fair; eager as any of the crowd to catch a glimpse of the pretty women who ran the stalls for the benefit of the Actors Orphanage in Buckingham. There were "stars" at every turn. Sir General du Maurier and Viola Tree; Nelson Keys, his inimitable dancing turn assisted by Carpentier, Pauline Lord and Sybil Thorndike. One of the most interesting stalls, ran by the Critic's Circle, sold books ancient and modern. Stacey Aumonier, novelist, auctioned a wonderful collection of programmes including a bill of forty years ago, which showed the names of Richard Mansfield, E. H. Sothern, and Lottie Venne. It was a georgeous afternoon, the smooth green lawns, the glorious oaks, the charming dresses and pretty woman made a picture of Old London in her most attractive mood.

Wednesday at Wimbledon was a Women's Day. Literary, artistic and social notabilities so crowded the courts to see "Suzanne", that it become necessary to emphasize the amazing reception Mademoiselle Lenglen receives. Her defeat of Miss Ingham, who put up a plucky fight, was greeted with ecstacy. Whatever the star turn does, it is right, and the crowd never forgets to let her know it.

The British Legion Sports Rally which opens on July 14 will be one of the most memorable meetings of the year. It will be held at the Empire Stadium, Wembley Park, just outside Harrow, and the entries include Canadian and Australian teams. Some of the interesting items will be a 250 yards walking race for disabled and a quarter of a mile walk for blinded soldiers. In connection with the Sports Rally there will take place an Imperial Conference of ex-service men with the object of providing adequate capital for one-man businesses. This Conference will be attended by delegates from Canada, New Zealand South Africa and Australia.

In spite of the opposition to the proposed increase in our Air defences, a number of Labor leaders have announced their intention of being present at the Royal Air Force Pageant at Hendon. This is held obstensibly with the idea of assisting R.A.F. charities; at the same time, however, it will bring together so many different units that a valuable stimulus to aviation, both civil and military, will be supplied. It is interesting to find that large numbers of visitors are coming from the Continent to witness the various flying stunts, and curiosity is concentrated on the world's largest single engined aeroplane, the 1,000 H.P. Napier "Avro". Immediately after its appearance at the pageant the machine will proceed to Gothenburg where it will take part in the exhibition there.

A TENNIS PRODIGY

YOUTH MAY BECOME FINEST PLAYER IN THE WORLD

LONDON, June 21 (Canadian Press, by Mail)—We have grown accustomed to the production of youthful prodigies by the United States and, more recently by France, says the Manchester Guardian, but among all of them Vincent Richards stands out as the most remarkable player for his age that lawn tennis has ever known. Whatever he achieves in the futureand he only passed out of his teens two months back—nothing can be quite so amazing as his feat of becoming doubles champion of the United States at the tender age of fifteen.

This unique feat he accomplished in 1918 in partnership with "Big Bill" Tilden. He was then but a stripling of 5ft. 5ins., weighing but seven stone. He now stands 5ft. 10ins., and turns the scale at over nine stone. The intervening years have been a time of gradual ripening, delayed in some degree by temperamental defects a certain carelessness, or, as Tilden put it more brusquely, "laziness of temperament."

In 1921 he made a big advance, regaining in partnership with Tilden the doubles championship and achieving his first victory over his famous team mate at Providence, on the latter's return from winning range of creating a sensation, winning the first two sets against Johnson by an amazing display of tennis, and only succumbling after a desperate struggle. So dazzling was his play that Larned, the great rival of the Doherty's, and seven times champion of America, declared that Richard's play in the first two sets was the finest he had ever seen.

Last year Richards gained further distinction by two more victories over Tilden—although he was "blown off the court" at their third meeting—whilst in the American championship he scored a straight set win over the Australian star, J. O. Anderson. In the semi-final he fought level with Johnson for one set, but then the latter's mechanical perfection proved too much for him. When it is remembered, however, that neither of those famous Australians, Patterson and Anderson, in the Davis Cup could get more than three games in any set off the California, Richard's deuce set was no mean performance. On the season's record he stood out as the third best player in the world—at nineteen years of age.

Unlike most of the youthful wonders of the American continent, Richards comes from the Eastern States, Yonkers, New York, being his home. A fureher point of difference, and one that augurs well for a prolonged career, is that his game is based on placing rather than sheer pace. He combines the steadiness and headwork of a veteran with the agility of youth. He adds to these the wonderful powers of anticipation of a Norman Brookes and the delicate touch of a violenist. He is indeed the Kubelik of lawn tennis, thinks the writer in the Manchester Guardian, and says the sheer artistry of his play is without an equal. These qualities make him the finest volleyer in the world to-day. Richards already reveals occasionally a real "hit" on the forehead, and when this becomes consistant and sure there is no reason why he should not fulfil Tilden's prophecy of two years ago and become "the greatest played the world has ever seen."

Work In Lumber Camps Increases

Wages are Higher as Demanded for Labor Cannot Be Met.

QUEBEC, July 17—(Star Special) Instead of falling down at this time of the year, as is customary, employment in the lumber camps of the province has increased to such an extent that provisional employment bureaus both in Quebec and in Montreal are unable to meet the requirements and forecasts for the fall are that wages are to take a rise with the demand still increasing .

In the district of Quebec in July and August generally, the number of men engaged in lumber camps averaged three or four hundred.

This season there are at present over 2,000 men who have been engaged through the Provisional Employment Bureau and the demand can no longer be met. This activity is without precedent and interpreted as indicating that the old system of operating at full swing only during the late fall, the winter and the early spring has been abandoned by the lumber people.

As a result of the greatly increased demand, wages are going up and instead of being $22 to $32 per month as was the case a few months ago, they reach from $40 to $50 and more per month.

Erstwhile "President" of Ireland Comes Out of Hiding and Speaks

De Valera Says Republican Cause Received Set-back But That the End is Not Yet — Forecasts Another Struggle.

PARIS, July 17— (United Jress.) —Breaking a silence of many months, Eamonn De Valera, erstwhile "president" of the Irish Republic, predicts in a statement, smuggled here by airplane, that the Irish Free State is doomed and that Ireland soon will be striving again unitedly for independence.

The Irish rebel leader issued a signed statement saying that despite efforts of the Free State troops to capture him, he is in Dublin, gathering the scatered republican elements of Sinn Fein into a new organization.

De Valera indicates his new policy is based along political lines, rather than military, for the present.

"The Sinn Fein movement is being re-organized," De Valera asserts in his statement. "Its policy will probably be an assertion that Ireland's independence cannot be signed away, or voted away. Nor can any portion of Ireland's territory be so disposed of. All Government authority in Ireland comes exclusively from the people; any pretended treaty or contract that contravenes these principles will be null and void.

"Parallel with this assertion will be a denial of the right of any foreign authority to rule in Ireland and refusal to recognizion or co-operate with that authority or its agents.

"On the economic side, Sinn Fein will initiate a program of reform and strive to make Ireland economically self-supporting.

COMING ELECTION.

"The full strength of the republicans will not appear in the coming elections," De Valera's statement continues. "The most active workers are either prisoners or prevented from organising or putting their views before the electors. They are hampered by every device which the control of the press and executive machinery enables their opponents to adopt.

"But these conditions cannot last. A state founded as the Free State was founded is doomed. This new union with England will be as ill-starred as its predecessor of 1800."

De Valera maintained that a majority of the Irish people are Republican at heart, but are intimidated by the cry that maintenance of the Republic meant a war of extermination by England. But the Republicans are disheartened by their military defeat, the rebel leader declared.

"I know the Republican aspirations are traditional. "The nation has outlasted 7 centuries of tyranny and is certain to ultimately triumph. The Republicans are convinced that the independence for which they have been striving will again soon become the object of a re-united people.

"To friends of the Republicans I can only say that we upon whom responsibility has rested have endeavered to discharge faithfully our obligations. The funds so generously subscribed in the United States have been applied strictly to the purpose for which they were subscribed.

"In fighting for the freedom of Ireland, we realized we were fighting for the freedom of all subject nations. We for feel that our defeat was a setback for all those causes, but we are prepared now, as in the past, to strive with all the strength God may give us to make these causes prevail. President Wilson was right when he said: "Self-determination is not a mere phrase. It is an important principle of action which statesmen will henceforth ignore at their peril."

The man who has no appreciation of his own ability is quite likely to have no regard fir his own work, and the natural result is that he places no value upon himself, or upon his effort.—Jean Finot.

Last Night's Game

CADETS DEFEAT C. L. B. 1—0.

The attendance at last evening's football game was small, due, no doubt, to the inclemency of the weather.

At 7.30 referee Quick called both teams to play. The C.L.B. was greatly strengthened by some new players and started off by making a rush for the Cadets goal. This was checked by the backs and the ball was sent to the centre line. For about 10 minutes the C.L.B. kept the ball in Cadets territory but at length Walter Callahan got control and brought it down to the mouth of the C.L.B. goal where a scrimmage took place with the backs. Jimmie Young, however, was "Johnny-on-the-Spot" and contrived to hook the ball clear and sent in a pretty shot which beat the goalie.

When play recommenced the C.L.B. tried hard to equalize and made many attacks on the Cadets defence, but they were all repulsed. The Cadets tried to increase their lead but were prevented by the good work of the C.L.B. backs. The period ended without any further scoring being done.

On resumption of play it was thought that the C.L.B. would even up, but the Cadets were working well and turned off several dangerous attacks. For some time the C.L.B. goalie was kept busy and he was in fine form, saving many difficult shots in a clever manner.

The ball by this time was in a sodden condition and made the shooting very difficult but the players did the best possible under the circumstances and a very good exhibition was handed out. Contrary to general expectations there was no scoring in the second period and the final whistle sounded C.C.C. 1; C.L.B. nil.

The Cabmen and Taxi Drivers, and The Council

The Municipal Council held a special meeting yesterday forenoon for the purpose of discussing the objections of the Cab and Taxi Drivers to the new stands. The Mayor and full Board were present as also Inspector General Hutchings.

Petitions submitted at a recent meeting were given the fullest consideration and the following temporary solution of the difficulty was agreed to, pending the amendment of the Regulations.

(1) The placing of telephones at the Duckworth and Queen Street Stands.

(2) Regulation with regard to situation of stands not to be altered;

(3) Both Taxi and Cab Drivers will be permitted to park on Water Street after business hours, but no cars or cabs will be allowed in front of private residences or open shops.

(4- Cabs and Taxis will be permitted to park between Harvey's and Shea's premises, Water Street, for benefit of Tourist Traffic.

(5) Time Limit for the parking of cars on Water Street by private individuals during the day to be extended from 30 to 45 minutes.

(6) If any further improvements are necessary with regard to the stands, the agent for Clapp's property, Water Street East, will be approached with a view of securing that vacant land for use as a Cab and Taxi Stand. july24,1i

Rod and Gun

There is an abundance of interesting material for the sportsman in the August issue of Rod and Gun in Canada, and from cover to cover it is stocked with articles written from first hand experience, while the various departments are brim-full of interesting suggestions, and experiences. Raymond Thomson is represented by a good story on the Beaver, getting some unusual insights into its life. "Walking Up and Drifting Down" is an interesting account of a novel canoe trip by A. W. Tucker, while Bonnycastle Dale has contributed a good story on the wildgoose hunters of Cape Island. The Sixth Close Call of Martin Hunter, contains another narrow escape from death, while an interesting article appears by G. W. Visser on making summer vacation pictures atractive.. Robert Page Lincoln, C. S. Landis, F. H. Walker, W. C. Motley, F. V. Williams, and J. W. Winson, the regular contributors, have supplied departments covering every phrase of the sportsman's interest, and there are numerous other articles and stories in this well illustrated number which make the issue one of particular interest.

Rod and Gun in Canada is published monthly by W. J. Taylor, Limited, at Woodstock, Ontario.

Saw 100 Icebergs Off Belle Isle

Experiencing good weather, the White Star-Dominion Liner Megantic reported yesterday that she was 350 miles east of Belle Isle and was making good time, expecting to arrive at Liverpool some time on Sunday. Captain Berry reported that the Belle Isle route is now quite open and White Star-Dominion Line steamers will now use this route until the end of the season.

Outside of the Belle Isle Strait the Megantic passengers had a worderful sight in seeing over a hundred icebergs and growlers drifting down from the Labrador coast towards mid-Atlantic where in due course they will be reported in the Canadian and New York shipping lanes.

Three liners were reported inbound at Belle Isle today, namely the Montcalm of the Canadian Pacific Steamships which passed into the strait at 3.15 a.m., the White Star Liner Canada 300 miles east and the Canadian Pacific Montreal at 7.15 a.m.

Employees Make Presentation

TO HON. GEORGE AND MRS. KNOWLING YESTERDAY.

Congratulations were sent yesterday by the employees of the firm of G. Knowling, Ltd., to the Hon. George and Mrs. Knowling, on the occasion of their diamond wedding jubilee.

Their congratulations were accompanied by a lovely boquet of carnations and a diamond ring for Mrs. Knowling, as a mark of esteem in which they are both held by all those employed by the firm.

Every mind was made for growth, for knowledge; and its nature is sinned against when it is doomed to ignorance. The divine gift of intelligence was bestowed for higher uses than bodily labor, than to make hewers of wood, drawers of water, plough man, or servants. Every being so gifted is intended to acquaint himself with God and His works, and to perform wisely and disinterestedly the duties of life.—William Ellery Channing.

THREE PERSONS SHOT.

BERLIN, July 24—The inter-allied commission has issued sweeping blanked ordinance according to press despatches reaching here, aiming to throttle passive resistance in the Ruhr and Rhineland.

The ordinance apparently leaves a loophole, but the Berlin papers declare it will only serve to stiffen the resistance. It provides extreme penalties for participation in propaganda or written or spoken opposition to the prevailing ordinances, for interference with the commission activities or otherwise organizing resistance.

Punishment is provided even in the case of offering a sack of potatoes as an inducement for holding out against the occupational forces, according to the despatches.

DUBLIN, July 24—Replying to a recent statement by the Free State Government, Eamon De Valera issued the following note:

"Living or dead, we mean to establish the right of Irish Republicans to live and work openly for the complete liberation of our country. Our opponents make a mistake if they imagine we are going to remain in the rut. If the people of Clare select me as their candidate again, I will be with them and nothing but a bullet will stop me."

SYDNEY, July 24—The miners of Cape Breton are fast preparing to return to work. The steel workers are holding out with a possibility of prolonging the struggle for a week or ten days.

MANILLA, July 24—The immediate recall of Governor-General Leonard Wood was demanded in a resolution unanimously adopted at a joint meeting of both houses of the legislature to-night.

The resolution was addressed to President Harding.

LAUSANNE, July 24.—The ceremony attending the signature of the treaty of Lausanne will be held at three o'clock this afternoon in the Lausanne University hall. It will be an exceedingly simple affair, President Scheurer delivering a brief address, after which the plenipotentiaries will sign their names to the various documents.

LONDON, July 24—Former-Premier Lloyd George, addressing a meeting of National Liberals Monday night, contended that the coalition government had succeeded nine months in preventing the French from entering the Ruhr, but since the present government came into power with a policy of greater friendship for France,that act of folly has been perpetrated and the economic life of Europe thrown into confusion, while a most humiliating peace with Turkey has been concluded.

PARIS, July 24—Senator Beaubien, of Montreal, who is accompanying the Canadian trade exhibition train now touring France, was the victim of a robber on the train at Douais.

Senator Beaubien was robbed of his satchel containing one hundred and twenty-five dollars in gold, and letters of credit amounting to a million francs. The thief took the satchel from the train compartment while the Senator was in the dining car.

LONDON, July 24—In the Communist riots in Frankfort, it was reported to-day that a doctor was knocked down on the street on Tuesday and killed, and yesterday, Monday, the public presecutor suffered, while his family was mistreated and his home plundered.

SAILORS PAY FINE FOR BIG CAROUSE

S. S. Bayeskimo Crew Drank Case of Scotch—Fined Barely the Cost.

Newfoundlanders Celebrate.

(Montreal Star.)

Eight firemen and sailors were paraded before Captain J. O. Grey recently in the office of the local shipping master, and an inquiry was made as to which of the crew had broken into the ship stores of the S.S. Bayeskimo and stolen a case of Scotch whiskey on Tuesday evening. The men were all found guilty of being drunk on board ship, but none would implicate his mate in the theft charge.

The crew, mostly Newfoundlanders, had no explanation to offer as to how the case of Scotch whiskey came into their possession, but frankly admitted that they had partaken of the whiskey, and evidently enjoyed it. Captain Falk, of the Bayeskimo, which leaves this week for the Arctic, was somewhat in a quandary as to how he was going to recover the value of the whiskey, but Captain Grey solved the trouble by imposing a fine of a day's pay on each man. An additional fine of five shillings, approximately $1.25 was also imposed for drunkenness on board ship.

The "Yo-ho-ho- and a bottle of rum" cuisode was accordingly disposed of. The fines imposed were strictly in accordance with the British and Canading Shipping Acts, and the question is a moot one as to whether the men really got their money's worth. It is rather suspected that they did, because they drank the entire case of twelve quart bottles before being reported. It works out at $2.57 per man, and the harder-headed of the crew probably accounted for more than that worth of whiskey.

The men were more or less satisfied, and with the look on their faces of the cat which ate the canary, they left Captain Grey's office still swearing that they did not know who broke into the stores. In the opinion of Captain Grey they looked on the case of Scotch as so much manna from heaven, and helped themselves.

Ship's Whiskey Stolen

An interesting case of alleged theft will be tried before the shipping authorities here in the case of the crew of the Hudson's Bay steamer Bayeskimo which is now loading at Tarte Pier for the Hudson's Bay trading posts. Some time during the night the ship's stores were broken into and a case of whiskey stolen. The whiskey showed its effects on some of the crew who at least will be charged with being drunk on board ship.

An enquiry tomorrow is to fix the blame on the culpit who stole the whiskey. Breaking into ship's stores is not as serious an offence as broaching the cargo but it is serious enough and a specific fine is provided for in the Shipping Act.

Instead of sailing on Saturday as scheduled an attempt is being made to clear the Bayeskimo Thursday.

The Home arrived at Humbermouth 5 a.m. yesterday.

Steam Trawler Total Wreck

Messrs. Bowring Brothers received a message from the operator at Grand Bank yesterday, that the steam trawler Sir John French, bound from Port Hawkesbury to Grand Bank, was a total loss at Little Dantzic Point.

The steamer struck the rocks at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, and the captain and crew landed safely. It is understood the ship had cargo on board for Grand Bank though only recently she was engaged at fishing operations. Dantzic Point is about 12 miles from Grand Bank. The Sir John French is owned in Halifax and is a steel screw ship of 351 tons gross. Her dimensions are 140 feet in length; 24 feet wide and 13 feet deep, and she was built in 1915 by Messrs. Cook, Wellington and Gammel, Ltd. Beverley, N.S.

CHINESE BANDITS CAPTURE BRITISH MINING ENGINEER

PEKING, July 24—Chinese bandits have captured Darcey Weatherbe British mining engineer, near Chiuho, Province of Yunnan, according to reports received by the Customs Commissioner to-day.

Weatherbe was formerly a resident of Peking. He is a native of Halifax, and son of the late Sir Robert Weatherbe, former chief justice of Nova Scotia. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Kingston, and has held positions in many parts of the globe. He was last heard from in May, when he wrote his brother from North Burmah, stating that he was setting out with mules and natives, to explore a new uncharted route to Peking, from Burmah thru a country never before visited by whites.

After graduation, Mr. Weatherbe held a position in the Nova Scotia mines office from whence he set out for foreign countries, earning international reputation as a mining engineer, and visiting practically every part of the globe.

Seven Nations Signed Peace Treaty Yesterday Afternoon At Lausanne

Jugo-Slavia Refuesd to Sign as Would be Detrimental to National Interests

PEACE TREATY WAS SIGNED AT LAUSANNE YESTERDAY

Signing Took Place in Imposing Hall of Lausanne University, and Was Carried out With Traditional Swiss Simplicity.

LAUSANNE, July 24—The general treaty, formally ending the state of war, was signed by Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Greece, Roumania and Turkey to.day at 3.15 p.m. Jugo Slavia announced her refusal to sign on the grounds that to do so would be harmful to her national interests.

The treaty distributes the Ottoman debt among countries like Jugo Slavia, which acquired parts of the former Ottoman Empire.

Jugo-Slavia maintains that she annexed her former Turkish territories as a result of the Balkan wars. She prefers therefore, to abide by the treaties of London and Bucharest, which fixed the political status of the Balkans. She has agreed to negotiate directly with the European powers regarding her possible responsibility in connection with the Turkish debt.

In addition to the general treaty, the conference has resulted in the convention setting up a regime for the Turkish Straits to which Russia and Bulgaria adhere, and separate agreement on the frontiers of Thrace, commercial and amnesty accordes, and protocols on concessions for minorities, and judicial safeguards for foreigners, and documents by which Belgium and Portugal adhere to certain parts of the treaty.

Ismet Pasha, for Turkey, signed first, allied representatives following.

The signing took place in the Imposing Hall of Lausanne, and was carried out with traditional Swiss simplicity. Lausanne made the occasion a holiday.

Leaders in Central Europe

The average Englishman's impressions of Central Europe are still uncomfortably vague, writes a correspondent of The Times from Prague. Even to-day his tongue has not accustomed itself to the tortuous conglomeration of unpronounceable new names with which his morning newspaper now confronts him, while his knowledge of the geography of this part of the world is as deficient as that of Shakespeare. Out of the mists of his uncertainty, however, he has framed certain general impressions, based largely on hearsay and on the evidence of a small number of English travellers. He has a natural sympathy with the unfortunate Austrian. In a vague way he imagines the Hungarian to be a good fellow who is lavish in his hospitality to Englishmen, while he has sensuous visions of Budapest as a city of beautiful women and enchanting gipsy music. He has read his "Red Pepper."

Of the Czechs his impressions are less definite. He has been told, however, and has come to believe, that Czecho-Slovakia is the most prosperous of all the new States, and, while he does not evince that feverish interest in the currency question which is to-day the pulse of all life east of the Rhine, he knows that the Czech exchange stands high and that the Czech people have done more to put their houses in order than any of their neighbours. He has heard strange stories of the discomforts of hotel life in Prague and of the rudeness of Czech Customs officials, and he pictures the Czechs to himself as a hard-working, rather efficient race of unpleasant manners and boorish appearance.

The picture is not wholly unfair, but it does scant justice to the Czechs. In Central Europe to-day they are the dominant race. After three hundred years of oppression the fortune of war has suddenly placed them in the position of a conqueror, and the role of conqueror has never attracted the sympathies of other nations. As a consequence, few English people realise how much the gradual improvement which has taken place in Central Europe during the course of the last four years is due to the foresight and magnanimous policy of the men who to-day control the destinies of the Czecho-Slovak State.

However great may be the advantages which Czecho-Slovakia has reaped from the Peace Treaties, there can be no doubt that her present preeminence is largely due to the fact that she has produced four men who stand out in a marked degree even when compared with the statesmen of Western Europe, and still more so with the minor politicians of the other Succession States and of the Balkans. These are President Masaryk; Dr. Benes, the Foreign Minister; M. Svehla, the Present Prime Minister, and Dr. Rasin, the late Minister of Finance.

PRESIDENT MASARYK.

President Masaryk needs little introduction to Englishmen, for England shares with Russia the honour of being his spiritual home. He is a man who stands far removed from the petty meannesses which contaminate the political life of the present age. The simplicity of his life and the broad humaneness of his outlook have endeared him to all classes of his countrymen, in whose hearts he is enshrined as the symbol of their independence. His goodness radiates even through the hearts of his enemies, and there is no man who has known him who is not the better for that knowledge. As a great Slavophile, he believes that Europe today is as much in need of spiritual as of economic aid, and he looks, perhaps, to Russia—a Russia purified and cleansed—for the seeds of that spiritual regeneration. In Prague he has set up a Russian university with the best Russian professors, where, free from the derelict young Russian refugees the disturbing influence of politics, are clothed and fed and given the benefits of a first-class education. It is the greatest humanitarian work which has been done for Russia by any country since the war.

Towards the population of Austria as well as towards the minority races of his own country President Masaryk adopts a policy of generous conciliation, which, although, still hampered by the chauvinist elements among the Czechs, will reap the triumph of its broad-minded common sense. Indeed, when one bears in mind the fact that during the war his favourite daughter was thrown for months into prison by the Austro-Hungarian Government—not as a political prisoner as she should have been, but as a common criminal in a common cell together with the prostitutes and pickets of the streets of Vienna—his forbearance to his former enemies borders on the sublime. To-day there is no Austrian, no German-Bohemian, who cannot go to him with his grievances and be sure of a sympathetic hearing.

The son of a humble Slovak blacksmith he has become on of the greatest scholars of his age, and to-day, after a blameless life spent in increasing toil for the liberation of his people, he has at last entered into his kingdom. The value of his moderating influence on the fiery course of Czech politics is inestimable. He is now in his seventy-third year, and his life is, perhaps, the most precious asset for the maintenance of peace in Central Europe.

DR. BENES

Dr. Benes is the disciple of President Masaryk and the exponent of his policy. The son of a shoemaker, he has graduated in the hard school of life and his risen to his present preeminence entirely on his own merits. He is an advocate of the simple life, neither smokes nor drinks, and can apparently work a limitless number of hours in a day. In his youth he was an ardent footballer and played for the leading Prague club against visiting English teams. At one time he was a Privatdozent at the Uiversity of Prague, where he taught sociology and philosophy, while for some years he was professor of political economy at the Academy of Commerce. He speaks French, Russian, German and English with considerable facility, and, as he is only thirty-eight, he seems to be one of the leading figures in Central Europe for many years to come. His knowledge of foreign affairs and the credit which, through his relations with Paris and London, he has brought to his country, make him almost indispensable to any Czech Goverament.

In his political views he is very liberal and is a warm supporter of the League of Nations. He is no over-popular with the chauvinist elements among his countrymen, who think that in his negotiations with neighbouring States he has made too many concessions. Few people will agree with this criticism, for it is, above all, due to Dr. Benes' foresight and medoration that the relations existing between the various Succession States to-day are in every way happier and more harmonious than they promised to be four years ago.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Haven

"I don't know. I've been rather a pig just lately. Fact is, Miss Dempster, Scotch women can't lead an idle, purposeless life. If I were busy like you or Miss Tentedren, I think I think I should be inclined to like New York well. What I'm mortally afraid of is that she marries Graham Madox in the end! Don't you see it would be a splendid arrangement? They seem made for one another, and of course he is very good-looking—and nice as well."

A curious look flitted across Jean's face, and she suddenly found the coffee-machine more than usually interesting.

"I don't think that will ever happen. They've had plenty of chances before they ever came here. I would not worry about that, Miss Rankine. I don't think she will ever forget your brother."

"But he isn't here, and its the man on the spot who has the chance," observed Judy dismally. "It's a horrid tangle from first to last, and I've lived a thousand years in the last one. Are you all right? I thought you'd been crying when I came in?"

"Well, I had been," admitted Jean, glad to get off the subject of stage stage love affairs. "I had a letter from my mother this morning, and she says Mamie is going down the hill, and that it isn't likely she will ever see Hunter's Quay. Think of that! After all my hard work and scraping, and only on Sunday I had a good count-up, and I thought I might manage it in two years instead of three! A kind man I know in business put me to on a rather good investment just lately, and I've made a bit—"

"Oh, I am sorry! Has she had the best advice and everything?"

"Well, of course, mother has done what she could; but she's poor. What Mamie wants is fresh air, and the best food and rest, and—and happiness. If only I could afford to take a run home, I would see for myself just what is the true state of affairs. I know it must be serious before mother would let me know anything about it at all."

"I wish I could help, or send you home in my place! Couldn't I take your place at the School of Stenography and give you my passage?"

The idea pleased Judy. To do something for somebody was certainly what gave her the most happiness.

"It's good and dear of you to think of it. No—I shall just have to go on. Another door will open somewhere. It always does. I have found that, even in the darkest hour of my life, when I was wanting to tumble out of it in the quickest way I could find."

That very night—nay, that very moment, her words seemed to be verified, for the sitting-room door opened, and the boy, with a flourish of delight, with which he invariably served Miss Dempster, announced "Mr. Fordyce."

Jean was undoubtedly surprised, for thougt Fordyce had called many times at the Dormer House, and had had much to say to her over the 'phone at odd times, this was his first visis to Mr. Isaacstein's. But she was pleased, and looked it as she introduced him to Miss Rankine, not without a certain diffidence. She was not surprised, however, when Judy immediately took her leave.

It was Judy's first opportunity of seeing Fordyce, and the thought of the money he had given Alan, and the silence which had ensued caused her pride such acute discomfort that she was glad to escape. Judy, with a murmured word of apology to Fordyce, went down to the door with Judy.

This gave him an opportunity of looking round the sitting room in which Miss Dempster spent her leisure time, and he did not fail to make use of it. He was accustomed to gorgeous rooms, filled with the things for hich the rich man's purse can pay, but here he found the thing which, fortunately for humanity, money is powerless to buy—the essence of home!

"So that is Rankine's sister?" he observed, when Jean re-entered the room. "She doesn't look much like him. He seems to have annexed most of the looks of the family."

"Oh, do you think so? Well, anyway, she's got brains and a heart. She feels meeting you. Her pride didn't like it, poor dear! Queer, isn't it—that nothing has even been heard of him."

"I'm not troubling about him. No—I don't think anything at all has happened to him, except that he has shunted off into some side track. Somebody he met on the train perhaps offered him something better, or, on the face of it, more attractive. That sort of thing happens in this country—especially out a bit—every day."

"I never thought of that! She's worried to death, and thinks all sorts of things have happened to him."

"They've wraped up in cotton-wool—all of them," observed Fordyce airily. "And some of it wants stripping off. I hear Margaret Tentedden and Madox are going to make a match of it. Some think they are already married."

"You may take it from me that that isn't true," said Jean, with considerable emphasis.

"She might do worse for herself, and what chance has Rankine? She's a peerless creature, and I hear on every side that her reserve maddens the men who meet her. She can have her pick, you bet; and personally, it wouldn't surprise me if she never left America except on a pleasure jaunt."

Jean smiled a smal inscrutable smile, which slightly nettled Fordyce.

"Now what does that mean? Tell me exactly."

"It might mean that you would keep her in America," admitted Jean. She was surprised to see his face redden.

"I! Oh, no, thank you! I've never spoken to the woman; and though I think she's a good actress, she isn't the sort to appeal to me."

"Well, she can't marry you or anybody, for she's married to Rankine," said Jean on a sudden impulse. "Please do not tell anybody, for I believe I'm the only one in the world who knows it. Miss Rankine doesn't, and why I told you I don't know! You will keep it a secret, won't you?"

"Sure thing," said Fordyce, with uplifted brows of surprise. Then after a moment he leaned forward a little, and looked her quite squarely in the face. "Say, have you any idea why I've come here to-night?"

"None—and I don't remember ever having asked you," she answered frankly.

"You never have, though I've waited, hoping you would. Well, I'll tell you—I want you to marry me."

Jean grew as pale as death. Why? Because her heart gave such a leap that she knew just what had happened.

She loved this man and did not know it until the moment when, looking into her eyes, his own quite earnest with feeling, he put the momentous question which meant weal or woe to a woman's heart.

"I—to marry you!" she stammered. "But why?"

"For the usual reason—because I want you," he answered steadily. He rose just then and took a step nearer to where she sat, with her head dropped on her hands.

"Look here, dear woman. I'm not going to embroider the facts nor make use of a dictionary. You know a good deal about me, I know—some things that are true and some that aren't. I haven't played the game in some directions, but I could, perhaps, clear myself if I set out to do it. I hadn't a chance with the woman who married me for my money, caring for somebody else. I had a rotten time, and I lost my grip, and let myself go. That's the head and front of my offence. I hated and loathed myself all the time, and never had a moment's hapiness or peace. I've pulled up stakes in that particular country, and I'm looking—metaphorically speaking, for a better one. When I saw you that day at the Dormer House, I knew you were in it, and could show me the way! I want a home, Jean; a kind, good woman to care about me, and keep me in the way I should go; and if it please God, little children about my knees, who can thank God for their mother! That's my case, and if it appeals to you, why then, say the word and I'll do my best. I don't promise miracles, but I'll run straight, Jean, and do what one man can do to make you happy."

If it appeals!

"Oh, God!" said Jean Dempster under her breath. What wouul she not give to be able to take him at his word?—nay, to lay her head on his breast there and then, and go forth into the light of happiness and home!

She rose too, trembling very much, and still as white as death.

"You—you don't know—there is an obstacle! I'm not—I'm not all you think me. I too have had a dark page in my life. I did wrong—but I was wronged. Will you go away now—yes, now! this moment! And tomorrow morning you'll receive the whole story! Then—then—I will wait—"

If he were disappointed he made no sign, but tok up his hat quietly, without seeming to protest or ask for explanations which he saw she could not give.

He went out and Jean wasl eft alone. She sat till near midnight writing, pouring out her heart on the page; then tore it up and began writing again, this time stating only the bare facts of the story that had sent her an exile from her home. Then on the stroke of midnight, she stole out into the quiet street and dropped the letter into the pillar box with a prayer.

She had no sleep that night, and it was a heavy-eyed and pathetic woman who dragged herself up Broadway next morning to the Dormer House.

None would know how strongly Jean Dempster had been tempted to keep silence! Had it only been Harry Fordyce's money that tempted her she might have done so, and trusted to luck to see her through.

But she cared for the man. Something in his honest nature appealed to hers mightily, and the idea of building up, of helping to reconstruct a life that had been in ruins, was a work after her own heart.

But she had acted fairly and squarely with him; keeping back nothing, glossing over nothing. Nor did she hide from him in one brief sentence at the last, wrung from the depths of her womanly heart, that she cared.

And now she had to wait—wait, probably as the women at the Holland House were waiting, in silence!

Modern Young Lady Finds Ready Answer To Searching Quiz

What is the modern young woman thinking? What does she think of woman's future? Of a career as opposed to marriage? Of the modern young man? Of the older generation, out of herself.

These questions were recently put by the New York Times, with the sanction and the aid of American college authorities. The answers were returned anonimously. The members of all four college years participated. The undertaking was prompted to test the criticism of the modern girl—that she is intoxicated with her new freedom, dabbles in dangerous heresies, religious and political, and expects to shirk the responsibilities of home-making and motherhood.

Summarising the replies, The Times states that ninety per cent of the girls at Vassar—if the 200 selected are representatives—look forward to the making of successful homes and the rearing of children as their most important project in life. Those who declare outright for marriage number 131, as against 11 who voted for a career.

Answers to the question, "What, if anything, do you find wrong with the modern man?" were let loose in broadsides. Only four of the 200 think there is nothing wrong with him. "Conceit" is an adjective that appears ninety-one times. His selfishness, his fondness for liquor and his liking money rather than culture are copiously mentioned. Still, a fair proportion of the girls think that the same things that are wrong with him are also wrong with the modern girl, and one collegian concludes her exoriation with the words, "yet not half bad, at that."

There has been much talk of the chasm that separates the new generation from the old. The question, "What is wrong with your parents," discloses plenty of bridges across the gulf. The majority of the 200 find no fault 101 simply writing the word "Nothing", and following it with from one to ten exclamation points.

Less than 2 per cent. feel that the business world has attractions. Yet it is significant that only five vote that woman's business in life is solely marriage and child-rearing. Their picture of the woman of the future is a person who is as much of a home body as her grandmother, and more of a citizen.

"For what tasks are you fitting yourself?" This personal question brought personal answers. Sixty are preparing for domestic life, 23 for social service, 28 for teaching, 10 for writing, medicine or art, 8 for "enjoying life," 30 merely to be self-supporting. Womanly modesty enters into the answers to this question. Most of the responses can be summed up in this sentence: "I hope to be called to make a happy home; but if not, then I mean to be able to take care of myself."

"What is your recipe for a happy marriage?" The sentiments expressed on this question are so unaffectedly old-fashiened that they might have been copied from a crass-stitch sampler. Fifty-nine girls insist upon love, 66 on companionship, 38 on unselfishness, and 24 on common sense. Ten believe that marriages are not happy without children, and as many prescribe health as essential.

Religion is considered vital to happiness in life by 97 of the group, and churchgoing by 40. Many express a deep desire for a more live and useful religion than they can find in churches that they attend. They resent that "those who administer religion alow it so often to surround itself with a shell." The impression drawn from many answers is that these girls are thoroughly spiritual and are anything but fundamentalists.

The Times sets out the questions asked. We reproduce them, and select a few typical replies:

FOR WHAT TASKS ARE YOU FITTING YOURSELF.

"Marriage and family, but not immediately after college."

"To practise medicine, vote, intelligently, keep house efficiently, and raise a family successfully."

"To better the social condition of my city; to take care of myself; to make myself a good wife and mother if the oportunity comes."

'I want to be able to do something worth while, if I don't get married, I would rather do that though."

"To make a home as nearly like my mother's as I can."

"To work with girls and teach them to lead better and more unselfish lives."

"To earn my living, do good, and make a happy home."

CAN A WOMAN MARRY AND HAVE A CAREER? IF NOT, WHICH WOULD YOU CHOOSE?

"Many can. I hope I am one of them."

"If the man is wonderful enough, I should choose marriage."

"Marriage first. A career after the children are grown up."

"It takes an unusual husband to stand for it."

"Caring for children and being a companion for them is the most useful career a woman can have."

"No woman can make both a successful marriage and a successful out side career. I have unhesitatingly chosen the former."

"If the career keeps her away from her home she cannot make a go of both."

"Marriage first, and fit in a career if possible.'

"I would choose a career until I fall in love."

What is wrong with the girl of today?

"Her liberty has turned her head."

"If anything is wrong, it is merely incomplete adjustment to the independence to which she is unaccustomed."

"She is too sophisticated, too vain and self-assertive, too much for effect."

"She talks too much. If she will only keep on thinking as well as talking she will be al right."

"She is infinitely superior to the girl of yesterday."

"Too anxious to shock people."

"Nothing is wrong with her. She is franker than the last generation. Perhaps that is why she does not command the respect of the men."

"She has new privileges and is still experimenting to find out what to do with them."

"Too much notice is taken of her. This drives her to greater excesses."

"She is extreme, but so is everything else."

"She will soon tone down."

What, if anything, do you find wrong with the modern man?"

"Nothing wrong, when he is compared with the brutal man of a few generations back."

"The modern man likes to appear dashing and show off."

"He is inclined to expect more from girls than he deserves."

"He is still very conscious in his worth and condescending in his attitude toward women. Very little interested in religion."

"He is ready to take all that is offered. I blame the girl somewhat for this. It is fifty-fifty."

"Too anxious to get; too loath to give Expects to be entertained. Thinks of only a good time."

"He is hard to talk to. Hasn't anything to say to a girl of intelligence."

"He does not treat the modern girl as his mental equally.'

"He does not seek out the best in a girl, but rather urges on her foolishness."

What, if anything, do you find wrong in the attitude of your parents?

"They treat us to much like babies. They don't try to understand our point of view."

"My parents are entirely modern and broadminded."

"I often feel that they do not realize that times have changed. The fact is, they do—and to their regret! I admire them for not allowing the times to change ideals."

"My parents are as nearly perfect as human beings can be, but I think that many are not nearly old-fashiened enough, or too much so."

"Dynamite couldn't alter their opinion, yet they call themselves open-minded."

"Mine are sacrificing for me, and I appreciate it."

What is your idea of the woman of the future?

"She will combine care of home and children with outside interests, and never be a clinging vine."

"A hame-maker who can co-operate fullly in all the problems of civilization."

"She will get at the truth of matters and pay less attention to conventions and shams."

'I hope she will not be mixed up in politics, though she probably will be."

"She will be more intelligent and understand her children."

"She will gradually get more political power and stop getting her picture in the paper for it, but she won't grow masculine, I think."

"A combination of motherly love and womanly sufferage."

"She will keep her charm and have brains besides."

How do you feel about religion? About Socialism?

"Religion (faith plus ideals) is fundamental. No life is successful without it."

"The churches will hold their own and be a great force, but they must first rationalise their teaching. The church and science will be reconciled."

"Socialism introduced many progressive ideas. It should not be suppressed."

"Simple religion is needed. No formalism."

"Everyone should belong to a church, but should think religion out for himself and not take other people's word for it. Then it will be his own and do him some good."

What is your recipe for a happy marriage?

'One part money, three parts love, seasoned with patience. Needs plenty of spooning."

"Complete understanding, intellectual companionship, mutual tastes and interests. Above all, love."

"A common ideal, plenty of outside interests, a mutual sense of humor."

Intellectual harmony, mutual respect, an inexhaustible supply of love."

"True love that brooks no condescension on the part of either husband or wife."

"Both must strive to give all to their children that will make them fine citizens."

"Man and woman should be on the same intellectual and social plane."

"Love; money; children."

"Faith in each other; devotion of soul; an engagement long enough to make sure; and health."

"An attachment that is not passionate or idolising."

"The proper sort of love in the beginning, the proper sort of spirit to carry on; mutual understanding; mutual interests; divers interests; imagination, and a great sense of humor."

"Jealousy barred.

"Love, work, sacrifice. A certain amount of stubbornness in both. And children."

"Very much love, nearness in age, no previous marriages."

"Mutual liberty; no nagging; know the man well beforehand."

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, WEDNESDAY, JULY 25th., 1923

POLITICAL

Mr. Warren is in conference with leading party men holding seats in the House, and will likely be in a position to meet his Party today. Mr. Warren's announcement made in the House yesterday, made a favourable impression on all the members. It is generally thought that the best men available in the House should be included in the new administration.

The New Leader's High Motive !

A PRESAGE OF SUCCESS.

The statement made by Hon. Mr. Warren yesterday in the House of Assembly was favourably received by the whole House and is likely to inspire the confidence of the country.

Hon. Mr. Warren essays no easy task in assuming the leadership at this period, but his dignified, modest and broadminded utterances of yesterday lends to the belief that his efforts in the formation of the new ministry will be made with a view to the best interests of Newfoundland.

"An administration of strength and stability, and one which will possess the confidence of the country at large," is no unworthy aim at this juncture, and if Hon. Mr. Warren can formulate such an administration, he will have rendered the country a good service.

In asking the general co-operation of the members of the Assembly towards this purpose, the new leader has acted in that admirable and unpartisan manner, which bespeaks the complete success of his efforts.

Mr. Warren's Statement

In moving the adjournment of the House yesterday afternoon, Hon. W. R. Warren said:

"Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House I desire to say that since the House last met, the Government as a Government has gone out of office. The resignation of Sir R. A. Squires as Prime Minister automatically carried with it the resignation of all the members of the Eecutive Government. As His Excellency the Governor has pointed out to me, Ministers are still retaining office as the King's Government must go on, and the constitutional practice is for them to retain office until they are succeeded or the positions are otherwise filled. His Excellency sent for me yesterday afternoon and asked me to form an administration and, while realizing the magnatitude of the task, I told him that I was prepared to make the attempt.

Sir, the Government is primarily formed by the people and can only function while it has the confidence of the House. In fact I go so far as to say it can only function at times when it has the confidence of the people.

Last evening I was unanimously elected the Leader of those who sit on this side of the House, but that does not necessarily mean that I have become Prime Minister.

I have to form a Government, and in that undertaking and in view of what I have said, I propose to attempt to form what in my opinion will be an administration of strength and stability and one which will possess the confidence of the country at large. In view of the situation and of general conditions, I want to ask here and now every member of the House, whether sitting on this side or on that, and, in fact, every member of the community to make any little sacrifice that may be necessary for the welfare of our common country. If this is impossible and I cannot form such a Government, then I am quite ready to go back to His Ecellency and, while telling him of my failure, ask him to send for someone who may be more successful. It will take some little time to make the necessary arrangements, and I therefore move that at its rising this House adjourn until Tuesday next at three o'clock in the afternoon."

Infallible "T. B." Cure Is Claimed

Rays Introduced to Lungs Without Damaging Tissues, Is Method

PARIS, July 18—An infallible cure for tubercolosis in thirty minutes is claimed by Rafeal Santos, a 25-year-old medical student of the University of Paris.

After three years of experimenting at the leading hospitals here, Dr. Santos constructed a set of lens, instruments for introducing sun rays and ultra-violet rays into human lungs. He declares that his experiments proved that these rays will kill all tuberculosis bacilli in less than half an hour.

The discovery is the object of active experimentation at the leading clinics this week. Some of the leading figures of the Pasteur Institute have taken up the claims of the young specialist and they are endeavoring to establish their truth by a large number of experiments.

Dr. Santos explained his lens as an apparatus for applying ultra violet rays locally to human lungs without any of the tissues being injured in the process. The young Porto Rican studied at the University of Pen sylvania before going to Paris. Since 18, he has studied the effects of the sun's rays and ultra violet rays on consumption.

A Correction

In referring to the proposed establishment of a pulp and paper industry on the Gander, the words should have read "the establishment of a 200 ton pulp and paper industry on the Gander." And regarding the establishment of industrial operations in White Bay, now under negotiation, there is one pulpwood industry contemplated and two sawmill erections, and not two pulpwood industries as may have been construed from the article, as published yesterday.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

Latest News of the Fisheries

The following schooners have arrived at Wesleyville from the Straits:—Schr. Gull Pond, Charles Blackwood, 900 quintals; Progress, Peter Blackwood, 800 quintals; J. S. Munn, Stratton, 300 quintals, and Elenora, Isaac Bishop, 500 quintals.

The following messages were received yesterday by the Fisheries Department:—

Holton: — Light North East wind, clear, good sign of fish.

Smokey:—Calm, dense fog.

Domino and Flat Islands:—Fresh N. E. wind, clear, loose ice.

Venison Island:—Light North wind, cloudy, loose ice, good sign of fish.

Battle Hr.:—Light North East wind, clear, loose ice, good jigging.

Reports received from Labrador points all indicate the prevalence of loose ice, which renders fishing by trawls and traps very difficult.

The following vessels sailed with cargoes during the week—the schr. John from Rose Blanche for Lisbon, taking 2,500 qtls., shipped by Wm. Horwood; the schr. Maxwell R. from Burin, taking 4,352 qtls. for Oporto, shipped by the Burin Import and Export Co.; the Harriett from St. John's, taking 3,000 qtls. for Oporto, shipped by A. E. Hickman & Co. and others; and the schr. Faustina, from Ramea, with 4,500 qtls. for Oporto, shipped by Penny & Sons. In addition there were shipped by the S. S. Rosalind for New York to be transhipped to the British West Indies, 3,776 qtls., or an aggregate of 21,118 qtls. The consumption of our fish in the Oporto market seems to be keeping well up to the average of previous weeks. Our stocks at Oporto last week were 68,600 qtls., and the previous week 49,085 qtls., the consumption being 7,143 and 7,085 qtls., respectively.

A report to the Board of Trade from Hr. Grace says the prospects are poor from Low Point to Bryant's Cove. Only 110 qtls. have been landed to date and 60 qtls. for the past week.

Between Change Islands and Hare Bay Head 80 qtls. fish were landed for the past week. The catch for traps and trawls to date is the lowest on record and prospects are poor.

An improvement is reported in the West Coast fishery during the past two weeks.

Bay de Verde District, from Black Heart Pt. to Meade's Brook, reports only 300 qtls. fish landed to July 21st. The season opened, the report says, with the worst storm in 40 years. Codtraps, salmon nets and trawls were practically torn to pieces. After ten or twelve days repairs were made and gear reset to be again wrecked by tides. They were again reset but there was no fish to be got. It is said by very old men that never before was there such an absolute failure. With more than 200 men engaged, not more than 300 qtls. have been landed and there is no prospect.

EX-PREMIER ATTACKS M. POINCARE

"Impossible To Work With," Says Lloyd George.

BRISTOL, England, July 25—Former Premier Lloyd George made a fierce attack on M. Poincare, French Premier, in a speech here to-day. He objected to M. Poincare's habit of making speeches on Sunday which he pointed out was the day consecrated to good will, and hardly a day to "unscrew the cylinder of carefully distilled hatred and spread

CHARLOTTETOWN, July 25—On past negotiations Mr. Lloyd George said, "I did not fall out with M. Poincare, but it was very difficult and Mr. Bonar Law also found it quite impossible, to work with him." The former Premier accused M. Poincare of "wickedly distorting" his speeches and expressed the hope, that British efforts toward peace would not be converted into "more fuel for further devastating and scorching flames, which burn up peace, prosperity, progress and happiness of mankind."

P.E.I. ELECTION IS ON TO-DAY

Contest Is Exciting Great Deal of Interest.

CHARLOTTETOWN, July 25—On the eve of the Prince Edward Island Provisional election, which takes place Thursday, both Liberals and Conservatives are predicting victory. Women will vote for the first time in a Provincial contest. Prince County which returned two Conservatives and eight Liberals in 1919, has five Progressives in the field all in Liberal districts, and there is a probability that splitting the Government vote will help the Conservatives. The same is true in one of the Districts of Queens. Leading Liberals, while confident of the return of the Government, admit that the majority, which was eighteen in a House of thirty in 1919, will be decreased, while the Conservatives declare that their leader, J. D. Stewart, will have a safe working majority.

Only Drastic Measures Can Prevent Another Winter's Unemployment Throuout Great Britain

Political Differences—Lack of Confidence, War Waste and Industrial Unrest are Causes of Grave Situation.

LONDON, July 26—A grave view of the condition of British trade and industry is taken by a large industrial group, which last night sent a letter to Premier Baldwin outlining the plans of the group to meet the situation, observing that the prospects of a settlement of reparations and similar difficulties are too remote to appreciably affect the situation, which is due to political uncertainty, lack of confidence, war wastage of wealth, and the loss of purchasing power amongst our customers."

The letter says it appears inevitable that unless very drastic measures are taken immediately, a fourth winter of unemployment with not less than a million and a half unemployed must occur and must disastrously affect the morale and efficiency of British workers.

The letter adds that an alarming indication of industrial unrest everywhere is apparent. The destructive force of unemployment on the trades unions, which are the safeguards of industrial peace cannot be viewed without apprehension, and if the present rate of unemployment is maintained, it will involve within twelve months the disposal of the funds and members of the unions.

The group suggests a number of railway and electrification projects to absorbe the unemployed, these to include railway extension and development of canals, docks, and other works.

The proposals of the group would involve an expenditure of fifty million pounds, but the group considers that even if the government should pay interest on this capital for several years, it would be a very small sum in comparison with the present unemployment doles and similar relief payments.

Empire Has Third of World's Forests

OTTAWA, July 26—That one-third of the forests of the world were in the British Empire, was the statement made by Lord Lovat, chairman of the British Empire Forestry Association at its second convention here yesterday. The party of delegates leave to-morrow for its trip through Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

The party will return to Ottawa by August 4th, when business meetings will be held during the week ending August 11th. The party will leave August 12th for an extensive tour of Ontario, the western provinces and British Columbia. Closing meetings will be held at Victoria. Addresses were given yesterday by representatives from nearly every British possession in the world.

QUEBEC IS PREPARING FOR L. GEORGE

Will Visit Canada and United States.

QUEBEC, July 25—A committee in Canada is arranging for a tour of this country by former Premier Lloyd George, according to information contained in a letter received yesterday by Mayor Samson, Chairman of the Lloyd George committee. The present plans are that he sails from Liverpool on the Empress of Britain on October 3rd, landing at Quebec. The ex-Premier plans also to spend several days in the United States, but is being urged that both arrival and departure should be in Canada.

The steamer Anna is due from Boston and Halifax on Saturday morning.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Haven

She thought as she went mechanically through the morning's mail, what power men had in their hands, how they could wreck—and did wreck the peace of women's lives, yet how dear and necessary they were to the whole scheme of things, how empty every woman's heart where some image did not dwell.

She was thinking this when the door of her room opened about eleven of the morning, and he came in.

"I got your letter, and I've just one question to ask," he said.

She rose, trembling, and whispered, "What?"

"Was that true at the end—that you would come to me if I hadn't a penny in the world?"

"Yes! Oh, yes!" she cried, and the next moment she was enfolded to his heart.

So the future of mother and Mamie and the little house at Hunter's Quay was assured.

Just for once in a grey, prosiac world, a woman's ream came true.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Crisis

Judith Rankine, attired in a very pretty afternoon frock of old rose velvet, was entertaining a small and select party of friends at tea in the drawing room of the litle flat at Queen Anne's Gate, which was now possible to the combined means of Claude and herself.

Claude, as private secretary to a Cabinet Minister, may be said to have embarked on a political career. He was extraordinarily clever, and possessed certain qualities, other than purely intellectual ones, which commended him specially to a man in high power who required tact, discretion, and above all, foresight in the helper at his elbow.

Claude possessed the diplomatic sense, and he was both successful and happy in his work. Certainly his remuneration was far from princely, but his advancement in the world of politics was merely a matter of time. Already he was becoming favorably known as a speaker, and had acquitted himself well on certain occasions when he had had to take another man's place on short notice.

Judy shared a home. Stair was still let, and a year had elapsed since the American tour. In that year nothing had been heard of Alan, and both Judy and Claude had arrived at the conclusion that he was dead.

Not so with Carlotta. She had ceased talking about it, but udy was quite well aware that she still clung to her belief in his safely. The silence was bitter and inexplicable, but her faith still held on. udy loved her for it, though in secret she wept and likewise marvelled at the fealty that had stood fast through temptations such as come in the way of few women. She still lived the austere, almost cloistered life with her parents in Brunswck Square, spending little, working hard, perfecting her art and, apparently living for that alone. From one triumph to another she had gone, and Judy knew that she had made immense sums of money, and that she was husbanding it carefully, though for what purpose she had not an idea.

She was expecting Carlatta that afternoon, but the time passed and she did not come. The ladies dropped away one by one. They were chiefly political ladies, and the topic of conversation had been a certain crisis that had arisen in public life, and in which Judy herself was intensely interested.

The government was going out and of course, it was a problem what would become of Claude in the next administration. About aquarter to six he came in and only two ladies remained. He chatted gaily to them for a few minutes.

Claud had developed into a very self-possessed, capable sort of young man, never at a loss in any circumstances. He had none of Alan's diffidence. J udy often compared them in her mind and wondered that they could be brothers.

"Thank goodness they're gone!" he said when the door closed on the last of them. "Did any of them give the show away?" he added with a touch of boyish slang which he reserved for home and intimate acquaintances.

"What show?" asked Judy. "They were all talking about the General Election, of course—and Carlotta didn't come."

"Didn't she? I know why. She was in the House this afternoon, and Lord Clitheroe took her to tea."

"Oh!" said Judy with a little snap. "She promised to come here. He's always following her about—isn't he?"

"Pretty well, and we couldn't blame her, could we, Judy?—if she listened to him, for, after all, there isn't much hope, is there, now? I think she has been jolly good to be true as long as she has been, with the kind of life she leads, and the men who would marry her if she would give them the chance."

"She says Alan is still alive, Claude. Even when I tell her we've given up hope she just looks away with far-seeing eyes as if she dreamed dreams and saw visions. Of course it's her temperament, and such patience and faith, I fear, are not possible to common or garden folks like us! The only one who shares it with her is Christy. She believes solemnly and positively that we'll see him again."

"I wish I had their assurance," said Claude, his kind, clever face shadowing, while the eyes behind the glasses grew suspiciously dim. "Well. I've great news for you. They've given me the Dublin appointment, and I enter on my duties next month."

"Oh!" said Judy with a gasp. How perfectly splendid! How much salary?"

"Twelve hundred. The only fly in the ointment is that I shall be muzzled politically, for a servant of the Crown is supposed to have no politics."

"Never mind. What are politics anyway?" inquired Judy in high scorn. "Just a game people play! When I was listening to all these women grubling this afternoon I could not help wondering that the country is so well off as it is under the present system of legislation."

"But you kept a civil tongue in your head, Judy?" inquired Claude, much amused, as he helped himself liberally to the last remnant of the tea cake.

"Oh, yes. I quickly enough learned that the person who can hold her tongue gets all the information she wants. But they're sorry, every one of them go out of office. Won't you miss it frightfully?"

"Oh, yes. I shan't like office routine, but I can't afford to chuck it. Some day, perhaps, the ship may come in and I shall be able to go back to politics. Who knows? I might stand for a division of Ayrshire. You'd like that, Judy?"

"I suppose I would. Well, you'll be able to marry Cicely now, Claude."

"Yes, I'll take her to Dublin. But you'll come too, Judy."

Judy had no answer ready, but seemed to find something interesting and absorbing in the light from a somewhat stormy sunset, coming through the gable window, which gave character to that queer little drawing room.

Once more she was to be laid on the shelf, or to find herself the superfluous woman, the odd unit in a house hold of three. A strange, swift wave of rebellion rose up within, threatening to engulf her.

"There is no use talking about it now, Claud," she answered in a voice which only a tremendous effort kept steady. "It will be time enough when other things are arranged."

"Time for details. But the big fact has to be settled, old girl, here and now. I won't marry at all unless you'll fall in."

And what about Cicely?" asked udJy, whose acquaintance with her future sister-in-law was one of the slightest, though she had no fault to find with her.

"Cicely is of the same mind absolutely. We've often talked about it. There could be no other arrangement so long as things are as they are with us, and there's always Stair—"

"If only you had had an eye to the main chance, like so many of the politicians, Claude, you might have married a rich woman, and that would have solved the bigger half of the question. You could have gone back as Laird of Stair then."

Claude set his lips in the long, particular curve which Judy had seen pretty often since he had got to man's estate, and which she understood to mean both disapproval and some deep-rooted determination.

"That will never happen, Judy, I am sure. I've got my way to make, and I'm going to make it. There must be some alien strain in me, for I don't feel about Stair as you do and as Alan did. I'd like it as a holiday place and to feel that my people were in it, so that I could go pretty much when I liked, but as a career, my dear, it doesn't appeal."

"But—but," said Judy with difficulty," you'll have to take it on possibly if—if—by any chance we should get proof that Alan will never come back."

"We'll wait for that disastrous day, Judy, and meanwhile we have very good tenants in Stair. And old Richardson seems quite satisfied with the present state of affairs. We are certainly not doing much to lift the mortgage, but so long as we pay our way and have a little margin left for you, well—I don't see that so much matters."

"I hate and loathe this life, Claude, I'm just like a fly in a web. I'm perfectly useless—the superfluous woman for whom the next generation is not going to have any use."

Cllaud smiled tenderly, concluding that Judy was feeling a bit hipped by the thought of impending changes, and in no way realizing that there was so much truth as well as passion in her words.

Next morning, to Carlotta, in the Bloomsbury sanctum, Judy however further unburdened her soul. Claude had gone into the country with his chief for important political purposes, and he was not aware of some news which had come to his sister from Glasgow by that morning's post.

It was scarcely noon when Judy reached Carlotta's house, and she was waylaid by Mrs. Carlyon for a moment on her way out to a shopping expedition, which was one of the chief enjoyments of life. Judy remained first favorite with her, and she was frequently heard to bewail the fact that men were so foolish and so blind as to pass by the gold of a nature like Judith Rankine's, and pour their incense at other and less worthy shrines!

Mount Cashel Garden Party Was Record Success

The Garden Party yesterday afternoon, in aid of Mt. Cashel Orphanage, was attended by a record gathering. From Rawlin's Cross to the gate at Mount Cashel there was a continual stream of vehicles conveying passengers.

It is estimated that there were seven or eight thousand people present. The traffic regulations were all that could be desired and the officers on point duty performed their work in a capable manner and undoubtedly prevented accidents. The mounted police did very good work at the entrance to the field and much confusion and delay in the discharging of freights was avoided.

Many prominent citizens were present, including members of both branches of the Legislature. His Excellency the Governor, Lady Allardyce, Miss Viti Allardyce, Vice-Admiral Seymour, Major Wilberforce-Bell and officers of H. M. S. Calcutta were present and were welcomed by Brother Ennis who conducted the party through the grounds and buildings.

In the grounds fronting Mount Cashel there were stalls of every discription. In addition to the stalls there were the usual side show amusements, shooting galleries, base ball pitching, cigarette darts, ring throwing and many others. Wheels of fortune werein evidence in three or four places and the men in charge were kept busy. The wheels, perhaps were the most patronized.

The talented Mount Cashel Dancers were warmly applauded and their dancing was enjoyed by thousands of the patrons. To prevent any possibility of interest flagging, three bands, the Mount Cashel, C. L. B. and C.C.C. kept up a program of lively music.

Excellent teas were served and the demand was so great that, in every case, nothing was left and the table holders certainly had big receipts. In connection with the tables considerable annoyance was caused by young lads who were stealing cakes etc., but this nuisance was soon stopped by the presence of a policeman. When the events of the day had been brought to a close the young people repaired to the Play Hall of the Institution where a splendid dance was held.

The music was supplied by Mount Cashel Band, under the leadership of Mr. Arthur Bulley, and the hearty and repeated encores which were accorded each number, bore tribute, irrefutable to its splendid character. The band has made wonderful strides since its formation and a great deal of the credit is due to Mr. Bulley and also to Brother Walsh of the Institution who has given all the time in his power to assist the boys who, to their credit, be it said, have been always willing and eager to practise and study. The dance program included all the popular steps and did not conclude until an early hour this morning when with the singing of the National Anthem and cheers for Mount Cashel the affair terminated.

Sports Program

During the afternoon an excellent program of athletic events was run off and occasioned a great deal of interest. At three o'clock the first round of football was played and resulted in a win for the B.I.S.; the Feildians, Guards and C. L. B. being left to play off.

Relay Race—Junior Football)—Two teams, B. I. S. and C. C. C. were entered for this event and the B. I. S. won after a good race in 1 min. 24 2-5 secs. The team was Halley, Brown, and Redmond.

Final Fives—This attracted a great crowd and were won by the B. I. S., 4 goals to nil.

Final Pony Race resulted in Skinner's pony leading the field, Jackman & Greene's second and Smyth's third.

The field was capably looked after by Messrs C. J. Ellis, T. Curran, Lester, Tobin, O'Flannagan and other gentlemen. Mr. W. J. Higgins occupied his usual position of Captain of the field and looked after each event in a pleasing and courteous manner which was appreciatel by all.

Prizes Presented

At the conclusion of the events the winners were called to the steps of the new building where the prizes were presented by Rev. Bro. Ryan of St. Bon's College, who congratulated the winners on their success. Mr. W. J. Higgins, who introduced the winners to Bro. Ryan, referred specifically to the sportsmanship of Mr. Coultas of the Guards who, when his team was awarded a penalty kick for an infraction of the rules by the Feildians, kicked the ball back, preferring to win the game by a real struggle. The R. G. Reid baseball trophy was presented to Dr. S. M. Power, on behalf of the B. I. S. base ball team. This cup, last won by the B. I. S., will be held in trust by them until baseball is revived in our city.

New Residence for Brothers

It is pleasing to learn that this year's garden party was such a success, as the Institution is now more than ever in need of support. There is now under construction a new addition which will be used as a residence for the Brothers. The constantly increasing number of boys was creating a demand for space and the building now used by the Brothers was rapidly being encroached upon. With the completion of the new addition more space will be available to provide classrooms and dormitories and Mount Cashel will then have a very fine group of buildings under its wing. Much of the preliminary erection work is being done by the boys and this is another proof of the splendid training which Brother Ennis and his devoted staff are providing for the orphans under their care.

Three-Mile Race—O'Toole finished first in 16 mins. 22 secs. ,which breaks local records and is a great tribute to O'Toole's ability. Stone and Russell finished second and third respectively.

The C. L. B. Gymnastic Squad was present and gave an exhibition of Pyramids, including some new forms, which were greatly appreciated.

The Second Round of Fives resulted in the B. I. S. and Guards being left to play off for the medals.

Pony Race, Preliminary Heats—Nine ponies were entered for the race and the first heat was run between Jackman & Greene's, Osmond's Corbett's, Phelan's and Viger's. Jackman & Greene's pony, ridden by Baird was favorite and finished first with Viguers', Murphy up, a good second. The second heat was between Hutton's, Smyth's, Skinner's and King's. Skinner's pony, Bulger up, came first, closely followed by Smyth's, Lawlor up.

TO RELIEVE PAIN AND BACKACHE

Women May Depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I had heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that when I realized I needed to take something to relieve my pains and backache, and to help build me up I began to take that. I had been sick off and on for years and barely weighed a hundred pounds, but now I have had such good results that I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to every one."—Mrs. J. J. Pierson, 3933 18th Ave. South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Finds a True Friend

"Every woman who values her health should be proud to have a true friend like the Vegetable Compound," says Mrs. W. E. Shaw, [illegible] Street, Chicago, Illinois. "My health was so weakness so badly that I could not stand on my feet. Half of my time was spent in bed and I had pains in my back which were unbearable. I tried everything I could hear of to help me and when a friend told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began taking it at once. I recommend it without hesitation."

Granted New Trial

HALIFAX, July 25—In the Supreme Court here this morning, Frank Taylor and John Young, who were recently convicted of assault, and causing grevious bodily harm to Temperance Inspector Thibeault at North Sydney, several months ago, were granted a new trial. They had been sentenced previously to two years in the penitentiary and their case has been reserved. Their Lordships Justice Chrisholm, Mellish and Rogers gave a decision after hearing the argument of D. V. White, Counsel for the accused, who claimed the criminal code did not provide for the offence found by the jury of assault and causing grevious bodily harm.

Contender In Collision

GLOUCESTER, July 25—The fishing schooner Columbia, contender for the honors in the annual International Fishermen's race this year, collided with the trawler Le Champlain off Sable Island and had to be towed into St. Pierre, Miquelon. The Columbia was on her second fishing trip since built last fall. Her accident may prevent completion in the races off Halifax in October.

To Hunt Pre-Historic Monster

ALIANCE, Nebraska, July 25—A pre-historic Monster one hundred feet long with head and tail like a giraffe, and which hisses like a steam engine is an object of the expedition by members of the Aliance Anglers Club that plans to invade the lonely Alkali Lake territory where from time to time authentic reports are circulated of hunters and fishermen seeing this weird monster which is described as being like nothing else on earth. Harpoons and whaling guns are being taken by the expedition that hopes to run the monster to earth.

FALSE REPORTS REFUTED.

It is pleasing to note that the report published in a section of the press as regarding the Humber loan is wholly false. The report stated that only 25 per cent. of the pulp loan in connection with the Humber proposition had been subscribed during the week, and that 75 per cent still remained in the hands of the underwriters.

Hon. W. R. Warren, who instantly communicated with the Company's authorities in London, has been advised that in the short period of one hour, the loan was heavily oversubscribed.

The information was given out from a well-known business man. This authority may have been a well-known business man, but his information could not have been as reliable as he himself may be well-known. From the eagerness displayed in rushing into print a faked message concerning a matter of such public importance, there is good reason to think that that gentleman is one of too many who are ready to knock our country and our country's credit for the sake of creating a sensation even by the means of that which is a lie.

Whether the lie originated with the business man in this city or whether it was a concoction by the foreign correspondent does not matter. The sheer brutality and callous treachery was none the less portrayed; and Newfoundland and her industrial future might have been injured by lying propaganda.

Had the report been true, it had not been good taste to so eagerly proclaim it. When it was false, it was despicable to do so.

If the loan was heavily oversubscribed in one hour, how could such a report have the least foundation.

However, Newfoundland has reason to be proud of the truth regarding the loan.

Its successful subscription indicates the confidence of the financial world not only in our resources, but in the financial standing of our country, which has, with the British Government, taken an equal responsibility in the venture.

Wtih the finalization of the loan the Humber is now a fact accomplished. Let us, therefore, speed development. Away with lying and injurious statements, and let our actions evidence faith in our country.

CONFIDENCE IN THE COUNTRY JUSTIFIED

Harmonious Action Only Necessary For Future Needs.

Recently we referred to the fact that ten thousand workment may be employed as from the autumn on new industrial undertakings in Newfoundland.

We arrived at this calculation as follows:

The Humber industry may employ 4500 men at construction work, loging and town building, and under subcontracts.

The Anglo-Nfld. Development Company will employ 2500 additional loggers for operations at Grand Falls, Bishop's Falls and Alexander Bay.

The very probable erection of two saw-mills and a pulpwood enterprise will employ from 2000 to 2500 men and different private pitprop works in Bonavista Bay and other sections will take care of from 500 to 750 men.

The great boom that industrial construction will give to the sawmill business and various other industries will certainly give large numbers of men employment. It is understood the Humber will need 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 feet of lumber for building purposes.

The numbers additionally employed should not be far short of 10,000 men, if not more. Other industries as operating last year will go on with likely greater swing than ever, so, with even a bad fishery, the outlook will be better than expected, and we think the people may take hope for the future.

The industrial awakening has come, just in the time we needed it most. The Government's industrial policy will justify itself and prove in this year, the salvation of the people. What is needed and what the Advocate will continue to urge, is increased effort to speed development and get the wheels of industry humming at the earliest moment. Everybody should strive to that end, and sink political considerations for the general welfare.

Foreign financiers have shown, by their ready subscription of the Humber loan, that they have faith in Newfoundland. Let us also have faith in Newfoundland.

Throwing Off The Shackles

The Daily News refers this morning to what has been "the humble position of Newfoundland since the beginning of her history, viz., the hewer of wood and drawer of water."

To a large extent, that has been Newfoundland's subservient state. For it, as the News admits our leaders in commerce and state, having no visions, beyond our erstwhile round of activity, have been mainly responsible.

The privations which our people suffer today are due to this same lack of vision on the part of the Country's leaders in trade and commerce and in state of past decades, and the main object of the present Government's industrial policy is to bring about the Colony's emancipation from the unfortunate position that has heretofore been ours.

It was more than a century ago that Canada first threw off the shackles which restricted her growth and progress, and the years since then have been years of expansion and growing independence for the neighbouring Dominion.

Newfoundland has now awakened to a full realization of her possibilities, and with that awakening comes the beginning of a new industrial era. Too long indeed have our resources been exploited and too long has our raw material gone to provide employment for the workers of other countries. Because the country today has men of vision, she is on the threshold fo better things than have been her portion in the past. From the humble supplier of raw material she now enters the field as a producer of the manufactured product, and in proportion, as our leaders of all political shades see eye to eye on the one vital necessity of building up for our people a manufacturing country, Newfoundland will advance and develop and become a land whose population, instead of striving to make a precarious living along her shores, will live in plenty and comfort from the wealth of the soil, the forests and the mines. If ever there was a country intended by nature as a manufacturing centre it is Newfoundland, and now that we have opened the eyes of the world to that fact we need have no fear for the future.

Latest News of the Fisheries

Flower's Cove reports moderate north east wind, dull and warm, with showers; little fish.

Holton and Smokey: — Light east wind, cloudy; good sign of fish.

Grady: — Light N. E. wind, dense fog, poor fishing.

Domino and Flat Island: — Fresh South wind, dense fog, loose ice, fish scarce.

Venison Island and Battle Hr.— Strong N. E. wind, foggy; no boats out.

A report from Ferryland to Aquaforte gives the total catch to date as 3060 qtls., with 520 for the past week. Prospects are reported poor, with little doing for traps or trawls.

From Northern Hd., Bay Bulls, to Cape Medice, the catch to date is 5,500 qtls., with 1000 qtls. for the past week. The bait supply is good, but prospects are reported poor.

From Cape Race to St. Shott's the catch to date is 4040 qtls., with 2367 qtls. for the week. Prospects reported not very good. The weather for the past week has been rough and trapmen could not operate regularly; fair sign of fish. Twenty-five traps, twenty-nine skiffs and 50 schooners are operating.

The fishery at Quidi Vidi has improved the past eight or nine days. One day last week the Bragg Bros. got twelve qtls. from their trap. Yesterday they succeeded in getting between eight and nine qtls.

A message from Carbonear yesterday reported that squid had struck in there in great quantities, but that fish is scarce.

Messages from Catalina state there is an improvement in the fishery there, traps securing from five to twenty quintals.

ADVERTISE in the 'ADVOCATE"

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

In beginning this column I want to say that in any comment I may make which is likely to offend any person or any class or section of the Advocate's readers there is no intention of so doing, nor do I wish to have the editor shoulder responsibility for criticisms I may make or suggestions I may pass along to those interested for the bettermen of what is, in my opinion, wrong and dangerous to society or any part thereof.

* * * *

Criticism, frank and fair, which might otherwise be described as helpful criticism, has wrought immense good in the world. There is nothing like showing up faults where such exist if we want to cure them, and believing that to be true I shall not fail on any occasion while writing for this column to constitute myself a critic of those things of which I can speak with knowledge.

* * * *

There is much in our own community just now that offers attractive material for analysis and critical discussion. There are many ills at out doors that might in some measure be cured by such treatment. In some respects we are certainly drifting away from the beaten path of common sense and common propriety. In some respects also we are essaying remedies that are not only useless but harmful. It is far better that the harm these supposed remedies do should be pointed out in time and thereby prevent extravagant waste and dangerous experiment.

* * * *

It is not the intention in this column to criticise for the pure sake of criticism or take advantage of anonymity to make unfair or uncalled-for comment. On the contrary, I find it always more pleasant to praise than to blame, to say a good word for a person than an ill one. Nevertheless censure is very often more helpful than praise and in these cases censure will be forthcoming without fear or favour.

* * * *

His Honor Judge Morris has made good his warning to motorists to resort to imprisonment without the option of a fine as a means of putting a stop to speeding. His action in stending a mechanic to jail for thirty days for this offence has created quite a little sensation in motor circles, and no doubt it will have a salutary effect.

* * * *

There is only one unfortunate feature about the inauguration of the "no-fine" punishment for motorists who persist in disregarding the rights and privileges of citizens. That is that the first "example" to be made should be a mere mechanic. It has had the effect of creating doubt in the minds of many as to whether the judge would have sent one of the "scions of nobility" to jail for thirty days had such scion been in the mechanic's shoes.

* * * *

That, of course, remains to be seen and, personally, I think Judge Morris is the man to treat all alike irrespective of whether they come from high estate or low.

Instances are still fresh in the public mind where persons who were backed by "filthy lucre" were brought up on charges of manslaughter arising out of the killing of citizens in motor car accidents were actually cheered in the Court House and outside of it by crowds who had gathered to await the outcome of the trials.

* * * *

Mr. W. J. Higgins in the Magistrate's Court the other morning expressed the opinion that ten miles an hour within the City limits was too low a speed for cars and that this section in the Act should be amended. I think Mr. Higgins is right. A car driven at fifteen miles an hour is, when in the hands of a capable driver, under perfect control and can be brought to a stand-still almost within its own length. Many cabs (horse-drawn) in the City go at a much faster rate of speed than ten miles an hour and, unlike the motor car, horses so driven are under such perfect control and constitute a greater menace to public safety than the motor car, yet there is no speed limit for horse-drawn vehicles.

HEROIC MOTHER GAVE LIFE IN ATTEMPT TO SAVE HER CHILD

TWO DEATHS RESULT FROM FIRE AT ENGLISH HARBOUR.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—A very sad accident happened here on the morning of June 15th., when the house and all its contents belonging to Thomas Green was totally destroyed by fire, and his only little daughter, Frances, ten years old, was burned to death, and his wife so severely burned that she died a few days afterwards.

Mrs. Green got up in the morning about six o'clock, lit the fire and called the little girl to get up soon, telling her she was going to spread some fish on the flake, which was only a short distance away.

No one knows how the fire started, as Mrs. Green had been on the flake only a short time when some neighbors saw smoke issuing from the windows of her house and gave the alarm that the house was afire. Mrs. Green jumped off the flake and rushed up to the house just as two men arrived there also, and as soon as they opened the door the flames and smoke burst out. One of the men threw a bucket of water in through the door, but it only found the flames for an instant, but within that time the frantic mother thinking only of her child rushed in to try and save her. She reached upstairs and got to the child's room, but couldn't find the child as she was not in the bed. She then tried to get to her own room, but the flames and smoke was too much for her, and nearly suffocated and with her clothes burning she got out thru a window on the roof of the porch and jumped to the ground. The men tore the burning clothes off her and she was badly burned about the head, arms and face, but no one thought at the time it was serious, as she kept going about for a while afterwards when the house was burning, distracted about her child. The men rushed to the front door after Mrs. Green came out without the child thinking they would get in that way and save the child, but it was no use, the house was a mass of flame and smoke inside.

By the time ladders were got ready there wasn't any chance of getting in through the top windows as the smoke was so dense it only meant instant death for any one to venture in.

After the house burned down the charred remains of the little child was discovered among the feathers of her mother's bed, so it appears that the child couldn't have got up when her mother called her and dropped off to sleep again, and when she awoke she was too near suffocated with smoke to try to get downstairs or to a window and only managed to get to her mother's bed, thinking she would find her mother there.

Within half an hour after the fire took place practically all the men in the harbor were there, besides a lot of women and children, and everything possible was done to save the house, but it was no use, and within an hour it was burned to the ground, and James Green's house nearby was only saved with great difficulty, as the heat was so intense the men could hardly get near enough to throw water on it where it was burning. The porch was badly burned and the shingles on the end of the house. It was a very calm morning; had there been any wind no doubt half of the houses in the harbor would have been wiped out.

After the house was burned down and some of the excitement over it was found that Mrs. Green's burns were serious and that she was suffering internally from inhaling flame and so much smoke, and she was also in great pain from her back from jumping off the flake and porch.

Rev. Dr. McDermott who happened to be at Belleoram was summoned by telegram and he arrived at one p.m. by the Sebastopol and did everything possible for her, but held out poor hopes for her recovery. Rev. G. Robins arrived from Hr. Breton next day and administered to her spiritually, and after four days of intense suffering, she passed away quietly, her last thoughts being for her absent husband and son. She died with the knowledge that she gave her life to save her child, and we pray that Him Who Himself hath said: "Great love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends," hath taken her to that heavenly home where there is no sorrow or pain.

The sympathy of the whole community is with the father and son the only surviving members of the family. Both of them left a few days before the sad event on different schooners to the Labrador. The husband heard the sad news at Port Saunders, and from a message received from the Captain of the schooner, the poor fellow is heartbroken over his loss.

The son heard the news at St. Pierre about the fire and the death of his sister, and was at Codroy a few days afterwards when he wired home asking how his mother was, and a reply was sent him telling of her sad death.

May Jesus, the great Comforter in time of sorrow, help them to bear their great loss and console them with the thought that their child and sister who died in the innocence and purity of her childhood, and the heroic wife and mother who gave her life trying to save her child are with Him above waiting for the time when He will call them also, and there will be no more parting or sorrow or pain.

Unlike all other earthly things,
Which ever shift and ever change,
The love which a fond mother brings,
Naught earthly can estrange.
With pure self-sacrificing light,
A holy flame it glows,
A current ever clear and bright,
Deep, deep and strong it flows.
All that by mortal can be done,
A mother ventures for her loved one.

Not now but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land.
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there sometime we'll understand.

God knows the way, He holds the key,
He guides us with unerring hand.
Some time with tearless eyes we'll see,
Yes there, up there we'll understand.

THE SPEED MANIAC

(Montreal Star Editorial.)

Despite all manner of warning; despite the elaborate plans of the authorities to enforce the law, the speed maniacs are still at their work. They continue to take their toll of human life with a recklessness and an apparent lightheartedness that is extremely difficult to explain on any other ground than that of recklessness and insanity. It seems only natural that any individual with normal human feelings, intelligence and sentiment should have same regard for the fact that by breaking the speed limit laws at any time and in any place, he or she is, potentially, in every instance, endangering human life. Yet the fact remains that the number of automobile drivers who ignore the law run the risk every minute of every day is alarmingly large.

You cannot argue with usch people. There is only one way by which you can drive any argument into their heads, and that is by making their pockets and their pride both feel its force. In a good many of the American States the law provides a jail penalty for a second offence of fast driving. In others the driver's license is cancelled on a second offence. This latter plan would seem to be the more effective, for the number of people who employ chauffeurs, in proportion to the number who own automobiles, is very limited, and if a man driving his own machine knew that he was certain to lose his driver's license—not likely, but certain to lose it—if he broke the speed law deliberately twice, it is a perfectly safe assumption that he would be infinitely more careful than he is, on the average, today.

It is always disasteful to discover the necessity for desperate remedies, but the situation is becoming desperate. The public must be protected at all costs—not only the pedesrain public, bu the automobile public who comply with law but who are liable to damage at the hands of the speed maniac.

AN OLD SONG

BY WALTER WELLMAN

The young lady wants one of the old songs—one that will always be popular. The clerk is showing her one. On the back of the sheet of music are a lot of little words of two letters each. You are to add a letter before each word turning each into a word of three letters each. If you do this right, the first columns will spell the words making up the name of the old song.

Poincare's Reparations Speech at Senlis

SENLIS, France, July 16.—(Associated Press).—Premier Poincare yesterday proclaimed the French Government's unalterable decision resolutely to stand for the compleee execution of the eVrsailles Peace Treaty with the German debt at 132 billion gold marks, as agreed upon by the Allies at the London conference and against any international financial committee to replace the reparation commission.

Poincare said France had finished making concessions to Germany, and was tired of temporizing with that country. His strongly worded address while carefully refraining from mentioning the speech of Stanley Baldwin, British Prime Minister, in the House of Commons last week, is considered as the French Government's preliminary answer to the British position.

Poincare chose for his pronouncement this town, the farthest advance of the Germans. He based his conclusions on France's leal rights under the treaty "signed by 28 nations and which cannot be considered after four years as an antedeluvian fossil."

Poincare professed to have no hatred and no spirit of revenge for the devastation, the traces of which were visible from where he spoke. "We should like no longer to talk of devastation or to think of it," he declared, "we should like to forget—even to forgive."

DEPRIVED OF RIGHTS.

France, he said, had been no better treated in reparations than in the concessions wrung from her and the security denied her. "In the reparation committee, established under the treaty," he said, "we are in the minority although ours is the major interest. Nevertheless it has been sought for four years to relieve this commission of its powers, to replace it by international financial commissions so as to attempt to coalesce against us interests opposed to ours.

The peace treaty, the Premier continued, established conditions under which the commission would fix the German debt. "There was a pretense of respecting those conditions," he added. "but the debt hardly had been fixed when there was imposed upon us in one of those supreme councils, where we always left behind us some of our rights, a schedule of payments that the committee accepted reluctantly and which reduced our claim in undetermined proportions. We then accepted this schedule of payments as an international convention as an engagement of honor pledged to us."

A few months later, Premier Poincare asserted, this schedule again was questioned "as certain of our friends seemed no longer to have any other thought than to lighten the German debt, and as they themselves were our creditors, we told them, 'there are three kinds of bonds provided for, let us keep our part of the first two. As for the third, we will use them against Germany only in proportion as our creditors ask us to pay our debt.' Still we were found too exacting."

FUNDS FOR HERSELF.

"And yet," he declared, "has not Germany been so well looked after during three whole years that she has been allowed to default on all her obligations, so that we had to pay with our own money 100 billion francs she owed us and has not paid? Has she not been allowed to rebuild her commercial fleet and develop her canals and railroads and enrich her great industries at the expense of her creditors?"

Poincare asked if anyone imagined that Germany would stabilize the mark and put her house in order, "if France watched with arms folded."

"For three years," he said, "the Allies have followed the mirage, and for three years things have been going from bad to worse. If we were not in the Ruhr Germany would have continued to slip into the abyss she dug, but we would have been empty-handed, while now we hold security, and we are powerful enough not to have to let go."

France, he asserted, unceasingly had been making concessions. "Then why have we said we have reached the end? It is because until now they always have been at our expense." The peace treaty had promised reparations and security. For security "France had bee given the right of temporary occupation on the Rhine that was to cease at the precise moment Germany should become stronger."

France also had been promised a guaranty pact, but this had not been fulfilled and nothing had been offered to replaee it, "for the new guaranty pact proposed by Lloyd George war for a shorter time than occupation and without precise engagements. Military aid was nothing; it was only a dangerous deception."

Poincare emphasized the Government's and his own personal feeling in favor of close relations with Great Britain. He recalled that it was he who brought about the alliance with Great Britain before the war when others were advocating better relations between France and Germany.

The Premier concluded with what was interpreted as a carefully worded reminder of France's supreme position on the continent and the danger of attacking the Treaty of Versailles, for, he said, "though a breach opened in the Versailles Treaty other propositions would pass that would re-open the entire peace settlement, destroy the new status of Central Europe and menace our friends, Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia."

NO SURRENDER

LONDON, July 16. — (Associated Press)—Premier Poincare's speech at Senlis yesterday, although avoiding direct allusion to Premier Baldwin's pronouncement or the present negotiations, was not the less an indirect reply to Baldwin, and from that viewpoint, acording to reports of the speech received here, showed hardly a trace of any accommodating spirit, such as recent reports from Paris had led the people here to expect.

One the point of superseding the reparation commission by an international body, such as it is supposed will be suggested in the British note to Germany, Poincare was distinctly opposed, declaring that such commission would constitute abolition of all France's interests. He still stands uncompromisingly on the Treaty of Versailles and all it implies, and imputes to British leniency toward Germany all the recent reparations difficulties.

If Poincare's speech is France's last word, it is taken as being ill to any progress in the present negotiations and will certainly be received in England with great disappointment.

Perhaps the only hopeful aspect is that Poincare makes no public complaint of the tone or tenor of Baldwin's pronouncement and disavows any territorial ambitions.

NOBILITY OF LABOR

The chief reason why we assume that this factory age must bring us a dirty and degraded face as well as dirty hands is that we have too long accepted labour as a curse; it becomes that only when we withhold our recognition of its value. We have too long failed to understand the nobility of men's masterwish for worth through useful work, and so have continued to try to run our factories and mines by means of an outgrown motive.

All of us tend to live our way into our thinking enormously more than we tend to think our way into our living. To that to-day must be added this: that the most compelling and inescapable of the forces for determining our daily living is the living we do where we earn it, in our work, o our job.—Whiting Williams.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

In the public library at New York when I was here last I must have read every book in the place on or about or in any way pertaining to Newfoundland. I found there books that I feel sure are not in this country: or, if they be, I have not seen or heard of them. In the North American history room of the library there are several dozen books about our country.

The publication by the Boni & Liveright Co., book publishers, of a collection of the writings of Thomas Paine has reminded me of a rather amusing paragraph I came upon in one of the books in the library.
