It seems that, away back in the early part of the nineteeth or near the end of the eighteenth century some worthy English bishop or priest visited St. John's. Either he spoke or write (which, I forget now) his impressions of the place and the people and the one that tickled my funny-bone was his disgust at the "impiety and independence" of the people of St. John's.

He found the town saturated, he said, with copies of the works of Thomas Paine, and the people seemed to be more concerned with that man's impious writings about freedom and liberty than with subjects that ought interest god-fearing folks.

It is indeed a matter of great interest to know that Paine's remarkable writings had found their way even to Newfoundland, and it is eloquent proof of the tremendous circulation his pamphlets attained. We are told that his pamphlet "Common Sense," published in 1776, sold close to half a million copies!

As Thomas Paine was the literary champion of the American Revolution, and the man above all others whose voice was raised on behalf of political and economic freedom and independence, it is fair to assume that the people of Newfoundland were deeply interested in the action of the other colonists, those on the mainland, in breaking away from the control of the English merchants at home and setting up their own separate government. Indeed, we are told this very thing by historians, and it is a safe guess that had Newfoundland been nearer the scene of action she should have joined with the other colonists.

Newfoundland was at that time getting all her food and other supplies from the Americans, and when the revolutionary war broke out her source of supplies was cut off, and for some months the people in Newfoundland faced a serious situation. Ships were rushed off to Ireland and loaded with provisions, and these got back to Newfoundland just before the winter set in.

Well, Newfoundland did not join with the mainland colonists, but continued to paddle her own canoe. I cannot say that I regret her action. Our little country has traveled a hard road, but we have preserved our identity and our independence, I personally believe that, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, the arguments are all in favor of our joining the American Union, even now. But dollars and cents are not everything. We are Newfoundlanders—not Americans, not Canadians, not Englishmen; we are Newfoundlanders. Our geographical position has bred into our bones a love of liberty, a stanch individualism of viewpoint, and an independent bearing that no dweller of a continent, I think can have.

Boni & Liveright are to be congratulated for publishing this volume in its Modern Library series. The famous pamphlets—Common Sense, The American Crisis, Rights of Man, First Principles of Government, etc.—seem to be as fresh today as when written: indeed, so slow is the spirit of some men to achieve growth and vision, Paine's writings may be said to be radical. For that reason it can do no harm at all to have him read and re-read in our day.

*** *** ***

"To argue with a man who has renounced the use and authority of reason is like administrating medicine to the dead," is one of the delightful gems of this volume. In the introduction by Carl Doran, literary critic of the Centuary Magazine, we are reminded of Paine's glorious retort to Benjamin Franklin, himself a great lover of liberty.

"Where Liberty is, there is my country!" proclaimed Franklin.

Where is nit Liberty, there is mine!" Paine replied. There he was needed.

"These are the times that try men's souls. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheap we esteem too lightly: it is dearness only that gives every thing its value. Heaven knows how to put a proper price upon its goods; and it would be strange indeed if so celestial an article as Freedom should not be highly rated."

Imagine the good people of St. John's and the outside places poring over those words back in 1776! Was it possible for them to read "The Crisis" and not be thrilled to the core? No: they were English and Irish and Scotch, lovers of liberty.

When I contemplate the natural dignity of man, when I feel for the honour and happiness of its character I become irritated at the attempt to govern mankind by force and fraud, as if they were all knaves or fools, and can scarcely avoid disgust at those who are thus imposed upon." What dignity is in those fine words.

"He that would make his own liberty secure must guard even his enemy from oppression; for if he violates this duty he established a precedent that will reach to himself."

"I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life. I believe in the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy and endeavouring to make our fellow-creatures happy.

"The world is my country, to do good my religion."

Noble words, all!

Splendid Strawberries

The Advocate was shown this morning a sample of strawberries grown by Mr. H. W. LeMessurier, C.M.G. which are undoubtedly the finest ever raised in this country. The largest of the fruit are a full ounce in weight while the smallest go to nearly half an ounce. The plants were imported by Mr. LeMessurier from Canada three years ago but owing to delay in transit most of them were dead when they reached here. The result of his culture of those he managed to save is eminently encouraging and indicates how successfully this delicious fruit can be grown here.

Outport Motorist Fined

In the motor car case heard in the Magistrate's Court yesterday and in which the defendant was a resident of Hr. Grace, a fine of one dollar was imposed following a conviction on the charge of driving without a license. The charge of not having the car registered was postponed. The findings in these charges are important because there seems to be a differenct of opinion between outport motorists and the City authorities on the points involved.

OBITUARY

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your most esteemed paper, the Advocate, to record the death of a dear friend, Miss Blanch Dally, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dally, who passed peacefully away July 1st at the age of 17 years. She was ailing from lung disease for a long time but bore her sickness patiently and was waiting for the call to be taken to a home where there is no parting and where we feel sure she will meet her loved ones who have gone before. Blanch will be greatly missed by all who knew her, she leaves to mourn a father, mother, one brother, one sister and a large number of friends. She was laid to rest in the Methodist Cemetery, the service being conducted by Mr. Thomas Blandford.

We loved her, yes we loved her,
But Angels love her more.
In Heaven we hope to meet her
On that bright eternal shore.

Thanking you for space in the most esteemed paper, the Advocate.

MISS MARJORIE PARSONS,
Herring Neck.

DREAD RECORD OF MURDERESS

MASON, Mich., July 19—Found guilty of murder in the first degree, Mrs. Emma Kopple, 59, "poison queen," was given a life sentence at hard labor here yesterday for poisoning her 12-year old foster son, Harry Brill Kopple, May 13.

Investigation of her past life revealed nine alleged mysterious deaths in her home during the last 25 years. They were not mentioned at the trial.

LOCAL ITEMS

In the Magistrate's Court this morning two drunks were discharged and a deserter from the S. S. Modeste was ordered to be sent back to his ship.

No matter what price you pay for your toilet soap, you cannot get a better quantity than Ivory. Yet Ivory is not expensive. You can buy it at the Union Stores for five cents a cake. There are larger size cakes too selling for ten and fifteen cents. Each is well worth the money and will please you immensely.

As good as any soap can be that's Ivory toilet soap. Yet the price it not high. Every family can afford Ivory soap. It is a sensible economical soap. No fancy wrappers or stylish boxes, just plain wholesome pure soap that's what you want isn't it? Ivory at all Union Stores now.

Coal Workers' Demands Rejected

ATLANTIC CITY, July 26—The anthracite miners' demand for complete recognition of their union, concerning the closed shop and of the check-off system, was rejected yesterday by operator members of the joint committee which is trying to enact a wage agreement and forestall a threatened strike on September 1.

The rejection was not considered final, however, and is not indicative that the wage negotiations would fail.

Great Manuscript Collection

NEW YORK, July 26—Forty thousand volumes, written by hand, on parchment, some of them dating back to 640, have arrived from abroad and are being unpacked in the library of the Jewish Theologic Seminary, it was announced yesterday. The collection was presented by Dr. A S. W. Rosenbach, and was gathered up all over the world by Elkan Nathan Adler, famous globe trotter.

All Miners Back

SYDNEY, July 26—Men are steadily being hired for working the coal fields and there are few complaints of discrimination against the strikers.

By Friday the whole district is expected to be producing again. Two thousand men were working at the steel plant and others were on the waiting list for employment.

King's Yacht Refloated

SOUTH END ON SEA, July 26—King Gorge's yacht, Britania, which ran aground on the Shoe Bury Sands, near the mouth of the Thames to-day, was floated to-night. The vessel is believed to be unharmed.

The Best Day In The Year

How dear to our hearts is the day of the races,
The swing swong and dancing with "Kitty" or "Mag"
With some half seas over, "black eyes" and red faces,
That one sees depicted on men with a "jag."

The folks who run out to their necks in the water,
The damsels who dress in their costumes so rare;
Tht father, the mother, the son and the daughter,
Declare it to be the best day of the year.

Many Robberies Are Reported

On Tuesday night Motty's grocery store, corner of Pleasant Street and Springlade Street was entered. The thief gained access to the premises by a window. He rifled the till and got away with $1.80 loose change that was left there at closing time. No other goods are missing and the matter has been reported to the authorities who are investigating the affair.

A few nights ago the store of Mr. D. J. Furlong on New Gower Street was also robbed. The burglar entered through the cellar window, raised the hatch which opened into the store, and despite the fact that the proprietor and his family occupied the upstairs, rifled the till which contained $3.50, helped himself to a quantity of cigarettes and tobacco and then made good his escape in the same manner in which he entered the building.

During the week a lady resident of New Gower Street had her hand bag stolen from her hall stand where she placed it but a few minutes previously. It contained a few coppers, and some private papers, and it is believed was stolen by two young girls who were seen in the vicinity at the time, and who were later caught in the act of entering another residence a short distance from the scene of the other robbery.

Royal Reception To Lord and Lady Byng

SYDNEY, July 25—Princess local of the U.M.W.A., at Sydney mines accepted the Lewis-Barrett order to return to work under the leadership of Provisional President, Barrett. BIG CONSERVATIVE MAJORITY IN P.E.I.

ALL SYDNEY MINES WILL BE OPERATING TO-MORROW

CONSERVATIVE PARTY IN P.E.I. ARE VICTORIOUS

LIBERALS WIPED OOT

CHARLOTTETOWN, July 26—To-day's Prince Edward Island provincial elections resulted in a landslide for the Conservative party, and the utter defeat of the liberal Government of Premier John Bell which has held office since 1919.

At an early hour to-night the Conservatives had elected twenty-two out of thirty, and only one Liberal was known to have been elected then.

Premier Bell himself, and Hon. W. M. Lea were defeated.

The S.S. Modica sailed from Bell Island yesterday for Port Talbot with 7000 tons ore and the Martainan sailed for Rotterdam with 6,500 tons.

Father Finds Girl's Mutilated Corpse

CITIZENS WITH POLICE FURIOUSLY HUNT MURDERER.

COBALT, Ont., July 19.—(Canadian Press).—The mutilated body of Monica Foster, six years of age, was found in a shrubbery near her parent's home at Cochrane yesterday and town and provincial police, aided by dozens of Cochrane citizens, are scouring the vicinity for the perpetrator, according to information here last night.

The child's throat had been slit from ear to ear, the marks of her assailant's thumbs upon her neck had created ghastly bruises, her temple was bleeding from injuries sustained when she was knocked unconscious with a stone and her body had been otherwise mutilated. Provincial Inspector Moore left for Cochrane to take charge of the case.

The child had been missing from home all night, and eight carloads of Cochrane citizens spent the night searching for her. About 7 p.m. Tuesday she had started for her home on the outskirts of the town. Her father and a friend found the body.

The girl was one of a family of nine and was the daughter of a Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway car-checker.

Forest Fires are Becoming Worse

St. Maurice Blaze Expands Beyond Control—Men Increased

QUBEC, July 10—(Star Special)—A message received at the Department of Lands and Forests this afternoon indicated that fires in the St. Maurice District were getting worse than ever and several of them have expanded greatly and are out of control. The section most affected lies at a few miles from the Maouan River and is credited with having been responsible yesterday for the smoke which covered the district.

The number of men employed in fighting the fires in that section has now reached the record number of 2,500 and expectations are that within a few days still more will be despatched unless conditions turn immediately. Rain is wanted and if it does not come to the rescue of the men employed in that section the losses sustained will be incalculable.

Fires have also been reported in new districts this morning mostly on the north shore.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND DEFICIT

LONDON, July 20—(A.P.)—The Central Board of Finance of the Church of England has decided to hold a series of conferences in the autumn to deal with the deficit of £53,000 shown in the financial report for the present year.

BRITISH BOYS AS WAITERS

London Express: We are extremely pleased to see that the British boy is being trained as a waiter and a cook. In the past he could not conpare with his French, Italian, or—yes—German rival. Foreign boys were put throught a drill that would make a recruit in the Guards tired. They learned every detail of their business, from washing plates to cooking for millionaires. They were thorough. They knew their business from top to bottom, and the result was that a good head waiter or a first-class chief could command a field-marshal's emolment. All the better if the new Westminister Technical Institute can secure the same prizes for British boys.

DUNDEE WINS FEATHERWEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP

A PAIR OF REAL FIGHTERS

NEW YORK, July 26—Johnny Dundee, of New York, won the world's featherweight championship to-night, from Eugene Criqui, of France, in a slashing fifteen round battle that kept the crowd that filled the polo grounds in an uproar.

Dundee received a decision over his man who less than two months ago took the title from Johnny Kilbane in the same ring. Dundee won cleanly, taking every round, but the crowd was constantly divided between admiration for his ability and the stoic defence of the Frenchman, who never relinquished any advance, and fought back when he had scarcely strength to stand.

Criqui was down for the count of nine in the first round, and for the the count of seven in the second.

KEEN FOR GOVERNMENT HOMES

LONDON, July 20—(A.P.)—More than 15,000 applications have been made for use of the 10,000 houses which the government will build within the next few months.

The houses, which are being constructed under the scheme to stop the house shortage of England and Scotland, may be rented or purchased by the public, and so great has been the demand that it has been necessary to refuse tho-thirds of the applications made since the war.

IN TIME OF CRISIS.

Los Angeles Times: Many great men have been atheists and of these some have later been converted to a belief in God or some divine principle. The reason these have offered is a sense of man's importance in crisis and a necessity of some support outside himself. This sentiment was voiced most forcibly by Abraham Lincoln, whose faith had never wavered, in these words, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom, and that of all about me, seemed insufficient for the day."

FAMOUS OLD LONDON THEATRE MAY GIVE WAY TO PUSH CARTS

LONDON, July 25—(A.P.)—Shall it be Opera or Onions is the question agitating holders of business premises in Covent Garden Market. Business has grown to such an extent of late that dealers allege the Opera House, which is admittedly old and decaying, should be demolished and the site utilized for an extension of the congested market.

While people complain they cannot get to the opera with their motor cars, because the market waggons block the way, fruit and vegetable merchants assert that a food market is more important to the general public than "Faust" and "Tannhauser."

English Bishop Says Betting Is No Sin

LONDON, July 16.—"Betting is a human tendency," Bishop Welldon declared in giving evidence before the special parliamentary committee which is inquiring into the question of the proposed taxation of betting. "I do not think it is a sin in itself," the bishop added, "but it may easily become one."

Bishop Welldon has travelled many thousands of miles by sea and he was invited to give the committee his opinion with regard to the little flutter that is universally indulged in on shipboard, betting on the daily run of the ship. "Being a clergyman," he said, "I do not think it discreet to put a shilling on the ship's run myself, though I should not consider it a sin if I did so." Those people who were totally opposed to betting, the bishop added, were enemies to reform and estranged the great body of moderate Christian opinion on the question.

Canon Peter Breen, a well-known cleric of Manchester, gave the committee his opinion of the bookmakers whose profits, he said, amounted to £100,000,000 annually. Thefts, bankruptcies and moral lapses due to betting probably amounted to 100,000 per annum while the cases of demoralization were probably ten times as great. Manchester alone, he said, had 6,000 bookmakers.

SYDNEY, July 27—Practically all mines on the south side of Sydney Harbor are expected to be working normally by Saturday. All but two are working to-day on the north side.

Although the men have aparently decided to go back to work the mines are still idle. The individual locals on the north side have not yet voted as locals.

CHARLOTTETOWN, July 27—The Conservatives won twenty-six seats out of thirty in yesterday's Prince Edward Island provisional elections, overthrowing the Bell government.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 27—An ultimatum demanding the establishment of the closed shop and the check-off system throughout the anthracite industry of the United States with a strike on September 1 as the penalty for rejection, was flung into the joint wage negotiations yesterday by the miners and refused point blank by the operators.

NOME, Alaska, July 27—The crew of the trading schoner Iskum of Tacoma which was held in Siberia by the Soviet authorities on the charge that the Russian Commercial Laws had been violated, overpowered the guards and placed them in irons, and brought the vessel here, arriving yesterday.

GULFPORT, July 27—While the steamer Helena, from Newcastle, N. S. W., to Gulfport, was battling with mountainous seas near the island of New Caledonia, Captain John Ethelbert's wife gave birth to triplets.

The ship's physician had died and was buried at sea two days previously.

LONDON, July 27—Former Prince Frederick William is planning an escape from Weiringen, according to an Antwerp correspondent of The Daily Mail.

There is some anxiety throughout Belgium owing to confidential information regarding comings and goings of various agents between Germany and Wieringen and it is an open secret that the Prince wants to return to Germany. He is believed to be continually communicating with German nationalists and their organizations throughout the Fatherland.

SITUATION IN GREECE IS GRAVE

CRISIS IMMINENT

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Crisis

"Carlotta's alone. I don't think she is very well this morning, my dear. She's a bit cross and short. I'm going out because when she's like that we don't hit it off, and I'm always saying the wrong thing. But, bless me, the heavens don't fall because of these little tiffs, and I don't know what the artistic temperament is! Be thankful, my dear, you don't possess it or have to live in a house with it."

Judy smiled, ruefully.

"I may have another kind of temperament equally difficult, Mrs. Carlyon."

"No fear of you! Come out and do a bit of shopping with me. I've got five sale catalogues in my bag, all of them marked."

Judy laughed then, responsive to the bit of comic relief.

"I fear that even a sale catalogue is not the balm I need; but thanks for wanting me to come," she said gratefully. "I'll go up and beard the lion."

She was completely at home in the Bloomsbury house and welcome there as the flowers in May. She found Carlotta in the unusual position of lying on the sofa, and her face at once betrayed the fact that either she was troubled or she was out of sorts.

"I was thinking of telephoning you dear. I suppose you knew I wanted you," shes aid, with genuine pleasure.

"I did not, for I am in the throes of worry and selfish grumbling myself. The question is—which of us is to have the first chance of letting off steam?" said Judy whimsically as she bent down to kiss Carlotta.

"Let me talk first," said Carlotta, "for mine is of small importance, I am sure, and from your doleful face, I see that you have something big to tell. Who do you think I've had come to see me this morning, not more than an hour ago?"

Judy said she hadn't an idea.

"Mrs. Harry Fordyce on their way back from the trip. They've been practically all over the world, and they're going to Scotland to-night, to take away her mother and sister. They sail for New York next Wednesday. Some clever Glasgow surgeon has done wonders for the little lame girl, and she is likely to get almost well."

Carlotta did not immediately answer, but turned her head away.

"It was really you she wanted to see, Judy, and probably she will call on you this afternoon about four o'clock. You see, she found me easily at the theatre, but her only reason for coming here was to get news of you. They both look very well, and I never saw more beautiful clothes than she was wearing, nor a more proud and satisfied husband. We mustn't grudge her her luck, Judy. She deserved it. Now, what has happened to you to pucker up your brows like that?"

"Two very big things, Carlotta. Claude has got the Dublin appointment and he is likely to be married inside a month and go over there to live."

"How splendid. I'm glad! Aren't you, Judy?"

"So so—but it throws me out once more, don't you see? Then I've had a letter from Samuel Richardson, informing me that the Stair tenants want to be released from their term at the end of two years instead of three—family reasons—good and sufficient. It's another upheaval, and somebody ought to go to Stair and see just precisely how everything stands. I suppose it will have to be me, Carlotta, as there isn't any body else sufficiently intereste. Claud has washed his hands of Stair, so to speak."

Carlotta sat up on her elbow and looked into Judy's eyes.

"Judy, would give ten years of my life if I could get away now—this very minute—to Stair, and shut all the rest of the world out."

There was something in Carlota's voice which stirred Judy's heart.

"You are more tired than usual, and things have been going wrong at the theatre—is that it?"

"They're all wrong, Judy, and some thing will have to be done. I'll tell you presently, but first let me hear more about Claud. When will he go to Dublin?"

"Just as soon as he can be spared. He will be established before the elections, of course, though after he is once there I think his post is secure through all administrations. It's a good post, indeed, for a young man of Claud's age, but it won't satisfy him, Carlotta. It's merely a stopgap, and in the meantime it enables him to marry."

Judy tossed her hat on the floor when she knelt down by Carlotta's side.

"I'm the superfluous woman. Nobody wants me. I've no gifts."

"Except how to make a home—which we were originally intended for, Judy," put in Carlotta. "And when we get away from that, things get wrong and rotten in our lives."

"Perhaps, but owing to the dearth of homes we have to make a shift without. I wonder now whether there isn't a Boys' Home or Orphanage where they would take me for a living wage? I believe I might have a small success there."

Carlotta was deep in thought. "Claud has no disposition to step into his brother's shoes, Judy. We must be grateful to him for that. Do you think he believes that Alan will come back?"

"We don't talk about it, Carlotta. Leave it at that. And now tell me what is happening at the theatre."

Cadlotta's face flushed and her eyes hardened.

"Graham Madox becomes more and more impossible. I shall have to leave him after the run of this piece."

"You mean that he keeps on wanting you to marry him?"

Carlotta nodded.

"He will take no refusal, and I see that his persistence is coloring all his attitude towards me, and that we shall not be able to go on comfortably after Easter."

"But won't it be bad for you to leave him?"

"It won't hurt me professionally. I shall never lack work now, Judy. and I have refused a good many tempting offers because Madox gave me my chance."

"Does he know that? I shouldn't leave him in any doubt on that point."

"He knows it perfectly. But—but I don't want to talk about it any more. Judy, it has come to a crisis, and I told him last night I should leave him at Easter."

"And have you anything else definite in view?"

"I can have at any moment; but I want a long summer at Stair. I was thinging of the Clock House. But this has happened opportunely, Judy, and I want you to fall in with my plans. I want you to go back to Stair, dear woman, and to make it your home."

Judy's eyes widened.

"But—darling—I can't! Where is the money to come from?"

"The money? Oh, it is here!"

"Your money, Carlotta!" Judy shook her head.

"Why not?" asked Carlotta feverishly. "Just think for a moment of all that has happened through me. If Alan had never met me you might all have been at Stair yet."

Once more, and this time very emphatically, Judy shook her head.

"We could not have afforded to live there, dear. Alan had decided that, even before he saw you on that fateful Saturday afternoon."

It was surprising how vivid and precise with both was every memory of these few poignant weeks in Ayr before the break-up of Stair!

But Carlotta appeared unconvinced.

"You say that to comfort me, I know, Judy; but we both know that I am right. Why do you suppose I entered the profession? What do you suppose I have been working and saving for these last two years? I haven't spent one unnecessary penny."

"I know," said Judy.

"I have never felt that the money was mine, Judy. It belongs to Stair. I have all I want. My father and mother are simple people, and they have all they want, and I have saved enough to make it unnecessary to let Stair again, if only you will be god and do what I want. Don't you see how the way has been cleared? Claud gets the Dublin post, and wants to marry. He no longer needs you; and the tenants go out. It is the finger of Providence!"

Into Judy's eyes crept the longing of the exile, but she continued to shake her head.

"I can't do it, Carlotta. I can't! You must understand that Stair cannot be bolstered up with your money, though it is very dear and good of you to want to do it."

Then Carlotta quite slowly rose to her feet, and her face looked a little white and strained.

"Then I must tell you, Judy, if you won't go back to Stair, I will. Look here!" She undid the fastening of her bodice with a swift hand that did not tremble. About her neck was a chain so thin and fine that hardly was it visible against her skin. She drew it up with a quick, proud gesture, and held out to Judy what was suspended from it—a wedding ring. "I am Alan's wife, Judy," she said simply. "We were married that morning he sailed. It was my doing. So you see my money belongs to Stair, and I have the right to go there if I choos now, and wait for his coming back."

Judy had sprung to her feet, and now stood in the middle of the floor staring at Carlotta; and for a brief moment none knew just how the pendulum might swing.

But the look in Carlotta's eyes conquered, even before she spoke again.

"When I saw Jean Dempster this morning with her husband, Judy, looking the picture of happiness—he so tender and kind, she so jolly, her face positively shining—I nearly died. I could not have gone on another day without telling you; so now what are you going to do?"

"But Carlotta, why wasn't I told?" cried Judy rebelliously. "I had the right! Alan ought to have told me. It is as if I were a child."

EXPECT 30,000 "KNIGHTS" IN CITY.

(Montreal Star)

Mayor Martin, assisted by Alderman A. A. Brodeur, President of the Executive Committee of Montreal, will officially welcome thirty thousand Knight of Columbus to the city at the annual convention to be held here August 7, 8, and 9. The civic reception will be held at the Mount Royal Hotel on Tuesday morning after the opening church services at Notre Dame Cathedral.

Hon. James A. Flaherty of Philadelphia, who has served as Supreme Knight for the past 14 years, left Montreal last night after a visit of three days, during which time he consulted with the local committee of arrangement as to many of the details of the convention. He reported that prospects were far brighter than he had expected and prophesied that this meeting would attract as many delegates and visitors as any former convention. The original number expected was 15,000, but the present indication is that more than double that number will attend. Six hundred rooms have been reserved in the Mount Royal Hotel and a registry of homes where rooms may be rented is complied.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout

Pierrepont B. Noyes was for two years American representatives on the Rhineland High Commission, which was the Allies' body of authority on the occupied German territory after the war ended.

Noyes has just ended a tour thru France, Germany and other parts of Europe. He has had important interviews with statesmen and generals, etc., in these countries. In an interview which he gave the London correspondent of the New York World on the subject of the French occupation of the Ruhr Valley Noyes said:

"'Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad,'" he declared. "That quotation sums up my views of French policy. This may be the beginning of a new Napoleonic era. The most remarkable aspect of the present crisis is the patience of Britain under the most humiliating treatment any nation except Germany has endured within my memory.

"France is convinced she has Germany, to use slang, on the skids, and apparently feels strong enough to extend her rough methods to England. The attitude of France to Britain since the last German note is unbelievable

"One can hardly believe that possession for a short time of the most powerful army in the world could have created such a megalomania in France that her responsible government has decided to classify Britain with Germany as a potentially beaten foe. Yet it looks that way.

"In substance France is saying to Britain, 'Don't talk to us; talk to your friends the Germans and persuade them to do as we demand. Then if you are prepared to make the other necessary sacrifices

The trouble with France, in a word, is that she has taken unto herself every bit of the detestable militarism and junkerism that was Germany's. Hate, force, the sword, intimidation, blustering, bullying: these are her policy. Nothing will satisfy the present rulers of France except to see her old enemy, Germany, laid prostrate in the dust.

It's a fine policy. The only thing wrong with it is that you can't prostrate a nation of 80,000,000 people in the dust without dragging other nations, including yourself, with her.

You recall what I wrote in this column a few weeks ago about the big nations of the world being engaged in a new race in armaments? I said then that altho, at the Washington Conference they had agreed to build less battle ships, that was only because the war experts had declared that battdeships were passing away as weapons of war. A couple of dozen airplanes can sink the greatest battleship afloat in a few hours.

Well, what I wrote then about the nations building up great airplane fleets for the next war is borne out by the news that comes from England.

The English Government plans to increase its air strength to more than double by the end of 1925. The proposals are said to include an increase of forty squadrons, or an addition of about 500 airplanes, and the enrolment of a territorial air force.

This English decision is made because of the way that France has been increasing her air strength. That country (which has abrogated unto herself Germany's old position in Europe) has about 140 squadrons and approximately 1,200 machines.

What is more, she plans to have 220 squadrons, or 2,000 tirplanes, by the end of 1925.

France starts it off. England, alarmed, follows closely upon her heels with grim determination that she will make her air strength just as great as that of France. Meanwhile the militarists of the United States are yelling at the American Government to "wake up" and get in the race.

The three great nations will thus be in a heart-breaking and pocket-breaking race in armament, until at last there is a great war. Then, when the war is over, they will call a conference and decide to reduce arming—in airplanes. By that time they will have some other weapon of war, and the old race will start off again.

Grin, ye people who suffered in the last war, grin! The last war was the one that was to "end" war. So will the next one be.

QUEEN OF YACHTS RIDES DESERTED

ONCE EX-KAISER'S, NOW IDLE AT SOUTH BROOKLYN MOORINGS.

Since the yachting fever is now at its height, and the yachting season the most active in any year since the war, it may be worth while, says the Cincinnati Times-Star, telling the history of a yacht which lies idle in the Tebo basin, in South Brooklyn, while white-winged sisters slip past, singly and in fleets, hastening to compete for prizes in regattas up the sound and farther east.

The idle yacht, with bowsprit and foremast gone from the jagged stubs which show where once they were, is but fifteen years old, yet carries more of history and tradition than any other racing craft afloat.

In the year 1908, Mme. Bertha Krupp ordered a schooner yacht built as a wedding present from herself to her husband, Count Von Bohnen. When the craft had had her trials she proved such a marvel of speed that the count and his fabulously rich wife decided that only one proper disposition could be made of her She must be presented to the kaiser, chief yachtsman as well as chief everything else of the German empire. Consequently the intended wedding present of the Count became the Germania, and flew the imperial flag of the commander of everything afloat in German waters. The kaiser entered her in the international regattas held off Southampton, along with his famous sloop, Meteor, and she was lying at anchor, beside Meteor, on a very eventful night some years later. According to well-authenticated report, a German destroyer appeared in Southampton harbor on the night before England declared war on Germany, and ran alongside the two royal yachts. Prince Henry of Prussia, an admiral in the German navy, and himself an enthusiastic yachtsman, was on the bridge. He hailed the captains of the yachts and advised them to take a tow at once if captain of the Meteor accepted. The captain of the Germania said he couldn't possible leave until he had gone to a dock and filled his water tanks.

"Very well," shouted Prince Henry, "if you prefer water to beer, stay here."

The destroyer towed out the Meteor. On the following morning the Germania was seized as a prize of war.

The Germania lay at Southampton until 1916, when she was bought at auction by Christopher Hannevig, Norwegian banker and shipowner, who refitted her, provided her with auxiliary power, and sailed her across the ocean to America. After he had cruised to Florida in her, he was seized with a serious illness and returned home. He never recovered. While Germania lay idle in a Southern harbor, with a Norwegian crew aboard, her owner died. She was purchased from the Hannevig estate by Gordon Woodbury in 1921. He had her refitted at Norfolk for a cruise to the Mediterranean and changed her name to the Half Moon. On the first short leg of this long projected journey—sailing from Norfolk to New York—she ran into a hurricane, lost her foremast and bowsprit, and all but foundered. That ended the fervor which Mr. Woodbury had felt for a cruise 'round the world. Half Moon has never moved since from her moorings in South Brooklyn. Caretakers, who are good natured, let barefoot boys dive and fish from her bulkwarks, but carefully exclude them from the regions below decks, where luxurious furnishings grow must with age, gilt chairs corrode with the damp of the salt water, and china and silver plate bearing the kaiser's imperial crest gather dust from day to day.

THE TUMBLING MARK

(Le Canada)

The crash of the mark was not unforseen, but none the less did it have many victims in Germany and other Countries. Foregin holders of German currency can no longer have any illusion as to its value. But we do not speak only of the great speculators, veritable social parasites, who cannot have too many lessons of this description. Besides those who have risked their personal capital, there are certain banks which, after having drained the resources of a district, have utilized them in dangerous speculations, with criminal negligence. Resounding crashes have resulted, entombing all who followed; misery and ruin for thousands, despair and suicide.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, JULY 27th., 1923.

SYSTEM IS ESSENTIAL

The Advocate's stand on the matter of Humber Employment has been commended by the general public. Scores of letters have been received, endorsing the references made concerning that much discussed subject.

Our efforts were not without success; they resulted in the much required explanations from the Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company and the public enlightenment as regarding Humber activities and construction work to date.

The number of men employed, about 2000, is far in excess of our calculations, and not one of the thirty-six representatives in the Assembly had any idea of the numbers actually engaged.

This was due wholly to the fact that the arrangement under which employment was to be handled, (that is through Major Butler and district representatives) had fallen down. Many men requiring work evidently did not wait for passes and sought work directly on the spot.

The previous arrangement had been made with the company in order that employment might be as evenly distributed as possible and that the most needed cases be first considered. Because it fell down, there is genuine disappointment among representatives who are harassed with employment appeals and among those, who trusted to the Company's arrangement while other people were getting work direct from the Company.

If the original arrangement could not have been adhered to, it was far better that the arrangement had never been made. There are lots of people who would not have been deceived by it.

The representative of the Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. has informed the Advocate that the Humber is not a philantrophic institution and that they can take on or refuse whatever men they desire.

That is all very reasonable: but we think the Company should be anxious to help out the general situation and meet, to the greatest possible extent, the necessities of the general public, who endorsed the project to the measure of shouldering equal responsibility with the British Government, in the guarantee.

The question now arises: What will be done re employment in the next month or two?

If the Company desire to facilitate matters for the general satisfaction and for their own convenience, a state of affairs under which men may go to the Humber in numbers over and above requirements, should not be permitted. That is not good enough for the men and it will certainly be embarrassing for the Company.

Let us take the case of a poor man, who has done nothing at the fishery. Because the Company have scrapped their original employment arrangement, he is left to his own resources. He does not know, even if he can pay his railway fare, whether he should go or not. The longer he waits, the less chance for work. Others are getting ahead of him. Is it good enough that he should eventually go to the Humber and get turned down?

That is what will happen, if employment is not regulated or systemized.

As soon as the fishery is over, work will be badly needed.

Is it too much to expect that a reasonable and workable system be formulated for meeting requirements, in order that the matter will be dealt with in the manner of justice and fairplay?

THEN AND NOW

When the industrial programme was being proclaimed, there was a certain section of business men who condemned the idea of industrial expansion and contended that people should cleave to the fisheries.

Some of these may have been sincere in their contentions, but this year's fishery should assuredly disprove their opinion. To date, the fishery is a failure, comparatively. As a country, we could not this year depend upon the fisheries alone and make both ends meet.

Our only salvation is the industrial operations that will employ numbers of people in excess of the numbers ordinarily employed.

Not that the fisheries should be scrapped or belittled. It is our greatest asset ;but it is not alone sufficient for general requirements in those days.

The point that will present itself in connection with the lesson which the fishery shortage has now taught is this:

What are our business men, so loud in their exhortations of the fisheries, doing to secure for the people the highest returns for their summer's toil.

Their position is a very important one in the country. They should have the true country's interests at heart. They should desire to help the people? What are they doing about it?

British Outlook Not Encouraging

England faces another winter of unemployment is the discouraging prediction of a large group of British industrial leaders according to yesterday's cables, which state that this group have written to Premier Baldwin pointing out the necessity for drastic action to meet the situation that exists, and which must grow worse unless certain plans formulated with a view to providing employment during the coming months are carried out.

The settlement of reparations and other difficulties confronting Britain are regarded as too remote from which to hope for relief in time to ward off what is expected to be a fourth year of unrest and unemployment.

Thus does the world see Britain actually confronted with the results of France's dog-in-the-manger policy. While France refuses to listen to sane advice, while her statesmen refuse to let the voice of reason predominate over that of revenge, European countries continue in the unfortunate position of being unable to pay their debts to Britain, and European markets, which formerly consumed British products to such a great extent, are no longer available because of the constantly dwindling purchasing power of the people of these countries. As a consequence of this Britain not alone finds her former markets lost to her, but there is nothing forthcoming with which she can meet her own war obligations.

No matter how favorable the outcome of the present difficult situation, the British Government will be again called upon to protect the people from the results of industrial inactivity and the suggestions that are now being made include the expenditure by the Government during the coming winter of fifty million pounds or $250,000,000 to meet the most insistent demands of the unemployed who, it is estimated, will number one and a half million people.

With such an appalling outlook can it be wondered at that, with the British nation, in her relations with France, patience has ceased to be a virtue.

POLITICAL

On enquiry just before Press hour the Advocate learns that there is no change in the political situation since yesterday, and that so far as the formation of the new Cabinet is concerned, there is nothing for publication up to the present.

Re Circulated Falsehood

St. John's,
June 27th, 1923.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Your reference to the well-known business man, who circulated that injurious statement regarding the Humber loan, was well deserved.

The general public feel disgusted over that circulated falsehood. If our professed patriots had the least regard for our country, they would, even if the report was true, try to suppress the story instead of giving it much heralded publicity.

Everybody is glad to know the loan was so easily subscribed.

Yours truly,

TERRA NOVA.

BRITISH HELD BY U.S.

NEW YORK, July 26—(A. P.)—More than 1000 immigrants from England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales it is estimated recently, will be detained at Ellis Island for the ugust quota. The United Kingdom quota was exhausted this month for the first time since the passage of the present immigration laws.

The steamships Baltic, Olympic, and quatania are due this week and carry hundreds of British subjects who will fall under the provisions of the law.

Sparks from the Union Anvil

The arrival at Port Union of the schooners Gull Pond and Mischief with loads of fish from Wolf Bay has created great interests among Union fishermen. It means "good luck" for the season, they say, and though the fishery has not been up to the scratch, the future can be faced with hope and courage. The Gull Pond was built this year at Port Union, and a "bumper trip," under Capt. Chas. Blackwood, veteran Unionist, is her first streak of good luck.

One of the busiest crews in the country is the crew of the motor-auxiliary vessel, F. P. Union, Capt. Rideout. She never stops; when she is not loading or unloading freight in St. John's, she is discharging at Port Union, loading at Port Union or provisioning Union outport stores. Night and day, the work goes on.

The Union has now returned from North with a load of cooperage material, to be made into casks in the Port Union cooperage loft for this year's purchases of fish.

The Port Union cooperage is a business spot. Nothing can be heard but the singing of electric motors, driving the planes and saws and other machinery. Row on row of casks fill the great Port Union stores.

The wheels of industry are humming in the fishermen's town. The ripping of electric saws, the buzz of elevators, the clatter of hammers, and the noise of motor winches are all sparks from the anvil of Unionism.

A visitor, who returned to Bonavista after an absence of several years, says this important centre has taken on a city-like appearance at night. The Union Electric Light and Power Company has transformed the town by its bright display of electricity. The streets are beautifully lit, very many houses have electric lights and electric cooking is being more and more adopted.

The same happy condition exists at Catalina. Our correspondent says if Port Union had accomplished nothing else but this, its existence would be justified.

The arrival of the Kriton, with salt cargo, to Port Union, has set all hands busy, as the work of discharging must be rushed in order to get the ship away on other business.

Capt. Jacob Bishop, prominent friend of the F.P.U., has finished a splendid job on the King's wharf in this City, and is now wharf building at Job's premises.

Capt. Geo. Penney, one time Chairman of the F. P. U. Council, Carbonear, has visited the Advocate. Capt. Penney is spending the summer in Newfoundland, having arrived from New York about two weeks ago.

SHOOTING-STARS NO LARGER THAN SMALL BIRD-SHOT

That meteors as bright as the brightest star are no bigger than small birdshot is a conclusion drawn by Prof. F. M. Lindeman and C. M. Dobson of London, authors of a recent article in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. A meteor as bright as the moon would they find, be only an inch in diameter and would weigh about two ounces.

As a result of their study, the authors conclude that the temperature of the upper atmosphere is much lighter than was formerly supposed. It has long been known that the fall of temperature with altitude continued only to a height of about seven miles, where the temperature is as low as from 60 to 70 degrees below zero., Fahrenheit. But from this altitude to as high as "sounding ballons" have gone, which is about fifteen miles, the temperature has remained about the same. This is what is known as the stratosphere or isothermal layer.

The recent investigators of meteors now conclude that this layer of fairly constant temperature extends up to a height of thirty miles, above which the temperature again rises, so that at altitudes of from hirty to fifty miles it reaches considerably above the freezing point, or about the average temperature at the earth's surface.

The density of the air at a height of sixty miles is calculated to be one-millionth of that at the surface. It is thought to be composed largely of ozone and its high temperature is thought to be due to heating by the long wave-length beat waves from the surface of the earth.

THE YELLOW PERIL.

L'Evenement: While Americans and Canadians organize themselves to work the shortest time possible and under the most comfortable possible conditions, while the white man conducts himself towards work as if it were humiliation, exploitation and slavery, the yellow displays a readiness to do any job, provided the labor should be profitable. He does not dispute regarding a day of ten, nine or eight hours. He only asks for work. The same Japanese who in his own country perhaps takes part in a class war, once he has emigrated and settled on the soil of this continent, allows himself to be moved by the sentiment of ambition.

Latest News of the Fisheries

THE SENEF'S REPORT.

The Department of Shipping received the following message yesterday from Capt. George Barbour, of the Senef, which is now at Holton:—"Ship went as far North as Hopedale, now at West Turnavick, awaiting arrival S. S. Sagona. From Indian Hr. to Hopedale, no ice in sight. Floe extends further North, but cannot say how much. Weather is exceptionally good, with fair sign of fish as far North as Hopedale. Passed three schooners North Turnavick, all well."

LABRADOR REPORTS

The following reports were received yesterday by the Fisheries Department:—

Smokey:—Light S. E. wind.

Venison Island, Battle Hr.:—Light S. E. wind, foggy, good sign of fish.

BACKS FROM BANKS

The Customs Department received a message from Grand Bank yesterday stating the schrs. W. L. McKenzie King, Florence E. and Lillian M. Richards had returned from the Banks, hailing for 400, 500 and 700 quintals respectively, taken on their first baiting.

A report from Elliston indicates very poor fishery, being a blank to date with many fishermen.

The fishery around Deer Island, Gooseberry Island, B.B., and vicinity, has improved during the last few days.

..Lower .Island .Cove:—Fishery practically a failure.

ADVERTISE IN THE EVENING ADVOCATE

AT THE CITY HALL

The regular meeting of the City Council was held yesterday afternoon. Mayor Cook presided and Councillors Martin, Outerbridge, Vinicombe, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

The minutes of previous meetings were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from Inspector-General Hutchings, in which he stated he was quite in accord with the views of Mr. F. B. Williams, respecting the closing of the lower part of Casey Street to motor traffic as referred to iif a previous report. Motorists have for some time past been in the habit of using this very narrow thorofare for access to the Higher Levels i nspite of the fact that there are many wider streets in the vicinity which could be used for that purpose. The Council has given the matter careful consideration, and it is more than likely the street in question will be closed to motor traffic.

W. J. Browne, solicitor, wrote re the property expropriated by the Council during 1921, and asked what steps the Council intends taking in the matter of compensation. These expropriations are at present under consideration, and the Council is making arrangements to hold the necessary arbitrations as soon as possible.

W. & G. Rendell, agents for Ryland's estate, asked compensation for land taken in the opening up of the new water pipe line road. The City Engineer was instructed to look up the records for information, as it is thought the land in question has already been arbitrated on.

Mr. C'N. Conroy complained of the condition of sidewalks, Allandale Road, which were completely torn up during the recent rainstorms and asked if the Council would immediately attend to the matter of repairs. A similar comunication was read from F. H. Steeer with regard to the sidewalk, south side of Military Rd.

Nerve-Worn Women Gain Strength and Vigor by Using Dr CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Both matters were referred to the City Engineer.

Application to Mr. C. Churchill for share of patronage in connection with horse-shoeing was granted, and the Sanitary Supervisor will be instructed accordingly.

The Medical Officer of Health recommends that permit be given Mr. James Shields to build stable, Cove Road, subject to the usual sanitary requirements.

Mr. T. Dohoney asked that the hopper fronting his residence, Prospect Street, (near Hanley's Lane) be removed, as he had complied with the regulations by connecting with the water and sewerage mains. It was ordered that the City Engineer visit the site and report as to the advisability of granting his request.

McGrath & McGrath, Solicitors, on behalf of some 25 residents of Hayward Avenue, lodged a protest against permit being given P. Bolger to convert stable into a forge, as they pointed out, if such were allowed it would considerably depreciate their property, increase the insurance rates and also subject them to great annoyance owing to the smoke, soot, etc. It was decided to withhold permit, pending further investigation.

Councillor Outerbridge brought to the notice of the Board the fact that a request had been made for the oiling of the road near the Sanitorium, which would relieve the dust nuisance and be of great benefit to the patients. He stated that the Nfld. Motor Association was prepared to supply a quantity of Tarvia for the purpose, if the Council would undertake the work. The City Engineer was instructed to visit the place and see what is required.

Attention wasc alled to the fact that proper signs were not erected at the new streets in the Annex, which were re-named last year. It was ordered that they be placed there at once.

The Child Welfare Association asked permission to hold Band Concerts in one of the city parks for the purpose of raising funds for their most worthy object, stating that several of the City Brigades had offered their services. The request will be acceded to, on the usual condition—namely, that no entrance fee shall be allowed, save that which the public may voluntarily give.

The City Engineer's report on the work of the various departments for the week was tabled.

Up to the present Contractor Quigley who is doing the work at the pipe line Mullowney's Hill, has completed 1600 feet of excavation and 1300 feet backfilled. This work is progressing satisfactorily.

A new connection is to be made to the storm sewer, Hutching's Street, (at McCarthy's Cove), which has been giving considerable trouble during recent rainstorms.

Investigation was made in connection with the complaint of S. O. Steele re alleged damage to his premises through surface water. Several bursts were discovered in the services of nearby residents, which the owners were compelled to repair, and there has been no negligence on the part of the Council employees.

The Medical Officer of Health reported six new cases of Scarlet Fever, 1 Typhoid, 1 Diphtheria, in the city for the past week.

Building permits are to be issued to the following:

Dwelling—J. Tobin, King's Bridge Road.

Repairs—T. Donovan, 64 Spencer Street.

Wwellings—W. Cummings, LeMarchant Road, West, provided he pays proportion of cost according to frontage, for water and sewerage extension.

Dwelling—Alex LeMessurier, Catherine Street, provded ground plan is submitted.

Plans Deferred—P. Bolger, alterations to building off McDougall St.; J. Burke, dwelling, Warbury Street, there being no water or sewerage available.

The following rules and regulations for the management of Bowring Park were adopted:

1. Opening and Closing—The Park shall be open to the public at 7 o'clock a.m., and shall be closed at 10 p.m., from the 15th of May to 31st of October.

2. Bell—A bell shall be rung by the keeper fifteen minutes before the closing hour; no person shall be permitted to remain in the Park after 10 p.m.

3. Animals in the Park—No horse, cow, pig, goat, dog or other animal such animal shall be allowed at large in the park. Any such found there may be impounded.

4. Walking on Flowers and Shrubs—No person shall walk on any portion of the park except such as are allotted to the public, and any person violating ther ule or refusing to remove from portions reserved for plants, shrubs, flowers, or other such purposes, when requested by the keeper, shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed.

5. Profane and Unseemly Conduct—Any person using obscene or profane language, or any person drunk or disorderly, or behaving in a manner coluclated to give annoyance to the frequenters or visitors of the Park shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed. And may be immediately ejected by the Keeper or any peace officer.

6. Referring to Orders of Keeper—Any person resisting or refusing to obey the lawful orders of the Keeper or his assistants shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed.

7. Destroying Plants,Eec.—Any person injuring the trees, shrubs, flowers, plants, grass plots, seats, bridges, or any other property of the Council in the Park, shall be liable to fine or imprisonment as hereinafter, and in addition shall be liable to the cost of property injured or destroyed.

8. Persons giving Information—Any person giving information leading to the conviction of any offender for violation of any of the Byelaws of the Park, or for the destruction or injury of its property, shall receive half the amount of the fines, the other half; shall go towards the maintenance of the Park.

9. Entering by Gates and Climbing—No person shall enter or leave the Park except by the open gates, and any person found climbing over or upon the railings or fences shall be liable to the penalty hereinafter imposed.

Penalty—Any person violating any of the foregoing rules shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or, in default of payment, imprisonment not exceeding sixty days.

A regulation to prohibit motor vehicles from entering the Park was defeated by a majority vote.

Notice of motion was given to introduce resolutions for ammendment of regulations recently published in relation to Taxi Stands and the parking of vehicles on Water Street during and after business hours.

Reports of the Sanitary Supervisors and the Plumbing Inspector were tabled and accounts for the week were ordered to be paid.

The meeting then adjourned.

League of World War Veternas To Prevent Future Hostilities

LONDON, July 18—(United News.)—A league of world war veterans of the United States and the British Empire to prevent future wars, was proposed here Tuesday in resolutions passed by the British Empire Service League.

The League's committee will be instructed to open negotiations toward the formation of an English-speaking Veterans' League, including the American, Legion, the British Legion and all others.

Lord Haig, supporting the resolution, declared British veterans would welcome an American as its first president.

A mere whim of the wind prevented the burning oil which swept into the Allegheny river during a $1,000,000 oil blaze at Pittsburg from destroying one of the main bridges connecting Pittsburg with the north side industrial section. After a stubborn 30-hour fight, the fire, which was started by lightning, was finally put under control.

GLAD TO DIE FOR TERRIBLE CRIME

RODEZ, France, July 18.—Ivan Celestin, murderer of the father of two little children, whose mother also died of grief over the loss of her husband, has just paid for his crime with his own life.

Celestin himself requested the judge to sentence him to death.

"I am a scoundrel, and I deserve no pity," he said, after his trial had been completed and before sentence was passed. "I beg you to send me to the scaffold so I can explate my crime."

Before going to his death the murderer begged the unfortunate orphans to forgive him.

ETNA IS TEMPERAMENTAL

(London Daily Chronicle)

To those who survive her terror Etna is not unkind. For the lava which she pours out so copiously enriches the surrounding earth, and nowhere in Italy does the vine flourish more than near her slopes. And after each tantrum many new varieties of gentle flowers appear, with all kinds of tender and unfamiliar scents. Thus does the passionate Etna reveal the subtle fascination of her femininity.

SPECIFICS OF HEALTH

(Daily Herald)

It is better to keep in health than to fly to medicine, as any chemist will tell us. Fresh air, exercise, and moderation in living are the sovereign balms. But while healthy conditions are debarred to so many we must look up the chemist as one of our most valuable friends.

All Crews Enter To-night

The regular meeting of the Regatta Committee takes place in the T. A. Armoury this evening at 8 o'clock, when the balance of the crews will enter, and the buoys and stakes will be drawn. It is very important that all crews enter, so that all matters in connection with the regatta may be finalized. The order of the various races will be decided on and arrangements made for the preliminary heats, which will start at 9.30 a. m., Wednesday.

* * * *

The pond is the chief attraction nightly, and last evening despite the weather conditions some hundreds of citizens were present.

* * * *

As yet very little time has been made by any of the crews, and the best to date has been the Outer Cove fishermen who are a strapping crew.

* * * *

In the Amateur race it is hard to pick a winner even at this stage, and with five crews competing, this promises to start the day well.

* * * *

The intermediate and Junior Football races promise to be the events of the day, as there is very little difference in any of the crews.

* * * *

The Star of the Sea Athletic Association is taking a big interest in this season's Regatta, and they will be represented by at least four crews, having teams entered in the Senior, and Junior Football, and Intermediate races, and to-night a Trade crew with Mike Walsh as stroke is being entered.

* * * *

Mr. Joseph Murphy, the well-known sporting enthusiast is manager, and he says that in all probability the Star will be putting a new boat on the Pond for next year, and will organize a boat club in order to encourage the manly sport amonght its members.

* * * *

Already the tents at the head of the pond are being erected, and one was in course of erection on the North bank last night.

An Enjoyable Outing

On Wednesday afternoon last, the choir of Gower Street Methodist Church was given a delightful outing by the Official Board, through a committee appointed by them for that purpose. The members of this committee, with their wives, were the hosts and hostesses, the guests being the members of the choir who had the privilege of bringing one friend each.

At three o'clock, the party motored to Manuels, where a visit was made to the Girl Guides' Camp. Many of the visitors were surprised to see such a delightful camping ground.

The Guides were engaged in their Sports Day competitions, which were keenly contested. At 5.15 the party were driven out to Donovans where an excellent tea was provided.

Full justice was done to the viands, after which Mr. John Leamon, in a few words, conveyed to the guests of the evening the pleasure it gave the Official Board in thus meeting the members of the choir and their friends. He spoke of the faithful and voluntary services the Choir at Gower Street had always given, and he asked the members to continue in the good work.

On behalf of the Choir, Mr. L. R. Curtis thanked Mr. Leamon for his kind remarks, also the Official Board for the pleasant outing they were then enjoying.

At seven o'clock the party motored back to the beautiful grounds of Mr. P. H. Hudson on Topsail Hill, where games were indulged in until 9.30, when all repaired to Mr. Hudson's residence where ice cream, cake, etc., were served.

The return to town was made at 10.30.

YOUNG MAN IS DROWNED AT ST. SHOTT'S

The enquiry into the recent fire at

The King's Wharf

Editor, Advocate,

Sir:—Permit me to say a few words of praise in behalf of Mr. Jacob Bishop, Contractor, to whom much credit is due, for the quick and substantial work performed in the construction of the King's Wharf, which he has just completed. "Jake" as his many admirers are wont to call him is no amateur in the art of wharf building. During the many years in which he has been engaged at such work, he has won for himself unstinted praise from the mercantile community and other gentlemen. His latest work "The King's Wharf" will stand for many years to come a lasting monument to his skill as well as to the industrious citizens who took part in its construction.

Thanking you very much for permitting space in the columns of your popular and widely circulated journal.

I Remain,

Yours truly,

CITIZEN.

Toronto Lawyer Guilty of Fraud

Three Years For Forging Mortgage Documents—Pleads Guilty.

TORONTO, July 17.—James H. Hauffman, Toronto barrister, was sentenced by Magistrate Jones in the police court to three years in the Kingston penitentiary for forging three documents purporting to be discharges of registered mortgages. The amount involved was $3,500, and the accused pleaded guilty.

Those who had been victimized by the actions of the accused were W. J. R. Fowler, of Guelph; Mary Anne Haug, of 37 Armadale Ave., and E. J. Watts, of 187 Dunn Ave. One of the offences dated back to 1914, the fraud being concealed by paying the interest money.

Frank Regan, who acted as defence Counsel, pleaded for leniency on the ground that it had been a case of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." In passing sentence the magistrate: "It is a very serious matter for a lawyer to forge a document."

China Awakening To Military Call

LONDON, July 18.—A notable illustration of the awakenin of China as regards militarism is shown in the publication of a 100-page booklet in English by Lieut.-General Chang Ying Fang, which has just reached London from Peking, in which he demands the erection of a control board and control of military expenditures taken out of the hands of military officers and removing the incentive to expand the forces in order to extend the opportunities for grafting.

He says, "The first step towards reducing the Chinese armies under the Tchunates must be a correct census of the numbers, second, the disarmament of the weaklings and the retention of the physically strong men, thereby lessening the burden of taxation of the civilian population."

The booklet shows that the Chinese Republic spent over $800,000,000 on its army since 1913.

KING'S REJECT SCHEME

NO COLLEGE FEDERATION

HALIFAX, July 26—The Alumni of King's College, after nearly four hour's debate to-night, rejected, the proposed scheme of federation with Dalhousie University, by a vote of fifteen to nine.

One of the main reasons presented for rejection by a number of speakers was that they did not consider the present state of business was such as to justify a drive for four hundred thousand dollars, which they stated King's would require to raise during the next two years, under the proposed scheme.

Dr. Judd, Principal of King's College School, and one of the Governors of King's College, said the rejection of the scheme meant the death of college federation.

Magistrate's Court

A youth charged with stowing away on the Canadian Sapper two trips ago was up for trial this morning. He had been on remand since July 12th, having escaped from the police when, with two others, he was being brought on here from St. Lawrence. The cost to the ship and to the Court of landing these stowaways and getting them back to town was in the vicinity of $140,00 of which defendant was ordered to pay his part.

Five young men were charged with forcibly boarding a train at Badger and taking passage to St. John's, having no tickets or no money with which to pay their fares. They were represented by Messrs. Hunt and Fox and pleaded guilty. Mr. Fox stated the men had been at work with the Goodyear brothers building a road up country and that conditions there were intolerable as a result of the presence of mosquitoes. Judge Morris said he had heard of mosquitoes biting people and that he had encountered them himself on Labrador one summer. His Honor commiserated the defendants on the inconvenience they had been put to and felt that no doubt it would be cooler down by the lake-side on Wednesday next when the Regatta would take place.

They gave an understanding to make good the amount of their passages.

TO START NEW OFFICE BUILDING

Plans are now in readiness for a large office building to be erected in the City by the Reid Nfld. Co. who will shortly be vacating their present quarters in the Railway Station. It is not known whether or not a site for the new building has been finally decided upon but it is thought it will occupy the vacant space on Duckworth Street, opposite the Crosbie Hotel, work on the building will start in the near future and will give a good deal of employment.

Canada's May Fishery Report

Less Fish But of Much Greater Value

The quantity of fish landed on both Canadian coasts during the month of May was 739,986 cwts., valued at $2,779,844, while that for the corresponding period in the preceding year was 839,435 cwts., valued at $2,464,899.

There were 75,079 cwts. of cod, haddock, hake and pollock taken during the month, compared with 19,899 cwts. and 14,305 cwts of these kinds in the corresponding month last year.

Lobsters were not quite so plentiful as in May of the previous year, the catches being 137,678 cwts. and 169,545 cwts respectively. Since the commencement of the lobster fishing season, 155,671 cwts. have been taken. Of this quantity, 35,238 cwts have been shipped fresh and 60,262 cases canned. In the same period last year 203,808 cwts. were taken, of which 45,570 cwts. were sold fresh and 78,117 cases canned.

The catch of halibut on the Pacific coast during the month was 30,306 cwts., as compared with 23,222 cwts. in May last year.

The catch of salmon on the Pacific was 29,871 cwts against 17,533 cwts. in the same period last year.

The Imperial Conference Opens Next October

Time and the Political Shuffle Have Wrought Great Changes in Personnel Since Last Meeting—Some of Problems to be Discussed.

(By. George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent.)

OTTAWA, Ont., July 27—After five years, the Imperial Conference meets again in October with many and grave problems for solution. Some are of long standing, for they have been before successive Imperial conferences again and again. Others arise from the War and post-war development, introducing new phrases and new situations. And the conference will meet with a vastly changed personnel. Of the delegates of five years ago, only two—Premier Smuts of South Africa and Premier Massey of New Zealand—will be there in October. The rest have all passed in the eddies and whirlpools of politics.

The conference of five years ago was the Imperiol War Conference of 1918. That was the last full Imperial Conference. But three years later in 1921 there was a conference of Empire Premiers and even in the two years since elapsed changes have been many. Mr. Lloyd George, who then presided, now takes his seat to the left of Mr. Speaker. Premier Baldwin will preside in his stead. Of the other members of the British delegation, Lord Curzon alone remains. Despite changed premiers, despite changed ministeries, Lord Curzon is Foreign Secretary still and as such will outline to the Conference the foreign policy of the Empire.

And in the Dominions changes have come scarcely less rapidly. The place of Mr. Meighen, who represented Canada at the Premiers' conference, will be taken by Mr. MacKenzie King. Mr. Hughes will no longer represent Australia. At the coming conference Premier Bruce will speak for the Commonwealth of the Antipodes. Premier Smuts and Premier Massey—again the only survivors—will once more speak for South Africa and New Zealand respectively. Mr. Montagu, who was secretary for India in 1921, has given way to Viscount Peel. Newfoundland was not represented at the 1921 conference.

Within the two years also a new Dominion has come into being. From the troubled pages of Ireland's story, the Irish Free State has arisen with the "same constitutional status in the Community of Nations known as the British Empire as the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia and the Union of South Africa," and with membership of the "group of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations." For the first time, should other arrangements not be made in the interval, the Irish Free State will be represented at an Imperial Conference. And here, it may be observed in passing, the question arises whether the use of the term "Imperial" conference and "Empire" express the changed spirit of the last few years. In the treaty on which the constitution of the Irish Free State is founded the co-equal nationhood of the Dominions in the British "Commonwealth of Nations" is definitely recognized. Has "Imperial" served its day? Itself it superseded "Colonial"; in turn it may give way to a broader term.

It is a misnomer perhaps to speak of the coming as an Imperial Conference, for two conferences are to be held simultaneously, attacking different but not less important problems. At the Imperial Conference proper will be taken up the main issues of Imperial policy; foreign affairs, defence and the like. The Imperial Economic Conference, on the other hand, will primarily consider the development of inter-Imperial trade. Briefly, and so far as advices to hand indicate, the agenda of the two conferences will cover:

Imperial Conference.

(1- Opening statement of the general position on the main issues of Imperial policy;
(2) Report on foreign affairs since 1921 with consideration of present problems and future policy;
(3) Discussion of naval, military and air defences;
(4) Review of the naval situation resulting from the Washington Conference and arrangements for future co-operation in all branches of defence.

Imperial Economic Conference.

Winter Will End Resistence In Ruhr Is Now Predicted

LONDON, July 27.—A despatch to the Daily Mail from Dusseldorf says that the question of food and wages is growing acute. Food supplies are slowly decreasing and only a few shopkeepers keep open all day. The despatch adds that the Ruhr is outwardly calm, but that underneath disquieting symptoms are discernable; the people are sick of being coerced and would like to end the situation, but will not yield passive resistance. It has lost a certain number of supporters, but it still remains a very definite obstacle to peace. The correspondence predicts that resistance will end in about three months "when the people are faced with approaching winter without coal or work and perhaps foodless."

Boy Is Torn To Pieces By Dogs

NORTH BERGEN, N.J., July 27.—While about fifty persons looked on in horror, two great Dane dogs virtually tore to pieces Joseph Genatt, nine year old West Hoboken, at Floral Park, North Bergen, this morning. The child died before the ambulance reached North Hudson Hospital. Adolpte Bentz, owner of the dogs, was arrested on a technical charge of manslaughter. The boy victim was on his way home with other childhen when he decided to take a look inside the park. As soon as he got inside the dogs attacked him and he was unable to retrace his steps because the gate had been closed. At hospital his jugular vein was found to have been severed, causing the lad to bleed to death.

Belgium May Bridge Gulf Between French And British Nations

LONDON, July 27.—The opinion that Great Britain eventually will be obliged to send a reply to the German reparations note independently of France, is strengthened by latest reports from Paris, although it is believed in some quarters that Belgium will be able to bridge the gulf that separates the two powers at present.

Passive Resistance Must Cease Before Negotiations Are Undertaken.

PARIS, July 28—The French reply to the British reparations note will be deliverd in London on Saturday or Sunday. It accepts some of the British suggestions and asks for further light on others. It maintains the principle of the Franco-Belgian declaration to the effect that passive resistance must cease before negotiations with Germany are undertaken.

Toronto Next Meeting Place

STOCKHOLM, July 28—Toronto was chosen to-day by the Baptist World Alliance as its meeting place five years hence.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 28—Luis Firpo knocked out Joe Burke, or Detroit, in the second round of their scheduled ten-round bout here to-night.

SYDNEY, July 28—Although no ranking officer in the district will admit having received orders to evacuate Cape Breton, preparations are proceeding daily for the early departure from the island of the military forces called here about a month ago yesterday.

The reserve garrison was withdrawn to Sydney and detachments from various other points are being called in.

OTTAWA, July 28—Registration of all persons of Chinese origin or descent in Canada is provided for by an order in council gazetted this week in accordance with legislation passed at the last session of parliament. Regulations governing Chinese in transit through Canada in accordance with legislation was also gazetted. Such Chinese are made subject to medical examination for certain diseases including leprosy and tuberculosis.

BERLIN, July 28—In consequence of the food difficulties, Chalcellor Cuno telegraphed the heads of the various agricultural organizations appealing to them to put the early potato crop on the market.

BERLIN, July 28—The Communists have decided to call off their open anti-facisti demonstrations and will be under rigid police surveillance all over the country.

LONDON, July 28—Cable despatches From India indicate considerable dissatisfaction there with Governments handling the situation in Kenya Colony and its proposed remedial measures which were disclosed in Government white paper this week.

KING'S AND DALHOUSIE WILL UNITE

HALIFAX, N. S., July 28—The board of governors of King's College, Windsor, voted sixteen to seven tonight in favor of federation of their college with Dalhousie University at Halifax. It is announced that this is the final decision of King's, and it is anticipated that the college will open in Halifax this fall, instead of in Windsor.

King's College was founded in Windsor in the latter part of the eighteenth century and is the oldest college in the British dominions overseas. It is an Anglican institution.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Crisis

"No. no!" said Carlotta quickly. "I alone am to blame. Alan did not want to marry me—not because he did not love me, butb ecause he said it was a crazy venture for any woman, but especially me. I told him I wanted to be sound and safe, and he gave in. As for Judy—what good would it have done to tell you? I tried once or twice, and in New York last year I very nearly told you, but something held me back. I think on the whole, dear, it has been better for you not to know."

Judy seemed at a loss where to look or what to say.

"So now what are you going to do with me, and have I the right to bolster up Stair?" asked Carlotta with her most adorable smile.

"Only if you put that ring on, Carlotta, and go about your daily business wearing it all the time. It would have kept Graham Madox quiet and things would not have come to the pass they have at the theatre."

"Right you are, most wise counsellor! But the deed is done. Will you put it on, then, Judy? It was Alan's hand that put it on before. Nobody but a Rankine has touched it."

She swung the chain from her neck and Judy took the ring and slipped it on the wedding finger. Then she began to cry.

"I can't help thinking how dreadful if you are a widow before you've ever been a wife," she cried.

But Carlotta merely smiled.

"I am no widow, my dear, and things are marching on. It is time for us to go back to Stair, and we shall be there when its master comes into his own."

CHAPTER XXIX.

Changes

Peter Garvock, on a Sunday afternoon, put his hand on the wicket gate on the far side of The Lees shrubbery, and passed on to the lower slopes of Brassie Hill.

It was a day of April's most exquisite mood. A sunny sea lay under the dappled sky, and the far cry of the lambs seemed to voice at once the need of childhood and the answering call of motherhood throughout the world.

These two years had aged Peter Garvock so that his face looked harsher than ever, and the grey was about his temples.

There is no process by which a man ages quicker than by mental travail, of which Peter had had his fill.

No man or woman knew what these two years had held for him. In the silent night watches, when he did not sleep, he was haunted by the vision of a naked and devastated Stair, from which his kindred had been swept clean, like the chaff before the wind.

Little or no news of the Rankines had filtered through to Ayr, and none at all to Peter Garvock, though he was aware that Ian was believed to have died in Canada, nothing having been heard of him since he left Scotland.

Just that morning he had heard one of his own stable hands say that the tenants had left Stair and that it was now unoccupied. But nobody seemed to know what was going to happen next.

Such an unrest and longing had been upon him all the morning that, though he tried hard to fight against it, it had conquered him; and he was now on his way to Stair to see with his own eyes and hear with his own ears concerning the further fortunes of the desolate house.

As he vaulted the march dyke, remembering, with the poignancy of anguish, what transpired there on another Sunday afternoon not so very far away but that he could recall its minutest detail, a figure suddenly came round the spur of the hill, and Peter, to his unspeakable amazement, beheld the face of Judy Rankine.

For the moment the man was at a loss, and would have fled, but for the fact that Judy came forward, smiling in a quite friendly manner, holding out her hand.

"I' mnot going to eat you, Peter; and I was on my way to The Lees to see whether Ramsay's mandate held good yet, and whether he would show me to the door!"

Peter essayed to speak, but his tongue seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth.

Judy had changed too. The roundness had gone from her brave face, so that its profile was sharpened; she was much thinner, but her eyes smiled just as friendly upon him as in the days when Stair and The Lees had been on their best terms.

"When did you come?" he stammered. '.I only heard to-day that the house was empty, and I was on my way to see whether it was true."

"You come back with me then. My sister-in-law only arrived at eight last night. But she is very tired and I have not allowed her to get up till tea time."

"Your sister-in-law!" repeated Peter in the same stupid, stammering fashion. "Then where is Alan?"

"Alan? Oh, God knows!" answered Judy, without a thought of irreverence. "Let us sit down here and talk things over, Peter, for I see you are interested, and, after all, I won't go to The Lees, because now I see you I know it was only you I did want to see. But I hope Aunt Isabel and Lucy are quite well?"

She spoke these commonplaces to give him time to recover himself, at the same time searching about for a comfortable place to sit down on. Three weeks of drying March wind had made the fields ready for the sowing, and there was not a marshy spot left on Brassie Hill.

Judy dropped down on a clump of heather on which the new shoots were showing greely against the grey of a sheltering boulder, and invited her cousin to do likewise. But for a space he did not, but stood still, staring down at her with the strangest expression on his face.

"Peter, you are looking sixty years old to-day. What have you been doing with yourself?"

"Chewing the cud of remorse, Judy. And it has never been more bitter than now! What do you mean by saying that your sister in law is at Stair? I never heard that they were married! When did it happen? And where?"

"It happened in London on the morning of the day on which he sailed, and nobody has ever heard of it till now. It might be a very long story, Peter, but what's the use? Alan is lost somewhere, on that dreadful Continent which stretches from sea to sea, and after that, to illimitable regions of ice and snow. And Carlotta and I have come back to Stair."

"For good."

Judy nodded.

"She says so. She had made a great deal of money, and, of course, as Alan's wife she has the right to Stair—at least until it is proven that he is really dead. Claud and I think he is dead, of course, but Carlotta says, and I am sure believes, that he is alive yet and is coming back. She is rather weird at times about things like that, Peter, but in all the world there never was a love like theirs—or hers, I should say!—for what can we know of Alan's love or hate at the Back of Beyond!"

"I have known, of course, that she has been on the stage all the time, and that she has been a tremendous success. And she went to America—didn't she?—last year, and did well there too."

"Oh, yes, I was with her. Alan was the object of that trip, Peter, and we arrived just twenty-four hours too late! It was the boat's fault and we were delayed by fog and gales. And there was a horrible blizzard which froze the decks and made the sea like an inferno. It seems that Alan had arranged to go out West to a ranch in Alberta that very day. By a strange co-incidence, he was in the theatre on Carlotta's first night with the "Searchlight," and he left immediately, both the theatre and the city. We were able to find the lady he had been with at the theatre—a dear, kind Scotswoman, who was his only friend in New York. So we had information about him up to the moment of his leaving the city. But he never went to Alberta, and nothing has been heard from him since."

Peter listened with the intense interest of the man to whom every word is precious and poignant.

"What was he doing, do you know?" he asked, spasmodically. "Had he any success in New York? I've heard what a difficult place it is."

"None," answered Judy. "I got it, but by bit, out of Jean Dempster—that was the woman who had been so kind to him. They met in a boarding house, but he was not able to stop long there, because his funds ran out. I believe he was right down to starvation point; and when he left New York he had been working as a common hand in an East Side factory. These are facts, and there is not any use blinking them. We never have, because it is only through them we can at least partially explain Alans disappearance."

"Don't rub it in, Judy! Good God, and to think that I was the cause of it all!

"Don't, Peter!" said Judy pitifully. "It isn't any good. If it is true what Carlotta says, that these things are written in the book of fate, what does it all matter?"

"There is no book of Fate in which it is written that a man shall be a hound, and a cur, or a murderer, Judy! And that's what I've been. If I had killed Alan here, on this very spot, two years ago, I couldn't have been more guilty than I am."

Judy was in no way amazed at the change in Peter, because no happening on earth seemed now to have the power to move her much.

"There isn't any use speaking or loking like that, Peter," she repeated. "It won't do good to anybody, and it hurts you. Won't you come over now and see Carlotta? She will certainly come down for tea."

But Peter shook his head. He was not ready yet to meet the eyes that once had been his undoing, and he had not yet recovered from the shock of hearing that she had been Alan Rankine's wife all these dreary months, and was now, perhaps, his widow.

A PATH TO INDUSTRIAL PEACE

CANADA'S PRIME MINISTER BRINGS NEW VISION TO AN OLD PROBLEM

(By RT. HON. MACKENZIE KING, Premier of Canada.)

The unrest in the world to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing society to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and the repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference and co-operation between all the parties in interest, not in coersion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

We shall reach no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry. Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed, through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so inter-related and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of Capital and Labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arise from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all there is labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of immediate transformation.

Next, there is Capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, industrial processes, and advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by Labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

The Third Factor

Then there is management, or directing ability. So frequently has management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. However, a moment's reflection is sufficient to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capital's contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of a person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to an infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary, not only to bring about efficient co-operation between Labor and Capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish nothing.

The fourth party is the Community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without labor. Labor can do nothing without Capital. Neither Capital nor Labor can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of management; and management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the community affords.

If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

The Monopoly of Control

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which Labor, Capital, Management, and the Community are regarded as inter-related and interdependent? Far from it, as every one knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection. I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant types of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise. transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc., etc.) So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of a monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of Capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the Board of Directors; the Board of Directors choose the Management and dictate the policies. The Management regards itself as responsible solely to Capital. Labor and the Community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for Capital are a first consideration; profits usually as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to Labor, prices to the Community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the Community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced, not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

It is this monopoly on the part of Capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves entitled to be regarded as partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of just control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of labor their demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the Community it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the state or municifality.

What is the Socialistic State, or Collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from Capital to the Community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic State the Government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation where more Capital was required, and would fix the wages of Labor and the prices at which the commodities are to be sold.

The war has revealed that the Socialistic State, which many workers have been led to believe is certain to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object lesson to the world.

The little there has been of state control during the war has also revealed that the substitution of political managers for industrial managers is not likely to be the best for either industry or the State. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor, but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and Management as parties to industry, the Community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant Reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control, just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitude national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protecting against an actual monopoly of control by Capital under Capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under National Industrial Guilds. This is a natural reaction, It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by Capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of a protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of Capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would burst Capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by Capital, Labor or the State, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whether Labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both Labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

It is not monopoly of control in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

No one of the parties stand to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control, as Capital itself. As things are today, it is at Capital, and at Management, identified with Capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War ridden, hungry, and penniless men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those passessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enables an idle investor to reap a fortune while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare substance. They have lost sight altogether of the services of Capital and Management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that Capital and Management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight, and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of Labor and the Community as well. What is needed is, not the ruination of Capital and Management, but that each be given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

Referring to what is fundamentally right and just, may it not be asked: Is Labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of industry as Capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and Management receive representation on this basis. If Capital and Management are so entitled, why not Labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of Labor as well as of Capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of Capital and Labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of Labor's right to a share in control. The investment of Capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; the investment of Labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human, investment; and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The Capital investor—the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it—receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor—the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor, receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which Capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If Capital obtains this right, in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is Labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

The Community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of Labor. But for Community investment on a local national and international scale, Capital, Labor, and Management would be obliged to make scant shift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the Community's part in industry? Here, too, is just venture on the part of the Community just as much as on the part of Labor, Capital, or Management. What is 99 per cent. of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry; investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very lifeblood of industry? The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the Community.

It is the Community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the Community, and with the consent of the Community, that titles are held. It is the Community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and investions, aids education, breeds opinion or otherwise, the agencies of transportion, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the Community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which Labor is provided with remunerative employment, and Capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the Community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerical or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the Community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest Capital receives. But is not the Community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shoping of industial policy. Without participation by the Community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a point-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

If industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single conrol by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity orsimilarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality of either service or rewards; but it does imply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle of recognition. The justice of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

Once recognition is given the four parties of industry the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which have long been regarded as obviously fair and just.

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of Conference. It is impossible to get anywhere with a man whith whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence not aloofness, distrust, and suspicion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found necessary to the winning of the war. It was not until the Government of Britain, representing the Community, invited Capital, Management, and Labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of round table conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions required to win the war. What was necessary to the winning of the war is equally necessary to winning of peace—which we can hardly say exists so long as international sarife gives way only to industrial unrest.

The second principle is that of investigation. Investigation is but a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are certain evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty; and unfair dealing between the parties to industry are of this kind Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness—these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class. Investigation too, has been tried between the four parties to in-service.

I believe Canada has had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world because we have in our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lock-outs and strikes.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a league of the Parties to Industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle of investigation and the molding of public opinion to that end. Such a league I believe, would lead, even more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace. Accustomen to the adoption of fundamental principles in adjusting their industrial relations, something which, immedi-

The Board of Trade and the Fishery

WHY NOT TAKE ACTION?

At the risk of becoming tiresome in our insistence, we must again refer to a matter in which the Advocate is deeply interested, because it is one that effects very considerably the welfare of those for whose rights the Advocate stands—the fishermen.

Since the beginning of the season we have used every argument and advanced every reasonable suggestion with a view to moving the Board of Trade as a body or that portion of it interested directly in the export of our codfish to take some steps that might have the much desired effect of boosting the price of fish this fall. So far as we can ascertain nothing whatever has been done. The exporters are pursuing a policy of unwatchful waiting.

The total catch this year will be short of a million quintals according to present indications. This will mean that we will have to find markets for 500,000 quintals less than an average voyage or in other words, more than a year's supply for one good market will not have to be placed the coming season. Consequently we can ease up on our supply to all the markets to the extent of over one hundred thousand quintals each.

So far, there is no indication of what the prices are likely to be in either the foreign or local markets, but that does not necessarily mean that nothing can be done now to boost the price say fifty cents a qtl. over whatever it may be under ordinary circumstances. For example, if six dollars a quintal is the price obtainable in the local market without any effort on the part of exporters as regards the foreign markets, surely united and persistent endeavour now, backed by a sound marketing policy would have the result of getting for the fishermen another fifty cents a quintal.

With a catch of one million quintals for the Shore, Labrador and Bank fisheries an extra fifty cents a quintal would represent an increased earning power for our people of $500,000, surely something well worth making a special effort to achieve. That it is possible of achievement we do not think any reasonable man will gainsay, and if the Advocate can induce the exporters to make the effort it will have done a good day's work for the people.

A Commendable Course

Hon. W. R. Warren, leader of the Liberal Party, has announced that, in the event of the formation by him of a new ministry that a thorough investigation will be made into the matter of public expenditure on pitprops, relief and other matters, concerning which a great deal of discussion has recently taken place.

This announcement by Hon. Mr. Warren indicates a desire, on his part, for open and above-board administration of public affairs and is calculated to inspire confidence.

However pronounced the Liberal leader's stand may be regarding this matter, it cannot be more pronounced than the stand of every member of his party, and while the recent political occurrences may tend, especially when handled by an opposing political party, aggravate these matters of public expenditure, there will be general approval for a thorough and complete enquiry, which will either exonerate or condemn.

The Advocate commends the Hon. W. R. Warren and the Liberal Party for their stand on this matter of public importance.

The Recognition Of Unionism

Men's ideas change with the passing of time. We are heading for more democratic ideas every day.

The very men or class of men who hated and cried out against unions fifty years or less ago are today admitting the rights of the common people to form unions and work collectively for the general good. What was heresy yesterday is orthodox and acceptable to-day, and what is unacceptable to-day will be in favour to-morrow.

Recently in America, a high railway authority declared "that the public should always be considered and catered to, and "unions are alright, and workers should have the right to form unions and bargain collectively with their employers." The speaker was Mr. Wm. K. Vanderbilt, grandson of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, famous as a fire-eating old union-hater, who upon one occasion when the rights of the workers were advanced to him, is reported to have exclaimed "The public be damned."

The day has arrived when the common people are, through unions and co-operative organizations, taking on strength to combat the forces which had hitherto, in various ways, ground them under their relentless heel.

The rights of labour cannot be disputed. Labour has its rights no less than Capital. Under ill-advised leadership, the rights of both may be abused; but this does not detract from the rights themselves.

The address recently delivered by Premier MacKenzie King, which we publish to-day, is, too, significant of the place which the forces of labour have established for themselves in the opinion of the world's leading men.

Latest News of the Fisheries

The following reports received by the Board of Trade include the week up to and ending July 21st:—

Blanc Sablon—From Greely Island to Forteau 27,000 qtls. There are 110 dories and 22 traps fishing.

FISH STRUCK IN NORTH

Messages received in the City this morning say that fish has struck in at Catalina and Cape L'Argent. At the former place traps heve got 40, 50 and 60 qtls. a haul.

Sir William Coaker has received a telegram from Capt. Eli Bungay, advising of his arrival at Newtown, from Labrador with a full load of fish.

The Imperial Conference

velopment of the natural resources of the Dominions and the Colinies;

(2) Inter-Imperial commerce, shipping and communications;

(3) Co-ordinated action for the improvement of technical research;

(4) Organization of economic intelligence;

(5) Unification of the law and practices in matters affecting trade.

These agenda, bare as they seem in their stilted official outline, yet indicate the sweeping importance of the coming discussions. Especially significant is it is to note the consequence apparently attached to the Economic Conference. Here discussion will turn not on constitutional problems and Impeoial defence, but on the equally vital questions of recovery from war, stability in currencies, on the re-establishment of normal conditions and on the extension of trade.

It is too early yet to attempt to forecast the trend of conference discussions, but at this juncture it seems altogether likely that the main issue before the Imperial conference proper will be that of defence. Constitutional problems and questions no doubt will be discussed. Premier Smuts has intimated that he intends to raise the question of status. His conception of the Empire, he recently told the House of Assembly of the South African Union, was a "grouping of free states held together by a common allegiance on terms of freedom and equality and operating on a basis of consultation." That was the position he had fought for, he added, and it would be "weak and foolish" to surrender the position for which he had fought. From other parts of the Empire there will no doubt come strong assertions of Dominion rights and status. None the less there is a feeling that public opinion is not yet sufficiently ripe nor—so the view is expressed—has there been sufficient discussion in Paliaments and on platforms to warrant, for the time being, any g reat re-adjustment of constitutional relations, beyond improved methods of consultation and communication between the different parts of the Empire.

Disquieting News From Abroad

The very latest foreign despatches foreshadow the likelihood of eventual independent action by Great Britain in the matter of a reply to Germany on the Reparations question. It would appear that the Belgo-French reply to the British Government respecting the British draft of the allied reply will not bridge the gulf which exists between the policies of the two governments.

If this is proven to be the case, the matter is a serious one. It will mean the virtual disruption of the Entente, and the inevitable and perhaps dangerous drifting apart of the two principal allies.

Gull Pond Copper

We publish to-day the result of an interview we had with Mr. Wells, President of the Great Gull Pond Copper Company. All their claims have been optioned to the amount of $1,500,000. The public will be interested to know that the drilling operations carried out on the property have realised expectations and that in several cases, assays have resulted in extraordinary percentages of ore.

Immediate and extensive boring operations are being undertaken by the American concern who have secured the option on eleven claims and, it is within the realms of probability that the great treasure which many think has laid undeveloped in the breast of Terra Nova will be unearthed and will make possible the employment of large numbers of men in one of the largest copper industries of the world.

Better Than Reported

Although the general reports of the Labrador and Strait fisheries are not encouraging, it is significant that several full loads of fish have been reported as arrived or on the way, among them being Capts. Charlie, Peter and John Blackwood, Eli Bungay and others.

ATLANTIC, CITY, N.J., July 28—Anthracite coal operators and miners to-day broke off wage negotiations and adjourned without setting a date for another meeting. The miners proposed an adjournment sine die. The operators, however, offered an amendment to the regulation, providing that both sides could be called together at any time at the request of either, upon the call of the Secretary of the Joint Conference.

THE DOMINION PREMIERS IN LONDON TOWN

ARRANGEMENTS FOR HISTORIC AUTUMN MEETING ARE NOW COMPLETE.

Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Newfoundland.

Arrangements for the historic meetings of the Dominion Premiers in London in the autumn are now practically complete.

It may be stated definitely that the following Ministers will attend:—

Canada—Mr. McKenzie King.
Australia—Mr. Bruce.
New Zealand—Mr. Massey.
South Africa—General Smuts.

India and Newfoundland will also be represented.

It was at one time feared that Mr. Massey, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, would not be able to be present.

Such strong feeling has been expressed in the Dominion, however, as to the possible effects of his absence that it is now regarded as certain that he will obtain the consent of the New Zealand Parliament to join his brother Premiers at the conference table.

The programme for the series of conferences will embrace subjects of vital moment to the Empire.

One of the most important of these will be the question of imperial defence.

This is particularly urgent in view of the momentous Washington decisions and the recent concern regarding imperial air defence.

The question of imperial preference, on which Australia feels keenly, will be raised at the Economic Conference, which will meet concurrently with the Imperial Conference and be attended, not only by the political representatives of the Dominion Governments, but also by their expert advisers.

The aim of the Economic Conference will be to discover ways and means by which the Empire can be brought into economic unity.

The development of the natural resources of the Empire, the improvement of the steamship communications, co-ordinated action for the improvement of technical research, the organization of economic intelligence and the unification of law or practice in the Empire in certain matters affecting trade development, will also be considered.

Meanwhile, by way of preparation for the detailed discussion of commercial an economic problems, Sir Philip Lloyd-George, the President of the Board of Trade is taking steps to consult Sir Eric Geddes, the president of the Federation of British Industries and other representative men in the commercial world as to the attitude of these great bodies towards the questions inseperably associated with Imperial development.

The deliberations of the Imperial Conference and the Economic Conference begin on October 1. They will mark an era in the relations of the Dominions with the Mother Country.

Every Girl Should Work

NEW YORK, July 27.—Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the former President of the United States, believes that every unmarried woman should earn her own living, as a duty to herself. Miss Wilson has entered the business world, joining an advertising agency.

"I believe," she said in an interview in Editor and Publisher, "that of all the professions open to women the greatest field is offered by advertising." She says that her father is thoroughly in sympathy with her new venture.

Whatever you WANT you may have by reading and using the WANT ADS. in work, Advertising and Subscriptions should be addressed to the Business Manager of the Advocate.

You Said It, Marceline

By Marceline d'Alroy

"KEEP TO THE RIGHT!"
Poor women!
All their lives they are being told
"Keep to the RIGHT!"
Which is quite ENOUGH
To make them all WANT
To go to the LEFT.
But no!
Their Mothers TELL them.
The preacher WARNS them.
The street signs PRINT it.
It is CONTINUALLY drummed into them:
"Keep to the RIGHT."
And they start TO WONDER
Now what can there be
And then they THINK:
Now a MAN can go to the left
And it's RIGHT,
But if a WOMAN goes to the left
It's WRONG;
And WHY has a man the right
To SAY to a woman
"Keep off! Keep to the RIGHT."
It's enough to make any woman
ANNOYED.
But WHAT can we do about it?
Absolutely NOTHING,
But REMEMBER always
That, unless a woman
She MUST "Keep to the RIGHT."

Gull Pond Copper Areas Optioned For $1,500,000

Mineral Shows High Percentage—American Engineering Staff Coming Next Month.

Yesterday the Advocate interviewed Mr. T. E. Wells, President of the Great Gull Lake Copper Co., Ltd., relative to the reports which are current regarding the copper deposits on the Company's holdings near Gull Pond.

From President Wells it was gathered that five of the sixteen locations or claims had been optioned since January, 1922, to a Newfoundland Party for the sum of half a million dollars. Since that date, extensive drilling has been carried out with results most satisfactory to the holders of the option. That there is an immense copper deposit in this whole region and in proportions payable for operations, there is no doubt, according to President Well's conclusions.

Not only has boring been made on the first five claims optioned. The Company have bored considerably over their eleven remaining claims, and assays made by the Government analyst, Mr. Davies, show 10.23 per cent. copper, 50 feet below the surface, which is an extraordinary percentage. Where this high percentage exists, the Company, we understand, has drilled 79 feet on a six by five vein of ore; and it is safe to say an average of 5 p.c. of ore obtains over the whole deposit.

Pres. Wells informed the Advocate that the Company have quite recently optioned all their remaining claims to a well-known American concern for the amount of $1,000,000.

The concern are making preparations for boring operations on an extensive scale, and have undertaken to send an engineering staff to this country by the 21st day of August o fthis year.

ately concerns their every-day life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

A third principle is that of Organization and Collective Action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of Capital, under the stress of world competition, if its units were not permitted to coalesce, and large organization of business thereby rendered impossible? What would become of the Community if its activities were not organized? Deprive managers of the right of membership in an employers' or manufacturers' association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If Capital, Management, and the Community have the right to organize, so also should Labor have this right.

Without organization of Labor—where Capital, Management, and the Community are organized—what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where, under such a condition, are the individual units of Labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where Labor is concerned than in the case of Capital or Management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; Capital and Management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that ths use of a thing, is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuse of power not confined to any one class.

A fourth principle is that of Representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the State has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of the parties effected through organization, all enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in Round Toble Conference—in such an obviously just and fair arrangement, we have the beginning of law and order in industry, just as we have had it in the State, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolutionary lines, instead of along lines that are illegal and revolutionary.

Once the principle of representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committeee of employers and employes, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committee in individual establishment, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of Government, representing the Community and protecting its interests.

The Trade Unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path: they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle; it has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred, but the real purport of Labr's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of Capital and of Labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into clearer day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of Labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organizationinto conservatively directed unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W. ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction.

No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which Capital, Labor, Management, and the Community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, as in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor of capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

Supreme Convention Knights of Columbus

MONTREAL, July 27.—For the second time in the history of the Order, the annual Supreme Convention of the Knights of Columbus will be held outside the United States, and of the seven hundred thousand members, distributed over nearly 2,500 councils, delegates to the number of 15,000, accompanied by their ladies, will gather here on August 7, 8 and 9 for the forty-first assembly. The present membership is now more than twice as much as when the convention met in Quebec twelve years ago.

The order has eight supreme officers, fifteen supreme directors, who meet quarterly, and a supreme council, composed of 315 official delegates, who will come from every State in the United States, every province in Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, Porto Rico, the Philippines, the Hawaiian Islands, Cuba and Panama.

The convention is regulated by the laws and rules of the Order, and is under the direction of the supreme officers, but local Knights acting through the Montreal Chapter, and with the assistance of the State Council of the Province of Quebec, have decided to prepare a programme of entertainment for their visiting brothers and ladies, which will cover the entire period of the convention. Committees are already at work, and the first event to be announced is a complimentary dinner to be tendered to the supreme officers and directors on the eve of the convention, Monday, August 6.

The officers who must seek re-election this year or be replaced are:—James A. Flaherty, Supreme Knight, Philadelphia; Martin H. Carmody, Deputy Supreme Knight, Grand Rapids, Mich.; William McGinley, Supreme Secretary, New Haven, Conn.; Dan J. Callahan,, Supreme Treasurer, Washington, D.C.; E. W. Byckley, Supreme Physician, St. Paul, Minn.; Rev. P. J. McGivney, Supreme Chaplain, Bridgeport, Conn.; David F. Supple, Supreme Warden, San Francisco, Cal. The directors whose term of office expires are James J. McGraw, Telsa, Okla.; William F. Fox, Indianapolis, Ind.,; Joseph F. Mayers, Carroll, Iowa.; Frank J. Lonergan, Portland, Ore.; and Edward Houlihan, of Chicago, Ill.

Joseph A. Mercier, K.C., of Montreal, is a former member of the board of directors, and the Canadian representative at present is George H. Boivin, M.P., of Granby, Que., who also represents the County of Shefford in the House of Commons. L. G. Jordain, of Three Rivers, is the present State Deputy for the Province of Quebec; Rev. Charles Beaudin is State Chaplain; and A. Gardner, of Montreal, is State Warden.

The membership of this province will be represented at the deliberations of the supreme body by ten duly elected delegates. Their names have not yet been officially announced.

The S. S. Kriton discharged her salt cargo at Port Union with quick despatch and sailed from there yesterday at noon.

Thirty-Seven Crews Entered for Annual Regatta Last Nigth

ENTRIES WILL CLOSE MONDAY EVENING.

At last night's meeting of the Regatta Committee, presided over by President Hiscock, a large amount of business was transacted, and everything is looking promising for a very successful regatta. Mr. J. P. Crotty, on behalf of the luncheon committee, reported that arrangements had been made with Mrs. F. Willar, Quidi Vidi Road, to cater for the committee, who will assemble at her home for luncheon.

The Secretary read letters from Hon. Eli Dawe, and Mr. H. W. LeMessurier, C.M.G., thanking the committee for appointing them to the position of judges, but regretting that they were unable to be present, the former owing to failing health, and the latter, because he is going out of town.

Mr. Ern Churchill, who offered to donate a cup for a special race, but found that the rules do not allow of same, forwarded a donation of $25.00 which was placed to the credit of the general fund.

Treasurer Jeans reported that to date there was a shortage of funds, and it was hoped that the collectors would put on an extra spurt during the remaining few days.

Messrs J. R. Bennett and W. J. Martin were unanimously appointed judges in place of the retiring members.

The President announced that he had interviewed the Inspector-General on the matter of traffic regulations, and he is giving the matter his special attention, and arrangements will be similar to those of last year.

The War Veterans' race was stricken off the program, as only one crew entered, and no other crews were practicing. The matter of arranging a program was then discussed, and resulted in the following order of races:

1. Amateurs
2. Tradesmen
3. Junior Football
4. Juveniles
5. Mercantile
6. Intermediate Interval
7. Fishermen
8. Truckmen
9. Laborers
10. Factories
11. Senior Football
12. Intermediate Fishermen
13. Championship.

It was decided that the stakes and buoys will be drawn on Monday night, and entries will be made at 9 p.m. All crews are asked to have their coxwain or representative present. His Excellency the Governor has very kindly presented a beautiful silver cup to the crew making the best time for the day. His Excellency's gift is highly appreciated by the committee.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

Statistics Show Slim Men Have Best Hope of Life

NEW YORK, July 28.—Thirty is the magical age in the health development of the ordinary person's life. At thirty he is supposed more nearly to approach the normal. Under thirty he may well weigh a number of pounds above the average called for in the standard height, weight and age tables, but after thirty the longest life span prevails among those whose weights are uniformly below the average, according to figures compiled by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, of this city, and given out by the American Child Health Association.

The association asks everyone to keep track of his or her weight, and to remedy any excess by diet and right living.

In a statement accompanying the figures Dr. Louis T. Dublin, of the insurance company, who compiled them, says:

"After thirty, people who weigh less than the average have a better chance for long life, the records of the insurance companies show. After this age it it is a decided advantage to be slight and a serious handicap to gain materially in weight; provided, of course, that the light weight is not the result of a sudden loss in weight which may be the result of organic disease."

"But the weight tables posted on public scales," he continues, "should not be taken too literally. Young persons may well weigh a number of pounds above the average called for by the tables. An excess of ten pounds is associated with the most favorable conditions among people between twenty and twenty-five years old.

"The public should realize these facts and accommodate their habits of diet and exercise to them. In America we eat too much and too well. The oriental coolie and the European peasant do an enormous amount of physical work on a meagre diet. No one advocates a return to primitive conditions or to lower standards of living, but it would be well for us to keep in mind the exact requirements of the adult body. We should recognize that when we have grown up we no longer need food for growth, and that for the replacement of burned up tissues we need only about 2,500 calories a day. This is equivalent to two very light meals and one hearty meal a day. Let me illustrate with a menu for an entire day for an active adult which will contain the required 2,500 calories. For breakfast he may have a small average serving of cooked fruit or an apple or an orange, a serving of cereal, a slice of bread or on emuffin or roll with butter, a cup of coffee with sugar and cream. This will contain about 600 calories. The luncheon may consist of a salad, bread and butter, a choice of coffee, tea, or cocoa, with sugar and cream and a dessert. This will account for 650 calories. The important meal of the day, or dinner may consist of a soup, an average serving of meat, potato, two green vegetables, bread and butter and a dessert. If average portions are served, a total of about 1,200 calories will be included. This would make the total for the day approximately 2,500 calories.

"If more people checked their diet to the reasonable limits of their body requirements, there would be a great improvement in the general health of the nation."

Marks Outpour in One Vast Shower

Seventeen Thousand Million Marks Every Hour for Week.

BERLIN, July 17.—Forty-one German printing plants, working day and night, disgorged 17,563,819,142 marks worth of fresh paper money every hour during the first week in July, according to figures available yesterday. The total paper currency circulation in July 7 was 20,241,782,966,000 marks, an increase of 2,950,721,616,000 over June 30. The aluminum coinage in circulation in the same period from 1,000,000,000 marks to 26,200,000,000.

The printers are working three shifts covering the entire twenty-fours every day in the week. It is unofficially stated that no note under the face value of 1,000 marks will be printed in the future, as it costs more than the note itself actually is worth to print any of the smaller denominations. The production of a 100 mark note costs many times its face value, and a 500 mark note is worth no more than the paper used.

All the notes now are being printed from type in order to increase the output of the presses. The federal printing plant alone is able thus to issue 14,400,000 different notes daily, while only one-tenth of this quantity would be possible if copper plates were used. Furthermore it takes six months to prepare one copper plate. Even the new million mark notes which are to be issued shortly will be printed from type.

According to Montag Morgen, a new Berlin weekly, a publishing house which is one of the plants of Hugo Stinnes has a monopoly on the printing of currency under the control of the Reichsbank. This firm sublets contracts to some thirty other printers.

Aside from the unusual increase in paper and aluminum money circulation, there is an increase of 3,508,029,156,000 in discounted treasury bills, which on July 7 totalled nearly twenty-two trillion marks. The Reichsbank gold deposits now total 136,032,000 marks.

Louvain 'Varsity Rising from Ashes

EDIFICE DESTROYED BY GERMANS NEARINGS COMPLETION—WING BLESSED.

LOUVAIN, Belgium, July 17.—Louvain University, world famous treasure house of art and learning, destroyed by the Germans early in the Belgian invasion, is rapidly rising from its ashes. To-day, less than two years after the laying of the corner stone, Cardinal Mercier, primate of Belgium, blessed the completed first wing of the restored library.

The finished wing, dedicated today, includes the provisional reading room and administration room. These finished buildings approximate a quarter of those projected under the plans, which call for the expenditure of $1,000,000, half of which already has been raised.

The ceremony took place in the presence of Crown Prince Leopold who placed the first book on the shelves—a volume containing a list of the Louvain students, who died in the war.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and chairman of a United States committee, which has raised a large sum for the restoration fund, delivered an address.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Charles Faulkner of River, N.S., caught recently two monster lobsters, one weighing fifteen and one half pounds, the other weighing twelve pounds. This breaks the record in lobster for Maritime Provinces.

Lunenburg fishermen report dogfish as most plentiful this season. Dogfish teem in Newfoundland waters this year and northern men say they were never more abundant. This is a fish which is not utilised in Newfoundland; but are thrown overboard as soon as they can be taken off the hook, a difficult and tormenting job usually.

The capture of a sturgeon, weighing 220 pounds, is reported from the St. Lawrence fishery grounds. This is heaviest sturgeon ever landed in that vicinity.

Germany ingenuity is displayed by their putting on the market an imitation salmon, which is made from any suitable fish available, which is sliced, seasoned with oil and treated with dye to impart the colour.

Hon. Chas. Hughes, American Secretary of State, stated in a letter to a Massachussetts Congressman, that in 1920 there was shipped from the Maritime Provinces of Canada to the U.S.A., fish valued at $9,075,457. Under the old Tariff the duty was only $15,842. Under the Fordney Tariff (now effective) it would have been $933,887. Thus is the Canadian fish trade affected by the American protective laws.

Aunt Jane Writes About the Good Old Days of Twenty-One Years Ago

Dear Mr. Editor.

Jim was almost tickled to death when he read my letter about his trip to Port Union, and he sez that he hopes the Governor read it, for he would be pleased to know that Jim enjoyed his visit so much.

Well, sir, the other night when Jim and the boys were having a chat in the kitchen some of the old coveys got talking about old times and some of the young fellows got asking about prices of provisions and fish when up gets Jim and sez he to the crowd "Why don't you make sure of what your talking about; it's no use saying that fish was worth twice as much as flour twenty years ago when it wasn't." Then he turns up an old book and found a letter from a St. John's firm giving prices of provisions and fish in 1902, and then he hauls out his account for 1903, and then Jim started talking and naming prices. Well the boys all listened to him, and seemed to look up to him for advice, and sitting among the crowd he looked like the picture we have of Mr. Coaker (or Sir William I mean) talking to the fishermen of Tilting when he was there in 1913.

After the boys left I asked Jim to let me see his book, and I think your readers will be interested if I give them some of the prices charged for goods and some of the prices paid for fish.

Twenty one years ago that year Jim was charged:

$5.00 a barrel for No. 1 flour.
$4.40 a barrel for 2nd grade flour.
$3.80 a bag for bread.
46c. gallon for molasses.
51c. for tobacco.
25c. gal. for oil.
13½c. for butter a pound.
35c. for No. 1 tea a pound.
7½c. pound for sugar.
And cheap tea at 16c. pound.

He got $4.00 a qtl. for Large Merchantable; $3.60 a qtl. for Small Merchantable; $3.60 and $3.20 for Maderia fish, and $2.00 for his West India.

To look back twenty years seems only a short time, but to look ahead the young boys and girls think twenty years is a lifetime.

Some of the babies of 21 years ago have been married since, and some of them have babies of their own. If I had my time over again I would eep in a book a note of what happens each year, so as to be able to tell folks in forty years time all about the times now and what happened in 1923. It's not worth my while starting now, but I would like every boy and girl to keep a note of things as they will find such a book useful later on.

Lobsters twenty years ago were worth only $11.00 a case, but codliver oil was worth one dollar and fifty cents a gallon. Common oil was not worth more than $70.00 a tun.

The funniest part of the whole thing is to hear people always complaining. When fish was $4.00 and flour was $5.00 everyone was dissatisfied; and during the war when flour was $12.00 and fish was $15.00 people complained, and now people are complaining. If half the people who are always complaining would stop their foolishness and get busy, they would find they would do their work better and make more money, and make more people happy.

What's the use of looking for trouble all the time' it's bad enough, I am sure, but it could be a lot worse. and if we all do our best it can be a lot better.

During the war I heard people say the Germans would take Newfoundland, and we would wake up some day and find we were Germans; and years ago we were told we would go to sleep one night as Newfoundlanders, and wake up in the morning Canadians. While the war was on some people said we'd starve before the winter was out, and we didn't starve so what's the use of complaining.

When some one told Jim that he'd wake up some morning and find he was a German "That's fine, for if I'm a German I won't understand English so Jane won't be able to scold me any more." It's funny how Jim likes to make out that I'm an awful woman with the tongue, but at the same time he thinks as much of me as he did when the Minister asked him that important question. Will ye have this woman for your wife, and Jim sed, sure, that's what I came here for. Talking about a scolding wife I think I'm alright, as I let Jim have the kitchen for himself and his friends twice a week, but since the Union was started, I always stay in the kitchen when they start discussing Union matters, for I know more about the Union than the whole bunch of them put together, and Jim sez so.

Hoping that everything is going well with you in St. John's and promising to write you again some day I must close with best wishes.

AUNT JANE.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

Dr. Hendrick William Van Loon, the famous Dutch-American historian and author, who wrote, a couple of years ago, "The Story of Mankind," and some years ago "The Rise of the Dutch People," is engaged now on a most novel and interesting task.

He is re-writing the Bible.

* * * *

In the cool and quiet of Cambridge University in England he is writing his book. He has reduced the Bible's 1,250,000 words to 120,000. His purpose in so reducing the Bible, he says, is the purpose also of re-writing the Bible. It is to make it more easily read by ordinary people. He has, he says, for that reason left out the various tables of gencalogy, which tell that so and so "begat" so and so, and he in turn "begat" somebody else, and on for nearly a page at a time like that. Similarly, Dr. Van Loon has omitted many of the Psalms and the Prophets and the Epistles, only writing short pieces about them, urging people to go and read the originals.

* * * *

"I've written for the chambermaid and the waiter, for the postman and the engineer," he says, "for all kinds of people who fight shy of the Bible because it is the Bible, but who like a good story as well as anybody else."

Here is his version of the Crucifixion:

* * * *

"When the last nail had been driven in, the soldiers sat down to gamble. In a wide circle the people stood and looked. Some of them were merely curious; others were former pupils. They had ventured back into the town to be with their Master in the last moment. There were a few women.

"It was growing dark rapidly.

"On the cross Jesus was softly murmuring words which few could understand. A kindly Roman soldier had given him a narcotic to deaden the pain of His lascerated hands and feet.

"By a last and supreme effort He regained consciousness and uttered a prayer. He asked that His enemies be forgiven for what they had done to him.

"Then he whispered, 'It is all over.'"

"And he died."

* * * *

Whether you like the idea of the Bible being re-written, or not, you will most certainly find his "Story of Mankind" intensely interesting if you read it. Published in the same year as H. G. Wells' "Outline of History," it was rather eclipsed by the heavier work. Had not Wells' book appeared when it did, Van Loon's book should have been hailed as perhaps the greatest work in a decade.

In "The Story of Mankind" it isn't as if he had told us anything new in history. What he tells (so far as facts are concerned) you will get by reading any one of a thousand, or ten thousand histories.

The great value of his work is the perspective from which he views the entire history of the race. That is to say, his judgment of the relative importance of events and things.

* * * *

If you go to the French of, let us say, the 15th or 16th century, you will find many things of apparent importance. So, also, if you go to England, or Italy in the same year. Or in any other year. Great things have happened in all countries for thousands of years back: great wars, battles, kings and rulers, rise and fall of nations, of armies, of fleets; famines, pestilences, earthquakes; great things happened in each age in each country.

What Van Loon has done is simply to stand on a great pinacle and look down on the history of the world from the beginning. Getting the long-shot view of it, he could see how important each event or thing was when compared against the general background of all other events and things. So, therefore, he was able to give to each thing the correct amount of space that its relative or comparative importance demanded.

* * * * *

A historian writing a history of the world from England's standpoint would be sure to make everything, big or small, that England ever did, stand out prominently in his book. So would a Frenchman of France; or any other man writing from the viewpoint of his own country.

Van Loon cast off all national and racial affiliations and as a Man wrote the history of Men.

HUSBAND AND WIFE BOTH TO BE HANGED

CHICAGO, July 16 — (Associated Press)—Mrs. Sabelle Nitti-Crudelle and her husband, Peter Crudelle, were sentenced to be hanged October 12 by Judge Joseph David Saturday. They were convicted a few days ago of the murder of Frank Nitti, Mrs. Crudelle's first husband, by beating him to death with a hammer while he slept.

As the condemned woman was led from the courtroom, she shrieked "they choke me," and attempted to hurl herself down an elevator shaft.

BOSTON, July 25—(Canadian Press)—Whistling stops stuttering, according to Dr. Walter B. Swift, who has opened a free clinic for speech correction at the Wentworth institute. He says the peculiar action of the mouth muscles during whistling aids in the correction of vocal impediments.

Will drive by and by your stuttering away."

says Dr. Swift, substituting for M. Coue. Slow and steady grinding out of words beginning with "g," "gl" and "cl" will help, too, he asserts.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

One encounters many phases of the employment question, and some of them would be laughable if they were not so disgusting. For example there was the spectacle yesterday of five abled bodied young men charged in court with forcibly taking their passage on an express from Badger to St. John's to get away from work.

Of course, they were represented by lawyers, and naturally the lawyers put the position of their clients before the court in heart-searching terms. The men could not pay their passages, they said, because they were destitute. But to the question, "if they are destitute, why did they run away from work?" the only answer was that there were misquitoes about.

* * *

Now, to use the famous words of Evans, these are times to try men's souls. Hundreds are seeking for work of any description, and on their success in obtaining work depends the comfort of their wives and children. In the majority of cases work is not easily got, and for that reason when the average red-blooded man gets a job he simply freezes on to it.

What then of the young man in the prime of life who is driven off his job by the misquitoes? Is he an Empire builder? Is he a man on whom a country can depend? Is he worth talking about or talking for?—He's not.

One of the city dailies recently devoted considerable editorial space to a question of vital importance. It was that of finding a means to protect unfortunate women against themselves: to put them back in their right sphere, even after they had fallen therefrom.

This is a very commendable object, but it strikes me as beginning at the tail end of the job. While we have young girls aged from 12 to 16 years running wild about the streets at all hours in the night, it would seem that we might be using our efforts to better effect if we began our reform work with them. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure.

Some ladies in the city a year or two ago agitated for a Delinquent Children's Act. They got it, and they also secured the appointment of a probation officer. The ladies have now dropped out and the probation officer has so much to do looking after delinquent husbands that he has no time to give to delinquent children.

Conditions in this City today, so far as the children are concerned, are appalling. Parents seem to have no control over them or no desire to exercise control, and while we discuss elaborate and ridiculous plans for this, that and the other thing, there are scores youngsters going to hte bad right under our eyes. Surely this can be remedied to some extent.

Quite a furore was raised in connection with boy survey a few months ago, and the city expected wonderful thines to result, but in my opinion "girl survey" is a matter that requires a great deal more attention.

CRYING FOR WIFE

Man Lost Both Legs When He Fell From His Train.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 19.—Shot to death in her honeymoon cottage at Port Perry near Braddock, the nude body of Mrs. Julia Coyne, young bride, was found concealed under bedclothing yesterday.

The discovery was made by John Conroy, her father, after repeated efforts to locate her and inform her that her husband lost both legs in a railroad accident during the night.

The girl had been dead twelve hours when the body was found. Death was caused by a bullet wound through the left temple, according to police.

A 38 calibre revolver, the chambers of which were empty, was found in a holster slip under her head. It was identified as belonging to Patrick Coyne, her husband. Inspection of Coyne's coat, hanging in a cupboard by a detective led to the discovery of four loaded shells and two empty ones. Two other empty shells were found in a fire grate in the room.

VERGE OF DEATH

Coyne, a brakeman, is on the verge of death in hospital following of his legs as a result of falling from a train of care. Hospital attaches say Coyne apparently knows nothing of the murder of his beautiful five months bride, and he keeps crying for his wife to come to him.

The room in which Mrs. Coyne was murdered was in a state of disorder when police took charge of the case. Bloodstained clothing was scattered about the room. A railroader's lantern, a small bottle of "moonshine" and a box of shells were found in bedroom.

A bloody fingerprint was found on the mantle over the base of an oil lamp, police said.

Coyne recovered consciousness in the afternoon, and detectives were permitted to question him. In his weakened condition Coyne was unable to explain much about his accident.

He said he left the cottage at 2 p.m. Tuesday. His wife was in bed with only a night dress on. Coyne said, explaining she generally took a nap in the afternoon.

During the questioning Coyne excitedly demanded whether anything was wrong with his wife, and this led detectives to believe that he knows nothing of the murder.

The detectives were then taken away by the hospital physicians who declared further questioning at this time would be dangerous.

All ranks are on the jump now making preparations for camp next week. tSart will be made August second (next Thursday) by motor transport for the "old camp grounds" which has sacred memories to all of the Brigade by reason of its historic associations of thirty years. The lads who have camped there and "passed on," some going into distant lands and others out on the last "great adventure" would probably make up a roll call of five thousand strong. May the high ideals and Brigade traditions of the past be always maintained in the camps of the future!

Grand Falls Company are despatching their first unit of troops for the camp front on August first, detraining at Topsail under command of apCtain W. J. Short. Bay Roberts are despatching their "unit of troops" on August second and will also detrain at Topsail. About 150 lads will have to be fed three good meals a day, besides an extra "mug-up" so the "Food controllers," cooks and Camp Commandant will have their various responsibilities. The health of the Camp will be in charge of Captain Fred Burden, M.D., Medical Officer. Twenty-two motor car owners have volunteered their services as "Army transporters" and the lads will leave the Armoury at ten o'clock and march to the junction of Cornwall Road., near "Albany," where they will be taken on to their destination by the aforesaid motor cars. All lads must have their kit bags at the Armoury at a special Camp parade on Tuesday, July 31st. Boys, it is up to you to make this the biggest and best C. L. B. camp in history and get your hair cut.

The Rev. H. Kirby, Chaplain and O. C., of Lamaline detachment has applied for their enrollment certificate from Headquarters.

Headquarters congratulates the Rev. H. L. Pike, Captain and Chaplain of C. Company and Lieut. W. Sheppard of Wabana on their recent marriages. All ranks wish them and their brides good luck. Q.

OBITUARY

MRS. ALPHONSO ABBOTT.

It has pleased Almighty God to call from our midst one of our most beloved and respected citizens in the person of Mrs. Emel Abbott, beloved wife of Alphonso Abbott late of Pennywell Road, who passed peacefully away at her home on Sunday night fortified by the rites of the Holy Catholic Church. Truly one can say in the midst of life we are in death, as the deceased had been in good health up to Wednesday when she was stricken suddenly ill. The best medical skill was procured and the constant care of a loving husband and friends but, all to no avail for He who doeth all things for the best, had willed otherwise and she passed to the great beyond; there to reap the reward she so justly merited. Being possessed of a highly cultured mind and a gentle and loving disposition especially in her home where she will be so sadly missed. The veneration in which she was held was evinced by the large concourse of friends who came to pay their last respects to one who was loved so well.

The deceased lady was the daughter of the late James and Lucy Clancey of Placentia.

She leaves to mourn her loss two brothers and four sisters also a devoted husband and four dear little children who will miss her constant care and attendance more than any one, as her home was the brightest spot on earth for her.

To the sorrowing husband and family the writer extends sincere sympathy. May she rest in Peace.

A FRIEND.

CLARENCE QUINTON.

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir.—Will you kindly grant me a short space in your paper, to record the death of Clarence Quinton, of Red Cliff, B. Bay., who passed to the Great Beyond, July 16th, at the youthful age of 21 years, Deceased left his home in August, 1922 for Boston, where he met with good success and made many friends.

In the early part of May, he contracted measles, which developed into paralysis. Skilled physicians were called in, but little could be done for his recovery. He then decided to return home and spend his last hours with his parents.

Deceased was loved by all who knew him. To the bereaved parents, brothers and sister, the sympathy of the whole community goes forth.

"Florence Swyers" Made Good Run

The schooner "Florence Swyers," which arrived in port yesterday morning with a cargo of salt to A. E. Hackman, Company, Limited, made a very good rouid trip. Going across with a cargo of codfish the ship reached Oporto in 18 days. At Oporto a delay of twenty-three days was experienced before the ship could get away but the return voyage was also made in 18 days.

Very good weather was experienced all across but last week head winds were encountered which caused a slight delay.

Captain Pine reports speaking to the schooner R. H. Whitman, which left Oporto 2 days before him. The Whitman is commanded by Captain Ray Shave and is on the way to Burin and reports all well on board.

BRITAIN'S BURDEN

(Daily Mail)

Whether we shall ever rival the motor wealth of America in proportion to population is doubtful and unimportant. Other countries, including Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, are also probably ahead of us in this respect, and are likely to be. There are several reasons. Those countries of big distances need cars more than we do in this well railroaded land. Another is that the "democratic" car has not reached us perceptibly. Worse still, the standard of wealth that denotes the car-keeping citizen is not compatible with the present cost of living and taxation here. The good money with which we ought to buy motor-cars is seized untimely by the tax collector.

AVIATION IN CANADA

(Christian Science Monitor)

Canada is a particularly favorable field for the development of civil aviation. As a method of transportation and observation over the vast territories to the north of the railroads flying is fast, reliable and easy. As an alternative to the canoe, dog and pack train, it reduces the time from weeks to hours, in some instances.

The schooners Village Leaf and J. D. Hazen have sailed from Aquathuna for Sydney with mine, timber and rail way ties on board.

The schooner A. H. Whiteman has arrived at Burin from Oporto with salt to W. T. Hollett.

Proposal To Hold Wheat Off Market

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The American Farm Bureau Federation intends to press hard for the adoption of its plan to have 200,000,000 bushels of wheat withdrawn from the market this year and financed through the new intermediate credit banks, which were authorized in the last session of Congress.

This is the plan which the President has been urged by the federation to recommend and which has been urged on the Secretary of Agriculture. It is contended that the 200,000,000 bushels will be the surplus this year and if it is not held off the market, wheat prices, already low, will be demoralized, with great loss to the farmers. On the other hand, it is denied the plan contemplates indirect government subsidizing of wheat or subsidy for the farmer at the expense of the consumer.

Gray Silver, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, holds that there is no other way to protect the interests of the wheat grower and that unless this method is followed, there will be almost irresistible demand for the fixing of the price of wheat by the government. Mr. Silver points out that the farmers will need no action by Congress, by President Harding or the Department of Agriculture to carry out the plan. He says the farmers are simply proposing to do what the law entitles them to do and to use the credit machinery which has already been provided for their benefit.

Under the law, he points out, the farmers can obtain credits up to 75 per cent. of value, through the intermediate credit banks, on wheat and other agricultural products. As he views it, it is now up to the government to go ahead and carry out the intent of Congress when it enacted last session the new credits legislation.

As Mr. Silver explains, the Farm Bureau Federation proposal, the farmer would sell his grain to his co-operative marketing association, the association would take a receipt for the grain but it would be stored in the farmer's granary, the association would then take the receipts and borrow from the intermediate credits bank on the strength of them. The proceeds of the plan would be distributed to members of the co-operative association in proportion to wheat furnished. With this arrangement made, the wheat would be marketed gradually, when prices were favorable, and not dumped on the market at once.

Biggest Tourist Traffic For Years

This season has witnessed what is probably the biggest inward tourist traffic for some time and all secured very fine catches of salmon which are very plentiful, especially in Little and Codroy Rivers. At present there are several parties on the different rivers, and they report fine prospects.

The weather for the past few months has not been very favorable to the growth of crops and potatoes and hay are particularly backward, and indications are that the output this year will not be up to the ordinary standard.

So far there are not many parties fishing north, but it is reported that there is a large quantity of grilse and trout in the streams.

Owing to the considerable increase in telegraph traffic over their lines the Reid Newfoundland Company does not receive any regular reports of the salmon fishery, but, as stated above, all the parties have done, and are doing well.

Inter-Town Football

All arrangements have been finalized for the visit of the city footballers to Grand Falls, and the party will leave here by special car on Sunday, Aug. 19th and will return to the city on the 25th.

All who contemplate making the trip are asked to get in touch with Mr. R. E. Innes, who is in charge. A series of three games will be played at the paper town, and many fans are taking in the trip.

Holyrood Garden Party

The Annual Garden Party at Holyrood takes place this year on August 12th. and Rev. Fr. Finn, assisted by an energetic committee of ladies and gentlemen is already hard at work on the preparations for the feta which each year gains greater popularity. The Holyrood Garden Party is now an institution and it is believed will this year easily take first place amongst all out-of-town events in point of popularity. An excursion train will go out from the City on the afternoon of the 12th. and it is understood there will also be a train from the Carbonear end.

NEW CABINET INSTALLED

Warren Ministry was Sworn in Saturday and Members Assumed New Duties This Morning

On Saturday afternoon the Advocate was able to announce that Hon. W. R. Warren had completed the formation of the new Cabinet, but was unable to make public its personnel for the reason the names had not been then submitted to His Excellency the Governor.

At six p.m. of Saturday, the names were submitted to His Excellency and received his approval, whereupon they were sworn in, and will immediately take over the Government and departmental offices. The new Ministry is as follows:

Hon. W. R. Warren, Prime Minister and Minister of Justice.

Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Colonial Secretary.

Hon. Dr. Barnes, Minister of Education.

Hon. W. H. Cave, Minister of Finance & Customs.

Hon. J. F. Downey, Minister of Agriculture and Mines.

Hon. M. E. Hawco, Minister of Posts and &Telegraphs.

Hon. Sir W. F. Coaker, without portfolio.

Hon. George Shea, without portfolio.

Hon. Sir M. G. Winter, without portfolio.

Hon. S. J. Foote, without portfolio.

The above form the Executive Council.

A. W. Piccott, Esq., Minister of Public Works.

G. F. A. Grimes, Esq., Minister of Marine & Fisheries.

The outstanding changes of this administration is the presence in the Executive of Sir Wm. Coaker, K.B.E., and Hons. J. F. Downey and M. E. Hawco, the two latter members of the Assembly for St. George's and Harbor Main, having replaced Dr. Campbell and Capt. Bonia in the Departments of Agriculture and Mines and of Posts and Telegraphs, respectively.

Mr. Geo. Grimes, M.H.A. for Fogo District, is Minister of Marine and Fisheries in succession to Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Colonial Secretary, which office had been previously filled by him during the years from 1917 to 1919.

It will thus be seen that all departmental heads of the Warren Government hold seats in the Assembly. As a consequence, there will be necessitated three bye-elections, viz., in St. George's, in Harbor Main and Fogo Districts.

We feel that Hon. W. R. Warren, Prime Minister, should be congratulated on the formation of such a representative ministry. He has achieved his objective, as expressed by him in the House, of forming an administration of strength and stability, and one in which the country will have confidence.

Before the administration is a hard and difficult future, bristling with many problems; but we think that the Warren administration will meet them and overcome them.

BELGO-FRANCE REPLY IS IN AGREEMENT ON MAIN POINTS

PARIS, July 29—The text of the Belgian reply to the British communication, dealing with Reparations was received at Quay Dorsay this morning, and the French and Belgian replies will be delivered to the British foreign office to-morrow. Secrecy, on which much has been insisted, has not prevented the Brussels and Paris newspapers of serious thought, from assuring their readers that French and Belgian replies, will be found to be in agreement in the principle or leading points, that there will be no negotiations with Germany before abandonment of Germany's passive resistance, that the evacuation of the Ruhr will be subordinate to sufficient payment by Germany, and settlement of differences regarding the method of payment of Reparations which already has been proposed by Belgium to the Allies.

DISASTROUS FIRE

BOSTON, July 29—Two stablemen and eighty-two horses were killled in a fire which swept through Landers' Broadway stables, in south end of Boston late Saturday. The damage is placed at seventy thousand dollars.

LONDON STRIKE CONTINUES

LONDON, July 27—The strike of dock workers in London continues, but the men at Hull, by a decisive vote, decided to resume work to-morrow.

WAS HOAX

BERLIN, July 29—The anti- Fascisti Day with which the German Communists had threatened to overthrow the Cuno Government, and incidentally to wipe out Bourgeoise revealed itself as a Bolshevik hoax of the familiar type, notwithstanding the fact that it proved to be one of the chief elements of agravation in the perturbed economic and policital situation, during the past week.

LABOR MEMBERS WILL BE REINSTATED

LONDON, July 30—Premier Baldwin intends before the adjournment of parliament, to submit a motion which would have the effect of cancelling the suspension of the four members of the labor party who were suspended from the House of Commons a month ago and who since have declined to apologize to the speaker.

The premier would permit them to return to their seats after an interval without apologizing.

Hon. W. H. Cave, Minister of Finance and Customs: Returned for Bay de Verde District 1919, again in bye-election of 1920, and in election of May last. Was Minister of Shipping from 1920 to 1923. And Minister of Finance and Customs in Squires Cabinet which porfolio he now retains.

Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C., Prime Minister and Minister of Justice.

Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Colonial Secretary: Returned for the District of Fogo 1913, for Trinity District in 1919 and again in the 1923 election. Was Colonial Secretary in National Government 1917-19, Minister Posts & Telegraphs 1919-1923, Minister of Marine & Fisheries in Cabinet just re. signed.

TROOPS ARE WITHDRAWING FROM MINES

SYDNEY, July 29—Although the local authorities profess ignorance of any general order for the military evacuation of the Island, several hundreds of troops have started for the mainland in special trains during the past twenty-four hours. The coal strike is at an end, and the mills will be working within a day or two, and practically all the miners are back on their old jobs. Numerous complaints of discrimination against those who were active in the strike, are heard from different points and these are being investigated as rapidly as possible, by the United Mine Workers Provisional Executive. In seventy-six cases the men were taken back to work on the recommendation of Provisional President Barrett. The Steel strike is dragging on, although the Company intimates that it now has practically all the men it requires for the operation of its plant. John MacLeod, known locally as Jack Popper to distinguish him from the other Johns of the same clan, was arrested at Glace Bay Saturday on a charge of seditious utterances. The exact terms of the charge were not stated.

The Jean Brandnald Duff, cleared for Harbor Grace Saturday for Glasgow with seal oil and seal skins shipped by Murray and Crawford.

Hon. Sir William F. Coaker, K. B. E., Minister without Portfolio.

TWENTY-FOUR WERE KILLED BY COLLISION

CHICAGO, July 30—Twenty-four persons were reported killed yesterday in six railroad crossing tragedies, each being a collision between train and car.

In North Carolina, a car was totally demolished, one being killed and one injured.

A Pennslyvania train struck two cars within as many hours. At Highland, Illinois, it struck a car, killing four occupants, and then, attempting to make up for lost time, struck a second car in Indiana, killing nine people outright.

One man was killed in Vermont and two injured at Iron Mountain, Mo. A car bringing a family home from Sunday School was struck and the family, numbering four, were wiped out.

In each case it was apparent that the drivers were attempting to beat the train over the crossing.

2500 RELEASED

MOSCOW, July 30—Twenty-five hundred prisoners have been released from Moscow prisons during this month, due to the efforts of a special commission appointed to investigate the severe sentences of Moscow courts, and the overcrowding of prisons.

Changes

"I think I'll leave you now, Judy. These things want thinking over," he said, standing almost humbly, and bareheaded before her. "We'll meet again now that you have come back to Stair."

"Oh, don't go yet!" said Judy cheerfully. "Let's talk about things. I'm dying for Ayr news! Tell me all about Aunt Isabel and Lucy, and Meg Sillars, and the Sandersons. Eddie has written now and again, but now that she is getting into a family, she seems to have less and less time."

But Peter refused to be beguiled.

"I can't get over it," he said in a voice of anguish such as Judy had never before heard from her cousin's lips.

"You can't get over what?"

"The fact that you don't bear any malice, apparently; that you can speak to me in the old friendly way! I didn't deserve it, Judy. I've behaved like a cur—but don't think I've got off scot-free!"

"Nobody does," said Judy gravely. Nobody in the wide world! The price has always to be paid. It is only when it has to be paid over and over that one inclines to gamble. Oh, I am so sorry for Carlotta, Peter, and I'd lay down my life cheerfully, at this very moment, if by so doing I could bring Alan Back, and see them happy in Stair together!"

Judy had no intention of reproaching her cousin, but the words went home.

She picked herself up a trifls heavily.

"After all, I don't think I'll go over to The Lees to-day. You can give Aunt Isabel my love, and tell them I'll come and see them soon, or they can come to Stair if they like. They never had any quarrel, either with Alan or with Carlotta."

She paused, but when Peter han no comment to make, she went on again.

"I suppose you heard about Claud's wedding? It took place in Northamtonshire last week. That was what made us a week later than we intend ed getting here."

"I saw the announcement of the marriage, of course, and wondered what he was marrying on.

"He has twelve hundred a year from the Dublin appointment," said Judy proudly. I suppose you know that the girl Claud married used to live here? Her father was a minister in Ayr."

"Yes, I know that much," answered Peter. And Judy went on to tell him more about Claud, his present, and his probable future. But pretty soon she saw that his thoughts were wandering, and stopping short, she said she would be going home.

She felt rather sorry for Peter on the whole. He had such a forlorn look, and did not seem to have much in life worth living for. In Judy's nature there was no guile, and very little malice, and the experience of the last two years had given her a new kind of philosophy.

But it was a relief, when she got back to the precincts of Stair, to see the squat figure and kind, familiar face of Bobbie Sanderson getting off a bicycle at the terrace steps.

She ran forward, smiling, and when Bobbie got his gloves off, returned his warm hand-clasp with one equally warm and kind.

"I'm glad to see you, Bobbie! For yourself alone, first of all, then for Edie's sake, and finally because I want you to see Carlotta. She isn't well, Bobbie; and we must mend her here, at Stair, before Alan comes home."

"You have news of him, then?" said Bobbie, a trifle brusquely, for he oddly felt moved at the sight of Judith, gathering from various signs and symptoms that the past two years had tried her mettle more sharply than any of them knew.

"No news at all. But she thinks he is coming back, and she has come here to wait for him. I suppose, when a woman is married to a man—" Bobbie gave a great start. "Yes. They were married on the day he sailed, and they never told a living soul—not even me! I've only known it about six weeks, Bobbie! What I started out to say was, that when a woman is a man's wife I suppose she has intuitions about him. Anyway Carlotta says Alan isn't dead, and that he is coming back to Stair! What do you think?" she added, with a little pitiful droop in her lips. "I wrote you the full particulars after we came home from America, but it is very different discussing them face to face."

Now Bobbie Sanderson at the back of his mind, had no doubt whatever but that Alan had joined the great majority. He could not otherwise explain his complete silence and disappearance. But he could not look into Judy's face and tell her so.

"There's more in phychology than we are inclined to admit," he said guardedly. "And if Alan's wife thinks he is coming home—well, I think the rest of us had better suspend our judgement."

"She isn't well, Bobbie; and she's such a dear! The very best and dearest. And she deserves happiness for what she has done! She has slaved and toiled these two years back, and she's going to start slaving and toiling again as soon as she had had a month or two resting; all for the saving of Stair! And I'm to stop here now, for ever, if I like! Isn't it splendid? So you see what a high and mighty trust is going to be placed in you to build up and keep well the woman on whom so much depends!"

"I couldn't believe them when they told me at the station, yesterday, that you had arrived," said Bobbie, changing the subject, because Judy's graphic words moved him more than he cared to show. "You might have written."

"There wasn't time. And, anyway, did it matter? For if we were away a thousand years from Stair, we should come back to find you and Edie just the same! Say, Bobbie, I have just met Peter at the march dyke. Among the changes that are going, I believe the greatest has been in him!"

The man of whom they had talked was still out upon Brassie Hill, the prey of a thousand conflicting thoughts. He spent hours roaming there, in the sweet spring solitude and finally, out of the chaos of his thoughts, there rose the image of one strong desire. Shadowy and almost incoherent as first, before many hours were over, it had taken shape and had become the purpose of a life.

Between eight and nine o'clock that night, one of the reduced household at Stair was surprised when the front door bell rang, to find Peter on the step.

"I wish to see Mrs. Rankine, if you please. Tell her that it is Mr. Peter Garvock, and that the business is urgent."

"Yes, sir. Come in," said the woman, who was a stranger to the family history of Stair and The Lees, and was simply surprised that a caller should come so late on a Sunday evening to the house.

Carlotta was alone when the message was brought, and after reflecting for a momene, she rose and went downstairs without consulting Judy, as was her first impulse.

Judy was in the Pool, as it happened, alternately refreshing and harrowing her memory with old things and old dreams, and thus so remotely hidden that she did not hear the clang of the bell, nor the entrance of the visitor whom the maid had put into the little morning room.

Carlotta, in a sweeping gown of black velvet, with a turned-back collar of old lace, loked a perfect picture, but Peter's pulses did not stir at the sight of her. The fierce passion which had devastated his life, and the lives of others, had burned itself out, and left but an empty kernel behind.

Carlotta was completely mistress of herself and gave him a kindly greeting, but neither offered her hand nor did he.

"You are surprised, doubtless, at this late call," he began in his slowest, most gutteral and difficult voice. "But the matter is urgent. I have called to ask whether you will be so good as to give me the latest clues you have concerning your—husband," he said deliberately, tho undoubtedly he faltered on the name.

"We have no recent clues," she answered simply. "The only address we got when we went to New York, was that of a cattle ranch in Alberta, belonging to a man named Fordyce. But Alan never went there."

"But he went in that direction, I understood from Dr. Sanderson?" said Peter with painful eagerness.

"Oh, yes. We believe that he is somewhere in Western Canada, or, more likely still, in the Klondyke. He met a man on the boat going out, who asked him to go to the Yukon with him, and, I believe that is what he has done."

"That is all the information you can give me? Do you happen to know the name of that man?"

"Affery. He had an address at the Canadian Bank of Commerce in Dawson City. I have written there, but got no answer."

Peter took out his note-book, and made a note of all the names and addresses of which Carlotta had spoken.

"Why do you want them? I've told you it isn't any use writing. We have done everything in the writing and cabling line that it is possible to do, but without result."

Peter closed the book and replaced it in his pocket.

"I don't want to write. But I shall go, Mrs. Alan, and bring him back if he is alive. If he is dead—then I shall assure myself of the fact before I come back to Scotland, so that your mind—and mine—may be at rest."

Carlotta's face visibly paled.

"But why should you do that?" she asked unsteadily. "Do you know what you are undertaking? It is a frightful journey to the Yukon. It will take you six months—and then—will it be any use?"

"I have to make that journey. You have heard the word "atonement," Carlotta? Well, it is atonement I seek to make," said Peter, and passed from her astonished eyes out into the night.

She did not see him again, but in the middle of the week it was known in Ayr that Peter Garvock had left Scotland for America, and that the object of his journey was to find the lost Laird of Stair.

URGED TO PREACH ON WORLD PEACE

TORONTO, July 17 — (Canadian Press.)—Methodist ministers throughout the Dominion, Newfoundland and Bermuda are urged, in a circular issued yesterday by Dr. S. D. Chown, general superintendent, to preach on the subject "World Peace" on July 29. It says in part:

"The nations of Europe appear to be dancing a dance of death upon the very verge of a moral volcano, whose eruption may at any moment lay civilization in its ashes and us in our graves. Germany and Grance are holding the world in critical suspense. At any moment a continental calamity, beyond either measurement or control, mty result from bitter animosities—Russia and Turkey, as derelict nations, defy the conscience of Christendom and rip asunder the ligaments of modern civilization—between mankind and death stands nothing but the League of Nations, fortified by the conscience of Christian people.

"Atrocious as world conditions are, they are not so appealing as the nerveless apathy of multitudes of otherwise thoughtful people to the imperatives of human safety."

RUSSIAN TRADE INCREASES

MOSCOW, July 6 (AP)—Russia's foreign trade for the six months ended March 31 shows an increase over the preceding half year, according to official statistics. The value of the exports is placed at 47,831,000 gold rubles. More than 30 per cent. went to England.

Imports are valued at 110,359,000 gold rubles, and 4' per cent. came from England.

The Human Side of Immigration

NEW YORK, July 21—The human side of immigration must be considered along with its economic aspect, if the problem is to be solved, says a report published today by the National Industrial Conference Board on "The Immigration Problem in the United States." Far reaching changes in the government's immigration policy are recommended.

"It is clear," the report says, "that a wide, comprehensive and human national immigration policy cannot be based exclusively on the consideration of any immediate special or purely economic aspect of the problem, but must be developed out of broad, far sighted and scientifically-grounded views of national and international social and economic progress and human welfare."

The broad, after suggesting that inconsistencies arising from the way the present laws are handled should be avoided in the future, says that the state and labor departments fail to work in harmony on the immigration problem. No examination is held abroad to determine mental fitness, the selective function being in the hands of steamship companies, the report adds which undertake the work "to avoid heavy fines and not from any sense of public duty."

"Not enough care is taken to detect mental defectives in ports of entry," the report adds. "Facilities are crammed, and the new law has only added new difficulties."

Some of the theories which the three percent law was enacted were based on false fears, the report finds. The idea that all Europe was on its way to America in 1917 has proved incorrect.

There is an increasing tendency among immigrants to remain in this country, the report avers, and statistics are given to bear out the claim.

The government is blamed in the report for slow naturalization of tiens. There is a great need for increased personnel in the naturalization bureau and for a simpler and standardization has done anything to eliminate this need," the report adds.

Italy is shown to have the most serious emigration problem, but the government there is trying to find a way out.

In summarizing the limitation question, the report says that "the immigration problem is fundamentally so human a problem, and the existing knowledge regarding the inherent value and possibility of assimilation of foreign stocks is so scanty and controversial that the effectiveness of selection through the more or less accidental method of percentage limitation is seriously open to question."

AMERICANS GIVEN IMPORTANT WORK ON REPARATIONS

PARIS, July 25.—While the United States government has limited its activities in the reparations embroglio to an official observer, and, since the Versailles Treaty has watched the problem as it became more intricate day by day, there has been a little group of Aemricans here for the past four years who have taken anything but a minor part in the vast work of the reparation commission.

This unheralded little group constitutes the staff of accountants with the commission, and is headed by George P. Auld, formerly an officer of the United States navy, who holds the post of Accountant General. He is responsible directly to the commission for the completeness and accuracy of all financial records having to do with the receipt and disbursement of money and commodities handed over by Germany.

The position of Mr. Auld with the commission is entirely individual, as he has no connection with the United States or any other government. His staff of about 20 Americans comes under the same classification.

The task of the accountancy department is one of the most difficult of the commission's work. To strike its daily and monthly balances, it must deal with ships, livestock, abandoned war material, rolling-stock, coal and coke, dyestuffs, and a score of other commodities, as well as the actual cash payments of German gold marks. When the balance sheet has been tallied, it is necessary to render the totals in marks, pounds, francs, lires and dollars. The commodity valuations have been made in nearly all the currencies of Europe, as well as in dollars.

When currency payments are made, they are immediately converted to gold through the dollar rate, with roughly four marks equalling one dollar. The accountancy department receives the New York exchange rate for 20 or 25 countries by cable each day, and with these rates as a basis, daily, weekly and monthly parities between the various currencies are established. At the end of each month a complete report is made, showing the amount Germany has paid to date, and how it has been distributed among the Allies.

Much of this work is done by the American staff. One computes the value of coal from the Ruhr; another determines the worth of live-stock in francs, dollars and pounds; another reduces locomotives to marks and then to lires, while another one quotes ducks, geese and chickens in dollars, guilders and crowns.

At the end of 1922, the accountancy department under Mr. Auld had whipped the miles of figures into an intelligible report, showing that Germany had turned over to the Allies a grand total of $1,982,000,000. Of this sum $454,000,000 was in cash; $889,000,000 in commodities, and $639,000,000 in state properties of ceded territories.

The ships she had parted with totalled two and a half million gross tons, valued at $177,000,000. Of rolling-stock she had delivered 4,552 locomotives and 127,000 wagons, worth $207,000,000. The live-stock included 529,000 head, exclusive of poultry. This was given a valuation of $40,000,000. The coal, coke and lignite delivered exceeded 48 million tons, worth $237,000,000, the dyestuffs totalled 23,000 tons, valued at $15,000,000, and the miscellaneous commodities, too numerous to classify, were determined to be worth $134,000,000.

The selection of Mr. Auld to head the important accountancy bureau of the reparations commission was made after he had spent several months in Paris as assistant financial advisor to the Peace Commission. Although only 42 years of age, he had served a number of years in the United States navy, and was given the task of organizing the cost and financial control maintained by the navy department in about 100 large industrial plants doing work for the government before the Armistice. When asked to take a post with the reparations commission, he resigned from the navy to accept.

The inter-allied accountancy organization now has bureaus in Berlin, Essen, Weisbaden, Budapest and Upper Silesia. The Paris staff consists of about 100 persons, made up of Aemricans, French, English, Italian and Belgians.

The commodities section is headed by W. L. Quillinan of Cohoes, N.Y., formerly of the U.S. Army Liquidation Board in Paris. The bureau at Essen and Weisbaden are in charge of E. W. Erne, formerly in the accountancy department of the Pennsylvania railroad. The branch set up at Berlin to handle the task of revaluating German war material sold for reparations was until recently directed by Captain Oliver K. Badgley of New York.

Another American with the commission is Royall Tyler of Boston, in charge of the personnel department under the General Secretary. He also acts as advisor to the commission when matters arise concerning the art treasures of the late Austro-Hungarian monarchy, upon which the reparations commission has first lieu. Mr. Tyler's chief assistant in the personnel department is I. J. Nochary of New Orleans.

Heading the dyestuffs bureau of the commission is Reginald Norris of Oregon, who has superintended the sale of some 3,000 tons of German dyestuffs to the American Textile Alliance on the commission's account. Guy E. Greer of Kentucky is second in the important coal bureau of the Commission, the chief of which is an Italian.

Famous Lecturer Is Cree Indian

TORONTO, July 27.—Frances Nickawa, the successor of Pauline Johnson as an exponent of her race on recital platforms, will spend the summer in the north. She is planning a canoe trip of more than 650 miles, living between times the free, untrammelled life of her people, learning a little of their language, gathering Indian legends and songs, and getting together her own life story.

Born at York Factory, the child of real, bush Cree Indians, she was adopted when four years old by Mrs. Riley, a Methodist missionary in the north. The child was given a first-class education, with special attention to music and elcution. After her successful lecture tour in England Miss Nickawa hopes to repeat her triumphs in a two-year English-Australian tour.

THE NEW PRIME MINISTER

Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C., who to-day announces the personnel of his cabinet, assumes the office of Prime Minister at a time and under circumstances which will call for more than ordinary executive ability. That Mr. Warren will fully meet the demands of the situation, those who know him will not for a moment doubt. He has made the first big step towards the successful accomplishment of the many difficult tasks that lie ahead by the formation of a ministry which is both able and representative, and one which will have the full confidence of the people.

Hon. W. R. Warren has, with two exceptions, viz., Sir Michael Cashin and Mr. Woodford, the most extensive legislative experience of any member of the House, having been returned for Trinity District in the bye-election of 1902. He contested Port de Grave District successfully in 1908 and 1909 and was Speaker in the Morris administration from the latter year up to 1913, when he was defeated in the General Election by Mr. Geo. Grimes, the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In the election of 1919 Mr. Warren was returned for Fortune Bay with an overwhelming majority, which he duplicated in the same constituency in the election of this year. Since 1919 Mr. Warren has been Minister of Justice, which portfolio he retains in addition to the premiership. The Advocate congratulates Premier Warren on the great confidence that has been reposed in him and on the success that has attended his efforts in the formation of a cabinet.

Sir Wm. Coaker's Position

We publish below correspondence which has been exchanged between Sir Wm. Coaker and the northern district representatives regarding Sir William's acceptance of a seat in the Executive Council of the new administration.

It will be remembered that Sir William resigned from the Executive of Sir R. A. Squires and intimated his intention of remaining outside the Executive. Circumstances arising from the recent political crisis have, however, inclined his political associates to the opinion that it would not be in the public interest, especially of the north, if Sir William refused any Executive seat offered him.

In entering the Cabinet, Sir William has yielded to the requests of Union associates, and, we think, his presence in the Executive Government will be received with reassurance, generally.

St. John's,
July 24, 1923.

Sir William F. Coaker, K.B.E.,
City.

Dear Sir William:

Arising from the present political situation, we understand that there is a probability of your being offered a seat in the Executive of the New Administration about to be formed by Mr. W. R. Warren.

We quite appreciate the position that you took before the Convention last Autumn, namely, that owing to business pressure and in the interest of the people at large, you deemed it no longer advisable to continue as a member of any Executive Government, but, we also recollect, that, at the time, you stated your actions in this connection would entirely be guided by the exigencies of any situation that might develop, having due regard to public interests, especially in the North.

Conjointly and individually, we have given very serious thought to the present position and, under the circumstances, we think that you ought, if offered an Executive Seat, to accept the same, as we strongly desire to see you in the New Government.

We, therefore, emphatically desire that you shall accept a Seat, if offered you.

July 24, 1923.

Dear Scammell:

I have your letter of even date, signed by the Union representatives. The matter referred to is one of the utmost importance and will receive the consideration its importance warrants. Mr. Warren will likely invite me to enter his administration. The developments of the past few days have completely altered the political completion of parties and leaders and may result in compelling me to forego my desire to be relieved from that portion of the burden I carried relating to Executive responsibilities. We must sustain to the utmost the hands of our new leader. This fact, no doubt, has been the controlling factor in causing our Union associates to intimate their hope that I will reconsider the position I took at the last Union Convention. I will do what I believe will be in the best interest of the country in general. I appreciate the confidence you all have expressed and trust the new administration will be one that will possess the confidence of the country.

Yours truly,

W. F. COAKER.

Hon. George Shea., M.L.C.,: Represented St. John's East in the House of Assembly under the leadership of Sir Robert Bond for several terms. Appointed to Legislative Council in 1919 and has since been a member of the Cabinet.

Hon. J. F. Downey, Minister of Agriculture and Mines: First contested a district in 1894, when in opposition to the Whiteway Party he stood for St. John's West, and with his colleagues, the late Jas. J. Callanan and Chas. Tessier he was defeated. Did not enter active politics again till 1908, when he was elected for the Disrtict of St. George's with a large majority in the Morris Party, was re-elected in 1909 and again in 1913; defeated in 1919 and elected in 1923 with large majority. Was Agricultural Commissioner from 1909 to 1919.

Hon. Dr. Barnes, Minister of Education: Was first returned as representative for Hr. Grace in the Bond Administration of 1904. Was again returned for his native district in 1919 and for the District of Twillingate in the election of this year. Minister of Education since 1917, which portfolio he retains in the new cabinet.

Hon. Sir M. G. Winter, K.B.E., Minister without Portfolio: For many years a member of the Legislative Council, where he is now Leader of the Government. Was appointed a Member of the Cabinet following the general election of May past.

Hon. S. J. Foote, Minister without Porfolio: Returned for the District of Burin in 1919 and again in the election of this year. Was a member of the cabinet since first elected.

Hon. M. E. Hawco, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs: The youngest member of the Cabinet, but nevertheless a man of wide experience and recognized executive ability. Was defeated in Hr. Main District in 1919, but returned in the election of this year, heading the poll. Was Superintendent of Marine Construction since 1919.

A. W. Piccott, Esq., Minister Public Works: Elected for the District of Hr. Grace under the leadership of Sir Edward (now Lord) Morris in 1908, and again in 1909 and 1913. Was defeated in 1919, but was again elected in 1923. For many years Minister of Marine & Fisheries during the Morris administration.

Geo. F. A. Grimes, Minister of Marine and Fisheries: Was returned for the District of Port de Grave in 1913, defeated there in 1919, and returned for the district for Fogo with a large majority in the election of this year.

NOT TAKEN SERIOUSLY

OTTAWA, July 30—Officials of the Department of National Defence refused to give serious consideration to the report last night from Nome, Alaska, that the Siberian government was fitting out an expedition at Vladivostock to wrest Wrangel Island from the party of British explorers now in possession of it, and pointed out that the capture of Alan Crawford, the Canadian who now heads the party who now hold the island in the name of great Britain, would be an act of war.

27 DEAD IN EXPLOSION

SHEFFIELD, July 30—Rescue parties at the Maltby colliery, where thru an explosion Saturday morning, many miners were entombed, were obliged to give up the work during the night.

Only one body has thus far been recovered.

SYDNEY, N.S., July 23.—(Star Special by Staff Correspondent)—Approximately $1,500,000 have been lost by the miners of District 26 since they went on strike eighteen days ago. During that time the British Empire Steel Corporation lost in output 354,000 tons of coal.

Incidentally the coal-steel upheaval has cost the country another $1,000,000, when it is realized that half a dozen subsidiaries were compelled to either suspend operations entirely or work part time.

U. S. GETS ALL PRIVILEGES

LAUSANNE, July 30—The United States' and Turkish experts reached an agreement Saturday night, where by the United States receives "the most favored nation treatment" concerning the freedom of the Straits for merchantmen and warships. The United States, without signing the Straits convention, will receive all privileges according to the report.

NINE WERE KILLED

TERRE HAUTE, July 30—Nine persons were killed late Sunday, when a Pennsylvania express passenger train crashed into an automobile at at Liggett, eight miles west of here.

The train was travelling at fifty miles an hour, and was two hours late because of a similar accidem near the Highlands, Illinois, in which four persons were killed.

Mining In Trinity

Mr. J. Rendell arrived in town on Saturday from Morley's Cove, T. B., where he has had a number of men working on a coal mine, and reports everything satisfactory as, on last Thursday, Mr. Robert LeDrew took down a 5 ft-7 in., which is several miles long.

The slope and tunnel which is just completed, is 112 feet long, 8 feet wide and 6 feet deep, and two others are in course of construction.

Mr. Rendell is confident that the coal is there and that all that is needed to make the mine a success is sufficient capital which would, among other things, ensure the opening of another avenue of employment.

According to Mr. Rendell, the fishery prospects are none too bright in Trinity Bay, and the catch so far is away behind.

Empire's Need of Navy Emphasized

NEVER SUCH A PERPLEXING PERIOD IN BRITAIN'S HISTORY.

WINNIPEG, July 17.—(Canadian Press)—Impressing upon the representative Orangemen attending the opening session of the Grand Black Chapter of North America yesterday afternoon the need of the British Empire for a navy which would guarantee the protection of the British Isles and the overseas Dominions, Geo. B. McCready, of Winnipeg, Grand Master, urged the convention to express its views in this regard and make them known to Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Premier of Canada.

"Was there ever such a perplexing period in Britain's history as the present?" asked the Grand Master. "Leaders of our Empire have had to face great problems in their time but never have such gigantic international and external difficulties been placed before our statesmen.

"Fancy and untried policies, so frequently suggested by untried politicians, must be carefully avoided if the security of British citizenship is to be assured and the unity of the Empire to continue" he declared. In referring to the approaching Imperial Conference, Mr. McCready pointed to the fact that "the Prime Minister of the Irish Free State will, for the first time, attend an all-Empire gathering, and will associate terms of equality with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Canada, Australia South Africa, New Zealand and Newfoundland.

Three urgent matters will most certainly be discussed, Empire defence migration and foreign policy, declared the Grand Master.

SCRAPPED HALF NAVY

"Sir Knights, the Empire needs a navy and Canada's Prime Minister should have the views of this Grand Chapter in this connection. Britain has scrapped half her navy in accordance with an agreement made with other nations which have not discarded a ship in compliance with the terms of the agreement submitted to them. Every part of the Empire should cooperate in the maintenance of the navy and thereby guarantee their own protection, as well as the peace of the world."

Better linking up of the various and distant parts of the Empire and a better understanding between Britishers, the world over, should be a great objective, said Mr. McCready and "we should re-affirm our attitude towards Empire unity, British emigration to Canada, and a safe and united foreign policy."

The appointment of a select committee with full power to render any assistance it should deem necessary to the preceptories of the chapter which have been bereft of a home through the recent forest fires in Northern Ontario, suggested by the Grand Master in his annual address, will be taken up at the second session of the forty-ninth annual meeting of the Black Chapter, Tuesday morning.

Prior to closing his address, Mr. McCready said the appeal sent out to every branch of the institution in behalf of the loyalists of Ireland who have suffered as a result of persecution and plunder, was most worthy, and he recommended liberal contributions to this relief fund.

"Homes have been wrecked and bread-winners have been assassinated and every dollar will count in the maintenance of loyal families which have been left poorer through the treacherous warfare carried on by the marauding Sinn Feiners throughout the Free State territory," added the speaker.

THEY CALLED HIM AN "OLD PILL"

THAT was years ago when he packed a terrible grouch, a mighty irritable stomach and a liver that refused to do the things that all good livers should. No wonder his friends called him an "old pill" and stayed away.

But that was years ago—long before he discovered Beecham's Pills and learned that two at bedtime can bring sunshine into a man's life. Today, he's an optimist, a hero to his wife, and a staunch believer in Beecham's Pills.

The cheer that Beecham's Pills bring into a man's disposition, is the incomparable cheer of sound digestion, active liver, and the regular habits that make good health.

OTTAWA, July 16. — (Canadian Press)—Further migration of skilled labor to the United States is shown by United States Department of Immigration statistics received here. During the month of May 3,525 skilled Canadian mechanics entered the United States as compared with 36 skilled American mechanics who came to Canada in the same period. The total number of Canadians who migrated to the United States during May was 18,658. of which 7,723 were women.

Skilled mechanics to the number of 2,311 came to Canada from Great Britain during the same month.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I heard lately from a young girl friend in New York. I met her in that city. I am going to tell you the story of Lillian, or to use her Austrian name, Liebe, meaning "Love."

**** *** ****

Lillian is eighteen years old. She was born in a small country place in Austria—which country, as you know, was allied with Germany during the war. Lillian is a Jewish girl.

In 1914—nine years ago—she went with her parents to America. There, at the age of ten, she went to live on the lower East Side of New York, which is often called "theGhetto." It is in the Ghetto that the poor people of New York live. Furthermore, it is the great foreign quarters of New York and several millions of Jews, Russians, Poles, Italians, Bulgarians, Greeks, etc., live in the countless mazes of streets of this great section.

The Ghetto, by the way, is the most fascinating part of New York, and there is nothing quite like it in the world. If you ever go to New York, even if only for a day, be very sure to go that night to the lower East Side. Go down Second Avenue, the aristocratic street of the Ghetto, along East Houston (which in New York is pronounced "How-ston"- street, down Orchard street along Rivington street and down Clinton street to Delancey street. You'll never regret or forget it.

Well, to New York at ten came Lillian, speaking only Yeddish or Austrian. At the age of tweive she was working, her parents being poor From that day until this she has been working in factories, stores, offices, etc., earning her own living. She went to school in the evening and successively passed thro public school and graduated from high school.

In addition to this (and the great bulk of students in America never get beyond high school, if they are lucky enough to graduate from this) Lillian went for two years to a Hebrew school where she learned to speak and write the Hebrew language. That means that to-day she can speak Yeddish, Australian, Hebrew and English. Regarding the latter, she speaks it perfectly. She has also taken innumerable courses of lectures in music, literature, economics, sociology etc.

**** *** ****

The latest word I have from her is that she has just registered at New York University for a four-year course in law. By hard study, and by working during her last year in some lawyer's office, she expects to get her lawyer's degree in three years instead of four.

**** *** ****

Then she will open her office and put out her shingle as a practicing lawyer—she will then be twenty one or two. She is ambitious to get in politics and get elected to the New York legislature. I think she will succeed, too.

Striking Change In Religious Field

New York, July 16.—The approaching organic union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches in Canada is "a striking illustration of the change from competition to co-operation in the religious field," said the New York Times in an editorial yesterday.

After reviewing the history of the church union movement in the Dominion, the Times continue:

"The tendency which the United Church of Canada exemplifies springs chiefly from two causes—the value of co-operation and the futility of perpetuating slight denominational differences in mission fields. In the past the newer far-flung settlements have often had to go without a supply of clergy while the older communities supported a superfluity, and the heathen in his blindness has shown a marked inability to differentiate between the 57 varieties of religious experience exported for his benefit.

"The time when denominations divided for half-splitting reasons seems past and with it the spirit that produced the old camp-meeting classic with the engaging sentiment; 'The bells of hell ring ding-a-ling-a-ling for you and not for me.'"

American Towns Prone to Select Duplicate Names

WASHINGTON, July 27 (AP)—There is a very peculiar story connected with the naming of Peculiar, Missouri—which is also a peculiar name for a town.

The federal government does not name towns and hamlets when they are born or feel the urge for a cognomen, but the Post Office Department does regulate them to the extent of prohibiting duplicating of names within the same state. So when a newly formed community in Missouri suggested a certain name for its post office, the department informed the inhabitants there was already one by that name in their state.

Several other names were chosen by the residents and submitted, but always with the same result. Finally an exasperated official of the department, in refusing the latest choice, wrote the city fathers among other things "that it was mighty peculiar they could not find a good name for their town." Whereupon he received the following reply "Acting on your suggestion we select the name Peculiar." And so Peculiar is on the map of today.

There is only one rule in the naming of new towns, and that is that there shall be but one of the same name in a state. But that does not prohibit other states from boasting towns of the same name. For instance, there are 45 names used more than 20 times each to designate towns and cities. Benjamin Franklin is remembered as an inspiration more than any other person, and Franklin as a town name takes the prize, occurring 31 times in 31 states. The others in point of popularity run: Clinton, 30 times; Chester, 29; Arlington, 29; Washington, 28; Troy, 27; Salem, 27; Madison, 27; Marion, 27; Manchester 27; Clayton, 27; Glenwood, 26; Kingston, 26; Newport, 26; Ashland, 25; Centerville, 25; Cleveland, 25; Auburn 24; Dover, 24; Hillsboro, 24; Lincoln 24; Monroe, 24; Oford, 24; Princeton, 24; Springfield, 24; Warren, 24; Union 24; Greenville, 23; Wilson, 23; Belmont, 22; Buffalo, 22; Canton, 22; Dayton, 22; Eureka, 22; Liberty, 22; Milford, 22; Plymouth, 22; Burlington 21; Lebanon, 21; Portland, 20; Lexington, 20; Jamestown, 20; Hudson 20, and Danville, 20.

Duplicated names are the bane of the postal clerk, and the Yankee reputation for originality rises staggering when confronted by the apparent lack of imagination used to name American communities. There are even two Chicagos, six Philadelphias seven Detroits, and 14 Denvers.

Similarity in names also causes the postal department considerable trouble. Indistinct penmanship might easily confuse Eldoro, Ia., with Eldorado, Ia. In Pennsylvania alone there are 13 communities whose names begin with the prefix Green: Greene, Greenbriar, Greenburr, Greencastle, Green Land, Greenoch, Greenpark Greenboro, Greensburg, Greenstone Greenstown, Greenville, and Greenwald. There is a partiality for Bloom as a prefix in New York state, as for example Bloomsburg, Bloomingdale Blooming Grove, Bloomington and Bloomville.

Foreign cities have contributed their names freely in this country. There are 18 towns known as Paris and a like number of Genevas, 17 Berlins despite the war, 12 Moscows, 11 Viennas, 6 Pekins and 2 Brussells.

On Fishery Protective Service

The Canadian Fishery Protection Service cutter, "Arras," Captain Barkhouse, arrived in port yesterday afternoon from the Grand Banks and is now at A. H. Murray & Company's wharf where she will take on board coal and supplies.

The Arras, which is armed, has been on special service in the interest of the Canadian vessels fishing on the Banks. Last season and for several seasons past, French and Portuguese trawlers have been creating havoc amongst the fleet by carrying away their gear and there was a general demand made for protection with the result that the Canadian Government took action this season, and the Arras was despatched with good effect.

Capt. Barkhouse reports the weather as being very foggy and states that unless a change occurs the fishery will not be anyway good. Bait has been scarce and very little has been done by any of the vessels.

Captain Barkhouse has many friends in St. John's and will be in port for 3 or 4 days.

STANDARDIZATION OF LOBSTER CANNERIES

Plants being classified this year and in three years' time they must meet standard 100 percent or get no license.

(Special Correspondence to The Canadian Fisherman)

The educational campaign, conducted in the years 1921 and 1922 by the Dominion Department of Fisheries, among those engaged in the lobster industry, has resulted, according to the lobster packers, in a very material improvement in the pack.

That encouraging report was given to The Canadian Fisherman by Prof. A. P. Knight, B.A., M.D., for thirty years professor of animal biology in Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and at present, as he has been for the past three years, chairman of the Biological Board of Canada. Dr. Knight arrived in St. John on June 30th, after having completed a tour of the Maritime Provinces, during which he spent five weeks in studying the lobster industry and interviewing fisheries overseers.

It will be recalled that two years ago the eminent scientist addressed the Rotary Club in St. John on the lobster industry, with special reference to standardization of buildings, equipment and operation, to the end that there shall be uniformity of the pack.

Dr. Knight in his recent visit here stressed the following essentials of standardization: 1—the factory; 2—equipment; 3—sanitation; 4—sterilization; 5—operations performed by employees.

Two years ago, he explained, it was found that there was little or no standardization in the Maritime Provinces. Every packer was a law unto himself.

Canneries to be Graded

Since that time, the Department of Fisheries has considered the matter, particularly because complaints about bad canned meats had been received from Great Britain and the United States. In consequence, the department this spring, adopted a system for grading the canneries, that standardization might be established.

The direct medium through which the department vehicles the standardization decisions is the grading sheet.

This sheet sets out the specifications while the department has adopted for the various units which are employed in the catching, handling, cooking and canning of lobsters; the marks allowed and deducted for and against good and bad points in units, and finally, the net marks for or against each unit.

All lobster canneries will be graded in accordance with this plan in 1923, and before the beginning of the canning season in each year thereafter. Any lobster cannery that in 1924 will not obtain at least 75 marks, will not receive a license for that season, and will not be allowed to operate until it is improved, as required by the regulations. In 1925, a cannery must obtain 100 marks before it will receive a license.

So far, the educational campaign of the department of fisheries has been devoted to improvement in the mechanical units of the lobster industry, but the human element will also be attended to.

Loss Heavy in 1920

Loss in 1920 on account of blackened lobster meat was very heavy. A large quantity of spoiled lobster was shipped back from England. Not only was there a loss of meat, but also of prestige.

It was therefore decided to make the canneries as uniform at possible: hence the adoption by the department of fisheries of a grading scheme formulated by Professor Knight. The scheme was also endorsed by the Canadian Manufacturing Association.

In the Maritime Provinces, it was found by survey, that a division into three classes was in order: 1—those above 75 per cent; 2—those between 60 and 75 per cent.; and 3—those below 60 per cent.

For 1923, the grading is intended simply to point out to the canners the deficiencies that exist in material epuipment, so that those defects may be obviated next fall and winter.

The survey of the methods employed by the various canneries in the Maritime Provinces showed that it was a common practice in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to leave on tables, over night, in a boiled state, the surplus lobsters which were left after the canning of the day's catch. That practice was not in vogue in southern Nova Scotia, where crates with open spaces were employed to hold the surplus catch in captivity in the live state in salt water until they could be canned. That is, southern Nova Scotia always canned lobsters which were alive and fresh. From boiler to can, and allowed twenty minutes for the process.

Professor Knight emphasized the importance of obviating unnecessary handling in the canning of lobster. He called attention to the urgency of immediate canning lobster, the shells of which had been broken.

Four Essentials

The most important points to be observed, the predominant essentials in the canning industry are, according to Dr. Knight: 1—washing the meat in running water; 2—the source of the water supply; 3—the steam boiler; 4—drainage.

There are 600 lobster factories in the Maritimes, Prof. Knight stated, employing from 5,000 to 6,000 people in the several branches of fishing and packing. The marketed product brings an annual return of $5,000,000.

The price to the fisherman was high, 9 to 11 1-2 cents a pound, while the canned product brought from $28 to $32 for a case of 48 pounds.

The lobster fishing season in gener was scheduled to close on June 26th, but the government granted an extension until July 10, on account of the fact that the opening of the season was delayed so far as the fishermen were concerned, by the ice along the coasts.

Prices Drop With Extension

One result of the extension was a drop in the price in the British and United States' markets when it was assumed that the extension would mean a larger catch than usual. That assumption has been proved erroneous, Prof .Knight advises, and he expects an advance in the quotation of the foreign markets.

A great many fishermen were opposed to the extension, Dr. Knight learned, and they brought in their traps at the expiry of the regular fishing period.

In the Northumberland Straits, Dr. Knight said, a late season is allowed by law, from Aug. 15th to Oct. 15th.

The lobster fishing areas were being depleted up to 1918, but at present, under new regulations, the areas are holding their own.

In 1918, the federal lobster hatcheries were closed. A reduction in the length of the season was then put into effct, allowing two months, where the period had formerly been thre. The government also instituted an educational campaign to save the "berried" lobster, that is, the female covered with eggs. For two summers in succession, men were sent through the maritime provinces by the department of fisheries, pointing out that the boiling of "berried" lobsters amounted to a destruction of the livelihood of the fisherman. The sentiment of the maritimes now supports the campaign for the protection of the "berried" lobster, and a betterment in conditions has ensued.

A feature of the specifications of the grading sheet for lobster canneries, is that no equipment is demanded that would be burdensome in a nancial way. Most of the units enumerated can be manufactured by the fishermen themselves in their spare time and any factory which is below standard can in many instances, be rated very much higher by slight additions and changes.

A conference with fisheries overseers is scheduled to take place in Truro, N. S., the last week in July to consider proposed new regulations in the movement of standardization.

Woman Believed Escaped Planner

ILLINOIS OFFICIALS KEEN NAME SECRET—17 CONVICTS STILL AT LARGE

CHESTER, Ills., July 24.—(United Press.)—A woman, the wife of a St. Louis desperado inmate, was sought by authorities to-day as the "master mind" of the riot and jail escape, at the Illinois State Hospital for the Criminal Insane Sunday night.

The woman visited the jail Sunday and authorities investigated the affair believe she may have smuggled in the knives with which the madmen stabbed the guards.

Seventeen of the convicts who escaped in the riot were still at large to-day.

Posses with bloodhounds are searching the surrounding hills and valleys for the fugitives, many of whom were convicted of murder.

Citizens of adjoining counties continue to go armed as it is feared the madman will not hesitate to kill if need be for food and clothing.

Superintendent Stubblefield of the hospital, and other State officials, who think the woman from outside aided in the delivery, refused to reveal her name.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

FISHERMEN DYE NETS

Fishermen in Dalmatia dye their nets brown and green. They have found that fish are cautious enough to fear the white nets but swim calmly into the meshes of the dyed nets. The theory is that the brown and green-colored nets are indistinguishable from the floating strands of seaweed.

ADRIFT AT SEA.

After being adrift without food or water in an open dory for six days and nights, rowing and sailing about 180 miles, John Olive, a Portuguese fisherman, of the Gloucester fishing vessel Edith C. Rose, was picked up off Tor Bay, Guysboro County, July 1, by the coastal steamer Chedabucto. His first request was for a cigaretta.

ANOTHER FISH PRESERVATIVE.

"The Frier," an Old Country trade paper catering to fish friers, announces that W. Potts of Hadfield has discovered a new method of preserving fish which is calculated to revolutionize present methods of handling. Mr. Potts has patented his idea and has not disclosed the nature of his process any further than to remark that "this agent locks up the nutritive qualities of the fish until required for consumption, much like an egg in its shell." This discovery should be of interest to Nfld.

B. C. FISHING IN 1922.

Ottawa, June 28.—The value of the fisheries products of British Columbia in 1922 was $18,872,833 as against $13,953,670 in 1921, an increase of 35 per cent.

Salmon fisheries in 1922 represented a value of $13,106,315 and an increase of 69 per cent. over the previous year.

The halibut catch was smaller than in 1921. Whaling operations were suspended in 1921 but resumed last year showing product valued at $138,815.

RARE FISH LANDED

A freak fish with a body like a snake, measuring over four feet in length, the head resembling that of a raven with a long beak-like mout. having teeth about an inch long resembling a saw blade and large fan-like collapsible fins on the back, was landed at Prince Rupert by Canadian Schooner P. Dorreen the last of May. It was sent to the museum at Victoria where it was identified as a saw fish, Alepisarus Borealis. The museum reports that the fish is only the third known to have been taken in British Columbia waters. "The first specimen we had was taken at Quatsino Sound in 1895, the next was taken off Victoria in February 1897. It is a deep water fish and appears to be rare on the coast. According to Jordan & Everman's book on fishes they only have two specimens in the California academy of science which were taken years ago."

BEDFORD WHALERS DISAPPEARING.

Never before in more than a century of New Bedford history have there been so few whaling vessels hailing from that port, either at sea or in port. New Bedford's dwindling whaling fleet has been further reduced by the sale of two schooners recently announced, to be transferred to the Cape Verde trade.

Thus does the New Bedford industry follow in the steps of Newfoundland's whaling industry. But with the coming of the Anonsen whaling operations, there may be a revival of this industry in our midst.

Wheat Problem

Council Head Believes Canada And U.S. Should Reduce.

WASHINGTON, July 17—(Canadian Press.)—Representative Sidney Anderson, of Minnesota, head of the newly organized wheat council of the United States, yesterday announced plans are being made for a comprehensive investigation of the wheat problem in the United States.

Mr. Anderson called attention to the fact that the expected surplus and carry-over of Canada this year would be much larger than that of the United States and probably 300,000,000 to 350,000,000 bushels. He believes both countries must reduce acreage.

But MEN run
Any way.
Men LOVE the chase,
Yet FEAR to be caught.
Women also love the CHASE
But fear the OPPOSITE.
Man is CONTINUALLY running—
Either AFTER a woman
Or AWAY from a woman;
Sometimes BOTH.
Some men run after
Two WOMEN
At the SAME time—
This is RUNNING WILD,
Others run two—
That is RUNNING AMUCK,
And they run into TROUBLE
For women get their NUMBER.
And CRAMP their style;
And a man who has a cramp

While a man, to be HAPPY,
Must be continually RUNNING.
No wonder it's a tired world.

TELLS OF REMARKABLE GROWTH SINCE END OF WORLD WAR

TORONTO, July 19 — (Canadian Press.—The climax of a busy day in Grand Lodge of A. F. & A. M. of Canada was the big gathering in Massey Hall last night which was presided over by the Grand Master, Colonel W. N. Ponton. Although intended as a social event it took on quite a different aspect by reason of the addresses and by the presentation to the Grand Master of a portrait in oils of himself, which he in turn presented to the Masonic Temple Company trustees so that it might be added to the collection of portraits of past Grand Masters of the Grand Lodge of Canada which adorn the walls of the Yonge street institution.

The auditorium was crowded to capacity with brethren and their ladies.

At the rear of the platform was the surpliced choir of St. James' Cathedral with the band of the Toronto Scottish Regiment.

After a brief address by the Grand Master the choir sang the hymn to the "Unknown Warrier" as a tribute to the fallen.

BRITISH GREETING.

The speaker of the evening was Lord Ampthill, Pro-Grand Master of the Grend Lodge of England, who was given a rousing reception. After expressing appreciation of the warmth of welcome extended to himself and colleagues, he hastened to declare they had come to Canada with no special mission, but simply in response to the invitation extended to the Grand Lodge of England four years ago. As the representative of the Grand Master, the Duke of Connaught, he had come to convey fraternal greetings and good wishes to the brethren in Canada. He proceeded to remind the brethren that the freemasonry was founded on a spiritual basis and was always engaged in a ceaseless struggle against the forces of evil. It offered the only means that would help in the solution of world problems. There was something in masonry that attracted men to its ranks. Since the close of the war the membership of new lodges had increased in an abnormal manner. What does that mean? he asked. There was more in masonry than met the eye. It stood for great ideals and moral integrity, for honor, justice and freedom. They had a long way to go before they attained their ideals. It had always to be remembered that all must maintain the fundamental tenents and principles of the craft and he appealed to the Canadian brethren to stand shoulder to shoulder with their brethren in England and throughout the world in upholding those tenets and principles so that they might be more helpful to their country and to humanity.

Continuing, he said: "We must develop our spiritual forces to make ourselves mightier so that we might be of greater service to humanity."

The world must be made to realize that masonry had a soul as well as a body, that it was the spiritual and not the mental things that counted, that the practice of charity of which they sometimes foolishly boasted was not an incident, and that if we were to justify our existence it was essential to demonstrate to the world higher and more lofty purposes.

Fraternalism, both international and craft, was the dominant theme stressed both in word and spirit at yesterday's luncheon of the masonic grand lodge. Compliments were paid by visiting delegates for the position which Canada has attained among the nations of the world; and the unity of the English-speaking peoples was strongly emphasized.

Col. Ponton presided.

Responding to "Our Guests," Sir John Ferguson, Grand Treasurer of the United Grand Lodge of England, said that like G. M. Ponton, he had absolute "confidence in the potential future of the Dominion." Then touching on commercial affairs, he said that Canada held a very high place in the financial relm of the relations that existed between the United States and Great Britain and concluded an eloquent address with a tribute to the heroes of the Great War and to the spirit of the race.

MARKETS FOR CODFISH

There is little or no change in the situation as regards dried fish. There are still about 15,000 quintals of last season's bank fish to be marketed in Nova Scotia, and there is said to be 40,000 quintals of Newfoundland fish on the way to Oporto, and almost the same quantity in Newfoundland unsold.

Fishermen's ideas are said to be about $6.50 per quintal, which is $1.50 per quintal higher than the ideas of the buyers.

Reports of dried fish markets do not make very cheerful reading at the present time. Europe, with the exception of Italy, is not improving. Italy we are glad to report has recently cancelled the duty which she imposed on dried codfish. This duty amounted roughly to 50 cents per quintal, and the effect of its remission should be to increase consumption in that country. Latest reports from Iceland and Norway state that the catch for this season is 25 per cent. in excess of last year. The situation from the standpoint of our fishermen is not likely to be improved by these large catches. The cost of catching fish in both Norway and Iceland is said to be less than ours.

A few sales of pickled mackerel have been made at $6.00 per barrel ex-vessel Halifax. The summer run of mackerel should be on this coast before very long, but no sales are likely to be recorded before early in August.

The market for canned lobsters showed a decided weakness at the first of the month. Some operators consider this merely a temporary lull in the demand.—(The Canadian Fisherman).

OBITUARY

MRS. JABEZ LeGROW.

At an early hour yesterday morning there passed peacefully away at her home, Broad Cove, Bay de Verde District, Susannah, wife of Mr. Jabez LeGrow. Mrs. LeGrow was taken down by paralysis about a week ago, and, except for a brief rally on Thursday, was unconscious from the time she was taken sick until the inevitable came.

Up to the time she was stricken with paralysis, Mrs. LeGrow had been enjoying good health, and only recently visited her daughter, Mrs. A. Vatcher, who had undergone an operation at the General Hospital.

In her passing there has gone from Bay de Verde District, and particularly from Blackhead iCrcuit, one who will be greatly missed. Many will miss her helping hand, and many will miss her daily association and her outstanding Christian personality. Throughout a long life she has been a friend to those who most needed one. Two years ago in November next Mr. and Mrs. LeGrow celebrated their Golden Jubilee and on that occasion received congratulations from a host of friends and relatives, not only in Newfoundland, but in Canada and the United States. As an appropriate ending to a life oof Christian service the Inevitable King has lifted her spirit quietly and painlessly from its earthly associations.

Mrs. LeGrow is survived by her husband, four sons, Gilbert, Peter Tasker and Arthur, and one daughter, Mrs. A. Vatcher, all residing at Broad Cove.

A MILLION DRUG ADDICTS IN UNITED STATES

(Clyde L. Eddy, in July Current History Magazine)

Contrary to popular belief, the average European or American, as opposed to the Asiatic, derives almost no pleasurable sensation from the use of opium or its derivatives. Why, then, you may ask, have a million persons in the United States become addicted to their use? Most persons, excepting of course the relatively small number of underworld hangers-on, and others who use heroin or cocaine because their associates do, become addicted to the use of narcotic drugs as the result of having morphine or other opiates administered to or prescribed for them by their honest, if insufficiently informed, family physicians.

Literary Intelligence

No living critic has more right to discuss the leaders of modern literature than Mr. A. St. John Adcock, now editor in chief of the "London Bookman." Mr. Adcock is exercising this right in a very fine book by him entitled "Gods of Modern Grub Street."

It is now announced by his London publishers and it will be issued in Canada early in September by the Musson Book Co., Ltd., Toronto.

Some thirty-two of the most prominent authors will be dealth with, each subject illustrated with a studio portrait by Mr. O. E. Hoppe. The following will be included:—

Jeffery Farnol, W. J. Locke, Sheila Kaye-Smith, H. G. Wells, Donn Byrne, A. S. M. Hutchinson, etc., etc.

So good does this work promise to be, that the demand for it in the Dominion should be considerable.

We are always prepared to supply Bill Heads, Letter Heads and Envelopes at short notice. Union Publishing Company, Ltd.

Expert Advises on Way to Act During Thunderstorms

MILTON, Mass, July 16.—Get under cover if possible when a thunder storm threatens. If this is not practicable lie down. That is the advice which Alexander G. McAdie, director of the Blue Hill Observatory in this town and professor of meteorology at Harvard University, gives in an explanation of the action of lightning prepared for The Associated Press. He gives what he describes as "ten good rules to help people take care of themselves."

"In a battle," says Professor McAdie, "a hundred bullets are fired for each soldier killed. It is something like this with lightning flashes. There are a hundred discharges for every bolt of lightning that hits a person. Fortunately, too, overy hundred streaks of lightning about ninety are from cloud to cloud or spill-over discharges of moderate electrical energy and are mostly horizontal, doing no damage whatever.

"About ten flashes in a hundred come vertically, that is, down to earth in a straight line. Some flashes come sideways and seem to be crooked, although there are really no flashes zigzagging like the teeth of a saw as artists generally depict lightning.

"The intense straight flashes are the ones to be feared, and it is a silly person who stands out in the open when such flashes are seen. He invites trouble, but the invitation is not always accepted.

"At this time of the year thunderstorms are frequent and there are a comparatively large number of fatal accidents. One reads in the press despatches that four men are walking along a New Jersey beach during a thunderstorm. There is a flash of lightning, one man is killed outright, one severely burned, and the other stunned.

"Now there is no protection for a case like this unless one could carry around with him a metallic cover well grounded. The first rule is then: Do not stay out on a beach or in a field when dark heavy clouds are overhead or coming slowly from the west or south. Get under cover if possible. If this not practicable, lie down. Don't remain standing.

"Second: Do not stand under a tree with thick foliage. You are forming a part of the line of discharge, since the body, more particularly the skin if moist, is a better conductor than the trunk of the tree. More people are killed by lightning in this way than probably any other.

"Third: Don't stand in the doorway of a barn or at a window in proximity to a chimney. There are currents of air or winds, and the lightning follows to some extent any draft or column of rising air, especially warm air.

"Don't laugh at anyone's nervousness during a severe thunderstorm. There is a good reason to be nervous. Even if one is in a building that is struck the damage is, in ninety-eight cases out of a hundred, confined to ripping out plaster or knocking off slates and tearing off any projecting timbers. But there are times when the storm clouds descend to earth and amid darkness the flashes are heavy and numerous. At such times there is danger. It is dangerous to be near a chimney or a tree or a flagpole or a metal clothes-line.

"Fifth: Stock should not be tied near a wire fence.

"Sixth: There is no particular sense in going to bed. Standing on glass or rubber or any good insulator, a wooden blanket for example, will give one a little more security and a great deal more confidence. The probability of a person in an ordinary residence building being struck is very slight.

"Seventh: If you are near a person who has been struck make every effort to resuscitate him. Only rarely does lightning kill outright. Mostly people are stunned, and all that is needed is a little artificial respiration to restore them to consciousness. Of course get a doctor quick.

"Eighth: If you are in a trolley car and a flash comes in and burns the fuses with a roar and a blinding flash, sit still. The danger is over, and while you may be frightened you are not likely to be hurt.

"Ninth: If you have a radio, better cut it out during a thunder storm. The antennae should be grounded direct and all wires, as far as possible, kept outside.

"Tenth: If your house is provided with good lightning rods you need not have much fear. Moreover, dwelling houses in city blocks are practically safe."

AN IMPROVEMENT WORLD

(Springfield Republican)

A few years ago scientists were discussing the forecast of a world-wide shortage of grain as a result of an unlucky conjunction of weather cycles. Now a surplus of 200,000,000 bushels of wheat is being treated as a first-class disaster. It is serious enough, yet by no means comparable to the disaster of a great famine. When will civilization reach the point of storing the excess to meet the needs of lean years?

TYPED LOVE LETTERS

(London Morning Post)

The pen is a human, pliable, sensitive instrument, a part of the heart which inspires it, and of the hand which uses it. But the typewriter is a cold Robot which cools the magic flow of words and breaks the ryhthm of sentences. Certainly, it must bear its share along with the telegraph, the telephone, and the cheap post for the decay in letter-writing. There are some Robots today who even type their love letters; some monsters of both sexes perhaps even dictate them. Jilting is the one punishment for such a crime. For the typewriter destroys that sense of intimacy which is the source of good writing, whether it be private correspondence or journalism or literature.

Regatta Notes

Final meeting Will be Held To-night And Stakes Will be Drawn

With only two days left for our Annual Regatta, all crews will have their final spins this evening, and to-morrow evening, and the course will be the place of attraction during the next two nights.

* * * * *

The final meeting of the Regatta Committee takes place this evening in the T. A. Armoury when final entries will be made and buoys and stakes drawn. All crews are asked to have a representative present.

* * * * *

There will be three dashes from the bottom of the pond to the stakes: the Amateurs, Junior Football and Juveniles. These should prove interesting and the first race will start sharp at 9.30. In each case the last boat in will be eliminated.

* * * * *

It is regrettable that only two boats are competing in the Trade, Factory, Laborers and Truck races, as in former years these events were amongst the best contested races on the program.

* * * * *

There will be three boats in the Fishermen's Race, which opens the program for the afternoon:—Nelie R. (Portugal Cove); Cadet, Outer Cove, and Guard (Blackhead).

* * * * *

The junior Football Race promises plenty of excitement especially in the dash as there is very little difference in the five crews. St. Mary's seem to be the favorites with the "man on the bank."

* * * * *

The Senior Football will as usual be a good race, and an exciting finish is expected.

* * * * *

Phil Brown could not resist the temptation again this season, and is stroking the Mary in the Amateur race. He is also taking part in six other races as Coxwain.

* * * * *

All the tents are now in course of erection and CoCuncillor Ryan has been kept busy during the past week arranging the various allotments.

New Officers Welcomed at No, 1 Corps, S.A.

Commandant and Mrs. Thomas Urquhart, who have been appointed to take charge of the work at the No. 1 Corps in this city were warmly welcomed by the soldiers and congragation at the 7 o'clck meeting yesterday evening.

Commandant Hurd conducted the meeting and made a very capable installing officer. He spoke of his intimate acquaintance with Commandant Urquhart extending over a number of years and stated that he had always found him to be a true man and an exemplary Christian. Mrs. Urquhart was a true helpmate to her husband and he felt sure that together they would be of much blesssing to No. 1. Words of welcome were then spoken by Sergt. Major Barter, W. B. Jennings, Esq., Mrs. Jonas Barter and Bandmaster G. Driscoll, all of whom pledged loyal support to the Commaadant and his wife and expressed hearty good wishes for their success in St. John's.

Commandant and Mrs. Urquhart sang a duet and each spoke briefly. They stated that they were prepared to devote themselves wholeheartedly to the work of No. 1. They had no doubts about their appointment being the will of God and their faith was high for a rich outpouring of Gods spirit upon the Corps during their stay here.

The Commandant is an officer of over twenty years standing and has successfully commanded some of the most important Corps in the Canadian field. He has considerable ability as a speaker as well as being a sweet singer and an accomplished musician. He was last stationed at Brantford, Ont., where under his guidance every branch of the work made rapid progress and much good was accomplished.

The Advocate welcomes the Commandant and Mrs. Urquhart to our city and wishes them a happy and successful stay amongst us.

Celebrated Golden Jubilee

Yesterday, July 29, was celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. William Ring of Long's Hill as the Golden Jubilee anniversary of their marriage as on July 29th, 1873, the nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Dr. Doyle at the R. C. Cathedral.

Was Wreck of "Recruit"

The derelict which the Manoa struck after leaving Montreal in her last trip as reported by Friday's Advocate was the wreck of the S. S. Canadian Recruit, which was rammed and sunk somt two years ago by the S.S. Hochelaga. A buoy marks the place, where the ship went down, but owing to smoke on the river due to forest fires the pilot mistook it for one of the leading buoys and the accident resulted. On arrival at Montreal an enquiry will be held and the ship will likely be docked for repairs.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

The Pan-American Conference

(Carl Holliday, of University of Toledo, in July Current History Magazine)

The recent discussions of the fifth Pan American Conference, which closed at Santiago, Chile, on May 3, 1923, produced in the main, after six weeks of sessions, only negative results. Mutual jealousies and suspicions prevented a solution of the vital problem of disarmament. Of special interest to the United States was the failure of the attempt made by the Latin-American nations represented at the conference to enforce their interpretation of the historic Monroe Doctrine.

Uruguay's plan to have the doctrine adopted in principle by all American nations, and to set up an American League of Nations, which should cooperate with the European League of Nations under the protective guarantee of Article 21 of the Versailles Treaty, encountered the inflexible opposition of Mr. Henry P. Fletcher, head of the American delegation. Mr Fletcher declared that the Monroe Doctrine was fundamentally a national and historic policy of the United States, which could neither be abrogated nor modified, and that the right to interpret and control this policy was vested exclusively in the United States. The firm and unyielding stand of the American spokesman, who acted under instructions from the American Secretary of State, made further discussion impossible, and the status of the Doctrine remained unchanged. The Latin American nations won one victory; the Presidency of the Pan American Union, automatically held by the Secretary of State of the United States from year to year, was placed on rotation basis, thus giving the Central and South American nations an opportunity to wield greater influence within the union than has hitherto been the case. This advantage, however, was overshadowed by the uncompromising rejection by the United States of the interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine embodied in the Versailles Treaty, and of the Latin-American demand for extension of the Doctrine, and by the equally uncompromising declaration that the Doctrine was in effect a "unilateral national policy of the United States."

Bank of England Action Criticised

Raising Discount Rate Hits Industry and Labor.

LONDON, July 24. — (Associated Press)—The recent policy of the Bank of England in raising its discount rate, apparently with a view of arresting the depreciation of the pound sterling as compared with the United States dollar, is extensively criticised by the business community on the ground that, although such deflation is praisworhy, it reacts greatly on the industrial situation, involving further falling in prices and consequent stagnation of trade and excessive unemployment.

The Federation of British Industries has issued a manifesto emprasizing these views and urging the Government to appoint a commission representing finance, industry, commerce, and labor to review the whole position and make recommendations as to future monetary policies.

The manifesto, which has been forwarded to Premier Baldwin, points out that, in view of the annual payments on account of the debt to the United States, it is very doubtful whether the parity of sterling, even if regained, could long be maintained.

All inquiries regarding Job work, Advertising and Subscriptions should be addressed to the Business Manager of the Advocate.

The Races Forty Years Ago

When feeling sad and lonely,
Then I oft in fancy take
A look upon the races,
That were once held on the lake
When where as a youth I sported
Where the balmy breezzes blow,
Down at the old time races
Some forty years ago.

Sure the Butterfly and Volunteer,
They come before my view
The Myrtle and the Native
And the good old Lurline too;
And though my hairs are tinged with grey,
Yet my heart feels light you know
When I think upon the races
Of some forty years ago.

The many wheels of fortune
And the greasy pole as well,
And other grand amusements
All too numerous to tell;
And Bennett's band whose music
Set my heart and cheek aglow,
Down at the old time races
Some forty years ago.

Many changes since have happened.
Many fine "sports" passed away,
But yet we are not lacking
In good sporting men to-day,
Arthur Hiscock and C. Ellis
And many more I know,
Will help to make the races
Just like forty years ago.

OLD TIMER.

St. John's, July 30 h, 1923.

Auto Stolen and Damaged

An automobile owned by Mr. Edward Lawrence, was taken from in front of his residence, Hayward Ave., early yesterday morning by some unknown person. The matter was reported to the police, and the car was later found on Gower Street, with the front axle broken and some minor damage. The matter is now being investigated, and it is expected that an arrest will be made shortly.

The schooner John Llewellyn is loading codfish at Belleoram for Oporto from Harvey and Company.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT

Ten labourers charged with "beating" their way from Badger to St. John's by the express pleaded guilty were ordered to make good their passage money.

A young man who has no home was charged with being a loose and disorderly person. He was remanded for eight days.

A man charged with being drunk and using insulting language towards the wife of a Sergeant of police was placed under bonds.

A taxi driver was charged with speed on LeMarchant Road. It was proven that the car was going only between 12 and 13 miles an hour and the case was dismissed.

A threatening language case between a husband and wife was dealt with in camera.

The H.M.S. Calcutta which was here all last week sailed for Forteau on Saturday morning.

PRES. HARDING IS SERIOUSLY ILL IS REPORT

President Suffers From Complications Following Ptomaine Poisoning.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 30—President Harding spent a fairly comfortable night, according to a bulletin issued to-day by Brigadier General E. Sawyer, his personal physician. "His condition is acute and he has temporarily overstarted his cardio vascular system by carrying on his speaking engagements while ill," the bulletin adds. It would be necessary for the President to have complete rest during the period of acute symptoms.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 30—President Harding's illness responded to day to careful treatment and complete rest but his physician's statement issued to-night admitted for the first time that his condition was serious. The most encouraging feature was that he had taken some nourishment, and had been fairly comfortable during the day. To-night's bulletin gave his temperature as 100.6, respiration forty-four and irregular, and some cough and evidence of congestion in lung.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 331—President Harding was reported ill to-day on landing here from Seattle. He is suffering from complications following poomaine poisoning, which attacked him at Vancouver after eating crabs that were "copper tainted."

NEW GALASGOW PLANT BURNT

NEW GLASGOW, July 31—The plant of MacKay and Chambers, at New Glasgow, a firm operating the salt mines at Malagash, was destroyed by fire Saturday evening. The mine had been working in full capacity and the loss is a serious one.

NOTED ACTOR DEAD

LONDON, July 30—Sir Charles Hawtrey, noted actor and theatrical manager died to-day after a short illness.

C. B. BYE-ELECTIONS

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S., July 31—To-morrow the Federal bye-election in Cape Breton North and Victoria takes place.

Pipe Line is Badly Wrecked By Dynamite

WATER SUPPLY CUT OFF AND DAMAGE MAY RESULT.

SYDNEY, N.S.,—July 31—The Besco steel plant is completely closed down as the result of a series of explosions which blew up the pipe lines which supply the plant with water. The damage it is feared, is heavy, not so much by the explosions as damage possibly caused inside by the sudden shutting off of water needed in various operations particularly in the coke ovens section. It is possible the city of Sydney may be able to furnish a quantity of water for vital services until repairs have been made. The only clue to the origin of the explosion is several men seen making a get-away in an auto.

SYDNEY, N.S., July 30—Though the police were active all day tracing down such meagre clues as developed no arrests were made and complete mystery still surrounds the identity of the person or persons who early this morning, exploded charges of dynamite, and wrecked the pipe lines supplying the British Empire Steel Corporations' plant with water. It is learned that the breaks have been repaired, and operations will be resumed as soon as the exact nature of the damage to the steel plant, if any is located, though this will not be known for several days until a thorough survey is made.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 30—Attorney General W. J. O'Hearn announced to-night in Sydney to-day the Provincial Government has offered a reward of $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those guilty.

PRESIDENT'S CONDITION HAS BECOME GRAVE

SAN FAANCISCO, July 31—After the third consultation held since morning, by the physicians attending President Harding, it was announced last night that the patient's condition had become grave.

The physicians declared that definite central patches of broncho pneumonia had developed in the right lung, as indicated clinically and by the X-ray.

The development of pneumonia was the one thing which Brigadier-General Sawyer, the President's persanol physician had said less than two hours before, he feared above all else as a complication.

LATEST

NEW YORK—Luis Firpo's wish to postpone the bout for a year will not be realized, Tex Rickard, promotor of Dempsey-Firpo match said last night. They will meet on Sept. 14th at the Polo Grounds, as originally stated by Rickard.

LONDON, July 31—An agreement was reached between Premier Baldwin and J. Ramsay McDonald, Opposition leader whereby Baldwin will make a motion in the House to rescind the suspension of four labor members under suspension for the last month.

BERLIN, July 31—Potatoes and fats are the two commodities destined to play an important part in determining the Cuno ministry's further tenure of office.

If the government succeeds in effecting an early improvement in the food situation in Greater Berlin and other centres, particularly in the Ruhr, the social and political crisis which threw Berlin into a panic last week will have been overcome.

The government yesterday started on a hurried marketing trip in Holland and Denmark, having instructed the Reyehsbank to surrender a liberal share of its reserves of foreign currencies, in order to meet the heavy cost of Dutch potatoes and United States and Danish lard, the two articles chiefly missing from the local market.

Talk of an impending cabinet crisis is dismissed by the political writers and party leaders who primarily lay stress on the inadvisability of swapping horses while Germany is fording the troubled waters of her foreign relations.

OFFICIAL INQUIRY BEGINS

EDMUNSTEN, July 30—Official investigation into the cause of the wreck on the Transcontinental line near Picard, Quebec, Saturday morning when four train employees were killed and one injured seriously, was opened this morning, and until it is completed no report is to be given out. Only one of the passengers, a woman, suffered injury. Her arm was bruised. "Nothing but guesses," authorities answered when asked if the cause of the wreck was that the express was running ahead of schedule as rumored.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Trail

Some wise person has observed that the only way in which to learn the geography of the earth is to trav el in leisurely and observant fashion over its entire surface.

That being an impossible feat for the most of people, the great majority have to live in a state of comparative ignorance regarding the conditions of life at places remote from their own habitation and environment.

Peter was reminded of this many times as he made his momentous jour ney to the Yukon territory, following in the tracks of his lost kinsman. The railway over the famous White Pass was not long opened, and in London he had been able to obtain very little information regarding the journey. In New York he fared little better, and was obliged to push on to Vancouver, where he had been informed he could take his tickets to cover the journey and obtain the fullset information regarding it.

By the time he reached Vancouver May was drawing to a close.

In the railway journey rom the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, he had ample opportunity of being impressed by the land of vast distances and boundless opportunities, which has lured so many of our best and bravest to its capacious heart. He talked with his fellow-travellers, for, tho the object of his journey had little to do with the future developent of Can ada, he took a Briton's interest in it.

And each step of the way, meeting with some fresh interest, face to face with tremendous problems both econ omic and racial, he felt that even should that object fail, the adventure would not have been in vain. It is good for the stay-at-home man to realize hw vast the surface of the globe is, and how small an atom he is upon it.

Carefully weighing up all the meagre scraps of information his cous in's wife had been able to give him, he concluded that his best plan was to lose no time in coming up with Affery. When Alan found himself utterly on his beam ends, what more likely than he should ponder on the offer that had been made to him, and strain every nerve to avail himself of it? The only doubtful point was its genuineness, and even the address of the Canadian Band of Commerce at Dawson City, while it gave an air or reality to the whole affair, seemed hardly in itself sufficient to justify a man taking a long and costly journey for the purpose of verifying the bona fides of one of its customers.

Over two years had now elapsed since Affery's offer was made to Alan on the steamer in mid-Atlantic. What might not have happened in two years?

So it was really Affery's track Peter Garvock was on, and as he drew nearer to his destination he became conscious of that quickened eagerness of spirit which takes possession of the man who aims at some particular and momentous goal.

If the prairies and the mountains impressed him, he was still more amazed at the flourishing cities he found located on the Pacific coast which had opened up its golden gateways to the commerce of the world.

He had to stop two days at Vancouver, waiting on the boat to take him to Skegway, eight hours' rail over the White Horse Pass, then anoth er steamer down the Yukon to Dawson—seven or eight days in all; just the same time as it had taken him to cross the Atlantic.

At the Canadian Bank of Commerce in Vancouver he learned, to his satisfaction, that Affery had certainly been in Dawson as late as the previous summer. That was something to go on with at least; and he prepared to enjoy the noverty of his journey with a little less of the impatience which had marked its earlier stages.

There are few experiences which lay a greater hush on the spirit of a man than to travel over vast places, in which he is made to realize the power and Majesty of Nature, and the boundlessness of her resources.

Garvock, though a quiet, stay-at-home sort of a man, had made the usual journeys to Europe, and had been once to India on business to the Bombay house of his firm; but he had nev er desired to explore or study India. To him it was merely a business place of call. Now, however, he tast ed for the first time the delicious and obsessing lure of the trail—if I may put it so. Each fresh picture unfolded to his gaze on that wonderful journey from Vancouver round the Pacific coast filled him with awe and a strange kind of joy that was half pain.

The weather was glorious. In these surprising lands, summer comes with an outburst which can be little understood on this side. If she is long in coming, at least she is no lag gard when once she sets out in earnest, nor is she niggardly of her stores. The largeness of her gifts in the matter of flowers and perfumes and beauty is indescribable.

Garvock felt and moved in an enchanted land. Such wealth of flowers, such riot of colors, such sunsets and sunrises have to be imagined since they cannot be described. Not now in any particular haste to get to his destination, he even grudged the hours spent in necessary sleep, fearing to lose one item of that vast and moving panaroma of snow-capped mountains rising sheer from the water ways.

By the time Peter Garvock reached the White Horse City, where he had to entrain over the famour Pass, he was a very different man—a humbler, better man—than when he quitted the narrow confines of his office in Renfield Street, Glasgow, on the morning of the day on which he had left Scotland on his quest.

At the White Horse City he learned beyond doubt that the ice had not yet gone out on the Yukon, and that once over the Pass, he would have to make at least three hundred miles by stage-coach instead of by steamer. That sort of thing in the twentieth century lifts a man clean out of the rut in which his life as hitherto been set!

He had a few fellow passengers on the train which carried him over the Pass. The season was very early yet, and the few desiring to reach Dawson wanted tom ake sure that the Yukon was navigable first. Peter had provided himself with a certain amount of literature, such meagre stuff as he could find about Alaska and the north; but! somehow, the reality seemed to drive all the written accounts out of his mind. Sitting on his luxurious parlour car, as the tourist train climbed the rocky steeps of the White Horse Pass, he could follow, in imagination, the desperate trail of the gold-seekers in '97 and '98.

Arrived at White Horse City where he spent the night, he set out on the stage which was to carry him over the final reaches of his journey.

Dawson, at the junction of the Yukon and Klondyke rivers, he found to be a bustling, cheerful place.

On the morning after his arrival he callied forth from his comfortable hotel to find the Bank of Commerce, which was only a stone's throw off. His enquiry for the manager was courteously met, and when he was ushured into the private room, he was received by the manager.

"Morning! What can I do for you, sir?"

"My name's Garvock. You don't know me, and it would be hopeless to explain," said Peter quietly. "I've made a long journey from Scotland to inquire if you know the whereabouts of a man named Affery—I do not know his Christian name, but I think I have the surname right?" He added that, because he saw the gleam of quick intelligence on the banker's face.

"You have, sir. Mr. Affery is a client of ours, and I do happen to know where he is at this very minute."

"Oh!" said Garvock, with a gasp of relief. "Can you put me on to him then? Is he anywhere in this district?"

The banker nodded.

"What do you want him for?—if it's a fair question," he asked, as he pushed a chair towards Garvock, at the same time studying him keenly. "Scotland, did you say? Affery's Irish—at least three parts Irish."

"Well, as a matter of fact, I don't know Mr. Affery ,and my only interset in hi mis on account of a third party—a relative of my own, who was at one time in his company, and who, it is surmised, came out to Alaska with him."

"I see. Name of Rankine perhaps?"

The blood rushed, full and hot, to Garvock's face. He knew not that though he was in close touch, he had hardly expected this.

"That's my name! He's my cousin. I'm here really on behalf of his wife and his other near relatives. He's been lost to them for over two years."

The banker nodded understandingly.

"I see. Well—he's been here in the Yukon with Affery for the last six months—let me see—yes, longer. He came in October, just before the navigation was closed. I believe he came down the Yukon on the last boat of the season."

"And isn't he here now?" asked Garvock feverishly.

'Not in the city. But he is get-at-able. He's no further off than on one of the creeks in the Klondyke."

"The Klondyke?" repeated Garvock questioningly.

The banked nodded.

"They're near one of the mining campe where the biggest run was on in '98. Yes—it's practically played out now. But there are still a few cranks. You don't know Affery, I suppose?"

Garvock replied that he had never seen him.

"He was here in 'ninety-eight, and he knows more about that queer page in Alaskan history than any living man, I do believe. He mad a hit himself; but what he's cranky about is a fortune he imagines was hidden by a pal of his called Arirona Red, who was one of the biggest bosters on the trail. According to all accounts he was a holy terror. He staked one of the first claims in the Klondyke, and it is a known fact that he was luckier than most of them; but nobody ever knew what he did with the nuggets. He used to come into Dawson and have a blow-out once in a blue moon, but he never exceeded a certain limit. Nobody ever cleaned out Arizona. Affery and he were thick pals, and he's never been the same man since Arizona's death. He nursed him through his last illness in the shack they shared together on Goldwater Creek. And he's there now with Rankine. They have been there since Rankine came into the Yukon."

Regatta Committee Finalizes Arrangements for Our Annual Derby

THE COMPLETE PROGRAMME OF CREWS AND RACES.

The final meeting of the Regatta Committee was held last night in the T. A. Armoury, when all matters in connection with to-morrow's big event were finalized, and all that remains for the successful carrying out of the program is for the weather man to smile his best.

President Hiscock announced that His Excellency the Governor would be present for the first dash, which starts at 9.30 sharp. His Excellency will remain on the course throughout the forenoon in an unofficial capacity, and will take luncheon with the committee. After luncheon he will return to Government House and in the afternoon, together with Lady Allardyce and Miss Allardyce, will be received officially by the committee.

Rev. Fr. Pippy of St. Joseph's ask of the committee for permission to use their flags, tents, etc., at his Regatta on Wednesday next, which was granted, and the Committee will give him every assistance.

Vice President Healey, and Treasurer English of the L. S. P. U., presented a cheque for $30 towards the general fund, and received the thanks of the committee. Several crews then entered, after which the drawing of stakes and buoys took place, and the complete list of crews and boys is herewith appended.

C.L.B. DEFEATS C.E.I. 2—1.

There was a fair attendance at the football game last evening when the C.L.B. and C.E.I. teams met.

A good exhibition was expected and in this expectation the fans were not disappointed. Promptly on time referee Quick called the teams together and play opened briskly. The C.L.B. made a quick rush to their opponent's territory which was repulsed and a return attack ensued. The forwards of both teams worked well and kept the leather whizzing back and forth over the centre line. The C.L.B. combined well together and brought the leather to the mouth of the C. E. I. goal where in the mixup which followed Cofield put the ball into his own goal and scored for the C. L. B. When play was resumed the C. E. I. tried hard to recover their loss but the half time whistle sounded before their hopes materialized.

When the teams had crossed over the C.L.B. became aggressive again and after a good exhibition LeFosse secured number two. This set the C. E. I. working like trojans and in a short time Adams found the C. L. B. net with a beauty. Thus encouraged the team fought every inch of the ground to even up the score but the C. L. B. were not yielding any and successfully repulsed every attempt to encroach on their preserved. No further scoring resulted and the final whistle sounded C.L.B. 2, C.E.I. 1.

THE GREATEST NUMBER

As discussions generally take place at the Regatta season on various items pertaining to races or the past, and as we have heard on more than one occasion a debate on the largest number of boats which has been rowed on the "Pond," we deem that the following account may settle the question:

In 1878 the Prince of Wales prize was won by a crew of Broad Cove fishermen in the "Contest" (formerly Placentia). In this race the following named boats contested: "Rosetta," "Hawk," "Volunteer," "Shamrock," "Contest," "Native," "Swallow" and "Queen of Beauty"—eight in number.

The S.s. "Kriton" has arrived at Sydney from Port Union.

Dr. Grenfell's Log

St. Anthony, July 1 23.

Dear Mr. Editor:—

I can never again send you the Log of the S. S. Stratchona. For, since I left here last fall, she has found her last resting place under the fitting shroud of fifty fathoms of the polar current that she so long successfully resisted. Twenty-three years she bravely 'did her bit.' During those years many and many of my Northern friends have sought and found help and relief aboard her. Scarcely a function of human life but her cabins have witnessed, for births, deaths, marraiges, work, play, worship, have all been parts of the scenes that have made up her a drama of events. A people who 'go down to the sea in ships' for their business, can alone appreciate how a vessel assumes a personality,—for who calls his ship anything but "her",—and who, that has built and sailed his boat but loves her, as every 'her' has a right to be loved.

As in the good ship Sagona we steamed North this week the magnificent coloration, the bracing air that tasted like sugar and sent the old feeling of youth coursing again through ones veins, did their best to cheer us up, but we could but sorrow, as for a friend 'gone on', as we passed the spot where the old Strathcona lay sleeping her last sleep, and peered down into those remorseless waters that overcame her at last. Surely, life for all of us is a tragedy indeed, if we have only made getting 'things' our end in it, and have never known its true propose, and indeed its only justification,—the serving of the world. Was it unnatural to feel comforted by the thought that whatever we have made of our few years, she at last made her's a 'field of honor.'

North with us again are an increasing number of youthful visitors and helpers. All of them are keen with the enthusiasm of health and youth, and all accustomed to the appointments of the wealth of modern cities, and to the so-called advantages that civilization an ease from financial care afford. Only a few are veterans of former years, still free enough from the engagements that the years bring to most of us and once unable to resist the lure of this wonderous North.

If any Newfoundlander, accustomed to life's setting here, were apt to be down-hearted as to the assets of his native land, he would be thrilled again could he but hear the comments of these unbaised and well qualified minds on the environment that nature offers to life in this North, and more especially on its development influence on human life and the quality of manhood it produces.

As we passed along the towering cliffs that lead to Cape St. Francis and watched the mountainous swell, lift by the heavy northeast gale, fling foaming tons of water high up the perpendicular sides, and saw the little homes perched up, as if to tease them, just beyond their reach, it did seem a marvel that feeble man could wrest a living from so fierce and reluctant an element; yet, away outside our vessel, all along were little open boats bobbing up and down, fishing as serenely as some of us sit in an arm chair in a stuffy office juggling figures for our daily bread. The Vikings were not born in the South Sea Islds. Hardness produces the good soldier, and life is everywhere a resultant of compensations. New York, Boston, Toronto, London, do not produce trap boat crews or the jolly sailor men whom all the world loves,—loves, as we read of them through the ages following the Admirals like Anson and Drake "to sweep the Spanish Main," or as 'Captains Courageous' to reap from the wild banks of the Atlantic or Labrador so unromantic a reward as a 'fare' of codfish—"If love's the best of all"—and unquestionably it is the one thing in life permanent and worth while—then Jack's the King of all,—for they love Jack, and Newfoundland is a cradle made of God to breed him.

But, meanwhile, both at our home in Boston and here in the Old Colony from the lips of many Newfoundlanders we have been learning of hundreds, nay thousands, who are being forced—forced bitterly against their will—to leave homes that Islanders and Seamen cling to with perhaps more devotion than any other class of men. Here is suffering compared to which all the ills that doctors give their lives to assuage, are a begetelle. Many of these separations are almost as bitter as death itself to the old folk that are losing, so often forever, those whose companionship and presence is the one compensation of the evening of life.

The medical mind is at once challenged by the problem. Is this migration incurable What is its cause? Why are these houses empty?

It was fine at Twillingate, where we were inspecting Dr. Parsons' work on the new hospital to see the local copper mine, managed by Mr. Holder, beginning to crush and concentrate ore, and promising to employ some fifty men. If successful, it should run to larger numbers later on. The great prospect of Gull Pond Copper deposit is especially helpful at this time of depression with all the subsidiary employment which it will undoubtedly afford. At Pilley's Island, the caretaker, Mr. Scheering, assured us that the mine there will be sure to operate again since the deposits of copper discovered by the borings made by Mr. John Lawten showed it could be a financial success from copper alone if not from sulphur. It is a fine thing to know that the Humber River scheme promises to employ as many as two to three thousand men. The Tilt Cove mine has ten thousand tons of ore ready for shipment. Nothing succeeds like success, and mining may temporarily at least spell prosperity to the Colony—God grant it may. But meanwhile large numbers of our fishermen are leaving the country—our young and strong, our best; and every hamlet and village is lamenting. One cannot help feeling that the fishery is the really great asset of this country, and is that which created our people and keeps their sons here. The fisherman's life has in this country so much to commend it that no other life to us seems to offer. Why then should our people be very literally forced out of it?

We have just noted in the Colony's press, an effort by the senior medical practitioner in the Capitol to locate and check the cause of the defeat of the Prohibition Law of this country in practice. Many bitterly criticised his efforts, because he referred to the public press to one of the undeniable causes, viz:—the selling of scripts by members of his won profession.

All doctors know, however, that bringing out dangerous diseases into the sunlight is the surest way to remedy them, and we, at least down here in the outports, realise that we have no other way but through the Press of the country, to get the facts essential to work on before the voters who can control or remedy the troubles. No one for a moment can suspect in reality that Dr. Fraser found pleasure or profit in his efforts. Nor was it pleasure or profit that took our boys "over the top" to become targets for masked guns. How sincerely we down here,—who love this North and are absolutely sure that it is producing a race which the world never needed more than it does to-day, a race which everyone knows cannot be replaced from the softness or hustle of drawing rooms or stock markets,—long for this exodus of our people to stop. If ever an ostrich hid its head in the sand in order not to see danger, did it ever gain anything by it? Doctors are pool politicians as I read history, but are there no persons better fitted to find ways to bring this real state of things into the sunlight—to discuss publicly its causes, having recognized instead of camouflaged its existence, as some will the cancer that is eating out their own vitals. Is it not for the Press to educate its clientele and to discuss remedies, as seriously as doctors do for the causes of disease which are threatening our existence?

It is not only our young men, but many of our best and tried men, who are leaving, and I, who see so many in the States and Canada as I travel about, know very well that large numbers are not coming back, except perhaps for a short visit. Every patriotic Newfoundlander knows that though our pulp and minerel may help the Colony, our real peculiar asset that no one else has is our marvellous cold water fish in a comparative southern latitude. With a collapse of our fisheries, Newfoundland would cease to be Newfoundland. I lean to those who believe that in Newfoundland every effort possible, and our first and chief effort, should be to back up our winderful fisheries on which the colony has thrived so well for over four hundred years.

The increasing business in chilled or frozen salmon is very encouraging. Here, in Green Bay and the North it is making salmon worth catching. Salt salmon after, all these years, has failed to commend itself as an article of diet. Cannot more cold storage be successfully introduced, and a food product more acceptable to the rich than salt cod be marketed in Europe as well as America? The prejudice against frozen fish is really a prejudice—exactly as the prejudice against frozen New Zealand mutton. It can be overcome. A gentleman now in St. John's met the objection "Oh, we cannot eat frozen fish" by a characteristic experiment. He sent from Scotland to Boston for some frozen Cod; they came to London and were sent by rail to Scotland. When his Scotch cook started to cook one, the real sheen of the fish was so well preserved that she exclaimed, "My, but tis fresh from the Firth they are," and at dinner everyone commented on the way the flakes melted in their mouths. This is a true story. If cold storage were available, we in the North could fish another month at least. We could always have fresh food, and frozen bait when fish were hungry, instead of only when they are glutted, as they are now. It seems that all depends on the fish going into the freezer immediately it leaves the water.

The same is certainly true of cod liver oil. The vitamine value is much higher if the fish is given a chance with the most modern treatment. It is most disheartening to hear—"Oh, our markets are for poor people and so our customers can't afford not to pay the price of production," or "We couldn't get any repeat orders in Spain because Iceland's fish is so much better made than ours." We have really an unrivalled asset in our cold water cod and salmon, and there is always plenty of demand in the world for the best. We have always deeply lamented the closing of the fish hatcheries, lobster nurseries, and the scientific study of our fisheries that was so splendidly carried on by Mr. Adolph Nielsen thirty years ago. Many are saying today that experience makes them believe that the money spent on branch railways would have brought far better returns if used in experimental development and educational work in our great fishing industry. It is good to know that large orders are being given for tinned codfish and to be able to tell all our people of a cash market here in St. Anthony for our innumerable berries.

We have always felt that one of the oustanding characteristics of our friends in the North have been their unconquerable optimism. But the many closed houses, even if the owners are hoping to return, affords a comment that impresses upon everyone the great need for every possible prophylatic effort.

It is pathetic, too, returning from a land of such abundant plenty, to at once be called again to deal with so many nutrition deficiencies,—in other words, so many results of not enough of proper food to eat. We admitted three such to the hospital only yesterday,—two being little children with tubercular knees. Another fisherman today came in with a starvation disease leaving a family without without one cent or one ounce of food, having lost one child from starvation this last spring.

Of our won efforts this year, we are hoping most from the industrial work. Several of our northern students, trained in industrial work, will be starting fresh centers for weaving mat making, basket and other work, while the trained nutritional and child welfare workers are trying not only to introduce new methods of getting more value out of foods already within reach, but also of bringing other sources of the greatly needed nutritional factors above the horizon. Our new highly bred goats, that give almost as much milk as our cows in the North, should certainly be a real asset in the better physical development of our children. They are far safer also, being immune to tuberculosis,—an important fact when we realize that some eighty per cent. of all tuberculosis in children under five years is known to be derived from the bacillus of cows. One man in our harbor alone has lost four children from tuberculosis, and our homes and hospitals are filled with the results of its terrible works.

This year a new executive officer of very large and varied experience, Col. Arthur Cosby, is helping us with his most valuable advice, and a new director, Miss Catherine Cleveland, to collaborate with Mrs. Blackburn in all the industrial work, including sales and purchases, and attempt to unify and extend very materially the scope of its department.

In Bavaria last fall, while visiting the Oberammergau play, we couldn't help realizing in how many parts of the world the people live on a very close margin. There, as in Switzerland, Norway and elsewhere, the small arts and crafts furnish a very serious part of the earnings of the people.

Our industrial sales showed how much our women can add to the general income of the family but such homely arts as knitting, which they do exceptionally well, and old-fashioned mat making, and embroidery. The Labrador winter costumes, worn by some of our returned workers at such winter health resorts as Lake Placid Club and Saranac Lake, brought us lots of orders for 'dickies' or 'Kossaks' and the accompanying simple but gay and attractive trousers, boots, and gloves, for both men and women. The clothing is made of water-tight canvas,—clean, tight, cheap or braid, and the winter garments with an edging of fur. These are really unequalled for wear in snow and even 'milds' and thaws in winter. We are hoping for more orders from St. John's as they become better known.

At Tilt Cove we learned of the sad news of the loss o a schooner on Cape John. She proved to be the only schooner so far fitted for the fishery this year from Twillingate. We saw her leaving, and it is hard to hear of her loss after only crossing Green Bay in fog and sea on the south bill of Cape John. Alas, a little while ago this very Twillingate fitted 150 schooners for the fishery. Meanwhile, excellent news of fish and salmon on the French Shore so early in the year is a real encouragement, for tho the prices are so low it does little more than to keep body and soul together to catch it. Yes, if the men get plenty, they may tide over these hard times and not have to leave the country, as hundreds are being forced to do further South.

From the North reports of the ferrying are excellent so far. The trappers of Northern Labrador have been enjoying far better times than her fishermen. At a fair in Hamilton inlet, held by the people for their hospital at Northwest River, over $500 in cash was realized.

The great drawback so far here has been the ill fortune of our mail steamers, which has made communication so poor. Our mail steamer service is so much better than on the Canadian Labrador that we cry out at once when we are left without a regular sequence.

WILFRED T. GRENFELL.

Installation of Officers

Lodge Northcliffe, No. 1086, A.F. & A.M., Scottish Jurisdiction, held its annual Installation here on Tuesday, July 24th. Owing to very pressing duties the District Grand Master Designate, Bro. Tasker Cook and his staff were unable to be present.

Bro. N. Pike, P.M., D.J.G.W., acted as Installing Master, assisted by Bro. George E. White, P. M., acting District Grand Director of Ceremonies; Bro. H. C. Hanson, P. M., acting B G. W.; Bro. A. G. Hay, P. M., acting J. G. W., and Bro. A. J. Martin, acting G. I. G.

Previous to the ceremony, Bro Pike referred to the absence of the District Grand Master, stating that he, Bro. Pike, felt his position very keenly. At the conclusion of the ceremony he paid a touching tribute to the late District Grand Master, Bro. C. R. Duder, and unveiled and enlarged photograph of him which had been presented to the Lodge by Bro. Geo. Phillips, P. M.

He congratulated the Rt. Worshipful Master, Bro. George Sheppard, and bespoke for him the loyalty and support of his officers.

The officers installed were as follows:

R.W.M—Bro. Geo. Sheppard
D.M—Bro. A. G. Hay, P.M.
I.P.M.—Bro A. J. Martin
S.W.—Bro. A. J. Ogilvie
J.W.—Bro. H. S. Windeler.
Rec. Sec.—Bro. N. Halfyard, P.M.
Treas.—Bro. W.J. Short
Sr. Deacon—Bro R. Postlethwaite
Jr. Deacon—Bro. H. Baird
Chaplain—Bro. Rev. T. E. Loder
Bible Bearer—Bro. E. Sheppard.
I.G.—Bro. W. R. Payne.
Stewards.—Bro. W. E. Halfyard and W. Taylor.
Tyler—Bro. Lea Frew.

After the installation all members retired to the banquet hall, where a supper was served by Mrs. W. T. Petrie and Staff. The following toasts were honored:

King and Craft—Prop. Bro. Geo. Sheppard; resp. "National Anthem.

Dist. Grand Lodge—Prop. Bro. H. C. Hanson, P. M.; resp. Bro. N. Pike, P.M., D.J.G.W.

Sister Lodges—Prop. Bro. A. J. Martin, P. M.; resp. Bro. Jack Turner.

Absent Brothers — Bro. Geo. E. White, P.M.

Tyler's Toast—Bro. F. E. Ireland.

The toast list was interspersed with songs by Bros. E. Powley, A.J. Martin, H. Baird and H. Fletcher, as well as a number of choruses by the entire gathering. Mr. Ron Southcott presided at the piano and the pleasant evening terminated with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."—H.G.

The schooner General Smuts sailed from Lamaline yesterday for Oporto with 4443 quintals of cod fish shipped by S. Harris, Ltd. The ship loaded 2285 quintals at Grand Bank. This clears up the last of the old fish that was at Lamaline.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, TUESDAY, JULY 31st., 1923.

A Commendable Feature

Every departmental head in the Warren Ministry is a member of the House of Assembly. In this respect the ministry differs favourably from the previous ministry, in which the Departments of Agriculture and Mines, and of Posts and Telegraph, had ministers who were not elected to the Assembly.

This fact will inspire confidence throughout the country, particularly as the members for St. George's and Hr. Main will be generally considered as well suited, by person ability, experience and general knowledge, for their respective porfolios.

It cannot be denied that the representatives of the people are the most desirable parties for administration of departmental affairs. They have their seats in the House, to which they are responsible for the answering of questions and for bringing department matters to the attention of the House. And they are responsible for their conduct to the people themselves.

The Prime Minister's intention to make his government as democratic as possible will be commended.

The New Minister of Marine and Fisheries

In the new ministry Mr. Geo. F. Grimes succeeds Hon. W. W. Halfyard as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The appointment will commend itself as most deserving and suitable.

By long experience in public affairs, by general knowledge and an intimate acquaintance with fishermen and fishery matters derived from years of business association in the F. P. U., Union Trading Company and otherwise, Mr. Grimes is well qualified to supervise and administer the affairs of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Under the new Minister, the Advocate bespeaks the same careful and capable management as has characterized Hon. W. W. Halfyard's brief ministerial term.

There is great work to be accomplished in the Department, particularly at a time when the requirements of the fishermen demand that every encouragement be given the various fisheries and every precaution taken to protect fishery products that they be sold or marketed to the best advantage to the producers.

As Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Grimes brings a signal honour to the district he represents.

Some time during Hon. W. W. Halfyard's representation of Fogo District, he held the high position of Colonial Secretary, to which, as representative for Trinity, he returns in this ministry.

Essentially, a fishing district, whose people are dependent solely on the fruits of the sea, Fogo District has the distinction of having for the first time in its history a representative holding office in the Department so directly related to the life of its people.

The Advocate congratulates Mr. Grimes on his appointment; and feels sure he will administer the department in such an honourable and efficient manner, as will merit general confidence and be creditable to the district he represents.

House Opens Again

The House of Assembly opens to-day in the first session of the Warren Government. It is understood that business of the previous session will be resumed, and it is expected that Finance Minister Cave will make his Budget Speech this afternoon.

Owing to the late date and the fact that many outport members are very much inconvenienced by being kept from their ordinary vocations it is thought that the session's work be expedited and the House closed as soon as possible.

A Worthy Cause

There will be seen in another column a reference to the efforts of the promoters of the New Maternity Hospital. We are informed that several teams, captained by representative leaders from various denominations in the city, together with a team consisting of nurses from the several hospitals, will be on the course to-morrow, Regatta Day, selling tags to citizens for the laudable purpose of providing funds to defray the cost of furnishings for this institution.

We bespeak for such a good cause, the helpful patronage of the public.

Rev. Dr. Whalen Dies At North West River

Well Known Ecclesiastic Passes Away While on Missionary To Northern Labrador.

The sad news of the passing of the Rev. Stephen J. Whelan, D.D., Parish Priest of North River, C.B., was received by Sir M. P. Cashin last evening in a wireless message from Grady, Labrodar, where the deceased's priest's motor boat in which he had gone north arrived during the day.

The Community was deeply grieved on learning of Dr. Whelan's unexpected death for there was no more widely known clergyman in the island or one more generally esteemed.

The message contained very little particulars concerning the Rev. gentleman's passing, except that he died at North West River. Grosse Water Bay, and that his remains were being brought home for burial on the motor boat. There are three of a crew on board, and Major Cabot, an American and a persinal friend of the deceased on the trip. The boat left Grady, and will report again on arrival at Battle Harbour.

The sad news came as a shock to his numerous friends in the city, and to-day at North River, where he was held in such reverence and esteem there will be genuine sorrow and the people cannot realize the loss that has been sustained by the Church of which he was such an honored son, and the community in which he was held in such esteem.

He was at the time on his mission of spiritual comfort to the Indians, whom for three years past he has given voluntary service and it is a satisfaction to know, and is probably what he would wish, that he was carrying out that holy duty for which he was ordained, when the final call came.

Rev. Dr. Whelan was born in Carbonear about 43 years ago. He was the only son of Mr. John Whelan, a well known Labrador planter, who during late years resided with his son at North River. Deceased received his early education at the Academy Carbonear and at the age of 17 he proceeded to Ireland, where he entered All Hallows Seminary to study for the priesthood. He was one of the most brilliant of the many Newfoundland students who entered that famous seat of theological learning and won his B.D. when but little more than 20 years of age. From All Hallows he went to Laval University, Quebec, where he completed his theological course almost a year before he was old enough to be ordained. He was raised to the dignity of the Priesthood at St. Patrick's Church Carbonear, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Mc Donald.

During his pastorate deceased was in the parishes of Whitbourne, Gambo and North River and in the latter place there stands to-day one of the finest church properties in the country as a mounment to his zeal in the performance of his sacred duties. Some few years after his ordination Father Whelan was honored by Laval University which conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Three years ago he volunteered his services on behalf of the Indians, at North West River, who were far removed from civilization and in his little motor boat accompanied by his faithful companions he has braved the storms that beset our bleak coast, and has brought to them that spiritual comfort that only one so holy can give. It was in the performance of his Holy duty that the end has come, and throughout his Parish and in fact throughout the whole of Conception Bay, there will be general sorrow, not alone among his own flock, but amongst all classes and creeds who recognized in the deceased Priest a big man, and one who has done honor to his native land.

It is understood the body will be brought to North River for interment but it will be some days yet before the boat reaches her destination.

Besides his father, Rev. Dr. Whelan is survived by one sister, Mrs. Joseph Curran of Gambo.

S.S. SAGONA BACK FROM LABRADOR

Bring Fairly Encouraging News—Reports From The Gold Fields.

The S.S. Sagona, Capt. Burgess, reached port at 11 a.m. to-day, concluding the first regular service of the Labrador coast for the season. The Sagona left here on the 16th inst. and reached as far north as Turnavick. On the 24th the ship reached Stag Bay and transferred the Marconi operator, polls and other equipment for the station to the S.S. Watchful. The police have erected their station at the gold fields, and the prospectors who have arrived are all settled down ready for active operations. Capt. Jefferys and party who went north by the Sagona bound for the gold fields, where they intend to carry one prospecting on an extensive scale, were landed at Makovic. At this point they have boats to fit out, suitable for use in the river where the pay dirt is said to exist. Capt. Butler in the Silvia II reported having made a small excursion up the river but reports no success so far. In addition to the southerners at present on the scene are a colony of Esquimo who came south from Nain in the hope of finding work at the gold fields, but to date they have not been successful. Capt. Burgess reports a little sign of fish right up and down the coast; at Sandy Bk., Domino Bishop had 300 landed. Traps at Francis Hr. had from 200 to 300. At Dead Island there were two schooners fishing, one belonging to Templeman, the Clyde and Rogers in the Diadem hailed for 300 each, with prospects good. Tom Finn at Snug Hr. had landed 300 qtls. for 4 men—the other traps in this vicinity averaged from 250 to 300. At Batteau the fishermen reported lots of fish on the bottom but they were prevented from putting their twine in the water owing to ice interference. There was no ice, no body of ice north of Indian Harbor. A little fish going at Turnavick. Capt. William Bartlett of Brigus was getting some fish and Tom Evans, a settler of Labrador, got 7 quintals on the 24th, the day the steamer called at that port. On the return trip much fog was encountered. The prevailing winds were S.E. and the weather conditions were ideal for good fishing. On the whole the report is encouraging and we may look for an average Labrador fishery. In the parlance of the Labrador fishermen the second mail tells the tale,—Two dead bodies were brought home from the coast, a Mr. Roberts, whose body was landed at Twillingate and other man's remains were landed at Catalina.

Sir William Coaker has received a message from Captain Wm. Matthews, Valleyfield, advising his arrival there with 500 quintals of codfish.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

On three separate occasions during he past month or so numbers of men who had been at work at Bishop's Falls boarded east-bound trains, and despite the protests of the conductors, took their place in passenger cars and came to St. John's without producing tickets or paying their fares. They simply held up the trains, boarded them by force and set at naught all authority.

Such a proceeding constitutes one of the most lawless and serious offences that could be imagined. It is tantamount to holding up a train at the point of a gun and taking full and complete charge of it. Yet when these men are brought before court at the instance of the Manager of the Railway (not at the instance of the police) their offence is treated lightly and they are let go scott free, being merely told that they must make some arrangement to pay the amount of the fares.

In the first instance of this series of hold-up outrages there were fifteen offenders, and the evidence in the case was to the effect that they had forcibly crowded upon the platform of a passenger car, pushed the conductor aside and took their places in the car, refusing to either leave the train or produce either tickets or fare. When their attempt at outlawry was attended with so great success and so little of the consequences that should have followed upon such action, it was but natural that others should repeat the offence.

Others did repeat it. A few days after the first hold-up a second was staged, in which five men forcibly took possession of the train and came into St. John's without tickets or fares. These, like the first crowd, were summoned before Court, made promise that they would make arrangements to pay their fare and were let go.

With the lapse of a few days a third crowd held up the east-bound express and coolly took their places on board for the City. These, too, are brought before Court, a half-hearted promise is exacted to pay the fares and the offenders are dismissed. Thus has it become an established practice for gangs who feel like getting free transportation from place to place to resort to measures that are equivalent to piracy, and, in defiance of and without the restraint of law and order, set at naught all the rights of constituted authority and forcibly take possession of public conveyances.

I do not know whether or not our laws provide punishment for this kind of outlawry, but I do say that if a punishment is so provided it should be inflicted to the very limit. It is unthinkable that such high-handed conduct cannot be stopped by the infliction of the severest penalties, for if it cannot, what protection has the railway service or any other transportation service against mob control?

* * *

Matters of this nature have been treated altogether too lightly in the past by those whose duty it would seem to deal with them in the most uncompromising manner. If the holding up of a train and the forcible taking possession of a passenger car by any crowd of men who feel so disposed are to be reckoned as something to be dismissed on the payment of a few dollars by the offenders, what assurance is there that far more serious depredations against public property and public rights will not be essayed in the near future?

ON THE DANGEROUS AGES OF MAN.

There are THREE kinds of men,
Good. Bad. Indifferent.
As a rule the BAD ones
Make interesting lovers,
The GOOD ones,
Uninteresting husbands,
And no SELF-RESPECTING woman
Ever yet had time
For a man who was INDIFFERENT.
The NICEST men are about nineteen,
The kindest, FORTY-NINE,
The HARDEST, about twenty-nine,
But, of all men, the most FASCINATING,
Blase, difficult and EXPERIENCED,
Is the young man of thirty-nine.
And if he is a BACHELOR—
Spare me!
For the LOVE of a bachelor of forty
Is worth very little.
It is frayed and THREADBARE,
And would give little SATISFACTION
To a SENSITIVE woman.
What a wise WOMAN looks for
Is Security and Principle
In a man and in the BANK,
But she generally finds
By the time a man HAS ENOUGH of both,
He's nearly seventy,
At least he's SIXTY-NINE—
So what's the use?

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.

Handel wrote his great Oratoria, the "Messiah," in twenty-four days. He puts into music, which has been called the language of angels, the glorious story of the Gospel. "I did think, I did see all Heaven before me, and the great God Himself," he said, after writing the immortal Hallelujah Chorus.

Not by violence, but by peace—not by sword, but by plough — not by blood., but by life towards life—that is the tenor of the Czech spirit, the meaning of our history, the bequest of our great ancestors.—President Massaryk.

The Swiss Government has appropriated 500,000 francs for the purpose of assisting the emigration of unemployed workers, especially as farmers to Canada.

With a view to developing tourist resorts along its line in Central and Western Ontario, the Canadian Pacific Railway will erect Bungalow Camps, after the style of those successfully operated in the Rockies. The first three will be built in the Nipigon, French River and Lake of the Woods districts, and should be ready for occupation by July 1st. The low cost of construction and maintenance will make it possible to charge much lower rates than the standard hotel, and the camps will prove a boon to those of moderate means who desire to spend a week or more or less in the outdoors.

The United States bought Canadian produce during February to the value of $26,719,205 in comparison with $20,116,856, Canada's exports to the United States in 1922. Exports of Canadian produce to the United Kingdom were $17,874,260 in February 1923, and $15,316,265 in February 1922.

Canadian exports of whiskey for the year ending March 31st, 1923 amounted to 339,181 gallons valued at $2,698,377; for the previous year the quantity exported was 192,910 gallons valued at $882,729. Ale and beer exported during the past year amounted to 1,454,629 gallons, while for the previous twelve months the amount was only 421,060 gallons.

By The Lookout.

One of the most glorious of the traditions that come down to us from early times in our country (indeed, it may well be the most glorious tradition) is the story of Lord Baltimore's plantation at Ferryland. Rather, I have in mind the reason for his locating there.

Baltimore came to Newfoundland to set up a haven for those persecuted for their religion. Newfoundland thus became a home of religious freedom and a harbor for those in England who were not permitted by authority to believe as they wished.

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Lord Baltimore named the Penninsula of Avalon after an ancient place in Somersetshire, England, (on which Glastonbury now stands) and which is said to be the place where Christianity was first preached in Britain. Baltimore did this with the idea that this province (Ferryland) was the first place in America that should preserve the traditions of religious freedom of conscience.

I quote from a work by Henry Kirke, M.A., entitled "The First English Conquest of Canada, With Some Account of the Earliest Settlements in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland," published in 1871:

"This Island (Newfoundland) seems to have been one of the earliest resorts of persecuted religious bodies in England, for about this time (1622) or a little earlier, we find several settlements of Puritans on its coasts.

Lord Baltimore died in his plantation in Ferryland and his son, Lord Baltimore, soon abandoned the Colony which his father had founded, and went to the mainland, where he founded the City of Baltimore, which is a great city of nearly a million inhabitants today. Baltimore was founded by Lord Baltimore with exactly the same purpose as animated his father in going to Newfoundland some years before: that of setting up a haven for those religionists who were persecuted by the authorities who didn't agree with their beliefs.

If I remember correctly, Baltimore was the place where the first amendment was made to the American Constitution. Do you remember what that amendment is? "Congress shall not abridge the liberty of speech, of the press, or of assemblage."

I confess that it was with a delicious thrill that I read these facts about Newfoundland having been a haven for the persecuted. I am personally of the firm conviction that this is above all others the tenderest and most to be cherished tradition in our history. I would that the story were told in every school in our country at least a dozen times a year for the next hundred years and more.

I so wish because I regred as the noblest words that ever fell from the lips of man that saying of Voltaire: "I disagree with what you say; but I will defend to the death your right to say it!"

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Mrs. Anna M. Kross, a lawyer of New York, who has been an assistant Corporation Counsel for five years, has been appointed general counsel to the Building and Allied Trades Compensation Bureau, which represents 60,000 workers comprising 78 unions in the New York building trades.

An important job for a woman to fill, eh? Women's place may be in the home, but housekeeping is not the only sort of work she can do.

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Norman Hapgood, former American Ambassador to the Netherlands, recently returned froa a tour thru Russia. In an interview given newspaper reporters on his arrival in New York he said that most of the things said and printed about Russia are simply lies.

"Both the irresponsible and the deliberate misrepresentation of actual conditions in Russia by various publications has been unworthy and unwarranted," he declared.

Hapgood, who was accompanied in Russia by his wife, said: "I like Russia, and the City of Moscow particularly, so well that I should like to return there to live, where it not for my love of my own country."

There are in the United States, according to Roger W. Babson, the well known writer on business subjects, no less than 1,500,000 retailers. There are that many because every man has the right to open up a store if he has the necessary capital, quite irrespective of how many stores there may be already or whether there is a need for an extra store or not. Under the laisse faire policy anyone can open as many stores or businesses as he likes irrespective of anybody or anything else.

If America faced her problem this way, would she consider it necessary to have 1,500,000 retail stores. "We have1,100,000,000 people one the one the other hand. The industries, etc. industries, farms, railroads, etc., on the other hand. Thee industries, etc., provide the necessaries of life, and the people must get those necessaries. What, therefore, is the best, most efficient and cheapest way to accomplish the work of getting the necessaries to the people?"

If the problem were like that, and a sensible decision were made, the American people would discover that 250,000 efficient stores would serve them quite as well as 1,500,000 stores, and the cost of running the extra 1,250,000 stores would be saved, and goods would therefore be cheaper.

But, says someone, what about the owners of those 1,250,000 stores, and what about their employes? What will happen to them?

Well, couldn't they work?

WOMAN APPLIES FOR MASTER'S LICENSE

Application Said to Be Unique in U.S. Marine History.

BOSTON, July 24 — (Associated Jress) — Mrs. Jennie Crocker of Cliftondale, has applied for a license as master of sailing vessels, empowering her to command and navigate any sailing vessel on any waters. Her application is said to be unique in the marine history of the United States.

Mrs. Crocker is the wife of Captain Nelson A. Crocker skipper of the schooner Ruth Martin, now being overhauled here for the lumber-carrying trade between Boston and Florida ports. Both hail from Machiasport, Maine. They were married in Bangor, 20 years ago and since that time Mrs. Crocker has sailed in her husband's vessels to all the seven seas. She studied navigation during these voyages.

On one occasion while Captain Crocker was sick, his wife for 20 days navigated his four masted schooner, bound from the west coast of Africa, taking her regular trick at the wheel and nursing her husband as well. When the Ruth Martin, to be renamed the Jennie Crocker, sails on her next cruise there will be two licensed masters on board instead of one, Captain Crocker said.

MINING ENGINEERS WILL INVESTIGATE CANADA'S RICHES

NEW YORY, July 24.—Mining engineers from this and other countries will make their summer pilgrimage next month to the heart of Canada's mineral riches. The 128th meeting of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, it is announced here, will be held August 20 to 31 in Ontario and Quebec.

With the co-operation of the Ministers of Mines of these two Provinces and of the members of the Canadian and American Institutes of Mining and American Engineers, the vast mineral welaht of Canada will be placed on exhibition.

Petroleum and gas will be among the principal general subjects of the technical sessions, which are to be held in Montreal. The geology of Santa Elena oil fields, Ecuador, will be discussed by Joseph H. Sinclair of New York and Prof. Charles P. Berkey of Columbia University. Other papers will be presented by A. F. Meston of New York and Oliver U. Bradley of Muskgee, Okla.

"The average man of the street if asked what minerals of commercial value were found anywhere near New York," Secretary F. F. Sharpless of the Institute said, "would probably answer, 'coal and possibly some iron.'

"It is scarcely realized by the average citizen that within 24 hours' ride from New York, just a short distance north of the Lakes, lie the deposits from which nearly all the nickel of the world comes from; then, on a little further to the northeast, the richest silver mines that the world has ever known are still producing; and then again a little further to the northwest we come to what promises to be one of the most interesting gold developments of the present century.

"The Hollinger mine is today probably the most important gold producing mine of the world. Near it are the highly profitable Dome and McIntyre mines. Then passing on to the east down into Quebec, there are the asbestos mines which are today furnishing the bulk of the asbestos being imported into this country.

"The Porcupine Gold District and the country lying to the east of it are attracting considerable attention at present and the American engineers whose duty it is to advise in respect to them will take this opportunity to familiarize themselves a little further with the districts that are daily referred to in the public press."

ROYAL LIST OF TRADESMEN

Reacher Round The World

LONDON, July 27.—Among many societies and associations in England, there is one called the "Royal Warrant Holders' Association," whose members total over one thousand. They dine together once a year and have the right to send presents and offer congratulations to the royal family. The members of this association are traders authorized to use the magic words "By Appointment" to the King, the Queen, Prince of Wales, Queen Alexandar, etc., using the appropriate arms in each case at the head of their stationery and on their places of business.

From the official London Gazette, which gives a list of these privileged traders, it is gathered that King George has a kilt manufacturer in Edinburgh, a lamb food manufacturer in Kings Lynn, a cake manufacturer in Liverpool, purveyors of angostura bitters in Trinidad, orange curacao in Amsterdam, hard lawn tennis courts in Lyston, royal cipher badges and socks in India and post office directories in New Zealand and Australia. The King's manicurist, according to the list, is Miss Kelly of London, his physical culture instructor is Eugen Sandow.

He has two chiropodists and two pyrotechnicists in London, a taxidermist in Ballater, a golf club manufacturer in Earlsfield, and four dozen wine merchants in various parts of the Empire. Others who hold royal warrant to the King supply fish sauce, dog and game food, turtle soup, feathers, horse hair, Edinburgh rock, incubators, oysters and sheep dips.

The Queen's "appointed" include manufacturers of pins and hair pins, Christmas crackers and theatre and concert tickets and a shawl merchant in Delhi.

The Prince of Wales obtains his clothes from nine tailors, including one in Australia. He also deals with manufacturers of safety razors, mineral waters, musical instruments and dental cream. He is supplied with beer and cider from Southsea and silks from Kyoto, Japan.

Soap manufacturers "by appointment" number about 60. The royal warrant granted to traders is so valuable in their various businesses, that holders have formed an association which takes legal action against unauthorized people who use the royal arms. Such people render themselves liable to a fine of 20 pounds sterling.

PULPWOOD PROBE CAUSE OF CONCERN

Over Continent

Very Acute Differences Between Proponents and Cabinet Rumored. ALARM DISPLAYED.

U. S. Importunes Secretary of State Hughes to Move Diplomatically.

Ottawa, July 17—The coming inquiry by a Royal Commission into the question of exportation of pulp wood and particularly any action which may be based upon it will become a question of international concern. Judging by the interest which is being displayed, the demand for such action is of long standing, and it came to a head only towards the close of the session.

Prior to that it is said differences of a very acute character arose between proponents of the scheme and some of the Cabinet, and instead of an Act prohibiting the export, the legislation brought in by the Government and passed simply gave it authority to prohibit export if and when it was considered necessary.

This was modified in two ways—by the understanding that inquiry by a Royal Commission will be a condition precedent to any action and by an assurance that, in the event of export being prohibited, pulpwood cut on settlers' lands will be exempt.

Meanwhile, American paper companies give evidence of being greatly perturbed over the potential if not prospective development, and Secretary of State Hughes is being importuned to move diplomatically, while there is a difference between prohibition of export and practical prohibition of import by means of a high tariff, many are disposed to compare the alarm now displayed in the United States at proposed Canadian action with the sang froid with which the Fordney tariff was put into effect, vitally directed at Canadian exports.

The United States tariff on wheat, it is pointed out, is almost as effective as an embargo, because Canada is the only country, practically, that sells wheat to the States.

Right Hon. W. S. Feilding is now framing up the personnel of the Royal Commission which will inquire into the whole question. It will be appointed early in August. The main arguments in favor of prohibition are the conservation of pulpwood resources and the manufacture at home of raw products. On the other hand is a very heavy international trade being restricted if not done away with, and there are suggestions, taken seriously in some quarters and scoffed at in others, of American reprisals. Before any such complications develop there will be a thorough inquiry. If any of the power now vested in the Government is invoked there is much to suggest that the exercise of it will be sparing and inordinately cautious.

O'Toole Wins Grattan Kiely Trophy

And Establishes New Five Mile Record of 27.29.4-5

Over 1200 persons were present at the College Campus last evening to witness the five mile race for the Grattan Kiely Trophy which was originally presented for competition at the Belvedere Garden Party. When the order to start was given Ron O'Toole, J. Ralph and J. Russell got away at a good clip. O'Toole took the lead and was followed by Russell. Shortly after the second mile Ralph caught up to and passed Russell and a few minutes later O'Toole, who was gradually increasing his lead gained a lap on both. All three runners were showing up well and maintained a great pace throughout. The supperior ability of O'Toole was demonstrated by securing three laps on the others. He finished first in 27.29.4-5. Much excitement was occasioned by the other runners in the race for second place. When with only a half lap to go Russell spurted and caught up to Ralph and a sprint occurred between the two for the tape and Russell won out by the narrow margin of about 3 feet. The prizes were presented by Bro. J. E. Ryan who congratulated the winners. By his achievement in this race O'Toole has created a local record, and as the course was officially measured, one that stands. The original record was made by John Bell who covered the distance in 28.12 and O'Toole's time is 27.29.4-5. The Advocate joins in the congratulations which are being showered on the young title holder.

The field arrangements were looked after by Mr. W. J. Higgins who was captain, and his assistants Messrs. C. J. Ellis and S. Cullen. The timekeepers were Messrs. P. J. Grace, J. P. Crotty, E. Brophy; Herald, Mr. J. J. Lacey; Starter, Mr. E. J. Goodland.

POULTRY ASSOCIATION

Lectures at Petty Harbour

Last night at the Holy Name Society's rooms, Petty Harbor, the seventh lecture of a series on Poultry Culture was given by the Newfoundland Poultry Association. The chair was occupied by Rev. Father Sullivan and there was a large and appreciative audience. The lecture opened with an introduction by the Chairman who was followed by Mr. A. J. Bayly, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, who spoke on the subject of Agriculture and dealt with the diseases affecting Potato Culture. He illustrated his remarks by lantern slides showing the various diseases attacking potato vines in this country and also some remedies for the disease. Mr. W. D. McCarter, Secretary of the Association, followed and spoke on the subject of housing and various breeds of poultry. His remarks were also illustrated. Mr. W. R. Butler, Treasurer, was the next speaker and in his remarks dealt with the breeding of chickens and production of eggs. The lecture concluded with a short address by President Williams who spoke of white Leghorns and artificial and natural methods of brooding. The lecture was concluded with the National Anthem, after which the party which included Mesdames Williams, H. Winter and E. Munn were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. John Kelly at their residence. The party was then conveyed to town by Messrs. Munn and Winter to whom the Association is deeply grateful.

Regatta Notes

Despite the fall like weather conditions hundreds visited the "Pond" last evening to see the crews practising for to-morrow's Regatta. The Methodist Guards Band were also present during the evening and gave a very excellent concent.

The strong northeast wind that was blowing, made it impossible for crews to row for time, nevertheless they showed up well and each race promises to be very keenly contested.

The best time was made by the Portugal Cove fishermen who rowed the course in 10.17. The Outer Cove men did it in 10.22 and Kearsey's truck crew were 10.41.

The Mary's Amateurs were 10.55, and Duder's crew 11.22. The Star Intermediate rowed the course in 11.45, and St. Bon's 11.01.

The Star football team had a spin in 11.38. The Cadets were out late and rowed the course in 11.00.

The racers were taken in last night and will be put in condition for tomorrow, crews to-night will use practise boats.

Winter's Mercantile crew withdrew last night as one of their crew is unable to row. This will leave only three boats in this race.

Practically all the tents were erected last night and the whole northbank is occupied. The usual dancing galleries are in evidence while swings etc., and the other side shows which go to make up our Regatta are all in evidence. All that is required is a fine day, and a succesful Regatta is assured.

FISHERIES A MOST LASTING RESOURCE

The late Sir Richard McBride expressed a great truth when he said that "there was danger of exhausting our forests, and of working out our coal and minerals, and even our agricultural lands might deteriorate in course of time; but the fisheries would remain as a permanent field of industry and source of food and wealth."

The fisheries are independent of drought or storm and war. They are self-seeded, self-cultivated, self-matured, and will continue to flourish if wisely conserved and utilized.

LONDON, July 31—The French and Belgian ambassadors last evening handed to Lord Curzon, secretary for foreign affairs, the replies of their governments regarding the negotiations with Germany to solve the problem of the Ruhr and the greater problem of German reparations.

Premier Baldwin and Lord Curzon, speaking in the House of Commons, and Lords, respectively, yesterday, did not voice any hope that Great Britain and France had drawn closer together.

The Premier, speaking an hour before the foreign secretary received the ambassadors, told the House of Commons it was very doubtful wheth er anything would be received which could be published in Thursday's debate.

"I am afraid," he said, "it will be a continuation of the negotiations."

Lord Curdon informed the House, with an air of weary resignation, he would certainly give them a statement Thursday, if it were within his power to do so., but his manner clearly indicated that he did not think it would. No hints have come across the Channel that Premier Poincare has abandoned or even modified the views which his government has held to tenaciously. He has reiterated at every opportunity that there will be no beginning of negotiations until Germany formally renouces passive resistance, and that there will be no withdrawal until she has paid France all she demands.

Canadian Labor and the Cape Breton Strikers

There is no public feeling against labor as such in this dominion. The general sentiment of the Canadian is with labor in all its reasonable efforts to advance its own cause and to improve working conditions and scales of pay. But by hasty, headstrong repudiation of agreements, labor hurts itself most severely and alienates sympathy from its cause.

Whatever the justice of their cause the members of the International Union in Cape Breton know very well that in the repudiation of their action at their own international headquarters they have been discredited not only before the general public, but in the eyes of labor generally.

They could not hope to hold out for any length of time under existing conditions. They could not hope expect any more than occasional aid from an occasional labor organization. They threw down their tools for a principle their own international refuses to recognize as just and they imposed hardships upon their wives and children by adherence to a stand it is going to be impossible for them to justify in the labor world.

Something was wrong with the leadership somewhere. It is a pity that by their own action the men should be led to injure their own cause, and a greater pity that they should have found it necessary to go on strike at all!—Montreal Star.

Important Investigation of Ocean Currents

Another Distribution of Drift Bottles Will be Made.

Mr. D. James Davies, F. I. C., F. C. S., F.G.S., Government Analyst, is to-day preparing for distribution a shipment of drift bottles recently received from the Canadian Biological Station at St. Andrews, N.B.

This station is maintained in connection with the International Research Committee of which Dr. Huntsman is secretary and Mr. Davies a member.

It will be remenbered that 250 of these bottles were gotten ready by Mr. Davies last year and dropped from the s.s. Digby on her eastern passage from St. John's to Liverpool, something over a year ago.

One of these bottles was picked up a couple of months back on the south coast of Ireland, having found its way right across the Atlantic. Others will doubtless turn up in time; but for the purposes of scientific knowledge, no practical results will be obtainable until a considerable number of these silent ocean travellers have found their way back to the committee who have this important investigation of ocean currents, in aid of the safety of ocean travel, in hand.

Consequently no definite reports may be expected, until a considerable number of the bottles have been picked up and returned to headquarters.

The present quota of drift bottles is 120. Each bottle contains a tag giving data of where put into the ocean. Inside are the necessary instructions as to where the bottles have been picked up, when, and to whom the information is to be sent.

Arrangements are being made with the Dept. of Marine and Fisheries for the present distribution, which will begin one mile south of Cape Pine and follow a southerly course about 30 miles. The distribution will be made at intervals of about four miles.

Newfoundland should have a special interest in these investigations, which have for their object the ascertaining of the course of ocean currents around the North Atlantic seaboard—the North American and the Newfoundland coasts.

It is well known that treacherous currents, of which the nautical world has but meagre knowledge sweep around this island at certain seasons, and not infrequently carry ships out of their course and to destruction, involving not alone the loss of valuable property, but the sacrifice of many precious lives. This tide menace to navigation is intensified so far as concerns us, by the frequent fogs which ships destined for Newfoundland ports have to encounter.

We feel confident that the Nfld government will facilitate in every way possible the conduct of these investigations.

Mr. Davies deserves special thanks for their interest and valuable services he has thus rendered in connection with this important work.

Judge Morris Says He Will See Law and Order Enforced

Yesterday in the Police Court there were 12 men, ranging in age from 17 to 40, before Judge Morris, charged with getting on the train at Badger and beating their way back to St. John's. They had recently been sent up there to work on free passes. His Honor said it was a poor excuse for able-bodied men to say that the flies drove them away. This was not good enough. He remembered 34 or 35 years ago, when he represented Harbor Main, when the men from that district used to walk to town and get him to intercede with the Government for a ticket to work on the Placentia railway. These men, some of them, hadn't even a crust of bread in their pocket; but they were thankful for the chance to get work of the hardest kind on the railway with a pick and shovel at $1.00 a day. These men got their passes, but they stuck it. Where's our country going to land, if men refused to work. He did not intend to send them to jail, but would have them sign an agreement to pay the fare, $6.50. What the conduct of public men may be, honest, or decent or otherewise, should find no place for comment in these proceedings. It was his duty to maintain the law and protect the rights of the public, and this he intended to do.

Vol. X., No. 168. ST. JOHN'S, THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1923. PRICE : TWO CENTS.

Hon. W. H. Cave, Minister of Finance, Delivers His First Budget Speech

STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER AND OPPOSITION LEADER

Expenditure Next Fiscal Year Will Be Within Revenue

$9,150,000 Is Estimated From All Sources For 1923-24.

THREE MILLION DOLLARS FOR RAILWAY AND OTHER IMPROVEMENTS.

At Tuesday's sitting of the House of Assembly, Finance Minister Hon. W. H. Cave, delivered his first Budget Speech, which was a clear and concise outline of the Colony's financial position. The estimated revenue from all sources for the current fiscal year is in excess of that for the past year by nearly half a million dollars, and according to the Estimates tabled early in the session, the expenditure for the same period will be well within the Colony's income.

The reductions that had been made in the tariff to encourage the prosecution of the fishery this year by enabling fishermen to outfit more cheaply has resulted in a considerable decrease in revenue and makes further material reductions impossible at this time. It will be noted, however, that, in addition to the removal of the export duty on dried codfish which took place last year, the Government has now taken the export tax off all salt bulk codfish as well. This will mean a big thing for the fishermen of the South West Coast especially as this section has for years been shipping large quantities of fish away in salt bulk.

Resolutions are also introduced to give effect to the Spanish Agreement and the preferential tariff between Newfoundland and Jamaica. The latter will undoubtedly have the effect of greatly increasing our trade with that country where a good market for our produce should be found under these favorable conditions. The Budget Speech as delivered by the Minister of Finance is as follows:

HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—Mr. Speaker, I approach the presentation of the annual Bdget with much diffidence because I recognize that the few weeks during which it has been my honour to occupy the onerous and responsible position of Minister of Finance and Customs of this Dominion have been altogether too short to enable me to get such a grasp of the general financial situation that I can on this occasion address you with the assurance and authority which is so desirable in an important matter of this sort. I have found the situation particularly difficult because I have had to retain the general supervision of the Ministry of Shipping which was the Department which I held up to a few weeks ago, and in addition to that the pressure of Legislative responsibilities has further encroached upon the time which I would otherwise have had to give full and careful study to our financial problems. I therefore feel that I shall have the indulgence of the House on this occasion, if I deal with the matter briefly and rely almost entirely upon the official statistics provided in the report of the Auditor General and statements and estimates which I have secured from the responsible officials of that Department. I think, however, that the entire House will agree with me that in view of the very short period of time in which I have had to get in touch with the Department of Finance and Customs, the House would prefer my quoting official figures and semi-official estimates rather than that I should submit statements and estimates for the preparation of which I would undertake to assume sole responsibility in spite of the brevity of my tenure of office.

HON. W. H. CAVE,
Minister of Finance and Customs.

In the Budget Speech delivered on the 25th of May, 1921, by the late Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, the revenue for the fiscal year expiring on the 30th day of June, 1922, was estimated at $8,404,500.000. It can readily be understood that the attempt to make close estimates of the Customs tariff the collection of which is made on an ad valorem basis is at all times hazardous and particularly hazardous in view of the unsettled and abnormal post-war conditions. I therefore feel, and I am sure this House will concur in my statement, that the Estimates of the late Prime Minitser were most conservative and business-like, for, as a matter of fact, in spite of the abnormal depression of that year the revenue actually collected exceeded the amount estimated by the sum of $95,180.92. The exact figure is $8,499,680.92 while the amount estimated as per the late Prime Minister's Budget Speech was $8,404,500.00.

Duty Off Salt Bulk Fish.

As I have already said, it is not an easy thing to make an estimate at the beginning of a year. In the Budget Speech also delivered by the late Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, on the 5th day of April, 1922, the revenue for the fiscal year 1922-23 was estimated by him at $8,953,000.00. The estimate was based upon the tariff then in force and as amended by the Resolutions submitted to the House contemporaneously with the delivery of the Budget. It will be remembered that after the delivery of the Budget Speech an acute situation arose with respect to the prosecution of our staple industry, the fisheries, and as a result certain substantial reductions in taxation were made on various necessary articles in connection with outfitting for the fishery. At a later date when market condition abroad became so depressed that it was patent to all that, having regard to the prices which could be secured for our staple article and having regard to their depreciated exchange in our markets, the fishery could not be prosecuted during the year at a profit, and when the time arrived when the wholesale merchants of the country were placing orders abroad for this spring's fishery it was seen that further reduction in taxation should be effected, in the hope that thereby the fishery industry might be stabilized and the cost of outfitting materially reduced. An effort was made in two directions:

1. By a removal of the export tax on dry codfish and a refund of export tax which had been collected up to the date of that decision on the proceeds of last year's voyage. (I am now recommending that the export duty be taken off Salt Bulk Codfish entirely and a resolution to that effect will be submitted to the Committee.)
2. The elimination of the twenty-five per cent. surtax which had been imposed some years previously for the specific purpose of securing additional revenue to meet the special War burden which the Colony was carrying.

There was also a large reduction in the tax on sugar, namely, a reduction of two and one half cents per pound. The aggregate of these reductions as at the 30th day of June 1923, is estimated at the sum of $412,040.00. The actual revenue as at the 30th day of June is estimated at $8,844,000.00. It will be thus seen that when in his Budget Speech of April 5, 1922, the late Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, estimated a revenue of $8,953,000.00 on the basis of the tariff then current he was again conservative in his estimate, the revenue for the year on that basis actually working out at the approximate sum of $9,231,040.00, which was $303,040.00 more than his estimate. In view, however, of the special reductions in revenue subsequently made for the purpose of stablizing our fishery operations, the gross revenue as at the 30th day of June is now estimated at $8,844,000.00.

Reduction.

It will be remembered that during the debate on the Budget in the House of Assembly in April and May last, the necessity for material reduction in taxation was fully discussed, and the late Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, then pointed out that it was a question of policy to be subsequently decided upon as to whether it was best in the interests of the country to make cheaper outfitting for the fisheries possible and at the same time to face a deficit than to maintain the revenue at its standard at that time and have a surplus That matter of policy was very carefully considered and discussed after the close of the Legislature, was later fully discussed and the opinion of some of our leading financiers taken thereon, and the decision of the Executive Government was that, having regard to world conditions appertaining particularly to our fish trade and generally with a view to cheapening the cost of goods to the

CHAPTER XXX.

The Trail

"Doing what?"

The banker shrugged his shoulders.

"Prospecting in the good old-fashioned way, I'm told. Washing out the gold dust in their pannikins on the creek when it happens to be there; and in their odd minutes hunting for Arizona's pile. Affery thinks he has a boost on it, and will find it before he dies."

"But you don't think that?" said Garvock significantly.

Once more the banker shrugged his shoulders.

"I don't believe, for a second that there's any treasure. I put it to you—is it likely, after all these years, and with the crew of prospectors that have been over every blessed inch of the ground a thousand times? You see, the story of Arizona's buried treasure got about, and a good many of the tenderfoots and some of the old hands as well have had a try for it."

"You've seen and spoken with my cousin? He isn't the kind of man to be taken in with af airy tale like this, I should have thought——"

"A man is not the same man here as elsewhere. There's something in the air that nips the blood. I loath it, but all the same, I'll never leave it. And things have happened here that, if they were written in books, would never be believed. It's a land of mystery this! And it's my belief that it never was intended to be conquered by civilization—like the rest of the world—and that the few who have made good here will have to pay the price sooner or later."

"Queer idea! But it's a gorgeous country," said Garvock. "It's the finest in the world, surely. I've never seen any thing to touch it!"

"Nor anyone else. But don't forget that you see it now under the most favorable conditions. We have eight months of an Arctic winter when the Yukon comes to its own, returns to its primal silence and desolation. You can't get over eight months of Arctic winter. It'll effectually bar the way to further progress—in the ordinary sense, I mean. Personally, I think the Yukon in its primal state is something nearer heaven and all the mysteries of the eternity than any other bit of the earth! And I am a hard-headed Yonker from Albany—and don't you forget it!"

"Well now," said Garvock, trying to shake off the singular spell he felt being woven about him. "this Gold-water Creek—how does one get to it?"

"You'll have to go back on the trail about forty or fifty miles—nothing in this weather! The day after to-morrow the stake starts on the return journey—probably the last of the season. Would you like me to go with you?"

Garvock hesitated a moment, and the Yankee was quick enough to grasp the significance of that brief hesitancy.

"No. Of course you don't want any strangers messing about the family gathering. I ought to have known better. Well, then, where are you stopping? I'm a bachelor, but I can do you fairly well."

Garvock thanked him and accepted, for the man was very kind and friendly; and during the next four and twenty hours of forced inactivity in Dawson he had ample opportunity of hearing much more that was interesting, and some things that were almost incredible, about the strange new land to which he had come.

He heard stories of the old Dawson days, when the gold-born city was in the full grip of lawlessness and lust; heard, too, how the troops came over the White Horse Pass to proclaim martial law; and many stories of personal heroism which put into the shade all the fiction of adventure he had consumed in his youth. In fact, he felt inclined to ask himself whether he was in his sober senses, and listening to tales of actual life.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Greater Love

On Friday, about tne of the morning, he got on board the stage once more, bound for the nearest point to Goldwater Creek. In the late afternoon, having left his small hand bag at the rest-house, and received full instructions, he set out on foot to find Gold-water Creek and the shack where Affery and Alan Rankine were leading the simple life.

To the death, Garvock would remember that day of heavenly beauty; the entrancing blue of the skies, the vivid coloring on the mountain and wood, of the glow of the summer sun on the snows, and the wealth of wild flowers—frail creatures of a day, many of them, but incomparably beautiful.

The only living thing he encountered was an Indian squaw of unimaginable ugliness, who stared at him with the utmost stolidity and made no sign that she even recognized his existence. The sight of smoke a little distance off indicated the proximity of a wig-wam or shelter of some kind. Presently he descended upon the left bank of the Klondyke River, and began to find more signs of life.

Here and there he saw the ruins of shacks, the remnants of a disused gold dredge, a heap of pannikins and cans, eaten through with rust, and at rare intervals, a thin line of smoke surling upward to the sky, indicating that humanity was to be found in these strange and desolate solitudes.

Presently, low down the creek he came across an old man sitting down, a black pipe in the corner of his cheek, and a pannikin in front of him, in which he appeared to be washing the precious dust.

The ice was moving out of the Klondyke now, and its mid-channel was clear, but at the edges it had to be broken and pushed aside to get at the running water—no difficult task, now that a sun of daily-increasing intensity was blazing high in the heavens.

He stood up stolidly, and without uttering a word, pointed with a skinny and dirty hand, from which two fingers had gone in the frost bite, to a little wooden frame house hanging sheer on the edge of the bank overlooking the river. It was about five hundred yards distant.

Garvock thanked him and pondered whether he might offer some honorarium for service rendered, but was restrained by the reflection that perhaps he might be offering alms to some Bonanza king, who would scorn it. As he walked away face to face with the fact that so short a distance now intervened between himself and the man he had made such a tremendous journey to find, he was overcome by that strange sort of reluctance which causes men of his nationality and temperament to shrink from scenes of emotion or personal feeling. It is within the mark to say that that was quite the most poignant moment in Peter Garvock's momentous undertaking.

But puling himself together, he advanced in a straight line towards the indicated shack. It stood alone in the midst of a clearing, with a hill rising behind it, every available inch of which was ablaze with flowers. In front lay the winding river and hills beyond hills, with snow-peaks rising to the sky.

He marched on, stumbling now and again over some rut in the track, and keeping his eyes fixed on the half open door. And presently, it was drawn back and a gaunt man, in top boots into which his trousers were pushed, and a digger's shirt of grey flannel, open at the throat, and guiltless of a collar.

But the face, save that it was thin, had hardly altered. At sight of its ineffable sadness, something gripped Peter by the throat, and he could have stood still in the roadway and cried like a child.

The noble head was quickly turned, a pair of startled eyes dwelt on the face of the approaching stranger, then ensued silence, absolute and profound.

In the last week he had dwelt much among dreams and shadows, and listened by day and through the silent night watches to the wanderings of a sick and dying man, and he had now no doubt that his imagination had run away with him.

But this wraith was very real, for presently it stepped nearer, and with outstretched hand, spoke thus:

"It's Peter, Alan, come to take you home."

"Peter!" stammered Alan. "But how have you come? How did you know I was here?"

"I made it my business to find out, old chap," said Garvock joyfully, for now that Rankine spoke, the strain of the moment almost anguished in its intensity, was relaxed.

"I don't understand," said Alan dully. "It's the queerest thing I've ever heard—that you should seek and fine me here."

"There's nothing queer about it, Alan. Let's go somewhere and just talk it out."

He made for the bench in front of the shack, but Rankine looked around at the door with a somewhat wavering smile.

"There's a dead man inside, Peter. My pal—the best pal ever man had in this God-forsaken world!"

Peter loked aghast.

"Affery?"

Part 2.—Wine and wine lees, Brandy, Raisins.

RESOLUTIONS II.

WHEREAS the Governor in Council has raised a Loan of Thirty Thousand Dollars from the Bank of Montreal for the purchase of Fire Fighting Apparatus for the Fire Department, and it is desirable to provide for re-payment of the said Loan and intrest thereon by a Tax upon Fire Insurance Companies,

BE IT RESOLVED (a) The said Loan is hereby declared valid. (b) Every Company accepting premiums of Insurance against fire upon property within the City of St. John's shall in addition to the tax provided for by Section 9 of the Revenue (amendment) Act 1905, 12 Geo. V. Cap. 34, pay to His Majesty for a period not to exceed three years from the date of the passing of this Resolution a further tax of one-quarter of one percentum per annum to be computed on the gross amount of premiums actually received by the said Company annually. The amount so paid shall be applied to the liquidation of the Loan referred to, together with the interest, at the rate of six per centum per annum theron.

RESOLUTIONS III.

WHEREAS the Governor in Council in reciprocation for certain Tariff privileges granted by the Government of Jamaica on Products of Newfoundland imported into Jamaica has deemed it advisable to make a preferential Tariff on products of Jamaica imported into this Colony.

BE IT RESOLVED the duties imposed by the Revenue Act 1905 and the Acts in amendment thereof shall be subject to a reduction of Twenty-five per cent. of the total amount payable in respect of goods the product of Jamaica imported into this Colony.

RESOLUTION IV.

RESOLVED that notwithstanding anything in the Timber Exportation Act 1921 or any other Act contained it shall be lawful until the 31st. day of December, 1923, to export timber to Great Britain Canada and the United States of America in accordance with the provisions of the said Act without payment of the export duty imposed by Section 4 of the said Act.

This Resolution shall be deemed to have come into effect on the first day of July 1922.

RESOLUTION V.

RESOLVED that (a) Section 1 of 12 Geo. V. Cap. 34 be hereby repealed except in so far as it affects duties imposed upon Wines and such like enumerated in Item 151 of Schedule A to the Revenue Act 1905 and Acts in Amendment thereof.

(b) The Surtax imposed by the said Section shall continue to be levied and collected in the case of duties imposed upon Wines and such like aforesaid.

This Resolution shall be deemed to have come into effect on the 17th day of February, 1923.

RESOLUTION VI.

RESOLVED that Schedule E of the Revenue Act, 1905, as amended by subsequent Acts be hereby further amended by striking out the following:

This Resolution shall be deemed to have come into effect on the 19th day of February, 1923.

Big Haul of Chicago Society Notables

121 Men and Women in Disorderly House Charge.

CHICAGO, July 24. — (Associated Press.)—One hundred and twenty-one defendants, many of them women, comprising the best dressed crowd arraigned in police court for many months, appeared yesterday in the Chicago avenue branch of the municipal court as a result of a raid early Sunday on "The Tent," Chicago's newest cafe catering to the spenders in the near north side district known as the "Gold Coast."

The crown was caught in a 4 a.m. raid and charges of being inmates of a disorderly house were filed against all those arrested. They were haule away to the police station like common law violators and much indignation was arousel.

Many of those arrested had to stay in cells for hours before bonds were arranged.

Many names prominent in Chicago social life given by certain defendants as well as the names of Smith and Jones, given by others, were believed by the police to have been assumed for the concealment of identity.

Fifteen lawyers appeared on behalf of the defendants and obtained a continuance of the hearing until July 27.

House of Assembly Opens Under New Ministry

Premier Warren Makes Clear Cut Statement.

OPPOSITION LEADER REPLIES.

After an adjournment of a week the house of Assembly met at the usual hour on Tuesday. Before proceeding to routine business the new Prime Minister, Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C., arose in his place and reviewed the political situation during the interegnum. The Prime Minister said,

Mr. Speaker:—Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I beg leave to say a few words, with the permission of you and the House. Since I last addressed the House I have succeeded in forming an administration and in carrying out the task imposed upon me by His Excellency. When called upon to form a Government in view of conditions in the country and in order to make the Government a more representative one, I approached the Hon. and learned Leader of the Opposition and requested the co-operation of that party. In the interests of the Colony they were prepared to assist, but in negotiating the details of an amalgamation we came to a deadlock and negotiations came to an end. I must express my regret that I failed but I take this opportunity of saying how I appreciate the personal tribute of confidence they paid me in preparing to co-operate under my leadership. Accordingly, Sir, I have formed a Government from the material I had at my disposal on this side of the House, and I am glad to say I have a united party behind me. The history and experience of previous Prime Ministers are not such as to encourage me to undertake the responsibilities of the position and I am further discouraged by the legacy left me. It cannot be denied that the party and the Government have sustained a severe blow by reason of recent happenings. Undoubtedly public confidence has been shaken. Then, Sir, I have to ask myself the question "How can I restore that confidence?" My answer is, first, by an impartial and immediate investigation into the departments concerned. The commission of enquiry must have carte blanche. It must have an absolutely free hand. The commission must be one in which the public will have confidence, and I will even go so far as to submit the names to the Leader of the Opposition before the commission is appointed. I owe it to the country, to my party, and to myself to have this investigation and to make it as thorough as possible. We all want to start with a clean slate. Secondly, we think we can restore confidence by adhering to the path of rectitude and by seeing that no charges can be levelled against my administration, and thirdly, by prudent honest administration to merit the approbation of the country. I make no pretensions to statesmanship. I do not profess to be one but by these simple means it may be possible to restore confidence. I count upon the healthy and helpful criticism of the Opposition towards this end. We shall of course come in for criticism, harsh criticism, but I think I am safe in saying—to use a common expression—they will not hit me "below the belt." And Sir, by the time a general election is upon us, if I have not inspired the confidence and trust I have anticipated I shall gladly and willingly transfer the burden to more capable shoulders.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, following the example of the Hon. the Prime Minister, I have to ask the permission of yourself and the House for saying just a word or two. At the outset I desire to thank the Leader of the House for the very open manner in which he has just addressed us, and for his frank admission that the desire to form a Coalition Government emanated from himself and those who supported him. I think in making this admission publicly he has done himself credit. I go further and say that in his desire to avail of the recent and unexpected political development to change the lines of demarcation which unfortunately are at present existing in this Assembly he has set an example in liberality of thought that should not quickly be forgotten. Every right-thinking man must deplore the present unnatural division which exists in this House. And so, when an opportunity was offered to alter this situation, and the offer was made from a majority of the House, it may be wondered why this proposal was not accepted. Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is simple. It was no ta question where we were masters of our own destiny. To me, personally, the matter of associating with the new Prime Minister would have been a pleasure. As a life-long friend I have had especial opportunities to confirm the statement I now make as to his honesty of purpose and absolute trustworthiness. It will be a great disappointment to me if in his new office he fails to live up to the high opinion I have always held of him.

It might also be asked why an opportunity to obtain what is commonly referred to as "place and power," namely offices of emolument for ourselves was thrown down. Well, I think I speak the thoughts of Sir Michael Cashin (who because of his seniority in the House was associated with me in the discussions that have recently taken place) that we felt we were helpless. We could not think alone of ourselves and our friends on this side of the House. There was a power beyond us. We were merely the servants of the people who sent us here and so had to act as we thought was proper in their interests. We did not seek office; the request came from the other side. We were prepared to go a long way to assist in making a stable Government but there was a limit to our co-operation. Right from the outset we insisted that the party led by the late Prime Minister should go on His successor in office had the unanimous support of his party, and there was really no absolute necessity for a further strengthening of his ranks. He had a majority of 21 to 13. He and his associates had decided to dethrone the late Prime Minister, and we were but spectators to the unexpected tragedy. The reasons for this change of leadership were matters to be explained by them. Despite rumours to the effect that this was a "plot"; despite the propaganda that it was a religious "frame up" so that we could obtain power and monetary remuneration, we are to-day in the House exactly as before the change of leadership in the Government ranks. We retain our solid front, and the only loss is from the opposite side. No, Mr. Speaker, we did not desire to ride into power over a corpse. We do not, to use a football expression, like to win the game by a "penalty kick." We would rather secure our goal by other and more sportsmanlike means of play. Nevertheless it is but due to the new Prime Minister and his colleague, Sir William Coaker, for me to say that in their conferences with Sir Michael Cashin and myself they displayed a spirit of interest in the public welfare that is to their credit. It is probably better that we were able to meet and part in this spirit, and that it was impossible to come to a common basis of agreement.

Who knows but that it was providential that the opportunity has occurred to get matters cleaned up. Things could not go on as they have been going, and it is due to the members of the Government themselves that there should be a full and complete investigation of the happenings that have led up to the present situation. It is not fair, until we see how far the members of the Government are responsible for what has taken place, to comment here upon the unfortunate affair which in our private capacities we all so deeply deplore. We are hopeful of a full and careful house-cleaning by a tribunal which, to use an expression that is inelegant but expressive, will "whitewash" nobody. If ever there was a time when party differences should be dropped and party affiliations left out of consideration it is while this enquiry is being proceeded with, so that, while we may criticise where it is found necessary to do so, I think it will be found that whatever criticism is offered from this side of the House will be of a helpful nature rather than that which may be calculated to impede the progress of the business of the legislature. We on this side have every wish that the Hon. Prime Minister may receive the fullest support from the members of his own party, and I will go so far as to say that if they were not prepared to give that support they would not be worthy of the place which they occupy in this House. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to do everything possible to facilitate the Hon. Leader of the House in cleaning up the mess that he is confronted with, but when the decks are properly cleared for action again we can assure him of a fair and determined fight. We do not want to charge him until he has both legs on the ground. In this spirit we extend to the Hon. the Prime Minister the assurance that there will be no cause for complaint so long as he lives up to the promise that he has given to have a thorough investigation by an impartial board. This is a feature which, no matter how we may be disposed personally, we cannot cloak up. It is not a personal matter but one which affects the whole country and of which the country must have full information. This enquiry may restore confidence at a time when confidence is sorely needed because there are difficult times ahead and unless the public can have faith in those who are in high places, in those who are responsible for the expenditure of public monies, our position will be very little better than it was before.

Hon. the Minister of Finance delivered his Budget Speech, which is publish in full elsewhere in this issue.

Mr. Cashin (Ferryland) asked who is the acting general manager of the railway and the salary paid him. Also has instructions been issued to buy the winter's supply of coal, from whom and at what costs.

On the motion to adjourn, the Leader of the Opposition drew the attention of the House to complaints made by men recently returned from Badger. These men complain that they were charged exhorbitant prices, and it was absolutely impossible for them to earn more than enough to keep themselves. They were told that the prices were Government prices. The men promised to furnish him the grub bills. The Prime Minister asked that the bills be sent him, and he promised an immediate investigation.

The House then adjourned until this afternoon.

England Now Possesses Undersea Battle Cruiser

CHATHAM, England, July 9 (AP)—When England's new "mystery ship," Submarine X-I, was launched here recently, newspapermen and spectators were rigidly excluded, and the approaches to the dockyards were heavily guarded to make sure no unauthorized person should see her take the water. Nevertheless it can be said the launching was in all ways successful, and the latest addition to under-sea power was at once towed to the dockyard for completion.

The new vessel is the last word in submarines; she is really a submersible battle-cruiser. Her displacement when submerged will be 3,600 tons, 1,400 tons greater than that of the largest German submarine and considerably greater than any of the existing American types. On the surface the X-I will use steam for navigation, but when submerged will use electricity.

There is great diversity of opinion regarding the size of the new vessel's armament. In some quarters, it is said, she will mount a gun of 12 or 13.5-inch calibre. It is possible, however, that the X-I has been designed for a high surface speed, enabling her to work with the Grand Battle Fleet. If this is true a big gun would not be carried.

The cost of the new submarine, apart from armament and ordnance stores, will be nearly $5,000,000. At present there are 59 submarines in the British Fleet, and of these the M class, which mount a 12-inch gun, are the most powerful.

People In The Public Eye

(The Family Herald and Weekly Star)

TO EXPLORE THE ARCTIC.

Captain Robert A. Bartlett, veteran of five polar expenditions, the most famous of which was Peary's successful dash, when he accompanied the explorer to within 100 miles of the North Pole, has gone to New York to raise funds for a three-year expedition to the Arctic Sea to measure its flow and currents and dredge its bottom.

He has just come out of Newfoundland, where he spent the worst winter in fifty-two years seal hunting. He sailed under his father, who is 72, about March 1, into the heaviest ice floes and gales that part of the world has known since 1876, and is now planning the earliest possible return.

Captain Bartlett became the master of a sealer when he was 17, and now holds both United States and English masters' tickets. Born in Newfoundland in 1875, he became a United States citizen fifteen years ago. His first Arctic expedition was in 1898 with Peary to Cape D'Urville, and what is of next greatest importance after the 1905-9 discovery expedition with him is the Canadian Arctic Expedition under Stefansson, when the ship Karluk was lost off Wrangel Island.

Bartlett crossed 500 miles of ice to Siberia with an Eskimo, got relief and returned to the island, and on September 12, 1914, reached Nome, Asaska, with the fourteen survivors who had spent the winter there. He has received many medals, including the hubbard gold medal of the National Geographical Society.

Steel Workers Call Off Strike

100 Killed in Train Wreck

Further Statements on Reparations.

PRESIDENT HARDING BETTER

THE STRIKE ENDS

SYDNEY, Aug. 1.—The Sydney steel strike is over. At a mass meeting of steel workers, held at union headquarters to-night, about sixty-five per cent of those present voted to end the strike and return to work. The union executive will notify the British Empire Steel Co., accordingly. In their resolution which formally ends the strike, the steel workers complain that every man's hand is against them, and they censure people, courts, police, newspapers and Federal and Provincial Governments. The Steel Company stated to-day that 2500 men were working at the plant of approximately 3450 who were there when the strike began. The strike began on the morning of June 27 for twenty per cent. wage increase, and check-off system of collecting union dues which would involve recognition of their union.

WILL MAKE ANOTHER ATTEMPT

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Whether the closing sitting of Parliament to-day will reveal the next step by the British Government in the difficult European problems is still unknown. The Cabinet prolonged the discussion of the situation to-day but has only brought thus far the announcement that Premier Baldwin and Lord Curzon will make simultaneous statements in the Commons and Lords respectively to-morrow, but not the slightest indication of the nature of the statements was revealed. The Prime Minister's statement in the Commons to-day that in the absence of permission from the French and Belgian Governments for publication of their notes, the debate would be restricted, it seems to point to the fact that the Government does not consider the time has arrived to take any new line. Hopeless as the prospects of an agreement with France seems, probabilities point to another attempt on the part of the Government to achieve such agreement by further negotiations, in which case Premier Baldwin's statement in Parliament is likely to be comparatively brief, dealing with the British position and embodying a renewed warning to France that negotiations cannot be indefinitely protracted

SNOW KILLS CROPS

CALGARY, Aug. 1.—Snow has laid the crops fifteen miles west of Calgary and the foot hills are white. Rain is general from Edmonton to the border. Snow is reported from Banff with a very brief fall in Calgary, Dewington and Claresholm. Minimum temperature of thirty-eight degrees. These are the outstanding facts about the storm that swept over the greater part of the province since Sunday night.

PARIS SURPRISED

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Both surprise and regret are expressed in Paris at the impression caused in London by the French and Belgian replies to Lord Curzon's reparations note. The complaint is made that the secrecy which has been so carefully observed by French ficial circles regarding the British note has not been observed in London respecting France's reply. The belief is felt here that London feels disappointment at finding that France and Belgium are so united on fundamental principles, notably relative to the Ruhr. Paris cannot understand that France should be asked to evacuate the Ruhr, yet Germany is not asked to abandon passive resistance. Refusal by Great Britain to continue the conversations is looked for although Premier Poincare's reply is considered of a nature to permit conversations to go on.

TORONTO, Aug. 1.—Definite decision to call a meeting of the joint Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregationalist Church Union Commission on September 27th was reached to-day as a result of conversations between Dr. Chown of the Methodist Church. Dr. Pidgeon representing the Presbyterians and H. W. Baker, General Treasurer of the Congregational Church.

FALL IN GERMAN MARK CAUSES FOOD SHORTAGE

DUSSELDORF, Aug. 1.—The effect of last week's fall of the mark showed itself in a pronounced food shortage throughout the Ruhr. Farmers refuse to exchange goods or potatoes for badly depreciated money, and in consequence potatoes, meat and other staples are almost unobtainable at any price. Farmers will not bring product into town. This is true not only in the Ruhr but elsewhere in Germany.

A Big Majority

NORTH SYDNEY, Aug. 1.—Government candidate Major F. L. Kelly, of North Sydney, was elected to the House of Commons by a majority of 856 in the Federal bye-election to-day. In Cape Breton North and Victora he received 4905 votes, R. H. Butts Conservative 4049 votes and Daniel D. MacDonald, nominee of the Independent Labor Party received 1555 votes and lost his deposit.

Rev. Canon Scott Speaks

QUEBEC, Aug. 1.—Rev. Canon Scott well known Canadian Padre of the great war gave out the statement last night in commenting on a sermon delivered at St. Matthew's Church last Sunday by Rev. J. D. Hamelin relative to working conditions of the workers in Cape Breton. Canon Scott stated that the Canadians sohuld call on the Government for complete investigation of the conditions of the workers both in the Steel camp and the mines of Cape Breton. It has been publicly stated and never denied that the wages of the workers in more than fifty per cent of mines are only from 32 to 35 cents for hour and that the day shift consists of 11 hours and the night shift of 13. It is incredible that this should be, but the public must know the facts. That there should be a small proportion of reds among the strikers must not be allowed to blind our eyes to the important issue at stake, which is, have the strikers as a whole the right on their side? said Canon Scott during his remarks on the subject.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1923.

The Prime Minister's Statement

Prime Minister Warren's statement, in the House Tuesday, regarding a commission to enquire into alleged political irregularities, will be found in another column and will, we think, be considered as clear-cut, open and aboveboard.

There is, no doubt, that Hon. Mr. Warren is sincere in his efforts to deal with this matter in a manner that will justify confidence and merit public respect. According to the Prime Minister's statement, the investigation will be immediate and impartial, the commission being no "hole-in-the-corner" affair, and having an absolutely free hand.

The circumstances under which the Prime Minister and the whole Government Party find themselves in relation with this matter, must necessarily be very trying, and the attitude they have taken, bespeak, on their part, action which is honorable and fearless.

THE BUDGET

When the House resumed its sitting on Tuesday, Finance Minister Hon. W. H. Cave delivered his Budget Speech, which is published in full in this issue.

Mr. Cave is to be congratulated on the satisfactory and encouraging statement of the Colony's financial position which this, his first Budget, constitutes, and while circumstances have not permitted the announcement of any material reductions in the tariff, it will be readily realized that the removal of taxes made during the past twelve months for the purpose of giving greater encouragement to the fishermen of the country to engage in the staple industry rendered further considerable reductions at this juncture impossible.

It is encouraging to note that while the expenditure for the fiscal year 1922-23 exceeded the revenue, as a result, largely, of immense outlay for relief and other purposes, the estimated revenue for the current year will meet the proposed expenditure and leave an appreciabl surplus.

Resolutions are introduced in connection with the Budget to give effect to the preferential tariff between Newfoundland and Jamaica, and to the Spanish Agreement. That the former will have the effect of increasing our trade with the West Indies country there can be no doubt, and the future should see a big increase in the quantity of our codfish going there.

Another desirable feature of the Budget, and one which will be of particular interest to the fishermen, especially those of the South Western section of the Island, is the announcement that the export duty on salt bulk codfish is to be entirely removed. As large shipments of salt bulk fish are made to Canada and the States annually, this will mean a big saving to the producers.

As pointed out in the Budget, the Humber Valley development will necessitate considerable improvement to the railway system by the addition of rolling stock and other equipment and a substantial portion of the required rolling stock is being provided by the contractors themselves. It is the intention, also, in order to keep pace with the general development, to give greater attention to main line roads by replacing insecure wooden bridges by concrete structures. It is the aim of the Government to handle such major expenditures as these improvements will entail out of capital account rather than out of current expenditure.

In connection with development as it relates to the providing of employment for our people the Budget Speech contains the following statement:

"The experience which the Colony has had in relief works during recent years has been very unsatisfactory. It has been difficult, often quite impossible, to secure value in labour for money expended in connection with operations. I consequently desire to take this opportunity of expressing the firm conviction that the policy of this Administration in discontinuing relief operations is wise and that such works should not be undertaken, but that on the other hand such permanent works as are imperatively necessary for the well-being and development of the resources of the country should be undertaken on the basis of contract subject to a rigid inspection. Such a course would give employment to those who are able and willing to give value for money expended and those who for physical or mental reasons are unable to give value in work for the money expended should be handled through the various religious and philanthropic charitable organizations assisted where necessary by the Department of Public Charities in precisely the same manner as such assistance was given prior to the post-war turmoil which his so upset labour conditions and reduced efficiency.

"To meet requirements for railway equipment and improvements necessitated by the industrial development of Newfoundland which as a result of the active policy of this Administration has been so largely undertaken, and to provide essential permanent improvements in connection with road and bridge work and other necessary public utilities I propose to submit in due course resolutions authorizing the Government to raise a loan not exceeding $3,000,000.00."

Sir Newton Moore Is Interviewed By The Advocate

British M. P. and Director of British Empire Steel Corp. Speaks of Industrial Outlook for Newfoundland.

During the week St. John's had the honor of a visit from General Sir Newton Moore, K. C. M. G., one of the European directors of the British Empire Steel Corporation. Sir Newton, accompanied by Mr. H. B. Gillis, superintendent of ore miner and quarries, had been at Bell Island to inspect the mines, having arrived there by the s.s. Hangerland, from Sydney. They crossed over from the Island Sunday night and left by Tuesday's express, enroute to Aguathuna where the Company's lime quarries are located, from whence they will proceed to Sydney by the Hangerland, Sir Newton going to Montreal from there.

Had pleasant Day

Altho brief, Sir Newton's stay in St. John's was an extremely pleasant one and he left with a highly favorable impression of the Colony and its people. He met many of our leading citizens and on Monday was the guest of Sir Michael Cashin at luncheon at his home, "Cambroil," being entertained that evening at Government House. He also enjoyed some motor trips to suburban points and was delighted with the many beauty spots around St. John's. On his departure Sir Newton spoke in glowing terms of the hospitality that had been extended him while here and he hopes to visit Newfoundland again in the not distant future.

The Mining Outlook

When interviewed by an Advocate representative, Sir Newton Moore said that the future operations of the Wabana mines depended largely upon the success or otherwise of the negotiations now in progress between the allied country, he said, there is, under certain conditions, a market for a very large annual output from the mines at Bell Island, and but for the French occupation of the Ruhr district that market would by now have been developed to a most satisfying degree. Last year the British Empire Steel Corporation exported nearly a million tons of Newfoundland ore to Germany under contract, and similar arrangements would have continued indefinitely under normal conditions. Besco had secured customers amongst the biggest steel manufacturers in the Ruhr Valley, including Stinnes and other concerns of equal note, and it was not unlikely that the Crupp works would have been among the consumers of our product ere long. While large contracts have been made with these customers for this year, it is only occasionally that a cargo can be delivered to them. The uncertainty attending the sending of ore cargoes to Germany now, and the expense entailed, render shipments to that country anything but an attractive proposition. Every cargo sent forward is a mere speculation and even with the assurance of delivery, the additional expense of discharging into lighters, the enormous import duties and high freights, leave scarcely enough to make ends meet.

Our Ore in Demand

Should the present negotiations between the Allies and Germany terminate satisfactorily and result in the French clearing out of the Ruhr, it may reasonably be expected that this country will immediately benefit by the resumption of interrupted trade between the Steel Corporation and their European customers. Newfoundland ore is regarded very favorably in the German steel industry, as it makes a splendid mixture with Swedish ore for the production of high grade steel. It became, after the war a highly satisfactory substitute for the Lorraine ore which mines passed out of the hands of the Germans into those of France, and it is because France is now anxious to find an outlet for their own product that Newfoundland ore is being excluded wherever possible. In connection with the Steel Corporation's German markets, Sir Newton Moore has himself been almost exclusively engaged during the past year, and he has made no less than seven trips to the Ruhr district within that period. He has personally secured the intervention of Lord Curzon, the British foreign secretary, and carried on negotiations with political leaders in the French capital.

Securing Other Markets

In the meantime the British Empire Steel Corporation has been active in trying to secure new markets and particularly in endeavoring to stimulate a demand for our ore in Great Britain. A contract has been entered into with the Baldwin works in England for 60,000 tons, which amount it is hoped to increase before long. Another contract has been entered into in Philadelphia for 60,000 tons, some cargoes of which have already been shipped.

The Strike Situation

Asked what effect he thought the Sydney strike would have on the future operations of the Wabana mines, Sir Newton said he hoped it would not affect them seriously. The strike had affected the strikers themselves more vitally, perhaps, than anyone else. The Steel plant usually employed about 4,000 operatives and of this number 2,400 were again back at work. Referring to the dynamite outrages reported in Tuesday's messages, he said that while things may be tied up for a few days, there would, in all probability, be very little serious consequences in the way of damage to the plant. "The serious feature of the occurrence, to my mind," said Sir Newton, "is the deplorable spirit abongst the perpetrat ore which it evidences. There are now engaged in the Wabana mines some eighteen hundred men and another four hundred and fifty at Aguathuna and whether the former number will be increased or reduced depends entirely upon developments in the European situation. In all probability, more ore will be required in Sydney this year than was used there last season.

Is Well-known Statesman

Sir Newton Moore is a prominent figure in parliamentary and military circles in the Old Country. He is a member of the British House of Commons and Chairman of the Standing Orders Committee. Speaking of matters in England, he said there was very little improvement in conditions there and he feared that another difficult winter was before that country when unemployment and industrial unrest would result in much hardship and demand considerable action on the part of the government.

General Sir Newton Moore is an Australian by birth and was for five years Prime Minister of Australia. In 1911 he took up residence in England as Agent-general for the Southern Commonwealth, and during the war was general officer commanding the combined Australian forces.

SUBCONSCIOUS MIND MADE TO TALK

Practical Application of "Truth Serum" in California Brings Remarkable "Confessions"

By JACK JUNGMEYER

LOS ANGELES, July 24—"Truth serum" tests on county jail prisoners here, following those at San Quentin penitentiary, apparently leave the guilty conscience without a hole to hide in, not even the shadowy lairs of the mind.

Clinically, if not legally, the anesthetic "third degree" seems to have been established as potentially the most effective crime detector and deterrent, in these experiments by Dr. Robert E. House, of Ferris, Tex, its originator.

Six pail inmates voluntarily subjected themselves to Dr. House's injection of scopolamin, a drug hitherto used extensively in obstetrics and now employed by the Texts physicians to elicit the facts in criminal investigations.

Three gave details in connection with their cases not known to authorities. All maintained innocence in the present charges, but several confessed to former offences. Two according to officers, changed their previous stories.

FORMER OFFICER.

The demonstration, in the presence of medical and legal lights, was primarily to further Dr. House's appeal that the scopolamin or "truth test" treatment be legalized as an adjuct to criminology. No effort was made to test the reluctant, and it was assumed that only the innocent volunteered.

A former police officer, under the drug, denied receipt of stolen goods in box-car soldups. He mentioned the name of two men he said were guilty, and the district attorney jotted down the information.

An alleged forger, up for trial, admitted, but indorsing the questioned check, but denied writing anything "on the front of it."

A Pasadena youth accused of attacking girls repeated at length that he did not know the names of any of his alleged victims, but acording to official witnesses admitting having used "dope" until a year ago.

OTHERS "TALK"

A man facing trial as a "dope" peddler, admitted, said authorities, that he had been arrested four times previously, but was guiltless of the present charge, naming as his partner a man wanted by police.

A man, convicted of parole breaking, said he had been arrested "many times."

A man, awaiting appeal on life sentnce for murder, and "fighting" the anesthetic, vehemently denied guilt, asserting he didn't even know the name of the slain woman.

As the subjects lay inert on cots, after hypodermic injections of scopolamin and application of chloroform, whispering their confessions to the sharp quaries from Dr. House, the scene took on the drame of scientific pioneering. One had the uncanny sense of peering into the cerebral storehouse of ultimate secrets—of prying a hitherto inviolable citadel of self, while the gateman of the brain snored.

HELPLESS!

"Under the influence of scopolamin as here administered," said Dr. House as he worked expertly, "a suspected criminal is rendered oblivious to existence. Appreciation of environment is eliminated. The will-power is inoperative.

'In such state, if the indicvidual is questioned the moment he can hear, there is no doubt that his replies will be the truth. He is helpless too rotect himself with incentions.

"The principle involved is based on clinical observations that the brain's most powerful centre is hearing, and also the last to succumb. It is the first to function under anesthetic Now the only function of the auditory nerve, when stimulated by a question, is to carry sound waves to the auditory centre, and the only function of this centre is to evoke 'memory.'

"My method of securing from the mind the stored contents of memory, against the will, is a harmless and humane third degree.'

REDUCE EXPENSE.

"If it proves successful in only 50 per cent of cases it is far more reliable than any other method of criminal duress. Legalized, and its power popularized, it would go far to eliminate gang crimes, since arrest of one would mean the names of all.

"It would, with corroboration of course, enable reticent suspects to acquit themselves; obviate the necessity of immunity to known criminals; clean prisons of the guiltless; reduce enormously the Government expense for controlling crime."

Dr. House has turned over the findings of seven years of research with his discovery to the American Research Anesthetic Association in the hope that they will -ake the initiative toward evetual legal recognition of the "truth drug" as a means of ferreting and combating crime.

ON LOVE

Love is an ILLUSION—
A MIRAGE;
Something always ahead of us
LURING us on....
It is like the PURPLE mist
On the mountain:
When a man FALLS in love
He believes that the mist
Is a TANGIBLE thing.
But later he wakes up—
The mist has gone
And he finds himself
MARRIED to the mountain.
MARRIED to the mountain.
And then he WONDERS..
While man wonders
Nature WORKS.
The MIST on the mountain;
The perfume of the flowers;
The gay colors on the wings of birds
At mating time;
All the graces of a pretty WOMAN
Are but Nature's BAIT;
And MAN is the poor fish!

N.B.—The poor fish is still wondering.

PRETTY PRINCESS REVEALS CAREER

LEIPZIG, July 24—(United Press)—Slender, beautifully gowned, a striking figure in the box despite the hunger-thinned lines of her aristocratic face, Princess Margaret Hohenloe went on trial yesterday charged with having aided and abetted the notorious Captain Ehrhardt in high treason.

The princess, by a special order of Judge Schmidt, president of the state court for protection of the republic, was permitted to enter the courtroom without being blindfolded, as is customary in case of prisoners who might make use of their surroundings to escape.

Judge Schmidt, who granted her many other favors, is reported to have resigned because the Saxon government objected to his easing the rigors of prison life for the titled prisoner.

On the stand Princess Margaret was reticent. She was charged with aiding and abetting the original flight of Captain Ehrhardt after failure of the Kapp putsch, which he led.

She testified she had come to know Ehrhardt in 1920 when the Kapp troops, on their way to take Berlin, camped near her uncle's castle. The gallant, dashing officer made an instantaneous hit with the pretty princes, who celebrated her twenty-ninth birthday Saturday.

She went to see Ehrhardt several times afterwards, she testified, in Berlin and in Munich. The princess attempted to dodge the question as to whether she knew he was a hunted man at the time.

President Schmidt warned her she had better tell the truth, so finally she admitted she knew about the captain's political activities when she was with him in Munich.

Then followed a blushing confession of intimacy with the captain, how Ehrhardt furnished an apartment for her in Munch, engaging it in the name of "Consul Eichmann" and then moving in as a boarder under the name of Eschwege.

Erhardt, who was to have been tried for high treason and because of his political activities and his part in the Kapp affair, recently made a sensational escape from prison and is missing. The princess is believed to have aided her lover to get away.

Sparks from the Union Anvil

Sir Wm. F. Coaker left by motor-boat F. P. Union at 12 o'clock of Tuesday night for Port Union. The F. P. Union took a load of general cargo from here. Sir William will be returning in a day or so.

Mr. Meshach Bown of Badger's Quay, medical assistant on S. S. Sagona, Labrador Service, called at the Advocate. Mr. Bown is widely known as one of the most ardent F. P. U. men in the whole north. Mr. Bown reports his son, Capt. Gideon, is well-fished on Labrador and prospects of a full load. He outfitted from Port Union. Various other Port Union outfitters, Mr. Bown reports, have done well, which is a sign, he says, that Providence watches over the works of President Coaker's hand.

Mr. Bown reports having met with Capt Barbour and crew of the Senef, all being well and wishing to be remembered to their friends.

Budget Speech

consumer, the proper policy to adopt to secure an ultimate revival of trade was to make a sweeping reduction in ad valorem taxation on imported goods and report a deficit. While I was not then Minister of Finance and Customs, nor a member of the Cabinet and therefore was not closely identified with the policy then adopted in that connection, yet I fully agree that under trade conditions relating to the marketing of our goods abroad and the necessity for the stimulation of trade at home, that the decision was a wise one. I consequently have no hesitation whatever in reporting a shortage in revenue due neither to lack of imports on the one hand, nor lack of trade and business ability at home on the other, but due to the policy of the Government in making a sweeping reduction in taxation which has meant the lifting in a very large measure of the burden of taxation on our people and a corresponding stimulus to the trade of the Colony. That that has actually worked out in fact is shown by the Customs returns as furnished week by week. These statistics show that the reduced duty meant larger importations and the comparative figures for the port of St. John's for the four weeks which have already passed of the new fiscal year, make that position quite clear.

My estimate of the revenue for the fiscal year 1922-23 is as follows:

ESTIMATE OF REVENUE ON CURRENT ACCOUNT, 1922-1923.

Customs	$6,325,000.00
Postal	207,000.00
Telegraphs	169,000.00
Stamps	40,000.00
Crown Lands	80,000.00
Liquor Sales	550,000.00
Fines and Forfeitures	6,000.00
Fees Public Institutions	60,000.00
Broom Dept. Penitentiary	6,000.00
Interest Guaranteed Loans	84,000.00
Excess Profits	20,000.00
Income Tax	250,000.00
Sales Tax	60,000.00
Miscellaneous	500,000.00
Taxes, Cable and Bank	70,000.00
Estate Duties	140,000.00
Bank Tax 3/8 of 1%	125,000.00
Civil Service Reduction	150,000.00
	$8,844,000.00

Shows Deficit.

My estimate of expenditure on current account for 1922-23 is as follows:

ESTIMATE OF EPENDITURE ON CURRENT ACOUNT 1922-1923.

Interest on Public Debt	$2,859,000.00
Finance Department	260,000.00
Colonial Secretary's Dement	260,000.00
Justice Department	330,000.00
Education Department	890,000.00
Public Charities Department	480,000.00
Marine & Fisheries	320,000.00
Ariculture & Mines	100,000.00
Public Works Department	1,000,000.00
Posts and Telegraphs Department	1,300,000.00
Customs Department	440,000.00
Liquor Controller	617,000.00
Tax Assessor	12,568.00
Accountant of Contingencies	155,000.00
Military Pensions Board	561,865.00
Shipping Department	50,000.00
Old Age Pensions	90,000.00
	$9,526,433.00

This shows a deficit of $682,433.00. During the past year the strain upon the various Departments has been very great because of unemployment conditions which necessitated special expenditures under the head of Department of Public Charities and Department of Public Works. Certain portions of these expenses have been borne on current account. Under the circumstances in view of the sweeping reductions which were made in taxation and the extra amount borne on current account because of the depressed conditions of the country which meant additional charges under this head by various Departments, the deficit is very much less than would be anticipated on the basis of the late Prime Minister's conservative financial estimate which he submitted to the House more than a year ago. The Estimates for the year 1923-24 already tabled called for an expenditure of $9,106,153.57 under the following heads:

1. Finance	$3,130,681.35
2. Colonial Secretary	63,554.00
3. Justice	336,025.88
4. Education	839,851.03
5. Public Charities	439,458.33
6. Marine & Fisheries	346,969.39
7. Agriculture & Mines	115,020.00
8. Public Works	992,080.26
9. Posts and Telegraphs	1,244,465.83
10. Customs	493,960.50
11. Liquor Controller	65,864.00
12. Tax Assessor	14,840.00
13. Contingencies	170,617.00
14. Military Pensions Board	699,766.00
15. Shipping	50,000.00
	$9,006,153.57

I estimate the total revenue from all sources for the fiscal year 1923-24 to be the sum of $9,150,000.00, made up as follows:

Customs	$6,980,000.00
Postal	245,000.00
Telegraphs	185,000.00
Inland Revenue Stamps	50,000.00
Crown Lands	80,000.00
Liquor Sales	480,000.00
Fines and Forfeitures	6,000.00
Fees Public Institutions	45,000.00
Broom Dept. Penitentiary	10,000.00
Interest Guaranteed Loans	84,000.00
Excess Profits Tax	30,000.00
Income Tax	250,000.00
Sales Tax	60,000.00
Bank Tax 3/8 of 1%	125,000.00
Cable and Bank Tax	70,000.00
Estate Duties	150,000.00
Miscellaneous	150,000.00
Civil Service Reduction	150,000.00
	$9,150,000.00

Revenue Will Exceed Expenditure.

While the general finances of the Colony on current account are eminently satisfactory, yet it will be fully realized that it would be quite impossible to carry on current account the considerable capital expenditures which it is desirable and will be permanently beneficial to the Colony to incur in connection with many necessary public improvements. The establishment of the important industrial development in the Humber Valley will necessitate a considerable addition to the railway rolling stock and equipment. A substantial proportion of the rolling stock will be provided by the contractors themselves. They have already placed an order for early delivery for more than fifty cars of various kinds which will be used by them in connection with their construction work, and the handling of their own freight and material. This additional quantity the providing of which is not a matter of expense to us will, however, not approach the additional rolling stock and equipment necessary for handling the enormous volume of freight and the very greatly increased passenger and express services which naturally result from this industrial development. Then, again, the proposed further operations with which the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company is identified will necessitate considerable additional rolling stock. A large section of the line in the western portion of the Island over which the heavy freight required for construction purposes in connection with the Humber operations must pass will require special attention, as it is estimated that there will be seven capacity load freight trains per day passing over that section in connection with the new services only, which is in addition to increased general services for the country also passing over that section. To handle that service safely and efficiently considerable expenditures for the repair and improvement of roadbed and sidings are essentially required. Within the last few years the Government's policy of main line road improvements and new road building and in particular the erection of permanent concrete bridge work to replace wooden bridge structures has been undertaken. This policy has been pursued under the direction of the Government Engineer. There is nothing so important to the life and development of a community as good main line roads and bridges. Major expenditures of this nature should be handled on capital account rather than out of current expenditure. The idea of replacing wooden bridge structures with steel and concrete work is necessarily more expensive initially but from the standpoint of the years it is very much cheaper. The work which has been done by the Government Engineer in these matters has been excellent and from time to time as necessity required permanent steel and concrete bridges will be erected as new bridges are required and to replace old bridges as the present wooden structures may require replacement or extensive repairs. It would have been immeasurably cheaper for the Colony had a policy of this sort been introduced many years ago because the great burden on current revenue on account of the Department of Public Works in connection with main line maintenance is due in a large measure to the continual expense incidental to the repair and maintenance of wooden bridge work some of which is of great length and importance.

$300,000 for Railway and Other Improvements.

The experience which the Colony has had in relief works during recent years has been very unsatisfactory. It has been difficult, often quite impossible, to secure value in labour for money expended in connection with such operations. I consequently desire to take this opportunity of expressing the firm conviction that the policy of this Administration in discontinuing relief operations is wise and that such works should not be undertaken, but that on the other hand such permanent works as are imperatively necessary for the well-being and development of the resources of the country should be undertaken on the basis of contract subject to a rigid inspection. Such a course would give employment to those who are able and willing to give value for money expended and those who for physical or mental reasons are unable to give value in work for the money expended should be handled through the various religious and philanthropic charitable organizations assisted where necessary by the Department of Public Charities in precisely the same manner as such assistance was given priod to the post-War turmoil which has so upset labour conditions and reduced efficiency.

To meet requirements for railway equipment and improvements necessitated by the industrial development of Newfoundland which as a result of the active policy of this Administration has been so largely undertaken and to provide essential permanent improvements in connection with road and bridge work and other necessary public utilities I propose to submit in due course resolutions authorizing the Government to raise a loan not exceeding $300,000.00. In addition to the public improvements cited above the Municipal Council requires additional funds for extensions to water and sewerage services, and highways within the Municipality. The Government has already guaranteed an advance to the Municipal Council of $130,000.00. A very much larger sum is urgently needed for capital expenditure in the Municipality of St. John's but up to the present no application has been made by the Municipality for anything beyond the amount named. The House is aware that there is no town, city or Municipal indebtedness of any kind in the whole Island of Newfoundland, but that the entire indebtedness of the Island, including all indebtedness which would be classed as town, city or Municipal, is included within the total of our funded debt. The debt of the Municipality of St. John's, for example, is not a debt due by the Municipality of St. John's to bond holders, but is a debt due by the Municipality to St. John's to the Newfoundland Government, on which the Municipality of St. John's pays interest to the Newfoundland Government annually, the Newfoundland Government assuming the entire liability as part of its funded debt and paying the interest semi-annually to bond-holders. Thus when we say that the funded debt of Newfoundland at the present moment is $55,030,027.66 we announce that there are not in the Island of Newfoundland any public obligations in the nature of town, city or Municipal debts, because all such debts are included within the Colony's funded obligations. In considering the public debt of Newfoundland in comparison with the public debt of other countries this factor is rarely mentioned, but I would take this opportunity of pointing it out to the Legislature as it is a factor of extreme importance and places the public indebtedness of Newfoundland in a very favourable position as compared with the total indebtedness of other countries.

Savings Deposits Increased Last Year.

The peak of Savings Bank depositors was reached in the year 1919, when the amount on deposit was $21,019,375.69. In the year 1920 the deposits had dropped to the sum of $20,543,937.99 or a drop for the year of $475,437.70. There was a further drop in the year 1921, when the total amount on deposit was $20,136,958.87, or a drop for the year of $406,979.12. The records for the year 1922 show a slight improvement over 1921, the total on deposit being $20,163,957.51, or an amount in excess of 1921 of $27,016.64. This is a very gratifying position because it means that the drain of depression upon Savings Bank Deposits has stopped and the amount now on interest-bearing Savings Bank deposits in the various banks carrying savings bank accounts in this country is exceeded only by the savings bank deposits for the years 1919 and 1920, the deposits for the year 1919, which was our maximum year being only in excess by the sum of $855,400.16. In other words, the result of the period of depression through which we have passed has been to reduce the interest bearing savings deposits of our people as against the year of our maximum prosperity by the amount of $855,400.16, or 4.06%.

Preferential Tariff.

On the 27th of June, 1922, the Government of the Dominion of Canada entered into a Commercial Agreement with the Government of Jamaica, under which each Government was entitled to claim the privileges of the Preferential Tariff of the other Government.

Negotiations with respect to a Commercial agreement as between Newfoundland and Jamaica were commenced in March, 1922, but had not been concluded when the Legislature closed. The late Prime Minister, Sir Richard Squires, has informed me that in February last, the governor of Jamaica agreed to recommend to the Legislative Council of that country, that the Preferential Tariff be extended to Newfoundland, provided this Government gave similar preference to Jamaica. I accordingly submit to this Legislature a Resolution under which the Products of Jamaica will be admitted to Newfoundland at a rate 25 per cent. lower than the regular tariff. This will apply to cigars, sugar, molasses, fruit, or other such products of Jamaica as may be imported, and it is hoped that the lowering of the duty may encourage greater trade in these products. Under the General Tariff in Jamaica, salmon and trout pay a duty of 7s. per 100 lbs.; herring a duty of 2s. 6d. per 100 lbs. fish, dried, salted, smoked or pickled, a duty of 4s.-8d. per 100 lbs. Under the Preferential tariff, these duties will be 25 per cent. less. Directly and indirectly we ship to Jamaica fish products to the value of $300,000 per annum.

ceeded to Madrid, in order to secure for Newfoundland the advantages under the Commercial Treaty between the United Kingdom and Spain, which came into effect on the 6th November, 1922. Under this Treaty, salted Codfish and stock fish and other articles produced or manufactured in the British Empire were admitted into Spain at a reduced rate of duty. The duty on salted codfish had been 32 pesetas per 100 kilgos., but that fixed by the Treaty was 24 pesetas, which is a very substantial reduction in the duty applying to Newfoundland codfish entering Spain. In return for this concession it was agreed that iron ore, corks and cork discs, grapes, walnuts, almonds (shelled and unshelled), onions, tomatoes, oranges, bananas, olive oil and preserved vegetables, the produce of Spain, shall not be subject to any Customs duty on importation into Newfoundland or other territory of the British Empire, nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the importation of these articles, except such prohibitions as it may be found necessary to impose in time of war. It was also provided in the Treaty that wine and wine lees, brandy, and raisins, the produce of Spain, shall not be subject on importation into British territory to higher Customs duties than those in force at the date of the signature of the said Treaty. The late Prime Minister arranged that the provisions of the Treaty should apply to Newfoundland as from the 6th day of November, 1922, at which date the Treaty came into force. I shall submit a resolution for the carrying into effect of these provisions in respect of importations from Spain.

For the information of the House I have caused comparative statements and tables which were published last year to be brought up to date so far as the returns have been completed. It has not been possible to get complete records as at the 30th day of June, as it will be several weeks before complete statistics are available from various sections outside of St. John's.

General Depression in Trade Followed Industrial Upheavel; Official Loss Figures

Included in the latter are Dominion Tar and Chemical Company, Cross Fertilizer Co., the cement and brick plants, limestone quarries, Wabana Ore Mines, the laying up of a fleet of some fifteen chartered ships and the general depression in trade throughout Nova Scotia which always follow in the wake of such an industrial unheaval as that which tied up the mines and mills of the largest operating concern in the Dominion of Canada.

Your correspondent has been enabled to obtain the following official figures regarding the losses which the men and company sustained to date.

Miners employed—Dominion Coal Co., 9,000; Sydney Mines, 3,000; Acadia Coal, 2,500, Dominion Steel 2,000. Totalling, 16,500.

The miners quit work on July 4th and have been out 18 days. The steel workers downed tools on June 28, and have been off work 21 days.

Losses in wages—Dominion and Sydney Mines, 12,000 at $5 per day, equals $60,000, which for 18 days gives a total of $1,080,000; Acadia, 2,500 at $5, $12,000, 12 days out, $150,000; Steel plant, 2,000 at $5, $10,000; 25 days out, $250,000. Total $1,480,000.

Loss in output—Dominion and Sydney Mines, $18,000 a day for 18 days, $324,000; Acadia Coal Co., $2,500 a day for 12 days, $30,000. Total, $354,000.

These figures by no means indicate the complete loss that will be suffered by British Empire Steel Corporation through the strike as after the miners return the outputs at the different collieries will be slowed up 10 per cent. until such time as the pits have been got back into that condition for mining in which they were when the men walked out.

It is questionable if the company, even should the men be all back in the deeps by Tuesday and the mines be brought to capacity with all possible despatch, can catch up this season with their contracts to supply coal for industrial and domestic use at St. Lawrence ports.

As for the steel company many contracts for steel that had been on the books were cancelled by purchasers under the strike clause, and these have been placed with American concerns. "Moscow" Jack McDonald, alleged Toronto radical, was arrested at Glace Bay Saturday by the Provincial police on a charge of having made seditious utterances and being disrespectful to the British flag at a mass meeting at Sydney Mines on Thursday last. The information was laid by ex-Mayor McCormack, of Sydney Mines before a Magistrate of that town. McDonald made no opposition when arrested and was confined to the Glace Bay jail.

BAIL FIXED

On Saturday evening McDonald, accompanied by his counsel, A. D. Campbell, of Sydney and two provincial policemen proceeded to Sydney Mines, where they went direct to the office of Magistrate McLean by whom the warrant had been issued. The accused was permitted to go on $2,000 bail, $1,000 on his own recognizance and two sureties.

At the moment it appeared as if there might be a demonstration on the part of the miners on behalf of McDonald as a large crowd had congregated outside on the street. The Magistrate, however, avoided this by warning McDonald that if he took any part in an unlawful act his bail would be immediately revoked. The crowd dispersed without any trouble developing.

On Saturday evening McDonald took part in a labor political meeting at Sydney Mines at which D. D. McDonald the laborite in the bye-election in Cape Breton and Victoria and foreman Way M.P.P. were the principal speaker. McDonald in his remarks carefully refrained from alluding to his arrest in accordance with the instructions given him by the Magistrate.

At a mass meeting of the striking miners held at Glace Bay which none of the deposed executive attended, the men passed a resolution to go back to work on Tuesday with the provision that the company will not discriminate against any collier no matter which faction he adhered to Livingstone-McLachlan or Lewis.

The corporation, however, has already taken a stand on this question and all men returns to the pits must agree to allow check off from their pay for the United Mine Workers of America.

Sydney Mines is hopeful that Scotia will re-engage its own hands under a similar agreement.

From statements given out by the company it would appear that the strikers will get another rude awakening if they expect their former employers to grant this request.

MEN TURNED AWAY

Number of miners applied for work at the different colleries this morning, but were not taken on. All the maintenance men offering were employed and sent to the pits. It is expected that the full force will be at work by Wednesday of this week, but it will take a long time to put the deeps in the condition they were before the strike, owing to the mud accumulated and falls of stone and coal.

Over 3,000 tons were loaded from the bank on Saturday, the best day's output since the men stopped work. No further obstruction of shipments is looked for, and in a very few days this department is expected to be working at normal.

News from the mining districts this morning is to the effect that the men realize the strike os over, and they appear anxious to get back to their places in the mines with the least possible delay.

At a meeting of the Radical Phalen local held this morning it was decided by its members that they would not go back to work in the mines under Silby Barrett as president of District 26 of The U. M. W. Some of the saner elements in the local do not agree with this decision and it is understood that an attempt will be made to have another meeting this afternoon at which they will try to have the decision reversed.

Former Secretary to Cleveland Millionaire Waives Extradition And Returns to United States—Declared to Have Lost Heavily on Race Track and Market.

(Montreal Star.)

Michael M. Dugan, alias Frank L. Mac Lane, of Cleveland, Ohio, wanted to answer a charge of defrauding an Ohio banking institution of nearly a million dollars, was arrested as he was leaving the General Post Office on St. James Street yesterday afternoon.

Dugan, it is alleged, got away with over $450,000 in Cleveland.. When arrested yesterday he had exactly 41 cents in his pockets. The balence, it was claimed, was lost at race tracks and in the stock market.

He waived extradition and left for Cleveland this morning. Detective Walsh of the city force is accompanying him to the boundary, where he will be handed over to the United States officers. The same train carried back J. W. Corrigan, the bank's attorney, and E. Calston, an employe of the bank who came to Montreal to identify Dugan.

MISSING YEAR AGO.

Up until a year ago Dugan was secretary to J. W. Corrigan, a Cleveland multi-millioraire. Then, according to police information, he disappeared and a short time afterwards the shortage in Corrigan's funds was discovered. First, it, is alleged Dugan played the stock market and found money for margin in Corrigan's account. Later race track gamblers interested him and it is stated that in a single instance he was trimmed of $55,000.

He went to Toronto with several thousand dollars which, it is claimed had dwindled to $40,000 when he came to Montreal last fall.

A few weeks ago Dugan found his money running down so fast that he determined to give himself up. He was going to Kentucky and he was lucky enough to borrow a hundred dollars from them, and also borrowed a suitcase. Instead of crossing the line, however, he took a room on Metcalfe street, and used the borrowed money to pay his room rent. His luxurious habits had to be abandoned—all but one, and that was the one which led to his capture. His great weakness was a good cigar, and every day he smoked several. With part of his last dollar he bought two twenty cent cigars, and his only request when interviewed in his cell was to be supplied with cigars. "I can't smoke 'em," he said when offered cigarettes, so an officer passed him over a couple of Havanas.

Dugan's arrest was accomplished yesterday by J. R. Burns, Superintendent of the Pinkerton Agency in Montreal. Burns spotted him last week and had him shadowed until Cleveland men arrived yesterday to complete the identification.

A NATIONAL TRAIT.

(London Chronicle.)

The modern Englishman is, as a rule, humane to animals. Even the modern boy often learns in childhood to like animals of all kinds, taking one egg only from a bird's nest, and feeding squirrels rather than pelting them.

AUSTRALIAN ROADS.

(Western Mail, Perth, Australia.

Mr. Bruce's Government have it in contemplation to render financial assistance to the States in the matter of national roadmaking. That is a confirmed policy of the United States which our Federal Government will do well to adopt. First proposal is to make a grant available to the States of £500,000, payable on a pound for pound basis, as to £300,000, on a par capita basis, and as to £200,000 on an area basis. Such an allocation is eminently one which cannot fail to find acceptance in a State of such magnificent distances as Western Australia.

(Natal Advertiser.)

Our poor whites are multiplying; our white workers are emigrating; our debt is increasing; our taxation is rising; our color problems are getting graver; our horizon is clouding. But it is talk, talk, talk, all the while about what splendid fellows we are; what a great country ours is; how we are entitled to walk abreast with the United States into the Conference room; and how the King is all but "Royal Cousin" to whoever happens for the hour to be the choice of our handful of white electors. It would be very funny but for the fact that, politically at least, South Africa has no sense of humor.

EVERYTHING TO LOSE.

(Johannesburg Times.) . . . .

As a little independent republic, South Africa would have to tax itself far more heavily for defence purposes, or else run the risk of being seized by some more powerful nation. As such a republic it would sever all official connection with its best customer and the most promising source for the obtaining of fresh capital. Where should we be without our trade with the British Empire How much development should we enjoy if no British capital at all could be secured for our enterprises On purely material grounds alone it would be senseless folly to detach ourselves from the British Commonwealth, which is to us a source both of strength and of trade, yet which handpers us in nothing.

DECLINE OF BRITISH ART.

(London Morning Post.)

The degredation which has befallen British art since the war is appalling to contemplate. What kind of idea of the British taste and the English genius, not so long ago second to none in the world, does the foreign visitor take away with him? What is perhaps worse is the loss of tradition. The young men and women who are studying art today are not taught to draw, but to scribble; not to paint, but to daub; not to design, but to violate every canon of proportion. Here, indeed, is an attractive persuit for the idle and incompetent, who can (and do) call themselves artists without any more valid title than a pair of corduroy trousers, a blue shirt, long hair, and abstinence from soap.

Annual Regatta Is Interfered With By Weather Conditions

RACES WERE WELL CONTESTED.

Despite the threatening weather yesterday morning, the usual large crowds had gathered at the lakeside at an early hour to witness the annual boat races.

Amongst the early arrivals was His Excellency the Governor, Sir William Allardyce and his secretary, Major Wilberforce Bell, who remained on the course all through the fore noon, and evidenced great interest in the various races. Other visitors amongst the immense concourse of people were the Prime Minister and Mrs. Warren, H .D. and Mrs. Reid, and others prominent in all walks of life.

Sir Edgar Bowring, whose interest in our annual derby is so well known, was also among the early arrivals and was given an enthusastic welcome by members of the Committee. Sir Edgar owns the land sur rounding the lake, and each season he has generously placed it at the disposal of the public free of charge.

The events were keenly contested, the best time for the day being made by the Outer Cove Fishermen, who covered the course in 9.47.

The program opened with the elimination dashes for the Amateur, Junior Football and Juvenile races.

Rev. Dr. Whelan Died Suddenly

SEBASTAPOL WILL BRING REMAINS

By the Sagona's mail, Sir Michael Cashin received a letter written by the late Rev. Dr. Whelan from North West River, on July 20th in which the writer stated he was feeling in the best of health. Further particulars are to the effect that on July 6th he passed away suddenly while sitting in his chair.

On Tuesday Sir Michael Cashin interviewed the Premier, Hon. W. F. Warren and Hon. W. H. Cave, with a view to getting a steamer to call at Battle Harbor for the body, and they very kindly placed the Revenue Cruiser, Sebastapol, at his disposal and the ship left Burgeo for Battle Harbour Tuesday evening. The remains will be taken to North River by the ship.

Sagona's Passengers

The following passengers arrived in port by the S.S. Sagona Tuesday morning:—Mr. and Mrs. Richard White and two children, E. Ryan, C. Martin and wife, Dr. Fichelson, Sheldon Fairbank, T. Makinson, W. Bakie, Mrs. H. R. Dumaine, Miss Nellie Gill, Miss B. Jones and three in steerage.

Further Advance In Pulp-Paper Exports

OTTAWA, July 23. (By Canadian Press).—Exports of paper manufacturned in Canada during the month of June reached a total value of $7,859,684, according to an announcement made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics today. Compared with records for June 1922 an advance over a million dollars is shown.

Figures tabulated for the three months ending with June in 1921, 1922 and 1923 indicate the extent of the development which the pulp and paper industry has undergone in Canada. It is shown that during three months in 1921, $15,558,409 worth of paper was exported, $17,220,256 in the corresponding period of 1922, and $22,315,422 during April, May and June of the present year.

In the three months ending with June, total exports of Canadian paper, wood pulp and pulpwood were valued at $36,849,059, as compared with $27,579,851 in the corresponding three months of 1922.

HARDING'S CONDITION BETTER

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—President Harding to-day seemed certain of recovery, according to General Sawyer, Chief of Staff of Physicians, and the same belief is general among others. Only unforseen circumstances could cause a relapse they say. The President was sleeping soundly at four this morning.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—General Sawyer, President Harding's personal physician said to the Associated Press shortly aftern noon to-day: "I am glad to report that President Harding's condition, as recited in this morning's bulletin, is still holding favorable."

Come to think of it, however, $19,000,000,000 is quite a lot of money, although not nearly enough to pay off Germany's war debt!

MAGISTRATE'S COURT

A resident of the Poor Asylum celebrated the Regatta yesterday rather boisterously. He insisted on doing Charlie Chaplin stunts on the race course, but eventually because of his years tired and had to be taken to the Police Station over night. His Honor discharged him this morning. This was the only arrest for Regatta Day.

A son-in-law, who damaged his father-in-law's front door last night was ordered to effect the necessary repairs.

A young outport man charged with obtaining money under false pretense by cashing a check which he altered and raised to $2500 pleaded guilty and was sentenced to six months. He passed the check on the Post Master of Whitbourne.

An Appalling State

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—Reports from the Ruhr indicate the food situation is becoming steadily worse and at Gelsenkirchen several thousand miners failed to report for work and informed the management they were physicially unable to enter the pits as their families were without potatoes and other food supplies since Saturday; the French are charged with having bought up food at various places in the occupied zone.

Fearful Tragedy Results From Train Wreck

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—A great disaster which occurred at the junction of the Hanover and Cassal line to-day caused by collision between a Hamburg-Munich express and a train standing in the station. Up to four o'clock 44 bodies were recovered and the estimated number of killed was one hundred, while 44 injured are being cared for in hospital. The cololision is attributed to the inability the signals because of the grit which had blown into his eyes. Most of the cars were shattered and piled on top of one another, many were crushed down in the wreckage and endured agonies before the end came.

Mr. A. G. Williams, P. D. D., of the S.O.E. leaves by the Rosalind Saturday enroute to Toronto where he attends and annual convention of the S. O. E. which takes place in that city on August 14th.

Donald Whiteway Arraigned

Donald Whiteway, the driver of the car in Tuesday night's accident, was arraigned before Judge Morris this morning and formally charged with manslaughter. He was represented by Higgins, K. C., and was not asked to plead. Bail, pending the preliminary inquiry, in the sum of $10,000 was renewed—the accused in $5,000 and two sureties, Sir M. P. Cashin and J. C. Pratt being the bondsmen, in $2,500 each.

S. S. Rosalind Arrives

The S.S. Rosalind arrived from New York and Halifax at 9 a.m. bringing the following first class passengers:—

From Halifax:—Samuel and Laura Haley, Elizabeth Brotherton, Angus Fitzgerald, Ronald Murray, Max Kornreich, Wm. Gibbs, Albert Salter, Auley Hatton, Cyril Wilson, Peter Baxter, Margaret Baxter, Arthur Baker, Harold Iris, Andrew Merkel, Peter McDonald, Michael Kerrissey, Wm. S. Kearney, Mary Gaskin, Enima Schultze, Sophia Schultze, Alice Schultze, Bertha O'Brien;

At The Museum

This forenoon Revs. Father Connors and Cashin visited the Museum and were shown through the place by the caretaken, Mr. William Duggan. They were very much pleased with what they saw.

On Monday night Dr. W. Templeman's motor car was ditched on the Broad Cove Road and was badly damaged, the car capsizing after leaving the road. He was accompanied at the time by Mr. Charley Meehan, and both had narrow escapes. Dr. Templeman had his leg sprained and Mr. Meehan was bruised about the face.

Tourist Guests

Fourteen tourists from the Rosalind registered at the Crosbie this forenoon. The most of these are from the United States, some among them are from Canada, and the Mother Country. Mrs. Bell, the affable proprietoress and her staff are being kept busy.

ANOTHER MOTOR FATALITY

A tragic accident occured on the Southside Road on Tuesday night, about 8.30 o'clock, as a result of which a young lad named Griffiths, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. William Griffiths, 255 Southside Road West, had his skull fractured and died at the General Hospital half an hour later.

The accident was caused by a motor car owned by Mr. Jesse Whiteway, and driven by his son, Donald. The car had but a minute previously called at the residence of Mr. J. Burt, nearby, where his daugter was taken on board, and Mr. Whiteway started along the road, intending to call at his own home, Hamilton Ave., where he was to pick up other members of his family.

Nearby, the young lad Griffiths and a number of his companions were playing ball, running into the on-coming car, which was just moving away from Mr. Burt's residence, and before it could be pulled up the lad was knocked down, sustaining a fracture of the skull.

Mr. Whiteway picked up the unconscious form and hurried to Dr. Robert's surgery, but he being absent, he continued on to Dr. Cowperthwaite, who immediately ordered the injured lad to the Hospital, where it was quickly seen that his case was hopeless, and he passed away within half an hour.

According to an eye-witness it was impossible to avoid the accident, as it appeared that the lad did not see the approaching car, and the driver was unable to stop in time to avoid collision with the boy.

Mr. Whiteway gave himself up to the authorities shortly after the occurrence, but through his solicitor Mr. W. J. Higgins, K. C., was immediately released on his own bond of $5,000 and Sir Michael Cashin and Mr. J. C. Pratt in $2,500 each.

Young Griffiths was a bright lad, and his father and mother are distracted over the sad affair, and there will be general sympathy for them in their sudden and tragic bereavement.

Outgoing Express Derailed

The express which left St. John's Tuesday afternoon was delayed when three miles east of Howley by two passenger cars going off the track.

The accident occurred on a level portion of the track and, as the cars remained upright, no damage was done.

A wrecking crew was immediately sent from Bishop's Falls and it is expected to have the cars on the track early this morning. As a consequence of this accident the incoming express is delayed considerably and is not due in St. John's until late to-night.

The cause of the runoff has not been ascertained.

Oddfellows Leave

Messrs Geo Soper, G. T. Phillips, G. Phillips, Art Heath, J. Carberry, and Geo. Hynes, of the I. O. O. F., left by to-day's express to attend the Grand Ladge session at Bridgewater, N. S., of that societyshrdluhrdluunu N. S. At this session will be representatives of the Society's branches throughout the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. Representatives from Grand Falls will join the St. John's party at that place.

President Harding Dies Suddenly

CURZON SPEAKS PLAINLY ON REPARATIONS SITUATION

Dr. Alexander Campbell Demands Thorough Investigation

LATEST

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Seldom has Parliament separated for a long vacation under such an ominious cloud of difficult relations with an Allied power, as it did to-day, after grave statements by the Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, in the Commons and the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Marquis Curzon, in the House of Lords, revealing apparently unsurmountable divergence views between Great Britain and France, as how to deal with the reparations question, although ministerial statements revealed much more than had been expected of details of negotiations with France and Belgium, showing for instance, that Great Britain in her draft note to Germany, plainly advised the German Government to withdraw her decrees ordering passive resistance in Ruhr, yet statements still left the country in ignorance. The British Government's next step and judging from Lord Curzon's speech, the ministers themselves are not definitely decided on this point. The British Government clearly hopes it may still be possible to bring pressure to bear on French Government, through appeal by laying the case before new tribunal, namely the civilized world.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Elimination of twelve hour day in steel industries will begin immediately and wages of employees whose hours are reduced from twelve to eight hours will be so adjusted as to afford earnings equivalent to a twenty-five per cent. increase in hourly base rates, directors of American Iron and Steel Institute decided to-day.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Kike McTigue, world's light heavyweight, out-pointed Tommy Loughran of Philadelphia, in their twelve round bout here to-night, in opinion of mapority of the newspaper men at the ring side, Joe Lynch, world's Bantam Weight Cmapnion, to-night outpointed Battling Reddy of New York in twelve rounds no dreision bout, according to newspaper men.

SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS SAVED!

That's the amount we estimate we have saved the six hundred car owners in St. John's in tire bills during the past year through the road repair work we have investigated.

Have you recently driven from St. John's to Holyrood? If not, do so and notice the road over the "Cow-Path" (Seal Cove to Holyrood). That was done through the "Good Roads" movement originally started by the Newfoundland Motor Association and the work was done under the superintendence of one of our members who has given his time and experience free. He doesn't want to be advertised but we'll tell you his name just as soon as you join us.

Next year it is proposed to give special attention to the Portugal Cove, Broad Cove and Torbay Roads—that is if our membership increases sufficiently to advance more cold cash. Over seventy-five per cent. of the money we have received in membership fees during the past five years has been advanced for road repairing.

It costs Ten Dollars to join the Association if you are a car owner, Five Dollars if you ride a motor-cycle. The amount may be mailed direct to the Secretary (P. O. Box 1131), left at The Royal Stationery Co., 180 Water Street, handed to our authorized collector or drop us a postcard and we'll call for it. It is an old saying that those are helped who help themselves. By helping along the work we are doing you help yourself to save at least ten times the amount of the subscription in tire repair bills. Vice Pres. Coolidge In Charge

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 3.—Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, died instantly and without warning to-night at seven-thirty o'clock, the victim of a stroke of apoplexy which struck him down in his weakened condition after an illness of one week.

The Chief Executive of the nation, and, by virtue of his office, one of the world's leading figures, passed away at a time when the physicians, family and people thought that medical skill, hope and prayer had won a battle against disease.

With the passing of President Harding, the office of President devolves upon Calvin Coolidge, Vice-President of the United States, who was notified of the death at his home in Plymouth, Vermont.

The suddenness of the end was shown by the fact that only Mrs. Harding and two nurses were in the room at the time. Mrs. Harding was reading to the President, when a sudden slight shudder shook the frame of the patient, and he collapsed and died. Mrs. Harding ran to the door and called for Commander Boone and others of the President's medical staff. Only Brig.-General Sawyers and Commander Boone were able to reach the President's side before life was extinct. They were powerless.

Brave in the face of her husband's illness, Mrs. Harding faced his death with the same fortitude, continuing to be the bravest member of the group about his bedside. Her first words on realizing that the President had died, were "I am not going to break down."

Death came to the President after the day had been described by the physicians as the most satisfactory since he was stricken, a week ago with ptomaine poisoning after eating tinned food on the Alaskan trip.

Following are the milestones in the President's life:

Born at Blooming Grove, Ohio, Nov. 2nd, 1865; elected to Ohio State Senate, his first political office, Nov. 6th, 1898; elected Governor of Ohio, Nov. 3rd, 1903; defeated as Republican candidate for Governor, Nov. 8th, 1910; elected United States Senate, Nov. 3rd, 1914; nominated for President, June 12th, 1920; elected as President, Nov. 4th, 1920; inaugurated March 4th, 1921; died Aug. 2, 1923.

Public Safety Bill Passes Dail

DUBLIN, Aug. 2.—Dail Eirean last evening passed the Public Safety Bill under which the Government may continue to hold prisoners who are charged with having actively opposed the Free State Government. The measure was presented to the Dail Eirean, for urgent action owing to the fact that the Court of Appeals in a decision yesterday in Habeas Corpus proceedings declared that a state of war did not exist and granted a writ returnable to-morrow. If the bill as passed receives the assent of the Governor General it is believed it will prevent the release under Habeas Corpus proceedings of thousands of prisoners men and women now in prison.

United States Mourns Loss of Able Statesman

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 2.—(Bulletin)—President Harding died instantly and without warning to-night at 7.30 o'clock. Death came while he was conversing with members of his family, and according to an official statement issued by physicians, was apparently due to some brain developments, probably an apoplexy.

Like most of the men who have been elected to the high office of the President of the United States, Senator Harding sprang from the common people of whom Lincoln spoke so affectionately. He was a self-made man. He was born on a farm near the village of Blooming Grave, in Morrow Counyt, Ohio, in which State he had always lived, on the 2nd of November, 1865. He was elected President on his 55th birthday. His father, George T. Harding, was a country doctor whose forbears came from Scotland. Before going to Ohio the Hardings were residents of Pennsylvania, where some of his ancestors were murdered by Indians. Others fought in the Revolutionary War.

PRESIDENT HARDING.

In his youth Warren Harding lived the life of a farmer boy, attending the village school until he was fourteen years of age, when he entered the Ohio Central College at Iberaia, from which he was graduated. As editor of the college magazine he first displayed talents for journalism. He was obliged to stop school now and then in order to earn money so that he might complete his college course. At one time he cut corn, at another painted barns, and later helped to grade the roadbed of a new railway. At the age of seventeen he taught a village school and played the horn in the village band.

Mr. Harding was a practical printer and a pressman, and excelled as a make-up man. The luck piece he carried throughout his career as a Senator was the old printer's rule he used when he was sticking type.

In 1884 Dr. Harding moved his family to Marion. A short time afterwards the father purchased the Star for his son Warren. On this paper Warren performed every function from printer's devil to managing editor. In all the years Senator Warren Harding owned the Star there never was a strike or a threat of one.

President Harding was closely identified with many other large business enterprises in Marion, and in other parts of the States. He was director of a bank and of several large manufacturing plants and a trustee of the Trinity Baptist Church. Mr. Harding twice represented the 13th senatorial district of Ohio in the State Legislature, and served one term as Lieutenant-Governor. In the 1914 elections Harding was elected United States Senator by a majority of over 100,000, running 73,000 ahead of the next highest on the ticket. In the Senate he was a prominent member of the Foreign Relations Committee. President Harding married Miss Florence King in 1891.

President Harding's term of office has been characterized by the continuance, as much as possible, of an American policy of non-interference in international affairs and a clever direction of national policy. An outstanding action of Pres. Harding, in international matters, was the invitation to the Great Powers to assemble at Washington in a general Disarmament conference for the preservation of peace; the fruition of which efforts took practical shape before he died.

He succeeded ex-Pres. Wilson in the presidential election of 1920, having defeated Governor Cox, the Democratic candidate for the presidency.

Mrs. Beckett and Mrs. Warren, of Attlebury, Norfolk, twin sisters, recently celebrated their 90th birthday. They are believed to be the oldest living twins.

A Saskatchewan reader says that a shorthorn cow gave birth to three male calves a month ago. At time of writing they were a week old and thriving splendily.

FRENCH REPLY GIVES LITTLE HOPE FOR ANY SETTLEMENT

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Marquis Curzon, Foreign Secretary, informed the House of Lords to-day that Italy had not sent a written reply to the recent British Reparations Note, but that nevertheless expressed herself as approving in general Great Britain's views and proposals. Lord Curzon stated that the French and Belgian reply to the British Note appeared to hold no prospect of early settlement of the situation in the Ruhr nor commencement of a discussion on reparations.

The Blood Feud
OR Love's Renunciation

CHAPTER XXXI.

Greater Love

Rankine nodded; then all at once, as if feeling the infinite comfort of a friendly eye, he put his hand on Peter's arm.

"Let's go out into the scrub a bit, and sit down. Peter Garvock in the flesh on the Klondyke! Gosh, but it's a funny world!"

He laughed then, the strangest laugh! It was without mirth, and sounded, in Peter's ears, sadder than tears. He cast a swift glance at his cousin's face, which Alan caught and fully understood.

"I'm not crazy, Peter! Only—only up here, a man gets a bit away from the normal. Tell me, how long is it since you left Scotland?"

"Five weeks yesterday."

"And—and are they well?"

"They are well. I am here, Alan, by your wife's leave, and with her blessing. She wrote to me the night before I started to wish me Godspeed."

"My wife! Then you know, Peter?"

"They all know. And she and Judy are at Stair together, waiting for you, and my immediate business in life is to get you to them as quickly as I can."

Peter fumbled in his pocket, brought out the thin, gold-bound letter case, and handed to his cousin the little note he had received from Carlotta at The Lees the night before he left it.

DEAR PETER—It is a great thing that you are going to do—one of the great deeds of love and service which redeem life from its sadness, and lift it up. God will be with you, I don't doubt, because many will be praying for you in Scotland. For me—if it should be that the good God permits you to bring back my husband to Stair, then my debt will be one that never can, or will, be paid. But I shall be content to owe it, because I know that it will make you a happier man. God bless you, Peter Garvock, and I am, till death,

"Your grateful friend,
"CARLOTTA RANKINE."

Having read these words, Alan rose to his feet, and still holding the slim sheet in his fingers, walked away.

And Peter, understanding, sat still, looking after him, and the wonder of the whole story was upon him, like some flood that bore him away.

When Alan came back his face had taken on a new look—that of a steadfast soul which beholds the goal in front.

"You can have it now, Alan. Later, when—when you have something that is of more account, you can let me have it back."

Rankine nodded gravely, and opening the bosom of his shirt, placed the folded sheet within, handling it as a man handles that which is precious to him.

"Now, Peter, tell me everything, for the hunger is gnawing at my heart."

Peter gave a faithful recital of all that had happened to Stair, and those so dear to his cousin.

"It's amazing, Peter, but the bit I don't get the hang of fully is how they can afford to go back to Stair to live. What miracle has happened in the meantime?"

"No miracle, Alan," said Peter, with a smile. "You saw Carlotta in New York, holding the most critical audience in the world in thrall? The woman who can do that puts money in her purse. It is your wife who has redeemed Stair!"

"Bless her! Bless her, ten thousand times! But——"

"She set out to do it," went on Peter, for noow that atonement was possible, he would give it in full measure. "Judy told me that, from the moment you left Scotland, Carlotta set herself to do this, and because she held herself responsible for the parting of Stair—but it was I who was responsible for that."

"No, no! And anyway, you've wiped it out to-day, Peter! For though I have it in my power to go back, and, if I choose, redeem Stair in full, it is a question whether I would have done it but for you. When a man has been here for a spell, Peter, something happens to him; either he loses his sense of proportion, or he is clean lifted up to unimagined heights. He comes nearer God, I suppose, or else the devil gets him. When I came out of the shack just now, I was not sure but that the Devil had me fast. You see, I've lost my pal, and what that means to a man on the Yukon—well, nobody except the man who has been through it can understand."

"But after all, Alan," said Peter the practical, "mountains and gold fields and the spell of the Yukon are all very well, and I grant you their power in full, for I've felt it myself since I've been here, but you can't get away from the fact that there is a woman belonging to Stair, and that, at the present moment, she is neither maid, wife, nor widow. And so right back you march with me—this very day, if I can take you!"

It was the right note to strike, and the red nose in Rankine's cheek again.

"You're right, Peter. But listen to the tale of the last two years, and then, perhaps, wou will understand that there are seasons in a man's life when to shirk his responsibilities seems not only natural, but absolutely the only thing to do.

"When I saw Carlotta in the Manhattan Theatre that night, Peter, and realized the impassable gulf between us, something seemed to burn in my brain till I did not know who or where I was. I had only one object in front—to get celan away from New York, to put the whole breadth of the American Continent—the world if possible—between me and the woman whose life I had spoiled. I realized then—as you say—that she was neither maid, wife, nor widow, and that the wrong I had done her was irreparable.

"I had the idea of suicide when I got outside, but, somehow, I lacked either courage or resource— I can't tell. Anyhow, I had my chance, for my railway tickets were in my pocket, and I boarded the train at midnight, as I intended to do, and I woke in Toronto. I went on, but did not alight at Calgary, as I had intended, for there was one man in New York who knew that address, and from whom it might be possible for Carlotta to obtain it. I went on to Vancouver and there I fell in with a Yorkshireman, who offered me a job on his ranch, a little east of the Rockies, and near enough to Calgary, so that I could have found the other man's place without difficulty. But I lay low and kept dark, and for nine months I was lost there, and was nothing more than one of a number set to certain tasks. I did well, for I liked the life, and, of course, I was at home in the saddle—a good life for the young and fit, and al ife which a man can live and keep his self-respect, though it leads to nowhere in particular, and keeps him for ever adrift from all ideas of home. I spent my days in the saddle, anl my nights chiefly in the cookhouse wagon, for we were away from the homestead on the round-up, six weeks at a time. I could spin you a good many yarns about that bit of my career, but they'll keep. Perhaps—who knows?—some day, on Brassie Hill, we may sit on the march dyke and reel them off."

Peter turned his head away, for tears were in his eyes.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Alan's Story

"Nine months on the ranch, then Keighley died, and I had to quit." Alan did not say how or why, though that part of his experience, and Rose Keighley's frank offer of a matrimonial partnership, would have made no uninteresting chapter.

"Then I tried the lumber campe, but that was the absolute limit! Gad! what brutes men are, herded together, cut off from all that's good. The mothers' sons I've seen wallowing in the pit! I couldn't stick it. I quitted that, too; and all the time I was making slowly West, or, to put it with absolute correctness, the North-West, towards the Yukon and Affery. He said to me the night I bade him good bye at the station in New York that we should meet on the Yukon—and we did.

"I came here in October, anf I found Affery int Dawson City. I was a queer meeting. I came down with the last boat of the season, and the pack-ice was grazing he all the way down the river, and on the quay there stood Affery."

" 'So you've come!' was all he said, as casually as if we had met by arrangement. 'I hoped it would be by this boat, for the trail and the stage in winter are not for the tenderfoot.'

"Just as if he were expecting me, see! And never a single question as to why or how I had come. He just laid hold on me, and the next day we came up to the shack."

"But that was the beginning of winter! You mean you wintered here?"

Rankine nodded.

"It was his idea, and I, well— I hadn't much choice, and it's a good life, Peter—the life of the wild—for htose who understand it. We lived like trappers on what we shot and found, and at night, shut down in the shack, as we were as comfortable as any man could desire. It was Affery's real home. That castle he bought in Donegal never held him, nor ever could. He belonged to the wild.

THE WORLD'S PRESS

A Tardy Recognition

THE TIMES—Commerce, which has profited enormously from the disinterested and frequently ill-paid, labors of scientific researchers, has been, though with some notable exceptions, strangely negligent on the whole of the sources to which it has owed its prosperity. But the age of luck, tide, and the prospering star may be taken by this time to be over and its successor is the era of accurate knowledge, painfully discovered and strictly applied.

* * * * *

The British in India

WASHINGTON POST—China is the only section of the earth where huge populations are without government. India has been aided by Great Britain for more than a century, and the hope is cherished that ultimately the Indians will rule themselves. Making all allowances for the advantages which Britain has gained from ruling India, the fact remains that India is in far better condition than she would have been if the natives had been free to rule themselves.

Singapore

BROOKLYN EAGLE—Great Britain is now prepared to take complete advantage of those rights which were reserved to her in the Pacific. There can be no question of deception or double-dealing. There will naturally be some difference of opinion as to the effect of vast expenditures at Singapore on the spirit of the Washington agreements, but as a question of right Great Britain's position cannot be impeached.

Betting on The Course

LE CANADA—There is a resemblance here to prohibition and one must treat it with similar remedies. If a wager were inherently vicious, it would be necessary to prohibit it altogether. But since it can only become a vice when abused, it is the abuse which must be curbed. Just as prohibition did not give the results which reformers expected, so would the prohibition of bets have no other effect than to encourage clandestine and fraudulent gambling.

Plain Logic

SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN—If our war policy was to intervent in order to end the war, as we wanted it ended, our peace policy should be to restore Europe to economic health at the earliest possible moment in order that our economic welfare may notbe imperilled. This is where the American farmer comes in. He is to-day the victim of the abrupt reversal of American policy involved in the retirement of our government from European affairs before the new Europe had begun to be stabilized and its economic life restored.

New Zealand's Debt

AUCKLAND WEEKLY NEWS—Proposals of the first importance in regard to the public debt of New Zealand were made by Mr. Massey in last year's budget. The first was to use the powers obtained by him previously to utilize available funds for the purchase of securities for cancellation. He anticipated that by this measure he would be able to pay off about £5,000,000 of debt. The year's accounts show that this figure has been substantially exceeded; the sum provided for various accounts exceeding the budget estimate; while there was also a substantial gain thru purchases of war loan and other securities at a discount.

A VICEROY'S DUTIES

The Er.glishman (Calcutta): Under the montagu-Chelmsford constitution the Viceroy has many of the powers of a monarch and many of the responsibilities of a Prime Minister in a worse position than Dominion Premiers, because while the latter do have Parliamentary majorities, even if diminutive, the Government of India i sin a permanent minority except, so to speak, in its House of Lords. In a country so unused to Parliamentary forms, so vast and so densely populated as India, we cannot conceal our conviction that it is a profound misfortune that the Viceroy is not able to travel as of yore and is so tied to his desk with paper work and considerations pertaining to Parliamentary routine.

America Heads List of International Multi-Millionaires

LONDON, June 28 (AP)—Who are the ten richest men in the world? asks the "Sunday Express." It answers the query itself by giving a list at the head of which is Henry Ford, whose fortune it estimates at $500,000,000. John D. Rockefeller comes next with $450,000,000; Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, is third with $150,000,000, and then follow the Duke of Westminster, Sir Basil Zaharoff, Hugo Stinnes, Percy Rockefeller, Baron H. Mitsui, Baron H. Iwasaki and the Gaekwar of Baroda, each with $100,000,000.

James B. Duke, the tobacco king; George F. Baker, of the First National Bank of New York, and T. B. Walker, the Minneapolis timber landowner, the Express says, might be added to the list since they all have fortunes estimated at $100,000,000, while there are at least three other Indian rulers whose fortunes probably exceed this amount.

The Rothschilds, Guggenheims, Vanderbilts, Weyerhousers, and the Astors, says the writer, do not appear because theirs are family fortunes The Rothschilds wealth has been estimated at from $250,000,000 to $500,000,000, and that of the Astors at from $100,000,000 to $500,000,000.

Henry Ford is possibly the richest man in all history, the paper declares. He has a net business income of more than $100,000,000 a year. He earns $250 every minute. Croesus may have been richer, since his famous gift to Delphi cost $10,000,000, and that, reduced to today's terms, might mean $200,000,000.

John D. Rockefeller gave away $500,000,000 to charity and to foundations before 1921. He is the head, however, of the biggest group of wealthy men ever produced by a single industry, and his private fortune must still rank him second.

Sir Basil Zaharoff is Europe's mystery man, but it is no mystery that he is one of Europe's wealthiest men. He owns more than half of Monte Carlo, and his holding in armament firms are even larger. He is in oil, finance, shipping; in fact, it is difficult to say what he is not interested in.

The Mitsuis and the Iwasakis are financiers, traders, and shippers. The Gaekwar of Baroda's wealth is almost impossible to estimate, but his diamonds alone are valued at $1,250,000, and he has a jewelled tapestry worth $1,500,000. Guns of gold weighing 400 pounds stand at his palace gate.

"Antigen" For Consumption

Large Supplies of New Vaccine Ready For Doctors Soon.

The department of pathology at Oxford University is preparing a large supply of Professor Dreyer's vaccine, or "antigen," for tuberculosis, and very soon it will be at the disposal of selected physicians and surgeons throughout the country.

The Medical Research Council, in a statement which they have issued on Professor Dreyer's method, declares that results obtained by trials of the treatment under suitable control at three hospitals in London have been favourable almost without exception. In cases of tuberculosis disease of the glands and of the skin the results have surpassed any known to have been attained regularly by other methods. Encouraging results have also been gained in the treatment of infections like those in puerperal fever and other septic conditions.

The statement continues:

The Medical Research Council are now arranging, in consultation with Professor Dreyer, for extensive trials of the new treatment by physicians and surgeons at various centres in different parts of the country where suitable facilities can be provided. Much has still to be learned of the best modes of application of the treatment and it is not ready yet for general use. For the series of trials now in view supplies of the new vaccine will be prepared for distribution at the Oxford School for Pathology.

Full publication will be made of the clinical results obtained. If these justify the hopes which have been formed and lead to a wide use of the new treatment it is believed that adequately large supplies of the necessary "antigen" will be ready at very small cost.

Investigations are in progress to ascertain what useful extensions can be made of the new method fo "antigen" preparation and of its applications to the prevention or treatment of infective disease.

ANYONE MAY MAKE IT.

The Medical Research Council, instituted to support research into diseases of every kind, has, with its small grant of £130,000 a year, already done much useful work. With the Ministry of Health the council controls the manufacture of insulin, the treatment for diabetes, under a patent. The tuberculosis vaccine will not be patented and as soon as details of its preparation are published anyone may make it.

Ask For Full Enquiry

We print below a telegraph message received from the ex-Minister of Agriculture and Mines, Dr. Campbell, which includes copy of message sent to Prime Minister Warren regarding matters in relation to the Department of Agriculture and Mines.

Dr. Campbell requests the Prime Minister to institute a full enquiry into such matters.

While, pending an enquiry it may not be appropriate to comment on the contents of Dr. Campbell's message, the Advocate feels that the message will speak for itself. In his demand for an enquiry, and in his intimated return for this purpose, Dr. Campbell has done much towards the discounting of the reckless rumours spread by many, who believe in the idea of attacking people when they are unable to defend themselves.

SOURIS, P. E. I., Aug. 2nd.

Editor Advocate,
St. John's, N.F.

Would you do me the favor of publishing the following telegram to the Prime Minister. "I would ask you to do me the kindness to hold a full inquiry into relief expenditure during the past two and a half years on my return from my holidays. You would recall that all relief expenditure in the different districts was conducted by me working in conjunction with the various members from the various districts. This includes both Government and Opposition members. It was only on the members' advice that various relief works were undertaken in the different districts, and in many cases the allocations were in their hands, and return sheets were not furnished the Department of Agriculture and Mines and the Public Works Dept, under which departments relief was conducted. Associated with this investigation I would ask you to investigate the various efforts at organized disturbances attempted in the Colony for political purposes during the past three years. The checkmating of those efforts was under my control and some expenditure occurred in my endeavours to control such disturbances. You would do me a favour if you would arrange for such a complete investigation covering the full period of relief work and extending to the final expenditure of allocations made to various districts. I am sending a copy of this message to the St. John's Press."

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

The Reparations Crisis

The developments of recent weeks in the European situation have apparently brought the countries involved in the Reparations controversy no nearer a basis of settlement, and it begins to look now as if an open breach between England and France is but a matter of time. Lord Curzon in his latest statement in the House of Lords, a statement rendered more frank than usual by the "taunts" of Lord Birkenhead, reveals fully for the first time just how serious the situation is in its application to the industrial and economic well-being of Great Britain.

The determination has been voiced times without number in the past month or so that England will not stand idly by and watch France destroy the last of her hopes of effecting such a settlement as will assure the British nation of its rights. These threats, for they can be called by that name, have, however, had not the slightest effect in turning France from the course she has mapped out, nor is there any likelihood that France will be turned from her course until Britain is finally compelled to enforce the threats that she has indirectly made.

No amount of discussion can place France in fuller possession of the facts concerning England's position than that country has been in for months, yet all appeals from her ally for "a square deal" have fallen on deaf ears. The continuance by France in her attitude of pig-headed immovability can only result in a crisis, the outcome of which it is easy to foretell. England to-day has one million unemployed and this number, it is feared, will be doubled by the Winter. Her foreign trade outlook is hopeless because of the economical non-recovery of Europe which England claims is due entirely to France's policy. As Lord Curzon pointed out, France is not the only country that has reparations coming to it from Germany, but France has Germany by the throat in an attempt to squeeze her share of reparations out of the defeated enemy. Instead of producing material results of the kind France set out to get, the squeezing process is, according to British opinion, having the directly opposite effect and while minimizing her own chances of recovering what is due her, it is rendering more and more remote the day when the other allied countries can hope to come in for their share.

On the shoulders of Premier Baldwin rests a grave responsibility, for upon his decision now depend more momentous issues than have confronted the British nation since the close of the war.

How the Producers Pay

A Canadian correspondent's letter is published in another column, in relation to the matter of fish prices. The letter is enlightening in the respect that it shows how the Canadian producer suffers by unfortunate methods of market disposal.

It is charged that in almost every town in Canada, such exorbitant prices are charged to the public by vendors that either the public cannot buy in the quantities required or that considerable quantities are thus rendered unfit for human consumption and condemned by the health authorities.

Here it is where the merchant greed for the dollar kills the producers' chances for earning a decent livelihood. If the fish sellers were content to make a much smaller profit, the ultimate results would be just as remunerative, more fish would be consumed and its demand would be strengthened with the inevitable favourable result to the fishermen who catch it.

It is nothing short of outrageous to have fish sellers, as charged by the Canadian correspondent, selling at a profit, per pound, equal in value to what the fishermen are paid originally.

What exists in Canada certainly applies to Newfoundland conditions. Indeed, it was the Advocate's discussion of conditions here which elicited an outline of conditions there.

We have no organization or business system in the marketing of fish products. When the marketing season arrives, there is a mad rush and confusion, market glutting and price-slumping, and spoiled cargoes and huge losses, for all of which the fishermen ultimately pay.

And all the while, the foreign dealers are raking in their huge profits from their purchasing publics, irrespective of the fact whether the fishermen who catch fish get paid decently or not.

Is it good enough?

President Harding's Death

Yesterday's foreign despatch stated President Harding, who had been suffering from ptomaine poisoning, had passed the dangerous stage and was on the road to recovery. To-day the sad news is conveyed that the President is dead.

Thus is removed from the stage of publicity another international figure. President Harding was an ardent advocate of world peace, although the policy he pursued to this end may have been questioned and seriously condemned by many.

We think that the last public address delivered by him was on July 26th at Vancouver before a distinguished company of high officials of the Dominion Government.

"If European nations," said President Harding, "would heed the lesson conveyed by Canada and the United States they would strike at the root of their own continuing dsagreements and in their prosperity forget to inveigh constantly at our's."

"It is the public will, not force, that makes for enduring peace," Harding continued, "and is it not a gratifying circumstance that it has fallen to the lot of us North Americans, living amicably for more than a century under different flags to present this most striking example produced of the basic fact that peace can always be kept, whatever be the grounds of controversy between peoples that wish to keep it."

"Europe should not be reproached for its resentment of envy against the fortunate countries of North America," the President said.

"Neither should we sympathize with their seeming inability to break the shackles of age-long methods and rejoice in our own relative freedom from the stultifying effects of old world customs and practices.

"What an object lesson of peace is shown today by our two countries to all the world. Only a scrap of paper, recording hardly more than a simple understanding, safeguards lives and properties on the Great Lakes and only humble mile-posts mark the inviolable boundary line for thousands of miles through farm and forest. Our protection is in our fraternity, our armour is our faith and the tie that binds more firmly year by year is an ever increasing acquaintance and comradeship through interchange of citizens. The compact is not of perishable parchment but of fair and honorable dealings, which, God grant, shall continue for all time."

Harding referred to constant exchange of citizens between the two countries and said that the fact that two billions, five hundred millions of American money have been invested since the Armistice in Canadian securities is a tribute to scrupulous maintenance of Canadan credits "to a degree equalled only by your Mother country across the sea and your sister country across the hardly visible border.

He spoke of the ancient bugaboo of American annexation of Canada as having died, saying: "We have troubles enough of our own now," and facetiously advised Canada not to consider any plan to annex the United States.

"Let us go our own gait along parallel roads, you helping us and we helping you," he said. "As long as each country maintains its independence and both recognize their independence, these paths cannot fail to be highways of progress and prosperity."

Latest News of the Fisheries

The fishery at Keels and vicinity has been very poor to date.

TRINITY—From Hant's Hr. to Salvage: Total landed to date 250 qtls. The official sending the report says it has the appearance of being the worst voyage in the history of the place.

BAY de VERDE—From Break Heart Point to Meed's Brook: Total landed, 360 qtls. There are 32 traps operating. Dogfish have put in an appearance and in some sections are very numerous.

PORT de GRAVE—From South Point to Bay Roberts' Point: 134 qtls. landed to date. Twenty motor boats and punts are operating. "The outlook is not bright," says the report.

CARBONEAR—Up to July 28th, the total landed is 235 qtls. for ten traps. The area embraced is between Carbonear and Crocker's Cove.

BURIN—From Beau Bois to Jean de Bay: Prespects poor, the total landed being 4,130 qtls. There are 16 traps in this section; 45 boats and 20 dories fishing. The fishery on the whole, the report says, is far below the avenage and shows little or no improvement.

BURIN—From Lew Point to Sandy Cove: The total landed to date is 3,990 qtls. for 18 traps. The official making the report says: "With good weather there is every sign of a fair voyage, but salt and provisions are very scarce and some families have no flour at all.

FLOWER'S COVE—E. N. E. dull, cloudy and showery; little fish.

MAKOVIK—Strong S. E., foggy, rain.

GRADY—Strong S.E., dense fog,

BATTLE HR.—Strong S.E. cloudy, heavy rain, smoky, no boats out.

The fishery around Catalina, Little Catalina and Melrose continues fairly good, with traps, codnets and trawls. Recently trapmen have been doing remarkably well.

Canadian Correspondent Writes Advocate

DISCUSSES FISH PRICES.

Lindsay, Ont.,
July 23rd., 1923.

Editor Advocate,
St. John's.

Dear Sir,—Referring to an item copied from your paper, and appearing on page 4 of the Toronto Globe dated July 20th, on the subject of "Fish"—

Organization and understanding as to price and profits, by retail dealers, is the real cause of lack of demand for fish. If the retail price of fish included a fair and reasonable profit only, the difficulty would be, in keeping up the supply, to meet the demand—

Instead, however, in almost every town in Canada, owing to exorbitant prices, fish are allowed to remain at the doors of venders on our main streets until their spoiled condition, can be noticed a block away, at which time, they are chased to the dump by our health inspectors—In fact, the condition of some fish displayed for sale is so nauseating that, regardless of prohibitive prices, it is little wonder the trade is made to suffer—

Vendors in Ontario take as much in profit, per pound, as the fisherman gets for his fish, and more in many cases.

They seem to overlook the fact that fish are perishable—If by organization, Fishermen can, to some extent, control the retailers profits, by fixing a selling price, the whole Canadian fleet will be kept going to supply the demand—

Regarding smoked fillet—A few years ago this phase of the business was launched by some firm in the eastern provinces—The cases they were shipped in, for at least a year, read, "Fillets of Haddock." Later, they dropped the word "Haddock" and the cases now contain fillets, Fillets of What? God only knows.

Do what you can to procure a square deal for the consumer and your fish markets, in Canada, is at once assured.

Ruhr Situatioh Affects Every British Industry

Foreign Secretary Curzon Makes Impassioned Statement In House of Lords.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Goaded by the criticisms of lord Birkenhead, Lord Curzon declared in the Lords this afternoon that the situation in the Ruhr was "telling upon almost every industry in this country, after a few brief weeks of activity, due to the purchase of coal in Great Britain. When the situation in the Ruhr first began we saw the dark hand of this tragedy clutching at the throat of almost every industry in this country." Lord Curzon's plain talking was quite different from the calm phrases of his prepared, formal speech this morning. The Foreign Secretary said, instead of there being reparation coming out of the Ruhr the British Government saw all chances of any reparations being whittled away before "our very eyes." He remarked that other people besides the French and Belgians had some reparations coming to them and therefore could not stand to one side and let France and Belgium carry out whatever policy they might desire. "I speak not merely of our right to interference, and that right to interfere rests not only upon our share of the reparations, but also upon the rights which we possess in respect to payment of inter-Allied debts which is a matter of supreme importance and which cannot be set aside as if it did not exist, we see Germany rotting in ruin, lapsing into irreparable decay, carrying with it all prospects of economic recovery not merely for Germany but for Europe. When we looked at our own position at home we saw that which was passing in the Ruhr was telling upon almost every industry in this country. If we do not see it now we shall see it in the course of the winter. The effect of the Ruhr occupation will be felt in almost every cottage in this country and because we noted this circumstance, because we felt it our duty to supreme interests to take action, to intervene, we have been taunted by Lord Birkenhead with having reversed our policy," Lord Curzon said that if anyone asked the Government what it was going to do next week or next month, his answer was that he did not know," and he added "it was unfair to ask such a question before papers had been laid before the country and the Government had the advantage of assistance of public opinion which would come from such publication."

Speaking in the Lords this morning after the Foreign Secretary had made his first statement, Lord Birkenhead former Lord Chancellor declared the whole French nation was behind its Government in relation to the Ruhr. He said the policy of Great Britain was not to address recommendations to the French nation which Great Britain has no means of enforcing and which the French had not the slightest intention of accepting at British hands. Great Britain he said ought to withdraw her army of occupation and her representatives on the Reparations Commission. In that way she would avoid all responsibility for what was going on.

ANOTHER REWARD OFFERED

SYDNEY, N.S., Aug. 2.—City police commission decided last night to recommend to the City Council that five hundred dollars reward be offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those guilty of the blowing up of the water line of the British Empire Steel Corporation early Monday morning. If the Council adopts the resolution the total reward offered will total three thousand five hundred dollars.

Memorial Day at Stag Bay, Labrador

Services on S. S. Watchful, Capt. George Bragg.

Memorial Day was observed at Stag Bay, Labrador, on Sunday, July 1st. All hands being assembled in the fore part of the S. S. Watchful, the master, Captain George Bragg, made a short announcement to the veterans, officials, officers and crew, settlers and other subjects of His Majesty there present, as to the nature of the service about to be held. Mr. Warwick Smith then gave an address, taking for his subjects the flag for which so many had fought and died both on land and sea, and the patriotism which was a manifestation of that greater love which caused men to lay down their lives for their friends.

Mr. Richard White, of Nain, and Mr. Robert Mitchell of Makovick, then interpreted the gist of Mr. Smith's address to those Esquimaux present who could not understand English. The hymn "Nearer my God to Thee" was then sung, Sergeant Fred Churchill accompanying on the violin. The Captain then asked all present to join in saying the Lord's prayer, after which there was a short silence. The firing squad in charge of Lieut. Leo Hickey and Sergeant Major F. P. LeGrow, then fired three volleys towards the west. The squad comprised veterans both of the Navy and the Army, and though there was lack of uniform there was no lack of uniformity. The hymn "O God our help in ages past" was then sung, after which the ensign which had been at half mast, was run up full and the service concluded with the singing of the national anthem. About half of the crew and officials and veterans.

Open House for a Thousand Years on the Great St. Bernard Pass

The Alps are the core of Europe. To the north lies Germany, to the East Austria, to the south Italy, to the West France. The valleys in the Alps make the cantons of Switzerland. Over the mountains are certain well defined roads and passes.

Rome was the capital of old Europe. All roads led to Rome and all had to pass over the Alps. One of the best known is by the Great St. Bernard pass, 8,120 feet above sea level.

Once the Great St. Bernard saw troops of bronze-sworded Gauls invading Italy, and then the clank of Caesar's legions, with their short iron swords and eagle standards and fair-haired British captives. A few centuries later wild hordes of Goths and Huns poured over the passes, harrying the legions, till finally the Roman Empire fell and the Papal power took its place, and Rome was still the world's capital.

During the Middle Ages a procession of travellers poured over the Alps: pilgrims tramping to the Holy Land, bishops flying to Rome with complaints against their sovereigns, kings and even popes themselves, when there was another Pope dwelling at Avigon in France. Ever and again the mountain passes echoed with the stirring calls of the crusades, the merry notes of bridal escort, the solemn trumpets of funeral trains, like that which bore Robert Bruce's heart to the Holy Land.

To care for these wayfarers in 962 charitable men built a monastery on the summit of the Great St. Bernard pass, named after Bernard of Menthon, its founder. For a thousand years these monks have spent their lives in this region of almost perpetual snow, giving food and shelter to rich and poor, the Alps, a great altar on which they offer up a perpetual round of prayer for the struggling world around them.

The St. Bernard dog reminds us everywhere of the story of their work. These beautiful dogs have become famous for their succour of snow-bound travellers on the treacherous pass. The monastery is called the Hospice, a French word derived like our "hospital" from the Latin hospitum or "guest-house."

Nowadays the only genuine travellers over the pass are tramps, apt to be ugly customers making a getaway, or pedestrian travellers from Germany or Austria. For travel on foot has survived in these countries as a respectable means of getting about. Herr Bebel, the former socialist leader, for instance, tramped about from city to city after he had learned his trade, as a young man, to learn new methods and find good wages. The roads of Italy before the war were dotted with Teutonic professors and students on tour with alpine rucksack on back and staff in hand.

One of the most famous passages of the Great St. Bernard was made by Napoleon in May, 1800. His engineers reported the road barely passible. "Let us start then," he replied. He threw his army over in sixteen days, hauling his guns over the snow on sleds, and dashed down the glorious valley of Aosta in Italy beyond, and seized the fortresses which still frown from every bend, before his enemies were awake. A marble tablet in the Hospice commemorates his visit, put there when Switzerland was part of his empire.

The writer visited the Hospice in 1913. He was on a poor man's holiday, tramping to Italy with blanket and tent on back, and twenty-five cents daily food bill. He reached Bourg St. Pierre, the last village on the road, just before dusk on May 10. His mail had missed him at Geneva and he was penniless, unshaven, dressed in workman's corduroys.

Through flocks of goats herded by the mountain villagers to be milked he made his way to the village mayor, who lodged him in the gaol and give him a hunk of bread, and next morning some hot water with grease in it, and sent him on his way.

It was snowing heavily all the time. Now and then the drift would flurry and show a glimpse of bold summit rocks flecked with whirling snow drifts. Underfoot no road could be seen during the last part of the journey. But there was a line of posts at such distance apart that shortly after losing sight of one, you would see the next ahead. It was easy to believe the stories about loss of life on the pass. And this was May.

The last bit of road seemed interminable to our hungry tramp. A party, led by guides, was passed. At last a lift in the snow curtain revealed a stone building almost buried by huge snow piles. A door gave to a push. A great dog came up and put his forepaws against the wayfarer's chest and bayed a welcome. A long-robed figure appeared.

If the unshaven tramp had been the Prince of Wales he could not have received a kinder welcome. No questions were asked. He was feasted with meat and wine, put in a warm, comfortable bedroom and given a book to read. Because he was British they showed him the piano given to the monks by the Prince of Wales afterwards Edward VII.

A wonderful night's rest, a delicious breakfast, a kiss on both cheeks from the almoner of the Hospice, heretic though they considered their guest, and then a tumble down from that wintry Jack-in-the-Beanstalk's land into Italy, where the Alps became fleecy clouds, their bases lost to view, above the green rice fields of Lombardy, and then the blue, blue sea and fields of vivid poppy. Italy! Can Heaven be more beautiful than Italy!

Health Hints—

Don't waste the very valuable mineral salts in vegetables by the usual careless methods of boiling. Many set the vegetables on to boil in either cold or boiling water and then, when all the valuable elements have boiled away and the flavor of the food has been reduced, they serve the vegetable. In this way all the valuable mineral salts are thrown away.

Vegetables, says Nurse, should be steamed, so they will retain their natural flavor and be more easily digested. If tehy are boiled the water in which they are cooked should be saved to make a foundation for soup.

Baked potatoes are good for invalids because they are easily digested. Steamed once are just as good, however, if not better, for steaming renders the starches absolutely soluble. Steamed carrots are fine for invalids as are asparagus and spinach when steamed.

Say Paper Here Will Cost a Higher Price

American Interests Trying to Arouse Canadian Publishers.

..New York—If the Canadian Government declares an embargo on the export of pulpwood cut from private lands, it will not only increase the price of newsprint in the United States but will eventually "subvert the American industry in favor of Canada," according to a statement made over the week-end by Philip J. Dodge, president of the International Paper Company. Mr. Dodge said that the International bought about 200,000 cords of pulpwood in Canada in 1922. The company used about 700,000 cords of woods a year. Figuring five cords to the acre, this means enarly 220 square miles of woodland. Investigation by the Financial Post indicates that Mr. Dodge's statement expreses the opinion of most of the leaders in the newsprint industry regarding the effect of the proposed embargo on the American newsprint industry and the paper market. All appear to agree that it would not only increase the price of newsprint but would inevitably force the closing of a gerat many American mills, a very heavy loss of invested capital in some of the northern states and considerable unemployment in the districts lying about them.

Some of them believe that the effects of the embargo will not be confined to the United States. Canada will be affected as well. As one newsprint manufacturer pointed out to the Financial Post, if prices go up in thet United States they will rise in Canada as well. The price is, therefore, largely made in New York, not in Montreal. In this man's opinion a nembargo on pulpwood would force the Canadian publishers to pay at least ten dollars a ton more for their newsprint.

Another manufacturer told the Financial Post that his company spent over $2,000,000 a year for wood in New Brunswick alone. He said that an embargo would deprive the farmers of New Brunswick of the greater part of this sum, a matter of no small importance to the province in view of the closing of their market in the New England States by the Fordney Tariff.

New Consumption Vaccine

SUCCESSFUL TESTS IN HOSPITALS

A discovery which may prove of the utmost importance for curing tuberculosis and giving protection against infectious diseases was announced yesterday by Dr. Dreyer, Professor of Pathology at Oxford University, in a lecture delivered at St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, W.

The discovery is a means of adding to the power of vaccines which are injected into the body to cure disease or to protect against it.

In a vaccine for a disease dead bacilli of that particular disease are contained. The effect of these dead bacilli is to give the beneficent cells of the blood an appetite for the living bacilli of the disease, when the good cells eat them up or otherwise destroy them.

THE GREAT PROBLEM

It has been found, however, that some bacilli are coated with fat, which protects them and renders them unassailable by the beneficent cells. Among these bacilli are those of tuberculosis.

Dr. Dreyer's great step in advance is that he has devised a way of removing the fat by chemical treatment, thus giving hope of a tuberculosis vaccine which will do its work properly and restore health.

EXHAUSTIVE EXPERIMENTS

In some cases the microbes are dissolved and disappear from the blood, while in others they are eaten up and destroyed by phagocytic cells in the blood.

Tests at the Brompton Hospital and the London Hospital have proved satisfactory.

Patients inoculated with the new serum have shown marked improvement, particularly those suffering from tuberculosis of the glands.

How to Purify the Blood

"Fifteen to thirty drops of Extract of Root, commonly called Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, may be taken in water with meals and at bedtime, for indigestion, constipation and bad blood. Persistence in this treatment will give permanent relief in nearly every case." Get the genuine at druggists, 50c. and $1.00 bottles.

Two Days Races

ANNUAL DERBY A BIG SUCCESS

A Fine Afternoon Draws Record Crowd to Witness Finish of 1923 Regatta

Yesterday afternoon under favourable conditions the Regatta of 1923 was finished.

Interest in the event was shown by the fact that the banks of Quidi Vidi Lake was dotted with a record mass of enthusiastic spectators. The attendance was larger than on Wednesday when a postponement was taken because of weather conditions. It is estimated that 12.000 people were present on the course.

An outstanding feature in connection with this years Regatta was the manner in which the police, mounted and foot, handled the traffic and the excellent judgment displayed in handling the various incidents peculiar to-day. On Wednesday only one arrest was made, and to-day's police docket shows a clean sheet, so far as the races are concerned. The grind which the police were subjected to during these two days calls for more then a bit of praise from the newspapers. Duty so faithfully and efficiently done calls for some tangible recognition. Generally speaking, the 1923 Regatta may be regarded as one of the most successful in our history.

The main attraction for the sporting fraternity was the wheel of fortune, operated by the boat clubs where at a fifty to 1 shot the 99 got rid of their surplus cash.

The presence of His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce on both days was much appreciated, and the democratic way in which His Excellency took part in the festivities gave the people a fixed impression that a Governor can be as Governor Allardyce truly is a man's man.

At 4 p.m. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce, accompanied by Major Wilberforce-Bell and Capt. Goodfellow arrived and were received by President Hiscock and members of the Committee and occupied seats on the grand stand, where an excellent view of the races was afforded them

Laborers

St. Joseph's crew in the Cadet were the favorites, and took the lead from the starter. Going to the buoys the Cadet had a couple of lengths on the Guard, and coming home this was increased at every stroke, and she crossed the line an easy winnar, with about six lengths to the good, Guard 2nd., and Mary 3rd.

Time 10.21.

Cadet (St. Joseph's)—P. Brown, cox.; H. Burt, stroke, F. Burt, E. Tilley, W. Earles, H. Strange, T. Halley.

Factories

Two crews entered in this race, Brehn's in the Nellie R. and Horwood's in the Cadet. Tom Kearsey stroked the Nellie R., and from the first Brehm's were picked as the winner. It was a good race to the buoys, and the boats turned with the Nellie R, having a slight lead. From half the pond up on the home stretch the Nellie R. gradually increased her lead and crossed the line a winner by two boat lengths.

Time. 10.50 2-5.

Football, Senior

This race created much interest, being amongst the most popular events on the programme and prior to Regetta Day betting favored the C.E.I.. Four crews entered, Nellie R. (Star), Mary (C.L.B.),. Cadet (Cadets), and Guard (C.E.I.) The latter were the favorites, but Noseworthy, their stroke had his hand injured Monday night and he was still feeling the effects of it yesterday. The boats got away nicely, the Cadet nosing ahead at the Committee tent and rowing well, had a couple of lengths at the buoys, with Guard second, and Nellie R. close astern. The Cadet had a favorable position, No 1 buoy and with reversed positions the experts say a much closer race would have resulted. Straightening out the Cadet increased her lead, but coming home the Guard gained somewhat, but was unablen to overtake the Cadet which crossed the line with two good lengths to spare, Guard 2nd. Nellie R. 3rd. Mary 4th.

Time, 10.50 1-5.

Intermediate Fishermen

Two boats only entered in this race which was the best of the whole programme, and up to the last lap it was difficult to say which would win. Portugal Cove, (Guard) and Outer Cove, (Cadet) were the contesting crews. Phil Brown steered the former and John Nugent the latter. It was a gruelling race all through. The Guard had a slight lead going down, but both turned together and coming home it was neck and neck. At the Band Stand Portugal Cove spurted. Phil Brown, the veteran Coxwain, here showed his hand, and under his skillful direction, the Portugal Cove men finisred the course a few feet ahead of the Outer Cove crew.

Time, 10.54.

Guard (Portugal Cove)—W. Hibbs, cox.; R. Allen, stroke; A. Mitchell, A. King, R. Mitchell, Geo. Churchill, Jas. Harding.

Championship.

Three boats entered, the Outer Cove Fishermen, who made the best time 9.47 on Wednesday, in the Cadet; Kearsey's Truckmen in the Nellie R. and a mixed crew in the Mary. The Outer Cove men were the favorites, and few bets could be obtained against them. At no time during the contest was the result in doubt. They had an easy win, beating the Nellie R. by about four lengths. Time 9.49 2-5, the quickest for the day though 2 2-5 seconds behind their winning time on Wednesday. Besides winning the Championship medals they also win the Governor's Cup for the quickest time.

Lady Alllardyce presented the medals to the winning crews. His Excellency announced that he intended donating a cup next year to the crew making the quickest time.

President Hiscock thanked His Excellency and Lady Allardyce for their attendance and the great interest they have taken in our Annual Regatta. He especially thanked His Excellency for his generosity in presenting a cup for the crew making the quickest time. President Hiscock also thanked the public for their attendance and their response to the collectors which made the successful carrying out of the Regatta possible. He also said there were good prospects of two, if not three new boats, for next year.

Vice-President Higgins then called upon the winning crews to come forward to receive their well merited prizes. His Excellency the Governor personally congratulated the Outer Cove crew upon winning the trophy which he presented for the quickest time, and he announced that he would make a similar presentation for next year's Regatta. The cup has been ordered in England and will arrive by the Sachem, due to-morrow, when it will be presented to the crew.

After the presentation Vice President W. J. Higgins in moving a vote of thanks to Lady Allardyce for so graciously presenting the prizes, referred to the democratic spirit in which their Execllencies had entered into the Regatta, and the interest they had shown in all matters pertaining to sport since their advent among us. Mr. Higgins also thanked the public for their attendance, the crews, Boat Clubs, and the Importers Association, the Press, and all who assisted in making the Annual Regatta such a magnificient success.

His Excellency said it give himself and Lady Allardyce great pleasure to be present and despite the inclement weather Wednesday they had enjoyed every minute. Cheers were then given for His Excellency and Lady Allardyce and the Committee thus bringing to a happy finish the Regatta of 1923.

S. S. SABLE I. ASSISTS BADLY DISABLED SCHOONER WITH VALUABLE CARGO

With Both Spars Broken Off Close to Her Deck, as Result of Heavy Gale, The Alcyone is Rescued and Towed To St. Pierre.

While bound from Halifax to St. Pierre, the s.s. Sable I., which arrived here yesterday, picked up the schr Alcyone in a disabled condition, some 80 miles west of the French port.

The Alcyone is a small vessel of 52 tons and cleared from St. Pierre for Nassau recently, and was damaged when a gale was encountered shortly after leaving. The schooner was dismasted, both spars breaking off close to the deck.

In this helpless condition, with over 1000 cases of whiskey on board, she was drifting about, when the Sable I. happened along, and Captain Murley, seeing her condition, went alongside, and was asked to tow the derelict to St. Pierre, as with such a valuable cargo on board and very little sail, it would be too risky to take any chances with the Revenue cutters.

Hawsers were forthwith attached, and the Alcyone was towed safely to harbour, where repairs will be effected and within a couple of weeks she will again set forth for "Nassau."

Police Court

A clerk, drunk was discharged.

Sergeant Furlong was complainant against a cooper of Cabot Street. The defendant, who was represented by Mr. T. P. Halley, pleaded guilty. He was getting a large quantity of stock and was unable to remove it all over Sunday. The defendant had to pay costs.

A Trinity Bay man was the main witness for the prosecution in a charge preferred by District Inspector Sheppord of Hr. Grace, against a city druggist for a breach of the prohibition Act. The point at issue was whether the druggist had the right to fill a perscription for a bottle of rum, on an order from the holder of a repeat script. The Judge decided the druggist under the circumstances acted in good faith and dismissed the case. It is probable, however, that arising out of the present action, the police will take other proceedings to test the legality of doctors issuing scripts "to be repeated when required"

St. Joseph's Regatta

Already there are applications to boat owners from several crews for different races, and judging from the personnel of the oarsmen we imagine there are going to be exciting contests.

The prizes will be gold and silver medals, also silver cups for the football and Old Comrades' races.

The Districts will be as follows:—

East End, to Prescott Street; Central, from Prescott St. to Barter's Hill; West End, from Barter's Hill to Patrick Street west, also Southside.

St. Joseph's Regatta Committee will have everything ready for the different crews to begin practice. and it is the intention of the Regatta Committee to place all their property at Father Pippy's disposal, which will greatly facilitate his efforts to make the day a success.

It is rumored that there will be five crews of fishermen, which will make that particular event well worth going down to see.

With the different crews in good training and well mixed up in various races, there will certainly be exciting moments during the events which will make the day even better than 1922.

New Memorial Winds For St. Thomas's Arrive

Will be Dedicated at Morning Service on Sunday

At St. Thomas's Church on Sunday next the Rector will unveil and dedicate two beautiful stained glass windows which have recently been placed in the chancel of the church.

One of the windows is in memory of the late J. H. Monroe, who at the time of his death was a lay representative of the parish in the Synod; the other is a memorial to the late H. D. Carter, a former church warden.

Te designs represent "The Nativity" and "Easter Morn," the latter depicting the scene when Our Lord and Mary Magdalene met at the sepulchre in the garden, and she addressed Him, supposing Him to be the gardner. Jesus saith unto her, "Mary!" She turned and saith unto Him, "Rabboni," which is to say, "Master!"

The windows were designed and executed by the well-known firm of Lyon, Toronto, and arrived by the last Manoa.

At the dedication ceremony on Sunday morning, the Rector will preach.

The Nation Mourns

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 3.—The nation to-day mourned the passing of its leader, the people of the United States from coast to coast, and from lands to the Gulf, and in territories beyond the seas, bowed their heads in grief, for their President was dead.

Army and Navy Will Honor Dead

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—The army and navy of the U. S. A. will tomorrow honor their dead Commander in Chief. On every ship and at every shore station, and every fort and army post in the country guns will boom forth a salute to the dead and flags will be hung at half mast. In addition a period of mourning for thirty days will be observed at the forts and army posts. A salute of thirteen guns will be fired at daybreak and thereafter there will be a signal gun at half hour intercals until sundown when a salute of forty-eight guns will be fired.

FATHER GIVES SON OATH OF OFFICE

Calvin Coolidge Is Hailed By U. S. People as Harding's Successor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Calvin Coolidge, former Vice President of the United States, who was sworn into office succeeding the late President Harding at an early hour this morning in the farmhouse at Plymouth, Vermont, where Coolidge was born and reared, dashed through New York this afternoon, enroute to Washington to take over the reins of office. He was guarded by the largest body of secret service men and attaches that ever followed a President of the United States. An army of newspaper men who were assembled to cover his arrival were foiled by the President being transferred from the Grand Central to Pennsylvania station surrounded by Guards. Passing thru crowds of bareheaded silent people who at once hailed their new chief executive and mourned their dead President. Coolidge did issue a brief statement to the newspaper men who interviewed him during the small hours of this morning when the tragic news had aroused him and he was told that he was President of the United States, he said he would try to follow out the plans and policies of his predecessor and anticipated no cabinet changes. Asked if he would again take the oath of office, he answered he would not as any person authorized to administer an oath can swear in a President of the United States he said and the aged father who lives at Plymouth Rock will have the sole honor of placing his son in the supreme position possible of achievement in this country.

Harding, who, until a few hours ago was President of the United States, at sunset last night in the city. Thousands lined the streets leading from the Palace Hotel, where President Harding died Thursday night, to the Southern Pacific Station, where body was placed on board special train to be taken to Washington. Ninety and a half hours will be occupied for the trip. When it ends at 10.30 Tuesday morning the body will rest a while in the White House, where President Harding served the nation for nearly two and a half years, and in the Capitol where as Senator from Ohio he represented his native State for six years. The funeral services will be held in the Capitol, Rotunda, late Wednesday, and then will begin final journey to Marion, Ohio.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Prince Henry, third son of King George, is in hospital at Aldershot with fractured ankle, according to the Daily Mail. He was leading troops of the Tenth Hussars at jumping practice Wednesday when he saw recruit unable to manage restive horse. Prince dismounted, took recruit's place, and had nearly subdued animal when it threw and rolled upon him.

In February, 1921, Prince Henry had his head slightly cut when thrown from his horse while hunting at Aldershot, and in March this year sustained minor injury when thrown while exercising horse at Cavalry School at Weedon.

NEW PRESIDENT IS WELL FITTED FOR POSITION

Was Former Governor of Massachusettes.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3—Calvin Coolidge, who took the oath of President of the United States at Plymouth Vermont, at 2.47 this morning, is perhaps better equipped by experience to take up administrative duties in the White House, than was any of his predecessors who have been called to that high office, by the death of the President. Having won for himself in a large measure the Vice President nomination, by executive forcefulness as Governor of Massachusettes, he has kept thruout the Harding administration closely advised as to problems of the Federal Government, and has assisted in shaping the Administration policy by constant attendance at Cabinet meetings.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Alan's Story

He was filled with the idea that their was gold hidden in this neighborhood— the fortune of a pal who built this very shack. Time and time again he had come back to seek it, and those who knew about it took it as the harmless obsession of a chap not quite right here," said Rankine, tapping his forehead. "But it was more than a notion—he found it before he died.

"I have a sort of queer feeling about telling you this yarn, Peter, for you are a chap who deals in hard facts, and you'll find it a bit difficult to swallow."

"Oh, no," Peter asured him cheerfully. "We're a long way from Scotland now, and it's possible to swallow anything."

"Well, the winter went on. We had a grand winter, Peter, and here my soul, in a sense, came to itself. We had books out from Dawson City and we read and discussed everything under heaven, and I was as happy as a man could be who had a past he was afraid to look back on.

"There never was a day when the thermometer was higher than fifty below zero, and in the nights it some times fell to seventy."

"Can folks live through cold like that?"

Rankine nodded.

"It is possible, with suitable clothing and a house small enough, to conserve the heat. Affery's chum, Arizona Red, built a shack down there, and he built it well. There isn't a chink or cranny in it where so much as a breath of wind can get through. It's lined, and interlined, and when the stove's piled high, and going merrily, it is as comfortable and warm as the heart of man could desire! In March, when the cold is at its worst, at the time when more temperate climates are enjoying their spring, Affery got a bad cold.

"He was always out in the scrub, watching the wild creatures, shooting, when we needed fresh meat, but he never trapped anything. He said it was a cowardly and devilish way of treating dumb animals; and it was through kneeling for a long time at a trap to get loose a gopher that he got this cold.

"It was snowing hard, and he got it soaked into him, and next day his temperature was up. He got better of that, and was about again, but not so strong as before. He talked less about leaving the Yukon, and more—a great deal more—about Arizona's treasure. He was set on discovering that before he died. And the odd thing was that, after all, he did discover it just six weeks ago to-day!"

"Then there has been truth in it after all," said Peter.

"It was all absolutely true. Arizona told him about the gold on his death-bed, and when he was almost past speech, tried to direct him where to find it. But he couldn't. The only thing Affery was able to make out was that it was somewhere near the shack. After Arizona died, and at a subsequent visit to it, he dug all about the shack. He took up the floor, took off the roof, and explored every nook and cranny. As a matter of fact, the nuggets were hidden in the overhanging bank of the creek, just below the house. I'll show you the hole later on. It was as clever arrangement as you could imagine—a regular little mine—yet so carefully concealed that nobody could have imagined that there was a covert there even for a mink or a rat. But Affery saw one coming out under the brush wood one day, and exploring its hole, found the bag with the nuggets. Not only one bag, but three, packed full. and they had lain there since Arizona's death in 'ninety-nine.

ff.and cmfwypshrf w w yydpdp uuu

"Three bags of nuggets and fifty thousand pounds. We took it down to Dawson and had it assayed and carefully put away, then we came back here——"

"Wasn't he excited over it?"

"No—only like a man who had got rest for his soul at last. He said we would spend the summer here, and get back to civilization in the fall. But from the day he found the pile he began to fail in health. The lung trouble came back in full intensity. I've had the doctor out several times. Finally he took to his bed, and yesterday he died."

Rankine's voive broke, and he turned his head away.

"It's a queer experience, Peter for a man to be shut up in such solitude with a soul drawing near to the other side! Affery was without fear. He talked of it as the great adventure, beside which everything else paled. And he died last night, as peacefully as a child, with his cheek on his hand, and a boy's smile on his face."

With that Rankine picked himself up and walked away a few steps; and Garvock understood. It was wonderful, the understanding that was between these two from that moment henceforth! The past, with all its bitterness, was wiped out, as it had never been.

Presently Rankine came back and sat down again.

"Affery hasn't a relation living in the world; and he himself said, hardly a friend. He has left me everything he possesses, and his wishes were as explicit as if they had been set down in black and white by any lawyer. He knew the whole story of my life, Peter, and the idea of redeeming Stair seemed to please him. It was the last thing he spoke of before he fll asleep. He said it was the thing he had been sent into the world to do."

"So you go back to Stair a rich man, Alan, after all."

"A rich man as far as money is concerned, Peter, but a poor man in some respects, for I'll never look on his like again! I've been through the hards, and in New York I touched the rock bottom of human misery. But I'd go through the whole of the last two years cheerfully if it would bring Affery back! He gave me a few instructions about the kind of folk I was to help as I had opportunity. Like me, he had been on the round-ups, and the lumber camps, and he knew that it is not always the working poor that most need the helping hand. I'll never be able to go back and live in idleness at Stair! Never again, Peter. Life has shown me too much."

"Thefi rst thing you have to do is to get back to Stair," said Peter, "and hear what the women folk have to say. And I am wondering how soon I can get back to Dawson to send Carlotta a calbegram? Won't you come back with me and sleep at the rest house to-night?"

Rankine shook his head.

"I won't leave him till he's under the sod, Peter. And that will be tomorrow. The Presbyterian minister will come out from Dawson, and we will bury him close by. He chose the spot. Then I'll leave him to the music of the Klondyke till the great silence enfolds him in its bosom."

Garvock, a little awed, in truth, stood back and looked at Rankine's uplifted face. For the time being he had not much thought to spare for Carlotta, but he was loyal in his fealty and love to the friend who had lifted him from despair.

Garvock knew that he was in the presence of a greater thing even than the love between man and woman—the deathless love of a man for his friend!

"I'd like to see him, Alan."

"Come, then," said Rankine, and led the way to the door of the shack.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Love Claims Its Own

Carlotta, with two letters on her knee, sat on the terrace steps at the back of Sair on he morning of the glorious Twelvth.

For the first time within the memory of man, there was no gun out on Brassie Hill, the shooting tenant having gone, and the Laird of Stair being far away from his own demesne.

Three months' complete rest had undoubtedly helped Carlotta, had taken away the wan look and the sharp outline from her face, filled the curves once more, and restored all the waste which two years' incessant and exacting work had made.

The call to action had come again, and in her hand she held the contract for her winter's work.

It had nothing to do with Graham Madox, with whom the rupture was complete. Carlotta was sorry for it, and further was conscious of an odd reluctance to sign the document, though it was generous in its provisions, and there was not one condition embodied in its elaborate pages which she could desire to alter.

Having made the stupendous effort, she felt, somehow, as if she had come to the end of her resources.

Presently, when Judy came to her, she found her with knit brows, set lips, and stormy eyes.

"This ought to go to-day, Judy, and something inside of me refuses tole t me sign it!"

Judy nestled down by her side.

"Then wait till the inspiration comes. Is there any hurry?"

"The man must not be kept waiting, for he wants a holiday himself, and is going to Marienbad the day after to-morrow."

"Well, Marienbad isn'e the end of the earth. Put it by till to-morrow. Do you know this is the first time in Stair history that there hasn't been a gun on the hills! Let us get one, Carlotta, and go out and kill something!"

Carlotta hardly smiled, though she loved the vagaries of her sister's mood, and usually entered into them with the full zest.

Removes Warts

"ENGLISHWOMAN" writes to the Montreal Star:

"I read a letter in your paper asking for a remedy for warts, and as I found one that took an ugly one off the side of my forehead I will give it to you. I had a bottle of Minard's Liniment in the house that I use for rheumatism, and casually reading directions I saw it was a good thing for corns and warts, so being so simple I tried it. Just dab it on with the cork two or three times a day letting it dry on. Well it all went away in about two weeks, dried up and came off by degrees.

"Another also appeared on my cheek not so large, but I applied the same remedy and could pick it off like the other."

AT THE CITY HALL

The Weekly Meeting of the City Council was held yesterday afternoon—Mayor Cook presided—Councillors Martin, Outerbridge, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

After the preliminary business of the Meeting was disposed of the following matters were given consideration:

Mr. J. M. Howley called attention to the need of having repairs made to sidewalk in front of his dwelling Le-Marchant Road West, also the diverting of the Water Course in this vicinity, which has, during rain storms, inconvenienced him and caused considerable damage to his property.

George M. Turner, wrote re the filthy condition of the dump South Side Road, and asked that steps be taken to discontinue further dumping at this place, as the residents were subjected to great inconvenience.

The request was acceded to, and the Sanitary Supervisior instructed accordingly.

Communications of A. Sansom re road conditions South Side., and F. G. Stacey, of Warberry Street, were referred to the Engineer.

W. Williams, on behalf of the Sanitary Department, asked that the Council give the Sanitary employees leave of absence on the 22nd. inst., the day on which they intende holding their annual outing.

Request was acceded to.

Regarding a communication which appeared in one of the Daily papers of the 26inst., in reference to the destruction of Plants etc., Bowring Park, the Superintendent reported that he had gone into the matter and found nothing to warrant cause of complaint, and also suggested that anything that came under the notice of citizens, such as a person injuring or interfering with Trees, Plants etc., if they would communicate with him or one of his assistants immediately, they would be in a position to then and there deal with the matter.

Application J. Bussey for share of patronage in connection with Horse Shoeing etc., was acceded to and the Sanitary Supervisor instructed accordingly.

Communication of Pope's Furniture Factory regarding annoyance caused them by a forge, Carnell's property, and the fact that the Insurance Rates have been considerably increased owing to the building being a fire hazard, was referred to the Inspector General.

The application of P. Bulger for permission to convert stable Hayward Avenue into a forge, was further deferred.

C. J. Davis asked permission to repair building corner Cochrane and Gower Streets. The building in question is used for Laundry purposes by Kam Lung, and was partly destroyed by fire some weeks ago.

Application of M. J. Murphy to repair houses 38 and 40 Hutchings St. was referred to the Engineer, as the buildings in question are in the fire zone.

The following plans were passed subject to the approval of the Engineer conditional on the applicants conforming with the Municipal Act.

Dwellings:—W. T. Pennq, Mayor Avenue; A. LeMessurier, Catherine St.; R. D. Munn, Palk's Hill.

Extension:—A. C. Taylor, Gilbert St.

Garage, D. R. Thistle, Spencer St., providing he has ventilators installed in the building.

Permit refused J. Arnott, Mount Royal Avenue—no water and sewerage in this vicinity.

Application Reid Nfld. Coy. for permit to erect new building Duckworth St. was granted.

Application F. Roil for position as Arbitrator was placed on file.

Health Officer's report for week showed one case Diptheria and 7 Scarlet Fever.

During the afternoon the Mayor and Councillors visited the Sanitary Stables and looked over the site for the proposed new stables. A visit was also made to Bannerman Park to select site for Playground Apparatus donated by Rotary Club.

The need of placing crossing on Duckworth Street was brought to the notice of the Board and Engineer was asked to report on it next meeting.

Reports of City Engineer, Sanitary Supervisor, and other Departmental heads were tabled.

Accounts presented were ordered paid, after which the meeting adjourned.

MOTHER OF TWIN BOYS

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieved Her of Inflammation and Great Weakness

West St. John, N. B.—"I was in a general run-down condition following the birth of my twin boys. I had a great deal of inflammation, with pains and weakness. Finally my doctor recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. He said that your medicine would be the only thing to build me up. I am sure he is right, for I am feeling much better and am gaining in weight, having gone down to ninety-three pounds. I was in bed for over a month, but am up again now. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to my friends and give you permission to use my letter."—Mrs. ELMER A. RITCHIE, 82 Rodney St., West St. John, N. B.

There are many women who find their household duties almost unbearable owing to some weakness or derangement. The trouble may be slight, yet cause such annoying symptoms as dragging pains, weakness and a run-down feeling.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for such conditions. It has in many cases relieved those symptoms by removing the cause of them. Mrs. Ritchie's experience is but one of many.

Yesterday's Proceedings At House of Assembly

Warren Government Grants Substantial Increase To Old Age Pensions—Credit Due Mr. Walsh of Placentia.

At question time, Mr. Walsh asked the Prime Minister, if a Minute of Council had been passed by the Executive Government, authorizing the construction of one or more steamers to be used at the seal fishery and the West India trade, and if so what are the terms of the contract.

Mr. Moore, (Ferryland), asked for a statement showing the number, position and salary of appointees to the Civil Service since March 1st. 1923. In reply to Mr. Sullivan the Prime Minister said the removal of the Export Duty on Cod Oil and Herring would be considered in connection with the Budget proposals.

On motion of the Finance Minister, the House went into Committee on supply. Good progress was made.

Under the head of Civil Government, Mr. Higgins challenged the appointment of a Deputy Auditor General and said he intended to oppose the new appointment. In endeavoring to elicit further information re the pensioning of W. J. Blandford, Mr. Sullivan stated this man had been only three years in the Government service, yet it was proposed to now place him on the pension list and put another man in his place.

Mr. Higgins asked that the vote for light-houses, stand over until certain information concerning pensions under this head had been furnished by the Dept. of Marine and Fisheries.

Whilst the pension vote was being considered, Mr. Walsh made a stiring appeal that the vote for Old Age Pensions be substantially increased. Since that gentleman has held a seat in the House of Assembly, it is only fair to say that he has been a consistent and persistent advocate on behalf of the worn-out fishermen, and he now has the satisfaction of feeling that his efforts in this direction have been amply rewarded.

Hon. the Prime Minister, in like manner won the hearty approbation of the House, as he will of the country, in his prompt decision to augment the vote for old age pensions by $15,000.00. After a brief consultation with Sir William Coaker, the Prime Minister announced that the pension fund would be increased by the above mentioned amount, thus providing for 300 additional pensions.

Sir M. P. Cashin, asked for particulars from the Justice Department of a payment of $1000,00 made to the Inspector General of Constabulary and charged to pit prop account.

Hon the Prime Minister replied he had no knowledge, as Minister of Justice, of the circumstances under which such a payment was made, but would make enquiry and table the information when received.

Sir Michael Cashin, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Woodford, criticized the agricultural policy of the late Government. They were particularly caustic in their references to the management and expenditures in connection with the Model Farm.

Hon. Mr Downey in reply, said he was not long enough in the Department to give a report on the work of the Department, but would get such data regarding the distribution of live stock as was available and table it at an early date for the information of honourable members.

Hon. the Prime Minister, said the Model Farm would come within the scope of the investigation, which was to be made, and it was likely that it would be abolished.

Mr. Woodford wanted to know if supplies for Public Institutions were bought by tender. He had reason to believe they were not. It was nonsense to have a purchasing agent who had not sufficient authority. Mr. Higgins considered it an anomaly to have a purchasing agent who did not purchase. He also said that the $1,500,000 charged to relief was not spent in relief, and before the votes under Public Works and Agriculture and Mines were put through, the books and accounts should be brought to the House, so that members may be able to examine the acounts for themselves. Mr. Moore asked that the salary of the Assistant House Surgeon at the General Hospital be adjusted. The Prime Minister said he would get in touch with the Board of Governors. Hon the Prime Minister in reply to Mr. Sullivan, stated that the Government was considering the unemployment situation.

The Committee then rose, the remaining order of the day were deferred and the House adjourned until Monday next.

Last Night's Game Ends In Draw

The B.I.S. and C.L.B. played to a draw in last evening's game of the League series. There was a small attendance, but the result was well merited. Snow scored for the C.L.B. within a few minutes of the start and he was again successful just before the finish of the period. In the second half, after 15 minutes of play, Skinner was successful and shortly after Constantine evened up the score, and the game concluded with C.L.B.—2 B.I.S.—2.

The next game will be the C.F.I. and Guards on Monday night, which will complete the season's fixtures, after which the postponed games will be played.

The Problem of Earning A Living

Get All Possible Out of the Fishery

From the various sources come the news that many fishermen are leaving the fishery and seeking work elsewhere.

Owing to the unusual shortage in the catch and the poor prospects for the remainder of the voyage, they may, in certain individual cases, consider themselves well-advised to do so.

There are strong reasons, however, against a general abandonment or a discontinuance on a large scale of the staple industry at this time of the season.

If our other industrial activities were sufficiently extensive to employ any great numbers of our men now engaged in the fishery, it would be a matter of decision as to which was the better paying proposition, wage-earning work or the fishery chances. Our present industries will not, however, provide openings for unusually great numbers, who may now abandon the fishery.

The Advocate indicated, some days ago, on what ways considerable employment would be offering, during the latter part of the year and next winter. Such work will take care of many toilers, who will have then exploited their chances at the fishery and have finished, fortunately or unfortunately, the fishing season.

A general discontinuance of the fishery now would certainly mean non-employment on a large scale and would be extremely inadvisable while there is the least chance of securing a few quintals of fish.

The Advocate realises how very discouraging it is for people to slave from before sunrise till after dark and get a quintal of fish or perhaps nothing. But a quintal of fish or a half quintal of fish is better than no work.

The measures that during the past years were taken by the Government to meet the extraordinary circumstances which confronted our people have been and are at the present time strongly condemned by certain sections of public and political opinion.

There is not the least doubt that the people would have been reduced to practical starvation but for these Government measures; and it cannot be denied that those loudest in their condemnation of relief expenditures were glad to avail of such expenditures from time to time. As to whether commensurate returns were given for relief work, that was a matter for which the sorely-embarrassed government were not so much responsible as those who performed such relief works and those who sought to make political capital against the government for such relief efforts.

Owing to the circumstances surrounding such relief outlays, the large amounts heretofore involved, and the general condemnation of such procedure, the Government should find it impossible to continue relief measures. This impossibility is intimated in the Budget Speech delivered on Tuesday, and this is why the Advocate advises fishermen to stick to the fishery while there is a chance of earning a dollar or so thereby.

When the season advances, we think there will be better chances of employment on operations, which the Government succeeded in initiating, even when they were obliged to undertake relief measures to assist the people.

An early abandonment of the fishery would only mean a rush of people to the scene of industrial works and would be injurious inasmuch as it would delay chances for extensive employment later in the season.

Protection of Forest Wealth

With the promise of great industrial activity in this country operating on our abundant resources of timber wealth, the matter of the forest conservation and protection should become vitally important.

The public attention of Canada and even of the whole British Empire has been attracted to the great importance of this subject, concerning which the following editorial from the Montreal Daily Star will be of interest:

FORESTS AND THE FUTURE.

A greater significance attaches to the convention of the British Empire Forestry Association, now being held at Ottawa, than may appear at first sight to the casual observer. Delegates are in attendance from almost every important part of the British Empire, and the questions under discussion are of the utmost importance to the future. Some measure of what depends upon the work of the Association may perhaps be gauged from the fact that while the Empire contains one-third of the world's timber, yet the timber trade spent only fifteen per cent. of its total expenditure in 1920 within the Empire. But the Prince of Wales, in his cabled message to the Convention, emphasizes a still more important point than the fostering of Empire trade—the promotion of a sound policy of forest conservation throughout the Empire. "By such means alone," declares His Royal Highness, "can we ensure that our present resources are used to the best advantage and our supply of timber maintained for the future."

That is the crux of the whole situation—to safeguard the timber wealth of the Empire for future generations. As usual, the Prince has succeeded in putting his finger on the vital spot. Canada may, therefore, take some measure of flattering unction to its soul when the Heir-apparent pats the Canadian Forestry Association on the back, congratulating its members "upon a fine record of patriotic work." As the Prince says, the forests of Canada are a priceless heritage. When he further commends the work of the Forestry Association to "every patriotic citizen," he is speaking no idle word. For every citizen of the Empire who has its welfare at heart is interested in the conservation of those resources upon which its vitality and its future prosperity depend, and one of the chief of these is its forest wealth.

Pension Vote Increased

The transferral of $15,000, always voted for the Royal Naval Reserve to the Old Age Pension vote, will be good news to many of our old people who have hitherto been unable, owing to the inadequacy of the vote, to secure their pension.

Up to the present time, the amount of $100,000 has been the yearly allowance for old age pensions, which has provided for 2000 persons throughout the country at the rate of fifty dollars per year.

The additional amount of $15,000 will enable the placing on the list of 300 additional pensioners, which will be very helpful. This number will be distributed proportionately among the various districts.

There was a great manifestation of approval, both among members of the House and in the galleries, when Prime Minister Warren announced the Government's intention to stand by our toilers and make their burdens somewhat easier.

This action of the Government has been made possible by the abandonment in 1921 on the part of the British Admiralty of H. M. Training Ship, Briton. The amount of $15,000, which was Newfoundland's contribution towards the "Briton," was, for reasons of sentiment, allowed to stand in the estimates of last year.

The Prime Minister is to be commended for one of his first actions on behalf of those who have helped to build up our country.

Up from the Ranks

The career of the late President Harding serves as an outstanding instance of how one, by sheer energy and ability, can attain the highest public position from the ranks of the labourers.

It is a great and a justifiable source of pride among Americans that the highest and noblest position in their land is available to any one of their countrymen of lowly or high station in life, provided that through energy and hard work he acquires sufficient qualifications to fill it.

Among the list of American presidents there are several outstanding characters who have won their way up from the ranks of the people. Chief among these was Lincoln.

But President Harding, in his youth, lived the life of a farmer boy, and fought his way through college by leaving it at times to earn sufficient to complete his college courses; and we read of him as cutting corn, painting barns and working on railway roadbeds for this purpose. He taught school; and was also a newspaper man in every phase of the work.

He trod the hard road of work and experience to the most exalted position in the land, and Americans, being proud of him, mourn him genuinely and respectfully to-day.

And every country can boast of such sons. Even in Newfoundland, we have them, who have come up from the ranks of the people to protect the people's interests and to serve them.

S. P. A.

The Society for the Protection of Animals made a new departure this year in having a tent at the Regatta to supplement their income, as their funds are practically exhausted. The booth was kindly undertaken by Mrs. A. W. Kennedy and Mrs. Walter S. Monroe, assisted by Mrs. George Marshall and Mrs. Harold Mitchell.

The results were most satisfactory from the sale of candies, flowers, etc., and netted nearly one hundred and twenty dollars. The Society thanks those ladies who gave their time all day and to all those kind friends of animals who gave donations and helped in various ways to make the tent a success as well as to the public for their patronage in helping to maintain an institution which is doing a public service. British Income Tax

The Editor, Advocate,
St. John's, Newfoundland,

British Income Tax Refunds

Dear Sir,

Now that the Finance Bill of 1923-24 has passed into law, no doubt your readers who derive any income from the United Kingdom will be interested to learn its provisions.

Briefly the most important changes affecting non-residents are these:

(1) The standard rate of tax has been reduced to 4/6 in the pound.

(2) Claims can be made for three years back, but this limit will gradually be extended to six years. It will not be possible however, to claim for years prior to 1920-21 the section not being retroactive.

(3) Income derived from the Irish Free State will be exempt from British Tax, but liable to Irish Income Tax, which is 5/— in the pound for 1923-24.

There are apparently still many people deriving income from the United Kingdom who are unaware that they can recover at least part of the income tax charged on it. This is in many cases due to the fact that dividends are often marked "free of tax" and in some instances even no mention whatever of tax is made where they are paid through a local branch of a British Company. In both these cases, however, tax is recoverable.

Should any of your readers desire further information on this question, I shall be pleased to advise them, if they will address me at 13, Buckingham Palace Gardens, London.

Yours faithfully,
WILFRED T. FRY.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

The Telegram informed its readers yesterday that an organization known as the C.C.C. Boat Club had cleared up big on wheels of fortune at the Regatta on Wednesday and Thursday last, their efforts in this direction netting them about $6,000.

I have been making enquiries around town about this Boat Club and I find that to all intents and purposes it is a private investment club, having no connection with the Catholic Cadet Corps, as many people imagine, and whose sole interests lie in the keeping of three boats on Quidi Vidi Lake.

The upkeep of these boats and of the boat-house does not consume a very large amount of money, but the Boat Club's various undertakings, many of which are permissible only on the grounds that the club is a charitable or church organization, net them many thousands of dollars annually. If the C. C. C. Boat Club is a charitable or church organization the public are entitled to know what becomes of those thousands of dollars they pour into the coffers of the club each year. The public never have received any information on this point.

Now the question arises, if this club made $6,000 or even $3,000 by wheels of fortune on the Regatta Course what do they intend to do with it? What did they do with the money they made on their sealing sweep last year and all the previous years, and what will they do with the money they will make on similar sweeps next year?

It may be retorted that this is none of the public's business, but it is the public's business, and very much so. Here is the proof.

The C.C.C. Boat Club asked the public, represented by the Regatta Committee, for permission to operate wheels of fortune on the lakeside this season. The Ladies' Association of Belvedere Orphanage also asked the Regatta Committee for permission to operate wheels of fortune as a means to raise money with which to feed and clothe the hundreds of parentless little children whose upbringing the good sisters of Belvedere have made their lives' work.

What happened? The public, represented by the Regatta Committee, absolutely refused to listen to the appeal of the Belvedere nuns made on behalf of the orphans. They turned down the orphans so that a club, which is generally regarded as a private investment club, having a membership of some eighteen individuals, might get all the money there happened to be going. Did this club get that money for its members or for charitable or church purposes? That is something the public is entitled to know and it is what Judge Morris, who gave the C.C.C. Boat Club the permit, and who refused a similar permit to Belvedere Orphanage should find out without loss of time.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Burke and Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Martin left for North River by motor this morning. They go hense to be present at the funeral obsequies of the late Rev. S. J. Whelan, D.D.

Montreal's Debt

The city of Montreal is thirteen miles long and nine miles wide, it has 753 miles of permanent side walks and 580 miles of sewers, while of the 844 miles of streets within its boundaries, 616 belong to the city, 257 are paved and 128 miles macadamized. These facts and a lot of others of equal interest, have been prepared by E. J. Courval, chief designer of the technical department of the city hall, in view of the issue of a loan of $10,000,000 soon to be floated.

The superficial area of the city in 1922 was 32,155.15 acres. It contains 72 public parks with a superficial area of 1,396.94 acres. The taxable property is valued at $709,324,469, while the value of property exempt from taxation reaches the total of $230,451,154.

The debt of the city is $125,875,351 while the sinking funds amount to $7,299,818. The revenue of the city for last year was $24,863,885. The valuation of municipal buildings in 1920 was put at $29,635,520 for buildings and $44,298,130 for vacant lots. The gross revenue from the water works last year was $2,877,137. The property tax was $1.35, the special tax amounting to 37 cents per $100. The school tax for Catholics was 70 cents, Protestants $1.00, and neutral panel $1.00.

During the year the building permits issued were of the value of $21,132,586. The city pumping station supplied 24,250,186,787 gallons in the course of the year, or 65,191,787 gallons a day, the average consumption per head of the population being 130.9 gallons a day.

"Trained Fools"

London, July 26.—(U.P.)—"Henry Ford's factory and vast organization is made up of men, 95 per cent. of whom are trained to be fools," W. W. Scott-Moncrieff declared in a speech before the Royal Institute of British Architects here.

Ford is aiming only to get out the greatest number of cars in the shortest possible time, he said.

Unskilled laborers said the work was degrading and iniquitous, according to quotations he gave.

France's Merchant Shipping

State control of merchant shipping in France has resulted in a big loss, according to a report in The Morning Post which was drawn up by M. Lebouq, of Paris, and is authoratative. The despatch discloses the fact that during the war and since the war state control of merchant shipping resulted in a net loss to the taxpayers of at least 1,806,000,000 francs. The purchase and construction of ships cost 1,522,000,000 francs, and the running costs totalled a further 474,000,000 francs, making a total expenditure of 1,996,000,000 francs.

The liquidation of the whole undertaking has produced a total yield of 190,000,000 francs, leaving a deficit of 1,806,000,000 francs, or a total, including loss of interest on the money invested of 2,546,000,000 francs.

Russian Railways

Sir Donald Mann, co-builder with Sir William MacKenzie of one of Canada's transcontinental railways, is in Russia, where he is believed to be advising the Soviet Government in connection with the rehabilitation of the Russian railways. One of Sir Donald's intimate friends stated last night that he knew definitely that the former vice president of the Canadian Northern railway was in Russia. He did not converse directly with Sir Donald on the point, but had been informed on reliable authority that the Russian visit had to do with the railway tangle which the Soviet is attempting to unravel.

"I know that Sir Donald is interested in some railway property over there" added our informant, "and it is likely that he is acting in an advisory capacity to the Government."

Drowning Accident at Newman's Cove

Newman's Cove, Bonavista,
July 30th, 1923.

(To the Editor)

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your far read paper to record the drowning of one of our little friends, Heber Baker, who was drowned at Newman's Cove, July 2nd, 1923.

A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we love is stilled,
A place is vacant in our homes
That never can be filled.

God in His wisdom has recalled
The flower to us was given
And though the body slumbers here
His soul is safe in Heaven.

Unchartered Rocks

I was poring over an old atlas one evening in the captain's cabin. Presently he strode in from the bridge, and we showed each other some of our pet plates—the one, for instance, in which the United States was represented merely by Lower California and a strip of the southeast coast. There is not a place-name clear across from San Francisco to Montreal.

"If the seas were drained off for a few weeks and the findings were mapped we should get some eye-openers," said the captain. "Our modern charts would look as queer sights as these old atlases. The high roads of the sea have been pretty accurately charted, but precious little else. And ugly things are being found every now and then even on the high roads. Look at Lamb Rock, for instance, that was found about thirty years ago, coming up out of a couple of hundred feet of water like a cathedral spire, bang in the middle of the Canadian-liner lane into the St. Lawrence River. The Lord only know how many good ships it may have sent to the bottom. In calm weather its tip lay 33ft. below the surface, which gave a slight safety margin, but in time of storm or heavy swell——. A phlegmatic fisherman named Pat Lamb knew all about it, but as he and his mate found it a good fishing ground that they wanted to keep to themselves it was many years before the astonished harbor authorities at St. John's got wind of an indiscreet remark overheard in a public-house, and promptly slammed Lamb Rock on the chart.

"The Avocet Rock, down at the southern end of the Red Sea, right in the middle of our road to India, was another case. Queerer still, the Avocet hit it and went down. The crew managed to get away in the boats. The officials at the Board of Trade inquiry didn't believe that the captain had correctly reported the ship's position. H. M. S. Flying Fish was sent there to verify it. She reported 104 fathoms of water at the spot, so things began to look black for the Avocet's captain. Then the Teddington struck and went down at the same spot. H. M. S. Griffon was sent to have another look. She nosed about for awhile without finding anything. She was relieved by H. M. S. Sylvia, who nosed about for six weeks. Then she was recalled, and H. M. S Stork prowled along that way. Stork found that lurking rock at a point 300 yards from where Sylvia had recently anchored. It had only 15ft. of water over it at low tide."

No chart, of course, pretends to be final, as a map may lay claim to be. It is only approximate. The captains who sail the seven seas report what they see and hear. So do the port authorities. No rock is ever put on to a chart on mere hearsay in these days. First a warship, or hydographic survey vessel, is sent to investigate. Unsuspected by those who ask what the Navy does to justify its keep in times of peace, a routine part of a naval vessel's work, on foreign station, is the taking of large numbers of soundings for the verification and improvement of marine charts. This applies to every navy in the world, and I was even told by a commander on the China station that when the last Chinese cruiser visited England she assiduously took soundings all the way up mid-Channel, from off Aiderney to Dover.

Not so much care was taken in the old days, however, and "false alarms" used to get on to even the British Admiralty charts. The famous Rurick Rock, 30 miles off Hobart, got on to the chart in 1822 and stayed there more than half a century, until H. M. S. Dart went in search of it—and found that it didn't exist. Nor did the Minnie Carmichael Rock, 12 miles from the east coast of Flinder's Island, in Bass Strait. One after another, five British warships tried to find Constance Rock, nor far away, which had been charted since 1904. Then Constance was expunged and the chart knew her no more.

Trees, balks of timber, and almost submerged derelict vessels, seen with the white waters foaming over them —now a smother of bubbly boil, now an ominous black matt,—defy distinction from a real reef when seen from the heeled deck of a passing merchantman scudding under all but bare poles before a gale. It was mainly "rocks" of this kind that used to get on to the chart.

There have been cases of a whole island getting on to the chart—and off again almost before the ink was dry. There was Grahame's Island, for instance. In July, 1831, a submarine volcano got busy under the Mediterranean 30 miles from Sicilly. In next to no time passing mariners were confronted by a brand-new island, a mile and a quarter round, the middle of which was a hill 170 feet above water level. It was mainly dust, sand, and lava, but there was no gainsaying the fact that was an island. Seamen landed on it and prowled about and played concertinas anr swigged rum. Indubitably it was a new island. Some dirty weather, ensued. Then, just as Grahame's Island got on to a new edition of the chart, it slithered gracefully down to the bottom of the Mediterranean. And that was that.

It is in the vciinities of volcanic coasts that uncharted rocks flourish and put forth green leaves, for there the seabed is in a state of flux. You have to walk your ship warily off Iceland and Sicily and through the Straits of Magellan and the inshore waters of Japan, but when the day's work takes you in and out of the ports of Java you stick as carefully to the steamer lane as a tram to a city tram-route. The most disconcerting rocks in the world are those which dwell around the coasts of Java, which has been aptly described as a mob of vol-canoes in a coffee plantation. Here soundings rarely "stay put" for a couple of successive decades. The shallow-draught Malay proas can look after themselves and keep clear of breaking water, but "it fairly turns a skipper's hair white," the steamship officers will tell you, "when he has got to be guessing all the time about what lies a fathom or two under the surface."

Still, at all events, a volcanic coast is a voncanic coast, and one knows that danger is lurking. The hidden "pinnacle rock" is a much worse menace wher the tip of its steeple lies a few fathoms deep. Random soundings do not locate it. It is a needle in a bundle of hay. Only a marine disaster puts it on the chart.

I sometimes wonder that Kipling never included in "The Seven Seas" a grim song of the seamen who have perished through their ships hitting sunen pinnacle rocks, and, perisning, have revealed of the deadly lurking fang and saved all of us who will pass that way until the trump of doom from a similar fate. Perhaps he will give us that poem yet. It is the sacrifice of British ships and British seamen, in the main that has peopled the charts of the world with hidden rocks.—Basket Digby, F.R.G.S., in the Manchester Guardian.

"DIGBY" ARRIVES

INJURED OFFICER TRANSFERRED AT SEA.

The Furness liner Digby, Captain Chambers, D.S.O., arrived from Halifax at 9 a.m. yesterday bringing a large inward cargo. While en route to this port the Digby received a wireless message from the S. S. Leeds City which was bound to Montreal to the effect that third officer Jones of that ship was badly injured and required medical assistance.

The steamers met at 7 a.m. Thursday 40 miles south of Cape Race where the injured officer was transferred to the Furness liner and he was taken under the care of Dr. Bradlaw, the ship's surgeon. The unfortunate officer had his hand and arm severely crushed while engaged shifting some barra's in the hold several days ago, the flesh being badly torn and he suffered much pain. On arrival here yesterday he was immediately transferred to the General Hospital for treatment..

The Digby landed the following passengers:—

Dr. W. W. Blackall, Rev. G. J. Bond, F. M. Cornell, Rev. Dr. L. Curtis, O. W. French, Miss M. McKay, Mrs. E. Melville. Mrs. J. S. Pitts, D. E. Smith, Miss W. Stevens, G. Bluett, Mrs. M. Costello, H. L. Cheney, Miss A. French, Miss K. Furlong, H. H. Hawkins, Miss L. Healey, Mrs. E. J. Johnson, Miss Ada Johnson, J. J. Kenney, Miss A. Parsons, B.B. and Mrs. Stafford, A. R. Thompson, G. A. Religions Ceremony at The Presentation Convent

Tuesday last, the Feast of St. Ignatius, the illustrious founder of the Jesuit Order, through whose instrumentality so many souls have been drawn into God's Kingdom in all lands since its establishment, was made memorable by the joyous, yet solemn ceremony of religious profession and reception which took place at the Oratory of the Immaculate Conception, Cathedral Square.

The privileged ones who on this happy occasion entered through the gates of religious profession into the broad fields of active life, consecrating their lives to God in the sweet seclusion of the cloister, were Sister Mary Ignatius (Miss Patricia McGettigan, Leslie Street, St. John's) and sister Mary Regis (Miss Mollie O'Keefe, Ferryland).

The brides of Christ who made to Him the irrevocable dedication of themselves by pronouncing their final vows, were Sister Mary Bridget Gosse (Torbay), Sister M. Columbia Hipditch (St. Kyran's), Sister M. Loretto Croke, (St. John's), Sr. M. Genevive Coady, (Burin) Sr. M. Patricia Curtin (St. John's) and Sr. M. Teresa Tee (Tor's Cove).

Four young ladies in snowy, shimmering white robes, entered the Chapel to offer themselves, unstained and unspoiled by the world, to the religious life in the Presentation Order, and by laying aside the trappings of vanity, hiding their personality under the common habit of the daughters of Nano Nagle and concealing the very names by which they had hitherto been known, to take the initial step towards that entire consecration of themselves to God by the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, the observance of which constitutes the Religious State.

These chosen ones were Miss Bride King (Sister Mary Consilio) daughter of Mr. and Mrs James King, Kingston; Miss Isabel Cousins (Sister Mary Dominic) whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Cousins, reside at Kelligrews; Miss Eileen Collins (Sister M. Andrea) daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Collins of Placentia and Miss Sadie McGettigan, Leslie Street, St. John's.

The ceremony was conducted in the most impressive manner, for Our Holy Mother, the Church, deems it but fitting to honor the self-renunciation of religious consecration with a ceremonial which is typical of the holocaust offered and the blessings bestowed; it was preceded by an eight-days retreat conducted by the Rev. Father Flemming, S. J. Washington, D. C., who explained in simple and forcible language, the duties, the responsibilities, the honor and the glory of the religious calling, the vanity and transitoriness of this world's hopes and the peace and joy of the unseen eternal.

Right Rev. Monsignor McDermott, Vicar-General of the Archidiocese, presided at the ceremony, with Rev. Dr. Carter as Master of Ceremonies; there were also present Rev. P. J. Kennedy, (Convent Chaplain), Rev. T. Flynn, B. A. (Chaplain, St. Bonaventure's College) Rev. Joseph Connors and Rev. M. J. Kennedy (Cathedral), Rev. J. J. Savin (Chaplain Mount Cashel) and several Christian Brothers.

After Mass, Rev. Fr. Duane, S. J., Woodstock, Md., addressed the newly professed and received in words which produced a lively impression on the hearts of all his hearers. In the most eulogistic terms and in the choicest language, he spoke of the beauty, the merits and the rewards of the religious life—a life of sacrifice, not alone of home and friends and pleasure, but a life of deeper sacrifice—that of the will and intellect without which there is no real religious life at all. And the sacrifice is not altogether alone on the child's part, parents, like Abraham, come generously, to make a complete oblation of their loved ones on the altar of sacrifice, but, unlike Abraham, for them no restraining Angel stays the hand raised to immolate. God accepts their offering and they descend the mountain side alone, sad but not unconsoled, a great peace has flooded their souls, for they, too have heard the voice of God and answered His call.

The Rev. Preacher earnestly exhorted the young aspirants to be ever faithful to the inspirations of their divine Master who is the model by which they should fashion theri lives and Who never invites a soul to a great or difficult work without marking the way and waiting nearby with His tender and compassionate sympathy.

The sermon being ended, Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament was imparted by Rev. Fr. Fleming, S.J. The singing by the Convent Choir assisted by the clergy present was sweetly solemn and impressive.

The Offertory piece "Jesu Mi" was specially chosen in honor of that valiant soldier of Jesus, St. Ignatius, and in compliment to his two worthy sons, Fathers Duane and Fleming, who during their short stay among us, have labored so earnestly in the cause of Christ and of souls.

We offer our sincere congratulations to the young Sisters who we wish and pray may be spared for many years of useful labor in the vineyard of our Heavenly Master and also their parents and friends on this happy occasion. This year is especially auspisious for Mr. and Mrs. McGettigan who have had a son ordained to the Priesthood, one daughter, Miss Patricia, professed, and another, Miss Sadie, received. Also for Mr. and Mrs. James King, Kingston, who have now three daughters in the Presentation Order, Sr. M. de Lourdes, who has just been finally professed, Sr. M. Consilio, received, and Sr. Evangelista in the third year of her holy profession. To one and all we wish "Ad multos annos."

POLICE COURT

A cabman under the influence of liquor while in charge of a horse was allowed to go, it being his first offense. He was not driving when the policeman on the beat locked him up.

A laborer given in charge by his wife on a drunk and disorderly charge was released. He told the court it was the first time in five months he had stepped off the water waggon. The spouse did not appear.

MARRIAGE.

S. S. Portia Arrives From The Northward

The S. S. Portia, Captain John Field, arrived from the Northward at two o'clock this morning, after a trip occupying ten days.

The ship had moderate weather and made all ports as far as Quirpon. Capt. Field reports the fishery to date as the worst on record, and the outlook is anything but encouraging. At Quirpon there was a good sign of fish when the Portia was there, while at Fischot Islands, hook and liners were doing well. At Hooping Harbor and Le Scie there is some fish going with the look and liners, but traps are doing practically nothing. When the ship was at the latter place coming south one trap got 25 barrrels, which was the first for the season. At the Gray Islands, Conche, Englee and St. Anthony there is no fish while from those points South the fishery is a blank. Captain Field reports the weather very cold with E.N.E. winds prevailing the greater part of the time.

Const. C. Parsons, of St. Anthony came along by the ship in charge of three prisoners for the Penitentiary two of whom have been sentenced to three months and the other to one mouth. The men broke into the store of Mr. W. H. Reid at Englee last winter, and got away with considerable goods that were left there by the owner when he came south for the winter. The matter was reported to the authorities with the result that the trieves were rounded up, and on being brough before the Magistrate were convicted and sentenced as above.

Two sailors belonging to the Norwegian steamer Modesta who deserted their ship at Harbour Deep also came along by the Portia, and on arrival were taken in charge by the police, they having the necessary funds to pay their passage. The Modesta loaded pit props for Mr. J. Norris at Harbour Deep and it was there that the men left the ship claiming they were badly treated by the Captain. The men were left without money or food and they had to sell their clothing in order to buy provisions. When the men went adrift the Captain made no effort to locate them and Justice of the Peace Fitzgerald accompanied the men to Hr. Deep from Englee, and although they were taken off the ship in a motor boat, as she was about to sail the Captain even then did not wait to pick them up. One of the men is a French man who saw considerable service during the war, and has four decorations, while the other is a Russian Finn. They were taken to the Station by Sergt. Greene in the ship's arrival and came before the Magistrate this morning.

The Portia brought a part freight and the following passengers:—Messrs. J. Clouston, Cole, D. Sackrey, S. Blackler, Faulkner, J. Taylor, Capt. T. Doyle, Facey, G. Crosbie, Manuel, T. Jones, Norris, B. Janes, Magistrate Janes, M. Christian, J. W. Brown, Bishop, C. Barnes, I. Avery; Mesdames Butt, Sacrey and child; Blackler, Mifflen, Elliott, Janes, Hutley and boy, Bishop; Misses Butt, Blackler, Stewart, Elliott, Goodyear, Newhook, Tobin Goodwin, Button.

The Portia sails again at 10 a.m. Wednesday and is taking a full passenger list the majority of whom are roundtrippers.

An Inhuman Captain

The story is told by the purser of the Portia of the treatment given two foreign seamen by the captain of a Norwegian steamer which recently loaded pit props at Hr. Deep is one of cruelty rarely equalled. Two lads aged twenty, a Dane and a Frenchman, were thrown ashore from the steamer and left to the charity of the people of Englee and Hr. Deep to keep alive for the past three weeks. The captain of the ship positively refused to take them on board ship. He made enquiries of a J.P., as to the penalty attaching to his conduct, and was told nothing. Judge Morris, how ever says the law imposes a heavy penalty and he would like to be able to reach this inhuman captain. Besides starving the boys he compelled them to work on a scaffold chipping the ship's sides while she went on her course at full speed. They were in constant danger of being dashed off and drowned. The Portia's purser thought it best to bring the foreign abandoned boys along to St. John's, and see if they could be gotten rid of. The consuls of Norway and France will be acquainted by the police of the circumstances of the men.

OBITUARY

Newman's Cove, Bonavista,
July 30th, 1923.

In fond and loving memory of our dear little playmate Willie Francis Baker, who died July 11th, 1923, aged 10 1/2 years.

Many's the tear is shed in silence
In the home he loved so well,
How in our lonely hours we miss him
Only God alone can tell.

And thy lost we deeply feel,
But we'll trust in one great keeper
Who can all our sorrows heal.

WEDDING BELLS

COLLIS-WISEMAN

The marriage took place on Wednesday, Aug. 1st, at the R. C. Cathedral, of Miss Nellie Wiseman of this city to Mr. Herbert G. Collis of The Evening Advocate staff, Rt. Rev. Mgr. J. J. McDermott, V.G., officiating. The bride was attended by her sister-in-law, Mrs. John Wiseman, while Mr. Wiseman performed the duties of best man. The honeymoon is being spent at Carbonear. The Advocate joins with the numerous friends of Mr. and Mrs. Collis in wishing them many years of wedded happiness.

BATSON-IVANY

A very pretty wedding took place at All Saints Church, English Harbor, T.B., on July 21st, when Miss Theresa Batson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Batson, was united in marriage to Mr. Louis Ivany, by the Rev. F. P. Law.

The bride was given away by her father and looked charming in a dress of silk romain crepe with bridal veil, and a wreath of orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white roses and fern.

The bridesmaid was Miss Carrie Penny, who looked charming in a dress of fancy voile, while the duties of best man were performed by Mr. H. Harriett. Miss Nellie Harriett acted as flower girl.

The groom's present to the bride was a cheque.

A reception was given at the home of the bride, where a large number of relatives and friends were present. The presents were many and useful.

Sunday's Excursion Train

In view of the fact that there is a Garden Party at Manuels, and the C.L.B. are in camp at Topsail, the railway authorities have decided to put every available car on the excursion train, in order to accomodate the numbers of people who wish to visit the above named places.

The excursion train will leave St. John's at 2.30 Sunday afternoon, and will go as far as Kelligrews, which place it will leave at 8.30 p.m., and will return to St. John's. It is expected that a great number of people will avail of this opportunity to visit the camp, as this will be the only Sunday the C.L.B. will be under canvas.

The Garden Party will undoubtedly attract a large patronage.

ELECTRICAL STORM SWEPT BROCTON, MASS

LATE PRESIDENT'S FORTUNE NEARED MILLION MARK

Heavy Snow Fall

BANFF, Aug. 6—Turning the camp into a veritable fairyland, spruce and larch trees are covered by snow ten inches deep. The snow fall halted activities iidefinitely at the annual camp of the Alpine Club, at Larch Villeau. Two feet of snow on the mountains will stop all climbing for the present.

Japan Pays Tribute to Harding

TOKYO, Aug. 6—Premier Kato Saturday issued a statement to the Japanese press in which he said the late President Harding was the greatest worker in the peace movement. The Premier added that his immediate contribution is known thruout the world, to which his death is an immeasurable loss.

Hold-up Man Is Arrested

TORONTO, Aug. 6—With the arrest of William S. Morton of this city by Detroit police officers, and the Pinkerton detectives, in a Detroit restaurant Saturday night, it is believed that the mystery which followed the attack upon a local bank messenger at Melinds and Jordan Streets, nearly two weeks ago, is within measurable distance of being solved.

May Have Autumn Sessions

(London Times)

The Joint Committee of both Houses, which is to consider the proposal that the Parliamentary session should in future open in the autumn, promises to be one of the strongest committees of its kind of recent years. The House of Commons has already elected its eight representatives. The eight members of the House of Lords will be the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Ullswater, Lord Newton, Lord Midleton, Lord Stuart of Wortley, Lord Denman. Lord Ullswater will be the chairman and though a meeting will be held shortly to consider procedure it is not likely that the taking of evidence will be begun until the autumn.

We are always prepared to supply Bill Heads, Letter Heads and Envelopes at short notice. Union Publishing Company, Ltd.

Socialists Condemn New President In Resolution

Convention Breaks Up In Storm of Protest.

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 5—The convention of Socialist party of New York, nearly broke up in a riot to-day when a resolution denouncing President Calvin Coolidge, as a reactionary and foe to labour, was read by William Karlem of the Resolutions Committee. All over the convention hall, delegates leaped to their feet with violent protests against the spirit of the resolution, and the terms in which it was concluded. So great was the uproar that order was restored with difficulty, but not until the chairman had ordered the resolution back to committee for revision. It was not presented again.

State Convicts Sends Sympathy to Mrs Harding

BOSTON, Aug. 6—Convicts at the Charlestown state prison to-day at a memorial service for President Harding, sent a message of sympathy drafted by a "lifer," to Mrs. Harding.

More than six hundred men characterizing themselves as the "most lowly and wretched of people" expressing their sense of the nation's loss and their realization of the grief of the widow whose fortitude has filled the country with admiration and love.

PROHIBITION AND POLITICS

Morning Post: The only theory so far presented which covers the facts is that prohibition in America has become a political issue of acutest tension on both sides. People in this country are extremely reluctant to draw the obvious inference that England and other foreign nations are being exploited by America as pawns in the game of domestic politics; and we would suggest that, in the interests of international comity, the American Government should make a statement on the matter without delay.

Thunder Storm Leaves Miles Of Wreckage

BROCTON, Mass., Aug. 6—A violent thunderstorm, accompanied by high wind cut a path of destruction eight miles long and one-eighth of a mile wide to the north of the city on Sunday. Several orchards, including one of a hundred trees, were swept to the ground, and teleghaph poles along the route were toppled over.

REGINA, Sask., Aug. 1—Masson, triple murderer, paid the supreme penalty for one of the most brutal murders in the history of this province—the killing of Jean Chouvelon, his wife, Leone, and step-daughter, Marie, near Dumas, Sask., on February 16 last.

Masson was sentenced to death by Mr. Justice MacKenzie on May 9th last, at Moosomin, Sask., after the accused had been found guilty by a jury, which deliberated for 33 minutes. A strong plea of insanity was made by the counsel for the defence, but mental specialists gave their opinion that though of low mentality, Masson could not be pronounced insane.

Robbery was the motive of the crime, according to Masson's confession, which stated that he had clubbed the trio to death with a blunt instrument, ransacked the house, stole a considerable sum of money, which he knew Chouvelon kept in the house, sprinkled the bodies of the vistims with kerosine, set fire to them, and drove away.

Dumas is a small town in eastern Saskatchewan. It is a French settlement, and all the principals in the murder are of that nationality.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 30—One of the strongest aggregations to leave this province in the quest of cricket honors will depart from here on Aug. 2 for Victoria, B.C., where they will compete in the Western Canada Cricket tournament, August 6 to 11. Fifteen players will represent Manitoba, fourteen from the three Winnipeg divisions and one from Brandon—H. Napper the only representative of points outside of this city. The choice of captain, as in usual, will be left to the players. T. A. Feestead and S. P. Meston, two of the keenest followers of the game in Manitoba, are prominently mentioned for the captaincy.

The provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta also are sending strong teams to compete against the pick of the Coast cities. Three games will be played at Victoria and three at Vancouver, the first at Victoria on Aug. 6.

BRANDON, Man., July 28—Is the climate of Manitobo suitable for the growing of apples. This question has been a debatable one for many years, but a definite answer will be possible following experiments to be carried out at the Brandon Evperimental Farm. W. T. Macoun, of Ottawa, Dominion horticulturist, has approved of a plan to establish a three or four acre apple orchard on the northern portion of the farm. The land will be prepared this land will be prepared and the trees set out next spring.

Germans Also Condemn Bomb Throwing Act

Student May Be Sentenced To Death By Court Martial.

DUSSELDORF, Aug. 5—The Germans are as outspoken as the French in condemning the throwing of the hand grenade yesterday at Military Band, but the penalties imposed last night by the French authorities will be continued until further notice and additional restrictions are promised as soon as investigation of the crime is completed. Restaurants, cafes, theatres, and moving picture houses, must close at ten o'clock at night, and all circulation in the streets after eleven o'clock at night is prohibited. The German student named Pabt who was arrested near the scene of the crime, will be court martailed with possible penalty of death. Pabt denies the bombing.

Grenade Is Thrown At French Soldiers

DUSSELDORF, Aug. 5—A hand grenade was thrown into the midst of a detachment of French troops, led by a squad of trumpeters, yesterday afternoon as it was passing Cornelius Platz, one of the busiest corners, wounding two soldiers and a German woman and child. The soldiers broke ranks and arrested a German whom they chased. They state they found a number of grenade detonators in his pockets.

LATEST

WINNIPEG, Aug. 6—Responding to the Dominion's call for harvest help, nearly six thousand harvest laborers from Great Britain are expected to arrive within the next three weeks to help harvest the grain crops of the prairie provinces.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 6—Roofs of houses were ripped off, limbs of trees torn down and cellars flooded in West Philadelphia yesterday by an electrical storm, accompanied by torrents of water which fell for several hours. The water was so deep in places that people had to go about in row boats. Several houses were struck by lightning.

OTTAWA, Au. 6.—Hon. A. P. Copp, Secretary of State, will represent Canadian Government at funeral ceremony of late President Harding in Washington on Wednesday. Mrs. Harding has expressed the desire that the funeral ceremonies be simple, and requested particularly that there be no participation by military organizations or fraternal societies The service at Washington will be similar in nature to funeral at Marion.

DOVER, Aug. 6.—Henry Sullivan of Lowell, Mass, is attempting to swim the English Channel today for seventh time. He began to swim late yesterday and is making good progress so far. Mrs. C. C. Arson, American woman, who is credited with swimming around Manhattan Island, and from Albany to New York, also started the Channel swim this morning.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

TORONTO, Aug. 5—Rev. F. W. McConnel, Minister of Leamington Presbyterian Church, Chatham Presbytery, has been appointed to the post of Dominion Organizer of the Presbyterian Church Association for the continuation of that church.

Soldiers Drive Over High Cliff Into Sea

SYDNEY, Aug. 5—Lance Corporal W. MacLeod and Primate James Watt of the Royal Canadian Regiment, both of Halifax, last night drove over 75 foot cliff into the Atlantic Ocean, killing their horse and sustaining severe personal injuries. Then in their crippled condition, they were forced to spend a bitterly cold night perched on the top of a small rock some distance from the shore. MacLeod has a badly crushed leg and is likely to lose the limb, he owes his life to the courage and devotion of Watt who received painful injuries to his spine.

The soldiers are members of the occupation force in Sydney, during the strike and were returning from New Waterford when they mistook the road and drove over the cliff at ten thirty o'clock. Watt did not feel any serious effects at the time, and he took the Lance Corporal and waded and swam with him, for more than a quarter of a mile, until they reached the small rock where they remained drenched for the night. Watt Swam ashore at daybreak and got aid from the fishermen.

New Governor of Nyasaland

SIR C. C. BOWRING APPOINTED.

(London Times)

The appointment is officially announced of Sir Charles Calvert Bowring, Colonial Secretary, Kenya, to be Governor of Nyasaland, in succession to Sir George Smith, whose retirement will take place in December next.

Mr. Edward Brandis Denham, Colonial Secretary, Mauritius, will succeed Sir Charles Bowring as Colonial Secretary, Kenya.

Sir Charles Calvert Bowring has already spenty twenty-eight years in East Central Africa, his first African appointment being as auditor of the newly organized British Central Africa Protectorate (now Nyasaland). He was transferred to British East Africa (now Kenya) in 1899 and has been Chief Secretary to that Government. He has also, on several o-casions, been Acting Governor. He filled this post during the later stages of the campaign against von Lettow and gave most valuable help to the military authorities.

Sir George Smith, who was 65 in March last, has had a distinguished career, first under the War Office and latterly under the Colonial Office. He held various posts in Cyprus and Turkey between 1878 and 1909, was then Colonial Secretary at Mauritius, and for the last ten years has been Governor of Nyasaland, which he guided with great ability through the war year, and subsequently has done much to develop its material resources and to aid both the white settlers and the natives.

Lausanne Treaty Is Degrading Document

Former Secretary To Lloyd George Says Experiment of Restoring Turk To Europe Is Doomed To Failure.

BOSTON, Aug. 5—The experiment of restoring the Turk to Europe is doomed to failure, Sir Edward Grigs, former Secretary to David Lloyd George, said in a lecture last night before the Institute of Politics at Williams College. He characterized the Lausanne Treaty as "that depressing and almost degrading document declaring that "the only thing to be said in its favor is that it is a peace treaty, but those statesmen must be optimistic indeed who have any belief that it will endure." The speaker expressed the opinion that the most tragic part of the settlement was the lot of the Armenians and other Christians in Anatolia.

President Had Fortune of $800,000

MARION, Aug. 6.Close friends of President Harding have estimated his estate at between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars. Before assuming the presidency he is thought to have amassed a fortune of some dimensions from The Marion Star, and at one time or another, he has been a stockholder in practically every industrial enterprise in Marion.

War Anniversary Observed

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6—The ninth anniversary of the German invasion of Belgium, August 4, 1914, was observed at 9.30 Saturday morning. All traffic stopped and the people stood still in the streets, while bells rang sirens sounded and guns were fired.

Good Progress Is Made

PARIS, Aug. 5—The temorary disarmament committe of the League of Nations, to-day adopted two more articles to the proposed guarantees, and for peace, discussed how separate alliances and agreements could be harmonized, or incorporated in a treaty. The committee made considerable progress to-day, but work before it will require several days more.

Eight Are Killed In Collision

Mother and Five Children Meet Death and Father Fatally Injured When Train Strikes Auto Truck.

BUFFALO, New York, Aug. 5—Eight persons were instantly killed and two fatally injured late this afternoon when a train crashed into an auto truck carrying a picnic party. The killed included Mrs. Camillo Capriotto and her five little children, and Angello Bartello and a baby. The husband of the dead woman and another man were fatally hurt.

Home Helps

"What should I use to clean stained or varnished floors?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"Tea water is a good cleanser," said Mrs. Neighbor. "It is made by pouring boiling water on spent tea leaves, and straining the liquid thru a piece of muslin."

"I have found a stain on my blue serge skirts," complained Mrs. Newlywed. "Do you suppose I can cover it in some way?"

"Take a piece of cloth like the skirt and wet and rub over the stain. When dry the stain will likely have disappeared," said Mrs. Neighbor.

SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS SAVED !

That's the amount we estimate we have saved the six hundred car owners in St. John's in tire bills during the past year through the road repair work we have investigated.

Have you recently driven from St. John's to Holyrood? If not, do so and notice the road over the "Cow-Path" (Seal Cove to Holyrood). That was done through the "Good Roads" movement originally started by the Newfoundland Motor Association and the work was done under the superintendence of one of our members who has given his time and experience free. He doesn't want to be advertised but we'll tell you his name just as soon as you join us.

Next year it is proposed to give special attention to the Portugal Cove, Broad Cove and Torbay Roads—that is if our membership increases sufficiently to advance more cold cash. Over seventy-five per cent. of the money we have received in membership fees during the past five years has been advanced for road repairing.

It costs Ten Dollars to join the Association if you are a car owner, Five Dollars if you ride a motor-cycle. The amount may be mailed direct to the Secretary (P. O. Box 1131), left at The Royal Stationery Co., 180 Water Street, handed to our authorized collector or drop us a postcard and we'll call for it. It is an old saying that those are helped who help themselves. By helping along the work we are doing you help yourself to save at least ten times the amount of the subscription in tire repair bills. CHAPTER XXXIII.

Love Claims Its Own

"I think it's very selfish of Claud and Cicely not to have come," went on Judy discontentedly.

"But they are coming next week—"

"Too late. They should have been here yesterday. It will be like keeping Christmas a week into the New Year! Well, here comes Baddeley. Now I wonder what she wants?"

It may be said here that Ann Christy and Mrs. Baddeley had shared all the summer, the housekeeper's sitting room at Stair, and were the best of friends, despite sundry discussions, which sometimes waxed a little acrid, regarding the relative merits of the Scotch and English. The common bond between them was love for her who was now mistress of Stair, and surely there had never been a dearer one!

All the country knew not that the famous Margaret Tenterden was wife to Alan Rankine, or perhaps his widow. And on the whole the country behaved well. Judy had simply entrusted the secret to Bobbie Sanderson, and instructed him to spread it abroad as it ought to be spread; and Bobbie had come up to high-water mark. But the pity and the sadness of it all weighed down his spirit, because personally he had small hope of Alan's ultimate return. Though he was honestly glad that Peter Garvock should have risen so remarkably to the occasion, he did not believe that he would ever find Alan, much less bring him back.

Mrs. Baddeley's thin, eager face wore a very odd expression as she advanced towards the ladies, addressing herself to her own mistress.

"Please'em it's Mr. Madox in the library."

Carlotta and Judy stared at one another in amazed silence.

"This is very strange, but on the whole I think I'm glad, Judy! If I'm going back to the stage I would rather go back with Graham Madox. This thing will never go now. Take care of it till I come back, and if I am more than twenty minutes come after me, for I shall need you."

Carlotta made constant and frank demands on her sister-in-law's devotion, and the rendering of such services as were in her power made Judy's allegiance to Carlotta complete. Together they had taken the tangled affair of Stair in hand, and Carlotta's quick imagination and wide sweep of view, allied to Judy's strong common sense and practical application thereof, had mightily astonished old Samuel Richardson and even caused him to change his mind regarding the business ability of the sex.

Judy sat down on the grassy slope after Carlotta went, and with her chin in her hand, pondered on the strange fate that had cast their lot together and added such a unique and vivid page to the history of Stair.

Carlotta's hope and courage were invincible, and although no word of Peter Garvock's success or return had come to them, she simply rose up each morning saying it was all right, and that things might happen any day.

Personally, Judy had always liked Madox, and had admired his treatment of Carlotta, and forgiven him for making love to her.

The coolness between Carlotta and Madox had arisen from her refusal to take the chief part in a play Madox had written especially for her. For this decision she had given no reason, even to Judy; she had simply said she did not care for it and would not take it. Madox, keenly sensitive, as most of the writing fraternity—especially in the dramatic world—are, had resented it; and Carlotta, a little worn and fretted in spirit by the long strain, had seized the opportunity to break away.

But there was no trace of anything but pure friendliness in her manner and tone when she entered the library that afternoon to bid him welcome to Stair.

"I have to apologize for this intrusion," he said, in his frankest, most winning manner. "I excuse it on two grounds—Miss Rankine has written to tell me you are mistress here, and though it would have been kinder if you had told me yourself at the beginning, I believe I am forgiven for my importunity. The second is that I want you to come back. I've got something else. I've brought it with me, and, if you have time to run your eyes over it, I believe you won't send me away empty-handed."

Carlotta slightly shook her head.

"You are welcome to Stair, Graham, and if your traps are at the hotel some of them will fetch them up. I shall be pleased to read the new play, but—but—I don't think I am going back."

Madox loked a trifle disappointed.

"I understand how you must care about this beautiful home," he said, "but it is not possible nor right that you should give the whole of your life to it when the world needs you so much."

"I must at least wait till my husband comes back," said Carlotta quietly. Meanwhile let me send down for your things, and come and have a chat with Judy.

Madox smiled, and when he seemed to hesitate, Carlotta went on:

"Papa and mamma will be here not later than Tuesday of next week, to stay. We shall love to show you Scotland properly."

"Seeing you in a place like this, my dear," he said, with a touch of sadness in his tone, "one well might hesitate to ask you to come back to the world—but there is the future."

He made pause there, for he could hardly put into words what he actually thought—that in all probability the Laird of Stair would never come back any more to the home of his fathers, and that the snows of the Yukon had claimed him.

Absorbed by their talk, Madox had not heard the sound of distant wheels on the gravel, and when he stepped after Carlotta all he saw was the tall figure of a man, in a grey travelling suit and bare head, take Carlotta in the swift embrace which said all that words could never say.

Graham Madox turned decently away with what bitterness in his soul they would never know.

He found means of egress which enabled him to slip away unobserved, and when afterwards they sent down to the hotel to inquire, they found that he had gone.

* * * * *

Judy, mooning in the sunshine on the terrace steps, amused herself by throwing little pebbles from the path into the round pond where the gold fish sported themselves, watching the eddies rise and spread across the clear surface. She did not hear the wheels, for the very good reason that the whole solid block of the masonry of the house intervened.

Presently she rose with a little sigh and thought she would go in and see how the interview was progressing, when a figure appeared at the far end of the terrace, having come around the gable end of the house.

"Oh, Peter!" cried Judy, and ran, her face blanching white in the merciless sunlight, and her eyes pitiful, almost anguished in their depths. "It was no good. You heard nothing? Poor Carlotta, her heart will surely break this time!"

"My dear, Alan is here."

"But where did you find him?"

"It's a long story, Judy, and it will keep. Meanwhile I want to know how you are."

"I? Oh, you can see! I am a person of no importance. Alan and Carlotta—somewhere in front! And together! Is—is he well, Peter? Has he changed much?"

"He is well; he is fit; he is handsomer than ever; and he has done what he set out to do, Judy—he has come back to redeem Stair."

"To redeem Stair!" repeated Judy in a low voice. Oh, I want to go to them—and yet I daren't."

"Don't go yet," pleaded Peter, with new gentleness and consideration which rather astounded Judy, and to push other things into the background of her mind.

"Peter, you are great! Where did you find him?"

"In a shack on the Klondyke, in the rear of an old gold mine."

"What I want to know, Peter, is how we are going to recompense you for what you have done? You need not shake your head. I know without any of your telling or Alan's that it is you who have done it all. I can see from your face that you haven't spared yourself. Who is going to pay you?"

Garvock took a step forward until he could look into the kind wells of Judy's eyes.

"What about yourself, Judy?" was all he said.

OUR NEW STORY

To-morrow The Advocate begins the publication of a new and intensely interesting Story—'Kindred of the Dust," by Peter B. Kyne, one of the best-known and most able of American writers. It is a story of "The Big Woods," a tale of love and adventure and one that will grip the reader from the very first chapter. "Kindred of the Dust" is a story that all should read. It is probably the best piece of fiction that has emanated from the pen of its famous author. "Kindred of the Dust" is being read the world over to-day You, too, will want to read every word of it. So don't miss the first instalment in to-morrow's Advocate.

Britain Warned That Fourth Bad Winter Is Ahead

Unemployed May Reach 2,000,000 by Christmas—Taxpayers' Burden.

NEW AID TREATY.

Baldwin's Attitude Believed Open Sesame to Further Agreement.

LONDON, July 23.—Minister after Minister is preparing the way for the Imperial Conference in October next by warning the public here and overseas that Great Britain must prepare for the fourth bad winter for trade.

The number of unemployed, which now exceeds 1,000,000, may reach 2,000,000 by Christmas, thereby casting a heavy burden on the taxpayer and industry for unemployment relief. Britain has 600,000 adult workers in excess of the 1914 total and that is the justification for a bold Empire migration policy. The problem is however, how to get the export trade fully re-started.

Premier Baldwin's attitude of frank firmness, however, disagreeable, will, it is believed, give way to a new pact with France based on reference to a qualified tribunal of the two outstanding questions, namely, how much Germany can pay and how that payment can be secured beyond doubt at the earliest possible date.

France needs money above all else She has not officially raised her need for territorial security, but there has been much authorities discussion in France itself of the possibility of an Anglo-French air entente.

As regards the naval position influential supporters of British Ministers in their Singapore policy urge that it not be hurried, The Observer says: "Before we are irretrievably committed to any departure of naval policy in the East there should be a frank discussion at the Imperial Conference. The public here and in the Dominions must be taken fully into confidence."

FINANCIAL POSITION.

Britain's financial position points in the same direction as also does overwhelming British desire to keep pace with the Dominions and the United States in all vital political matters.

The Empire spirit also animates British Ministers' attitude towards European entanglements. They have no intention of sitting passively by and waiting for continental Prime Ministers and Finance Ministers to recover their economic balance. They believe in the words used last week by Lloyd Greame, president of the Board of Trade, "that by sustained co-operation and a program of developing the Dominions and the Crown colonies, Britain and the whole Empire can largely offset the consequences of Europe's collapse."

The Sunday Times, says "Great Britain is most prosperous when new lands are being energetically opened up. Russia and China are too distracted for early development. New lands which are ripe for development are almost wholly under the British flag. The new world to be called in to redress the balance of the old world is no longer America—as in Canning's day. It is the British Empire."

What Liberals and Laborites here insistently ask, without getting a reply, is: "Is this another Empire preference will once again be "Your food will cost you more."

Rev. Dr. Bond at Gower St. Church

(By I. C. M.)

Though Dr. Bond has travelled far and wide, and has ministered to the spiritual wants of many people, he has not lost his love for Newfoundland nor relaxed his interest in its welfare. And so was it in his discourse at Gower Street Church yesterday morning; because in all that he said, the uppermost thought seemed to be, not only the world and empire but our country.

That there is room in Newfoundland for a higher standard of public life few will contradict; and that conditions ought to be better, all will admit. There is need of an advancement in our public thought, and in the administration of our Government. Hence it is wholesome and desirable to hear such Christian ideals and to see such a high standard raised as was manifested in Rev. Dr. Bond's sermon yesterday morning.

It is not meant in this report to give the sermon. The Rev. Doctor has that option with himself, as he has the manuscript: but we wish to dress on the principles of the discourse; so that in addition to the comparatively few who heard them, there will be the many thousands who may read them. For well would it be not for Newfoundland, but for greater places, if the sentiments of Dr. Bond's sermon, as delivered yesterday, were broadcast from continent to continent.

The subject of the sermon was that of mutual co-operation for the greatest good. No co-operation in the sense of selfishness, nor personal gain. Not co-operation in the sense of extreme unionism; which of late seems to have broken faith; but co-operation on behalf of the betterment of the world at large, and for the mutual good of all men, and for the development of brotherhood and fair play.

If the world is to get better, and further war is to be averted, then there must be adopted, both in the industrial and political world, a better spirit than has been manifested since the war ceased. Had the principles of Christianity been admitted and given a chance, the conditions of society would not be so strained as they are to-day, and the counsels of the League of Nations would not have so utterly failed as they have. Some people have rashly stated that Christianity has failed; but not so. Christianity only awaits the opportunity to be applied to modern life. This opportunity has never been granted in a full measure. It is because of the lack of practical Christianity, and the omission of its precepts, that conditions are as we have them to-day.

Since the war many people have developed the spirit of selfishness; and so great has this desire become that the danger arising therefrom is to be dreaded more than the very war itself. Men speak of the world while at the same time their idea and vision of the world is very limited. To such, their own personal interest comprises the world, because they fave failed to develop that broader life, and wider vision, which is meant for the children of men.

The sermon abounded with great thoughts, and was full of that spirit which has yet to prevail when "Men shall brothers be:

And form one family,
The wide world o'er."

Perhaps the highest point of Christian patriotism was reached when the reverend preacher made touching reference to the passing of President Harding. Only a few days ago the President had spoken at Vancouver, and in a short address, touched the hearts of the Canadian people; and now his work is finished and he has ceased to rule.

The President's greatest work was the Washington Conference, at which the disarmament of the nations was decided upon; and to which the leading nations of the day had mutually agreed. A nation's leader had fallen, but the measures of peace which he instituted, abide, and it is hoped that they will continue.

There were many other excellent points in the sermon which are worthy of publication, but these few will suffice to impart to our readers, some faint idea of a very masterly, and timely discourse.

Many Visitors at C. L. B. Camp

Yesterday was thoroughly enjoyed by all ranks and visitors to Topsail Camp. The day begun with Holy Communion service at 8 o'clock at which the clergymen present were Rev. A. Pittman, Camp Chaplain, Rector of Topsail and Rev. Arthur Stirling, Company Chaplain and the Rector of St. Mary's. Major Williams, Capts. Morris, Snow Lieut. Reeves and many others came in during the morning with a detachment from J. Co. Bell Island under Major W. Lindsay and Lieut. Cluett including their Brass Band, Major Green Capt Murphy and Lieut Gunn of the Catholic Cadets of Bell Island. Scout master Furlong of the Boy Scouts, Capt. Angus Reid of the Nfld Highlanders, His Lordship Mayor Cook and Mr. Alex Rooney of the Methodist Guards.

At 11 a.m. the Battalion paraded to Topsail Church and the building was filled to capacity. The Rev. A. Stirling read the lessons and the Camp Chaplain preached a very practical sermon, full of sound logic and made a stirring appeal to the lads to always quit themselves like men. The text was from the 42nd, Psalm 2, "When shall I come before the presence of God." The lesson was read by Rev. A. Stirling. The hymns were most appropriate and the service concluded with the National Anthem played by the battalion brass band. Some 230 all ranks were in camp, with the following Officers on duty:—Lt.-Col. Walter Rendell, C.B.E., Majors. R. H. Tait, M.C., Camp Commander, William Lindsay, O.C., Bell Island, Geo. R. Williams, Captains Short, of Grand Falls, Phil B. Rendell Jas. Snow, James J. Miller, A. S. Lewis, Canteen officer, F. W. Burden, Medical officer, Alex Morris, Bandmaster, Lieuts. R. G. Ash, A. B. Perlin, Fred Reid, Motty, Mercer of Bay Roberts, M. Job Taylor, Harold Hayward, Orderly officer, E. Cluett, S. Erley of Grand Falls.

The drum head service was held at 3 p.m. the same Chaplains officiating assisted by the Rev. Hugh Facey, B.A., of Kelligrews. The preacher was the Rev. Arthur Stirling who in fine voice addressed the gathering on (1) Symetry, (2) Erestness, (3) Light—illustrating his address by the use of two candles one perfect in shape and the other bent and out of condition by the heat, or "tested and fount wanting." He appealed to all to be manly and to play the game. Some slight showers occurred at this moment but the clergy "carried on" and the rain was only light.

Afternoon tea was served by Mrs. Walter Rendell and Mrs. Tasker Cook assisted by Mrs. A. Pittman, Miss Perlin, Mrs. Menzies, Mrs. Claude Noonan and others. Amongst the visitors were Mr. R. B. Job, Dr. Arthur Carnell, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Reid, Sir Patrick McGrath, Lieut Jack McGrath, formerly of the Dublin Fusiliers, James Ayre, J. R. Bennett, Hon. R. Waston, Andrew G. Carnell, Fred Davey, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Neal, Mr. and Mrs. A. Tooton, Mr. Frankie Miles, Mr. George Andrews, Capt. and Mrs. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Cheshire and many other friends, including Mr. Charles H. Hayward of Grand Falls.

During the afternoon the band rendered a sacred concert. The Brass Band of Bell Island provided some splendid music on the route march to and from church in the morning and we congratulate them on the great improvement in their music since last year. Congratulations to Bandsmaster Martin.

Bad Harvest for Sea Fishermen

Severe Winter and Fordney Tariff Keep Men From Work.

TRURO, N.S., July.—The general condition of the fishing industry during the past three years and particularly in the past twelve months as regards export markets and production was reviewed by Ward Fisher, Halifax superintendent of the eastern division at the special conference of fishery, inspectors and officers of the lobster and canning districts of the Maritime Provinces and the Magdalen Islands which opened here yesterday morning. Foreign markets, he said, had not yet recovered from conditions arising from the war, and there was little prospect of the foreign trade in fish getting back to what it was or expanding until world markets had returned to normal.

In addition the industry was up against two other elements, the severe weather of the past winter and the Fordney tariff. The price received was so small that many fishermen have ceased work altogether as they were unable to make it pay.

The two chief fisheries this year were the mackerel and the lobster. The catch of mackerel was good but prices ruled very low. As regards the lobster fishery while the weather during the early part of the fishing season was bad and in some respects justified the extension granted by the department, the catches very largely increased so that the pack for the whole district will be somewhat larger than last year.

BETTER EXPORTS

Emphasis was placed on the necessity on continuing the effort to improve the quality of our sea products so that advantage could be taken of the opportunity to regain the export trade which is now confined almost wholly to the West Indies, South America, and in some degree recently to Italy where there is an increasing demand for our dried fish.

The domestic fresh fish market was well sustained, with every evidence that it will be largely increased during the next few years.

The prospects for the rest of the present year were not so bright as could be hoped for and the fishermen particularly will need every possible encouragement to carry on sufficiently to provide a reasonable livelihood.

It would appear, Mr. Fisher said, that too great reliance is being placed on the lobster fishery as is the most available source of income under present condition. Over-export might greatly endanger this valuable fishery and every safeguard was needed to protect it from depletion. It was probable, he said, that the fall lobster fishery would be prosecuted with unusual vigor, endangering both the fishery and the prosperity of the canned lobster industry.

Dr. Knight, Ottawa, led in a discussion on the cannery grading plan. His leadership and suggestions were of great value and were much appreciated. The afternoon was devoted to consideration of proposed new regulations under the meat and canned foods act.

Dread to confess ignorance is of ignorance the most staring sign.—Eden Philpotts.

CALLS FOR ACTION!

TO PROTECT THE COUNTRY.

From the world over, but particularly from the American continent, we hear of the efforts of business men to market their common products on some basis of co-operative action, that will ensure higher prices and safe profits to business men and as a consequence to the actual producers.

The importance, even the necessity of such action, is daily impressing itself.

We hear from Alberta that its farmers are certain to have a marketing pool for this year's wheat crop. For the purpose of facilitating their marketing proposal, the Alberta farmers have invited Mr. Aaron Sapiro, the American co-operative marketing expert, to assist them. Sapiro will visit Alberta section during August, and it is expected that the resulting market pooling scheme will not only extend to the wheat crop but will include the farmer's other grains and productions including live stock.

The Alberta farmers, in support of their efforts claim that with wheat down to 80 and 83 cents at elevator points in their sections they are forced to take action that will improve their own situation. It is claimed by them that wheat cannot be grown at less than $1.00 per bushel, and that they should receive $2.30 per bushel in order to receive a reasonable return from their labor and investment.

The Canadian farmers are certainly not in a worse condition than are the fishermen of this country.

With fish prices such as ruled last year, fishermen could hardly live and fishermen schooner-holders could barely pay their expenses even with good voyages.

What is the trouble?

It is only too apparent. We want action on the lines contemplated by Canadian farmers and others. We want insane business methods and murderous competition replaced by sensible co-operative business action that will control exportation of our produce, prevent congestion and enhance prices.

From sentimental reasons, it may be argued why make the people on the other side, who eat the fish, pay high prices? That argument does not hold water. They have to pay exorbitant prices anyhow, whether foreign dealers pay much or little for our fish.

Besides, why be so considerate about others and evince so little regard for our own producers who are the bone and sinew of our own country?

Will our men be again sacrificed in the marketing of another season's catch?

They will be sacrificed, if the merchant-exporters will refuse to get together quickly.

The time passes.

GIVE OTHERS A CHANCE!

Owing to the abnormal pressure on most Government offices at the present time, the department business is very much increased over the ordinary activities of other times. Not only are the departmental clerks confronted with increased work in connection with undertakings considered necessary to assist the country through a trying period; but there is much extra time incurred in dealing with the extraordinary increase of public visitors, having business of more or less importance.

It is, therefore, difficult to expect at the departments, the same leisurely time during which one may conduct whatever business he may have with the departmental head or any of the departmental staff. It is difficult, especially if the above fact is not borne in mind, to receive the same courtesy ordinarily expected when departments were less encumbered with public business and with the general public.

We do not now mean to say that any departmental clerks are usually discourteous or abrupt in their duties; and, if it were so, we feel there is sometimes an excuse for them under the provocations with which they have to contend.

There is a lesson, however, which the visitors to some departments should learn, that would be helpful to all concerned and that would save much waiting and loss of time to persons, whose business may be of genuine importance. Business should be transacted quickly and somebody else should be given a chance.

It should be remembered that somebody else is waiting, that time should not be taken up in useless conversation concerning indiscriminate matters, and that departmental business must be conducted.

There have been instances where district representatives, whose business with departmental heads was really of an important nature, have been kept waiting for a long time and, even though a regular appointment was made, have been obliged to leave without seeing the party with whom the appointment existed. This was so because pressing time was taken up by others in dragging conversation about matters of no importance whatsoever.

There are other instances of visitors breaking in on the appointments of others in the midst of discussions of public importance. Such a state of affairs is not good enough, and for the convenience of all concerned, and for the proper procedure of department business, it is most desirable that people see the necessity to dispense with business quickly and give somebody else a chance.

THE OTHER SIDE

The London Morning Post dealing with the matter of the British Government's attitude towards France on the reparations question in a recent editorial stresses the fact that German propaganda has been largely responsible for the opinion, so generally held, that a serious break between the two great nations of the Entente is in contemplation and has been from the outset of the negotiations which are still hanging fire. The Morning Post says "Our friendship with France remains and will remain as long as a Conservative Government is in power—a corner-stone of British foreign policy. The British Government's view, both of reparations and the policy of Germany, are not, we firmly believe, fundamentally different from the views of France on that subject." Referring to the alleged efforts of certain sections of the English press to misrepresent the Government's attitude the Post goes on to say:

"The public are left with the impression that the only thing to restore British industry and set the unemployed at work again is the evacuation of the Ruhr. Mr. Lloyd George has many illusions, but that is not one of them. On the contrary, he stated in the House of Commons recently that:

> "The moment peace is restored in Europe and the exchanges are "stabilised . . . such advantages as we have from the difficulties that our "competitors have experienced in making business because of the fluctu-"ations of the exchange, will have vanished. . . . You will then be face "to face with the real rivalry and the competition."

"Here, surely, is a complete answer to this perpetual iteration that Germany must have the Ruhr back in order that British Trade may flourish. From Mr. Lloyd George's plain statement we gather his view that the settlement of the economic trouble between Germany and France would not be the end, but the beginning of our trouble; that our trade depression will not diminish, but rather increase, owing to the settlement of the quarrel between France and Germany. This carries us back with rather brutal frankness to the old mercantilist theory that England built up her trade on the troubles of the Continent. We may not be so paricularist in our conception of International ethics as the leader of the National Liberal Party, but we agree, at least, thus far, that it is preposerous to tell the British public they are to expect good trade as the result of the German difficulties.

"The testimony of Mr. Lloyd George on this subject is the more valuable, as it was quite evident from a speech, from which we have quoted, that he is no friend of France. He gave a wonderful picture of that country, springing like a phoenix out of her ashes—of her improved railways, her deepened canals, and her new factories, her machinery of the latest invention, and so forth. Curiously enough, we had just published, in almost precisely similar terms, an account of the great industrial development of Germany. But let us point out to Mr. Lloyd George, and the public, one very material difference between the developments of these two countries. France is restoring what has been destroyed; Germany is increasing what already exists. When Mr. Lloyd George quotes from the report of the Overseas Trade Department that France has been building "new" factories, constructing "new" docks, building "new" railways, and so forth, he omits to mention that it would be impossible for France to build old factories, railways, and docks, and that in replacing what has been destroyed she naturally adopts the most modern inventions. When, however, he admits that Germany has also been building new factories and re-equipping old factories, he leaves out of account the vital part of the comparison. Germany was already the most powerfully equipped industrial country in the world. Her railways, factories, and canals were all of modern type, and had mostly passed unscathed through the war. France is restoring an old position; Germany creating a new one. As to Mr. Lloyd George's comparisons of trade, we do not place much value upon them. When, for example, he tells us that France increased her exports "over a hundred per cent. of the war period," we naturally desire to know what France exported in the war period. Without pursuing our examination of these figures any further for the moment we suggest as a probability that if France is doing a hundred per cent. of her war period she is only returning to her position before the war. As for the fall in German exports, Mr. Lloyd George himself admits that they are only temporary, and that Germany is filling in the time by an enormous increase of her productive power. On his subject of the future of British trade in face of renewed competition, we shall only say that when it comes we ought to be equipped with a Protective system which will enable us to face it. In the meantime, our point is merely that the promise of a great revival of British trade when France evacuates the Ruhr is German propaganda based upon no solid foundation of fact."

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Trade unions in England have lost 315,503 members during the last year. This decrease is said to have resulted from the absorption by the government of some of the functions at one time performed by the unions.

The funds of the unions have fallen from £254,266 to £94,396 and the annual revenue from £85,450 to £64,883.

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce recently held in London the British government was urged to require Siberian salmon to be marked as such. Japanese canners, backed, it is said, by the Soviet government, are driving Canadian salmon from the market by selling a cheaper article under the same name. It seems only right that the British consumer should have an opportunity to exercise his preference for Empire goods.

Grass has begun to sprout on the tops of thousands of freight cars lying idle in the railroad yards of the Ruhr. Many of them are filled with merchandise and have not turned a wheel since the French and Belgians marched into the industrial area last January.

The grass in some cases grows luxuriantly while London, Paris, Berlin and Brussels talk about peace.

Britishers, who formerly had the largest foreign colony in Japan with the exception of the Chinese, now are being given a close run by the Americans.

Returns just issued show that there are 2,562 Britishers resident in Japan and 2,549 Americans. There has also been an increase in the number of Russians, composed largely of political refugees.

There are just under 30,000 foreigners resident in the islands, of whom nearly 20,000 are Chinese.

Interesting relics in the form of two large brass vases filled with pieces of gold, and believed by experts to belong to a period 300 or 400 years B. C., have, by order of the government, been removed from Ognina which is situated at the foot of Mount Etna, to Rome.

The vases were discovered in a fissure in the ground under an old wall after a slight earthquake, by a deaf and dumb peasant. The news of the find only reached the authorities when the peasant offered the vases for sale to collectors.

The annual fruit production of Australia has increased from about 1,000,000 bushels in 1918 to 4,762,876, the figures for last year.

The fruit finds a ready market in England, where it has already served to lower the price on all classes of fruit.

French Soldiers Saved By a German

THE WISHED-FOR REWARD.

COLOGNE, July 19.

A Karlruhe telegram states that an innkeeper named Max Fladt, living at Kehl, recently came to the rescue of two French soldiers who had fallen into the Rhine while working on a practice pontoon bridge. At the risk of his own life he saved both men, who were in imminent danger of drowning.

A few days later Fladt received the personal thanks of the French delegate of the High Commission, Colonel Roy, and of General Michel, commanding the Kehl bridgehead. Asked by the delegate if there was anything he wished in particular, Fladt replied, "The pardon of my seven fellow-countrymen who have just been sentenced to deat at Mainz." General Michel told Fladt to put his request into writing, and immediately forwarded it to Coblenz.

Britain's Devastated Area

LONDON DAILY NEWS—The unemployed in our streets are quite as tragic a spectacle to the Englishman as ever his ruined fields can be to the Frenchman; they may easily prove the more fatal mischief of the two, and to expect Englishmen to shut their eyes to the fact is to expect something which cannot be granted and which ought not to be granted. There is still time for the recognition of this in France; but it would be a disservice even to France to fail to point out that the long delay is beginning to be very dangerous, and that even British patience has its limits.

Americans in Canada

CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE—Few people would credit the extent to which the American people have come to permeate the Canadian Dominion, especially the Western provinces, in recent years. In the year 1871, when the first census was taken of the newly federated dominion was taken, Canada was found to have a population of 3,485,761, and of these 24,162 recorded their birthplace as the United States. This was equivalent to not quite seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the total population. At the time of the 1901 census there were 127,899 citizens of American birth in Canada. In that of 1911 there were 303,580, representing 4.1 per cent of the total population at the time. From 1911 to 1921 a total of 748,118 citizens of the United States entered Canada, so that at the present time there are well over 1,000,000 people in Canada who have been citizens of the United States, or something like 12 per cent of the total Dominion population.

BROOKLYN EAGLE—Mr. Hughes seems to accept the so-called stability of Soviet rule as a fact, whereas it is but an appearance. The stability of Lenin and his administration is a stability of force. Much nonsense it talked about Lenine's control since 1917, when other cabinets and governments have fallen right and left. The cabinets that have disappeared were subject to parliamentary majorities. To survive without opposition is no achievement at all. As Mr. Hughes remarks, the will of a people "may not be manifested by long-continued acquiescence in a regime actually functioning as a government."

SHRINKING PRODUCTION

Freeman's Journal: Ireland's production is food, almost nothing else. Its prosperity depends on its food production. Yet in the last three years its tillage lands have shrunk by 691,400 acres. Half-a-million acres that grew corn in 1920 have gone out of cultivation. Almost 200,000 acres under green crops have returned to grass. And with the increase of grass there is no increase in live-stock. At last year's enumeration there was 40,600 fewer cattle, 141,700 fewer sheep, and 10,542 fewer horses than in the preceding year. The land is decaying in every direction—less wheat, oats, and barley, less potatoes and vegetables, less flax.

Early Days of Fur Trading in Canada

Founding of the North-West Company and its Operations in Western Canada—Troubles With the Indians and Frontier Difficulties With the United States.

Four precious documents relating to the early history of Canada now repose in the library of the Royal Colonial Institute in London, England. These documents have recently been photographed in order that copies may be available in the activities of Canada. They are of very great interest and importance in connection with the history of the fur trade and of discovery generally in Western Canada. One of these documents is entitled "Some account of the Trade carried on by the North-West Company."

There is no indication in the document itself as to the writer, but from a similarity of the handwriting with that of David Thompson, the great Canadian explorer, who was then in the service of the North-West Company, it seems possible that the manuscript was written by him. It bears the date 1809, and this fact somewhat militates against the assumption of Thompson's authorship, because during the greater part of that year he was actively employed in exploring expeditions, although from November 10th, 1808, to April 1809, he was wintering at the old Kootenay House, and may have found time to write the report in question.

At this period the North-West Company had become firmly established after its long fight with the independent fur traders, and it was not until the year 1821 that it was absorbed by its formidable rival, the Hudson's Bay Company. The manuscript, which is plentifully supplied with notes in the handwriting of William MacGillivary, one of the partners of the North West Company, contains an account of the founding of the Company and of its operations in Western Canada.

It appears that for a considerable period after the British conquest of Canada the Indian tribes remained obstinately attached to their former masters, and although "the fur trade of the Canadas did not experience and considerable suspension by the conquest and transfer of the country," nevertheless "the Savages were unwilling to recognize the Capitulation made between the French and English Commanders," and "made war on all the posts occupied by the British from Niagara to La Baye."

Early Pioneers of the North.

So obstinate was the attachment of the Indians to their former Government that "it was as late as the year 1771 before the British traders could safely traffic as far as the Shascathiwan River, the most remote of the French posts." The manuscript relates how various traders penetrated into the North-West country and discovered "eligible situations" for the purpose of establishing fur trading posts. It states, however, that the territory thus explored was invaded by others who resorted to every means they could devise to obtain a perference and injure their competitors.

This provided retaliation. "The Savages were bribed with rum and the goods were bartered at a price below their value. The consequence was they ruined one another, debauched the natives, and brought the English character into contempt. In these conficts blood was often spilled; and after a competition injurious and disgraceful to all parties, mutual interest and convenience suggested the necessity of a common concern, subject to general rules. Accordingly, in the year 1779, nine district parties entered an agreement for one year to make the whole trade a common concern.

This was the beginning of the North West Company which was soon to exercise a predominating influence over the fur-trading of a considerable portion of Canada, although it met with strong opposition from certain Montreal traders, such as John Gregory and Alexander McLeod, who organized a rival Company (known as the XY Company) and for some years proved a thorn in the flesh of theNorth West partners. Later, as we know, the North-West Company met with the active opposition of the Selkirk Settlers because the fur traders had resented the presence of agricultural settlers in this portion of Canada, and had done their best to prevent the success of Lord Selkirk's great colonizing experiment.

The ill-disguised hostility of the North-West Company and of their proteges, the French Bois-Brules, was fanned into a flame by an act of stupidity on the part of Governor Macdonald, who, by a proclamation on January 8th, 1814, had placed an embargo on the freedom of trade in foodstuffs and had forbidden any traders of the Honorable Hudson Bay Company, the North-West Company or any individual or unconnected trader whatever to take out any provisions either of flesh, grain or vegetables from the country. This latest, and somewhat active, hostility between the fur traders and the settlers proved a considerable factor in retarding the development of Western Canada.

Traffic in Rum.

The trade in furs was carried on largely through the process of bartering European goods for pelts brought to the trading posts by the natives. It is apparent from the manuscript that the traffic in rum was of very considerable diminsions, and did much to demoralize the Indians, prevoking numerous quarrels with the servants of the company, and so many acts of violence were committed that a petition was sent to England, in complicence with which an Act of Parliament, passed in 1803, put the whole of the British Indian territory under the jurisdiction of the courts of justice of Lower Canada.

Sime important tables give estimates of the Indian tribes, and there are also descriptions of the tribes themselves, their origin and the districts they inherited. These descriptions are of great historic interest. Thus it appears that the "Knistenaux" may be said to be the most civilized tribe on this river (the Saskatchewan); they are brave and generous and hospitable to the stranger, while the Blackfeet, Piegons, and Blood Indians are a brutish and stupid nation, and are generally governed by their Chiefs and great men. They cannot be recognized brave, though on account of their numbers they are feared; they have few or no sentiments of generosity, common to other tribes; they are indilent in the extreme, but, inhabiting a fine country covered with Buffalo and other animals they subsist without difficulty."

The document then gives an account of the different trading posts in Western Can, from which it appears that in the year 1809, 84 posts had been founded between the St. Lawrence and what is now British Columbia. There were then 6 posts on the Assiniboine and Red Rivers, 6 on the Sackatchewan River, 8 on the Michinippi or Churchill River, 1 on Lesser Slave Lake, 12 on the Peace River, and 3 on the west side of the Rocky Mountains.

Extend Trade to Pacific.

"Not satisfied with the immense region on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains," states the author, "throughout which their trade is established, the North-West Company have commenced a project for extending their researches and trade as far as the South Sea (i.e., the Pacific Ocean): and have already introduced British manufactured goods among the natives on the western side of the Rocky Mountains, intending at some future period to form a general establishment for the trade of that coun try on the Columbit River, which receives and conducts to the ocean all the waters that rise west of the Mountains. The trade as it is carried on at present, beyond the Mountains, instead of yielding any profit, is a very considerable loss to the country."

The value of the territory beyond the Rockies is fully recognized by the writer, who concludes that "Should the Company succeed in this project, a new field will be open for the consumption of British manufactured goods, and a vast country and population made dependent on the British Empire," As we know, the development of British Columbia was delayed for many years, and it was not the fur trade which unlocked the wealth of that part of Canada, but the discovery of gold in the years 1856-58.

One other interesting fact emerges from this important document. It is that the arrangement of the frontiers between the United States and Canada had a considerable effect upon the British trade in furs.

Hampered by Politics.

"There is no body of men in British America," states the author, "who have suffered so much by the pilitical arrangements between Great Britain and the United States as the merchants carrying on the fur trade of Canada. These arangements placed the Michillimackinac or South trade, completely under the control of the Americans, and the North-West trade partically; by the cession of the Frontier Posts in 1796 the old carrying place at the the Straits of St. Marys fall within the jurisdiction of the United States; and the canoes and goods were immediately subjected to the exactions of the Custom House Officers of that Government, whose poverty and principals enabled them to do illegal and vaxatious acts without regarding the consequences. To remedy this enormous evil the North-West Company caused a canal to be cut, and erected locks, whereby the waters of Lake Huron were united with those of Lake Superior and a communication established within the British boundary.....By the Treaty of 1783 (according to the construction given to it by the Americans) the Grand Portage or place of general rendezvous, where all the business of the Interior trade was arranged, fell within the American territory."

The Company, therefore, "erected new buildings on the banks of Lake Superior, at the mouth of the River Kaministiquia, at an expense of at least ten thousand pounds sterling. This place the Company have designated Fort William in compliment to the gentleman who is the principal of the establishment" (i.e., William MacGillivary.-

MILITARY GOVERNORS THE CURSE OF CHINA

The political aspects of banditry in China spring from the present system of government, or, rather, lack of government. Although China has suffered frequent changes of dynasty through war and conquest, the scholar and the merchant ranked above the soldier in the popular mind and in ability to win success. Learning was almost the only road to high office. That time has passed. Force, and force alone, is the sole road to office now. The man who really wishes to "carve out his destiny" must do so with the machine gun. As a consequence military leaders, each with practically independent armies, have sprung up all over the republic. No robber baron in the old days on the Rhine was more of a curse to society than is the average Tuchun (Military Governor) of China today.

An expert in bird lore has been making a study of the peculiar actions of several hundreds of chimney swallows that make their homes in the tall chimney of a paper mill in Oneca, Conn. He has discovered that at exactly 6 o'clock each morning, when the whistle blows at a mill three miles away the hundreds of swallows rise from the chimney and fly away to their daily hunting grounds just as promptly as the hundreds of human workers answer the whistle. For two months, he says, they have not been absent or tardy. At night the birds return in small groups.

Notable Exhibits Planned By Pope

REVIEW OF WORLD AND ITS CONDITIONS IN ROME IN 1925.

ROME, July 24 — (Associated Press)—An exhibition to show everybody that the Roman Catholic Church in its evangelization of the world is going hand in hand with the development of science and that its missionaries are applying the latest scientific discoveries at the same time they are saving souls will be included in the celebration of Holy year in 1925.

Cardinal Guglielmo Van Rossum, prefect of propaganda, yesterday was studying special instructions by Pope Pius in which the pontiff outlined the missionary phase. Pope Pius expressed the desire that the scientific part be one of the most important presented.

All the scientific material will be deposited in the Vatican library after the celebration to comprise one of the most remarkable documentary collections in the world.

One of the most attractive features will be in the Vatican garden, where various nations will be represented in native environment by natives brought specially to Rome, showing customs and modes of living from the Arctic to the Antarctic, from red Indians to Papuans, including canibal tribes.

His holiness plans that the exhibition contain maps of all the most remote regions and data from the Vatican observatory showing the results of its studies, and all other information that papel sources have gathered in minerology, flora and fauna from the world over. The section also will contain reports from distant mistionaries and reviews from all kinds of publications dealing with "missionology," as His Holiness termed missionary work in his conference with the Cardinal.

Special rooms are to be set aside in the Vatican for scholars pursuing particular studies and expert scientists in "missionology" will be assigned to assist them.

Municipal Council

PUBLIC NOTICE

WHEREAS, under and by virtue of the St. John's Municipal Act, 1921, Section 63, the Council is empowered to make rules for the regulation and management of Parks, the following Rules for the Regulation of Bowring Park, were adopted at a Regular Meeting of the St. John's Municipal Council on the 26th day of July, 1923.

1. The Park shall be open to the public at 7 o'clock a.m., and shall be closed at 10 p.m. from the 15th of May to the 31st day of October.

2. A bell shall be rung by the Superintendent fifteen minutes before the closing hour; no person shall be permitted to remain in the Park after 10 p.m., except on the occasion of entertainments held with the permission of the Superintendent.

3. No horse, cow, pig, dog or other animal shall be allowed at large in the Park. Any such found there may be impounded.

4. No person shall walk on any portions of the Park except such as are allotted to the public; and any person violating this rule or refusing to remove from portions reserved for plants, shrubs, flowers, or other such purposes, when requested by the Superintendent, shall be liable to the penalty hereinafter imposed.

5. Any person using obscene or profane language, or any person drunk or disorderly, or behaving in a manner calculated to give annoyance to the frequenters or visitors of the Park shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed, and may be immediately ejected by the Superintendent or by any Peace Officer.

6. Any person resisting or refusing to obey the lawful orders of the Superintendent or his Assistants, shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed.

7. Any person injuring the trees, shrubs, flowers, plants, grass plots, seats, bridges, or any other property of the Park, shall be liable to fine or imprisonment, as hereinafter mentioned, and in addition, shall be liable for the cost of property injured or destroyed.

8. Any person giving information leading to the conviction of any offender for violations of any of these regulations shall receive half the amount of the fine: the other half shall go to-wards the maintenance of the Park.

9. No person shall enter or leave the Park excepting by the gateways, and any person found climbing over or upon the railings or fences shall be liable to the penalty hereinafter imposed.

PENALTY.

Any person violating any of the foregoing Rules shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Fifty Dollars or, in default of payment, imprisonment not exceeding sixty days.

By order,

J. J. MAHONY,
City Clerk.

Ye Olden Days

Aug. 6th—On this date, 1883, the Barqentine Oclavia, Capt. Disney, was lost at Ferryland head. The vessel belonged to Baine Johnston & Co. The crew were saved by Philip Keough.

The house of Assembly closed on this date in the year 1896.

First electrocution in the world—Henneler of New York electrocuted in 1890.

On June 6th, 1812, the Royal Bounty was attacked by an American privateer of 10 guns and 120 men, off st. John's. The Bounty struck her colors when one man had been killed and several wounded. The Bounty's crew were sent adrift and succeeded in reaching Placentia.

Schooner Loads at Petty Harbor

FISH PLENTIFUL

Fish is very plentiful at Petty Hr. and good hauls have been made with traps, while hook and liners are also doing well. Dogfish are numerous on the grounds, and have caused considerable damage to traps. Capt. T. Roberts who is fishing at Petty Hr. has loaded his schooner with over 800 qtls., and she is now waiting here to proceed to Wesleyville where the fish will be landed. He has engaged Monroe's premises at the Harbour and has over 100 qtls on the stage. Skipper Tom is a huustler, and has three trap crews engaged, and the prospects are that he will load his vessel a second time if the present spurt continues.

Was Not Case of Neglect

The police recently investigated the circumstances surrounding the death of a child at Bay Roberts, in connection with which it was alleged neglect had been the cause of the child's dying.

It was found that the report of neglect was unfounded and that death had been due to natural causes.

New Teacher For Methodist Orphanage

Miss Jessie Harding of Greenspond, B.B., a well known and popular young teacher, has, so we understand, been appointed teacher at the Methodist Orphanage for the coming year. Miss Harding is very proficient in her profession, and has taught at Topsail, St. Anthony, Springdale and other parts of Newfoundland. The Advocate wish her success in her new position.

Police Court

A 50 year old Cooper of Livingston Street, charged with assaulting a tennant had to give bonds in $100.00 The complainant swore the defendant visited her house on Saturday night and during an altercation over the rent question, he caught htr by the throat. This the accused denied, but he admitted jamming the complainant between the door and the partition.

A labourer of Wickford St. was released upon payment of $5.00. He was arrested on complaint of his wife, who, as is usual in such cases, failed to appear against him.

A West End Cooper appeared as defendant to a charge of assault preferred by a young farmer from Freshwater. The trouble arose in the first instance, at the Kilbride Garden Party, when the parties clashed as a result over a dispute on the merits of the ponies that took part in the races. In the early hours of Regatta Day they met again in a beer shop on New Gower Street. Outside the shop the fight occurred. The complaintant says he was attacked from the rear and was laid up four days as a result of being struck in the butt of the ear. The defendant says he hit out in self-defence. Judge McCarthy bound the defenrant to keep the peace in a $100.00 bond and also ordered him to pay costs.

Many Excursionists

The excursion train to Kelligrews was well patronized yesterday afternoon when some 425 people went out of town. In addition to this number 80 people went at 1 o'clock on the express. The great majority of these people went to Manuels where the annual Garden Party was held, and it was very successful. Most of the excursionists returned by the train at 10 o'clock last night.

Ivory Soap the world's most economical toilet soap is now sold at all the Union Stores. There is no purer or smoother soap than Ivory. Great for babies and children, as well as adults. Try a small cake. You will like Ivory.

At 11 p.m. Saturday the Fire Companies were called to the residence of Wm. Hennebury King's Bridge Road, where some soot in the chimney had iknited. The services of the firemen were not required, and no damage was caused.

When you once use Ivory toilet soap you will wonder why you did not get to using it before for Ivory gives perfect soap satisfaction at little cost. Ivory is the purest soap and gives best value. At all Union Stores now.

The T.A. & B. Society's Annual Outing takes place at Donovan's today, the members having gone out by special train at 10.30 a.m. At night a dance for adults is being held, the train leaving the station here at 7.30 p.m.

NO STANDING ALOOF.

Brooklyn Eagle: In the long run a policy of negation will be as costly to this country as it has been to Great Britain. We can no more ignore what is happening in the Ruhr than the British. Morally, economically and in every other way we are hopelessly involved in this situation. So far we have been unable to take the initiative in effecting a settlement, but it is to be hoped that this Government will support Great Britain in any definite plan that has for its purpose the ending of the present intolerable conditions.

BALDWIN'S OPPORTUNITY

Baltimore Sun: Common sense is with reason supposed to be a virtue of which the British have their share. If Premier Baldwin can now exercise it in such a way as to loosen the dictatorial grip of France on the future of Europe, without forgetting the rights which France won for herself by her sufferings during the war, the place of this British Premier will be secure in history.

DANGEROUS DRIVING

Le Canada: The Government counts with reason on the support in this campaign of the many clubs and associations for motoring, whom they will endeavor to persuade that it is to their interest first, and afterwards to that of the pedestrian, to be always on the qui-vive and to drive with prudence. The provincial roads should not be transformed into speed tracks, any more than the streets in our cities, where the danger isready great. Our authorities should use drastic measures against those who consciously transgress the law.

USE OF AFRICAN TROOPS

Buluwayo Chronicle: the strain entailed upon a nation of forty millions of imposing military coercion upon a neighboring and more prolific people of sixty millions is indicated in the greater use which France is making of African troops if not on the Rhine, at least in building up her military reserves, and it is seen also in the repressive measures recorded from the occupied territories. The longer this goes on, the more exacting the task is likely to become, and the greater the risk, especially of the growth within Germany of new types of resistance.

The first race will start at 2.30 p.m., sharp, Wednesday. The crews will enter to-night and draw for stakes in St. Joseph's Hall at 9 o'clock. If the day is a good one, it is expected that some very fast time will be made, as good crews are competing in all races.

Concert on Portia

An interesting event was held on the Portia coming south last week. It was organized by Miss Nellie Maunder at the request of the passengers and on behalf of a blind patient who was returning from the hospital at St. Anthony. The Rev. Mr. Lewis presided and the performers included Misses Rose Brophy, Una Noel, Edna Gaulton, Nellie Maunder, Dorothy Butt, Ida Miller, Vera Cunningham and Messrs. Clifford Ross, Martin Day, P. O. Brown and Capts. Campbell and Ford of the Salvation Army.

The selections of vocal and instrumental music were greatly enjoyed by the passengers and crew of the ship, particularly the jazz orchestra selections under the management of Mr. Clifford Ross.

The sum of $35.00 was collected on the occasion and given to the patient on whose behalf the Rev. Mr. Lewis thanked the contributors.

Knoced Down By Street Car

Mr. Jno. Hipditch a resident of Williams Lane, where he conducts a Boarding Houhe, had a narrow escape from death about 5.30 Saturday evening, as a result of being knocked down by a street car. It seems that Mr. Hipditch was crossing the Street, when he was struck by street car No. 1 which was going west. He was thrown to the ground with much force and was dragged several yards before motorman Lacey stopped the car, when Mr. Hipditch was taken from under by Mr. Lawrence Tucker. The unfortunate man was badly injured about the head, and Const. Rideout coming on the scene, the injured man was placed on board Mr. Harry Worsley's car and driven to the Hospital where his injuries were attended to and it was found that he was not seriously hurt, though he suffered greatly from shock.

PETITION TO POPE

BERLIN, Aug. 6—In a memorial presented to Pope Pius through Monsignor Tresta, Papal Envoy in the Ruhr, the entire Catholic clergy in the Rhineland and Ruhr petitioned the Holy Father to use all possible means at his disposal to prevent the threatening separation of West Prussia from the Empire.

WILD SCENES IN DUBLIN

DUBLIN, Aug. 6—Wild scenes occurred in Dublin to-day in connection with the Irish Trade Union Congress. Delegates going to the Mansion House found the approach blocked by a crowd of demonstrators who tried to seize the building; shouting release the prisoners, up Larkin and Irish labor leaders.

American Swims the E. Channel

Henry Sullivan of Lowell, Mass., Succeeded In Negotiating English Channel in 26 Hours.

LODNON, Aug. 6—Henry Sullivan, of Lowell, Mass., has succeeded in swimming the English Channel, according to a Paris despatch to the Exchange Telegraph, he reached Calais at five after eight to-night, swimming ninety kilometers or nearly sixty miles. The time was twenty six hours and fifty minutes. Sullivan is the third man to swim the Channel Captain Matthew Webb swam across on August 24th, 25th, 1875; and T. W. Burgess on September 6th, 1911. Webb was subsequently drowned while attempting to swim the rapids at Niagara Falls.

Woman Swimmer Gives Up Attempt

DOVER, Aug. 7—The observers who were in the boat that accompanied Henry Sullivan on the swim across the English Channel, say that the American athlete showed a marvelous degree of dogged determination in the final stages of the long grind. He had the misfortune to meet one strong tide which delayed his time to a great extent.

When he touched bottom safely on the French shore he staggered as though exhausted, but when he was offered assistance from the boat he declined and staggered ashore.

He has been awarded the prize of $1000 dollars.

DOVER, Aug. 7—Mrs. Clemington Carson, the other swimmer attempting to swim the English Channel yesterday, was forced to give up the attempt when within six miles of the French coast.

President Harding's Funeral

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7—The announcement is made that the funeral services for the late President Harding in Marion, Friday, will begin at 3 p.m. standard time. The funeral train will leave the Capital for Marion to-morrow evening.

The services in Marion will be extremely simple, in accordance with Mrs. Harding's wishes, and no military, fraternal or other organized demonstrations are being made.

LEAGUE PREVENTED TWO WARS SAYS LARKIN

OTTAWA, Aug. 6—Enthusiastic support of the League of Nations and high appreciation of the work which it has done thus far, was voiced by Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner in London in an interview with newspapermen to-day. The League has done wonders, declared Mr. Larkin, "I think it probably averted two wars in Europe, one in Silesia and the other in Albania. The eventful result of the movement will be that the nations will submit all their differences to the League."

League Has Big Problems to Consider

Smaller Nations Are Not Inclined To Enter Mutual Assistance Pact.

PARIS, Aug. 7—How to make guarantee treaties between two or more nations harmonize with proposed general pact for mutual assistance, which will be suggested to members of the League of Nations in an effect to bring about reduction of armaments is giving trouble to the temporary committee of the League of Nations sitting here. Disinclination of smaller states to join in a general pact which might bind them to take part in a blockade is the principal obstacle to it. Larger nations, which are, the most exposed to danger from exterior, say they cannot leave themselves in a position where abandonment by them of the small powers might compromise action otherwise likely to protect them from aggression. Hence the insistance of France for partial guarantee pacts. Representatives of smaller states have been joined by Italy in their demand that parties to such partail pacts shall take action in case of threatened war, only after council had decided whether there is cause for action. On the other hand France and Great Britain are agreed that parties cannot wait in case of dire menace for the council to act. Discussion is expected to require another day or two at least.

Rounding Up Bank Robbers

TORONTO, Aug. 7—The arrest of Walter S. Morton in Detroit on Saturday, is said to have given the Toronto police the lead to the solution of the big bank robbery which was staged in this city on July 24th, in which at least $83,000 in currency was stolen and two bank messengers were shot down and severely wounded.

One other of the suspects whose name the police are keeping secret, is said to be in custody in the city, and detectives are claimed to be in close pursuit of two others, one in Montreal, and the other in Windsor.

Other Bomb Attacks Are Made in Ruhr

Attempt Was Made to Blow Up Coal Syndicate Bldg.

DUSSELDORF, Aug. 6—A bomb attack on French troops Saturday in which two were injured is reported, and similar incidents in the Ruhr and it is believed they indicate a recrudescence against the authorities. A bomb with fuse attached was found in Essen opposite the building occupied by the coal syndicate. One German has been arrested in connection with the discovery. A bomb was exploded near the station at Essen, but did little damage.

Fifteen Thousand Knights Assemble

Forty-first International Supreme Council Opens Today.

MONTREAL, Aug. 6—The formal opening of the forty-first International Supreme Council of the Knights of Columbus will take place to-morrow morning. It is expected that at least fifteen thousand members and friends will arrive in the city before the conclave begins.

Grand Lodge Session, I. O. O. F., Opens

BRIDGEWATER N. S., Aug. 7—The sixth annual session of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows of the Maratime Provinces and Newfoundland opens here to-day. The town has been elaborately decorated and lighted to welcome the five hundred delegates who have arrived or are expected.

Broken Neck Is No Longer Serious Matter

SYDNEY, N. S. August 7—Mrs. Harry Gregor, New Waterford, who recently had her neck broken in a motor accident on the Sydney reserve highway, has a fighting chance for recovery, as a result of an operation by which two of the injured vertebrae were removed. This is the first time such an operation has been attempted in Capt Breton.

Italy States Her Position on Reparations

Is Opposed to Passive Resistance and Ulterior Occupation of Ruhr By French and Belgians.

ROME, Aug. 6—The Italian reply to the recent British note on reparations, as published in Rome, shows that Italy approves of the British proposals. Concerning the question of cessation of passive resistance as well as that of occupation of the Ruhr the Italian Government continues the note "adheres to the opinion on this subject which is expressed publicly on many occasions, namely that it is opposed to passive resistance, that it is opposed to all ulterior military occupation of the Ruhr and that it favors a gradual reduction of French and Belgian military occupation of the Ruhr when a gradual undertaking shall have been reached and guaranteed."

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER I.

IN THE LIVING ROOM of The Dreamerie, his home on Tyee Head, Hector McKaye, owner of the Tyee Lumber Company and familiarly known as "The Laird," was wont to sit in his hours of leisure, smoking and building castles in Spain—for his son Donald. Here he planned the acquisition of more timber and the installation of an electric-light plant to furnish light, heat, and power to his own town of Port Agnew; ever and anon he would gaze through the plate glass windows out to sea and watch for his ships to come home. Whenever The Laird put his dreams behind him, he always looked seaward. In the course of time, his home-bound skippers, sighting the white house on the headland and knowing that The Laird was apt to be up there watching, formed the habit of doing something that pleased their owner mightily. When the north-west trades held steady and true, and while the tide was still at the flood, they would scorn the services of the tug that went out to meet them and come ramping into the bight, all their white sails set and the glory of the sun upon them; as they swept past, far below The Laird, they would dip his house-flag—a burgee, scarlet-edged with a fir tree embroidered in green on a field of white—the symbol to the world that here was a McKaye ship. And when the house-flag fluttered half-way to the deck, and climbed again to the masthead, the soul of Hector McKaye would thrill.

"Guid lads! My bonny brave lads!" he would utter aloud with just a touch of his parents' accent, and press a button which discharged an ancient brass cannon mounted on the edge of the cliff. Whenever he saw one of his ships in the offing—and he could identify his ships as far as he could see them—he ordered the gardener to load this cannon.

Presently the masters began to dip the house-flag when outward bound, and discovered that, whether the Laird sat at his desk in the mill office or watched from the cliff, they drew an answering salute.

This was their hail and farewell.

One morning, the barkentine Hathor, towing out for Delagoa bay, dipped her house-flag, and thefi watch at their stations bent their gaze upon the house on the cliff. Long they waited but no answering salute greeted the acknowledgement of their affectionate and willing service.

The mate's glance met the master's.

"The old Laird must be unwell, sir," he opined.

But the master shook his head.

He was to have had dinner aboard with us last night, but he sent over word that he'd like to be excused. He's sick at heart, poor man! Daney tells me he's heard town gossip about young Donald."

"The lad's a gentleman, sir," the mate defended. "He'll not disgrace his people."

"He's young—and youth must be served. Man, I was young myself once—and Nan of the Sawdust Pile is not a woman a young man would look at once and go his way."

* * * * *

In the southwestern corner of the state of Washington, nestled in the Bight of Tyee and straddling the Skookum River, lies the little sawmill town of Port Agnew. It is a community somewhat difficult to locate, for the Bight of Tyee is not of sufficient importance as a harbor to have won consideration by the cartographers of the Coast or the Geodetic Survey, and Port Agnew is not quite forty years old. Consequently, it appears only on the very latest state maps and in the smallest possible type.

When Hector McKaye first gazed upon the bight, the transcontinental lines had not yet begun to consider the thrusting of their tenacles into southwestern Washington, and, with the exception of those regions where good harbors had partially solved the problem of transportation, timber in Washington was very cheap. Consequently, since Hector McKaye was one of those hardy men who never hesitate to take that which no man denies him, he reached forth and acquired timber.

A strip of land a quarter of a mile wide and fronting the beach was barren of commercial timber. As grazing-land Hector McKaye was able to file on a full section of this, and with its acquisition, he owned the key to the outlet. While "proving up" his claim, he operated a general store for trading with the Indians and trappers, and at this he prospered. From time to time he purchased timber-claims from the trappers as fast as they "proved up," paying for these stumpage prices varying from twenty-five to fifty cents per thousand.

On his frequent trips to the outer world, Hector McKaye extolled the opportunities for acquiring good timber claims down on the Skookum; he advertized them in letters and in discreet interviews with the editors of little newspapers in the sawmill towns on Puget Sound and Grays Harbor; he let it be known that an honest fellow could secure credit for a winter's provisions from him, and pay for it with pelts in the spring.

The influx of homesteaders increased—single men, for the most part, and poor—men who labored six months of the year elsewhere and lived the remaining six months in rude log huts on their claims down on the Skookum. And when the requirements of the homestead laws had been complied with and a patent to their quarter-section obtained from the Land Office in Washington, the homesteaders were ready to sell and move on to other and greener pastures. So they sold to the only possible purchaser, Hector McKaye, and departed, quite satisfied with a profit which they flattered themselves had been the result of their own prudence and foresight.

Thus, in the course of ten years, Hector McKaye acquired ten thousand acres of Splendid Douglas fir and white cedar. But he had not been successful in acquiring claims along the south bank of the Skookum. For some mysterious reason, he soon found claims on the north bank cheaper and easier to secure, albeit the timber showed no variance in quantity or quality. Discreet investigations brought to light the fact that he had a competitor—one Martin Darrow, who dwelt in St. Paul, Minnesota. To St. Paul, therefore, journeyed Hector McKaye and sought an audience with Martin Darrow.

"I'm McKaye, from the Skookum River, Washington," he announced, without preamble.

"I've been expecting you, Mr. McKaye," Darrow replied. "Got a proposition to submit?"

"Naturally, or I wouldn't have come to St. Paul. I notice you have a weakness for the timber on the south bank of the Skookum. You've opposed me there half a dozen times and won. I have also observed that I have a free hand with claims north of the river. That's fair—and there's timber enough for two. Hereafter I will keep to my side of the river."

"I see we're going to come to an understanding, Mr. McKaye. What will you give me to stick to my side of the river?"

"An outlet through the bight for your product when you commence manufacturing. I control the lowet half-mile of the river, and the only available mill-sites. I'll give you a mill-site if you'll pay half the expenses of digging a new channel for the Skookum, and changing its course so it will emerge into the still, deep water under the lee of Tyee Head."

"We'll do business," said Martin Darrow—and they did, although it was many years after Hector McKaye had incorporated the Tyee Lumber Company and founded his town of Port Agnew before Darrow began operations.

True to his promise, McKaye deeded him a mill-and-town-site, and he founded a settlement on the eastern edge of Port Agnew, but quite distinct from it, and called it Darrow, after himself. It was not a community that Hector McKaye approved of, for it was squalid and unsanitary, and its untidy, unpainted shacks of rough lumber harbored southern European labor, of which Hector McKaye would have none. In Darrow, also, there were three groggeries and a gambling-house, with the usual combitant of women whose profession is the oldest and the saddest in the world.

Following his discovery of the Bight of Tyee, a quarter of a century passed. A man may prosper much in twenty-five years, and Hector McKaye, albeit American born, was bred of an acquisitive race. When his Gethsemane came upon him, he was rated the richest lumberman in the state of Washington, his twenty-thousand-sea-board-feet-capacity per day sawmill had grown to five hundred thousand, his ten thousand acres to a hundred thousand. Two thousand persons looked to him and his enterprize for their bread and butter; he owned a fleet of half a dozen steam schooners and sixteen big windjammers; he owned a town which he had called Port Agnew, and he had married and been blessed with children. And because his ambition no longer demanded it, he was no longer a miser.

In a word, he was a happy man, and in affectionate pride and as a tribute to his might, his name and an occasional forget-me-not of speech which clung to his tongue, heritage of his Scotch forebears, his people called him "The Laird of Tyee." Singularly enough, his character fitted this cognomen rather well. Reserved, proud, independent, and sensitive, thinking straight and talking straight, a man of brusque yet tender sentiment, which was wont to manifest istelf unevpectedly, it had been said of him that in a company of a hundred of his mental, physical, and financial peers, he would have stood forth preeminiently and distinctively like a lone tree on a hill.

COULD HARDLY DO ANY WORK

Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound This Woman Feels So Well

Keeseville, N. Y.—"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for the good it has done me. I was so much troubled with female weakness I could hardly do any work. I saw your advertisement in the paper, and read it to my husband. He said, 'You had better try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound', so I bought six bottles, and by taking it I am not troubled as I was. I am gaining strength and getting fleshy. My female troubles have vanished and I have never felt so well. The Liver Pills are the best I ever took. If you think my letter will encourage other sufferers you have my permission to use it as an advertisement."—Mrs. Sarah Blaise, Box 177, Keeseville, N. Y.

Doing the housework for the average American family is some task, and many women lose their health in so doing. If you, as a housewife, are troubled with backache, irregularities, are easily tired out and irritable, or have other disagreeable ailments caused by some weakness, give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. Let it help you.

WILL ESTABLISH FIVE HUNDRED TON PAPER MILL AT BAY D'ESPOIR

White Bay Will Be Scene of Active Operations Next Winter — 12½ Million Feet Lumber and Pulpwood Will Be Cut Coming Season — Capitalists Are Interested In Gull Pond, Tilt Cove and Little Bay Copper Deposits.

Mr. H. J. Crowe left by the Sachem this morning en route to Canada and the United States on business in connection with a big new pulp, paper and lumber industry which is about to be started. If the present plans materialize the new project will be at least as extensive as the Humber Proposition.

It is understood that during his stay here Mr. Crowe entered into an agreement with the Government for important operations in the country, which will provide for a large amount of labour this winter and probably for many years to come. This development scheme will commence with an operation at White Bay, a section of the country that has not yet been opened up, and is without railway facilities. Mr. Crowe intends returning within five weeks. In the meantime he expects to arrange for one or more large rossing or drum barking plants and for one or more saw mills equipment, which he proposes establishing at or near the bottom of White Bay where a community will be built up, and a large breakwater of half a mile long will be constructed for shipping facilities.

Operations will commence next month and Mr. Crowe has given the Government a guarantee that in addition to the construction work which will provide for a permanent industry, he will cut and manufacture through these two plants a quantity equal to twelve and a half million feet of lumber and pulp wood during the coming winter.

We understand from Mr. Crowe, the main object of this development scheme at White Bay is to demonstrate the feasibility of carrying on an operation there of rossing and shipping ready for the grinders, from fifty to one hundred thousand cords annually to a proposed large pulp and paper mill which he hopes to establish on tide water at Ship's Cove, or Rotia Bay in Bay D'Espoir on the South Coast.

Mr. Crowe has been working on this project for the past ten or twelve years, and has employed some of the best engineers in America including Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who has an international reputation. Col. Cooper only recently submitted a proposal to Canada and the United States for developing the enormous water power on the St. Lawrence, at a cost of $200,000,000, which he and his associates agreed to finance. Colonel Cooper, Mr. Crowe states, has offered to develop his south coast water power at Bay D'Espoir, and finance same to the extent of $10,600,000 providing he can furnish a market for the power by establishing pulp and paper or other industries there.

After considerable investigations and negotiations Mr. Crowe has secured and consolidated into one block, about two million acres of timber limits on the South Coast contiguous to this power, from the following companies, Nfld. British Exportation Co., of London, Bay Du Nord Lumber and Pulp Co., Philadelphia, Baine Johnston and Co., St. John's, and the Stewart Syndicate of London. He has had these properties cruised by Norwegian, Canadian, and American forest experts. Sufficient wood is available for a plant, capable of producing 200 tons of newsprint per day, but in view of the large water powers at their disposal, estimated at not less than 150,000 H.P. the Company will erect a mill with a capacity of 500 tons, which is 100 tons more than the Humber proposition, and the whole will be financed without any guarantee whatever from the Government, either now or in the future. This will necessitate a very much larger wood supply than it is possible to furnish on the South Coast and Mr. Crowe has recently secured from Mr. John C. Hepburn of this city, 1500 square miles of what is supposed to be one of the heaviest and most economically operated timber areas at Double Mare Bay, Hamilton Inlet, Labrador, from which he hopes to cut annually 50,000 cords, for delivery to the proposed tide water mill on the South Coast, which would be located at an open port all the year. With the arrangement he is making for the development in White Bay, Mr. Crowe feels that he has fortified his South Coast project, with sufficient raw material and hopes now to make rapid progress towards the consummation of his plans, for the proposed big paper mills.

The advantages of having White Bay as a feeder to the South Coast pulp and paper plant will be the distribution of labour to different parts of the Island and during the next few years, the pulp wood after being prepared in the rossing plants will be shipped to the United States. In the event of any unforseen delay in connection with the big project, arrangements have been made with the Government whereby he may continue the shipment of the product of the rossing plants and saw mills for a number of years, with a view to making the industry in White Bay a permanent one. This settlement at White Bay will be known as Port Randolph, and will have a school, church and other advantages.

In addition to the pulp and paper enterprises, which will only use a portion of the available water power, it is proposed to establish an aluminum plant, and negotiations are now in progress with this end in view. The raw material is got from British Guiana and it is proposed to employ the Canadian Government boats that run regularly to the West Indies to bring up cargoes on their return voyages to Montreal. By this means cheap freights could be secured and Mr. Crowe has great confidence in the project. With abundance of cheap water power available, an open port and every convenience for reaching the markets along the entire Atlantic seaboard as well as Europe the new undertaking should prove a great benefit to the country in general. It is understood that Mr. Crowe has recently interested capitalists in the Gull Pond, Tilt Cove and Little Bay Islands, copper deposits and an announcement regarding this matter will be made as soon as arrangements are finalised. In view of the success that has attended Mr. Crowe's efforts in the past notably the Grand Falls project, it is not too much to expect his present big industrial scheme will confer tremendous benefits on Newfoundland as a whole, and it is hoped that they will materialize, especially as the companies interested are seeking no guarantees whatever from the Government.

"It's Over, Over There," Says Psychologist-Song Writer

Famous Bugle Call Used To Interpret Spirit of the Day

New York City.—Psychologists who predicate human action from observation of humans at play, say that America is due for a long era of peace. They draw this conclusion partly from a study of the songs and games which engross the energetic younger generation just now.

The new peace conference game with its pawns all moving for harmony, which children have substituted for checkers, is an interesting example. So is "Good Night," a waltz built on the bugle theme of "taps." This song sounds the peaceful end of the dance on most ball room floors about "three o'clock in the morning," these days.

Con Conrad, who wrote it, says he's finishing what George Cohan began when he built "Over There" on reveille.

"It's a sort of way of letting the public in on a grand celebration of the end of the war," Mr. Conrad explains. "Using 'taps' to close the dance today seems to emphasize that it's really 'over, over there.'

"I have just returned from two years in Europe where I tried several times to write the song, but the chaotic conditions got under my skin and I simply could not work on a relaxing peaceful tune. But here at home I could immediately sense that for us anyway, it really is 'over.'"

Claims for War Bonus In Canada Settled

WINNIPEG, Man., July 28—Claims against the Manitoba Government Telephone systems for a war bonus promised employes of the service when they enlisted, have been amicably settled. Under the settlement $78,527.19 will be paid, bringing the grand total for war service bonuses to $262,687.04.

The men have agreed to accept not less than 50 per cent. of the total claims in provincial bonds, on the condition that claims below $500 are paid in cash. Several of the claims were considerably reduced, the most important being that of one man who claimed approximately $5,000, which was settled for $3,000.

Yesterday's Proceedings At House of Assembly

Considerable Progress Made on Supply Vote—Minister of Agriculture and Mines Announces Model Farm Will Be Dispensed With.

The House met yesterday afternoon at the usual hour and continued in session until near six o'clock, considerable progress was made, subject to vigorous criticism of certain votes by the Opposition members. The Model Farm, as at present conducted, brought forth vigorous protests from the Opposition benches. The debate thereon was dropped and the vote allowed to pass, when the Hon. Mr. Downey, Minister of Agriculture and Mines, intimated that it was the intention of the Government to discontinue the operation of the Model Farm.

In reply to a question by the member for Ferryland as to who was at present acting Manager of the Railway, the Prime Minister replied Mr. H. J. Russell, at a salary of $300.00 per month, his future salary has not been decided upon. The coal requirements for the railway are purchased from time to time by the management of the Railway, the Government do not issue any special instructions in this regard. Tenders for this year's coal supply have not been called for.

It was decided to purchase Sydney coal this season same as has been done all previous years except last year. As arrangements were made direct between Railway and Coal Company, there was no need of asking tenders.

Coal requirements arranged with the British Empire Steel Corporation —cost six dollars per long ton F.O.B. Sydney. Cost of freight as follows:

Humbermouth and Argentia, $1.40 per long ton.

St. John's, $1.45 per long ton.

Clarenville and Lewisporte, $1.50. per long ton.

In reply to a question of Mr. Walsh re the passing of a Minute of Council for the construction of one or more steamers to be used in the West India Trade, the Prime Minister stated that no Minute of Council had been passed in connection with the proposed service. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries had given notice of a bill to provide means whereby trade with the West Indies would be encouraged and it will come before the House in the regular way in a day or two.

Hon. the Prime Minister took up the estimates of the Constabulary and recalled that at last sitting these were left over pending certain information re the payment to the Inspector General of $1000, which was charged to Pit Prop Account. The Prime Minister tabled a letter which he had received from the Inspector General as follows:

August 6, 1923.

Hon. W. R. Warren, K.C.,
Premier and Minister of Justice.

Sir,—In connection with your request for information as to the services performed by me for which I was paid compensation by the Government, I have the honor to advise you that such compensation was received for Extra and Special Services investigating, reporting, and advising in connection with Relief "The Unemployed" and Labor conditions generally in St. John's, Harbour Grace, Turks Gut, Victoria Village, Bay Roberts, Spaniards Bay, Upper Island Cove, Shears Town, Avondale, Hawks Bay, Bell Island, and other places, for the years 1921 and 1922, and involved a very large amount of work.

During these two years I was in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, who had charge of that work, practically every day, most days twice and some days three and four times, and frequently with the Prime Minister and other members of the Executive, day and night.

My application for compensation was made in the first place to the Prime Minister, who requested me to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to bring the matter before the Government. I was afterwards advised by the latter that he was instructed to pay me. I had no knowledge of, nor was I informed as to which account my compensation was charged up. I do not consider it was my duty, or that it would have been pertinent for me to have enquired; and I persume the matter was duly considered, authority given anl payment made in due course.

I understand an investigation into these matters by an impartial Tribunal, has been promised by the Government, and I can assure you that I shall be quite prepared to justify my application for the special remuneration that was made for the services indicated.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
CHAS. H. HUTCHINGS,
Inspector General Constby.

The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Higgins, objected strenuously to the principle underlying this payment for Extra Services and also a similar payment of $200.00 made to Superintendent O'Neill. The money in his opinion was improperly paid—there was no authority for it, it was a case of public monies being passed over by an unauthorized person, and he went so far as to say that the monies could not legally be retained.

Following a discussion on the usefulness of the Model Farm, in which the Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Higgins and Mr. Wodford, took part, the Prime Minister said the question of retaining the vote in the estimates had already been considered by the Government, and it had been decided to drop it. Further objections were raise to the continuance of the Agricultural Commissioners, on the ground that the persons holding the jobs were not qualified, and secondly, that there was no work for them to perform. Mr. Downey, who has held a Commissionership for a number of years, pointed out that there was abundant work to be done. The Prime Minister said he did not consider it advisable to interfere with the working of the Department to the extent of discontinuing the services of the Commissioners, until he was convinced that their services were unnecessary. He felt that the vote should stand for this year.

While on the Public Works Dept. vote, Mr. Higgins repeated his request for detailed information under No. 2. relief account. He was told the information would be ready to-morrow. The vote stood over until the information was supplied.

Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Walsh supported by Mr. Howco, appealed for better Ferry Service in the district of Placentia and St. Mary's. The members were told by the Prime Minister, to consult with the Minister of Public Works when their requests would be given every reasonable consideration.

The members for Ferryland, Messrs Cashin and Moore, renewed their demand that the Government telegraph office recently installed at Ferryland be discontinued and that the office be transferred to St. Shott's. There is already an Anglo Office at Ferryland. It was pointed out that the people did not want the office. The necessity for telegraphic, or telephone connection with St. Shott's was admitted by all. The Minister of Posts and Telegraphs intimated that he had made enquiry and was satisfied that the people of Ferryland did not want the extra telegraph office, and he saw no valid reason for forcing it upon them at considerable expense to the department. In the interest of the public service he would have the amount required to maintain the office at St. Shott's and Peter's River, where telephone communication would be established, just as soon as the poles could be got on the ground.

Customs vote for the purchase of liquor for the Controllers Department was reduced by $236.000.00. Asked how this could be done when a sale valued at $480.000.00 was looked for by the budget the Minister replied that there was an immense stock on hand and new liquor would be purchased from the sales of what was now in stock and supplied the dept. as reqired. The Customs duties would be collected from time to time as the goods were delivered.

Mr. Higgins at this juncture asked the Prime Minister what progress he had made with regard to a Commission of inquiry into recent happenings?

The Prime Minister replied he was meeting with great difficulty in getting the right kind of men to act. If within the next few days he could not get the Commissioners other steps would be taken.

Mr. Higgins asked if he proposed to start the enquiry before the House closed to which the Prime Minister replied in the affirmative. The Prime Minister in reply to a further question stated Mr. Berteau was still acting Liquor Controller. Mr. Meaney was suspended, and that this department would be the first to be enquired into when the Commission of Enquiry began its work.

While the note for the salaries of the Military Pensions Board was being considered, Mr. Peter Cashin objected to the presence of Dr. Mosdell on that board, claiming that appointment should go to a returned soldier. The Prime Minister, in reply, stated it had been deemed advisable by past Governments to have a civilan on the Board. Dr. Mosdell succeeded the late Mr. Clift. Dr. Parsons is the soldier representatives and Chairman of the Board.

The Shipping Department of $50,000 was next considered. Mr. Moore wanted to know if there still existed a ministry of shipping. Mr. Cave, in explanation, said we still had the Coastal boats running.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN objected to the vote going through on the grounds that the House had nothing before it in the way of records to show how we stand financially in respect to that department. There is no information in the Auditor-General's report that can help in the matter. Sir Michael asked how many boats the Department of Shipping operated. He was promised the statement asked for by to-morrow.

MR. WALSH spoke of the great injustice being done a large section of his constituency when the whole of St. Mary's Bay and From Trepassey to Placentia was without service of any kind. He asked a few days ago when this would be rectified and was put off with the answer that it would be when traffic warranted. Such a reply might satisfy the man who made it, but it seemed out of place when it is considered that that district was bearing its share of railroad expenses—a railroad it had no direct interest in. He asked that the vote stand over.

MR. SULLIVAN supported Mr. Walsh and expressed the hope that before the House closes some provision would be made for the supplying of a steamer to that part of the district.

MR. HIGGINS asked the Prime Minister to consider the advisability of having Departmental Heads take recommendations from elected representatives with regard to district expenditures rather than from persons who were not responsible to the House.

SIR M. P. CASHIN thought there should be somebody with a seat in the House responsible for the operation of the Railway as this was now one of the most important departments of the Government. The system was now in charge of a young man who up to a year or so ago was a mere clerk. There was nobody of any consequence or any weight responsible for the operation of the road.

In his opinion there should be a commission of some sort responsible to the House for the management and operation of the railway until such time as the Government had come to some definite agreement for the future operation of the railway.

The PRIME MINISTER in reply said he recognized the force of Sir Michael Cashin's observations, but the magnitude of the task in arriving at a solution of the present difficulties must be apparent to all. He felt that ample time should be taken in formulating plans for the future operation of the railway. The Government, under recent legislation took over the railway on July 1st. In the meantime Mr. Russell had been appointed Acting General Manager. Although a young man, he was regarded as quite capable and efficient. Under his management everything was going along well. As a young Newfoundlander, he felt Mr. Russell should be given a chance to make good. In the past the Government had been assailed for bringing outsiders in to assist in railway management. He (the Prime Minister) hesitated very much to rush at some proposition which would bind the Government only to find later that it had not been the best one. He hoped to open the House again in February next, by which time it may be possible to conclude an agreement with some responsible outside parties to take over and operate the road under a subsidy which we would know in advance.

The following bills were then put through their second reading when the House adjourned till 4 p.m. today.

Second Reading of Bill entieled "An Act to Amend 12 and 13 Geo. V. Cap. 17, entitled "An Act for the Encouragement of Shipbuilding."

Second Reading of Bill entitled "An Act respecting certain Rights, Privileges and Franchises connected with the supply of Electric Light and Power to St. John's for Street Railway and other purposes."

The House then adjourned until this afternoon at 4 p.m.

A collie dog is reported to have saved the life of a London (Ont.) girl, while accompanying the child to a nearby store. The girl stopped on the railroad tracks in the path of a flier. Realizing the child's peril, the dog threw himself against her with sufficient impact to knock her clear of danger, and was cut to pieces by the train before he could regain safety. The little one's mother had tried to discourage the dog from going when the daughter started on her errand.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I have two things to write about to-day, and I hardly know which to use first. They are both of tremendour interest and value, and I suppose the more important of the two should come first. I can't decide, so I close my eyes and place my hand at random on one of the subjects. It turns out to be a passage from a speech delivered by United States Senator William E. Borah. Senator Borah is one of the leading statesmen in that great nation of a hundred million people. He is one of the senators who is in the running to be candidate for President.

* * * * *

"The great problem which concerns the American farmer now is," Senator Borah declares, "that of finding a market for his products, and of scientifically and in a business-like way, marketing.

"MARKETING is the work of practical EXPERTS—those who have the time and the MEANS and the ABILITY to study and master the markets.

"You CANNOT market without knowing what the market demand is, what amount the market will absorb—in other words, the TIME and the PLACE for selling.

"While the farmer is an individualist and will remain an individualist as a producer, nevertheless MARKETING is a GROUP problem.

"The farmer must find some way in which he can take the crops from individual production thru the group problem, such as financing and marketing.

"This requires expert KNOWLEDGE and EXPERT men."

* * * * *

Now, I'll tell you what I'd like you to do: read that passage again, aloud; only, say fishermen instead of farmer. Then, when you have done that, cut the passage from the paper and save it to read some other time. I'd like to print that paragraph on slips of paper and distribute them in thousands to the people of this country.

* * * * *

Every fisherman knows that the business of catching fish is a business that must be carried on by individuals, or at the most by small numbers of men. Fishing, or production of a crude nature, such as fishing is, as distinct from production in factories, is an individual matter.

The day probably will come when the business of catching fish in this country will be carried likt it is done in some other countries already—namely, done by steam trawler on a large scale. I think myself that fish-catching will some day be done on a large scale in Newfoundland.

But that is the future, and does not concern the fisherman living to-day.

* * * * *

The CATCHING of fish is therefore an individual matter—something to be done by individuals.

But the MARKETING of fish is a totally different thing. The individual fisherman can catch fish, but he cannot market it. He cannot take it across the Atlantic to Spain, Portugal, Italy and Greece, and down to Brazil and the West Indies.

Fish has to be marketed in large quantities, and that, naturally, excludes the individual fisherman as a marketer. What happens now, of course, as everybody knows, is that the business of marketing the fish has been split up into several dozen parts —several dozen men or firms handling the marketing of the total catch.

* * * * *

But they all act as individuals! They are not one group. They are twenty or thirty or forty groups. And each little group does its best to market its own fish. Good idea, eh? Yes, if they didn't cut each other's throats in doing it!

If each of these groups would set about marketing its own quantity of fisht in an orderly, sane manner without cutting into the others, everything would be fine and splendid.

But they don't, and they CAN'T.

* * * *

Each little group, or firm, is interested only in its own fish. Each little group wants to get rid of its own fish as quickly as humanly possible. That, naturally, throws all of them into direct competition against each other. The price drops and drops.

These thirty or forty groups have not got the interest of the whole number of them at heart—each group has only its own interest at heart. That is why, under present arrangements, it is quite impossible for them to do anything but compete and cause the price to fall and fall and fall.

* * * *

The remedy?

There is only one remedy: they must get together, organize, act as one group, market the total catch of fish as one lot instead of thirty or forty They must COOPERATE.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, TUESDAY, AUGUST 7th, 1923.

THE RAILWAY

There will be general agreement with the Prime Minister in his statement in the House yesterday afternoon that the railway settlement is not a matter that can be dealt with in a day. Hon. Mr. Warren and his cabinet find themselves confronted with a number of difficult problems, not the least of which is the satisfactory disposition of the railway service and its subsidaries. So far the new Prime Minister has had little time to give to this phase of the general situation as he found it on assuming office, but that he and his associates will strive to safeguard the Colony's interests in their dealing with it there is not the slightest doubt. As the Prime Minister pointed out yesterday, the system is being operated with as great efficiency and with as satisfactory results as it could be under any other temporary arrangement and Mr. H. J. Russell, who is the acting general manager, is justifying the confidence that has been placed in him.

Although Sir Michael Cashin deprecated the placing of such a responsibility on the shoulders of a young man and a Newfoundlander, we think the country will agree with Premier Warren when he says that it is preferable to have a young Newfoundlander who is thoroughly capable in the position than to bring in an outsider who could do no better than Mr. Russell and who might do very much worse.

Whether or not the proposition to vest the control of the railway in a commission will meet with general approval, it is hard to say. Such a commission may be helpful or it may not. One thing is certain, no local commission, composed of members of the House of Assembly can be expected to give any extensive assistance in the actual operation of the service. There can be little improvement by this means on the present arrangement, no matter how unrestricted the commission may be. In any event the Prime Minister will have the support of all right-thinking people in refusing to commit the country to a definite policy with regard to the railway at this stage and, as, according to the Prime Minister's intimation, the House will be meeting again in February, it is better that any definite plans for the future should be left over till then, whether it be decided to continue in the meantime as at present or to place the affairs of the railway in the hands of a commission. Who knows but that before the House next meets the efforts of the Prime Minister to secure outside contractors to take over and operate the system will have been successful. There is no denying the fact that with the present industrial developments in the interior and the consequent growing necessity for inland transportation facilities, the railway will be a much more attractive proposition in the future from the contractor's viewpoint than it has ever been in the past.

The Employment Problem

On Saturday the Advocate expressed the opinion that fishermen should not leave the fishery just at this period of the season, in any large numbers, as there would be great difficulty in procuring work.

It would be very unwise to incur the risk of no employment when continuance of the fisheries would likely mean, even in the worst cases, the securing of a few quintals of fish, which would be better than nothing.

Our remarks have been borne out by messages received by the Colonial Secretary's office from the employment agent of the Armstrong-Whitworth Company advising of the great difficulty of finding work for men who are arriving at the works by every train and indicating the impossibility of providing for further men who thus arrive. It was just such conditions as these against which this paper issued a warning some time ago. The discontinuance of the arrangement by which employment was to be procured through the employment agent and district members, has resulted in a situation most troublesome to the contractors and very hazardous to those seeking work. Under such an arrangement the most deserving men from the sections suffering worst from the short fishery, would have been looked after, and a more equitable distribution of employment ensured.

Now, it is little short of chaos, there being no restraint, and no protection either to the company or to men seeking work. What remedy can be applied it is difficult to say, but it should be somebody's business to consider future developments in this respect. If numbers are now arriving at the Humber works to whom employment cannot be supplied, what will happen when the fishery ends of itself? All of which leads to the question asked some time ago: Is the best possible being done to employ further numbers of men on various possible activities on the Humber?

Too much importance cannot be attached to the problem of employing every man possible in every industry available during the coming months.

OUTPORT NURSING

A very laudable work is that which is being carried out under the supervision of Lady Allardyce in conjunction with the Outport Nursing Committee.

This committee was formed to place nurses chiefly in sections of the country where there are no doctors or when occasion required, where they could work in co-operation with a doctor.

There can be no doubt of the necessity of having trained nurses in many such places throughout the country. Some places cannot afford a doctor. Other places are so far removed from a doctor's station as to deprive them completely of a doctor's service at any time.

The work of nurses that have been and may be placed in some settlements will be of great value in times of accident, fevers or contagious diseases as well as a medium for early observation and perhaps prevention of tuberculosis or any other diseases, that would otherwise become incurable.

For months past every hospital in the city has been crowded and numerous cases have been obliged to wait many days before they could possibly be admitted. Many of these cases come here too late for help and many may not have required to come, had nursing facilities been available at or near their home settlements.

The outport nursing scheme was first started by Lady Harris, and we learn from the Committee, up to the present nurses have been employed at Rose Blanche, Hodge's Cove, Upper Island Cove, Hant's Hr., Fortune Bay, Joe Batt's Arm and Daniel's Hr. For the most part, they are English nurses, holding certificates for general nursing and maternity work. Their expenses, which will be $900 a year, and the cost of supplies will be defrayed by funds collected, the Government, we understand, giving 25 per cent. of the local collections as an encouragement for this commendable work.

While the scope of the work will be more or less limited for a while, we feel too much cannot be said of the efforts of Lady Allardyce in connection with this scheme, and we bespeak the wholehearted co-operation of the communities interested.

The Humber Bonds

London papers, having reference to the issue of the 5½ per cent. B. Debenture Stock of the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, and also to the Government debenture issue made in connection with the railway settlement, have been received.

It will be interesting to know that these papers confirm the information, already published, that the Newfoundland issues were greatly oversubscribed within the short space of an hour and, moreover, that they were much more favourably received on the market than even the British guaranteed issue.

This fact does not indicate a lack of faith in either this country or in the Humber Development project. Surely, when outside financiers evidence such assurance in our financial and industrial stability, we in this country, are not justified in viewing the future with darkened eyes.

Postal receipts of the United States are universally regarded as a correct business indicator. For the fiscal year ended June 30 the receipts show an increase of 12.16 per cent, the largest increase in the history of the postal service with the exception of the war year of 1918. The total postal revenue for the year, based on the six months' showing, is estimated at $533,000,000, compared with $484,893,000 for the previous fiscal year, until now the highest record.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

Girl's Romantic Journey To New York.

DILLUSIONMENT.

(Daily Mail Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Sunday.

The romance of a pretty 19-year-old English girl, Miss Maude Reeves, of 118, Roslyn-road, Tottenham, who came here recently to marry a rich grocer named Harris, has had an unexpected ending.

When the prospective bridegroom came to Ellis Island to claim her the girl, according to the immigration authorities, shrank back in dismay, exclaiming, "Oh, he is not at all the man I have loved. His picture showed him to be handsome. He is twice the age I fancied him. It would be a mockery for me to marry him; we should both be unhappy."

She turned pleadingly to the officials, saying, "Send me back to my mother. Deport me to England. It has all been a dream, and the dream is over."

Before the Board of Inquiry Harris wept, begged the girl to relent, and described the fine home that he had purchased for her on Long Island, near New York. She remained adamant, however, and returned him the diamond ring that he had sent her, receiving in exchange her own photograph.

The immigration official then wrote on the records the simple statement, "Excluded, declined to appeal," and Miss Reeves was escorted to the White Star liner Majestic.

MOTHER'S DELIGHT

Mr. and Mrs. Reeves had not heard that their daughter was coming home until a Daily Mail reporter told them the news last night. They expressed the greatest delight.

"After my daughter had left," said Mrs. Reeves, "I felt I wanted her back, and the American Consulate sent a message for me to the British Consul in New York, asking him to ask my daughter to return.

"Mr. Harris fell in love with her photograph and wrote about eight or nine letters a week for a year. He has behaved very well, and I feel sure he would have made my daughter a good husband."

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

ALCOHOL USES DECREASING.

American consumers of alcohol have had 250,000,000 gallons less during the last three years of national prohibition, Commissioner Haynes says, than they had in the previous three pre-Volstead years.

In statistical demonstration of how the sponge of national prohibition has mopped up liquor supplies, Commissioner Haynes set forth that total withdrawals of alcohol, whiskey and other spirits during three years of prohibition aggregated only 82,503,164 gallons compared with 338,064,418 gallons during the three preceding years. He also cited figures to show how liquor supplies had been dried up and to determine the success of "preventive prohibition enforcement" by stopping the sources of alcoholic beverages.

The greatest decrease in withdrawals, according to Commissioner Haynes' figures, was in whiskey, gin and brandy, which comprised about 65 per cent. of withdrawals in pre-prohibition days. About 72 per cent. of withdrawals since prohibition, he said, have been of alcohol, high wines and cologne spirits, largely used for industrial purposes. During the last ten months records of liquor withdrawals show only a third as much taken out as those of the preceding year and withdrawals in the first four months of 1923 were less than half of those of the same period of 1922, totaling respectively 3,958,216 and 3,657,734 gallons.

NORTHERN IRELAND PASSES DRY LAW.

The intoxicating liquor bill for Northern Ireland, which comprises Belfast and the six northern counties of Ireland, was passed in June, 1923, and went into effect on Sunday, June 15, 1923. This law provides for Sunday closing of liquor shops, the abolition to be paid on a five year basis, restrictions on the sale of methylated spirits, the strengthening of the prohibition of illicit distillation, the raising of the age limit, the abolition of the "bona fide traveller" privilege and the curtailing of liquor hawking. The organized temperance forces of Northern Ireland are pressing for a local option law.

JAPAN DRINKING BEER

According to an Associated Press dispatch carrying a Tokyo dateline, beer is rapidly displacing sake as the national drink of Japan. Ten years ago 21,288 koku of beer were brewed. Last year the consumption was 675,028 koku. Sake is still used on ceremonial occasions but beer is the more popular beverage.

INSANITY SINCE THE WAR

The number of cases of the alcoholic insane has been doubling and trebling in Germany since the war. According to the February number of the Press Circular issued by the Deutscher Verein gegen den Alokolismus, edited by Dr. Flaig, the alcoholic insane in Berlin in 1921 were nearly double the number in 1917. The figures run, 216 (1917) 227, 406, 334 and 505. In Prussia the number doubled from 1918 to 1920, in Baden and Munch it trebled.

Probably some of the increase is due to after effects of the war, and as large numbers of American soldiers are also suffering from the same effect, it would not be strange to see a similar increase here if alcoholic liquors were as easily accessible as they were before the war, or as they are in Germany.

On the contrary, however, the proportion of alcoholic insance to total insane, where official figures have been collected, as in Massachusetts, for instance, has averaged far less since prohibition than before. From 1912 to 1918 it was 10.35; for 1920-21 only 4.24. Figures for 1922 are not yet available.

Total insanity rates for first admissions to care in Massachusetts, measured by the ratio of estimated population, also decreased after prohibition to a point in 1920 lower than at any time since 1910, or than the average for 1905 to 1910.

Prohibition has helped savings in Ohio. The total assets of building and loan associations in 12 counties, none of them except Franklin of heavy population, are $130,000,000. The associations in those 12 counties made a gain of 19 per cent. in assets in 12 months. Gains made in assets and loans for the year are the greatest in the history of building and loan companies.

NEW YORK COLOSCOPES

By MARY MARGARET McBRIDE

Mary Margaret McBride

New York City.—A deer that he fried whole in an ordinary saucepan, earthworms that came out of their holes and whistled tunefully in two keys, fish that climbed trees and monkeys that were trained to wake sleepers in time for breakfast — these are a few of the lively curiosities that handsome Carveth Wells, English explorer, encountered in his recent wanderings through Malaysian jungles. Furthermore, leading scientists declare he's not nature faking and vouch for the strange creatures he describes. Mr. Wells is in New York now and insists subways and skyscrapers are quite soothing after the monkeys, et al. He says crocodiles are his favorite animals. Also, that there is a peculiar affinity between crocodiles and the natives of Malaysia. The crocodiles like to eat the natives and the natives who escape this fate kill the crocodile for the sake of certain indigestible bangles and bracelets which lie in the beast's stomach after the victim is digested. Crocodiles are said to swallow a stone after each native, perhaps to keep count of their calories!

Since Volstead became a household word, an era of substitution has set in. People try to put a kick in everything to make up for the one kick that, technically speaking, at least, seems to be gone forever. And so has arrived the "intoxicating song." Students of humanity profess to have discovered that songs like "Don't We Carry On" tempoed to the nth degree of jazzification produce a stimulation that the old time cocktail never equaled, or at any rate excelled. Along Tin Pan Alley they say the vogue for the new peptant is just starting.

New York kids have a new game—imported, too, and English and everything. But swanky as it is, it's most popular over on the unswanky East Side, where there are plenty of kids and beards, both essential for the playing. The game is called "Beaver" and revolves around men with whiskers. When one is discovered the ambushed players run out and surround him, yelling "Beaver," also giggling. The man nearly always gets mad, especially if he has a red beard, which makes him a King Beaver and doubly valuable. It is predicted that an irate Beaver some day, like the prophet of old, will summon a select group of hungry bears to devour his tormenters.

In this dance-mad city where one endurance marathon ends only so that another can begin, a new kind of plutocrat has sprung up between jazzes, as it were. This is the immaculately-garbed, suave-mannered orchestra leader, the same who in a less excitable era was neither so immaculate nor so suave, knowing as he did then, more of the downs than the ups of life. Now as Prime Minister to King Jazz, he swings nonchalantly through the rich doors of the Ritz for his costly luncheon, and after he has languidly consumed caviare and lobster, drifts in a Rolls-Royce back to a palatial office suite. For he, be it known, has incorporated jazz. As for instance, blond, good-looking Frank Silver, whose name on an orchestra is like sterling on a spoon and whose baton calls forth the shimmiest shimmy strains in the city. So loud has been the call for Silver-brand music, that the popular director has twenty orchestras in various parts of the country playing Silver orchestrations of the latest hits.

Old-fashioned Manhattan beaux carried courting canes. These were hollow, with a speaking tube at one end and a listening knob at the other. Girls were well chaperoned then and the courting canes furnished whispering galleries for surreptitious communication. Modern couples have revived the old custom, but at each end of the latter day cane there's a stopper, and the middle—well, the middle's only hollow when the courting couple's favorite bootlegger is a week-end guest of the Volstead enforcement agents.

Spring has come to Fifth Avenue. The habitues know it by many signs, but first of all, by the out-door petters i.e., bus-riders in couples who have had their annual turn to thoughts of love. Then there are the hummers, generally in onesomes, sometimes a girl, oftener a man. These stroll along in the sunlight, gaze wistfully into the flower shops, think of home and chant mournfully Broadway's favorite back-to-the-farm songs—"Swinging Down the Lane" and "Saw Mill River Road." Further up the avenue, spring brings out incongruous window boxes in gorgeous homes—window boxes just like mother has in Paris, Missouri, filled with scrubby geraniums, petunias and the like, but tended by a butler or two butlers. Why the big houses have such homely adornment is a mystery, unless the butlers like to play with them. For everybody knows that petunias and geraniums are flowers that have to be loved into growing.

A Magnificent Mormon Temple to be Dedicated on August 19th

CARDSTON, Alta., July 28—(By Canadian Press)—Sunday, August 19 is a day which all Mormons in Canada and the United States will observe with special interest. On that date the beautiful temple at Cardston of the Church of Jesus Christ, Latter Day Saints, will be formally dedicated. Thereafter only Mormons in good standing in their church will be allowed the privileges of entering its portals.

For seven years the temple has been under construction, and more than one million dollars has been spent. From the forests of Africa precious woods have been brought, to be used in the construction and decoration of the rooms of the temple. Famous painters have expended their skillful efforts in producing paintings to depict the history of the world from the dawn of creation down to the present day, picturing also the glorious hereafter in which all Mormons believe. The finest granite in the Rocky Mountains has been procured for the outer walls of the building; pure gold worth thousands of dollars has been used in its interior decoration, and the finest of draperies and carpets.

The temple rises high in the air like the turreted peak of one of the distant Rockies, commanding a view from its roof-garden for many miles in every direction. The traveller approaching from the plains, sees it in the distance as a diamond in a field of emerald green, basking in the early rising sun.

For the last few years, particularly this summer, the temple has been the centre of attraction to tourists passing through Southern Alberta. It is believed that approximately 20,000 tourists have visited it since construction commenced. It will be closed to visitors August 15, and following August 19 will be open only to those in good standing in the church for marriage, baptism and other ceremonials.

One of the most surprising things about the interior of the temple is that it has no large auditorium as would be expected by non-members of the church. This is explained in the fact that it will be used only on week days, and there will probably be not more than 50 persons in it at one time.

On entering the edifice, the first room which is shown to the visitor is one where prayer services are held, a room large enough to accommodate nearly 100 people. The visitor is next taken to the dressing room, where all members of the church wishing to observe various sacraments must change to temple robes. Next is the baptismal room, where the huge font of marble is supported on the shoulders of 12 carved oxen, life size. This font alone cost $70,000. Decorations of this room, when illuminated are specially beautiful, various carved woods, with pure gold, ending an effort well in keeping with the purpose of the apartment.

There is a series of rooms depicting various stages in the world's history from creation down to the present age. The creation room is decorated with oak inlaid by 27 kinds of other woods. Oil paintings on the walls give a conception of conditions before the world was created. The six days spent in the creation of the universe are described in paintings on which Prof. L. C. Stewart, of New York, spent almost three years.

The garden of Eden room comes next, in which pictures on the wall give us nearly as possible the perfection of vegetable and animal life that was attained in that stage of man's history. L. G. Richards painted the pictures, spending nearly two years on his efforts. The room is handsomely decorated in bird's eye maple.

Depicting a conception of conditions in the world after the fall of man, the next room shows how the animals turned against each other, of how the world became selfish, and of how the ideal conditions found in the first state of man disappeared. Walnut is the basic wood in the decoration of the room, the pictures for which were painted by Prof. Edwin James.

As each room is visited the visitor is impressed with the fact that the decoration become richer. The tapestries and the woods used, are more beautiful, and more expensive, until there is reached the larger room describing the terrestial kingdom of the life after death.

There are three sealing rooms, where ceremonies for the dead and the living may be observed. Marriages take place in the centre room which is finished in mahogany and cherry from South Africa. The other rooms are for praying for the souls of the dead and are finished in sombre walnut.

Years ago, back in 1887, when the Mormons first came to Canada and made their homes on the wilds, deserted plains of Southwestern Alberta, such a building in which the sacraments of the church could be observed fittingly was dreamed of as a possibility of the future years, but those Mormons knew that it would take many years of hardship and toil before such a dream could find fulfilment. The history of the Mormons in Alberta is that of pioneers the world over. Coming to this strange land, they settled on a few sections in the neighbourhood of whit is now the thriving town of Cardston, and there tilled the soil for a living.

As the years passed they have branched out, until several Mormon settlements from Cardston are situated as far north as Stirling. Many of the sons of the earlier settlers remained on the land, veritably making what was once a desert land bloom into one of the most prosperous regions in Western Canada, and where to-day the finest wheat in the world is raised. Many of the sons wandered to the cities, learned the professions, and came back to settle down among their own people again. The Mormons, in spite of the fact that they are among the most deeply religious people in existence, take a keen enjoyment out of life. They are highly cultured for the most part sent their children to the institutions of higher education, and take a keen interest in the arts, particularly music. They are embued with the true hospitality of the west, and warmly welcome any strangers who come their way.

The Mormon church in Alberta is divided into a number of districts, called stakes. The principal one is the Cardston stake, over which President J. E. Wood presides. The Mormons have no regular Minister or Priests, as the other Christian churches know them. President Wood receives no remuneration for holding his office, neither do any of the other officers in the church. Their positions are gratuitous and they are elected by the members of the church. Missionaries sent out by the church to other parts of Canada, the United States and the whole world, do so at their own expense, and when they can no longer keep themselves at their missions, they are recalled and resume their regular ocupations in life. In spite of the fact that they have to make their own way, many young Mormons volunteer each year to go out into the world and teach the gospel of the Mormon church. At present the church has 2,200 missionaries.

Members of the Mormon church adhere strictly to the principal of tithing. No collection is taken up among members of the church at services, but every month a Mormon must give one tenth of his incom to the church, and in this way the enormous sum to build the temple was obtained.

Advice To The Married

HOW TO AVOID CHANCES OF DIVORCE.

A FRENCH CODE

PARIS, Tuesday.

Statistics issued by the Ministry of Justice throw interesting light on the question of divorce in France.

Although the numbers of divorces have been decreasing the last two years, they had doubled themselves from 1923 to 1920.

Divorces occur most frequently among childless couples.

The reason for divorce is in 76 per cent of the cases cruelty and the remaining number adultery.

The husband is guilty in three cases to the wife's five.

The petition is filed in five cases by the wife to the husband's four.

Divorce occurs in twenty cases to a thousand among merchants, twelve to the thousand among manual workers, and among agriculturists three to the thousand.

Thirty-three per cent of the divorces are sought by couples who have been married between one year and five, 30 per cent. between ten years and twenty.

Divorces occur most frequently in large towns.

Be Patient.

On the strength of these facts, advice to married couples is tabulated by a leading journal as follows:

Live in the country;
Work on the land;
Have children; and
Be patient; the longer you are married the less chance of divorce (only one case in a thousand is recorded of persons married forty years.))

No Nonsense About Premier Baldwin

STRIKING TRIBUTE BY GENERAL SMUTS.

(Pall Mall Gazette.)

Speaking at the opening of the South African Party Congress (says Reuter) General Smuts referred to the present troubles in Europe.

He declared that Europeans knew how to make war, but, unlike South Africans, they did not know how to make peace.

"If Europe does not recover," he declared, "and those great markets which are peculiarly English markets do not recover, a dreadful situation will arise for Great Britain, with her population of thirty-five millions, on that ground.

Profound Appreciation.

"I profoundly appreciate Mr. Baldwin's attitude in this matter."

The Premier proceeded to pay a remarkable tribute to Mr. Baldwin describing him as a "simple, sincere, and straight English gentleman, with no nonsense about him."

He also praised the British Premier's part in the settlement of the British debt to America.

General Smuts affirmed his intention of fighting on behalf of South Africa the battle of peace at the coming Imperial Conference.

Will Russia Become the World's Iron Master?

By T. R. YBARRA.

MOSCOW, via Berlin.

One morning I climbed the hill to the Moscow Foreign Office and made inquiries of an official there about Lenine's state of health. The official replied:

"Have you heard about The Kursk Anomaly?"

I asked another for help in arranging to get me an interview with one of the Soviet leaders. He replied:

"Have you heard about the Kursk Anomaly?"

I asked another what I ought to do in order to get a permit for visiting the Kremlin. He replied:

"Have you heard about the Kursk Anomaly?"

"No!" I cried in desperation. "Now, as to that Kremlin permit. Must I"—

It was useless. He gave a glad cry, backed me into a corner, and for an hour filled me with information about The Kursk Anomaly. At the end of that hour I felt myself to be one of the world's leading authorities to give a series of lectures when I got back to the United States, with motion pictures and everything on The Kursk Anomaly.

The Kursk Anomaly isn't a diplodocus or a dinosaur or any other prehistoric monster dug up for the delectation of scientists. It isn't a dwarf or a wild man or a brand-new Russian edition of the Siamese Twins destined to astonish visitors to circus sideshows. Not at all. It is something very serious and important, indeed, which—many in Soviet Russia insist—may transform Russia from a predominantly agricultural country, with practically no manufactures whatever, into one of the greatest manufacturing countries in the world.

The Kursk Anomaly is the name given to the recent discovery of huge iron ore deposits near Schigry, in the province of Kursk, Central Russia. It is so called because the discovery was made owing to the fact that the magnetic needs showed an anomaly—i.e., deviation from normal—in those parts which led scientists to believe that there were iron ore deposits in the neighborhood. Investigations were made, off and on, ever since the "70s, but only recently were they pushed to a successful conclusion.

Last April it was announced that borings made at the place where the magnetic anomaly was greatest had not only proved conclusively the presence of iron ore, but that there was good reason to believe that the Kursk deposits were the largest in the entire world. Scientists who made the investigation declare that the vein discovered at Schigry may be 250 miles long and two miles wide and contain 40,000,000,000 tons of ore, as against 25,000,000,000 tons known to exist in the rest of the world.

In addition, Schigry is only 200 miles from the Donetz coke and coal basin, so that the problem of smelting can be easily solved. The province of Kursk, moreover, is centrally located, easily accessible from the rest of Russia and already provided with railways.

No wonder there is excitement in Soviet Russia! No wonder the men who made the report about the Kursk iron ore deposits have been awarded the Red Banner of Labor and made honorary members of the Moscow Soviet, a very rare honor, indeed.

If the sanguine expectations of the Russian investigators are realized even only in part the consequences to Russia of the Kursk anomaly will be tremendous.

At present, they point out, a large percentage of the known supply of iron ore in the world is in practically inaccessible regions—Brazil, for instance. The two biggest deposits are in Lorraine and the United States; together these two account, they say for about 10,600,000,000 tons of the world's total supply of 25,000,000,000 tons, of which the United States has about 5,000,000,000 and Lorraine 5,600,000,000. It has been estimated by scientists that the iron ore deposits considered workable today will last another 60 years, if the consumption of iron ore in the world increases at the present rate. But highly industrialized countries like Great Britain and Germany will have exhausted their deposits of ore long before this; in fact, both of them are even now importing huge amounts of it from Sweden and Spain.

It is of interest to note that the Russians who are calling attention to the marvelous nature of the Kursk iron ore discovery, in their endeavours to show what a record-breaking thing it is, overestimate rather than otherwise the known world supply of iron ore—in other words, they tend to lessen the value of the Kursk discovery, whereas, one might suppose, their enthusiasm might lead them rather to magnify it.

As has been stated, they put the possible total supply of ore in the Kursk vein at 40,000,000,000 tons, as against a hitherto known supply in the entire world of 25,000,000,000 tons, which would give Kursk Province a total of 160 per cent. of the total known world supply as hitherto estimated. Now, available statistics of a trustworthy nature estimate the world supply at 22,375,000,000 tons, so that if there are in reality 40,000,000,000 tons available in Kursk Province the total supply of iron ore there would equal not 160 per cent. but 178 per cent. of the total world supply as hitherto estimated.

Until now Russia has ranked last among the iron-producing nations. The Kursk discovery may make her first. Hitherto the only Russian deposit workable in conjunction with coke smelting was one about 300 miles from the Donetz coke basin.

The other main Russian iron ore deposits in the Ural Mountains, were remote from coke deposits, and consequently the smelting of their ores had to be done by means of charcoal. The total amount of iron obtained in Russia, both from the first-named deposits and those in the Ural region, came to about 1,000,000,000 tons, half of which was brought from the Ural. The enormous Kursk ore deposits, as has been stated, are situated only 200 miles from the Donetz coke basin, or 100 miles nearer than the only deposit discovered up to now in Russia whose ones could be smelted by means of coke.

An interesting point about the "Kursk anomaly" which is pointed out constantly by those enthusiastically singing its praises nowadays in Moscow is that Professor Lazareff, the man who made the report last April upon which all their enthusiasm is based, was at first skeptical about the existence of iron ore around Schigry. He was inclined rather to attribute the magnetic anomaly noticeable thereabouts to other causes. The anomaly was so great, he declared, that it could hardly be caused by the presence of iron ore, since the latter would have to be present in unprecedentedly vast quantities to cause such a magnetic variation. Now, however, he has been entirely converted.

The first serious investigation of the Kursk anomaly was made in 1872 by Russian scientists. After that the matter was neglected until 1897, when the University of Moscow sent an expedition to the province of Kursk under the leadership of Professor Leyst, a German. For years Leyst worked every summer around Schigry, making constant observations and drawing up plans.

Finally, in the summer of 1918, less than a year after the initiation of the Soviet regime in Russia, Leyst made a report to the Russian Academy of Science and turned over to it the plans which he had drawn up. These, however, though they showed the borings and other tests made in accordance with the anomaly observed, did not show the exact places where Leyst's long series of investigations had been conducted.

After making his report Professor Leyst went to Germany and soon after died there. His plans and papers were offered in 1919 by his executors to the Russian Soviet Government for 10,000,000 Swedish crowns (over $2,500,000). The Soviet Government, through the well-known leader Krassin, prominent in so many other negotiations, made an offer of 300,000 gold rubles (about $150,000) for the Leyst papers. This offer was refused by the German executors.

The refusal set Krassin thinking. "If these people ask millions and refuse $150,000 in hard cash for those papers," he said to himself, "they must consider the papers in their possession to be of real value."

So Krassin called on some Russian professors to make an investigation in the region where Leyst had spent so many summers. In order to hasten it forward he took a drastic step. At that time he was Quartermaster-General of Soviet Russia, and, as he found great difficulty in getting an appropriation for the Kursk investigation, he turned over to the professors, charged with making it, some funds from the Quartermaster-General's Department, trusting to clear the matter up later on.

Shortly after, he got Lenine himself interested in the investigation, and there was no further trouble about funds for the preliminary work. A special body of experts was appointed to push forward the investigations, with the title of Special Committee for the Kursk Magnetic Anomaly. Yielding to the mania prevalent in present-day Russia for abbreviating such titles, the Russians have dubbed this committee OKKMA, a word made up from the first letters of the five Russian words forming the official appellation of the committee. Among its members were Professor Lazareff and several practical mining engineers.

Soon after they had begun work General Denikine made his attempt to overthrow the Soviet Government, and the Province of Kursk became the scene of hostility between his army and the Reds. For some time the Kursk iron ore deposits—possibly the richest in the entire world— were in Denikine's possession, while the results of the campaign hung in the balance. But he knew nothing about them—or, if he did, the defeat of his army shortly after made his knowledge fruitless.

Those who knew about the Kursk ore deposits and foresaw great wealth and power for Soviet Russia as a result of them had good reason for acute alarm on still another occasion, in 1918, when the Ukraine, then under German control, was erected by the Germans into a free state. They demanded that the Province of Kursk be included in the Ukraine. This having been refused by the Russian Soviet Government, the German lords of the Ukraine proposed a new boundary, which, though leaving most of Kursk Province to Soviet Russia, included within the new Ukraine state the whole region of Schigry, where the great iron ore discovery had been made. At that time, by the way, the Germans, feeling pretty well assured that they were going to be defeated in the war, and, as a consequence of their defeat, lose the great Lorraine iron ore deposits, were casting about for ways and means of compensating themselves for this extremely serious blow to their manufacturing industries.

Articles were appearing in those days in German magazines and scientific publications pointing out the urgent necessity for Germany to find such compensation, and there is scarcely reason for doubt that the data contained in Professor Leyst's papers and plans concerning the Schigry ore deposits had been thoroughly studied by German experts, who had thereupon reported to the German Government. Hence the strong desire of the latter to have the Schigry region included within the borders of the German-controlled Ukraine. But here, too, Germany's efforts were unavailing; Soviet Russia hung on grimly to Schigry.

The Okkma, the special committee formed to push forward the Schigry investigations, took 10,000 observations in four years (from 1919 to 1923)—active work, considering that Professor Leyst, during 25 summers, made only 4,500 observations. In the summer of 1922 boring was begun. In April, 1923, samples of the iron ore found were sent to Moscow for analysis. They were found to contain a high percentage of iron.

Borings are being continued now at the rate of five to seven feet a day. Already a depth of 140 feet has been reached. The quaity of the ore, it is declared, improves in proportion as

FOR over twenty years the Carnation label has been a sure guide to purity, safety, and convenience in milk. Carnation is simply the richest and best milk with about 60% of the natural water content removed by evaporation, sealed in the container and sterilized.

Carnation is rich enough to take the place of cream in tea, coffee, etc. By adding a little more than an equal part of water you get "whole" milk of natural consistency. Order several tall (16 oz.) cans or a case of 48 cans from your grocer.

THIN WHITE SAUCE

Two tablespoonfuls flour, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, ½ teaspoonful salt, 2/3 cup water, 1/3 cup Carnation Milk. Melt butter, add flour and stir until thoroughly mixed. Add the milk with the water and cook about five minutes or until the mixture thickens, then add salt. This recipe makes one cup of sauce.

BELGIANS DISCUSS SITUATION

Resistance In Ruhr Is Rapidly Weakening, According To Report.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 7—The Belgian Cabinet to-day discussed at great length, how best to speed up the Inter Allied negotiations, dealing with reparations so as to put an end to the present period of suspense, but according to Independence Belge, no decision was reached. Foreign Minister Jaspar, read reports to his colleagues, tending to show that the resistance in the Ruhr was rapidly weakening, and that Franco-Belgian authorities were being approached with semi official proposals having in view abandonment of resistance, proposals which apparently had come directly from Berlin.

NEAREST STAR FOUR "LIGHT YEARS" AWAY.

If the light of all the stars were to go out at once, it would be at least four years before we noticed any difference in their light. After that time these lights in the sky would disappear one by one, according to their distance from the earth. No one living today would see the last starlight go out if all their lights were extinguished at once. You must remember that it takes light four and one-half years to come to us from the nearest star. We say a star is so many "light years" away, basing its distance on the time it takes its light to reach us. It takes light 100,000 years and more to reach us from some of the farther stars. From some of the more distant stars we are just now receiving the light that originally emanated from them way back in the stone age—before history. It has taken it all these years to reach us.

Farmer Is The Goat

(Baltimore Daily Post)

The farmer's tragic situation was clearly shown in a statement to The Post yesterday by a flour mill official.

"Only the high price of feed," he said, "enables the mills to sell flour cheaply. Feed is as high or higher to the farmer as the wheat which he produces."

In other words, a farmer brings in a bushel of wheat. It is made into flour and feed, the latter a by-product. The flour is sold at less than the cost of the wheat. The feed goes back to the farmer, costing him more than the wheat he sold.

In the face of such tragic inequality, the farmer is preferring to feed his wheat whole to his stock.

Health Hints

Nurse tells me that if beds received more attention there would be less of that "tired feeling" in the morning. The bed, she says, should be the most hygenic piece of furniture in the house. It should be well aired and never made up immediately after the occupant leaves it. While it is being aired the lothes should be well thrown back and all of the windows thrown open. Then the mattress should be turned and laid where the air and sun if possible, can get at it.

Regardless of the condition of your couch, however, if you sleep in a close, stuffy room you are bound to pay the penalty. When you open your windows wide and sleep in a hygenic bed, you may depend upon nature doing her part. Take a bath at night, either a sponge bath or a tub bath as you may wish and a good rub down after the bath, and you will feel refreshed and rested.

WESTERN CROPS SUFFER FROM RUST AND HEAT

Estimated Crops In Some Districts Will Be Cut In Half.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7—In its fifth report of the season the Manitoba Free Press says to-day that "exceedingly favourable prospects that have been maintained throughout the summer have to a considerable extent vanished during the past three weeks." The report continues, while conditions in Alberta are still very favourable and the best crop since 1915 is anticipated; crops in Saskatchewan have suffered deterioration from rust, heat and too much moisture, until now conditions would point that not much more than a fair average crop will be harvested. In Manitoba the loss caused by rust, heat and sawfly has been very heavy. In Central and Southern Districts reports would indicate that good yields promised three weeks ago have been fully cut in half. More districts report labor shortage, wages being from four to four dollars and a half per day.

Curious Divorce Claim

A PETITIONER AND HIS DECEASED WIFE.

(London Morning Post)

The claim of a husband for damages in respect of his dead wife's alleged misconduct again came before Mr. Justice Horridge and a common jury in the Divorce Court recently.

Mr. Darnley Clifton stated that he appeared on behalf of the petition, Mr. George Charles Kent, of Denbigh-place, Victoria, S.W., who was claiming from Edgar Hamilton Atkinson damages in respect of Mr. Atkinson's alleged misconduct with the petitioner's wife. Mr. Atkinson denied the allegation, and pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit owing to the fact that Mrs. Kent died before her husband filed his petition.

The question of jurisdiction had already been before the Court, and it was held that there was jurisdiction, and the petitioner now came before the jury on facts.

Counsel said that the wife died on July 13, 1921, and the petition was filed on May 2, 1922. They were married on April 22, 1898, and lived together happily until somewhere in 1918. They had ten children, eight of whom were now living. In 1918 the petitioner was engaged on work at the docks, where he made the acquaintance of Mr. Atkinson. They became on friendly terms.

About six weeks after the birth of the last child Mr. Atkinson called at the petitioner's house at Peckham with instructions with regard to some work which Mr. Kent was to do. Mr. and Mrs. Kent were about to go to a theatre, and Mr. Kent asked him to accompany them, and he refused. The next day Mr. Kent saw Mr. Atkinson, who referred to his call the previous evening, and asked who the girl was.

Mr. Kent explained that the woman was his wife. From that time until towards the end of 1920 Mr. Kent only once saw Mr. Atkinson at his house, but the evidence would show that Mr. Atkinson was a frequent visitor.

After he began coming to the house Mrs. Kent, who had always been a good wife, began to neglect her home and children. In October, 1920, she was taken ill, and she never recovered, and died on July 13, 1921. A few days before she died she made a statement to her husband, and in consequence of that statement Mr. Kent made inquiries, and it was then for the first time that he discovered that Mr. Atkinson had been visiting his house at Peckham, during 1918, 1919, and 1920, unknown to him. This information preyed on Mr. Kent's mind and reduced him not only to a mental but a physical wreck, and on October 15, 1921, he collapsed in the street and was taken to the Royal Free Hospital. On October 22, 1921, he left the hospital, and, having nowhere to go and no money, he had to spend the night in the streets.

MANY WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Through the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Two Interesting Cases

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Mrs. Edwards Avoids Operation

Wilson, N. C.—"For about a year I was not able to do anything, not even my housework, because of the pains in my sides and the bearing-down pains. I could only lie around the house. The doctor said nothing but an operation would help me, but I tried different medicines which did no good, until my sister insisted on my trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said there was nothing like it. I know that she was right, for I began to improve with the first bottle and it has done me more good than anything else. I am able now to do anything on the farm or in my home and I recommend it to my friends."—LILLIE EDWARDS, R.F.D. 8, Box 44, Wilson, N. C.

Another Operation Avoided

Akron, Ohio.—"I can never praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I had such pains and weakness that the doctor told me nothing but an operation would help me. But my mother had taken the Vegetable Compound and she told me what it had done for her, and so I took it and I am glad to tell every one that it made me a strong woman, and I have had two children since then."—Mrs. R. G. WESTOVER, 325 Grant Street, Akron, Ohio.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER B. KYNE)

CHAPTER I.

Although The Laird loved his town, Port Agnew, because he had created it, he had not nevertheless, resided in it for some years prior to the period at which this chronicle begins. At the very apex of the head land that shelters the Bight of Tyee, in a cup-like depression several acres in extent, on the northern side and ideally situated two hundred feet below the crest, thus permitting the howling southeasters to blow over it, Hector McKaye, in the fullness of time, had built for himself a not very large two-storey house of white stone native to the locality. This house, in the centre of beautiful and well-kept grounds, was designed in the shape of a letter T, with the combination living-room and library forming the entire leg of the T, and enclosed on all three sides by heavy plate-glass French windows.

Thus, The Laird was enabled to command a view of the bight, with Port Agnew nestled far below; of the silver strip that is the Skookum River flowing down to the sea thru the logged-over lands, now checkerboarded into little green farms; of the rolling back country with its dark green mantle of fir and white cedar, fading in the distance to dark blue and black; of the yellow sandstone bluffs of the coast-line to the north, and the turquoise of the Pacific out to the horizon.

This room Hector McKaye enjoyed best of all things in life, with the exception of his family; of his family, his son Donald was nearest and dearest to him. This boy he loved with a fierce hungry love, intensified, doubtless, because to the young Laird of Tyee, McKaye was still the greatest hero in the world. To his wife, The Laird was no longer a hero, although in the old days of the upward climb, when he had fiercely claimed her and supported her by the sweat of his brow, he had been something akin to a god. As for Elizabeth and Jane, his daughters, it must be recorded that both these young women had long ceased to regard their father as anything except an unfailing source of revenue—an old dear who clung to Port Agnew, homely speech, and homely ways, hooting good-naturedly at the pretensions of their set, and, with characteristic Gaelic Stubbornness, insisting upon living and enjoying the kind of life that appealed to him with peculiar force as the only kind worth living.

Indeed, in more than one humble home in Port Agnew, it had been said that the two McKaye girls were ashamed of their father. This because frequently, in a light and debonair manner, Elizabeth and Jane apologized for their father and exhibited towards him an indulgent attitude, as is frequently the case with overeducated and overcultured young ladies who cannot recall a time when their slightest wish has not been gratified and cannot forget that the good fairy who gratified it once worked hard with his hands, spoke the language and acquired the habits of his comrades in the battle for existence.

Of course, Elizabeth and Jane would have resented this analysis of their mental attitude toward their father. Be that as it may, however, the fact remained that both girls were perfunctory in their expressions of affection for their father, but wildly extravagant in them where their mother was concerned. Hector McKaye liked it so. He was a man who never thought about himself, and he discovered that if he gave his wife and daughters everything they desired, he was not apt to be nagged.

Only on one occasion had Hector McKaye Declared himself master in his own house, and, at the risk of appearing paradoxical, this was before the house had been built. One day, while they still occupied their first home (in Port Angew), a house with a mansard roof, two towers, jigsaw and scroll-work galore, and the usual cast-iron mastiffs and deer on the front lawn, The Laird had come gleefully home from a trip to Seattle and proudly exhibited the plans for a new house.

Ensued examination and discussion by his wife and the young ladies. Alas! The Laird's dream of a home did not correspond with that of his wife, although, as a matter of fact, the lady had no ideas on the subject beyond an instance that the house should be "worthy of their station," and erected in a fashionable suburb of Seattle. Elizabeth and Jane aided and abeted her in clamouring for a Seattle home, altho both were quick to note the adyantages of a picturesque country home on the cliffs above the bight. They urged their father to build his house, but condemned his plans. They desired a house some three times larger than the blue-prints called for.

Hector McKaye said nothing. The women chattered and argued among themselves until, Elizabeth and Jane having vanquished their mother, all three moved briskly to the attack upon The Laird. When they had talked themselves out and awaited a reply, he gave it with the simple directness of his nature. It was evident that he had given his answer thought.

"I can never live in Seattle until I retire, and I can not retire until Donald takes my place in business. That means that Donald must live here. Consequently, I shall spend half of my time with you and the girls in Seattle, mother, and the other half with Donald here. When we built our first home, you hay your way—and I've lived in this architectural horror ever since. This time I'm going to have my own way—and you've lived long enough with me to know that when I declare for a will of my own, I'll not be denied. Well I realize you and the girls have outgrown Port Agnew. There's naught here to interest you, and I would not have woman o' mine unhappy. So plan your house in Seattle, and I'll built our first home, you had your this house on the headland, you have no interest in it. Donald's approved the plans, and him only will I defer to. 'Twill be his house some day—his and his wife's, when he gets one. And there will be no more talk of it, my dears. I'll not take it kindly of ye to interfere."

CHAPTER II.

AT A PERIOD in his upward climb to fortune, when as yet Hector McKaye had not fulfilled his dream of a factory for his waste and short length stock into sash, door, blinds, mouldings, and so forth, he had been won't to use about fifty per cent of this material for fuel to maintain steam in the mill boilers, while the remainder passed out over the waste conveyer to the slab pile, where it was burned.

The sawdust, however, remained to be disposed of, and since it was not possible to burn this in the slab fire for the reason that the wet sawdust blanketed the flames and resulted in a profusion of smoke that blew back upon the mill to the annoyance of the employees, for many years the Laird had caused this accumulatto dust to be hauled to the edge of the bight on the north side of the town, and there dumped in a low marshy spot which formerly had bred millions of mosquitoes.

Subsequently in the process of grading the streets of Port Agnew and excavating cellars, waste dirt had been dumped with the sawdust, and occasionally, when high winter tides swept over the spot, sand, small stones, sea-shells, and kelp were added to the mixture. And, as if this were not sufficient, the citizens of Port Agnew contributed from time to time, old barrels and bottles, yard-sweepings, tin cans, and superannuated stoves and kitchen utensils.

Slowly this dump crept out on the beach, and in order to prevent the continuous attrition of the surf upon the outer edge of it from befouling the white-sand bathing beach farther up the Bight of Tyee, The Laird had driven a double row of fir piling paralell with and beyond the line of breakers. This piling, driven as close together as possible and reenforced with two-inch planking between, formed a bulkhead with the flanks curving in to the beach, thus insuring practically a watertight pen some two acres in extent, and, with the passage of years, this became about two-thirds filled with the waste from the town. Had The Laird ever decided to lay claim to the Sawdust Pile, there would have been none in Port Agnew to contest his tityе; since he did not claim it, the Sawdust Pile became a sort of No Man's Land.

After The Laird erected his factory and began to salvage his waste, the slab fire went out forever for lack of fuel, and the modicum of waste from the mill and factory, together with the sawdust, was utilized for fuel in an electric light plant that furnished light, heat, and power to the town. Consequently, sawdust no longer mercifully covered the trash on the Sawdust Pile as fast as this trash arrived, and one day, Hector McKaye, observing this, decided that it was an unsightly spot and not quite worthy of the town of Port Agnew. So he constructed a barge somewhat on the principle of a patent dump-wagon, and moored it to the river bank, created a garbage monopoly in Port Agnew, and sold it for five thousand dollars to a pair of ambitious Italians. With the proceeds of this garbage deal, The Laird built a very pretty little public library.

Having organized his new garbage system (the garbage was to be towed twenty miles to sea and there dumped), The Laird forbade further dumping on the Sawdust Pile. When the necessity for more dredge work developed, in order to keep the deep channel of the Skookum from filling, he had pipes from the dredger run out to the Sawdust Pile and covered the unsightly spot with six feet of rich river-silt up to the level of the piling.

"And now," said Hector McKaye to Andrew Daney, his general manager, "when that settles, we'll run a light track out here and use the Sawdust Pile for a drying-yard."

International Wheat Marketing Scheme

Three Countries Represented at Washington Grain Meeting.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The possibility of an international orderly marketing agreement on the wheat of Canada, Argentina and Australia has been raised by conferences held here recently by representatives of the foreign wheat growers with the American Bureau of Farm Federations. The representatives of three wheat growing countries have conferred here singly with Washington representatives of the Farm organization and while nothing has as yet developed, the matter of "team-work" in the marketing of the wheat is understood to have been discussed in a tentative way.

It is known here that officials of the American Farm Bureau Federation hold there is nothing in the law which would prevent the big exporters of grain in the principal wheat-growing countries from getting together and agreeing that the grain should be offered in a manner which would not glut the world market and also permit a higher price.

The United States and Canada grow nearly half of the world's supply of wheat, it is pointed out. If an understanding could be reached between the growers in the United States and Canada.

Argentina is also interested in the new intermediate credit system, which was set up by Congress at the last session. An official of the Southern republic made extended inquiries concerning the working of the system and indicated that such a banking plan might be taken up by his country. The broader phases of the wheat problem were touched upon during the conference.

The intermediate credit system was the subject of inquiries by a representative of the Australian Government, and the suggestion of team-work in marketing was taken up at the same time.

LONDON LETTER

(Written for the Canadian Press By Mrs. Cecil Chesterton.)

LONDON, July 23 (By Mail)—The re-opening of Westminister Hall on Tuesday last was a most impressive ceremony. For eight years this masterpiece of British architecture has been closed during which time the anxious and delicate work of repairing the roof has been undertaken. Put up in 1347, the mysterious and sinister "death watch" beetle through centuries of activity has undermined the supports, and but for the skill of Sir Frank Baines, the Director of Works, this link with the Middle Ages must have been destroyed. King George was accompanied by Queen Mary and the gathering included a number of peers and commons. Mrs. Asquith, in a stirling costume of black velvet cut in a medieval fashion with a Tudor hat, was prominent among the members of the Opposition. Mrs. Stanley Baldwin, was also present and Labor was represented by Ramsay MacDonald and Arthur Henderson. Among the crowd was recognized the figure of Dr. Banting, the famous surgeon from Toronto. This young discoverer of the insulin treatment for diabetes has aroused great interest in London. Everybody is asking him to dinner and if he cared he could be the most prominent figure in society.

Balls and dances still continue. One of the most successful of the season was the Air League Ball at the Albert Hall on Tuesday. It was fancy dress and I do not remember an occasion when the costumes have been more original. The huge hall was beautifully decorated with huge banks of flowers, while flags and streamers were hung from the roof. An air raid was the feature of the evening, and so realistic was the noise that the beauties in crinolines, swarthy Spaniards and dainty little Eskimos rushed to the boxes for safety. The Duke and Duchess of York watched the proceedings from the Royal Box. Later in the evening they danced the newest fox-trots with enthusiasm.

"Pompey," to give Portsmouth the name by which it is known throughout the Senior Service, has arranged a most successful pageant. The town, rich in historical tradition has wakened up of late in the matter of amusements and is a formidable rival in this respect to its sister Southsea. One of the most enjoyable times can be spent on the Isle of Wight, 20 minutes sail from Portsmouth Hr. One of the most delicious spots is Seaview, as yet undiscovered by the majority of holiday makers. It has an old-world simplicity and its golden sands and blue waters rival the attractions of those Mediterranean watering places overloaded with fashion. Bath as a winter place is well known but lately the enterprising Mayor and corporation have done much to popularize it in the summer mon ths. The Roman Baths there show that the most modern appliances were not unknown to the Romans. Indeed one is amazed to find how little we have discovered of luxurious bathing during many centuries.

The quaint old town of Chichster is getting ready for Goodwood. One of the most picturesque spots in Sussex, its red roofs make it a landmark for miles. Here is the Dolphin Inn celebration in Pickwick, and the waiters still preserve the Diskensian tradition in the matter of whiskers and waistcoats. Every year its pleasant sleepiness is broken up by the fashionable crowds which troop down to the races. Chichester is always first favorite. It has an atmosphere lacking in the seaside town of Bognor and adjacent places.

Several swallows while in flight in the Alps dropped to the ground in convulsions, spread out their wings and died. It was found that a parasite spider indigenous to Asia or Africa, but not to Switzerland, was under the wing of each bird. The insect had sucked the blood of the swallows and paralysed their wings.

The Two Irelands

(London Morning Post)

Sir James Craig, Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, and Mr. Cosgrave, the head of the Free State Government, had a conference in London recently. It had nothing to do with the Boundary Commission—as many people might suppose after the extraordinary Anti-Ulster outburst of Mr. T. M. Healy, the Governor-General of Southern Ireland—and was concerned with some very minor points of detail.

As a result of the "Treaty" the Council of Ireland contemplated by the Home Rule Act of 1920 has never been set up. Matters common to North and South—railways, for instance—have to go to the Home Office and the Colonial Office while—to take another case—the Board of Agriculture in Whitehall still appoints inspecting officials in the Six Counties. But for the fact that Sir James Craig resolutely refused to make the Colonial Office the Department with which his Government would have to deal, there would probably have been a majority of Sinn Fein officials in every Government Department in Northern Ireland still controlled from London.

It is on some of the subjects with which the Council of Ireland would have dealt that Sir James Craig and Mr. Cosgrave were debating; and on which conversations are to be resumed.

Negro Burned at Stake By U. S. Mob

Accused by Another Negro of Attacking Woman.

YAZEOO CITY, Miss., Juy 30.—Willie Minnifield, negro, was burned at the stake here yesterday by a mob, which accused him of attacking a white woman twenty miles southwest of here with an axe early last Saturday night, inflicting wounds which physicians believe will prove fatal.

Minniefield and another negro were captured by a posse in a swamp. According to members of the posse, the other negro, who escaped, declared that he stood outside the woman's home while Minnifield went in to attack her.

Minnifield was taken from the posse by a mob, brought here, tied to a stake and burned to death.

A posse took up the pursuit of the negro who escaped and who is said to have made the aleged confession involving Minnifield.

Knights of Columbus Refutes Charges

MONTREAL, Aug. 7—Declaring that the Knights of Columbus would stand, in whatever country they operated, against all societies or combines that sought to inject religious and racial basic into government and social life, Supreme Knight James A. Flaherty of Philadelphia in his address to the Forty-first Supreme International Convention of the Knights of Columbus, challenged the Ku Klux Klan or any other opponents or critics of the K. of C. to produce a single fact on which to base their opposition or criticism.

"We can tolerate any responsible difference of opinion," he stated, "but we shall not tolerate any reflections upon our integrity. The Knights of Columbus have spent forty million dollars entrusted tao them by the American public, with the exception of some millions now being devoted to education and hospitalizization work. In Canada the Knights have spent many hundreds of thousands on welfare work. Every dollar has been devoted to its right purpose. Every remaining dollar is being devoted to that purpose as tens of thousands of ev-service men of all denominations receiving education under K. of C. auspices can prove, and as any enquirer may see for himself by visiting any of 400 hospitals throughout the country where the Knights of Columbus maintain hospitalization service free for war veterans regardless of creed. Any man who challenges the record must prove his case or abandon it. We have been over patient with our slaunderers. We shall not be so in future; the law can be invoked to curb malicious lying."

The K. of C. chief declared that the three most important tasks now before the Knights were the satisfactory solution of the Catholic boy problem, connected with which is a special committee report on the probable formation of a junior K. of C. movement; next, the extension of the K. of C. national correspondence school into a great mail-system university for the 800,000 members of the Order and then the continuance of the hospital and educational work for disabled men.

"Not until the last dollar of our war fund is expended," Mr. Flaherty declared, "will the Knights of Columbus cease their ministrations to the disabled men in hospitals. There are more than thirty thousand of these men now and the end is not yet. We shall remain with them to the finish."

The Supreme Knight advocated a strong stand against the forces of extreme radicalism by the knights. "Where radicalism is healthy it does constructive work; where it is unhealthy, it will be found to consist mostly of violent talk and violent deeds. The K. of C. stand, every man of us, against intemperance of all kinds, political, social or economic."

He condemned strongly the movement against the parochial schools, as exemplified in the Oregon anti-parochial school amendment. "We shall fight for our constitutional rights," he said, "to the highest tribunal in the land, for we are fighting for religious freedom, without which this or any other nation cannot be free."

The Supreme Knight's report was the first business following organization of the convention at the Mount Royal Hotel. The convention is the largest ever held by the Knights, delegates and large numbers of visitors from the United States, Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, Cuba, Hawaii, Panama, the Philipines, Porto Rico and Alaska being present. Archbishop Gauthier delivered an address of welcome from the altar of the Cathedral of Notre Dame at the solemn Mass opening the convention. A mammoth parade, i nwhich more than twenty thousand local and visiting Knights marched, preceded the Mass. The convention will continue through to-night to Thursday afternoon.

LORD HAIG AND OTHER VETERANS

"Looks rather pale, doesn't he?" said my neighbor of Lord Haig when we were the guests of the Great War Veterans of Uewfoundland yesterday at the British Empire Club. Perhaps he has lost the bronze of active service, but the pallor arose merely because he was surrounded by tanned stalwayts from overseas. It was not noticeable when he chatted to the American delegates, who, by the way, seem much attracted to him.

Our host, Lieutenant-Colonel T. Nongle, is trying hard to pay us the compliments of pronouncing "Newfoundland" in our manner. But every now and again he speaks the name of his country as if it were still new found land.—Pall Mall Gazatte.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 8th, 1923.

THE CITY STREETS

Some time past there was considerable newspaper discussion as to the work of the Road Commission.

There can be no doubt about the good work accomplished by that body on roads outside the city and around parts of Conception Bay. The Commission's work is best realised when one compares with it the very disgraceful condition of some of the city's important streets. In the outlying sections under the jurisdiction of the Road Commission, are roads of which any country can boast and over which citizens can drive or carry traffic with pleasure and convenience. The same cannot be said of many streets in the city, and, as a consequence, one sometimes wonders if it is not advisable for the Municipal Council to hand over the up keep of the city streets to the supervision of some City Street Commission, who will prove themselves equal to some kind of reasonable effort to perform this important and necessitous work.

The duties of a Municipal Council are necessarily many and important. There is none, however, more important than the providing of proper highways, that would be a general convenience for all activities of the public as well as something of which citizens should not be ashamed. There are many who are apt to judge of the efficiency and public-spirited methods of a city council by their efforts in connection with making a city's streets creditable to its citizens and passable in the opinion of outside visitors and tourists. And that is what St. John's streets are not.

Where is the fault? Upon whom must the responsibility lie? And when will there be evidenced some kind of practical effort to remedy the present state of affairs?

If the Government were to blame, there is no doubt that a hue-and-cry would be raised in protest long ere this; but the matter of the city's streets is not that for which the Government are responsible.

It is not the desire of this paper to introduce this subject in any carping spirit. It is a matter about which the whole city is talking and which the City Council must not overlook as conditions are daily growing worse and worse.

This particularly applies to the east end of Water Street, the first impression which tourists or outside visitors get of our capital city, and also, to Prescott Street, Long's Hill and even to LeMarchant Road.

A PERIOD OF SUSPENSE

Yesterday's despatches contained the information that the Italian reply to the recent British note on the subject of German reparations, agrees in general principle with the British attitude. The Italian Government, like the British, deplores the French occupation of the Ruhr and takes the position that the Belgian and French forces should be gradually reduced in the Ruhr territory when an understanding with Germany will have been reached or guaranteed.

It would appear that Italy, to some extent, has by her reply bridged the widened gulf between France and Britain, as the Italian reply is almost similar to Poincare's recent statement that there would be no departure from their Ruhr position until reparations were paid or guaranteed.

A later Brussels messages reports the Belgian Cabinet were anxious to speed up inter-allied negotiations dealing with reparations in order to end the present period of suspense.

If, as is indicated, German resistance in the Ruhr is weakening, an event made probable by the reported physical condition of many of the population owing to food shortage, and that semi-official proposals are being made to the French regarding a settlement, it may not be too sanguine to hope for early and favorable developments.

In the meantime, the French Government is evidently preparing for the worst and is fighting feverishly to gain new allies, if, by her reparations policy she must lose some of her present allies.

The Poincare Government has cultivated as Allies the States of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania, four important, even if minor, countries which separate Germany from Russia. In addition to 800,000,000 francs as loans to these countries to commission powerful armies, French officers have been despatched to aid in army training. The recent tour of Field Marshal Foch to these countries is also significant.

Thus does France threaten Germany in a very dangerous fashion should trouble start; and is endeavouring to bid defiance to other European nations in any contingency arising out of the present reparations difficulty.

THE WHEAT POOL

The proposal of the wheat growers of Western Canada for a wheat pool as the most effective means of handling this year's crop to the best advantage so far as the producers are concerned, has now become an accomplished fact, and yesterday's cables announced the incorporation of "the United Farmers' Wheat Pool, Limited," under the Stock Companies' Act.

This is one of the biggest ventures that have been attempted along the lines of the pool system of marketing, and the whole Western World will watch with the keenest interest the results that will accrue from the efforts of the United Farmers.

As has been frequently pointed out, there is a lesson for marketers of Newfoundland's produce in this forward movement of our Canadian cousins, and our exporters should follow closely the workings and achievements of the United Farmers' Wheat Pool which promises to revolutionize the marketing of Canada's immense wheat crop.

ROTARY CLUB MEETING

Mr. T. Soper Speaks on The Good Roads Movement

The weekly meeting of the Rotary Club was held at the West End Restaurant yesterday with a large number of members in attendance. President Mitchell announced that the playground apparatus recently imported for the use of the city children was in course of erection and that the Bannerman Park section would be ready for use on Wednesday.

The speaker of the day was Mr. Thos. Soper, a representative of the Nfld. Motor Association on the Road Commission, who addressed the Club on the "Good Roads Movement," and he was introduced to the members of the Club by the chairman, Rotarian C. Duley.

In introducing Mr. Soper, reference was made to the unceasing energy and enthusiasm Mr. Soper had put into the good roads movement, and to his vision and foresight the present splendid condition of most of the main roads is largely due. Able assistance and co-operation by Mr. Richard Hibbs, the energetic Secretary of the Commission, and his associates had also contributed largely to the success of the movement.

Mr. Soper's address was received with much appreciation and applause by the Club and is reproduced in full below for the benefit of all who are interested in better roads and the exploitation of our naturally beautiful scenery.

Before the meeting closed President Mitchell referred in touching words to the great loss Rotary had sustained by the death of the late President Harding, who was a member of one of the American Clubs. The acting secretary, Rotarian D.M. Baird, read the following resolution which was received by the Club in standing silence for a half minute period, as a tribute to the late President's worth as a statesman and a Rotarian.

RESOLVED — That the Rotary Club of St. John's, Nfld., having heard with sorrow of the sudden death of Rotarian Warren Harding, President of the United States of America, record its sympathy with his family whose great loss has been borne with such fortitude as to merit all admiration and affection; with Rotary International in the loss sustained by the passing of one who has exemplified the principles of Rotary, which he so eloquently expressed at the St. Louis Convention, his service being rendered both in practice and precept; and with that great nation, by whose citizenship he was held in such high esteem, whose destiny he guided faithfully and fearlessly, and the honor and welfare of which was his constant care.

Guests of members were Messrs Uphill, F. W. Pincock, W. Stevenson, C. J. Fox, P. H. Cowan, R. Hibbs.

* * * * *

Mr. T. Soper's Address

Rotarians,—It is always considered a privilege to be invited as a guest to Rotary luncheons, but it is indeed an honor as well as a great privilege, to be asked to address the club, particularly, as the subject under discussion is one of local interest, and is part of a plan instituted by Rotarians to make better known the natural resources and beauty spots of our island home.

My remarks will then be confined to the "good roads movement" in relation to tourist traffic, and also as a means to make our country better known to ourselves. My talk will be more or less of a rambling nature and may be termed the A. B. C. of good roads in this country.

Introduction of Motor Cars

On the introduction of motor cars in this country, it was quickly realized that our roads as they were at that time, were not siutable for pleasant driving, and it was soon seen that some special effort would have to be made, if motor cars were to continue in use.

A number of public spirited gentlemen soon decided that in their own interests, it would be necessary to improve certain roads, one of these gentlemen, Mr. Fred Ayre was later elected president of the Motor Association, and in this way materially assisted in the first good roads movement. We also find that public benefactor, Sir Edgar Bowring assisted materially in this work; but to give effect to the efforts of these men, it was necessary to have some one with vision enough to see that an interest must be around to continue this road improvement from year to year, and our friend, Mr. Collishaw was both willing and able to undertake this work, later becoming secretary-treasurer of the Motor Association. I make no apology, therefore, for deciding to base my ramerks on the A. B. C. of the good roads movement.

As many Rotarians are also members of the Motor Association, and have listened to the various reports given, or read accounts of these reports, it is not my intention to deal at any length with details of the work accomplished, but would note in passing, that after formation of the Motor Association, it was early seen, that some further assistance was necessary, if we were to have any permanent road repairing, or rebuilding carried our each season. It was then decided, in thei nterest of gooo roads, that all motorists should be taxed in proportion to horse power of the car driven, this tax to be supplemented by a special grant from the general funds of the Colony. Then that body of men known as the Road Commission, were brought together to carry on the work so ably started some few years before.

The first duty of the Commission was to provide and inaugurate a proper system of repairing, rebuilding and widening our present main highways, and to carry out this successfully, it was soon discovered that the old system of spending money would have to be discontinued, and in its place the system of employing teams under suitable foremen, was instituted.

Old Highways

There are present to-day many who will remember with what pride they themselves and their fathers looked upon what was then considered a splendid driveway via Portugal Cove to St. John's, but on the introduction of the motor car, it was quickly discovered that this road was utterly unsuitable, and it is only after the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, that the road may now be considered a reasonably safe drive for motor vehicles.

Thorburn Turnpike

This is the only road built in years gone by that in any way measures up to the present day traffic, but the approaches or leading roads to that highway were so unsuitable, that this road was not a popular drive, and it is only during recent years, after expenditure of considerable money, that we find the Thorburn Turnpike a popular run.

Bay Bulls Road

What applied to the Portugal Cove Road, applies to the Bay Bulls Road. Proper consideration did not seem to be given to the possibilities of increased traffic, and the beauties and magnificent scenery of this particular section, has up to the present, been lost to the average motorist, but we trust soon, to start operations so that this splendid drive will be both safe and pleasurable. Of Topsail Road I need no tsay anything, as this drive is well known to all.

The Road Commission must at all hazards continue it programme of properly ditching, widening, blasting boulders and moving dangerous turns and corners on our several main highways, before wee an hope to interest any great number of outside tourists.

We have abundance of suitable material; we have developed a splendid type of foremen, and we have a goodly number of superintendents ready to carry on a general road improvement campaign. All is needed is the necessary funds, and here let me pay tribute to the men who have been employed under the Road Commission. Already we notice a better interest, for these men recognize what the good road movement means to their own setlement, and trust, soon, to break down the old idea that road money was to be given out rather than to be earned by an honest day's work. We also note, improved public spirit, inasmuch, as in these localities where encroachment was made upon the main highways, owners are satisfied to permit of the fences etc., being moved back to a reasonabled istance; thus allowing for proper width and safe passing.

Standard of Returns

We are pleased to note the increased returns and good value for monies expended, and as the years go on we trust to secure 100 per cent. efficiency.

Bridges

Up to the present, not nearly enough attention has not been given to proper erection of bridges on our main line highways; many of them are unnecessary; others are in a dilapidated condition and need immediate attention from the proper authorities. Previous to the introduction of the motor car the life of an ordinary small bridge, was estimated at four years. We now find that they do not last more than one to one and a half years, and in connection with our present good road movement, we sahe started an experiment, by laying a reinforced bridge underneath the road surface, which bridge, we estimate will last ten to twelve years, and can be replaced at very little cost.

Introduction of Road-making Machinery

Since the inauguration of the Road Commission, road making machinery has been employed, with very signal success. Many miles of road can now be repaired, widened and properly performed at a tithe of the cost of thes ame amount of work if undertaken by ordinary laborers. It must be remembered however, that the Commission has been operating to more or less extent on 150 miles of road, while our total budget is $18,000. Rotarians will note, that wherever any good road movements are undertaken in other countries, that from $5,000 to $25,000 per mile is needed. We only have $18,000 per year to improve 150 miles. We have to thank the administration just gone out of power for their interest in this work, and are pleased to report that the new administration is also prepared to consider favorably any assistance in the good roads movement as carried on by the Road Commission, and time is now opportune for further propaganda, for having started in May of the present season, the funds of the Commission have already been expended, while we have two and a half months of time when weather conditions are very suitable for road building, in which very little, if any work can be carried on, owing to lack of funds.

To those who may travel inland, the road from Deer Lake to Bonne Bay will be of special interest when completed; the road from Grand Falls to Botwood will quickly prove a source of revenue to the Colony, for already there is operating in that district a number of motor cars. What the possibilities are of the road from Badger to Little Bay, we do not know at present.

Tourist Traffic

The object of all this work up to the present has been for the benefit of the local motorist. We must soon recognize the possibilities and benefits accruing from an increased tourist traffic, and provide suitable highways, so that they can readily get to the many points of interest, where trout fishing, salmon fishing, shoot, etc., is available.

We have read with interest, during past few days some splendid items in the local newspapers covering possibilities of motor traffic to Placentia, and in the interest of Rotarians, I might say, that by September of the present season, this trip can be accomplished very readily, and with great profit and pleasure. The possibilities of interesting tourists should be great, when within five hours of St. John's, they can reach the Ancient Capital where suitable accommodation is available and splendid trout and salmon fishing is to be had. The recent erection of a splendid concrete bridge over Rocky River makes this trip possible.

The beauties of varied landscape and seascape cannot be excelled anywhere. The charming drive through the wonderful valleys and over the great hills, may well be described as unexcelled.

Permit me here to recount some of the various drives that would become very popular, provided, suitable highways were constructed. Most Rotarians are familiar with that drive through Middle Cove, Outer Cove, Torbay or to Pouch Cove. The natural scenery and bold outline of seacoast is seldom equalled, and rarely excelled, and with very little expense, the drive could be continued to Cape St. Francis; in fact, some motorists do go on as far as that point.

Portugal Cove Drive

Seldom do we find a drive so pleasing as that from St. John's to Portugal Cove, via Winsor Lake, thence by the many roads to Beachy Cove, Broad Cove, then on to Topsail. Having completed this drive we then continue on to Holyrood, and we have yet to hear of any drive in any other country that will excel the beauty and magnificence of a sunset at Holyrood under right conditions. Then for boldness, and a drive which presents both beauty as well as demands skill in manipulation of your car, it is only needed to continue on to Carbonear, from Carbonear to many points in Trinity Bay, has to be explored by most motorists, and the possibilities are that within reasonable time, this drive will be an accomplished fact.

The latest popular drive to be added to the many now enjoyed by motorists, is the run to Placentia. Having recently completed this trip, I can with no hesitation, recommend same to Rotarians, who may want a little longer run then usually taken with one reservation, wait until final report is in from teams, who are working on this section. Added to these, we must not overlook the magnificent landscape and seascape available to motorists on the drive from Trepassey via Southern Shore Road.

The speaker has been complimented by many visitors from abroad who has seen only part of this country by motor on these various driveways, and provided suitable accommodation could be found, I have no hesitancy in saying that within three years, we could build up tourist traffic that would far exceed our expectations.

You ask, why not proceed? Our reply is, may we count on the help and assistance of Rotarians in our efforts to interest the present administration to increase the Road Commission Grant from $10,000 to $100,000 per year. A modest sum, when one considers the huge amounts that are expended in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario.

I thank you for your hearing and trust to have awakened a deeper interest in our good road movement.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I see that Harper and Bros., publishers, New York, have brought out a volume of Mark Twain's famous speeches. Indeed, I write this after having spent a couple of hours reading many of the eighty-six after-dinner and other speeches printed in this book. "Mark Twain's Speeches" is a volume that should be on the bookshelf of every lover of the great humorist-philosopher.

* * * *

I am tempted to reproduce one or two samples of his incomparable humor as an after-dinner speaker. Here are the opening paragraphs of a speech delivered in German before the Press Club in Vienna, Austria in 1897. Mark Twain had been in Germany learning to speak German, a very comical description of which he gives in his "A Tramp Abroad." This speech was entitled: "The Horrors of the German Language." This is the literal translation of the speech as he delivered it in German:

* * * *

"It has me deeply touched, my gentlemen, here so hospitably received to be. From colleagues out of my own profession, in this from my own home so far distant land. My heart is full of gratitude, but my poverty of German words forces me to greater economy of expression. Excuse you, my gentlemen, that I read off, what I you say will.

"The German language speak I not good, but have numerous connoisseurs me assurred that I her write like an angel. Maybe—maybe—I know not. Have till now no acquaintance with the angels had. That comes later—when it the dear Lord please—it has no hurry.

* * * *

"Since long, my gentlemen, have I the passionate longing nursed a speech on German to hold, but one has me not permitted. Men, who no feeling for the art had, laid me ever hindrance in the way and make naught my desire—sometimes by excuse, often by force. Always said these men to me: 'Keep you still, your Highness! Silence! For God's sake seek another way and means yourself obnoxious to make.'"

* * * *

"I am pleased to see that we have a cessation of war for the time. This coming from me, a soldier, you will appreciate. I was a soldier in the Southern War (in the United States) for two weeks, and when gentlemen got up to speak of the great deeds our army and navy have recently done, it goes brough me and fires up the old war spirit. I had in my first engagement three horses shot under me. The next shots went over my head, the next hit me in the back. Then I retired to meet an engagement.

"I thank you, gentlemen, for making even a slight reference to the war profession, in which I distinguished myself, short as my career was."

* * * *

As a story-teller Mark Twain has had few rivals. Here's one he told in a speech which he made before a Congressional Committee at Washington, where the subject of autors' copy right was being investigated.

"I feel the same sort of charity to everybody that was manifested by a gentlemen who arrived at home at two o'clock in the morning from the club and was feeling so perfectly satisfied with life, so happy, and so comfortable and there was his house weaving, weaving, weaving around. He watched his chance and by and by when the steps got in his neighborhood he made a jump and climbed up and got on the portico.

"And the house went on waving and waving and waving, but he watched the door and when it came round his way he plunged through it. He got to the stairs and when he went up on all fours the house was so unsteady that he could hardly make his way, but at last he got to the top and raised his foot and put it on the top step. But only the toe hitched on the step, and he rolled down and fetched up on the bottom step, with his arm around the newel-post, and he said: 'God pity the poor sailors out at sea on a night like this!'"

* * *

Albert Bigelow Paine, Mark Twain's biographer, contributes an introduction, while William Dean Howells, Mark's bosom friend, writes an appreciation. Howells says that Mark Twain studied every speech beforehand—repeated the phrases, studied every word, every tone, every inflexion of voice, every gesture, every pause and climax until he had the thing perfectly mapped out in his mind. Mr. Paine says that in his early speech making days Mark Twain actually committed every speech to memory after writing it out, but that later in life he either trusted to a few notes, or actually did not think about his speech until the dinner arrived, when he would trust to pick up some points on which to hang his fun. Even to the last, however, he would write out beforehand and commit to memory his imorptant speeches.

* * *

For many years Mark Twain's brilliant speeches were the principal attraction of distinguished banquets and affairs, and it is with this thought in mind that one can wonder at the genuineness and homeliness of his topics. I invariably associate the names of Mark Twain and Abraham Lincoln.

ADVERTISE IN THE EVENING ADVOCATE

THE WORLD'S PRESS

British Industry.
(Morning Post.))

It is high time that British industry and British commerce shook themselves free from the baneful influence of the German industrial and commercial system and founded themselves on the old national ideal of independence and security. We might again have been the workshop of the world if we had not been so much influenced by those whose ideal is to make us the bucket shop of the world.

France, The Stumbling Block.
(Washington Post.)

France is the stumbling block in the way of an understanding between the other allies and Germany. France ocupies the key position in this business. France desires close alliance with Britain, but she is still more concerned in keeping her grip upon Germany until the account is squared. So it seems highly improbable that Britain's proposal will bring about adjustment of the reparations question.

The People's Remedy.
(Egyptian Mail.-

In Egypt, when people suspect they are being "done in the eye," they become helpless and bleat to the authorities, who are much too busy, or too bored, or too hot, or too incompetent to pay any attention to them. And, anyway, why should the authorities pay attention to a lot of filleted sheep who don't seem to realize that in such a case they have only to show determination and pull together for a brief period to bring the profiteer to his knees.

The Liberal Ambition.
(Daily News.)

The Coalition is dead, and nobody really cares how Mr. Lloyd George seeks to defend it. The Treaty of Versailles, whatever may be said of it a debating society, has produced in Europe such a chaos that, like most treaties, its results will certainly have to be revised. We believe, as Liberals, that there is a great work for Liberalism to do both at home and abroad. It is a work in which any man can take a hand who chooses to do so upon one simple condition. The condition is that he is a Liberal.

The Empire Exhibition.
(Adelaide Chronicle.)

It is impossible for anyone with the smallest concern for the country with whose prosperity his own is indissolubly linked not to follow with the closest interest the arrangements for the representation of the Commonwealth at the Empire Exhibition next year. It is on a knowledge of our products that a market for them depends, and though disseminate this knowledge, there is no better medium for communicating with potential customers than a well-selected and well-organized display of our wares in the trading centre of the Empire and the world.

Forest Preservation.
(La Presse.)

Some years ago we started and developed the intensive and highly remunerative exploitation of our forest wealth and now we think only of speeding this exploitation up and realizing whatever profits we can get. We are encouraged meanwhile and egged on to the felling of our own timber by American capitalists, who are only too anxious to get their share of this harvest, of which their own improvidence has deprived the United States. It is high time that some wise policy, carefully considered and pursued unflinchingly, should be embarked to assure us the preservation of our forest riches, which are so essential to the prosperity of the province. We must put a curb on these appetites, whose voracity is sure to leave our larders bare.

BALDWIN DEFEATS OPPOSITION PLEAS FOR ARMS PARLEY

LONDON, July 24. — J. Ramsay Macdonald, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, moved a resolution yesterday in favor of convening an international conference to discuss the limitation of armaments, but the House rejected the proposition 286 to 169.

No vote was taken on an amendment introduced by R. W. O'Neill, which had been accepted by the Government, inviting the Government to take the earliest favorable opportunity to attain the object desired thru the agency of the League of Nations. This was talked out.

The Opposition leader explained that no mention had been made in his resolution of the League of Nations because that organization had not yet won the confidence of all the important nations of the world. It was most desirable that the United States should come into such a conference, and he wanted to make it perfectly clear to the people of the United States that there was no wish to make it difficult for them to come in.

The debate on Mr. Macdonald's resolution in favor of a disarmament conference turned less on the ideal to be attained than on the manner of attainin it. The Govt. could not meet the Labor resolution with a simple negative because, as R. W. O'Neill confessed, such a course would create a misunderstanding abroad and would not represent the real feelings ot the mass of the people.

Briefly, Mr. O'Neill's amendment was to the effect that the House views with alarm the danger of renewed competition in armaments and considers that the Government should at the earliest favorable opportunity use its utmost influence through the League of Nations to bring about general limitation of armaments.

IN DARK GLOOM

Mr. Macdonald had represented the world as sitting under the dark gloom of threatened war and reverting to its 1914 frame of mind. He denounced the Singapore project as colossal folly on the part of the Government and invited the nation to take the lead in international disarmament.

O'Neill argued that an immediate disarmament conference was impracticable, and, until the Ruhr difficulty was settled, undesirable. He advocated direct negotiations with France for disarmament and also urged that Great Britain should offer France an unconditional guarantee against aggression to replace the abortive Anglo-American convention.

Asquith agreed fully with the substance of Mr. Macdonald's resolution and speech, and only regretted its implication of ignoring the League of Nations as the proper vehicles to attain disarmament. He again appealed to the Government to stay its hand with regard to Singapore until the Imperial Conference had considered the question.

EXTREME DANGER

Sir Samuel Hoare, the Air Minister, emphasizing the Government's difficulties, contended that even were the Government to summon such a conference there was no reason to suppose that Russia or France would respond. He asserted that the whole history of the past four or five years proved the extreme danger of starting international conferences until there was some definite measure of agreement and a program had been prepared.

Premier Baldwin, replying, emphasized the difficulties of carrying out a policy with which everybody was in sympathy. The mistake must not be made of thinking that what might be war weariness was necessarily an access of innate good will.

Alluding to the growth in Europe since the war of feelings of extreme nationalism which, unless corrected, might bear the seeds of peril to peace, he said the Government believed that any attempt now to convene an international conference would not lead to success but to indefinite postponement of any possibility of achieving the end all desired. It was hopeless to approach the question until the problems of reparations and security of frontiers were settled.

The Prime Minister felt it would be hopeless to expect a favorable answer from France until these questions were disposed of, or from Poland until she could feel that her frontiers were secure against the gigantic and powerful neighbor along her eastern border. The first step to be taken was the one which the Government was now taking—an attempt to settle the problem of reparations.

MAN'S TIGER INSTINCT.

One of the greatest difficulties facing the Government was the inherent fighting instinct of man; it was the instinct of the tiger and dated from his creation. This instinct was to be found even among men whose political views would class them as pacifists. He would remind the House that for thirty years preceding the civil war in the United States, the anti-slavery agitation in the North-eastern states was largely, if not entirely, in the hands of professed pacifists and anti-militarists, and when that agitation brought men to the point of either surrendering the principle of anti-slavery or going to war, the pacifists, quite rightly, in his belief, said it shall be war.

Remaring that the dark days following upon the war had brought three valuable Washington agreements, which most statesmen would previously have thought impossible of attainment, the Prime Minister expressed great hope for the future through the exploratory work of the League of Natiois, now engaged in the province of limitation of armaments and security, and he declared there was one great instrument of peace already in the world, namely, the British Empire.

The difference between the resolution and the amendment was really a difference of time, and the Government believed that any attempt to act immediately would only lead to failure.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 28—Returns for Manitoba's two new sources of taxation, future grain trading and gasoline sales, which are expected to produce $225,000 annually, show a substantial sum collected for the first months' operation, the provincial treasury department collecting $16,808,10 for the business transacted in May. Future grain trading yielded $8,429.52 and the gasoline tax $8,438.58

The tax on future grain trading is six cents a 1,000 bushels on wheat, three cents on oats, barley and rye, and 12 cents on flax. The tax on gasoline is one cent a gallon.

A 160 firms on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange contributed to the trading tax, and 13 companies paid taxes on 843,858 gallons of gasoline sold thru out the province for the month of May.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 6—In the history of the Turf, cases of jockeys winning with their first mount are rare indeed. Two years ago an Ottawa lad, Charles or "Chick" Chalmers entered Turfdom's hall of fame by performing this feat on a steed named Dinty Moore, at the Dorval track near Montreal.

Young Chalmers, along with Sammy Robertson, a youngster connected with The Canadian Press had been journeying out to Connaught Park where the both were both given plenty of exercise mounts. After the Connaught meeting was over Sammy struck to his work with The Canadian Press and Chick went to Montreal.

One day there came a race at Dorval that called for "maiden" jockeys. That is, only jockeys who had ridden a winner were eligible. Chalmeers had never had a mount in a race, let alone a winner but he had plenty of confidence and the owner of Dinty agreed to let him ride the horse. That he won is a matter of history and since then Chalmers has climbed rapidly to the front. Today he is considered a first-class rider and one of the best of lightweight jockeys.

League Football

SAINTS WIN FROM STAR—3 TO 1

There was a fair attendance at last night's football game between the Star and Saints and a fine exhibition was given. The Star football team was present in name only as there were five substitutes playing. The first period witnessed some lively action on the part of both teams and the fans enjoyed the game. No scoring was done in this period and something lively was expected when play recommenced. After the short rest the Saints began to press the Star defence and Elton, senior, scored first blood for his team by a long short from centre, which Duggan, who was playing goal, misjudged. Encouraged by this lead the Saints continued to attack and shortly afterwards the younger Elton found the net for number two. Soon after play began again Hopkins and Elton combined and banged in number three. The Star then became aggressive and pressed the Saints hard in an effort to score, and about two minutes before full time they got in one. Despite their best efforts no further scoring resulted and the game concluded, Saints 3, Star 1. The Junior League is occupying the field tonight, and Thursday evening the C. E. I. and Saints will compete.

Arrested on Larceny Charge

Last evening Detectives Lee and Walsh arrested two young men, residents of Topsail, on a charge of larceny. It appears that a quantity of harness was recently stolen from the farm of Mr. Charles Steer, and suspicion rested on one of the farm hands, who it appears stole the harness and transferred it to his friend, who waited on the road nearby. The police were acquainted and Detectives Lee and Walsh being put on the case, the arrest of both followed, and they appeared before the Magistrate this morning.

Splendid Gift To Kilbride Church

By the last "Silvia" from New York Hon. F. McNamara imported a "Blymer" Church Bell and presented it to Rev. J. J. Rawlins, P.P., for his new church, Kilbride Parish.

This bell is made by the celebrated "Blymer" Foundries, Cincinnati, Ohio, measures 42 inches and weighs about 1200 lbs. when adjusted. We understand the Bell will be blessed in a few days by His Grace Archbishop Roche and will be placed in the belfry of the Church before the end of the month.

Rev. Father Rawlins as well as the Kilbride Parishioners are very grateful indeed to Hon. Mr. McNamara for this token of generosity.

IT'S JUST WONDERFUL

Yesterday's Proceedings At House of Assembly

The House met yesterday at the usual hour. Questions were tabled by Sir Michael Cashin re printing and a vote under contingencies of $2500.00 paid to the Tariff Revision Commission.

Mr. Walsh asked the Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of the House a statement, giving (a) the estimated amount charged by the Nfld. Publishers Ltd., for printing the four volumes of the Census; (b) how much money has been advanced on account, the date and amount of each cheque; (c) when was the work submitted to the printers, and how much of it is done to date.

The Prime Minister gave notice of resolutions re new industrial projects with H. J. Crowe, Morris J. Mooney and others.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries introduced a bill to encourage trade with the West Indies, which was read a first time. Part votes on supply passed at last sitting were agreed to.

The House then went into Committee of Whole on supply.

Minister of Marine, Grimes, and Minister of Public Works, Piccott, justified the pensioning of Messrs. Mercer, Norman and Belbin. These men were, 75, 69 and 62 years of age and had given good service to the Government. They had been recommended because of the services they had rendered.

Mr. Higgins stated that his information was that the men themselves did not want to be pensioned. If they were satisfied he had nothing further to say on their behalf.

Mr. Sullivan asked about the pension of W. J. Blandford. His information was that he was only in the Civil Service for three years.

The Prime Minister stated that his information was that Mr. Blandford was seventy-two years of age. It was true that he was only employed for a period of three years. He was also not to be trusted. Through his action he came near burning down the Lunatic Asylum. The Government rather than put him on the street, pensioned him.

Hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, Mr. Downey, presented a petition from the residents of Thompkins, St. George's. He referred to the difficulties the farmers in this section have in getting their produce to the railway line, and also to the fact that there were no storage facilities, consequently serious losses often occurred. Petitions ask that a siding and shed be erected.

Sir Michael Cashin objected to the appointment of Mr. C. J. Fierey, as Railway Inspector and further objected to appointment of Commissioners in the Department of Mines and Agriculture on the ground that with the abolition of the Model Farm and the reduced vote, there was nothing for the Commissioners to do.

Hon. the Prime Minister in replying to Sir Michael Cashin, pointed out that the offices referred to were not the creation of this or the late Government. They were made under the Morris Government, of which Sir Michael Cashin was an Executive Member. He very well knew the reasons why the law had been changed to permit members of the House of Assembly to hold office of emolument without seeking re-election. He agreed that the principle was bad, but he had come into office with the present estimates already prepared, and regarded it unfair that it should be made to appear that the present administration was responsible for the present conditions. It was thoroughly well known that these positions were from the start intended to be political appointments. Two of the first Commissioners, now passed away, had no practical knowledge along agricultural lines, and the same may be said of the present appointees. Messrs Higgins and Walsh strongly opposed the voting of the salaries of the Agricultural Commissioners. The vote stood over.

Mr. Downey defended the early Commissioners and paid a tribute to the excellent work performed by the late Messrs. Devereaux and Seymour in carrying out the Morris Agricultural Policy, and did an immense amount of clerical and detail work which was of great value in carrying out the programme of the Morris Government, and its efforts to foster agricultural pursuits.

The vote under the head of Public Works, was next considered.

Mr. Higgins wanted further details respecting the expenditure of $169.931.00 at the West End Rock Shed and $129.182.00 at the East End Rock Shed, in all $350,000.00. The particulars and accounts were promised by the Minister.

Mr. Woodford praised the work of the Motor Association and the Road Commission for the improved condition of the Main Line around Conception Bay, particularly from St. John's to Holyrood. He wanted the Government to consider a suggestion of $1.00 or 50c. against every dollar contributed by motor drivers in the way of taxes, and complained that the people in the Western End of Hr. Main District, when road work was being done, were discriminated against because of mere politics.

Hon. the Prime Minister pointed out to the member for Hr. Main that the Government's contribution was regulated by law, and he could give no undertaking that anything further would be done this year. Any further expenditures would have to be made out of an allocation which may be made later on for relief purposes.

FALL IN MARK IS CAUSING CONFUSION

Retailers In Berlin Are Closing Their Doors.

BERLIN, Aug. 7—Utter confusion prevailed in the retail situation in all lines in Greater Berlin to-day due to the continued plunging of the mark and consequent rise of the dollar, while the food situation continues to show a chronic shortage in ordinary staples. Hourly rises of prices causey by the flunctuating of the mark are prejecting a new and serious element into the situation as retailers are withdrawing their wares from sale whenever customers refuse to pay prices based on the gold mark or dollar units. Many shops have already shut down, barricaded their doors and emptied their windows of all displays. Once the Government succeeds in putting its reform measures into practical operation private trade and commerce are expected to adapt themselves to the new order, thus completing the job of permanently jettisoning the paper mark. The Government virtually has abandoned all further attempts to peg the mark or save it from the abysmal plunge. The Government proceses to mark recently floated internal gold loans the crux of the new national currency.

T. A. Juveniles Had Enjoyable Outing

The T. A. Juvenile Outing which took place at Donovan's Monday past was, in every way, a great success. At 11.30 a.m. upwards of 300 boys andg irls went out to the hostelry by special train. On arrival there they were treated to a light lunch, and games werei ndulged in until about 2 o'clock, when dinner was served. After dinner various athletic tournaments were held and the youngsters enjoyed themselves immensely. President Ellis, of the Parent Society, motored from town during the afternoon and delivered an address to the boys in which he encouraged the min their fine showing and urged them to keep the Juvenile Society always up to the high standard it occupies at present.

The boys returned to town at 8.30 after having spent a thoroughly enjoyable day.

At night the adults held a dance which was attended by over 200 people. The Prince's Orchestra provided the music and the dance was one of the most successful in the history of the Society.

The Guardians of the Juvenile branch and the committee who looked after the day's program are to be congratulated on such a splendid outing as was that of 1923.

PRESIDENT'S FUNERAL IS IMPRESSIVE SIGHT

Are Not Present Coal Prices Unjustifiable ?

A Nation Pays Silent Tribute to Honored Dead

Thousands Take Final Leave of Beloved President as Body Lies In State In White House.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—Warren Harding left Washington last night for ever. His short, eventful moment of power and heavy care has ended.

Grim-voiced distant guns shook the nation's Farewell. As the funeral train drew out, a legion of armed men stood with rifles and sabres at the salute. Great folk and small in their thousands stood silent and with heads bared, and the dead President was gone; but behind him, memories such as he would be proud to know, lingered in men's minds as they thought of him.

From the dim East Room, the dead President was borne into the vivid sunshine. The pealing of a trumpet sent long lines of steel flashing to the salute. A moment later it marshalled the soldiers and sailors down the avenue to the Capitol, General Pershing riding in command.

Down through the long valley of mourning thousands the cortege wound to the capitol, the body of the President followed first by President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft and Woodrow Wilson.

The muffled drums took up the tale as the column climbed up the winding tree-shaded way. The throbbing of the drums gave way to the softly-rising tones of a great army band that played "Lead Kindly Light" as the flag-wound casket was lifted slowly up the long wide stone steps, flanked by its honor-guard of high Generals and Admirals.

The heavy casket was carried slowly to its place, a single wreath of bright colors resting above the sleeper.

The erect, slender figure of the sorrowful widow moved with her escort of those who served most intimately with the dead chieftain, to a place near the head of the bier. Her face was almost invisible behind the black veil she wore.

The religious ceremonies were striking in their simplicity, just the short prayers, the murmuring of low voices joining in the Lord's Prayer, the Scripture readings, and the blending voices of a male quartette in "Lead Kindly Light" the hymn best beloved by the dead President, and at the end, "Nearer, My God, To Thee;" then the Benediction.

When Mrs. Harding had gone the new President and his cabinet, the diplomats, generals and admirals all filed out and the great chamber was cleared except for the armed sentries. Then the flag of the casket was drawn back, the heavy steel cover was set aside, and those who knew him in life saw again the face of Warren Harding. It was a peaceful face, untouched by the ravages of his brief illness, the broad brow was tranquil, and save for the slight pallor of death, he might have been asleep. It hardly seemed that the spirit might have fled, that the eyelids would not lift presently to show the kindly, thoughtful eyes beneath.

The Eastern doors were thrown open and the waiting column of people, a mile long, passed by the bier four abreast. More than three thousand people, it is estimated, saw the body, and as many more were turned back disappointed after long hours in the moving lines.

The casket was taken to the station and placed on board the train.

Without sound of bell or whistle, the train began to move slowly down the track on the last journey to Marion. Waren Harding has gone from Washington for ever.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8—President Harding's funeral train reached Washington at 10.20 last night. Thousands jammed the station and approaches; the concourse waiting for hours for the arrival.

The train backed into the station so that the funeral car, with its flag-draped casket came in first. The lights in the car cast a brilliant glow in the train shed as Mrs. Harding stepped off the car leaning on Secretary Christian's arm and with Dr. Sawyer on her other side.

The band played "Nearer My God to Thee" as the casket was lifted from the special door cut in the side of the car, and placed on a rolling platform.

Mrs. Harding reached the White House at 10.45 p.m., just as her husband's body was being taken into the President's room.

At the station it was borne through the long room and to the plaza and lifted to the draped gun caison, then with military escort, and followed by a long cortege, including President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft, Secretary Hughes and members of the Cabinet, the body was taken to the White House and was carried in its casket tenderly into the East room with its endless bank of flowers from the great ones of the world.

Thousands Pay Tribute

A swelling tide of honors bore Warren Harding to-day back over the road by which he came triumphant to the Presidency two crowded years ago. Among the tens of thousands of his silent countrymen grouped along the way, he passed in such state as only the great dead of the nation are accorded. He was carried down the wide avenue, with marching legions tramping ahead to lay him under the Dome of the Capitol for a brief space before his native state received the mortal remains of her most distinguished son.

General Pershing rode ahead of the cortege that passed down the silent, crowded street from the White House to the Capitol, while behind him and preceding the carriage marched thousands of military, their bayonets glittering in the warm sun.

Following was President Coolidge, grieving that high office came at such a sorrowful cost and with him the only living men who had held that high office, one so crippled in illness that he might not give himself as he would to the sorrowing duty of the day. Woodrow Wilson and William H. Taft.

The flag-draped casket was laid open beneath the Dome where thousands passed in silent procession throughout the day to bid their last farewell to the much loved President, so soon to leave Washington forever.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—One hundred and seventy-five persons were prosterated by heat yesterday while watching the funeral of late President Rarding. All are expected to recover.

MARVALE'S CAPTAIN SAYS WRECK WAS DUE TO TIDE

Official Enquiry Has Begun In London.

LONDON, Aug. 9—Official inquiry into the loss of the Canadian Pacific liner Marvale off the Southern Coast of Newfoundland, May 20th, without loss of life, was opened in London to-day.

Butler Aspinalt, K. C., representing the Board of Trade described the circumstances of the week.

Captain Lewis, of the Marvale, dwelt on the unfavorable ice conditions and attributed the stranding to unusual atmospheric conditions and abnormal current which was nearer the coast than had been anticipated.

The captain said he had been in command of sixteen ships since 1914 and this was his first casualty. The inquiry was adjourned.

YONG GIRL IS MURDERED BY LOVER AT TORONTO

Slayer Commandeers Motor Car, But Later Gives Himself Up To Police.

TORONTO, Aug. 9—Erie Johnson a seventeen year old Hamilton girl was shot and killed on the steps of her home before the eyes of her parents, brothers and sisters, at eleven thirty last night by her sweetheart, George King, age twenty five, who was arrested here four hours later. King said good night to his swetheart then called her to his side saying he wished to give her a letter to post for him. The letter was addressed to his mother and immediately the girl took it from him he drew a heavy revolver and shot her through the chest. She died a few minutes later. King wanted to marry Miss Johnson, but her parants objected because of her youth. Immediately after the shooting King dashed down the street and jumped into a passing motor car. Pressing his revolver against the driver's side he forced him to drive all the way to Toronto, where the murderer who takled readily of his deed and expressed regret gave himself up to the police. He said he had planned to suicide before the police came, but delayed too long.

Cuno Reviews Situation in the Reichstag's

GERMANY IS NOT DELUDED AS TO SYMPATHY TO BE EXPECTED.

BERLIN, Aug. 9—French procedure in the Ruhr and Rhineland makes negotiations with the French wholly impossible, Chancellor Cuno told the Reichstag this afternoon in the course of his promised review of the internal and foreign situation.

Referring to the present stage of the Anglo-French conversations, he said: "In her endeavour to continue cordial relations with her former comrade-in-arms, England undoubtedly made concessions to France, and while it is not for us to pass judgement on them, we at the same time believe ourselves free of the folly of expecting sympathies in quarters where we know they are not present."

If current conversations among the entente nations are not productive of tangible results, Germany will be wholly reconciled, said the Chancellor, to the realization that she is dependent upon herself and that her battle will be fought in the spirit of self-reliance.

FORTY SIX MOROS ARE WIPED OUT

Philipine Constabulary Kill Maddened Fanatics.

MANILA, Aug. 9—Details of a battle between a detachment of Philipine Constabulary and Moro religious fanatics, which began last Saturday in Lanao District, Island of Minadanao, resulting in the killing of forty-six maddened natives and wounding of three constables, came to Governor Wood by teleghaph to-day.

A band of crazed Moros have been causing trouble for some time and the commander of the troops in that district decided delay in cleaning out the danger zone would mean greater loss of life, and a body of Constabulary set out into the wild country to wipe out the band. Forty-six were killed and twenty were reported to be still holding out in their mountain fastnesses but would be captured or killed.

At 12.10 yesterday afternoon the Central and East End firemen were called to Colonial Street where soot in a chimney had caught fire. No damage was done and the all out sounded five minutes later.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER II.

The silt settled and dried, and almost immediately thereafter a squatter took possession of the Sawdust Pile. Across the neck of this little promontory, and in line with the extreme high-water mark on each side, he erected a drift-wood fence; he had a canvas, drift-wood, and corrugated iron shanty well under way when Hector McKaye appeared on the scene and bade him a pleasant good morning.

The squatter turned from his labor and bent upon his isitor an appraising glance. His scrutiny appearing to satisfy him as to the identity of the latter, he straightened suddenly and touched his forelock in a queer little salute that left one in doubt whether he was a former member of the United States navy or the British mercantile marine. He was a threadbare little man, possibly sixty years old, with a russet, kindly countenance and mild blue eyes; apart from his salute, there was about him an intangible hint of the sea. He was being assisted in his labors by a ragamuffin girl of perhaps thirteen years.

"Thinking of settling in Port Agnew?" The Laird inquired.

"Why, yes, sir. I thought this might make a good safe anchorage for Nan and me. My name is Caleb Brent. You're Mr. MCKaye, aren't you?"

The Laird nodded.

"I had an idea, when I filled this spot in and built that bulkhead, Mr. Brent, that some day this would make a safe anchorage for some of ymlumber. I planned a drying yard here. What's that you're building, Brent, a henhouse?"

Caleb Brent flushed.

"Why, no, sir. I'm making shift to build a home for Nan and me."

"Is this little one Nan?"

The ragamuffin girl, her head slightly on one side, had been regarding Hector McKaye with alert curiosity mingled with furitive apprehension. As he glanced at her now, she remembered her manners and dropped him a curtesy—an electric, half-defiant jerk that reminded The Laird of a similar greeting custorarily exchanged by squinch-owls.

Nan was not particularly clean, and her one-piece dress, of blue navy-uniform cloth was old and worn and spotted. Over this dress she wore a boy's coarse red-worsted sweater with white-pearl buttons. The skin of her thin neck was fine and creamy; the calves of her bare brown legs were shapely, her feet small, her ankles dainty.

With the quick eye of the student of character, this man, proud of his own ancient lineage for all his humble beginning, noted that her hands, though brown and uncared-for, were small and dimpled, with long, delicate fingers. She had sea-blue eyes like Caleb Brent's and, like his, they were sad and wistful; a frowsy wilderness of golden hair, very fine and held in confinement at the nape of her neck by the simple expedient of a piece of twine, showed all too plainly the lack of a mother's care.

The Laird returned Nan's courtesy with a patronizing inclination of his head.

"Your granddaughter, I presume?" he addresed Caleb Brent.

"No; my daughter, sir. I was forty when I married, and Nan came ten years later. She's thirteen now, and her mother's been dead ten years."

Hector McKaye had an idea that the departed mother was probably just as well, if not better off, free of the battle for existence which appeared to confront this futile old man and his elf of a daughter. He glanced at the embryo shack under construction and, comparing it with his own beautiful home on the Tyee Head, he turned toward the bight. A short distance off the bulkhead, he observed a staunch forty-foot motor-cruiser at anchor. She would have been the better for a coat of paint; undeniably he was of a piece with Caleb Brent and Nan, for, like them, the Laird had never seen her before.

"Yours?" he queried.

"Yes, sir."

"You arrived in her, then?"

"I did, sir. Nan and I came down from Bremerton in her, sir."

The Laird owned many ships, and he noted the slurring of the "sir" as only an old sailor can slur it. And there was a naval base at Bremerton.

"You're an old sailor, aren't you, Brent?" he pursued.

Yes, Sir. I was retired a chief petty officer, sir. Thirty years' continuous service, sir—and I was in the mercantile marine at sixteen. I served my time as a shipwright. Am—am I intruding here, sir?"

The Laird smiled, and followed the smile with a brief chuckle.

"Well—yes and no. I haven't any title to this land you've elected to occupy, although I created it. You see, I'm sort of lord of creation around here. My people call me 'The Laird of Tyee," and nobody but a strager would have the courage to squat on the Sawdust Pile without consulting me. What's your idea about it, Brent?"

"I'll go if you want me to, sir."

"I mean what's your idea if you stay? What do you expect to do for a living?"

"You will observe, sir, that I have fenced off only that portion of the dump beyond high-water mark. That takes in about half of it—about an acre and a half. Well, I thought I'd keep somec hickens and raise some garden truck. This silt will grow anything. And I have my launch, and can do some towing, maybe, or take fishing parties out. I might supply the town with fish. I understand you import your fish from Seattle—and with the sea right here at your door."

"I see. And you have your three-quarters pay as a retired chief petty officer?"

"Yes, sir."

"Anything in the bank? I do not ask these personal questions, Brent, cut of idle curiosity. This is my town, you know, and there is no poverty in it. I'm rather proud of that, so I——"

"I understand you, sir. That's why I came to Port Agnew. I saw your son yesterday, and he said I could stay."

"Oh! Well, that's all right, then. if Donald told you to stay, stay you shall. Did he give you the Sawdust Pile?"

"Yes, sir; he did!"

"Well, I had other plans for it, Brent; but since you're here, I'll offer no objection."

Nan now piped up.

"We haven't any money in the bank, Mr. Laird, but we have some saved up."

"Indeed! That's encouraging. Where do you keep it?"

"I nthe brown teapot in the galley. We've got a hundred and ten dollars."

"Well, my little lady, I think you might do well to take your hundred and ten dollars out of the teapot and deposit it in Port Agnew bank. Suppose that motor cruiser should spring a leak and sink?"

Nan smiled and shook her head in negation. They had beaten round Cape Flattery in that boat, and she had onfidences in it.

"Would you know my boy if you should see him again, Nan?" the Laird sudenly demanded.

"Oh, yes, indeed, sir! He's such a nice bay."

"I think, Nan, hat if you asked him, he might help your father build this house."

"I'll see him this afternoon when he comes out of high school," Nan declared.

"You might call on Andrew Daney, my general manager," The Laird continued, turning to Caleb Brent, "and make a dicker with him for hauling our garbage scow out to sea and dumping it. I observe that your motor-boat is fitted with towing bitts. We dump twice a week. And you may have a monopoly of fresh fish if yiu desire it. We have no fishermen here, because I do not care for Greeks and Scilians in Port Agnew. And they're about the only fishermen on this coast."

"Thank you, Mr. McKaye."

"Mind you don't abuse your monopoly. If you do, I'll take it away from you."

"You are very kind, sir. And can I have the Sawdust Pile, sir?"

"Yes; since Donald gave it to you. However, I wish you'd tear down that patchwork fence and replace it with a decent job the instant you can afford it."

"Ah,just wait," old Brent promised. "I know how to make things neat and pretty and keep them ship-shape. You just keep your eyes on the Sawdust Pile, sir." The old wind-bitten face flushed with pride; the faded sea-blue eyes shone with joyous anticipation. "I've observed your pride in your town, sir, and be-fore I get through, I'll have a prettier place than the best of them."

A few days later, The Laird looked across the Bight of Tyee from his home on the Tyee Head, and through his marine glasses studied the Sawdust Pile. He chuckled as he observed that the ramshackle shanty had disappeared almost as soon as it had started and in its place a small cottage was being erected. There was a pile of lumber in the yard—bright lumber, fresh from the saws—and old Caleb Brent and his motherless Nan were being assisted by twe carpenters on the Tyee Lumber Company's payroll.

When onald came home from school that night, The Laird asked him about the inhabitants of the Sawdust Pile with relation to the lumber and the two carpenters.

"Oh, I made a trade with Mr. Brent and Nan. I'm to furnish thel umber and furniture for the house, and those two carpenters weren't very busy, So Mr. aney told me I could have them to help out. In return, Mr. Brent is going to build me a sloop and teach me how to sail it."

The Laird nodded.

EXCRUCIATING PAINS, CRAMPS

Entirely Remedied by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Eberts, Ont.—"I started with cramps and bearing-down pains at the age of eleven years, and I would get so nervous I could hardly stay in bed, and I had such pains that I would scream, and my mother would call the doctor to give me something to take. At eighteen I married, and I have four healthy children, but I still have pains in my right side. I am a farmer's wife with more work than I am able to do. I have taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel that it is helping me every day. My sister-in-law, who has been taking your medicine for some time and uses your Sanative Wash, told me about it and I recommend it now, as I have received great relief from it."—Mrs. NELSON YOTT, R. R. 1, Eberts, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for ailments common to women. It has been used for such troubles for nearly fifty years, and thousands of women have found relief as did Mrs. Yott, by taking this splendid medicine.

If you are suffering from irregularity, painful times, nervousness, headache, backache or melancholia, you should at once begin to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is excellent to strengthen the system and help to perform its functions with ease and regularity. C

C.L.B. SPORTS DAY

Yesterday the weather was cool and the right temperature for the annual sports. The afternoon was fairly fine. The music was supplied by the Battalion Band and a large number of visitors were present. No sickness is reported in camp by Captain Fred. Burden, chief medical officer.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady visited Topsail and were the guests of Sir Edgar Bowring at the parsonage.

In the evening the weather was uncertain owing to the rain which continued until about 6 o'clock. Lt.-Col. Rendell, officer commanding, on consultation with Major Tait, M. C., camp commandant, decided to postpone the official inspection until the weather is suitable, likely on Saturday.

The boys break up camp on Saturday morning at seven, when kind friends of the Rotary Club, Motor Association and others will transport the lads back to the city.

Captain French and Mrs. French who were in camp yesterday, motored home to Bay Roberts during the evening.

A serious incident occurred on Tuesday when the two cooks, Sergt. Cook Roberts and Corporal Cook Butler, suffering from overwork—applied for leave to the orderly officer of the day, Lieut. ——— who, by an oversight, signed on official order, giving them twenty-four hours leave! If the cooks had proceeded on leave as entitled, the officer would have been court martialed and dismissed from the service. All ranks are glad Major Tait, camp commandant, discovered the matter in time—nothing escapes the eagle eyes and ears of the Major.

Visitors to the camp yesterday included the Prime Minister, Hon. W. R. Warren, and Mrs. Warren, Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir P. T. McGrath, Sir Joseph and Lady Outerbridge, Lt.-Col. R. G. Rendell and Miss Mary Rendell, J. B. and Mrs. Urqhart, Mrs. Geo. Knowling, Mr. and Mrs. Will. Knowling, Mrs. Geo. Franklin, Mr. and Mrs. Wills, Miss Dawe, Mr. and Mrs. Payne, Capt. J. J. and Mrs. Miller, Mrs. W. Pearcey, Mrs. R. G. Ash, Rev. A. B. Stirling and Mrs. Stirling, J. B. Baird, Captain Jeffrey, Mr. Asplin of Cambridge, England, and Mrs. A. S. Lewis, who brought along two recruits for B. Company. Mrs. Walter Rendell and Doctor Carnell also visited the camp after tea.

100 yards Junior—Pte Pond, Grand Falls; Pte. Cake of St. John's.

100 yards Senior—Sergt. Tetford; Sergt. Keats; ran twice a dead heat.

100 yards Officers—Lieut. Reid; Lieut. Perlin; Lieut. Ash and Lieut. Harold Hayward equal for the spoon.

Kit Race—Pte. Rogers; Pte. Press.

Senior Half Mile—Bugler C. Stone; Corp. R. Rees.

Wheelbarrow Race Junior—Privates Wheeler and Rogers; Ptes Bartle and Kyle of Grand Falls.

Senior Obstacle Race—Sergt. Tetford; Lieut. Job. Taylor.

Senior Mile—Bugler C. Stone; Pte. Burridge.

Junior Quarter Mile—Pte. J. Pond of Grand Falls; Pte. Cake.

Intertown Relay—Sergt. Tetford, S. M. Rendell and Keats for St. John's.

Senior Sand Bag Race—Pte. C. Brown, of Grand Falls; S. M. Best.

Road Race—Bugler C. Stone; Pte. Moyst of Topsail; Pte. Butler.

Football Sixes Won by Grand Falls by three corners to two.

Cavalry tournament—Sergt. Mitchell and Pte. Taylor; Pte. C. Brown and Pte. Kyle Grand Falls.

The Sports were a brilliant success. Lieut. Fred Reid, Chairman, Captains Snow and Short; Lieut Harold Hayward and Sergt.-Major Rendell being on the committee, and who deserved to be congratulated. The prizes won will be officially presented at the concert to-morrow evening.

After the Sports yesterday tea was served to the visitors by Mrs. Tasker Cook, Mrs. Samuel Feaver and Mrs. Perlin. All ranks were delighted to see their old Lt.-Colonel, Sir Joseph Outerbridge and Lady Outerbridge and Lt.-Colonel R. G. Rendell in Camp yesterday. Sis Joseph was the first Colonel of the C. L. B. and was succeeded by Col. R. G. Rendell. Both have done magnificent work. Colonel Outerbridge securing the first Armoury, on King's Road, and Col. Rendell being responsible for the building of the forty-thousand-dollar Armoury at present in use, and handed over by him free of debt when resigning his charge. Their continued interest in their old Regiment is highly appreciated by the present executive.

Mrs. Hollands of the Sea View House Topsail, kindly contributed a prize cake which is being awarded to the lads having the best kept tent in camp.

Last evening it rained and blew a gale, but all ranks were safely under cover, and the tents were inspected and found in perfect shape. The officers are grateful to Mrs. Hugh Baird for the kind invitation to use the tennis courts at her residence.

The following officers were at the Camp yesterday: Lieut.-Col. Walter F. Rendell, C.B.E.; Major Tait, M.C.; Major Williams, Captain J. Snow, Adjutant A. S. Lewis, Capt. A. Morris Capt. P. B. Rendell, Capt. W. Short, Grand Falls; Capt. James J. Miller, Bell Island; Capt. N. French, Bay Roberts; Lieut. W. Motty, R. G. Ash, Lieut. Harold Hayward, Lieut. Fred. Reid, Lieut. J. Erley, Grand Falls; Lieut. Job Taylor, Orderly Officer; Lieut. A. B. Perlin and Chaplains Rev. A. Pitman and Arthur Stirling.

Prayers were said by the Rector of Topsail at 9.30. The Bugler sounded "lights out" at ten and all were soon asleep excepting the officers and their friends who were at their dance in the Orange Hall tripping the light fantastic toe to the music of Captain Sandy Morris's artists.—Q.

World No Longer Thrills to Tales of Russian Critics

RIGA, July 17 (AP)—Latvia has ceased to be the sole gateway to Russia for investigators from all over the world. Berlin is now the chief diving board for politicians, educators, concession chasers and relief workers who are about to plunge into red Russia. Many of them go by aeroplane. Some travel from Berlin to Moscow by way of Warsaw, and others enter through Finland and Esthonia. But most of the foreign visitors emerge from Russia through Riga. They are British, American and German, with a sprinking of Italians, Czechs and Scandinavians.

Visitors coming out of Moscow in breathless haste to tell the world "the real truth" about Russia are much surprised, frequently, to find that their hurried observations do not attract much attention. Since the beginning of international relief work in famine-stricken Russia there has been such a large number of visitors that it is no novelty for Riga to have scores of passengers out of Russia in a single day, and diplomats and journalists are well-sated with the narratives of enthusiasts who expect the world to be surprised that they were not killed.

It is no longer novel to hear that the opera in Moscow is the most "wonderful in all the world"; that the soviet government is "more securely established than any in Europe"; that Moscow "is a safer place to be than New York City," and that "illiteracy has been stamped out in the red army." The statement that "perfectly clean sleeping cars are operated between Moscow and Petrograd and between Moscow and Riga," also has lost its novelty.

Correspondents who have been listening for two years to the tales of visitors to Russia, who have spent a few days in the great Russian cities, know exactly what most of them will say. If they disclosed their sympathy with Bolshevism before they entered, they generally come out with words of high praise. If they were critical before they went in, they are generally more critical when they come out. In other words, the week-enders in Russia generally have their minds made up before they go in, and their statements on emerging are about as monotonous as oft-repeated phonograph rolls.

Of course, there are many visitors to Russia who remain there for a considerable time and give thought and study to the situation. These usually have little to say when they go in and less when they come out. They generally are not in politics; they are not about to take the stump on the Russian question, and they are not rushing into print with their views on every phase of the Russian situation.

PEDERAL GRAND JURY TAKES .....JOY OUT OF LIFE FOR HOLYWOOD ARTISTS

Los Angeles, Cal., July 26(—nited Press.)—Because Jack Pickford signed cheques for $60 and $115, said to have been in payment for half a case of gin and a case of Scotch whiskey, he has been subpoenaed to appear here to-morrow as the "star" witness in the Federal grand jury investigation of the so-called "movie liquor ring."

The cheques were found in the possession of J. G. Irving, Dave Lerner, and other asserted bootleggers, in the course of a raid several months ago, according to Federal agents.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 9th, 1923

What's In A Name?

The Telegram referred again yesterday to that condition which the Advocate some time ago described as the "Deadly Inertia," which our contemporary at the same time diagnosed as "misdirected energy," and which other writers, before and since, have called "indifference."

Here is an instance where the question may reasonably be asked "what's in a name"?

The important point is that the existence of this national laxity is becoming generally realized and the necessity for a cure is making itself generally felt.

We fear, however, that the root of the trouble is much deeper than the Telegram seems to imagine, it is far more irradicable than that paper's remarks on the subject would indicate. The inertia, the mis-directed energy, the indifference or whatever one might please to call the disease that is slowly but surely gnawing at the vitals of our country is not the outcome of ignorance nor is it born of inexperience. In all too many cases it is the result of crass contrariness, petty jealousy and political enmity.

A paragraph from the Telegram editorial under review will serve to emphasize this point. It says in relation to our fishery problem:

> "This is unquestionably a matter with which the Government of the country must deal, but so far we have looked on, while our competitors have tackled the difficulties and overcome them, and then encroached upon our markets. There are men in the country who have made a life long study of our staple industry. It is of course impossible to expect all of them to agree on a policy in every particular, but if we could find a leader who, having given careful consideration to the various views held by those engaged in the fish business, merchant as well as fisherman, would introduce legislation enforcing under penalty the regulations which he felt would be the most effective, the energy expended at present in various directions would be directed towards one object, and success would follow."

It will be remembered that when an honest effort was being made to do just what the Telegram now suggests, that effort was twisted and turned, misrepresented and lied about until the originators of it were made to appear as monsters and the people were convinced that the "restriction of trade" that was being practiced was nothing more or less than a deliberate attempt to bankrupt the country.

In that campaign of misrepresentation the Telegram was a powerful factor, not however, be it said to his credit, under the editorship of the gentleman who to-day occupies its editorial chair.

Did the Telegram at that time denounce a national policy of exportation because it believed such a policy to be actually harmful to the best interests of the Colony? Not at all. The Telegram, like others whose voices swelled the chorus of condemnation, was but playing a political game, and in the mind of the Telegram, as in the minds of the others, where there was a game of politics to be played the Colony and the people could go hang.

If the Telegram today wants to learn the cause of the trouble for which he now seeks a name he will find it in the foregoing.

In the meantime, what was begun by political hatred and narrow-mindedness has been continued by indifference. Because exporters, backed by politicians, lent themselves to trickery and worse at a period in the country's history when breadth of vision and sincerity of purpose could have wrought so much permanent good, we have to-day, as the Telegram puts it, poverty and discontent where there might and should be prosperity and happiness.

"Restriction of trade" was the name given the course the Telegram now suggests when it was sought to be adopted, but what steps have those who kicked so hard against any such policy taken since they are no longer so "restricted"? They haven't, of their own volition or on their own initiative made a solitary move in the direction whence alone a solution of our principal difficulty can come. Neither have they attempted to act on the suggestions put forward by others, nor have they even taken the trouble to find out whether or not such suggestions were worthy of consideration. Whether it be through inertia or indifference, it is a fact that Newfoundland's exporters are not, and have not for years past been playing the game.

What Of The Future?

According to Thomas Edison, the famous inventor, there exists no means of preventing a flotilla of airplanes from flying over London or any other city and spreading a gas that would poison millions in the space of three hours.

If such be the case, and chemical science has made such strides as to make probable what has heretofore been considered the impossible, mankind can ill afford to undergo another great war. It has been said that if mankind does not end war, war will end mankind. It is now a race as to which will kill the other first.

The blackening horizon of Europe has almost hidden the rays of that peace which the great world conflict was to ensure for all time.

The Price Of Coal

In reply to a question asked in the House of Assembly regarding the matter of the coal supply for railway purposes, Prime Minister Warren stated that owing to special arrangements made with the British Empire Steel Corporation, the railway supply will be $6.00 per long ton, free on board steamer at Sydney.

It is understood this arrangement was made before the recent Sydney strike, and if the Railway Company had not been thus safeguarded, the probabilities of a higher figure would have to be reckoned with.

With freights to Humbermouth and Argentia at the rate of $1.40 per ton, to St. John's at $1.45, and to Clarenville and Lewisporte at $1.50 per ton, the railway, under Mr. Russell, is getting a comparatively cheap coal supply, for which those responsible should be congratulated.

The question arises, are prices of coal for domestic purpose fair and justifiable when railway coal can be obtained at above mentioned rates?

According to advertisements running in the daily press, coal prices range from $14.80 to $15.00 per ton.

Into whose pockets goes the difference between prices of the railway supply and the domestic supply?

This is a matter of public importance and it will be only fair to the public to know the truth, as to whether they are being fleeced or not.

If the prices charged are justifiable, it will be only fair to coal dealers to have public suspicion in the matter removed.

One Bond In Common

"We have one bond in common," declared President Harding during his last speech in Vancouver, on the tour which ended so tragically, "we all speak the English language, and in my country and Canada we speak it in the same way."

The voice of the American statesman is now stilled, but there is a great significance in this one of his last public statements.

President Harding was an ardent advocate for peace. His efforts in connection with the Washington Conference on Disarmaments will immortalise him in the pages of history. He believed in the influence on world peace of the continued friendly relations between our Empire and the United States, the two great English speaking forces of the world; and, as through the Empire, memorial services will be held for the American President, there will be paid general respect to the memory of the noble dead.

The Advocate is advised by Mr. Benedict, American Consul for this country, that there will be a memorial service held at St. Thomas's Church on to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock.

S. S. Silvia In Port

The Red Cross Liner S.S. Silvia arrived at 6.30 a.m. to-day from New York via Halifax and sails for Halifax noon Saturday. There are seventy-one round trripers included in the passenger list. The following are either Newfoundlanders returning on a holiday, or business people:—Miss M. Kelly, Mr. P. Foran, Mr. C. E. Holmes, Miss B. McGrath, Mr. H. G. Haagensen, T. C. Workman, G. I. Sandy, A. W. Drumond, R. L. Dervault, E. J. Story, H. H. Cotton, Wm. Murphy, A. J. C. Paine, Miss J. E. Halfyard, S. V. Freeman, Miss E. M. Chafe, H. R. Finlay, W. S. Barker, G. E. Baldwin, Mrs. G. E. Baldwin, C. H. Cherry, Miss Lilly G. Marshall, Mrs. W. Newbury, Master R. Newbury, Miss Jean Newbury, Miss E. S. Fenwick, A. Linfield, E. J. Pursell, C. E. Brudet, Mrs. A. H. C. Paine, Mrs., Master Fred, and Miss Paine, Miss C. A. Hughes, Miss G. Montgomery, Miss C. Baldwin, Miss E. Linfant and 30 second class.

Perils in Europe

What is to be the outcome of this situation? No one can consider it without grave concern for peace. The withdrawal of diplomatic relations with Germany is threatened by both France and Belgium if Cuno does not disavow the acts of sabotage. There is justice in the demand, but the threat is another step towards an actual state of war. Germany is disarmed but a nation of 60,000,000 people, jealous of their independence, will find a means to fight if attacked. Great Britain cannot make an independent agreement with Germany without breaking up the entente, incurring the enmity of France, and in effect allying herself with Germany. The rupture of the entente would leave the Treaty of Versailles with all its vast ramifications without united support. The trend of affairs justifies apprehension, and Americans cannot afford to ignore it—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Until townsman and farmer grasp the idea that their interests are one, and that, as President Kruger used to say, "one hand washes the other," there can be no prosperous future for British agriculaure.

Science to the Rescue.
(Daily Telegraph.)

The application of science to industry is limitless, and the more complete it is the more pleasant the conditions of industry can be made, for without the aid of science al lthe inconveniences of mechanical production remain uncorrected, and the drain upon the vitality of the worker operates to an ever-increasing degree.

Fame and Mr. Baldwin.
(Prividence Journal.)

Fame travels swiftly, arriving often with no preliminary sounding of trumphets. Sometimes it finds the recipient of its attentions unprepared for the laurel. Oftener still it finds the world almost wholly ignorant of the virtues that it seeks to reward. This is the quandary of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, which has just gone to press for its last revision without a line of matter relating to Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the Prime Minister.

China Waiting.
(Daily Telegraph.))

A great ruler will probably arise in China again, as great rulers have arisen out of chaos before in the country's long ages of history; but no action of foreign Governments can hasten the day of his coming. The Powers have solemnly bound themselves by the Washington Treaty, to interfere in no way with Chinese sovereignty or territorial integrity, and steps which they may now decide to take in common will be strictly conditioned by that self-denying ordinance.

The Peril in Europe.
(Le Soleil.)

It is Germany's dream to extend her sway over the millions of people and the vast natural resources of Russia. Some day, strengthened by this union, she would be able to launch once again on France her own troops, mingled with those of the Bolsheviki. It therefore seems that Berlin has both au economic and military end in view, in her relations with the Russians. The other Powers must learn to foresee the future intentions of this alliance. There seems only one way of warding off European disaster, thep reservation in spite of everything of the Anglo-French Entente.

Sun, the World's Physician.
(Sunday Express.)

Cyrus, King of Persia, ordered his soldiers to sweat once a day. The sun is wiser than Cyrus. He makes us sweat all day and all night. He is opening every pore, and every eye is clearer, every cheek is fairer. Our waste uroducts are being ruthlessly expelled. The bacilli are dying in the great oven of sunlight. And the curve on the chart of joy is soaring higher and higher every day. A month of sunshine is worth the national debt. And there is no tax on sunslight, and no meter. Let us whew gladly, for the winter cometh when no man can whew.

Arms and the Man.
(Baltimore Sun.)

The moral of the Lausanne Treaty is clear enough, and might as well be admitted. To secure revision of unworkable and extreme treaties imposed on a nation defeated in the World War military resistance has proved necessary. The Treaty of Sevres, imposed on Turkey after the war, would practically have ended that nation's independent existence. Against this treaty an aroused Turkish patriotism, under a very able leader, rebelled. There follows the Treaty of Lausanne, placing Turkey in some respects in a more advantageous position than that which she held before the war.

Shampoo This Way with Olive Oil and you will have hair with gleam and softness of silk

Olive oil for the shampoo, say leading hair specalists. Olive oil for the shampoo, agree women who have learned the secret—who are admired for their lovely hair

And this, specialists tell you, is why:

Olive oil cleanses thoroughly but gently. It never leaves hair dry and brittle—robbed of the delicate gloss and sheen that means beauty.

It washes away all dirt and oil. Dissolves and removes clogging dandruff. It leaves hair fluffy and soft. But never dry, never dull.

Pliant and shimmering as new silk, instead. And this means beautiful, attractive hair—without which no beauty of face or dress is quite sufficient.

Olive oil treatment in its finest, most convenient form, is PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO. Thousands and thousands of women use it today. They find it most economical—for a treatment that costs a great deal when given by specialists.

Tuesday's Proceedings at House of Assembly

Mr. Hibbs, who takes a big interest in road building, and is Secretary of the Government Road Commission, made a vigorous reply to Mr. Woodford's comments. He denied the allegation that any discrimination had been shown by the Commission in the matter of employment. On the contrary, instructions had been given that no man should be discriminated against because of his political affiliations. He felt that the House as a whole did not attach sufficient importance to the matter of good roads. On previous occasions, at the risk of boring the House he had discussed the importance of the proper upkeep and improvement of our highways, but his appeals had received scant recognition. He thought it time we turned over a new leaf. Mr. Hibbs left that the member for Hr. Main was confused in his ideas as to relations existing between the Road Commission and the Motor Association. They were separate and distinct bodies, but worked in harmony for the main object of securing good roads. He understood there were between 650 and 700 motor cars registered in St. John's, and only 120 of these were members of the Motor Association. He estimated that the Road Commission would have at its disposal this year, about $19.000.00, to do road building and repairs over the whole Peninsula of Avalon. If money voted for relief work and which was to be expended on the main line, Mr. Hibbs was strongly of the opinion that this money should not be placed in the hands of the local road boards but should be spent through a Commission, if anything like adequate returns were to be expected.

Sir Michael Cashin drew attention to the sale of Government splits recently made in the East End. Wood that was purchased at a cost of $6.-238.00 by the Public Works Department exclusive of the Pit Prop Account was recently sold for $104.00. He thought this wood should have been kept and distributed among the Government institutions rather than be sold for such a paltry sum.

Mr. Walsh supported Sir Michael's position and soundly condemned the extravagance.

Mr. Higgins again asked for particulars of expenditure by the Public Works Department on No. 2 Relief. He also spoke on the contract for putting in a heating system in the Normal School Building. Tenders were asked. One tender named $42,-000.00 another $50,000.00. The contract so he was informed was awarded the $50,000.00 tender.

The Hon. Prime Minister said he had taken up with his council the request of Mr. Higgins that District Representatives handle district moneys and wished to inform the House that from now on elected Representatives should have the disbursements of public moneys in the districts.

Mr. Higgins thanked the Premier on behalf of his colleagues for this just concession. Irresponsible men had during the last month or two been dealing out public moneys, and he was glad a stop was put to it.

Mr. Hunt wished to know from the Minister of Public Works who was the Road Inspector as he noticed an assistant in the person of Mr. Gosse has been appointed at a salary of $1680.00.

Mr. Piccott said the position of Inspector was vacant and Mr. Gosse only was assistant.

Mr. Hunt inquired as to the duties of Mr. Frank Penney who has been given a position by the Government at a salary og $1800.00 per year.

The Prime Minister said the appointment had been made by the late Government. It was found that there was trouble at the Humber in connection with the indiscriminate employment of men, and also the fact that men other than Newfoundlanders were being employed.

On the motion for adjournment the Prime Minister drew attention to an article which appeared in a local paper at the time the recent loans for railway and Humber development purposes were placed on the London market. That article stated only 25 per cent. of the bonds had been subscribed for and 75 per cent. were left on the hands of the underwriters. The London times of July 26th says Nfld. two million dollar Bonds (the bonds to pay the Reid Nfld Co.) started at 1¼ premium and rose to 3½. The 4½ a British guarantee for the Humber Development sold at ½ per cent. discount and the Nfld guaranteed issue was oversubscribed in one hour. Such news must be highly gratifying, and indicates that the credit of Newfoundland is in first class condition.

The Committee rose at 6.30. The House then adjourned until Thursday at 3 p.m.

The Suspended Socialists

(London Morning Post)

As the four Socialist members have publicly announced that they do not intend to apologise for the conduct which led to their suspensions some three weeks ago, the leaders of the party are considering whether they should raise the matter with the Government. They are said to base a claim for a revocation of the order on what happened on March 26, 1913, when Mr. W. Moore, the member for North Armagh, afterwards appointed to the Irish Judiciary, and now a Judge of the High Court in Northern Ireland, was suspended.

The circumstances of that case are, however, not at all similar to the present situation. Mr. Whitley was then Chairman of Ways and Means; a Consolidated Fund Bill was being considered; it was at the very beginning of the sitting; the Radical Government had not got its men in the House; the question that Clause One stand part of the Bill had been put; Mr. Handel Booth was allowed to make a speech (which the Chairman admitted was not relevant); and Mr. Masterman, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, replied at length, and in such provocative terms as to cause uproad in the House. The delay enabled the Government to collect its forces, and to get a majority on the division of 39—a very small majority in the then composition of parties. When the division was over Mr. Moore declared that the proceedings had been disgraceful, and that the action of Mr. Masterman had been "a piece of disgraceful trickery." As he refused to withdraw the words he was suspended, Captain Craig (as the present Prime Minister of Northern Ireland then was) asserting that the proceedings were "a gross scandal."

Three weeks later Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, moved "that the "period of suspension do terminate from this day" (April), which was agreed to, though Mr. Moore had not sent any expression of apology or regret. Mr. Asquith said in defence of his action that the Chairman "had strongly urged him to take this course." The action of Mr. Whitley in allowing Mr. Booth to talk after he had put the question was deeply resented at the time by the Opposition; and, indeed, was recalled, when Mr. Whitley was nominated by Mr. Lloyd George to succeed Mr. Lowther as speaker.

Westminster Hall

Historic Roof Made Safe Again.

REOPENING.

(Pall Mall Gazette.)

Down through the centuries, since King William Rufus, building well, and better than he knew, erected a fortress palace on the Thames at Westminister. Westminister Hall has stood in the very centre of the pageantry of English history.

Tumult and fire and the rage of vandals have swept around its setern grey walls, but the Hall has remained splendid in its dignity, rich in its beauty, and superb in its wonderous story.

To-day another chapter of that story was opened when the King and Queen were present at a brief ceremony at noon which marked the completion of the work of restoring the magnificient roof and the reopening of the Hall, which has been closed during the progress of the work, which has extended over a period of eight years.

Distinguished Gathering.

There had been no elaborate preparations for the Royal visit. Only a thin crimson cord ran the length of the hall to form a way for their Majesties.

At eleven o'clock members of both Houses, with many ladies, began to assemble. Very soon much of the available space was fully occupied, and distinguished groups gathered at the Stephen's Hall end of the great building.

Mr. Baldwin, with many members of the Government, were on the right and on the left were Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd George, Mr. and Mrs. Asquith, and several ex-Ministers. The Marquis of Lincolnshire, the Lord Chamberlain, and the Speaker, Mr. Whitley, ocupied prominent positions on the wide sweep of steps leading into the hall.

The King and Queen.

At noon the King and Queen reached St. Stephen's Porch, and were conducted by Sir John Baird, the First Commissioner of Works, to the top of the steps, where their Majesties stood for a few moments to admire the beauty of the finely restored roof

The King and Queen then stood to listen to a short speech by Sir John Baird, who said:—

The present roof was erected by King Richard II. in the year 1394-1399. It is unsurpassed as an example of mediaeval carpentry, and is the finest open timber framed roof in the world. Repairs were undertaken in 1747-8, and again in 1821 and 1850.

The present scheme of preservation has aimed at retaining as much as possible of the original timber, and this has been accomplished by the insertion of a braced steel frame practically invisible from the floor of the Hall. Slightly less than 10 per cent. of new oak has been used for the essential repairs of decayed beams and posts. We feel confident that we have been successful in giving the roofs a long new lease of life, while completely preserving its character.

The restoration work has been designed and carried out by Sir Frank Baines, the Director of Works of your Majesty's Office of Works. after the scheme had been examined and recommended by the Ancient Mounments Board for England.

Link With The People.

The King, in reply, said:—

It is with the utmost pleasure that the Queen and I have come here today to celebrate the re-opening of Westminister Hall on the completion of the restoration of its noble world-famed roof, erected five centuries ago.

Westminister Hall appeals in a special manner to the mind and imagination of the whole English-speaking race. For centuries it has witnessed the growth of the Constitution and has been, as it were, a link between the Crown and the people. In far-off days it was the great hall of the King's Palace, and more recently the seat of the highest Law Courts of the Kingdom.

A Priceless Treasure.

So, during the eight years that it was closed, we seemed temporarly to have lost a priceless treasure of our national life.

The Queen and I were greatly interested some months ago to see the repairs in progress, and thus were able to realize how the serious dangers and defects had been made good with the least possible interference with either the design or material of the original roof.

The Old Oak.

His Majesty's words reached the most distant part of the hall, and immediately afterwards both the King and Queen walked over to where the big brass-bound box, made out of some of the old oak removed from the roof, awaited presentation to his Majesty. Sir John Baird asked the King to accept the box, which he did with a few words of thanks.

This concluded the brief ceremony, but before their Mejesties proceeded down the Hall they chatted with many of the great Parliamentary figures around them.

The Royal progress to the Palace Yard entrance afforded their Majesties an opportunity of greeting several other distinguished people, and it was noticed that the King had a particularly cordial greeting for Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, who stood almost beyond the King's reach in the crowd, but came forward when the Queen, too, turned and offered him her hand.

A moment later and their Majesties had passed into Palace Yard to be cheered by a great crowd as they drove away.

Many Pay Final Tribute To Deceased Priest

The funeral of the late Rev. Dr. Whelan took place at North River yesterday morning and was an impressive ceremony. From all parts of Conception Bay, hundreds came to pay their last respects, while from the city at least seventy cars went over bringing friends of the deceased Priest.

The Parish Church was packed to overflowing and many were unable to gain admittance. At 11 a.m. Requiem High Mass was celebrated by the Rev. Dr. Murphy, with Rev. Fr. Ashley Deacon, Rev. Fr. Dwyer Sub-Deacon and Rev. Frs. O'Neil and Dinn Chanters, Rev. Fr. Casey was Master of Ceremonies and Rev. Fr. Fitzgerald as assistant. The Panegyric was delivered by the Rev. Monsignor McCarthy who in choice and impressive language dealt with the uncertainty of death, its time, place and manner, and showed the wisdom of always being prepared and made many touching references to the life and work of the deceased. After the ceremony the funeral procession formed up, and wended its way towards the little cemetery, the order of procession being acolytes with processional cross and candles, Priests, the funerat cortege, relatives, Knights of Columbus, including representatives from Dalton, Terra Nova, Conception, Nature Dame and Avalon Councils, a guard of honour from these Councils also acted as pall-bearers. The funeral was the largest ever seen outside the city, men, women and children of the Parish as well as hundreds of visitors from the City and other parts of Conception Bay followed the remains to their last resting place. At the graveside the burial service was read by the Rt. Rev. Monsignor McDermott, the responses being chanted by the assembled Priests. The casket was covered with beautiful wreaths from the K. of C. Councils, School children, Parishioners and friends of the deceased. A pathetic sight was the aged father of the deceased who despite his 83 years accompanied the remains to their last resting place, and his sorrowing sister who saw the earth close over him they loved so well.

The following Priests were present and took part in the impressive ceremonies:—Rt. Rev. Monsignor McDermott, Rev. Fr. McGrath, Rev. Fr. Ashley, Rev. Dr. Greene, Rev. Dr. McGrath, Rev. Frs. Gough, Kelly, Connors, Thorne, Rawlins and Flynn, from the Arch-Diocese of St. John's, Very Rev. Monsignor McCarthy, Very Rev. Monsignor Donnelly, Rev. Dr. Murphy, Rev. Frs. Finn, Walker, Dwyer, Mackey, Cullen, Hinchey, O'Neil, Dinn, Murphy, Fitzgerald, O'Brien, Casey and Williams of the Hr. Grace Diocese.

Amongst those who attended from the city and nearby settlements were the following:—Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir J. C. Crosbie, Sir P. T. McGrath, Dr. J. A. Robinson, W. J. Higgins, K.C., M. S. Sullivan, U. J. Vinicombe, W. J. Walsh, Rev. H. V. Whitehouse, Magistrate Thompson, J. S. Currie, A. E. Hickman, J. J. Duff, Dr. Mooney, J. C. Champlain, and many others.

A message received from Mr. C. J. Ellis yesterday, who is attending the Knights of Columbus Convention at Montreal, says that at the opening of yesterday's session of the Supreme Council of the Knights of Columbus, in annual convention, at Mount Royal Hotel, prayers were offered for the repose of the soul of the late Rev Dr. Whelan.

Police Court

A peculiar case of larceny came up for hearing before Magistrate McCarthy, who in the absence of Judge Morris, presided in the Police Court this morning. Under an amendment to the District Court Act last session of the Legislature, the status of the Clerk was raised to that of Magistrate, enabling the Clerk, who hitherto had no jurisdiction to try such cases to perform the full duties of a Magistrate. The accused men were from Topsail. One of them worked at Mr. Chas. Steers farm on Waterford Bridge Road. Recently Mr. Steer moved out of his residence, and it became noised about that the farm was for sale. A horse's collar which was too small for any of the horses now used by Mr. Steer formed part of the estate, and one of the farm hands made a present of it to his brother-in-law. The young man pleaded guilty, but gave as a reason that the collar had been laying up for two years and he considered it of no value. Mr. Steer valued the collar at$15.00, but was not anxious to prosecute. His Honor, after hearing the evidence, fined the giver and receiver $10.00 each. Mr. Steer proved himself a friend in need, when after the sentence of the court had been passed, he arranged for the payment of the fines.

An ordinary drunk was allowed to go.

A husband charged by his wife with non-support failed to appear, A bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

Michael Woodland, who has a record reaching into a double figure was given 3 months with hard labor. Woodland is only 17 years old, and has done time on sentences ranging from 12 months to 30 days. His latest feat was to rob the pocket of his foster father, while the latter slept of a $5.00 bill.

Two juveniles aged 11, for the larceny of a head light from a motor car, were allowed to go on suspended sentence with a promise of a flogging and a term in jail if they do not mend their ways. Another pair who boarded the train at Waterford Bridge and rode free to Holyrood, were given a chance to have their parents pay the fares and costs.

LATEST

BERLIN, Aug. 9—Passive resistance will be continued with all the strength of the German people "free from mad acts of violence and terror," and the people in the unoccupied territory will "support actively" those in the occupied region, Chancellor Cuno asserted in addressing the Reichstag when it convened for a short extraordinary session yesterday. The Chancellor was prevented from speaking for some time by the Communists, who greeted him with epithets of traitor and swindler, and the President of the Stinnes Companies Board is not going to speak here.

Cuno was subjected to continual interruption during his speech, which was received somewhat coldly by the House.

Alluding to France's demand for cessation of passive resistance, before she was willing to open negotiations or say what she wanted, the Chancellor emphatically declared that it was impossible to ask the people of the Ruhr to abandon their sole weapon unconditionally. "What we cannot do and will not do, is to abandon our land and betray our fellow-countrymen. We refuse to work under the bayonets of our oppressors," he said.

Submission to the merciless obstinacy of the Franch Government, the Chancellor declared, would have to be sealed with a document which would be worse than the treaty of Versailles.

The latter agreement, hec ontended, weighed like a curse upon the peoples of Europe.

—o—

LONDON, Aug. 9.—In Chancellor Cunos speech before Reichstag there was nothing he said that would seriously affect British Cabinet and it still failed with serious problem Chancellors declared indifference to what diehards here have regarded as British Government's too great tenderness toward Germany is hailed in pro-French quarters in England as another reason which there should be agreement among Frence, Belgium and Great Britain.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

A Beautiful Display of a Beautiful Product

Seldom has there been seen a more attractive advertising display of the famous Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes and Hair Brushes now than is showing in Bishop, Sons & Co.'s bldg. The popular Pro-phy-lac-tic tooth brush is now known everywhere as "the high-class brush" and the attractive advertising material associated with the product is undoubtedly an incentive for merchants who sell these goods to lend every assistance in getting them more firmly established in the local market.

The word "Pho-phy-lac-tic" seems to be so indelibly stamped on our minds that when we go to buy a new tooth brush, it just naturally comes forward. Perhaps there is no article of national advertising fame which has been placed before the market in such an ethical manner as the Pro-phy-lac-tic Toth Brush. The manufacturers have practically accomplished their advertising in a very professional way. They have studied the subject of dentistry and all their methods have been in harmony with the great profession of dentistry. For instance, they advise people to see their dentist regularly. They show the correct way to clean the teeth whether you use a Prophy-lac-tic tooth brush or any other kind, and in giving these facts to the public they begin by going with their educational advertising into the schools, telling the children the necessity of keeping their teeth clean when they are young. The expression "A clean tooth never decays" has been copied and used in various ways, but it was the makers of Prophy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes who coined it, and it is the Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush that is keeping millions of teeth from decaying, for with the regular use of this brush, a tooth is always clean and unlikely to decay. Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes are always sold in the yellow box so strikingly brought forward in the exhibition referred to, and there is no doubt but many people will get acquainted with them on account of the striking exhibition now before the public.

The local representative for Prophy-lac-tic Tooth Brushes is Mr. Gerald Doyle, who says that the demand for the brushes is increasing every day. People know now that it does not pay to buy a cheap brush.

Strange Fish of Unknown Species Run Ashore at Stephenville

The following message was received by The Advocate to-day, from Mr. Harvey Small, M.H.A., who is at present at Grand Falls:

"One hundred and one black fish measuring from ten to twenty feet, ran ashore at Stephenville Crossing Monday Morning. Up to noon Tuesday, some of them were still alive. Men are busy scluping fat, and carcases which would make good dog-food, will be left on the beach."

From the description of these unknown fish given by Mr. Small, it would appear that they are a species of "puffin" or jumper, as they are locally known.

NOTICE!

There will be a Memorial Service for the Honourable Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States of America, in St. Thomas's Church of this city on Friday afternoon, the 10th inst., at 3 o'clock, attended by His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce.

American citizens, the clergy, Consular officers of the various countries, officials of Newfoundland, and the public generally are respectfully invited to attend the service.

Seats will be reserved for the American citizens, clergy, and officials.

It is hoped that as many members as possible of St. Thomas's Choir will be present.

Danger of Cheap Furs

THIRTY TO FORTY PATIENTS AT ONE HOSPITAL

(London Morning Post)

At Lambeth County Court recently Mrs. Grace Norrington, of New Church-road, Camberwell, brought an action against Louis Kosky, ladies' costumier, of Camberwell-road, claiming damages for selling her a coat with a fur collar which set up dermatitis.

Plaintiff said she paid £2 12s. for the coat, and after wearing it three days she contracted dermatitis caused b ythe fur collar she wore. They had had from 30 to 40 of these cases at the hospital all due to wearing cheap furs.

Defendant said he had sold from 30 to 36 similar coats, and this was the first complaint he had received.

Dr. Parker said he analysed the fur collar, but could find nothing to set up the disease. During the last three months, owing to statements in the Press about fur poisoning, he had analysed over fifty fur coats. He found it was only in Belgian and German-dyed skins there was anything wrong, this being due to insufficient washing after dyeing. American skins did not show any defects.

Morris Schrieber, the importer of the skins, said they came from New York and were guaranteed free from disease. They were grown as beaver coney.

Judge Parry—That means rabbit-skins.

In awarding plaintiff £12 damages and costs, his Honour said there was no doubt plaintiff suffered from fur dermatitis caused by the wearing of a cheap fur collar on her coat. It would appear as if there was almost an epidemic of this disease, for this was the second case he had heard of this kind in a fortnight.

Cuno Government Will Retain Power

PARIS, Aug. 9—Official quarters believe the Cuno government is likely to remain in power. Retail store keepers are dismayed at the fall of the mark, and are said to be preparing to close their shops to-morrow, but the government is regarded as strong enough to meet any eventuality.

Reply to Franco-Belgian Note is Agreed Upon

LONDON, Aug. 9—The British Cabinet Council to-day agreed to the terms of the reply to the French and Belgian governments' notes in the reparations negotiations, it was reported authoritatively to-day.

The reply will be despatched shortly to the two allied governments.

IGNORANCE OF POSITION WAS CAUSE OF LOSS

If Lead Had Been Used More There Would Have Been No Wreck, Captain Admitted.

LONDON, August 10.—Captain Lewis, of the Canadian Pacific Liner Marvale, which sank off the coast of Newfoundland on May 20th, admitted yesterday at the inquiry into the loss that if the lead had been used more there would have been no wreck; but he felt quite satisfied about the position of the ship just prior to the accident. The admission was made in answer to a suggestion from Butler Aspinalt, K.C., representing the Board of Trade that the lead should have been used more. Chief Officer Moore said he thought the ship was north of her course when she struck. This was because there had been several ice warnings and the ship was moving close in to the shore in the hope of avoiding the ice. The inquiry was concluded yesterday. Judgment will be given next Thursday.

LATEST

MONTREAL, Aug. 10—The launching of a new movement for boys under the name of Columbus Esquires, was definitely decided on yesterday by the Knights of Columbus at the forty - first annual international convention of the Order.

The movement will be conducted thru the twenty-eight hundred councils of the organization. Aproximately sixty thousand dollars will be expended in education of two men from each metropolitan centre who will take special courses for two years in boy leadership. It is estimated there are at least between one and two million Catholic boys between the ages of fourteen and eighteen who will be eligible for membership. In no case will a branch of the boy organization be established unless the bishop of the diocese approves of it.

The movement will be distinctly not in competition with the Boy Scouts.

NEW GLASGOW, Aug. 10—A coroner's jury last night returned a verdict that Ralph Simpson, Stellarton railway man whose body was found on the shores of the East River yesterday, after he had been missing more than a week, came to his death by accidental drowning.

MAONHE, LUNENBURG CO., N. S., Aug. 10—Clarence Boehner, sometimes known as Doctor Boehner, who now faces a manslaughter charge in connection with the death at Martion's River near here, on Sunday, of Mrs. Jean Clark, came before the stipendiary magistrate, Mr. Holloway, here yesterday, but at the request of the Crown, his hearing will not be held till Wednesday. Meanwhile he is in jail in Lunenburg.

Mrs. Clark, wife of Joseph Clark, Amherst, had been suffering from cancer, and it is understood that she received treatment f rom Boehner, who had been credited with successful treatment of the disease. The charge against Boehner reads:

"That on the fifth day of August at Martin's River, he did unlawfully kill and slay Jean Elizabeth Clarke, contrary to the provisions of the criminal code."

LONDON, Aug. 10—The net result of to-day's cabinet council which discussed the terms of Great Britain's reply to France and Belgium, with regard to the German reparations, appears to be that the negotiations between the allies still are proceding and that no approach has yet been made to anything like separate action.

PARIS, Aug. 10—A naval demonstration in Chinese waters by the European powers, it was learned today, is under consideration owing to anarchial conditions in the Chinese navy.

The French department of marine is preparing to send two cruisers if the deminstration is decided on.

BERLIN, Aug. 10—Passive resistance in the Ruhr and Rhineland which Chancellor Cuno yesterday informed the Reichstag would be continued until France decided to create an atmosphere conducive to negotiations on an equality basis, is now approaching the stage where its further maintenance along peaceful lines will depend wholly on the government's ability to keep their resisting population well fed.

The falling mark and the curtailment of local food supplies due to the punitive measures which increasingly are being imposed by the the French now are contributing to the growing irritation and restlessness among the miners steel, workers and civil service employes.

TORONTO, Aug. 10.—According to latest word received at Baptist offices here Hon. David Lloyd George who is expected to attend the Brotherhood Convention in Toronto, will sail from Liverpool October third and reach Quebec the tenth. It is understood he will visit Winnipeg, Chicago, Detroit and New York, sailing from the last named port for England.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—Communists were active again yesterday when various committees interviewed Social Democratic Deputies and demanded ing strike or adopt passive resistance methods to enforce demands. Vote of confidence to be taken in Cuno to-day and Communist efforts not expected to effect it,

Bucketeer Syndicate Is In Toils

NEW YORK, Aug. 9—United States Attorney Hayward announces this afternoon that he had laid before the Federal Grand Jury, evidence against several persons involved by Edward M. Fuller and W. F. McGee, bankrupt bucketeers, in their recent confession, and indicated that indictments might be expected shortly, accusing these persons of illegal connection with the widespread bucket shop syndicate.

Alpine Sealers Dash to Death

CHAMOUNIX, Aug. 9—Alpine guides and others here to-day saw the bodies of four persons attempting to scale the Giant's Needle, lose their footing and fall into space.

From the great distance witnesses were only able to discern that two of the unfortunates were guides. Veteran climbers declare that the victims of the mishap will never be seen again.

Penal Servitude for Solicitor

(London Times)

At the Central Criminal Court July 1st, Mr. Justice Darling passed sentence of three years' penal servitude on John Edward Tucker, 60, solicitor, who pleaded "Guilty" to counts in an indictment charging him with converting to his own use and benefit sums of £3,325 and £79, £3,300 in War Bonds, and the sum of £2,407 received on account of clients or of which he had been trustee under a will. The defendant pleaded "Not guilty" to another count charging him with the conversion to his own use of £300 belonging to another client, and that count was not proceeded with.

Mr. Percival Clarke, who prosecuted, said the defendant had for some time carried on business in Bedford-row and resided at Guestling Hall, Sussex.

Sir Henry Curtis Bennett, K.C., who appeared, with Mr. L. A. Bryne, for the defence, said that the defendant had the misfortune to marry a woman who gave way to drink and pledged his credit. His eldest son was killed at Arras in 1917, and from that time the defendant was a changed man. He found himself getting gradually into greater financial embarrassment from year to year. The defendant was entirely a self-made man.

Mr. Justice Darling, in passing sentence, said that in one of the cases the defendant was the personal friend of the people who trusted him. The defendant very ingeniously used the funds of one client to lull the suspicions of the other. It was a very cruel fraud. He deeply sympathized with the defendant in the misfortunes that fell upon him.

Steamer Ashore at Canso Strait

HALIFAX, Aug. 9—The Italian steamer San Guiseppe, Captain Callanneo, about three thousand tons, is ashore at Eddies Point in the Strait of Canso. She was bound to Three Rivers from Norfolk, Va. Her position is not thought dangerous.

Plunkett Has Been Realeased

DUBLIN, Aug. 9—Count Plunkett, noted Irish Republican leader, who was elected Republican Deputy from Roscommon, was to-day released from the military camp at Kildare.

Count Plunkett was arrested last April when enroute to Clonmel with Mary MacSwiney to attend the funeral of Liam Lynch. No other releases have been reported.

Prince Will Visit His Ranch in W. Canada

LONDON, Aug. 9—The Prince of Wales will leave London early in September, for Canada, and will spend some time at his ranch in Alberta. He will be accompanied by his private secretary, Sir Godfrey Thomas and Brigadier-General G. F. Troter. The visit will continue until the end of October.

BRIDGEWATER, N.S., Aug. 10—W. A. McKay, Truro, was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows of the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland here yesterday. J. J. McKinnon, Charlottetown, was elected Grand Secretary.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER II.

"When the little home is completed, Donald," he suggested presently, "you might take old Brent and his girl over to our house in town and let them have what furniture they require. See if you cannot manage to saw off some of your mother's antiques on them," he added whimsically. "By the way, what kind of shanty is old Brent going to build?"

"A square house with five rooms and a cupola fitted up like a pilot house. There's to be a flagpole on the cupola, and Nan says they'll have colors every night and morning. That means that you hoist the flag in the morning and salute it, and when you haul it down at night, you salute it again. They do that up at the Bremerton navy-yard."

"That's rather a nice, sentimental idea," Hector McKaye replied. "I rather like old Brent and his girl for that. We Americans are too prone to take our flag and what it stands for rather too lightly."

"Nan wants me to have colors up here, too," Donald continued. "Then she can see our flag, and we can see theirs across the bight."

"All right," The Laird answered heartily, for he was always profoundly interested in anything that interested his boy. "I'll have the woods boss get out a nice young cedar with, say, a twelve inch butt, and we'll make it into a flagpole."

"If we're going to do the job navy fashion, we ought to fire a sunrise and sunset gun," Donald suggested with all the enthusiasm of his sixteen years.

"Well, I think we can afford that, too, Donald."

Thus it came about that the little brass cannon was installed on its concrete base on the cliff. And when the flagpole had been erected, old Caleb Brent came up one day and built a little mound of smooth, seawashed cobblestones round the base, and whitewashed them. Evidently he was a prideful little man, and liked to see things done in a seamanlike manner. And presently it became a habit with The Laird to watch night and morning for the little pin-prick of color to flutter forth from the house on the Sawdust Pile, and if his own colors did not break forth on the instant and the little cannon boom from the cliff, he was annoyed and demanded an explanation.

CHAPTER III.

HECTOR McKAYE and his close-mouthed general manager, Andrew Daney, were the only persons who knew the extent of The Laird's fortune. Even their knowledge was approximate, however, for The Laird disliked to delude himself, and carried on his books at their cost-price properties which had appreciated tremendously in value since their purchase. The knowledge of his wealth brought to McKaye a goodly measure of happiness—not because he was of a Scottish ancestry and had inherited a love for his baubees, but because he was descended from a fierce, proud Scottish clan, and wealth spelled independence to him and his.

The Laird would have filled his cup of happiness to overflowing had he married a less mediocre woman or had he raised his daughters as he had his son. The girls' upbringing had been left entirely in their mother's hands. Not so with young Donald, however—wherefore it was a byeword in Port Agnew that Donald was his father's son, a veritable chip of the old block.

By some uncanny alchemy, hard cash appears to soften the heads and relax the muscles of rich men's sons—at least, such had been old Hector's observation, and on the instant that he first gazed upon the face of his son, there had been born in him a mighty resolve that, come what might, he would not have it said of him that he had made a fool of his boy. And throughout the glad years of his fatherhood, with the stern piety of his race and his faith, he knelt night and morning beside his bed and prayed his God to help him not to make a fool of Donald—to keep Donald from making a fool of himself.

When Donald entered Princeton, his father decided upon an experiment. He had raised his boy right, and trained him for the race of life, and now The Laird felt that, like a thoroughbred horse, his son faced the barrier. Would he make the run, or would he, in the parlance of the sporting world, "dog it?" Would his four years at an American university make of him a better man, or would he degenerate into a snob, and a drone?

With characteristic courage, The Laird decided to give him ample opportunity to become either, for, as old Hector remarked to Andrew Daney: "If the lad's the McKaye I think he is, nothing can harm him. On the other hand, if I'm mistaken, I want to know it in time, for my money and my Port Agnew is a trust, and if he can't handle it, I'll leave it to the men who can—who've helped me to create it—and Donald shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Tools," he added, "belong to the men who can use them."

When Donald started East for college, old Hector accompanied him as far as Seattle. On the way up, there was some man-talk between them. In his youth, old Hector had not been an angel, which is to state that he had been a lumberjack. He knew men and the passions that beset them—particularly when they are young and lusty—and he was far from being a prude. He expected his son to raise a certain amount of wild oats; nay, he desired it, for full well he knew that when the fires of youth are quenched, they are liable to flare disgracefully in middle life or old age.

"Never pig it, my son," was his final admonition. "Raise hell if you must, but if you love your old father, be a gentleman about it. You've sprung from a clan of men, not mollycoddles."

"Hence the expression: 'When Hector was a pup,'" Donald replied laughingly. "Well, I'll do my best, father—only, if I stub my toe, you mustn't be too hard on me. Remember, please, that I'm only half Scotch."

At parting, The Laird handed his son a check for twenty-five thousand dollars.

"This is the first year's allowance, Donald," he informed the boy gravely. "It should not require more than a hundred thousand dollars to educate a son of mine, and you must finish in four years. I would not care to think you dull or lazy."

"Do you wish an accounting, father?"

The Laird shook his head.

"Keeping books was ever a sorry trade, my son. I'll read the accounting in your eye when you come back to Port Agnew."

"Oh!" said young Donald.

At the end of four years, Donald graduated, an honor-man in all his studies, and in the lobby of the gymnasium, where the athletic heroes of Princeton leave their record to posterity, Hector McKaye read his son's name, for, of course, he was there for commencement. They spent a week together in New York, following which old Hector announced that one week of New York was about all he could stand. The tall timber was calling for him.

"Hoot, mon!" Donald protested gaily. He was a perfect mimic of Sir Harry Lauder at his broadest. "Y'eve nae had a bit holiday in all yer life. Wha' spier ye, Hector McKaye, to a trip aroond the worl,' wi' a wee visit tae the auld clan in the Hielands?"

"Will you come with me, son?" The Laird inquired eagerly.

"Certainly not! You shall come with me. This is to be my party."

"Can you stand the pressure? I'm liable to prove an expensive travelling companion."

"Well, there's something radically wrong with both of us if we can't get by on two hundred thousand dollars, dad."

The Laird started, and then his Scotch sense of honor—and, for all the famed wit of the Irish no humor on earth is so unctious as that of the Scotch—commenced to bubble up. He suspected a joke on himself and was prepared to meet it.

"Will you demand an accounting, my son?"

Donald shook his head.

"Keeping books is a sorry trade, father. I'll read the accounting in your eye when you get back to Port Agnew."

"You braw big scoundrel! You've been up to something. Tell me, man, or I'll die wi' the suspense of it."

"Well," Donald replied, "I lived on twenty-five hundred a year in collegt, and led a happy life. I had a heap of fun, and nothing went by me so fast that I didn't get at least a tail feather. My college education, therefore, cost me ten thousand dollars, and I managed to squeeze a roadster automobile into that, also. With the remaining ninety thousand, I took a flier in thirty-nine hundred acres of red cedar up the Wiskah River. I paid for it on the insalment plan—yearly payments secured by first mortgage at six per cent., and——"

"Who cruised it for you?" The Laird almost shouted. I'll trust no cruiser but my own David McGregor."

"I realized that, so I engaged Dave for the job. You will recall that he and I took a two months' camping trip after my first year at Princeton. It cruised eighty thousand feet to the acre, and I paid two dollars and a half per thousand for it. Of course, we didn't succeed in cruising half of it, but we rode through the remainder, and it all averaged up very nicely, and I saw a former cruise of it made by a disinterested cruiser—"

The Laird had been doing mental arithmetic.

"It cost you seven hundred and eighty thousand dollars—and you paid ninety thousand, principal and interest, on account. Why you didn't have the customary ten per cent. of the purchase price as an initial payment!"

"The owner was anxious to sell. Besides, he knew I was your son, and I suppose he concluded that, after getting ninety thousand dollars out of me at the end of three years, you'd have come to my rescue when the balance fell due—in a lump. If you didn't, of course he'd foreclose."

"I'll save you, my son. It was a good deal—a splendid deal!"

"You do not have to, dad. I've sold it—at a profit of an even two hundred thousand dollars!"

"Lad, why did you do it? Why didn't you take me into your confidence? That cedar is worth three and a half. In a few years it will be worth five."

"I realized that, father, but a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush—and I'm a proud sort of devil. I didn't want to run to you for help on my first deal, even though I knew you'd come to my rescue and ask no questions. You've always told me to beware of asking favors, you know. Moreover, I had a very friendly feeling towards the man I sold my red cedar to; I hated to stick him too deeply."

98 OUT OF EVERY 100 WOMEN BENEFITED

An Absolutely Reliable Statement Important to Every Woman

Remarkable Results Shown by a Nation Wide Canvass of Women Purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. 50,000 Women Answer

For some time a circular has been enclosed with each bottle of our medicine bearing this question: "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

Replies, to date, have been received from over 50,000 women answering that question.

98 per cent of which say YES. That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take the medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This is a most remarkable record of efficiency. We doubt if any other medicine in the world equals it.

Think of it—only two women out of 100 received no benefit—98 successes out of a possible 100.

Did you ever hear anything like it? We must admit that we, ourselves, are astonished.

Of course we know that our medicine does benefit the large majority of women who take it. But that only two out of 100 received no benefit is most astonishing.

It only goes to prove, however, that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure all—one that is made by the most scientific process; not from drugs, but from a combination of nature's roots and herbs, can and does do more good than hastily prepared prescriptions.

You see, we have been making, improving and refining this medicine for over 50 years until it is so perfect and so well adapted to women's needs that it actually has the virtue to benefit 98 out of every 100 women who take it.

Its reliability and recognized efficiency has gained for it a sale in almost every country in the world—leading all others.

Such evidence should induce every woman suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see if she can't be one of the 98. The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario.

Yesterday's Proceedings At House of Assembly

The House met yesterday afternoon at the usual hour. Following questions re payments made the members of the Tariff Commission, the cost of stationery, the contract for plastering the Normal School e.c., the Prime Minister gave notice of motion to suspend the rules of the House, which is usually taken to indicate that the end of the session will come within a few days. The Order of the Day was disposed off in the following manner. On motion of the Prime Minister, consideration of the agreements recently entered into between the Government and Malcolm J. Mooney and the Government and Harry J. Crowe, were deferred, as were also the remaining votes in supply. The Opposition was not quite ready to proceed with the debate on the budget and this item also stood over for a day.

On motion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, an Act for the Encouragement of Shipbuilding was put thru committee and by consent given a third reading, and sent to the Legislative Council for its concurrence. This Act simply extends the date of the Act passed last session for the present year.

The House next went into Committee on the Electric Light and Street Railway Franchise Bill.

Mr. Higgins said he supported the Bill for the sake of the city of St. John's. It was a well known fact that if the Company was not enabled by this act to borrow money for the repairs and extension of its plant at Petty Harbour, there would be serious consequences. The flume was in bad repair and if something was not done the city probably would be without light or power next winter. To raise money for repairs and extensions it was necessary for the Company to be able to mortgage its franchise and this was the purpose of the Act. The same proposition was before a former Government, but with the erection of a hotel included, and it was turned down. He said it was a very great mistake. This bill gives us nothing but the bare necessity.

Mr. Moore, (Ferryland) asked if the United Towns Electric Company was debarred from lighting, heating and supplying power to the town on acount of the St. John's Light and Power Co. having exclusive franchise.

The Prime Minister replied that the St. John's Light and Power Company under their 1896 charter did not hold any exclusive franchise and it would be quite in order for other Companies to supply light, heat and power to the city.

Mr. Calpin, (Hr. Grace) enquired if it were not possible for the people of Conception Bay to enjoy the same privileges of competition, but he was informed that the United Towns had been given exclusive rights under their charter, and the rights of the rival companies had been determined at law; consequently the Legislature could not well interfere. Some discussion ensured as to the legal effect of certain amendments suggested by Mr. Fox, and the bill was allowed to stand over until a conference had been held with company's Solicitor.

On the second reading of Bill "An Act to amend Chapter 23 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series- entitled 'Of the Auditing of Public Accounts," which creates the new office of Deputy Auditor General. Mr. Higgins objected to the appointment. He did not object to the second reading of the bill on the ground that the principle was necessary. He believed that it was well to have some head of the department wholly responsible when Mr. Bertean was away. But why have a new appointment? Were not the present employees entirely capable. He and the Opposition would resist the bill going through the Committee stage with all the physicial force at their command until an assurance was given that the appointment should take the form of promotion of one of the present staff.

The Speaker read an invitation to the members of the House from the American Consul inviting them to be present at a Memorial Service to be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock at St. Thomas's Church in memory of the late President of the United States, Warren G. Harding.

The House then adjourned until this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Lady Astor and Peace

Viscountess Astor (Plymouth, Sutton, U.) said in the House of Commons in the course of the debate on the Singapore Bill that if she thought the policy of this Government, or any Government, was to make war or encourage war, she, as an ordinary woman, would vote against Singapore. (Hear, hear). She hated war. She hated a lot of things, but she did not expect to get them out of the world all at once. (Laughter.) This question of war was a much bigger question than hon. members seemed to think. As far as Singapore went, she was sorry that the Government could not have waited for the Imperial Conference to have settled it, as it was a question which affected the whole Empire. We had got to make up our minds when we talked about the Yellow Peril whether we were going to have progressive civilization, with the Anglo-Saxon race to police the world. (Laughter.) An American missionary in a far part of the world had told her that she could not realize what it meant to see the British Navy visit those distant places. Not one of these missionaries had ever said a word against the British Navy. (Hear, hear.) One of the greatest ways to assure the peace of the world was to have a strong Navy. She was struck with the fact that those who talked about peace were willing to fight over the most minute questions. (Laughter.) She backed the Government up for a strong Navy, which meant a strong peace in the Far East. (Hear, hear.)

Ruhr Profits

M. LE TROCQUER ON FRENCH APPROACH TO VICTORY

PARIS, Sunday.—M. Le Trocquer, Minister of Public Works, in an interview with the Matin concerning the occupation of the Ruhr, said:

"Before the Ruhr was occupied, the district supplied France with 300,000 to 350,000 tons of coal a month. Now only 225,000 tons a month is obtained by us from the same quarter. But our own production has increased from 2,700,000 tons a month in 1922 to 3,500,000 tons a month now, a gain of 800,000 tons. One may estimate the further increase in supplies from the Sarre at 100,000 tons a month, say 900,000 tons a month altogether. So that now any increase in the quantity we obtain from the Ruhr will enable us to reduce proportionately our imports of coal from other countries.

"On the other hand, owing to Germany being cut off from the Ruhr, German factories are not getting either coal or metal products and are in a wretched position.

"Further we have seized in the Ruhr metal products worth several hundred millions of gold marks and we are now running the Ruhr railways successfully. Altogether we have only to go on as at present to secure victory."

AT THE CITY HALL

The Weekly Meeting of the St. John's Municipal Council was held yesterday afternoon.

Mayor Cook presided, Councillors Martin, Outerbridge, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

The Meeting was a very short one, routine matters only being discussed

The Inspector General informed the Board he had made arangements for the policing of Bannerman and Victoria Parks, as requested.

F. A. Mews called attention to the need of having repairs made to the fence west of Rennie's Bridge. As the road at this point is very narrow, it was suggested that the property might be possibly utilized for dumping purposes, which would widen the thoroughfare and remove the danger to vehicular traffic.

The owners of the same are to be noified.

H. A. Maddock, Sudbury Street, asked if it was the intention of the Council to have sidewalk and surface drain placed in this street.

The Engineer is to report on the matter.

The attention of the Board was called to an article which appeared in the Advocate of the 8th inst., in which the Council was criticized for the present condition of the iCty Streets.

In this connection it must be borne in mind that the Council is doing all possible in the work of road repairs and other City Works; but its limited revenue will not permit them to keep the roads up to that high standard all would wish. Some fifty miles of road have to be looked after and repaired within the City limits, and considering the heavy motor and vehicular traffic over these roads, a great deal of money would have to be expended to keep them in good condition. As it is the estimates for the present year will involve an expenditure of some $36,000.00. Out of this allocation the work of rebuilding and repairing of bridges must be undertaken. The Council does not object to criticism, provided the money is forthcoming to do all work that is required and if citizens want better roads, as suggested by the writer of the article referred to, the Revenus of the Council must be increased. The road grants outside of the City of St. John's are distributed on a per capita basis, and as the city, for its population of 37,000, only receives a Government Grant towards its roads of $5807.50, it was unanimously agreed that the Government be asked that the road grants for the City be distributed on the same basis as that of the other outlying districts. This would bring the City Road Grant up to $70,000.00 which if available would put the roads in the condition that the writer of the article in question so much desires.

The following plans were passed, subject to the approval of the City Engineer, conditional upon the Municipal Act being adhered to.

RWELLINGS.

W. Mugford, Alexander Street, provided he pays his proportion cost of sewer extension.

W. P. Gobbie, Extension Brazil's Square.

Htalth report for week showed eleven new cases Scarlet Fever, nine Diptheria and one Typhoid in the City during the week.

City Engineer informed the Board that Contractor Quigley had completed the work of trenching and back filling on the pipe line, road to his entire satisfaction. Pipe layers were now at work placing the pipes in position and the service will be in working order in the course of another few days.

The matter of the removal of the houses at the junction of Le-Marchant Road and Pleasant Street was taken over. The Engineer and Secretary will negotiate with the owners as to a compensation. The taking down of these houses will be a great improvement to this section of the City and will remove one of the great dangers to vehicular traffic.

The Secretary submitted statement of Revenue received during the past week. It was ordered legal proceedings be immediately taken for the recovery of outstanding City Taxes, Dog Licenses, Horse Taxes, etc.

Reports of Engineer, Sanitary Supervisor and other heads of Departments were tabled.

Accounts for week were presented after which the Meeting adjourned.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I have noticed—and presume, many others have noticed—a certain disappointing defect in the Newfoundland character. This is what seems to be the average Newfoundlander's lack of appreciation of and pride in the interesting and notable personalities we produce.

* * *

You will assume that I have some particular instince in mind. I have. I am thinking of John Murray Anderson, brilliant son of Newfoundland and of the Hon. John Anderson.

Here is a man who has 'made good,' to use a term usually associated with financial success. John Murray Anderson has had more than financial success—if he hadn't, do you imagine that I'd call him a great Newfoundlander? I who believe that the poorest man in the world is he who has nothing but money?

Anderson has had financial success, as a matter of fact: but it is a mere accompaniment of a more interesting and significant triumph.

I confess that it thrills me to realize that a Newfoundlander should occupy such a pinacle among the giants of the great theatrical world of New York. Anderson is rapidly climbing to the position of the greatest musical revue producer of them all. As a matter of fact, using my own judgment, I should say that of the two productions of the season just over, the Greenwich Village Follies, by the Newfoundlander, and Ziegefeld Follies, by Florenz Ziegfeld, the Green wich Village Follies far surpass in beauty and general worth. I saw both. Indeed, I went no less than four times to see the Greenwich Village Follies—and tickets to that show were $4.40 a seat!

* * * * *

I give you my word, I have never seen a more beautiful spectacle than John Murray Anderson's gorgeous panorama at the Shubert Theatre in New York. The Follies, you should know, is a master blending of vaudeville and musical comedy, I never saw more delightful comedy than that of Bert Savoy, and of John E. Hazzard. The songs were most beautifully sung. The burlesque, the satire, were just perfect. For example: there was a burlesque on all the Shakespearan plays run in New York during the winter. There was a skit consisting, for conversation, of well-known advertising slogans you see in magazines, etc. There was a burlesque on the plays of Eugene V. O'Neil, the great American dramatist. Then there was a reproduction of the Russian Chauve Souris, a very intriguing affair. Indeed, I could go on for a column describing the various features of that magnificient show. Every one in it was perfect. Beautiful girls, very fine singers, master comedians, actors, tumblers, acrobates dancers. It was positively amasing, the manner in which one event followed upon another for almost three hours. The audience on each occasion when I saw the show was most demonstrative,—far more enthusiastic than one usually finds on blase Broadway. And, I kept thinking to myself all the time, a Newfoundlander did this!

* * * *

His Follies, completing their New York run, went on tour thruout the United States, where hundreds of thousands of people will see them. In addition to the annual production of the G. V. Follies, Mr. Anderson has produced regular musical comedies. Everybody knows about the remarkable success which attended the League of Nations, his show. He took this show across to England, where it was received amidst enthusiasm. Mr. Anderson's latest production was a musical comedy, Jack and Jill, shown this spring and summer on Broadway.

* * * *

For all his cleverness and brilliance and for all his great success, Mr. Anderson has remained the thoroughly democratic man he always was. It is a pleasure to talk to him. He retains all his old interest and love of Newfoundland. Indeed, on one occasion while in New York, he and I sat in his room until seven o'clock in the morning, talging about Newfoundland! On the night before Mr. Anderson, his brother, Hughie, Frank Knight, the actor (son of Herbert Knight, the local head of Eastern Trust Co.) and I had been having a sort of Newfoundland re-union. Mr. Anderson phoned for some friends to come over to his apartments, and they came, a most interesting group of them, including poor Bert Savoy, who was killed by lightning the other day, and Polly Morgan, the exceedingly funny English commedienne, etc. They gave an impromptu concert that, I assure you I found far more interesting and amusing than and professional one, and at four in the morning they all went home. "Ohio," Vincent, Mr. Anderson's personal friend, who was killed with Bert Savoy, turned in, and Mr. Anderson and I talked together until daylight.

* * * * *

Hugh A. Anderson, Murray's brother, is, to use a peculiarly expressive Newfoundland term, no "slouch." I mean by that colorful word that he possesses much of the ability of his more famous brother. Had he had the early theatrical and artistic training of the producer,——

The Hon. John Anderson, and Newfoundland, have great reason to be proud of John Murray Anderson, for he is undoubtedly one of the greatest and most interesting figures to which our country has given birth.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, AUGUST 10th, 1923

"In Deeds, Not Words"

At all times, there is much public and newspaper discussion of matters pertaining to the country's advancement. Everybody professes, and every newspaper professes, the sole desire to work slavishly in our country's interest, forgetting or sacrificing all personal considerations.

Down through the years, such discussions have continued and such professions been made. And, yet, where are we? And where is our country? Why is it, with this general clamour for patriotic effort all around us, that Newfoundland finds herself still struggling along on the road of the past, which in many places is getting almost impassable.

Is everybody a hypocrite? Are all our public men hypocrites or simply politicians, or what?

Surely there is a reason for the much shouting with such little results; and if there is one reason more than another it is that there have been too many empty words and too few meritorious actions.

Speaking generally, if everybody meant what everybody said, and supported their professions with broad-minded, reasonable and public-spirited effort, we would have a better country and a more prosperous people. There is a tendency, too evident, of tearing down the work which others have accomplished or started or hoped to accomplish. Politics or political considerations have cursed the country's progress in more ways than one; and the people's larger interests have been the prey of men whose desires have been and are to parade themselves for popular approval on false issues.

Opposing political camps have not been able to come together in the larger spirit of public interest, and when the political pendulum swings one way or the other, the political hatchet is at work and destruction of former policies begins, irrespective of what is to replace them. The other fellow's opinion is not respected. He belongs to the other camp. His work must go.

That is not good enough. That is what leaves our country half submerged upon the rocks. There is too much fighting, too many differences, too much politics, too many professions and not enough of real patriotic action.

In our every industry, this regrettable state of affairs obtains.

Our staple industry and with it the fishermen, even the whole country, suffers today because a genuine effort to establish it on a sound business basis was knifed, (as against it's being assisted) by vain-glorious seekers of popularity. Politics was introduced where there was no room for politics, destruction resulted and we face the future of our staple industry with fear and trembling.

The same condition exists, in a less marked degree, in relation to our agricultural industry. During the past twenty-five years, the policies and works of all Governments, more or less beneficial as the cases may be, have been consigned to the scrap heap by succeeding administrations, doing stunt work on the stage of public opinion. And where has it landed the industry, or, rather, where will be the industry of the future?

From the viewpoint of sanity or ordinary intelligence the continuance of a policy of stability, based on agricultural knowledge and foresight, is much preferable to the intermittent spasms of people, who know nothing of agricultural matters, but who can be relied upon to tear down the works of predecessors and substitute, perhaps, something worse, or nothing. The same conditions apply in our other industries.

Is it not time to get down to real business and a real improvement, not so much in professions (these are loud enough), but in the real effort which may be made to secure the best results from the resources which are ours?

Is One Strong Man Sufficient?

The Daily News this morning in one of its lugubrious editorials tells its readers that the panacea for all Newfoundland's ills is a strong man. Shorn of its maze of metaphor and allegory, the News statement is to the effect that one man, if he be in the Herculus class in point of executive ability, can work wonders even though he have to contend with the destructive tactics of numerous "small" politicians of such, as this country has had experience.

This opinion of the Daily News does not warrent the opinion that profound wisdom exists within the precincts of that paper. What we need is a strong people. That will be of far greater importance in the attainment of national success and national stability than any one strong man can possibly be, for no leader, no matter what his qualifications, can hope to achieve anything in the face of the united opposition of people whose sole aim seems to be the creation of dissention and the undoing of the work of those who are making a sincere effort to accomplish something.

At yesterday's meeting of the Municipal Council, we note that the Advocate's editorial of the 8th inst. was discussed by the Council; and as the Council reports are published in another column of this paper, readers will be able to see what comment was made thereon.

As was stated by us, there is no intention on our part to introduce the subject of the City's very bad streets, in any hostile or carping fashion.

The fact remains that street conditions in very important sections, are far from desirable, and it is a regrettable state of affairs to see no tangible effort made to remedy it.

As to the reasons advanced for the present condition of affairs, it must be admitted this is as regrettable as the situation itself. It is an admission that as a city, St. John's cannot afford decent streets, and, while the reason exists, will never be able to boast of possessing such streets.

Pertinent Questions Answered

In to-morrow's issue will appear an article containing answers given by Aaron Sapiro to eight questions regarding the marketing of farm produce on the co-operative plan. Mr. Sapiro, the marketing expert who organized the California fruit growers, is now in Western Canada, where he has gone to solve the wheat marketing problem, and the information respecting the question of marketing contained in his eight answers will be read with interest by all who are concerned in this important matter.

There is much food for thought in the information contained in the article in question as the principle involved applies equally to all products of all countries.

That organization and co-operation are essential to the profitable marketing of our own staple product has long been realized, but those whose duty it is to lead the way towards the desired end have not yet been aroused to a sense of their responsibilities.

AT THE HUMBER

The Advocate understands there are at present employed in Humber operations 1936 men, not including the office staff, which will approximate two hundred additional.

Steamship Lines Heavily Scored

NEW YORK, July 31.—Henry H. Curran, Commissioner of Immigration, vehemently denounced the steamship companies yesterday for "their savage, cut-throat competition" in their anxiety to get immigrants into the United States regardless of the welfare of the aliens. Available figures indicate that the fifteen trans-Atlantic liners bring approximately 15,000 immigrants into this port at midnight tonight will cause exhaustion of nine quotas soon after the vessels enter quarantine, time of which determines priority status of inbound passengers.

The majority of the 15,000, Commissioner Curran said, would be instantly admissible under all requirements of law, but they will be obliged to remain from 48 hours to a week on the ships on which they arrive awaiting their turns to be admitted to Ellis Island, the capacity of which is 1,700 persons. The quotas which will be exhausted on the first day the new monthly allotments become effective will be those of Albania, Greece and Russia and other Europeans Palestine, Syria, Turkey and other countries in Asia and Egypt.

"I have requested the steamship companies to fit up their vessels," said the commissioner, "to make the stay of the aliens in this port before they are admitted to Ellis Island as comfortable as possible. I have no intention of over-crowding the landing station and heaping a tremendous volume of work upon my staff of 500 men and women, who were severely taxed by the rush beginning the fiscal year, July 1. During the first week of August there will be about three times as many aliens landing in this port as there were in the same period in July.

EMIGRANT TRAFFIC

"This rush proves that the steamship companies cannot regulate their own emigrant traffic, and instead of the co-operation that should exist among them there is a savage, cut throat competition to see who can get here first with the largest number, regardless of the welfare of their patrons, whereby they hope to obviate the arrival of immigrants in excess of the quotas, but even in that they have failed, as is illustrated by the fact that nine allotments will be filled on the first day of August.

"Sooner or later the Government will have to regulate what the steamship companies have failed to control —that is, their own competitive scramble for the European emigration business. I called the steamship companies' representatives into conference last Friday when it was reported twenty-two ships would reach New York by midnight Tuesday, and I implored them to divert some of the vessels to other ports to expedite the entry of their passengers. The destination of three liners were changed. The vessels are the American liner Finland and the Cunarder Tyrrhenia, which are en route for Boston, and the Red Star liner Gothland, for Philadelphia."

W. W. Husband, commissioner general of immigration, who arrived at Ellis Island yesterday morning to confer with Commissioner Curran, regarding the August influx, listened to Mr. Curran's remarks regarding culpability of the steamship companies and supplemented what the commissioner said, declaring the transportation companies are still striving to accomplish in five months what they can do in twelve. This, he attributed to their commercial greed.

"The agents of the various steamship companies in this city," added Mr. Husband, have used the cables sufficiently in an effort to remedy the situation, but apparently the home offices don't appreciate the problem we are confronted with. There is no reason, however, if they cast aside their commercial greed why they could not overlook the clause in the immigration law which permits 20 per cent. of the annual quota to come into the United States in one month. By mutual understanding they could easily arrange the arrivals to extend over the entire year and avoid the congestion."

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Child labor in the United States is increasing, judging by late reports received by the United States Children's Bureau.

One million children between the ages of ten and sixteen were employed in January, 1920, of which one-third were from 10 to 13 years old. Owing to industrial depression in 1921, the number diminished, but since then reports received by the Bureau from twenty cities out of thorty-one reporting indicated increases, five cities reporting 100 per cent increases.

World's Best Seller.

A few books have reached a circulation as high as 200,000 in a single year. One book is reported to have run well towards a million copies in its first year. The Bible, however, today has reached 30,000,000 copies a year or 80,000 copies a day. Yet if all the millions of Bibles published since the discovery of printing were brought together to-day, there would not be enough to give each inhabitant of Asia a copy.

The Bible was the first book on the press, and has never been off. It can be bought at a cheaper price than any other book, and yet $50,000—the highest price ever offered for one single volume—was paid in 1912 for one of the first printed copies of the Bible. An ancient book yet the best seller in a modern world, an Oriental book yet the best seller in Occidental countries, the Bible seems to prove the rule of the survival of the fittest.

His Only Solace.

Cortland Bleecker, the New York clubman, said on the Aquitania:

"I was in Berlin one day, and it was a funny sight to see the Berlin work people carrying their wages home in suitcases, wheelbarrows and hand-carts. A man earning 20c. a week, normal exchange, would have, you know, some 25,000 marks in notes of small denomination. No light burden.

"I spoke to a German banker about the demoralized German mark. I said I supposed it distressed him considerably.

"'Yes, it does,' he agreed, and then he added:

Sometimes, by heavens, I feel so depressed that to cheer myself up a little I take a few marks out and see how many roubles I can get for them."

Even the devastated sections of timber limits are not going to be left unexploited this year in Quebec, according to the plans of the timber limit owners, who are assured the co-operation of Government officials in this connection.

Arrangements are being made by which trees partly burnt are to be cut immediately and used for pulpwood, the losses being thus reduced to a minimum. By modern process it is now possible to use partly burnt trees as long as they are not too badly affected by flies and worms.

It is planned to start the cutting of a large area of timber affected immediately and this wood will be put in the lakes and rivers so as to be safe from attacks of the flies. Officials of the department of lands and forests, claim that the winter cutting will be heavier than ever before.

"The world has been made for democracy. But democracy has not yet made the world safe against irrational revolution," declares former President Woodrow Wilson in an article entitled "The Road Away from Revolution," in the current issue of the Atlantic Monthly.

"Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually," the former president stated in one of the new articles he has written since illness overtook him in the White House.

"In these doubtful and anxious days," the article says in part, "when which way you will the road ahead seems darkened by shadows, which portend dangers of many kinds, it is only common prudence that we should look about us and attempt to assess the causes of distress and the most likely means of removing them."

Commenting on the cause of the Russian revolution, which Mr. Wilson describes as "the outstanding event of its kind in our age," he asserts that it is a systematic denial to the great body of Russians of the rights and privileges which all normal men desire and must have if they are to be content and within reach of happiness.

"It was against captalism," he wrote, "that the Russian leaders directed their attack, and it is against capitalism under one name or another that the discontented classes everywhere draw their indictment.

"Everyone who has an intelligent knowledge of social forces must know that great and widespread reactions like that which is now unquestionably manifesting itself against capitalism do not occur without cause or provocation; and before we commit ourselves we ought frankly to put to ourselves the question. Is the capitalistic system unimpeachable? Which is another way of asking, 'Have for the benefit of the countries in capitalists generally used their power which their capital is employed and for the benefit of their fellow men?'

More Get To Work

Britain, Canada and the United States are booming, Germany is going to the dogs. So reports the League of Nations Labor Bulletin. In the United States production is higher than at the peak of 1900. Unemployment is practically non-existent, and the mining, iron and steel, and building trades are employing every worker they can find. In Canada also the situation is improving, but in some of the skilled trades, especially engineering, a shortage of workers is feared. In the United Kingdom the gradual improvement still continues, the very slowly. Of the insured population of twelve millions, a million and a quarter are unemployed—much lower than a year ago, when it was one and three-quarter millions. Unemployment in Germany is rapidly increasing, and at March I stood at 5.7 per cent. of the six million organized workers, as compared with 4.4 per cent. a month earlier and 1.1 per cent. a year earlier. In France things are stationary.

Tramps and Insurance.

Toronto has one more fraternal association. It is a club for hoboes. Every member is an acknowledged tramp or "gentlemen-of-the-roads." Chicago boasts of a Millionaire Pauper Club. This is the home of 80 former men of wealth who are now penniless. These men are passing their last days in the most luxurious poor house in the world. Membership is restricted to those who were once rated as millionaires but who were reduced to pauperism by unfortunate financial operations. Those who dissipated their millions are barred. The late James C. King created the funds for the Millionaire Pauper Club and for its maintenance. Even millionaires need to insure against ill-fortune C. A. Spreckles, the sugar king, evidently thinks so. In his sixty-fourth year he has just applied for four million dollars of life insurance.

ON BITING BITERS BACK.

At a Pink Tea,
When KISSES were on the carpet,
A man remarked cryptically
(Whatever that may mean)
That a woman's LIPS were only
A woman's lips....
Well, I should have thought
That was ENOUGH
To give satisfaction;
But he was SO cynical
That he made me MAD,
So I said very sweetly,
"Who was it BIT you?"
At which they all laughed.
And so did I.

And I thought, to myself,
I SCORED that time;
But WHAT do you think!
He turned and said,
As cool as you like,
"Say! Talking of BITING,
How WELL you bite!"
And they laughed again,
And so did I, but THIS time
On the WRONG side
Of my face,
And it left a nasty taste;
So, in FUTURE,
I shall avoid Biting biters BACK.

DEFENCE OF EMPIRE OUTSTANDING PROBLEM COMING UP IN LONDON

Spokesmen of Rayal Navy Expect Overseas Dominions Will Contribute Toward Naval Defence

FORTIFICATIONS AT SINGAPORE

(By GEORGE HAMBLETON, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent)

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 7—Defence of the Empire will be discussed by the Imperial Conference in an atmosphere of uncertainties and in a period of shifting ground. The conference of 1911 met with the shadow of the German menace looming in the distance. When the Imperial War Conference met in 1917 and in 1918, the nations of the empire were straining every effort to emerge victorious. Germany had been defeated when the Premiers gathered in conference in 1921. The stage of the world drama to use the picturesque phrase of Mr. Hughes, of Australia, had shifted to the Pacific. Deliberations of the Premiers' Conference paved the way to the Washington Conference on disarmament and the four-power treaty to preserve peace on the Pacific. And, the Washington Conference in view, the Premiers' deferred consideration of defence but recognized "the necessity of co-operation among the various portions of the Empire to provide such naval defence as may prove to be essential for security" with the one-power standard as a minimum.

The Washington conference came and went. But postponements in ratification of the so-called disarmament Treaty by all the powers concerned have led to consequent delays in reduction of the world's navies. The United States and Japan have suspended the scrapping of capital ships. It was announced recently that the United States would maintain its suspended naval construction program until the status of the Washington agreement is definitely settled. Great Britain, claiming that she has already gone far beyond the requirements of the Washington treaty (so far as the scrapping of capital ships is concerned), decided to build two vessels of the Post-Jutland type. The United States, it was argued, had five such ships, and Japan two. In addition Great Britain has decided to spend ten million pounds in the development of Singapore as a new naval base on the Pacific.

Almost two years had followed the Washington Conference before the French Parliament approved the Disarmament Treaty and the Quadruple Treaty. And the day has still to come for the Disarmament Treaty to be given full effect. Only lately indeed the United States announced its intention during the next fiscal year, to keep in fighting trim and at sea the full naval strength under the treaty.

And following n the heels of naval rivalries of the past come ominous reports of air rivalries in the future. Great Britain adds 34 squadrons to her air defences at home. The French Chamber of deputies approves an appropriation of 211 million francs for aeronautical establishments and material. An international conference on the limitation of air armaments is discussed in the House of Lords. But on behalf of the British Government the view is expressed that such a conference would be fruitless at the present time with "so strained" a situation in Europe.

So it is in the midst of uncertainties, with the world in a sense feeling the way, that the Imperial Conference will once again discuss defence. Evidently the British authorities are anxious for frank discussion of the whole situation. When the appropriation for Singapore was before the British House, Commander Eyres Monsell, Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, expressed his "great confidence that the Dominions, which have a very direct interest in this work (the Singapore naval base), will see their way clear to co-operate with us."

"The Defence of the Empire," Col. Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty, said significantly in a recent speech, "depends upon the co-operation of all partner states of our economic commonwealth. It is to the younger navies of the Empire, based upon the strong and vigorous national life of great and growing communities, that we must look in the future, as well as to the parent navy."

Under the Washington Treaty Great Britain is precluded from the further development of Hong Kong and claims that at the present time she has not a dock in the Far East capable of taking care of a bulging capital battleship. Hence, according to the view of the British Admiralty, need for the development of Singapore.

"The strategic importance of Singapore," further observes Col. Amery, "was fully recognized by the Imperial Defence Conference of 1911 and it was considered that the future composite Pacific fleet of the Empire, as it was then spoken of, should look to Singapore as its main rallying point, and regular conferences took place between the Commander-in-chief of the China, Australian and India stations at intervals on what was considered as the strategic centre of the Empire ease of the Suez Canal." He goes on: "These proposals (development of Singapore) were before the Imperial Conference of 1921 and met with approval."

Australia, New Zealand and India will have a more immediate interest in Singapore than will Canada. New Zealand, it is reported, purposes to contribute £100,000 towards the new base. The Straits Settlements propose to give the site. Canada, according to Capt. Hose, director of the Canadian Naval Service, is interested for the protection of her tin supply. And while Canada may not be so vitally interested as Australia, New Zealand and India, the Singapore scheme, as involving the question of contribution, will be of special interest at the conference.

What will be the attitude of the Canadian delegates when defence comes before the conference? It is a thorny question. The way is strewed with political pitfalls and Premier King is unlikely to define his position until some concrete proposal is submitted. But the Liberal party of which he is leader has gone on record against the principle of direct contributions and Mr. King may be expected to emphasize the view that decision as to measures of defence and participation in war lies primarily with parliament. And piquancy will be added to the discussion by the fact that the Singapore scheme has met with considerable opposition in the Mother Country itself. Both Liberals and Labor criticized it, some on the ground that it was an evasion of the Washington agreement.

French Divorces

NUMBER NEARLY DOUBLED IN SEVEN YEARS.

PARIS, July 17.

Interesting revelations are found in the divorce statistics for the past five years which have just been issued by the Ministry of Justice. The number of petitions for divorce in the whole of France, which amounted to 19,000 in 1913, rose to 35,000 in 1920, the highest total yet recorded. This total does not include applications for the French equivalent of judicial separations. Such applications are diminishing every year, but they have latterly averaged one-seventh of the number of petitions for complete divorce.

The highest number of divorces in 1922 was in Paris, where 5,200 decrees were awarded, a figure equivalent to one divorce in every seven marriages. The lowest rates recorded were in rural districts, where the population is scattered and the bas de laine is still preferred to the bas de soie. The smallest numbers of divorces were recorded in the Departments of the Hautes and Basses Alpes, the Ariege, and the Lozere, the records of the last-named showing only one divorce to 65,000 inhabitants.

Climatic conditions appear to have some influence on marital relations; otherwise it seems difficult to account for the fact that, with practically equal populations, the comparatively cheerless and smoky atmosphere of Lyons was responsible for double the number of divorces obtained under the sunnier climate of Marseilles.

THE BLESSING OF CHILDREN.

Data drawn from the Census of 1911, the last one available for this purpose, indicate that divorces occur much more frequently in households without children than in those where there are offspring. The ten million French families with children had an average of 12,000 divorces per annum, while the 1,600,000 childless homes had an average of 8,000 divorces every year, or four times as many as characterised families blessed with little ones.

Barely 25 per cent. of the divorces in France are granted on the ground of the misconduct familiar in the English Court. Another interesting fact is that in every eight French cases in which such misconduct is alleged the proportion of guilty husbands is only three, compared with five erring wives.

Naturally the cost of obtaining a divorce has increased in France like the price of everything else. A simple undefended petition, which involved a total expenditure of 1,500 francs in 1920, will now cost anything between 2,500 and 5,000 francs, apart from counsel's fees.

Looking Into The Future of the Motion Picture Industry

By HARRY M. WARNER.

The future of the motion picture industry is full of great possibilities. And these possibilities are not impossible of achievement. When the pendulum swings toward a finer realization of the immensity of our industry, and its manifold undiscovered possibilities, and making of productions will not entail the helter-skelter tactics being used today. I look forward to the day when the production of a motion picture will be as stable a production an anything that is being consumed by the public.

I do not mean to infer that pictures will be standardized, nor do I intend to infer that they can be formulized to meet great success. The trend will be to get out of our swaddling clothes into a more fitting and becoming attire. There is no denying the fact that no one person or group of persons can ever hope to have a monopoly of this great educational and entertainment factor. It is too big and too vital a public commodity, and we are growing so fast that there is little if any time to look back and compare the past, present and future.

Nevertheless, within the very near future there will be no such thing as the star system, more pains will be taken by directors with production, the unscrupulous producers who resurrect old films because some member happens to be in the lime-light today will be eradicated, and the showman of to-morrow will be those men who show a keen sense of motion picture values and an appreciation of public taste, popular books and famous plays will also continue to be produced and the original story will also come into its own with the greater development of the photodramatists.

Of primary importance will be the fact that the production of motion pictures will be carried on a sane, business-like basis. In this connection the star system will become a thing of the past. Exorbitant salaries will no longer be paid. Experienced actors and actresses will be more than content to carry good stories to their conclusion. For the story will be the main factor, first, last and all the time.

Furthermore, more pains will be taken by directors with production. The conscientious director will be the director who knows story values, the artist in tch sense that he will direct only the biggest stories containing a theme of vital importance to humanity. They will not pander to cheap clap-trap—the hokumized and impossible stories. In this connection our stories of eighteen classics being made from popular plays and widely read books have been chosen primarily because they contain the things that interest human beings; stories that are a living, breathing part of humanity itself.

Now a great injury is done to the industry as a whole, not to mention the insult that is thrown boldly at motion picture audiences, when unscrupulous producers resurrect old and time worn films just because a member of the company happens to be at present in the public limelight. The moment we signed up David Belasco, the moment the word was spread that the great theatrical producer had become definitely identified with the industry, the unscrupulous producers immediately dug up anything and everything that was labelled with the name of David Belasco. As a result, motion picture audiences will be fed cheap imitations of this great man's work—pictures that he has had nothing whatever to do with it in any way, shape or manner.

In the final analysis this tends to ruin the industry, and the theatre owner who stoops to buying the imitations will suffer in prestige. Once an exhibitor loses the confidence of his patrons, he may as well go out of business. You can fool the public once in a while, but you can't fool them all the time.

To-day the trend seems to be toward the adaptation of popular books and plays. This will continue for a long time. In fact I think it will always exist. Published books, especially those in the "best seller class, are a known commodity. They usually strike at a big theme, and they furnish the groundwork for an assured audience appeal. Plays also are of this calibre. After all if exhibitors are assured an established audience by booking a popular play or novel made into picture form, they would be foolish to book something that is not as well known. Of course, the story is the thing, and I believe that in time great stress will also be placed on the story written directly for the screen.

The exhibition of motion pictures will assume greater and more dignified proportions. Exhibitors will exploit only those pictures that are worthy of being exploited and publicized. In other words the showmen of to-morrow will be those who use considerable discrimination in what to exploit and exploit properly. An overdose of medicine is always fatal. Once you take too much you're in the throes of oblivion. The same thing applies to showmanship. The man who puts his pictures over week after week is the man who is planning a short business career. He cannot possibly get fifty-two exploitable pictures a year, and all cannot be treated alike. Therefore, the wise showmen will be those who have a keen sense of public appreciation, and can mix this with true and tried business ability.

Bread Gouging Again Hit By Attorney

HOUSEWIVES' LAWYER SAYS BIG BAKERS IGNORED FLOUR CUT.

By Roscoe B. Fleming
in Baltimore Post.

Baltimore's big bakers are charging almost the same bread prices as three years ago, while flour prices are half what they were then and are going lower, A. B. Connelly, Attorney for the bread price committee of the Housewives' league, said to-day.

The committee's bread weight bill —demanding a full weight pound loaf —to be introduced in the city council was endorsed today by H. F. Broening, president of the labor federation.

Connelly pointed out flour cost $14 to $15 a barrel three years ago. To-day, best grades are selling $6 and $6.50 a barrel to the big bakers.

Raised Bread Price As Flour Declined

Yet in 1920 bread was selling for 9 and 10 cents, he said, and is now selling for 8 and 9. Only a month ago, big bakers put bread prices up a cent a loaf, in the face of a 50-cent decline in flour.

Bakers have met these figures by saying flour is not the main cost of a loaf of bread, but Connelly pointed out this was refuted by figures from an independent baker, published by The Post Saturday. This baker's flour costs are exactly half the costs of a loaf of bread.

Flour is being sold by the Gambrill Mills, Ellicott City, at $4.75 to $6.80, a Gambrill official said to-day. This, he said, is 50 cents less than a month ago.

The mill is paying $1 to $1.40 for wheat. Since it takes five bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour, the flour is now costing less than the wheat which constitutes it. Only high feed prices to the farmers enable Gambrill to sell flour so low, he said.

Walter A. Frey, a large wholesale grocery official here, said he expected flour to go lower still. "It always goes lower when the new wheat crop comes in," he said.

Representative John Philip Hill today enthusiastically endorsed the ordinance, proposed jointly by the bread committee and The Post, for standard weight and quality bread in Baltimore.

City officials are also in favour of such an ordinance, Mrs. Dowell said.

Gaelic League Meets

PRESENTATION IS MADE TO PRESIDENT WALSH ON EVE OF DEPARTURE TO U. S.

The Gaelic League met last evening when matters dealing with the future welfare of the League were discussed. A large gathering was present despite other attractions. Reports from various sub-commottees were submitted and adopted, and future plans discussed and outlined for the coming year. The League is growing rapily and will be heard from in the near future in all branches of athletics and community welfare.

At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. M. Walsh, B.E., announced his resignation as President, owing to his leaving for New York where he will reside in future. Mr. Walsh in a short address thanked the League, and Irishmen generally, for the support given him since his coming to St. John's and said he would always carry with him the recollections of Newfoundland Irishmen and women who have always stood firm to the appeals of Ireland for recognition as a Nation.

In bidding good-bye to the Gaelic League of Newfoundland, Mr. Walsh asked that the members give his successor the same loyal support accorded him. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Walsh was cheered to the echo. Each member shook hands and wished him best of good fortune in his new home.

Before adjournment, Mr. Denis O'Quin, on behalf of the League, asked Mr. Walsh to accept a beautiful hand painted address in Gaelic, and a magnificent watch, as an appreciation of the League's debt to him for his services and help in re-firing the flames of Irish Nationalism during the past three years.

Mr. Walsh replied in fitting words, after which the meeting adjourned, with the singing of "He's a jolly good fellow."

Mr. and Mrs. Walsh leave by the Silvia Saturday for their future home in New York City.

Distinguished Nfld. Cleric on Visit

There arrived by the Silvia yesterday morning a distinguished Newfoundlander in the person of Rev. A. Twillingate, which place he left at the age of twelve. With determination and push worthy of a viking of the North, he has succeeded splendidly in his adopted land. He is at present head of the Department of Evangelism in the Boston University School of Theology. He has spent the present summer lecturing over the United States with the Rev. Parks Cadman and Rev. Dr. Clarke the former the greatest preacher and lecturer of the United States of to-day and the latter the famous editor of "The Christian Century."

Professor Lindfield comes to Newfoundland on this occasion to visit his native place; and see again the scenes of his early boyhood.

He was met at the boat by Rev. J. G. Joyce of Wesley Church a close personal friend. It was hoped to have the Professor preach at Wesley on Sunday next, but as the S.S. Portia was just ready to sail, he took advantage of the quick route and Wesley congregation will have to pospone a treat they were expecting until he has spent a month in the Northern Metropolis. He promises to give Wesley the Sunday of September 9th.

At The White House—Mr. W. W. Wareham, Hr. Buffett; Mr. A. Wareham, Haystack, P.B.; Capt. A. M. Earle, Carbonear; Miss N. J. Earle, Carbonear; Mr. John Diamond, Adam's Cove; Mr. K. M. Brown, M.H.A., Grand Falls; Mr. J. Woodman, Botwood.

Ye Olden Days

A queer practice existed in Newfoundland prior to this date. A 'Let Pass' was signed by the Governor and sent to the commanding officer at Fort William to enable vessels to sail out the narrows. This certified that all customs and port charges were paid. If the 'Let Pass' was not received, the artillery would train a gun on the delinquent ship and bring her to. In the case of John T. Trininghan & Co. vs. Artilleryman Johnston Gaskins Chief Justice Forbes laid down the dictum that put an end to this practice. "A gunner cannot justify this act of firing on a vessel by order of the Governor requiring all vessels before they proceed to sea to be provided with passes from the Governor, on pain of being fired at, and compelled to pay 6s. 8d. for shot and powder.' This practice existed from 1776 to this date 1821. In 1784 a man on the brig St. Vincent was killed in the narrows by a shot so fired intended to stop the ship in which he was sailing, which ship was going out without a let pass.

On this date in 1864 the Tilt Cove Mines opened under the inspection of Smith McKay and ten men amongst whom were Eli Tilley, John Tilley, Thomas Byrne, Joseph Roost, and James Murphy.

A Captain Pitts started the manufacturing of bricks on Bell Island this date in the year 1847.

Atlantic Telegraph fleet, Niagara, Gargon and Porcupine arrived in St. John's.

Regatta on Quidi Vidi Lake, Placentia men in Placentia won fishermen's race—time 10.28, 1877.

On August 9th, 1881, construction of Newfoundland Railway actually commenced.

The House of Assembly closed 1894.

Coming By Rosalind

Mr. Edward Ring (Ted), formerly of Harvey & Co.'s office, city, where he had spent fifteen years, but now business manager for the firm of Hon. J. P. Hand, Bermuda, will arrive Thursday next by the Rosalind on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Ring, Long's Hill.

Masonic Installation at Bay Roberts

The annual installation at McKay Lodge, Bay Roberts, takes place tonight, and District Grand Master designate Hon. Tasker Cook and other Grand Lodge Officers of the Scottish jurisdiction leave by motor this afternoon to take part in the ceremony.

Flour Prices To Advance

It is understood that local flour agents were advised yesterday by the mills that, due to the reports of damage to the wheat crops about to be harvested, flour has advanced in price about thirty cents a barrel, to become effective immediately.

As at this time of the year wholesalers' stocks are low, the advance is likely to be maintained, and the promised cheap flour for fall delivery may not materialize.

Miner Is Killed at Bell Isld.

Thomas Whelan of Bryant's Cove Crushed by Fall of Rock.

A fatal mine accident occurred at Bell Island yesterday, the victim of which was Thomas Whelan of Bryant's Cove, Hr. Grace District.

He was working in No. 6 mine, when a fall of rock occurred, killing him instantly. Deceased was 28 years old, was married and leaves, besides his wife, three small children. The remains were sent to his late home this morning for interment.

Mr. Sam Tiller, Commorore Cook of the F. P. Union, told the Advocate this morning a story of a providential occurrance at St. Joseph's regatta yesterday. A man who dropped around to see the races took a flier on the wheel of fortune buying a ticket for $1. and was dumfounded when, after giving the wheel a spin, the man in charge passed him over the handsome sum of $60.

Popular Clergyman Is Honoured

Rev. Harold R. Bursey, of King's Point Mission, received a very pleasant surprise on the eve of his departure from that place when the friends of Jackson's Cove who had gathered at the home of Mr. Harvey Newhook, presented him with a sum of money.

The teacher, Miss Netta Brett, read the following address:

Dear Mr. Bursey—As you are about to sever your connection with us, we have met here to-night to show our appreciation of your work among us the past two years, and we wish you to accept this little gift as a slight token of remembrance.

May the future have in store for you happiness and prosperity. This is the sincere wish of all here.

— Your Friends in Jackson's Cove.

The presentation was made by Miss Brett (a gift of the congregation.)

Mr. Bursey in a few well-chosen words, thanked the friends for their kindness, co-operation and liberal support received from them during his pastorate.

Refreshments were then served, after which games were indulged in, and the singing of Auld Ang Syne brought the evening to a close.

Amazing Accusations By Lord A. Douglas

STORIES OF LORD KITCHENER, SIR A. MOND, AND THE BATTLE OF JUTLAND

(Pall Mall Gazette)

Further amazing assertions were made by Lord Alfred Douglas to-day in the course of cross-examination by Mr. Patrick Hastings, K.C., counsel for the "Morning Post," against the proprietors of which journal Lord Alfred has brought an action for alleged libel before Mr. Justice Salter and a special jury.

"Do you mean that the Jews caused the death of Lord Kitchener?" he was asked.

"Yes, I do," he replied. "Lord Kitchener was deliberately murdered to prevent him going into Russia to stop the revolution that was going on there."

Astonishing allegations against Sir A. Mond were also made, and another story told concerned an alleged conversation with Mr. Winston Churchill.

Mr. Patrick Hastings asked: Is there any limit to the spiteful observations this witness makes?

Mr. Justice Salter said he had decided to exclude nothing in this case.

The case for Lord Alfred Douglas was concluded, and among witnesses for denfence were Mr. Winston Churchill, and Lord Balfour (whose evidence was taken on commission).

Grenfell Mission Taken To Task

Red Bay,
June 27, 1923.

Editor, Evening Advocate,

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in the columns of your valuable paper, to correct some of the statements of the local press, regarding the Industrial work of the Grenfell Mission. It may not be of much importance but nevertheless the truth is the only thing that can stand the real test.

I was both amused and interested while reading your paper of March the 15th 1923. Referring to the Industrial work it said: When the fishing season is over there is practically nothing for the women and children, especially in order that they may employ their time profitably and in such an order that would enable them to earn sufficient cash to buy at least some of the necessities of life. I only refer to the branch of that work that is organized here and if cash is provided to pay for the labour that women and children do here. It is directed in wrong channels, for women and child labour is paid for in second hand clothing for which exorbitant prices are often charged. Let me give you an instance: A woman takes a mat to make, it takes her ten days to make it, neglecting a greater part of her household work to do it in that time. She carries it to the clothing store and wants a suit of ladies singlets for which she is charged three dollars; complains a little about the price saying it's cheaper at any of the shops around and is told to go get it there, and at the same time no cash is furnished, ah no, it's a game of catch 'em and then cheat 'em at mat-making for one suit of so-called second hand singlets.

If all other work is paid for like mat-making, then I say God help the poor unfortunate mother who has to work and earn clothing for a family of four or five children and herself. It is said, and the writer has heard it from good authority, that a mat costs the department five dollars for making material included, and sells for eight, ten and twelve, thus averaging ten dollars, not a bad profit for somebody, although it seems that nobody gets it or we poor mortals do not understand the ways of the mighty and must ask no questions, but some of us can understand what 100 per cent. means. I wonder if our men who supply for the fishery would charge the some profits on a barrel of flour and a gallon of molasses and a pound of tea, would they be eulogized for doing so, or would they not be held up as mean contemptable money grabbers.

Yours Vers Sincerely,
FAIR PLAY.

Suggestion For Motorists

The Executive and Road Committee of the Motor Association held their regular weekly meeting yesterday when amongst other important matters, traffic regulations were discussed, and it was suggested that cars coming citywards after dark should have the right of way over cars going out; that is, the cars bound out, should stop and dim their lights, allowing the incoming cars to pass. This is a helpful suggestion and if acted upon will obviate much of the confusion now experienced on our suburban roads.

Familiar Products

In viewing the exhibit of Dr. A. W. Chase's family medicines now to be seen in Bishop & Son's building, Water Street, one is struck by the familiarity of the packages. They greet one as old friends, so popular and well-known are they, for most of us have at some time or another used Dr. Chase's medicines in our own homes. It is generally taken for granted that Dr. Chase's are the most useful and popular family medicines offered for sale anywhere. Years of honest and truthful advertising have created for these remedies a most enviable reputation. Competition and substitution have only strengthened the demand for Dr. Chase's goods, for the consumers have learned by experience that it is unwise to take chances with unknown and untried medicines, and have come to place implicit faith in these remedies prepared from the fomulae actually used by Dr. Chase in his own practice.

Dealers find a brisk demand all the time for these goods, for satisfied customers are continually reordering and recommending them to their friends. The present exhibit shows up to good advantage the many attractive and forceful advertising helps supplied to the trade, while the persistent newspaper advertising which has always been the policy of the manufacturers, Messrs Edmanson and Bates, is known to everyone who reads the papers. Keeping their goods continually before the public is an obligation which every manufacturer owes to the merchants who invest their money in his goods and that this obligation has been well met by the makers of Dr. Chase's Medicines is once again evidenced by the present splendid exhibition of their products.

The sales and advertising policy of the Dr. Chase Medicine Company in Newfoundland is ably loked after by the local agent, Mr. Gerald S. Doyle, who says that he expects a bigger increase in business this year than ever before.—Advt.

A Word From Arnold's Cove

Arnold's Cove,

Editor of the Advocate,

Dear Sir,—Please grant me space in your much esteemed paper to record a Garden Party which was held on Tuesday afternoon by the country road side.

There was quite a large gathering of young men and ladies, and the hours were spent in nice games, and ended with a splendid tea prepared by the ladies and enjoyed by everyone present.

Among the visitors were some people from the Railway Department, who also enjoyed the evening very much.

The evening was finished by dancing in which most of those present joined.

Wishing the Advocate every success and looking forward to another such Garden Party.

Yours very truly,
AUNT JANE.

LABRADOR GOLD RUSH ENDS IN FAILURE

Disappointed Gold Seekers Are Returning

Larger Equipment May Result In Success

The Labrador gold rush has ended in failure. Bitterest disappointment reigns in the breasts of the fortune hunters, whose minds were obsessed during all the winter, with thoughts of gold in Stag Bay. They waited for the Arctic ice-floes to pass the Straits and the snow to melt from the bosom of the treasured surfaces of Labrador, and then the rush began—not for gold, but for failure, abject failure.

Not to say the gold is not there. Labrador may still have its Bonanza Creeks, may still be the greater Klondyke, and may yet be the centre of a great gold mining industry.

But not this year, nor next, according to a statement made to the Advocate by a party who has but recently returned from Stag Bay, and is now in this city.

After going to enormous expenditure in outfitting expeditions from Sydney, New York and elsewhere, which cost many their last cent, and after suffering all kinds of hardships in the passage to the northern region, the men are now in no fit state to be tampered with and are not tolerating any complimentary statements of those, who, according to some, engineered the gold scare for their own speculative profits.

Upon their arrival at Stag Bay the men worked like dogs, digging their way into the frozen earth and finding nothing, and yet digging, lest a few feet further down gold would be found in enormous quantities, sufficiently enormous to retrieve their fallen fortunes. They did not find it, though the lure of treasure still encourages the hope that it may be there in the bed of the river or at the foot of the mountains of the interior, where "eye hath not seen."

Throwing the bone away for the shadow, is the opinion of the party interviewed, when commenting upon some of those personal acquaintances of his who went to large expeditionary costs in the hope of snatching wealth from the coasts of Labrador. But it is all in the game, he says, and the hoary headed miners who adventured in the Klondyke and prospected in California will curse today and laugh to-morrow.

Stag Bay, with its camps and mining outfits, presents all the appearance of a mushroom western mining region of '49, that was one day and was not the next, because gold was undiscovered. But who knows but that as in many mining instances of the past, the gold hunters, now waiting for the Sagona and already sailing homewards in their chartered launches and schooners will return again with larger and more efficient mining equipments for the potential wealth?

The gold is too scarce for individual miners. They cannot find it. Extensive operations backed by a company sufficiently financially strong, may be successful, and already it is said a movement is on foot for such major operations, but it may not materialize this year.

A message from Sub-collector Smith at Stag Bay to Finance Minister Cave confirms the information that the Advocate interview has elicited.

American Ship Is Believed Lost With Entire Crew

Body of Seaman and Much Wreckage Have Been Picked Up

PANAMA, Aug. 11—It is feared that the U. S. Tanker, "Swift Star" bound from San Pedro, California to Fall River, Mass., has been lost at sea with her crew of thirty men.

Drifting wreckage with the vessel's name was found off San Andre's Island, while fishing boats from that island report that the damaged lifeboats were seen drifting off the coast on July 22nd.

An ice-chest, marked "Swift Star," containing the body of a man, was also picked up.

The vessel had not been heard from since July 13th. She carried one hundred thousand barrels of crude oil.

Westminster Abbey Is Scene of Mourning For U. S. Executive Head.

MARION, Aug. 10—Thousands of people to-day paid a last tribute of respect to the late President Harding, at the funeral services in Marion.

The streets were lined up throughout the route to the cemetery with crowds waiting a last chance to gaze again on the face of the dead before the casket was finally closed.

LONDON, Aug. 10—Several thousand citizens of Great Britain and the United States gathered at Westminster Abbey at noon to-day, and mourned the death of President Harding.

Hundreds could not gain access to the building and lined the streets outside during the service.

DUSSELDORF, Aug. 11 — The wages of the miners in the pits are to be increased two hundred and forty per cent., retroative to Aug. 6th.

LATEST

BERLIN, Aug. 11—The strike movement threatens to become more serious. However, the strike at the State Printing Works ended by an agreement yesterday, and the presses are again turning out billions of paper marks.

Nearly all the Hamburg shipyards are closed because the managers are unable to accede to the workers' demands for an immediate increase in wages.

Among workers generally, there is a disposition to take recourse to strikes unless wages are substantially increased.

BERLIN, Aug. 11—A proclamation issued by President Erbert last evening, prohibits the circulation of pamphlets demanding the overthrow of the constitutional government, or inciting to acts that are likely to endanger public 'order. The penalty mentioned in the proclamation is three months' imprisonment, and a fine not exceeding five hundred million marks.

Workmen in the Vulcan yards at Steton have adopted passive resistance and workers at the big chemical factory have struck.

At Danzig, work has ceased in virtually all factories, the workers demanding pre-war wages on a gold basis.

Similar difficulties are reported from the Ruhr, where strikes are spreading, and violent incidents are more numerous with a general demand for big wage increases.

The Thyssen works at Hamborn have closed and miners at Wanne are refusing to enter the pits.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 11—Ismet Pasha was acclaimed by the population on his return from Lausanne yesterday. The city was elaborately decorated and beflagged, and last night there were special illuminations in his honor.

COBLENZ, Aug. 11—The Inter-allied Commission has ordered the seizure of mines in ocupied territory, owing to the failure of Germans in the delivery of fuel as reparations in accordance with the treaty.

HALIFAX, Aug. 11—The three-masted schooner Mary G. Duff loaded with lumber from Sheet Harbor for New York, is ashore on the bar at Sheet Harbor, with twelve feet of water in her hold.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER III.

"You were entitled to your profit, Donald. 'Twas business. You should have taken it. Ah, lad, if you only knew the terrible four years I've paid for yon red cedar!"

"You mean the suspense of not knowing how I was spending my allowance?"

The Laird nodded.

"Curiosity killed a cat, my son, and I'm not as young as I used to be."

"I had thought you'd have read the accounting in my eye. Take another look, Hector McKaye." And Donald thrust his smiling countenance close to his father's.

"I see naught in your eye but deviltry and jokes."

"None are so blind as they that will not see. If you see a joke, dad, it's on you."

Old Hector blinked, then suddenly he sprang at his son, grasped him by the shoulders, and backed him against the wall.

"Did you sell me that red cedar?" he demanded incredulously.

"Aye, mon; through an agent," Donald burred Scottishly. "A' did nae the heart tae stick my faither sae deep for a bit skulin." A'm a prood man, Hector McKaye; a'll nae take a graand eeducashun as sic a price. 'Tis nae Christian."

"Ah, my bonny bairn!" old Hector murmured happily, and drew his son to his heart. "What a grand joke to play on your puir old father! Och, mon, was there ever a lad like mine?"

"I knew you'd buy that timber for an investment if I offered it cheap enough," Donald explained. "Besides, I owe you a poke. You wanted to be certain you hadn't reared a jackass instead of a man, so you gave me a hundred thousand dollars and stood by to see what I'd do with it—didn't you, old Scotty?" Hector nodded a trifle guiltily. "Andrew Daney wrote me you swore by all your Highland clan that the man who sold you that red cedar was ripe for the fool-killer."

"Tush, tush!" the Laird protested. "You're getting personal, now. I dis like to appear inquisitive, but might I ask what you've done with your two hundred thousand profit?"

"Well, you see, dad, I would have felt a trifle guilty had I kept it, so I blew it all in on good conservative United States bonds, registered them in your name, and sent them to Daney to hide in your vault at Port Agnew."

"Ah, well, red cedar or bonds, 'twill come back to you some day, sonny. The real profit's in the fun—"

"And the knowledge that I'm not a fool—eh, father?"

Father love supernatural gleamed in the Laird's fine gray eyes.

"Were you a fool, my son, and all that I have in the world would cure you if thrown into the Bight to Tyee, I'd gladly throw it and take up my life where I began it—with pike-pole and peavey, double- bitted axe, and cross-cut saw. However, since you're not a fool, I intend to continue to enjoy my son. We'll go around the world together."

* * * * * *

Thus did the experiment end At least, Donald thought so. But when he left the hotel a few minutes later to book two passages to Europe, The Laird of Tyee suddenly remembered that thanks were due his Presbyterian God. So he slid to his old knees beside his bed and murmured.

"Lord, I thank Thee! For the sake of thine own martyred Son, set angels to guard him and lead him in the path of manly honor that comes at last to Thy kingdom. Amen."

Then he wired Andrew Daney a long telegram of instructions and a stiff raise in salary.

"The boy has a head like a tar bucket," he concluded. "Everything I ever put in it has stuck. We are going to frolic round the world together, and we will be home when we get back."

CTAPTER IV.

Donald was twenty-four and The Laird fifty-eight when the pair returned from their frolic round the world—Donald to take up his father's labors, The Laird to lay them aside and retire to The Dreamerie and the books he had accumulated against this happy afterglow of a busy and fruitful life.

Donald's mother and sisters were at The Dreamerie the night the father and son arrived. Of late years, they had spent less and less of their time there. The Laird had never protested, for he could not blame them for wearying of a little backwoods sawmill town like Port Agnew.

With his ability to think calmly, clearly and unselfishly, he had long since realized that eventually his girls must marry; now Elizabeth was twenty-six and Jane twenty-eight, and Mrs. McKaye was beginning to be greatly concerned for their future. Since the Laird had built the dreamerie in opposition to their wishes, they had spent less than six months in each year at Port Agnew. And these visits had been scattered through the year. They had travelled much, and when not travelling, they lived in the Seattle house and were rather busy socially. Despite his devotion to his business, however, The Laird found time to spend at least one week in each month with them in Seattle, in addition to the frequent business trips which took him there.

The night of his home-coming was the happiest The Laird had ever known, for it marked the culmination of his lifetime of labor and dreams. Long after his wife and the girls had retired, he and Donald sat in the comfortable living room, smoking and discussing plans for the future, until presently, these matters having been discussed fully, there fell a silence between them, to be broken presently by The Laird.

"I'm wondering, Donald, if you haven't met some bonny lass you'd like to bring home to Port Agnew. You realize, of course, that there's room on the Tyee Head for another Dreamerie, although I built this one for you—and her."

"There'll be no other house on Tyee Head, father," Donald answered, "unless you care to build one for mother and the girls. The wife that I'll bring home to port Agnew will not object to my father in the house." He smiled and added, "You're not at all hard to get along with, you know."

The Laird's eyes glistened.

"Have you found her yet, my son?"

Donald shook his head in negation.

"Then look for her," old Hector ordered. "I have no doubt that, when you find her, she'll be worthy of you. I'm at age now when a man looks no longer into the future but dwells in the past, and it's hard for me to think of you, big man that you are, as anything save a wee laddie trotting at my side. Now, if I had a grandson——"

When presently Donald bade him good-night, Hector McKaye turned off the lights and sat in the dark, gazing down across the moonlit Bight of Tyee to the sparks that flew upward from the stacks of his sawmill in Port Agnew, for they were running a night shift. And as he gazed, he thrilled, with a fierce pride and a joy that was almost pain, in the knowledge that he had reared a merchant prince for this, his principality of Tyee.

CHAPTER V.

HECTOR McKAYE had always leaned toward the notion that he could run Port Agnew better than a mayor and a town council, in addition to deriving some fun out of it; consequently, Port Agnew had never been incorporated. And this was an issue it was not deemed wise to press, for the Tyee Lumber Company owned every house and lot in the town, and Hector McKaye owned every share of stock in the Tyee Lumber Company.

If he was a sort of feudal baron, he was a gentle and kindly one; large building plots, pretty little bungalows, cheap rentals, and no taxation constituted a social condition that few desired to change. As these few developed and The Laird discovered them, their positions in his employ, were forfeited, their rents raised, or their leases cancelled, and presently Port Agnew knew them no more. He paid fair wages, worked his men nine hours, and employed none but naturalized Americans, with a noticeable predilection for those of Scotch nativity or ancestry.

Strikes or lockouts were unknown in Port Agnew—likewise saloons. Unlike most sawmill towns of that period, Port Agnew had no street in which children were forbidden to play or which mothers taught their daughters to avoid. Once an I.W.W. organizer came to the town, and upon being ordered out and refusing to go, The Laird, then past fifty, had ducked him in the Skookum until he changed his mind.

The Tyee Lumber Company owned and operated the local telephone company, the butcher shop, the general store, the hotel, a motion picture theatre, a town hall, the bank, and the electric light and power plant, and with the profits of these enterprises Port Agnew had paved streets, sidewalks lined with handsome electroliers, and a sewer system. It was an admirable little sawmill town, and if the expenses of maintaining it exceeded the income, The Laird met the deficit and assumed all the worry, for he wanted his people to be happy and prosperous beyond all others..

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

Now Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Washington, D. C.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation which a physician said I would have to have for a very bad case of female trouble. My system was all run down for two years after my little girl was born. Then I read of your wonderful medicine and decided to try it. I could hardly drag one foot after the other, and after taking six bottles of the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I now do all my housework, also washing and ironing, and do not know what real trouble is. My health is fine, and I weigh 140 pounds. When I started taking it I weighed 97 pounds. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any one who is suffering from female trouble or is run down. You may use this testimonial for I am only too glad to let suffering women know what the Vegetable Compound did for me."—Mrs. IDA HEWITT, 1529 Penna. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C.

Such letters from women in every section of this country prove beyond question the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sapiro Answers Eight Questions

Famous California Authority on Co-operative Marketing of Farm Products Answers Questions Asked by American Farm Papers.

(Financial Post)

Aaron Sapiro, the man who organized the California fruit growers has been brought to Winnipeg to solve the wheat marketing problem. Farmers' welfare enthusiasts and publicity-seeking newspapers are organizing the visit, with the idea seemingly that Sapiro is possessed of some magic method of solving the West's troubles. Sapiro is a practical man. He believes that something can be done by co-operative marketing. And something may be accomplished in reducing marketing expenses if the grain-growers enter into the project in the proper spirit. But we doubt if from his experience he will tell the Westerners that they can, by holding their wheat or any other method, materially alter the prices for wheat established in the world markets with all grain growing countries competing. Sapiro's answers to eight questions regarding the marketing of farm products follow:

First question:—Just how can the grain and livestock farmers expect to combine successfully so as to influence world crop prices?

Sapiro's answer:—Grain and livestock farmers can organize co-operative marketing associations just as well as the growers of prunes, or raisins, or cotton, or oranges.

Where farmers sell individually, they dump. Where they sell through commodity co-operative associations, they merchandise. You can merchandise a commodity even if you control only three or four per cent. of the American supply.

We merchandise eggs through the poultry producers of central California, and are getting wonderful results for these poultry producers, although all California produces less than five per cent. of the eggs of the United States.

We merchandise strawberries from central California through an association that handles less than three per cent. of the strawberries of the United States. We are shipping pre-cooled strawberries straight into New York city and getting a higher net prices for our berries from Chicago to New York than even the strawberry growers in Kentucky and sections two thousand miles nearer to these great markets can get.

The matter of merchantdising does not depend upon control or monopoly. It depends solely upon getting a group viewpoint on the group problem of marketing. If you have over 50 per cent. of the annual production of any crop, you can act as a dominant factor in the market, and can do much better than if you merchandise only 20 per cent. of the crop. But you can accomplish real results by co-operative selling even if it involves less than five per cent. of the total American production of that commodity.

It has been pointed out that it is easier to organize the tobacco industry than to organize the wheat industry. From one standpoint this is correct: the wheat of the United States is only about one-fourth of the wheat of the world; whereas in certain types of tobacco the American production is dominant.

Nevertheless, six surplus exporting countries dominate the world's wheat markets: Canada, United States, Australia, Argentina, India, and Russia (in normal times). Of these, Canada and the United States are exporting the greatest quantities.

Stabilize World Price

If the wheat growers were organized so that they could dominate the merchandising pool of American wheat alone, it would be the largest single factor in stabilizing the wheat prices of the world.

If, in addition, American wheat growers would create a joint agency for the sale of the exportable surplus, together with Canada and Australia, and perhaps Argentina, there would be unquestionable stabilization of the world wheat price, and both the farmer and the consumer would be saved from the wheat speculators in Liverpool and Chicago.

I firmly believe that there will be international co-operative marketing associations organized for the purpose of the joint sale of exportable surpluses.

We do not even have to go that far. If growers are organized, it enables them as an organization to adjust their operations to the law of supply and demand, and to reap for themselves some of the natural economic results of fluctuations in the quantity production of crops.

For example, the unorganized cotton growers, to the extent of more than 80 per cent., sold their cotton in the fall of 1922, and averaged approximately 20 cents a pound. Even at that time the inherent value of cotton was at least five cents a pound more; but the unorganized grower had no conception of the absorbing power of markets, and had no means, as an individual, to secure such farm credits as would enable him to do orderly marketing.

But the co-operative associations, organized on this commodity plan, merchandised the cotton delivered to them. They made small sales in the fall, so as to break down an already ridiculously low market. Then they borrowed money to the extent of almost $100,000,000, at rates averaging less than five and one-half per cent., and distributed the money among their growers so as to enable them to pay their crop liens and store accounts.

The cotton associations then sold—and they sold skilfully on a steadily rising market. The lowest of these co-operatives will average about 25 cents a pound, and some even higher.

The Reward of Organization

The growing members of the co-operatives will probably average from $20 to $35 a bale net return greater than the unorganized growers. This is not because they were wiser than the unorganized growers, but solely because the co-operative marketing associations, through orderly marketing, enabled their members to take advantage of the operation of the law of supply and demand and to get for themselves part of the inevitably higher prices for cotton.

The cotton that the average unorganized grower dumped in the fall was not resold at that time—much of it is still in the hands of the cotton merchants and speculators. These men will eventually resell it at high prices, and will legitimately gain that difference.

Supply and demand makes the price, but the individual grower is unable to benefit by it—except as he goes in with his fellow growers and organizes for orderly marketing.

This principle is absolutely the same with both grain and livestock. Livestock will be harder than any other commodity to organize, because you have there the combination of a commodity being produced at the same time that it is in the process of marketing.

With cotton, when once the crop is harvested and binned the period of production is over. Not so with things that walk on four legs.

Then, in one sense, livestock is a perishable product, although it can be converted into some relatively perishable products and some relatively non-perishable products. The handling of any perishable product is harder than the handling of non-perishable products. With perishable it is a problem of routing and controlling the supply that moves into any particular market. With non-perishables, storage and finance and slow selling help to control that supply.

Above all things, no co-operative marketing association is a holding movement. If growers hold for a specific price, they deserve to fail just as any speculator who tries to squeeze the market beyond its normal commercial price.

Over Production

Second question:—What can be done to prevent overproduction of a co-operatively marketed crop? Advertising will help, but how can you keep sales ahead of production when a crop is highly profitable?

Sapiro's answer:—Nothing can be done to prevent overproduction of any crop except steady education as to the absorbing power of the consuming markets.

It is possible to extend markets by advertising and collateral means, but there is always the likelihood of reaching the saturation point. If this is done, overproduction will be inevitable. The only way in which it can be faced by education and by co-ordinate action among farmers.

As it is now, we frequently get overproduction as we did with potatoes in this last crop. The potato farmers were absolutely helpless. Only about the normal crop moved into market, but that crop was sold at the lowest possible prices. Over 70,000,000 bushels of potatoes rotted in the ground in the northern line of states because it would not pay the farmers to dig them.

Those 70,000,000 bushels of potatoes rotting in the ground determined the price of the entire crop moving to market. Overproduction has its terrors at all times; but it is likely to be held in hand more easily if the growers are organized than when each man rushes his products to market, so that his neighbor and not himself will be stuck with the overproduction.

That is what unorganized farmers always do, and the buying world knows it. The result in an overproduction year is that farmers get an abnormally low price for that part of the crop which they do manage to sell; and therein lies the greatest loss. If they could receive fair value for what is sold, the loss of the surplus would not be ruinous. This co-operative marketing associations tend to bring about. They do not dump a big crop all at once upon the market. They merchandise it—offer it to existing markets only as those markets can absorb it, and meantime try to create new markets for the surplus. If they cannot get rid of it, this happens: If it is a perishable product the surplus becomes a total loss, but it is a loss distributed proportionately among all the growers, who will receive more for that part of their crop which they sell than they would have received from the entire crop if dumped. If it is a non-perishable product, there is a carry-over in which each member of the pool has an interest. He knows of the carry-over because of his interest in it, and knows that to make it valuable he should not overproduce the next year; and he acts accordingly. Overproduction is always costly, but it is infinitely less costly with a strong co-operative marketing association handling the crop.

Renewing Contracts

Third question:—Is there any satisfactory way of holding poolers after their contracts expire?

Sapiro's answer:—There is no just or satisfactory way of holding poolers to a crop association after their contracts expire, except to keep teaching them just what they have done for themselves through co-operative marketing. They must always recognize that it is they who are doing the thing—not some association separate from them. I believe that wherever the right kind of co-operative marketing has been given an opportunity to demonstrate itself, growers will never go back to individual selling. This belief is based upon experience.

The Logical Limit

Fourth question:—Do you believe that farmers should go further and further into the business of marketing until they are wholesaling farm products, and even retailing them?

Sapiro's answer:—I do not believe that farmers should go further into the business of marketing their products. They should avoid the speculative channels of trade, and market through the distributive middleman. I do not believe they should attempt to wholesale or retail farm products, at least under the development I have seen in this country. It is an enormous job to market a crop intelligently to the trade, and I believe this should be completed by the farmers before they attempt the more difficult steps of limited distribution.

They must stick to the unit corresponding to car-load lots—and leave to the other legitimate factors of trade the process of stepping down the quantities to meet retail demand.

Fifth question:—Do you believe it a sound policy for co-operative selling organizations to attempt quantity buying for their members?

Against Co-operative Stores

Sapiro's answer:—I do not believe as a general rule, that it is wise for co-operative marketing associations to attempt to do quantity buying. These are totally separate problems. The buying matter affects the farmer as a consumer, and is a separate type of transaction. I believe that frequently farmers should do quantity buying—but it should not be done through their co-operative marketing groups.

Sixth question:—Some people think there is danger in the too rapid expansion of the co-operative movement. There has been criticism of your type of organization because it is, in a way, "head down." Is it not better for the small local co-operatives to come first and then be joined together in strong state and national groups?

Sapiro's answer:—The beginning must be made with the individual farmer. Co-operative marketing must be built from the ground up by the individual farmer pooling his problems with those who have a similar problem, within reasonably handled units.

With perishable products he should organize locals for receiving, grading, and packing, and then federate the locals on a commodity basis for sales. With non-perishables of more or less nation-wide production he should organize probably on a state-wide basis and pool accordingly. Then the various states should federate for national co-ordination. But in any case there should always be informed locals, so that the growers can get together constantly and know what is pending in their industry.

Now, I believe strongly in large-scale organizations, the largest scale possible. But the highest achievement possible is only attainable when the right method is used to bring it about. I believe in the eventual national organization of the country's wheat. I believe further that this should be kept in mind as the ultimate aim of any wheat program.

I have to laugh at the suggestion that there is too rapid expansion of the co-operative movement. You can never do a right thing too rapidly—except in the wrong way. The U. S. Grain Growers was wrong, and would have been wrong if it had covered one hundred years in its conception and campaigns. Speed is no element of rightness. It is simply a factor in the technique of a campaign. Each particular commodity and each particular district must be studied by itself to determine what kind of a campaign will produce results as to marketing.

Non-Commercial Organizations

Seventh question:—In what way, if any, should the co-operative work with non-business farm organizations, such as the Grange and the Farm Bureau?

Sapiro's answer:—The non-commercial farm organizations, such as the Farm Bureau and the Farmers' Union and the Grange and Equity, should not themselves engage in co-operative marketing; but they should initiate proper selling movements. They can be of enormous assistance in organization campaigns.

When once a co-operative is organized, no non-commercial farm organization should have a word to say regarding the methods of conducting the business, except to assist in building morale and to assist as individuals in helping the co-operative to solve its commercial problems.

The Last Commandment

Eighth question:—Many people are skeptical about the possibility of co-operation alone being able to make agriculture profitable. Unless the entire economic structure is sound, how can you expect farming to pay?

Sapiro's answer:—Until the economic structure is sound, the average consumer will not have a proper purchasing power. If this purchasing power is absent, crops will not be sold at any price which would bring prosperity to the farmer. Co-operative marketing cannot create over again all the economic conditions of the world. It can only enable the farmer to adjust his own conditions intelligently and fundamentally to actual world circumstances.

But, on the other hand, I do not believe it is wise for the farmer to try to solve the problems of everyone else. He must look after his own needs and solve his own problems just as everyone else is trying to solve his problem to his own profit, regardless of the farmer. This does not mean that the farmer should be a bad citizen. But the best citizen is the one who takes care of his own business—and at the same time gives thought to the needs of others.

REMARKABLE RESULTS FROM EXPLORATION WORK

OTTAWA, Aug. 6—"When the existing exploration work of the different archaelogical societies, in particular that of the State University of Pennsylvania, are carried to a conclusion, the results will constitute one of the greatest triumphs in the annalys of science," says Rev. Fr. Dalmatius Laferriere of the Ottawa Dominican Order, who has just returned from two years spent in the Holy Land, where he took part in the geological exploration work and study of the Sacred Writings.

Father Laferriers stated that the explorers expected shortly to uncover the Arabic and the Byzantine periods. The exploration work being carried on in the most complete, methodical and perfect manner, in the history of science, will take another ten or twelve years to complete.

When the present archaelogical work is carried to a conclusion, Father Laferriere believes the world will have a very perfect idea of the cities of the ancients, even down to during the pre-historic period, which will constitute a glorious triumph for science.

During his stay in the Holy Land Father Laferriere said he had all the modern comforts to be found in civilization, with the exception of the climate and the home city paper, which he says he missed terribly. Father Laferriere himself discovered a few new fossil fields of great value.

Impressive Memorial Service At St. Thomas's Church

Newfoundland Joins In Earnest Supplication and Prayer For Eternal Repose of Dead President.

THE MEMORIAL SERVICE which took place yesterday afternoon at St. Thomas's, was of a most impressive and solemn character.

Newfoundland, Britain's oldest colony, joined in united and fervent supplication to the King of Kings, that the works of him who had but yesterday occupied the high and exalted position of chief executive of the Great Republic to the west, may be found acceptable by him who rules all peoples and all nations.

All denominations were represented at the service. Amongst those present were His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce, attended by Major Wilberforce Bell and Captain Goodfellow, American Consul Benedict, Vice-Consul Hartnett, The Prime Minister and Mrs. Warren, Colonial Secretary and Mrs. Halfyard, Chief Justice and Mrs. Horwood, Mr. Justice Johnson, Mr. W. J. Higgins, K. C., Sir M. G. Winter, Sir Patrik McGrath, Hon. D. A. Ryan, Mayor Cook, Sir. W. F. Lloyd, J. A. McKenzie and Dr. T. Mitchell, representing the Knights of Columbus, foreign consuls, members and officials of the Newfoundland Legislature and many representative citizens from every walk of life.

The seventy round-trippers on the s.s. Silvia were present in a body, the Reid Nfld. Co. having kindly placed the street cars at their disposal to take them to the church and back again.

Amongst the distinguished Americans who joined in the service, were Captain Albert C. Dieffenbach, Germantown, Phila., a retired U. S. Army officer, and Hon. Francis Lyttleton Macguire, Asst. City Solicitor, Philadelphia.

In the absence of the Rector of St. Thomas's, the Rev. Canon Boit, M.A, D.C.L., Episcopal Commissary, conducted the service, assisted by the Rev. Canon Jeeves, Rector of the Cathedral and Sub-dean of Avalon and the Rev. Canon Field.

The order of Service was: the Hymn "O God Our Help in Ages Past," followed by the first sentences of the order for the burial of the dead: "I am the resurrestion and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in me, though he be dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth in me shall never die".—Et Sequi Psalms XC., Dominie Refugium, and XXIII, Dominus Regit Me, were next recited. The lesson was from Ecclesiasticus XLIV, 1-15. The remaining prayers for the dead having been offered and the hymn "Let Saints on Earth in Concert Sing." Rev. Canon Bolt ascended the pulpit and delivered the following eloquent and touching tribute to the honored dead:

"We are assembled here to-day for the purpose of joining in spirit, with the citizens of the Great Republic, in paying a last tribute to the memory of the President, who has been so suddenly taken from their midst.

"Following the example of our King who, the more to mark his sympathy with a great nation sprung from the same stock as our own, has ordained a period of mourning throughout his Dominions, we in this the oldest Colony of the Empire, not unmindful of the fact that many of our countrymen have found a home in the United States, where they happily and contentedly dwell, desire to associate ourselves with all those who, at this time, in all lands, are offering their sympathy to a people plunged in mourning by the unexpected passing of their Chief Executive.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world akin," and when as now we are reminded of the frailty of all things human, our better nature asserts itself; we forget, for a space at least, our party allegiance, our rival policies, our national problems, our international disputes, and standing beside the bier of a fellow-traveller whose course is run, our hearts go out to the bereaved ones left behind, and our one desire is to offer them such consolation as we may.

"We therefore wish to pay our tribute of respect to him who is to-day being laid in his last resting place by his sorrowing fellow-countrymen; and in the first place to do so to the man rather than to the ruler.

"When on his fifty-fifth birthday, in 1920, Warren Harding was elected to his high office, outside of his own country, and to some extent within it, he was an unknown man. His nomination, we learn, was a surprise to himself no less than to the world. Kindly and unaffected, with simple tastes, we can believe that he would feel the burden of the cares of State. He entered upon his office at a time when the world was torn asunder by rivalries, the legacy of the war, when statesmen the most experienced found it difficult to act. It would be expecting a great deal of an untried man, that entering in such circumstances upon a most responsible office for the first time, he would give universal satisfaction, either to his own countrymen or to others, in the policy which he considered it his duty to carry out. It would be idle to pretend that he did. There are many who wish he could have seen his way clear to enter the League of Nations, and give a lead to his country in taking her share in the pacification of the world. His support of an International Court gives ground for the hope that had his life been spared he would have striven with increasing weight to promote peace among all men. But be that as it may, and whatever may be the verdict of history of the latest President of the United States, it redounds to his credit as a man, that he was unspoiled by office, and that his decisions, even when not acceptable to many, caused little resentment, because they were rendered in a kindly spirit, with a desire to do substantial justice, and though there were those who disagreed with the President in the line he pursued, as is always the case, yet we are told there are few who had not kind words and good wishes for Harding the man.

"Surely it is no little tribute to a man's character when amid all the turmoil of political life he is judged by his fellows, not by the mistakes he has made, or the hopes he has disappointed, but by his kindness of heart, by his desire to give pleasure to others, by doing what he could to make those about him happy, not because he thought it would pay to do so, but because of his fellow-feeling with others.

"But it is not only as a man genuinely kindhearted, that we desire to pay our tribute to the late President. We honor him also because of the sentiments he expressed towards our Empire, on what proved to be his last official tour.

"Included in the pragromme of the journey which he took to Alaska in order to see for himself conditions on the spot, was a visit to Canada, the first ever paid to that country by a President of the United States.

"The speech delivered by President Harding at Vancouver will, we venture to think, be long remembered and often quoted, containing as it did sentiments which must appeal to dwellers on both sides of the border.

"Speaking to that vast concourse of Canadians he declared that public will, rather than public force, is the key to enduring international peace, and in proof of his assertion he reminded his hearers of the fact that they as two peoples have lived amicably side by side for more than a century, under different flags, and yet, along that thin boundary line there are no forts, no weapons of warfare, but a simple understanding between the nations who desire to dwell together in unity. It was in keeping with the spirit of such an understanding that the President deprecated any thought on annexation on either side, advising rather that each country should go its own way along paralell roads, each helping the other, allowing their respective people to change their place of abode from one side of the border to the other, without let or hinderance as opportunity offered, welcoming one another as at present, with no limit as to quota, which exists in regard to other people entering the United States.

"To quote words which deserve to be remembered 'Our protection is in our fraternity; our armour is our faith; the tie that binds more closely year by year is everlasting acquaintance and comradeship through interchange of citizens, and the compact is not of perishable perchment but of fair and honorable dealing, which God grant shall continue for all time.'

"We honor the ruler no less than the man, who could give expression to such Christian sentiments, and we could wish that the same good feeling and mutual understanding prevailed in the old world that exists in the new. But the new world has a greater opportunity than the old. It has more in common, less to forget, and therefore, surely, it is a duty incumbent upon two nations of a common ancestry, with no age-long grudges, to work together for the peace of the world. With the United States and Great Britain determined to uphold Anglo-Saxon ideals, that peace would be largely assured. Let the two nations, each pursuing its own national policy, unite in saving the world's civilization and advancing the peace and happiness of mankind, and the world will become a different one from what it is at the present time. It cannot be that two nations which have so much in common, who are always ready to listen to the cry of suffering humanity, who have done so much to feed the hungry and clothe the naked left destitute by the war, whose sons have fought and fallen on foreign soil, in order to protect the weak, and to maintain liberty and right, it cannot be that these two nations will decline to unite in healing the wounds of a sorely-stricken world and thus give unity and concord where strife and division now exist.

"In the prospect of that endeavour, let us pray that He who buries the workman but carries on the work, will raise up men in both countries, who, catching the vision of an Anglo-Saxon fellowship which it would seem was given to President Harding, especially in his latter days, will strive together in the promotion of all measures which make for righteousness and truth.

"Thus shall we all be hastening the time when the words of the prophet shall be fulfilled, and men 'shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall there be war any more.' "

Following the address, the hymn "God of the living, in whose eyes unveiled the whole creation lies;" was sung by the congregation, following which the service was concluded by the recital of the following prayer:

"O LORD GOD ALMIGHTY, guide,, we pray Thee, all those to whom Thou hast committed the government of the nations; and grant to them at this time special gifts of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and strength; that upholding what is right, and following what is true, they may obey Thy holy will, and fulfill Thy divine purpose; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The great organ pealed forth the doleful tones of the Dead March in Saul while the congregation stood with bowed heads; Newfoundland had joined with the united prayer and supplication in memory of a great and good national character, whose almost tragic passing out of life the whole world mourns.

A HIGH YIELD

OTTAWA, Aug. 6—Three tons, one hundred and ten pounds of cured hay per acre was the yield of mixed clover and alfalfa secured this year from the first cutting at the Central Experimental farm at Ottawa. A second cutting of at least one ton per acre is practically certain. This high yield is secured from a seeding mixture of 24 pounds per acre which was seeded with oats in the spring of 1922. The mixture consisted of ten pounds of red clover, 2 pounds of alsike, 6 pounds of Grimm alfalfa and six pounds of Timothy which would cost at present about $6 an acre. About 30 per cent of the hay from the first cutting was alfalfa, and judging from the yields in the past the second cutting from this mixture should be practically all alfalfa. The test was made on a forty acre field of sandy loam.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11th, 1923

Our Codliver Oil Industry

EXCELLENT POSSIBILITIES OF NEWFOUNDLAND PRODUCT.

During recent times a considerable amount of attention has been attracted towards Newfoundland cod-liver oil, and, we think, this country has much of which to be proud in relation to this product.

Some time past, the Advocate was able to publish a report from Dr. Zilva, D.sc., F.I.C., and J. C. Drummond, D.Sc., F.K., upon the result of a personal investigation made last summer, into every phase of the cod-liver industry.

The visit of Dr. Zilva to Newfoundland was arranged for jointly by the Dept. of Marine and Fisheries and the Board of Trade, and carried out largely by the Department under the capable personal attention of Mr. Goodridge, Deputy Minister. So favourable was this report that it is believed that Newfoundland's refined cod-liver oil will be in large demand henceforth, which should assuredly reflect itself favourably on local prices and establish this country firmly in the world's market.

The great competitor in this product, as well as regarding codfish is Norway. That country exports to Britain roughly 200,000 gallons of cod-liver oil, while Newfoundland, Britain's oldest colony, has reached to 40,000 gallons yearly. The desire has been heralded as for development of ordinarily inter-Empire trade; nevertheless the above figures show the undesirable situation, as far as Newfoundland has been concerned.

Thanks to the recent efforts in procuring the services of the British cod-liver oil experts, our product has been placed on the map and consumers no longer can believe that Norwegian cod-liver oil, particularly Lofoten oils are superior to our product. It seems that the British public, and particularly the medical profession, had always considered that only oil originating from Norway was of any value.

Lofoten oil was considered best and purest because it was taken from fish caught in northern waters, and in view of Dr. Zilva's and Dr. Drummond's report, the same claim might have been advanced as relating to Newfoundland fish.

In discussing the Newfoundland product, Dr. Drummond has said that there are strong reasons for stating that our cod-liver oil is generally superior to the Lofoten oil and had a higher therapeutic or curative value, because during a period of the year when fish were caught at Lofoten the fish were spawning and it was probable that the oil then prepared was of a lower value than at the other period of the year. On the other hand, he said, our product was prepared from pure cod caught in the time of feeding, which gave the oil a much higher potency than oil prepared from fish during the time of spawning, and, in the final analysis, he was of the opinion that the claims of our cod-liver oil were of a very high order.

These results are very interesting and speaks well for the future of this industry. It certainly will constitute a test of the sincerity of British firms who preach the doctrine of trade within the Empire.

It also speaks well for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, whose regulations and precautionary activities have resulted in such an excellent condition of affairs.

About one hundred years ago, cod-liver oil was first manufactured in this country, there being a plant in Petty Harbour around that time. The system of "jacketed pans" was then in vogue, one pan being set into another with water space between them, the boiler metal being three-fourths of an inch thick and the boilers holding about 120 gallons of liver. Another type of boiler, used principally by small manufacturers was a metal frame or furnace and a metal boiler, set into it, of about 60 gallons capacity. Into this boiler was set a second tin-boiler so that it formed a jacketed pan.

The direct steam system was introduced about twenty years ago, and is the system used today. But it was not until five or six years ago that an appreciable start was made to regulate and control the whole industry which has since been satisfactorily accomplished and, as above outlined, made known throughout the world.

Government inspection of licensed manufacturing plants was introduced and the resulting betterment of the product has benefited all. The efficient work of the inspectors, who were given a free hand under the regulations governing the industry, cannot be overestimated, and remains an object lesson of what could be done, in other directions when regulations are made and strictly and indiscriminately adhered to.

Since the circulation of the British report many enquiries have been made from the Department of Fisheries and several interested prospective purchasers have visited the country.

Up to date this season, the manufacture of cod-liver oil has not been undertaken to any great extent, though many plants throughout the country are now started in the regular August season. From statistics to hand, the exports of cod-liver oil for the year 1916-17 were 214,162 gallons, for 1917-18 371,969 gallons, for 1918-19 342,592 gallons and for 1919-20 291,351 gallons. During succeeding years, there was a falling off in exports, the high-water mark in amount and value having been reached during and immediately after the war years.

In conclusion, here is a valuable asset with great possibilities. The merits of our cod-liver oil have been established. The methods employed in its establishment can be applied with like success in other industries. What is needed are regulations, based on experience and the stable continuance of an intelligent policy unhampered by political interference of any kind.

MISSES THE POINT

In his references to the long-defunct Fishery Regulations yesterday the editor of the Telegram, like many another before him, misses a very important point in connection therewith. The fundamental principle of supply and demand was ignored, says the Telegram, meaning that it was not right to have fixed prices. That would have been all very well had not there been constant "price cutting" among the local exporters, but it was this very evil that necessitated some sort of regulations then, and it is the same evil that renders regulations necessary now. If our exporters had acted thruout in a spirit of co-operation rather than in a spirit of antagonism towards one another regulations would not have been necessary in any shape or form. Because competition among the exporters themselves was rife and because this competition was constantly lowering prices, regulations had to be enforced and these regulations, to be of any use at all, had perforce to include the fixing of prices under which fish going to the different markets could not be sold.

The Telegram characterizes this fixing of prices as "making our customers pay thru the nose" and the inference is that prices were fixed with no other object than to force foreign buyers to pay exorbitant rates for our fish. That was never the purpose for which the price-fixing clause was included in the original regulations. The object was to prevent exporters from cutting prices on each other as was being freely done before the regulations were put in force and which practice has been carried on since they were repealed. Unless the exporters can fix a margin below which nobody can sell, all the rules and regulations in the world will avail them nothing so far as the betterment of marketing conditions is concerned.

In saying that the Regulations, which constituted our one and only attempt at improving marketing conditions, "were tried and found wanting" the Telegram does not put the case fairly. They were never given a decent trial and for that reason there could have been no finding as to their effectiveness or otherwise. If, as the Telegram says, many of the regulations originated in 1919-20 were "unquestionably well-considered and admirably suited to the purpose," was it not the duty of all who were in any way interested to do what they could to effect an improvement in those sections which, after a fair trial, were found inadequate to the needs of the case? Instead of this, the most underhand methods were employed to defeat the Regulations as soon as they were enforced and some of our most "patriotic" citizens went so far as to undertake secret service work on behalf of foreign buyers whom they kept posted as to all that was going on here.

Whether or not an attempt by the exporters themselves to inaugurate a business-like marketing system in this country will be met with by the same kind of treachery on the part of those whom such a system is designed to ultimately assist remains to be see. We can only hope that it will not.

The Department Of Posts

A correspondent to one of the City papers expresses the opinion that a permanent Post Master General is to be preferred to the present arrangement of having the head of that Department in the House of Assembly and a member of the Executive Government. His objection to the latter is based on the contention that the Minister who is here today and gone tomorrow does not get a chance to come in personal touch with those who, for the time being, are working under him as well as on the arugment that because the Minister of Posts being the representative of a district, is prevented by the demands made upon him by his constituents from giving the necessary attention to his departmental duties.

Both these objections may be well taken, but do they not apply, if not in as great a measure at least to some extent, to the other departments? It was but a few days ago that Sir Michael Cashin said in the House that the Railway, now that it is, to all intents and purposes, a Government Department, should be in charge of somebody who held a seat in the Assembly and who would therefore be responsible to the House for the working of the department. Surely what applies to the Railway applies with equal force to the postal and telegraph systems.

It is a well-known fact that the Country lost heavily a few years ago in the matter of cable taxes because the head of the department of that day was not in the Government and negotiations were conducted of which the Executive had no knowledge. There are numerous instances that could be quoted to prove that it is not only desirable but essential that the Postal Department should be represented through its head in the House of Assembly and in the Executive Government. There are many improvements that the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs can bring about which would be impossible of accomplishment for a permanent Post Master General who was not in personal touch with the Administration of the day. An oustanding instance of this was the inauguration by Hon. W. W. Halfyard when he was Minister of Posts of a group insurance scheme for the benefit of the Postal and Telegraph employees, one of the best steps that were ever taken on behalf of the personnel of any Government department in this Country.

ON LOLLIPOP LADIES.

PRETTY GIRLS are like LOLLI-POPS
In Life's shop window.
MEN are like Little BOYS,
With big eyes,
Gazing in,
With empty pockets
And a WILD DESIRE . . .
They think how WONDERFUL
It would be
To own a CANDY store,
And have one lollipop
After another,
And ALL DIFFERENT;
But wise men know
That, though lollipops are SWEET,
They also STICK;
And though they LOOK different,
When the wrapper is off,
They are ALL alike.
But when a man marries
A sweet "SUGAR BABY"
With little backbone,
He finds, like the child
With the lollipop,
That eventually
There's NOTHING LEFT
But the stick . . .
And THAT sticks
In his GIZZARD.

Another rise in the price of flour is announced. It seems to us that the greater the wheat crop, the higher goes the price of flour and the higher the flour goes the lower the fish goes.

* * *

Time was when the local exchange stood at a quintal of fish for a barrel of flour but of late the fish has been following in the footsteps of the German mark. It's all taken out of the poor man, who has to eat the flour.

* * *

Talking about rakes, the man who keeps his eyes fixed straight ahead, will never put his foot in it.

* * * *

A city daily is advertising for "A Strong man." Evidently physical dimensions do not mean strength or vice versa. Otherwise there would be no need for the quest referred to.

* * *

The recent bad weather has spoiled many half holidays and elicited various strong opinions from all and sundry. A visitor to the last regatta said the political embroglio has so queered the weather man, that he has lost control of the entire situation. If the weather man is not queered, there are lots who are; among whom is one who in a moment of hilarious exuherance, cried called me "honorable." He came to earth again.

In the year 1922 about sixteen thousand United States citizens committed suicide!

It is true that ten thousand five hundred citizens were murdered in the same period, but in the land of the brave and the home of the free that fact is not so portentous as that fifteen out of every hundred thousand of its people commit suicide rather than live any longer in the country!

Spirit Does Not Return Says Edison

Scientists Seeking After Truth, Has Made Much Progress.

MARION, Ohio, Aug. 10—Thomas A. Edison who is here to attend the funeral of Warren Harding, talking to the Associated Press to-day, said he "was seeking after truth, and had made much progress" in regard to the Great Beyond and life after death.

"The soul, after death, takes a flight, but in what form and manner is unknown," said Mr. Edison.

Regarding spiritualism as it it is commonly known, Mr. Edison said he did not believe that the spirit returned to earth and communed with those living; but, he added, "We know that the soul does exist after death. I have not found it possible to demonstrate the existence of life beyond the grave, and I cannot say that men, including our beloved President Harding, live after death.

"There is a great directing head of things and people. A supreme being who looks after the destinies of the world. I have faith in a supreme being, and my thoughts are regarding the life after death; where the soul goes, what form it takes and its relation to those living.

"I am convinced that the body is made up of entities which are intelligent. When one cuts his finger, it is the intelligence of these entities that brings convalescence. You know there are living cells in the body so tiny that the miscroscope cannot show them at all. The entity that gives life and motion to the body is still finer and lies infinitely beyond the reach of our finest scientific instruments.

"When this entity deserts the body the body is like a ship without a rudder. deserted, motionless and dead; it is mere clay as all orthodox Christians believe.

"I still believe in religion, and our Lord and Master."

LET ALL EXPORTERS READ!

They Have Enormous Power in Their Hands---How Will They Use That Power?

THEIR SOLEMN DUTY

With all the sincerity and earnestness in its possession, the Advocate appeals to the fish exporters of Newfoundland carefully and solicitously to face the serious problem of getting for this country's catch of a million and a half quintals of codfish the most that their ability, care and experience can secure.

We ask every exporter of this country's national product individually to read our candid appeal and honestly consider the arguments we state. We ask each exporter personally to read this article with open mind and a desire to reach the truth and heart of a vexing situation. We ask each exporter to read, and come to a definite conclusion in his own mind as to the wisdom and fairness and justice of whatever remarks we make here. We ask, finally, that each exporter, having so come to a definite conclusion, follow the dictates of the promptings of fairplay and justice that will arise in him.

We will endeavour to state only facts, and to state them plainly and without undue feeling. We will endeavour to present the fundamental and salient features of the situation, with as fine a sense of perspective as we can command. We will state the case as it appears in the national, or public perspective—as it affects the whole of the people, as it affects the welfare of the country.

THE QUESTION.

This is the question: are we, is Newfoundland, getting for her annual catch of 1,500,000 quintals of codfish the most that it is possible to get? If not, why not? If, is it the fault of fisherman or merchant?

We address our article to the merchant and exporter. But it is none the less vital to the fisherman. A rigid examination of the facts by both exporter and fisherman is highly desirable and highly necessary.

It is because of their strategic importance as marketers that we particularly address the exporters. All of the fish that leaves Newfoundland passes thru the hands of the exporters. They resemble the narrow part of the hour-glass. Caught by the thousands of fishermen, and absorbed by the foreign markets, it is the exporters who act as the go-between, the controlling medium for the total catch of fish.

WHAT IS AT STAKE

It is the prosperity and welfare of the people of Newfoundland that is at stake. It is the total amount of money that comes back to this country for the total amount of fish exported that determines whether the people are to be well-off each year, or in need. If the total amount that comes to us from the catch of fish is less than sufficient to enable the people to live comfortably, the situation is bad. If that total amount that comes to us IS sufficient to permit of the people living comfortably, the situation is good. But enough to enable the people to live comfortably is not sufficient: what about progress? Every year there should be a surplus over and above the amount we consume and that the amount that we get for our fish. That is, we should annually receive more for our fish than we actually need each year to live on. There should annually be a surplus. This accumulating and growing surplus should be used to extend the fishery and make it still more productive; and it should be used for the purpose of developing those other resources of our country which, up to now, only outsiders have developed.

We have not, in the past, had this surplus. Or, if there has actually been any surplus, it has been very small, and created only because the people lived poorly and saved by the most heartbreaking methods. It has not been because of any handsome total amount that we got for our fish.

THE RESULT

What has been the result? This: that, to get our own natural resources, which nature placed there to be used and developed by us who live on the land, to get those resources developed we have had to go on our knees to foreign owners of capital and beg them to use some of their surplus to come in and develop some of our resources. We have literally begged them to do it, and have been compelled to pay them to do it, in the shape of guarantees on the capital they invested. That, although necessary under the circumstances, has been shameful and a blot on the sense and statesmanship and business-acumen of this country in the past.

EVERYONE IS CONCERNED.

And so, we say, the issue at stake is a very vital one for every Newfoundlander.

It matters not whether he be fisherman, planter, merchant, longshoreman, teamster, factory worker, clerk, teacher, preacher, book-keeper, sailor, engineer: it matters not what his occupation or who he is: if he lives in Newfoundland, it is to the direct advantage of every man to have the highest possible amount received for Newfoundland's annual exports of 1,500,000 quintals of codfish.

Just exactly as wheat in Canada and the United States and Australia, and wool in New Zealand, and other articles in other countries are the mainstay of those countries, and exactly as the price of those commodities determines the prosperity of those countries, just exactly, we say, is fish the great commodity in Newfoundland, and just exactly does the price we get for it determine the prosperity or otherwise of every man, woman and child in the country.

From these plain facts it will be seen by every man, by every exporter, that the question of how much we get for our 1,500,000 quintals of codfish is the most serious question that faces the people of this country.

From these same facts it will be seen that the best brains, the best thought, the best care, the best experience in our country ought to be devoted to the task of getting for the total quantity of fish the greatest amount that it is humanly possible to get.

For the life, the happiness of the people of Newfoundland depend upon it. Aye, verily, the very existence and future of Newfoundland depend on it.

So far, we assume, the Advocate and its readers are in complete agreement. We have stated facts and nothing but facts.

EXPORTERS' GREAT POWER

We wonder, often in our heart we have wondered, if the fish exporters of this country realize what tremendous power they hold in their hands? We wonder if they realize that, as a group, they hold in their hands the very fate, the very destiny of Newfoundland? We wonder if they realize that the living conditions of the people of this country is a matter over which they, the exporters, have as complete control as it is possible to have? This power, being economic power, power that affects bread and butter and clothing, is far greater, far more important, far more vital than political power. This economic power exceeds in vital importance all the political power weilded by a dozen successive governments. For they, the fish exporters of Newfoundland, control the very living of the people of Newfoundland.

If the exporters of our fish so choose, they can keep the people of Newfoundland in beggary. If they so choose they can enable the people of Newfoundland to live in comfort or a fair degree of luxury. If they choose they can enable Newfoundland to advance materially.

We know not whether the exporters realize these facts. We know that in the opinion of many it is extremely dangerous and unwise to allow this economic power of the exporters over the people of the country to remain in the exporters' possession. We have heard again and again the argument that this economic power should be taken from the exporters and made responsible to the people. But in this article we are not concerned with the matter of the desirability or otherwise of allowing exporters to own such power.

The point is that they do possess this economic power, because of their strategic position.

It is because they hold this power, because they occupy the strategic position, that we address them.

And when we point out to them that not alone is the economic condition of the people of Newfoundland so completely in their hands, but that they do possess the power to improve tremendously that condition, may we not hope for earnest consideration on their part of the entire situation?

Take this present year in which we live, for instance: around our coasts some thousands of fishermen are toiling on the heaving bosom of the deep to wrest from the deep the wealth by which all of us must live next year, and part of this year. Do you, exporter, realize the duty you have of getting the best for that fish that you can get?

In a short while the fish will be coming in and the task of marketing it will arise. How will you handle it? Will you market the fish in such a way as to bring back to Newfoundland in return for it the greatest amount possible to get? Do you not see clearly that you have no more serious duty than this very one?

Knowing this, will you not employ ALL your wisdom, ALL your care, ALL your experience, in your efforts to market the fish well?

IF EXPORTERS WERE FISHERMEN.

Suppose you were a fisherman yourself. Suppose you yourself had to go out to fish. Suppose you yourself had to live all the year on the proceeds of the fish you caught, and had no other source of income. Suppose you had to feed and clothe yourself for a year on what you got for your fish, and suppose you had to feed, clothe and house your family, and send your children to school, and pay church dues, and meet the various other items that come up. And suppose you faced a lifetime of being in the same situation.

WOULD YOU NOT LIKE FOR THE EXPORTERS OF YOUR COUNTRY, IN WHOSE HANDS THE MATTER LAY, TO GET THE MOST POSSIBLE FOR YOUR FISH?

We will assume that every decent exporter—and we believe that as individuals the exporters are desirous enough of being fair and just—wishes to see the most possible received for our total catch of 1,500,000 quintals of codfish. Indeed, to get that is so clearly to the exporters' own advantage that one has no other alternative than to assume that the exporter as individuals wish to see the country get the most.

But it is one thing for exporters as individuals to want that to happen, and it is quite another thing for them as a group to want it.

The important point is that it cannot happen unless the exporters act as a group.

If the exporters act as individuals again this season, the same thing that happened last year and the year before will happen again, as surely as this newspaper is published today.

What happened last year and before? What is it that always happen? Very simple. The exporters, acting purely as individuals, endeavour to market, which turns out to mean get rid of, their fish.

FACTS.

Is that not a fact? Is it not a fact that it is very much to the immediate interest of each exporter quickly and speedily to get his fish off his hands? Are there not a number of considerations urging him to rid himself of his fish? Financial matters, the fact that all the other exporters are in the same box, the fact that the fish is a semi-perishable article that must not for too long remain in the hold of a ship or in a warm port, and other facts unnecessary to catalogue.

If it is a fact that each exporter is endeavouring personally to get as speedily rid of his own fish as he can, and that there are a number of such exporters, is it not inevitable that all the exporters fall to at competing amongst themselves?

And, that being the fact, does not the foreign buyer take shrewd advantage of the situation to beat the price still further down?

In short, is it not a fact that, under present conditions, as things are done at present, everything conspires at lowering the price of Newfoundland codfish?

Why, we ask,—and we really wish to know; it is something over which we have puzzled many times—why is it, that you exporters of Newfoundland do not attempt some means of overcoming this competition, some method of eliminating this disastrous competition between you? You know that the competition exists. You know the harm it works. You know the desirability of eliminating it. Then why not eliminate it?

It should not be such a stupendous task. It would require no more than, first, the desire to eliminate the competition; second, ordinary commonsense; and, third, a fair degree of cooperation between you.

Do not reply that it is impossible for you as exporters to get together—because there is hardly a week when you exporters don't meet in your Board of Trade. . . . True, that is mostly for the purpose of agreeing on a price to pay the fishermen for their fish. But it is getting together.

If it is possible to get together

LET ALL EXPORTERS READ!

for the purpose of setting the rough price you will pay fishermen for their fish, surely, surely it is possible for you to get together to agree as to how much fish you will export, in what quantities and at what intervals?

That would be a perfectly simple thing, even if somewhat difficult. Do not reply that it would be too difficult, because then we should be bound in all fairness to respond that you are not good businessmen, not good organizers.

Pool Your Exports!

The thing to do is this: Regarding the 1,500,000 quintals of Newfoundland fish as one lot of fish, proceed to place that lot of fish in the market, now here, now there, according as each section of the market needs and can absorb the fish. By marketing it in such a sane, orderly manner, you would maintain a firm market.

You cannot market the million and a half quintals of fish as one lot if fifty or so of you take it and split it up amongst yourselves. Instantly you do that, don't you see, you make it incumbent upon each man to get rid of his own particular fish irrespective of the other lots, and that, as we have indicated, leads to unrestricted and ruinous competition, the bane of our national life.

Why not take a leaf from the fishermen's book, exporters? You know what they have done. The Fishermen's Union and Fishermen's Export companies were formed to buy fish, and today they handle seventy or eighty thousand quintals. You know you have to pay more to the fishermen for your fish because of the fact that the Trading Co. buys their fish. If that quantity of fish that now goes into Port Union were dumped into St. John's you would get the fish for less than you have to pay now, wouldn't you? Then why not you act toward the foreign buyer in exactly the same way? All of you combine and present a solid, undivided front to the "enemy." Pool your fish and take equal chances. You will find it far easier to swing the financial deal, you will find it far easier and simpler to market your fish, and you will realize a better price from start to finish.

It is up to you.

You have a duty to perform. Remember that, under the arrangement of things as they are, the very prosperity of the people of Newfoundland next winter and next year lies in your hands. Remember that when you are deciding.

Pool your fish and market it co-operatively.

HEALTH HINTS

Very often, so Nurse tells me, a sick persons wishes a cooling drink. As a doctor does not always like a patient to drink too much water, some other drink must be substituted and Nurse has given rice and oatmeal water with great success. She makes it as follows: Rub one ounce of oatmeal or rice into a little water or milk.

Then add enough water or milk to make a quart and bring it to a hard boil. Now set in a warm place on the stove and let it gently simmer for three quarters of an hour. Then strain and add a little sugar. This may be taken hot or cold, and it is well to stir it a little before drinking. If lemon can be taken it may be diluted with a little lemon water. If lemon is used the oatmeal or rice water must be made with water in place of the milk.

Steel Company at Sydney Lost Many Orders Through Strike

SYDNEY, N.S., Aug. 3—(Star Special)—Some 500 members of the Steel Workers' Union, the executive of which called off the strike against the British Empire Steel Corporation, which had been in progress since June 23, crowded around the employment office at the plant yesterday and requested their old jobs in the mills. About 200 were taken on, but the rest will have to wait until such time as the Company books further business.

In an official statement the company in the afternoon said the precipitate action of the steel workers when they "downed their tools" and quit the works, without a moment's notice, placed the corporation in an awkward position. It had contracted for considerable business, but as in the earlier days of the walkout they had not sufficient men to carry on the work of manufacture, they were compelled to cancel their orders.

When the men stopped work because the company refused an increase in wages and the check-off system, a rail order for the C. N. R. was about to be completed. Had the men remained on the job, it is quite probable the company might have secured other work for this mill, but in the circumstances they were compelled to withhold tenders for rail contracts, which eventually were awerded to another Canadian concern.

The statement concludes:

"The department before the strike was working part time on export material. Steamer sailings for transport of wire products have been cancelled, and in many instances the business has been lost to the company.

I.W.W. Sympathizers

"This department will be especially adversely affected. As a result of the suspension of work, a number of important orders for iron and steel products, which the company had booked were cancelled by customers, owing to the strike.

"Because of the reduction in the orders on the books of the company at this time, it will not be possible to employ as many men as before the strike."

That I. W. W. sympathizers among the Sydney strikers, or an agent of that organization brought to Sydney by red leaders for the purpose, were responsible for the bombing on the morning of July 30, of the steel company water mains, is the belief of Captain D. A. Noble, chief of the steel company police force.

Captain Noble pointed out that the use of explosives in industrial fights is a common tactic with the I.W.W., which, although not organized here, has a number of avowed sympathizers in the district.

He would not be surprised, he said, if they had enlisted the aid or the advice of that revolutionary organization in an attempt to strike the company an effective blow.

It is well known, he stated, that members of the Steel Workers' Union have been in close touch with the I. W.W. The strikers received funds that a branch of the I.W.W. at Winnipeg advanced. Captain Noble believes that the identity of the bombers is bound to be discovered sooner or later, although his department has not yet discovered a warm trail.

Getting Clues

Investigations have unearthed two other attempts to bomb the water lines, neither of which could be carried through. A fairly accurate description of the motor car in which the bombers drove down Inglis Street has been obtained from the police officer on duty there at the time of the explosions.

Captain Noble declined to supply the press with the description, other than to say that the machine was a small one. How many men were in the machine the officer did not notice. It approached from the direction of the railway track so slowly and in such an unsuspicious manner that there was nothing to make him observe it closely. At the time, 1.30 o'clock, motor cars were passing down Prince Street quite frequently. The machine came along on the right side of the road, and as the cottage where the officer was standing was also on the right, the motor cut off his view of the manhole. Captain Noble scouts the theory that the cover of the manhole was lifted and the explosive dropped on top of the pipe. He believes that it was placed on top of the cover. A fairly heavy charge of dynamite would dig a six-foot hole in the ground without having to be set off at that depth.

Capt. Noble stated that there are plenty of former steel employes familiar with the water system and know where an explosive would be most effective.

More Sabotage

Radicals among the miners who have been refused employment continue their campaign of sabotage against the cillieries. No great damage, however, has been reported to date. The police are investigating the meaning of several small explosions which have occurred at No. 4 colliery. Further attempts have been made to interrupt the electric light service on the high tension lines which carry current to the power houses generating light and electricity to run the pit machinery and operate the fans. The latter must be kept going continuously if the deeps are to be ventilated and kept free of gas.

The soldiers camped on these grounds have begun to break camp and will commence to evacuate as soon as word has been received from Ottawa ordering their removal.

Now that the steel strike is ended, their services are no longer required here.

"THE WHISPER OF DEATH"

Facts and Ffgures That Uncover the Truth About Canadian Railway Debt

By Mr. J. LAMBERT PAYNE, Expert Railway Statistican.

From time to time statements heve appeared in the public press announcing a substantial betterment in the gross earnings of the Canadian National Railway, and the impression seems to be more or less general that the country is well on its way to relief from the burden attaching to our venture into nationalization. There is unquestionably ground for optimism in all this. Every dollar of larger earnings has in it the possibility of making the annual loss just that much less than it otherwise would be but the people of Canada will be merely deceiving themselves as to their progress on the road to redemption if they keep their eyes only on revenues.

It is the capital account, and the fixed charges arising therefrom, which creates our real railway problem.

Along that line the people need to be accurately informed, or they will never grasp the magnitude of the task which has been laid on the shoulders of Sir Henry Thornton. To ignore that aspect is to be lulled into an utterly false sense of security—in short, to be deceived and misled.

If those who have the opportunity and capacity to study the railway situation, with probably special facilities readily at hand, write gravely about this matter, they ought not to be misunderstood. It should not, for example, be suspected that they have an ulterior motive that they are "knocking"; that they are seeking to discredit the policy of public ownership, or that they are prompted by corporate interests. Surely it ought to be assumed that they are merely seeking to make known the truth. That is, at all events, the sole purpose of the writer in this instance.

If we are to have an intelligent and properly balanced public sentiment with respect to the Canadian National Railway, everybody ought to know the facts of the case. Let us frankly realize that those facts are not readily available. They do not appear, except in part, in the annual statement to Parliament by the Minister of Railways.

To learn the full truth, one must delve into official records with a trained eye, make calculations and comparisons, and sift out the figures that are vital. The layman could scarcely do that. He wouldn't know where to look, and when he had looked he would need to know the meaning and value of what came under his eye. Hence the need for just such a statement as is here presented.

The immediate purpose in view is to make plain the rapid and stupendous accumulation of capital liability, since it is that aspect which goes to the pith of this whole matter, and respecting which there is urgent need for public enlightenment. The question to be answered is this: How much money has been advanced to the various units of the Canadian National Railway by the Dominion Treasury? Let the facts be given in chronological order, and as succinctly as possible.

1917—Nationalization tacitly began in 1914, when the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific collapsed under their own weight. Up to the end of the fiscal year 1917, advances had been made to the Canadian Northern of $15,000,000, $10,000,000, $2,334,500 and $1,198,050. To these must be added the $45,000,000 in special guarantees, which was the sum required in 1914 to enable Messrs. MacKenzie & Mann to continue operations, making a total of $73,582,550. To the Grand Trunk Pacific is charged $33,093,333, $15,000,000, $10,000,000, $7,081,783 and $6,000,000—in all, $71,175,116. The sum for the two systems up to that date was $144,757,666.

1918—Formal nationalization took place in this year, and to the Canadian Northern $27,966,883 was given, and to the Grand Trunk Pacific $5,038,054. These amounts were but the beginning of much larger contributions.

1919—To the Canadian Northern five separate advances appear in Public Accounts, namely, $25,000,000, $15,691,021, $9,733,333, $599,025 and $541,642, making a total of $51,555,021. To the Grand Trunk Pacific, in three specific payments, the outgo was $7,977,016. In this year, for the first time, the Grand Trunk appears for the modest sum of $593,733. It grew more avid later.

1920—In this year the Canadian Northern absorbed $35,266,667, the Grand Trunk $554,800. For the first time there appears the large item of $41,462,009 for "railway equipment," which was probably distributed among all the units of the Government system. Still more significant were guarantees of $25,000,000 each to the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk, which, for all practical purposes, must be classified as advances. It makes no essential difference that the money was got in that way. Thus we have an aggregate for the year 1920 of $139,219,912.

1921—The Canadian Northern received $48,611,077, the Grand Trunk $26,469,867, and the Grand Trunk Pacific $21,214,013. Here again "railway equipment" comes in for $14,833,743, bringing the total draft on the treasury up to $11,128,700.

1922—Direct advances were made to the Canadian Northern of $43,544,941, to the Grand Trunk of $56,442,020, and the Grand Trunk Pacific of $10,501,993. To these must be added $1,391,689 for equipment, a guarantee of $25,000,000 to the Grand Trunk, and also a guarantee of $11,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific. The total for the year was $147,88,643.

1923—We must here take the statement of the Finance Minister that the charge on the treasury would be $71,500,000, to which should be added the recent issue of equipment trust bonds for $22,000,000. These two sums create a total of $96,500,000.

This was not all. There were very large capital charges on account of what is officially classified as "Canadian Government Railways." And here an important explanation is necessary. It is a distinctly discreditable and inexcusable thing that nowhere can a comprehensive and clear-cut account be found which deals with the Canadian National capital situation as a whole One must look up half a dozen different accounts. The public very properly and naturally regards the Government system as an entity composed of many units; but, for purposes of accounting, the capital liability attaching to the intercolonial is one account, to the National Transcontinental another, to the Prince Edward Island another, and so on. This is as illogical as it is misleading and indefensible.

While millions were being advanced to the Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific, the following capital charges appear against Canadian Government Railways—meaning those units which were publicly owned prior to general nationalization:

1917	$14,737,327
1918	34,982,746
1919	17,115,954
1920	25,881,433
1921	7,002,993
1922	3,870,486

The total for those six years was $103,588,939. This would be swollen three years prior to 1917, and also for considerably if the figures for the 1923, were included.

Let us now bring all the foregoing figures into a summary which will be convenient for the eye Adding together, as is necessary and right, the advances to the three units taken over by Government, and the old publicly owned system, we have the following totals:—

1917	$159,495,003
1918	67,987,683
1919	77,239,73[illegible]
1920	165,101,345
1921	118,131,693
1922	151,751,129
1923	96,500,000
Grand Total	$836,206,577

This formidable amount was distributed among the various rails as follows:—

Canadian Northern	$316,527,139
Grand Trunk Pacific	127,842,628
Grand Trunk	134,060,420
Canadian Govt. Railways	103,588,939
Equipment	79,697,441

The sum of $74,500,000 for 1923 cannot, for obvious reasons, be divided up among the several roads. What must occasion surprise is the amount advanced to the Grand Trunk, and it is just possible some of it was for the purpose of re-financing maturing obligations. It is to be hoped so, although there is nothing in the record to indicate it.

It should be clearly understood that the figures given above for 1917 represents the total from 1914 up to the end of that fiscal year. It should also be understood that these capital advances took care of the deficits during the period under review. In other words, the total for each year includes operating losses, certain fixed charges, and such capital expenditures as were deemed necessary to keep the whole system going. But it does not show the full cost of our nationalized railways. It omits fixed charges amounting to tens of millions so that, if we wish to know what our publicly-owned and operated railways are costing us as a people we have to make very significant additions to the total of $70,000,000 per annum, commonly assumed to be the full annual loss.

In fact, we deceive ourselves very materially when we assume that our national railway system is at the present time costing us but $70,000,000 a year. And that is precisely what everybody ought to know. But inasmuch as a clear appreciation of the situation demands a somewhat careful statement of facts, another article will be necessary.

When I hear of a good deed, or a mighty deed, or anything to be glad over, I like to pass it on to others. That's why I print so many of such items in this column. Similarly, when I hear of some particularly mean thing, I like to pass it on.

Life, as you see, is not made up of good things. Across section of life would show many phases, many colors, many shapes, many designs. For instance:

**** *** ****

I. B. Hall, a resident of Florida, in the United States, is in prison. The charge against him is breaking jail. He was in jail ten years serving a life sentence for murder, but escaped. Assuming his present name, he rejoined his wife, went to Florida and did well and lived happily.

Then, the other day, a young man who had been keeping company with his daughter, asked Hall for the daughter's hand in marriage. Hall, wishing to be fair and not wanting the young fellow to marry his daughter without knowing his past, up and told him everything.

**** *** ****

The young gentleman immediately broke off the engagement and informed the police of the facts concerning Hall. The latter was promptly arrested and jailed.

**** *** ****

Hall will spend the rest of his natural life in the chain gang. His wife will be heartbroken, his daughted disgraced. Their lives have been blasted, and all to no good purpose. I do not dare print in this column what I think about the young gentleman. This paper is read by children.

My eye just seems to alight naturally on any item which tells about people of different beliefs getting together. When they do it for the purpose of fighting bigotry and prejudice, why, my delight knows no bounds.

In Goshen, State of New York, the Knights of Columbus held a great Fourth of July meeting in the Presbyterian Church. The principal speaker was the Grand Master of Masons of New York State, and he was introduced by a Roman Catholic priest. Prominent clergymen of various denominations were on the platform, while some prominent Jews sat amongst the audience in the Presbyterian pews.

**** *** ****

It was a great anti-Ku Klux Klan gathering, and Supreme Court Judge Tompkins, head of the Masonic order in the State, flayed that organization of bigots. He called on Catholics, Protestants and Jews to stand shoulder to meet this menace.

"Our government is not exclusively a white man's government, or a Protestant government, or a Jewish government, or a Catholic government, or a Gentile government. It is a government of all the people, not of any one class."

I'd give a lot to be able to attend the presentation of "Hiawatha" by Ojibway Indians at Saulte Ste. Marie, Ontario, Canada, on August 7 and 8. Hiawatha, you will remember, is the beautiful poem written by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the famous American poet. He also wrote "Evangeline," that epic of the Acadians in Nova Scotia. The daughters of the poet—Miss Alice Longfellow, Mrs. Edith Dana and Mrs. Thorpe—have been invited by the City Council of Saulte Ste Marie to attend.

By the way, I attended two sets of lectures on literature in New York by Dr. Harry W. L. Dana, Longfellow's grandson. Dr. Dana, who formerly was professor of literature at aristocratic Harvard University, Boston, a distinguished university in Germany and Columbia University, New York, lectured, when I heard him on World Literature, lasting eleven weeks; and on Movements in Modern Literature, lasting five weeks. Dr. Dana is a staunch Laborite.

Here is splendid news for all who believe in force, brutality and violence as a method of reform:

There have been at least 2,500 "whipping parties" in the one State of Oklahoma, U.S.A., in the last year, according to the Governor of the State.

Perpetrated mostly by the bloody Ku Klux Klan, that organized gang of bigots, these "parties" consisted of gangs of hooded men swooping down on someone whom they suspected of doing or saying something they didn't like, and lashing him with a whip.

The heart of every lover of force ought to jump gladly at the picture that these figures conjure up.

Popular Young Lady Farewelled

The already large number of Newfoundland young ladies who have gone to America to study for the noble profession of nursing is daily increasing and the latest addition to the ranks is Miss Eleanor Hoskins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Hoskins, Gower Street, who leaves by the express Sunday enroute to Boston to enter one of the largest hospitals there.

Miss Hoskins is very well known in this city and her departure will be regretted by her numerous friends. At Liddy's Hostelry, Torbay, last evening a few of her companions held a farewell party for her and after a delicious supper, served in the incomparable Liddy style, Mr. JamesBindon made a happy speech in which he referred to the very many sterling qualities of the guest of honor and spoke of the regret which would be occasioned by her departure. Wishing Miss Hoskins every possible success in her future career, Mr. Bindon on behalf of the ladies present, begged her acceptance of a small gift which, he hoped, would remind her of the many happy days spent in St. John's with real chums.

Miss Hoskins in thanking her friends for the gift, which would be always a treasure to her, voiced her sorrow at parting with such splendid friends and hoped she would be able to meet them all again before many years.

The balance of the evening was spent in dancing and singing and at its conclusion the hearty wishes of the gathering were renewed.

Miss Hoskins will be accompanier to Boston by her mother.

Yesterday's Proceedings At House of Assembly

In order to give the members and officials an opportunity to attend the Memorial Services at St. Thomas's Church yesterday afternoon, the House did not open until four o'clock. The Chamber presented a lively appearance, due to the presence of a number of American tourists. They were delighted with their visit and grateful for the courtesy of the Sergeant-At-Arms, Mr. A. Targett, who provided them with seats on the floors of the Assembly Chamber.

Following the usual stock of questions and replies thereto, Hon the Prime Minister asked that the motion to suspend the Rules, be deferred until Monday.

Further consideration of supply and ways and means was deferred.

An Act respecting certain rights, privileges and franchises connected with the supply of electric light and power to St. John's for street railway and other purposes, was passed, the bill provides:

1. St. John's Light and Power Co. Ltd., and its assigns shall have and enjoy the exclusive use of the waters of Tor's Cove Brook flowing into Tor's Cove, and of Pierre's Brook flowing into Witless Bay, both in the Electoral District of Ferryland, as a source of supply for the production of hydro-electric energy, free of royalty or other charge until the water powers of one or both of the said Brooks are developed, after which the said Company or its assigns shall in each year pay to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines a royalty calculated at the rate of fifty cents for each annual horse-power developed and used, the total of such annual horse-power to be computed upon the average horse-power so used daily throughout the year, but the maximum annual royalty payment shall not be calculated on a greater output than the normal rating of the turbines or other hydraulic motors. Such royalty shall be payable within one calendar month after the expiration of the financial year of the said Company, or its assigns, as the case may be.
2. Reid Newfoundland Company, Limited, (hereinafter called the Company) and its assigns, shall have power to assign, sell, mortgage, charge or otherwise deal with all and singular the rights, privileges and franchises(hereinafter called the franchise,) granted to the St. John's Railway Company by the St. John's Street Railway Charter, 1896, and to the Contractor by Section eleven, twelve and thirteen of the Newfoundland Railway Act 1898, and by Clause ninety-nine of Scedule A. to the said Act, and to The Reid Newfoundland Company by Section six of the Act 4, Edward VII. (1904), Chapter Thirteen.
3. In particular, and to prevent doubts, it is hereby enacted as follows:—

The Company (which expression in this section includes its assigns) at any time and from time to time, in order to secure or better secure any bonds, debentures, authorized under its Memorandum and Articles of Association, and subject to like authorization as may be required for the issue of the same thereunder, may grant, mortgage, assign and transfer to and change in favour of the holders of any such bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, or the trustee or trustees thereof under any deed or mortgage or trust under which the same may be issued or secured, and with or without restriction or reserve, all or any rights, powers and privileges which it may enjoy or to which it may be entitled under the Franchise, or to which it may become entitled in the future (except to the extent that any statute or instrument under which it may so become entitled shall otherwise expressly provide) and any such rights, powers and privileges so included by the Company in the security for any such bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities shall endure to the benefit of and be available to any person or persons, firm or firms, association or associations, corporation or corporations, his, its or their assign or assigns, who may at any time and from time to time be or become entitled under or by virtue of any such security or the enforcement thereof to the use, occupation, possession or ownership of the property or undertaking of the Company or any part thereof, which may be included in any such security as aforesaid, provided always, however, that such property or undertaking or part thereof shall be and continue to be used, held and enjoyed for the purpose of and subject to all terms and provisions of the Franchise, and of any statute or other instrment which may be applicable in the premises.

The House went into Committee on the agreement between the Government and H. J. Crowe which provides for the erection of a rossing plant and saw mills in White Bay. The Prime Minister explained the resolutions after which the Committee rose.

On a motion to adjourn Mr. Sullivan rose to draw attention to the pressing demands of the unemployed throughout the country for work of some kind.

Mr. Higgins took exception to criticisms of the Opposition's attitude appearing in the Daily Mail relating to the proposed appointment of a Deputy Auditor General.

Hon the Prime Minister replying to Mr. Sullivan said, the Government was giving the matter of unemployment its serious consideration, and realized the necessity of prompt action. The lack of money to cope with the difficulty was the most embarrassing feature. The situation which he knew to be serious was receiving the close attention of the Government. Referring to the Commission of Enquiry to investigate allaged irregularities in public departments, the Prime Minister said three gentlemen, in whom he believed the public would have confidence. Messrs. J. P. Blackwood, H. E. Knight and John Fenelon had been invited to compose such Commission but unfortunately all had refused to act. It was now the duty of the Government to take other steps and a public announcement would be made at the earliest possible moment.

The member for Placentia, Mr. Walsh, pointed out to the House, what to him appeared an unequal distribution of the old age pensions recently provided for.

He tabled the following:

He urged on the Minister of Finance and Customs a thorough investigation of the list of those who are waiting, as he hoped to see every aged person receiving a benefit from this fund.

The House adjourned at 5.30 to meet again Monday at the usual hour

A Smuggling Ring Discovered

Customs Prosecute Cigarette Vendors

An elaborate system of smuggling cigarettes into this country from New York was exposed in the Police Court this morning, when a vendor of cigarettes, which had been smuggled was fined $50.00 and costs. Quite an elaborate system is in vogue in dealing with these cigarettes and because of the high duty on this class of goods, a profitable if illicit trade is being carried on. The contraband passes through several hands before it eventually reaches the purchaser. First the original smuggler on the ship buys the goods in New York; he delivers them on the ship to a trusty, who in turn secures a messenger. The messenger is asked to deliver a package to John Doe, at such a number—street. Another eventually completes the sale to the shopkeeper. Both messenger and salesman were prosecuted in the present instance. The messenger could not be connected with the smuggling and the case against him was dismissed. On arrival of the Rosalind the party who brought in the cigarettes will be summoned.

IMPROVING OUR DAIRY STABLES

Editor Evening Advocate,

Dear Sir,—If you can grant me space in your valuable paper, I beg to suggest some methods to improve our Dairy Stables. First salt—When cows have free access to salt they will keep in better health; will give more milk and the cream from this milk will have a better flavour and keep sweet longer than cream from cows that do not get any salt at all, or receive it only at intervals.—From circular No. 26, office of the dairy and cold storage Commission, Ottawa.

Second—The great importance of giving your cattle more fresh air in the stables; all windows in barns and stables, should be moveable just as they are in our dwelling houses, and moveable windows in the barns should be made compulsory.

The owners of the cattle and the consumers of the products would reap the benefit.

Third—To make our stables really pure we want gypsum.

It is a most economical absorbant; it will hold that valuable nitregon contained in the amonia.

In the finely powdered state, this is used in the stables. We have an abundance of gypsum lying dormant on the West Coast.

This will be a matter for the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, to take up. I beg to call the attention of the Board of Health and the Mayor of the City to this matter. With their influence this matter should be easily put in form.

Yours truly,

S. RUBY.

P.S.—What is agricultural gypsum and why does it have great crop food value? Agricultural gypsum (sand plaster), is an untreated ground natural rock fertilizer, consisting mainly of hydrated calcium sulphate. It therefore bears two essential plant foods, calcium and sulphur. Gypsum furnishes crops sulphur in an immediately available and neutral form—in exactly the form that sulphur is supplied to plants in nature it also increases greatly the nitrogen supplied to crops it does this first by enormously increasing the growth and nitrogen fixation of the seguminous crops second by trapping and preserving the nitrogen of manure; third by hastening the change of organic nitrogen of the soil into nitrates the form of nitrogen available for crops.

WERE ALWAYS POPULAR

We come to think of some products as being always popular and in demand, so long have we been hearing about their good qualities. Such a product is Sloan's Liniment, for it seems as if we always had Sloan's at hand to sooth our aches and banish away pains. So great is the demand for Sloan's Liniment to-day that many persons ask why do the manufacturers want to advertise it any more; everyone knows all about it now. The answer to this question is that the policy of all progressive manufacturers to-day is to keep hammering away with their persistent advertising, telling and repeating the story of their product's uses.

The makers of Sloan's Liniment believe in this policy. They realize their obligations to the merchants who handle their goods, the principle one of which is to help move the goods quickly off dealers' shelves. This is what has made Sloan's a world-wide seller. In all parts of the world Sloan's Liniment is sild. It is advertised in seven different languages. It is truly an international remedy, with a marvellous reputation. Merchants who handle Sloan's Liniment find no difficulty in making sales, for people just naturally place confidence in this well-known preparation which is so highly recommended everywhere. The beautiful advertising cards, seen in the present exhibition of Sloan's Liniment at Bishop & Son's building, are supplied gratis to the trade as well as various other kinds of advertising material. The exhibit is most interesting and will doubtless make many new friends for this already well-known and widely-used remedy.

The local advertising and distributing of Sloan's Liniment is in the hands of Mr. Gerald Doyle, who is to be complimented upon securing such a splendid display for the goods.

Prime Minister Asks Imperial Government To Appoint Enquiry Commission

NEW U. S. PRESIDENT IS REGARDED AS ONE OF COUNTRY'S ABLEST AND BEST PUBLIC MEN

Coolidge Is Modest and Conservative, But Forecful and Keen Legislator.

All sudden and unexpected changes in government are apt to be regarded with consternation by the mass of the people. For nations are like children, they fear to go in the dark. No matter how critical they may have been of his predecessor, they will commonly look askance at a new leader. Familiarity may breed contempt, but by a strange paradox, confidence is frequently bred with it. When therefore, President Harding was carried off without warning, after all danger from his illness was thought to have passed, the man in the street wondered at first what was going to be done. The late president may have earned much abuse during his tour in the west for his favorable attitude towards the World Court, but that did not alter the fact that he was a president of proved ability and energy. Who then was to replace him? Calvin Coolidge? The name had a reassuring sound to it. Even far from New England and the scene of his political exploits, in Nebraska and California, men, who took little interest in political affairs, must have recollected dimly that Coolidge was a good man. And in his own native New England, there must be supreme confidence that he will fill the office of president with dignity and efficiency.

For Calvin Coolidge is a typical product of New England. In 1630 John Coolidge settled in Watertown Mass., and became a prosperous farmer. His descendants have all been farmers in their turn except for the present President of the United States. Calvin's father who owned a farm in the little village of Plymouth, Vermont, in addition to carrying on the farm, was the village store-keeper. It was here that Calvin was born on July 4, 1872. As a boy, he worked on the farm and in the store and attended the village schools in the Vermont towns of Ludlow and St. Johnsbury. He received his later education at Amherst College, where history and affairs of government early attracted his attention and study. He specialized in these subjects and in his senior year he won a gold medal offering to students of the colleges of the United States by the Sons of the American Revolution for the best essay on "The Principles of the American Revolution." After graduating from college, he studied law in Northampton, Mass., where he was admitted to the bar. He took a prominent part in the city government and was early elected to the City Council, and later to the offices of city attorney, mayor and member of the Massachusetts House and Senate. He was lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts in 1916 and was re-elected in 1917 and 1918. He was nominated for Governor on the Republican ticket in 1918 to succeed S. W. McCall, and was elected governor in 1919. In the following year he was re-elected under circumstances that attracted nationwide attention.

For it was during his second administration that he had to cope with the Boston police strike. The members of the Police Force had formed a union and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, although forbidden to do so by the police commissioner, Edwin U. Curtis, who suspended 19 police officers for disobeying the rule prohibiting such action. On Tuesday, September 9, 1919, about seventy-five per cent. of the police officers left their posts and a night of lawlessness followed. The next day Governor Coolidge called out the Massachusetts State Guard and without any hope of compromise, expressed his determination to replace the striking police officers with men who would stay at their posts. Coolidge classed the striking police officers as deserters and refused to be intimidated by threats of a general strike. He declared with emphasis that "the authority of the Commonwealth cannot be intimidated or coerced."

Governor Coolidge went to the people for re-election on no other issue than that of "law and order" as represented by his words and acts in the police strike. Before the election campaign was half over, it was evident that, although some labor organizations were hostile, the rank and file strongly supported his return. Coolidge himself was confident thruout that he would get the labor vote of his party and asserted "Labor was loyal during the war and I assert it will be found standing for law and order in this election. It cannot be bought." The final result showed how accurately he had estimated the temper of the people, for he was re-elected over his chief opponent by a plurality of about 125,000, with one exception the largest ever recorded in the State.

Not long afterwards the campaign for the Presidential nomination opened and a Republican organization was formed to promote his candidacy. When this became known to Coolidge, however, he issued a statement refusing to permit a contest in his name for delegates in Massachusetts to the Republican National Convention. His explanation was typical of the man and his words were widely quoted. "The times require of men charged with public responsibility singleness of purpose," he said. "The curse of the present is the almost universal grasping for power in high places and in low to the exclusion of the discharge of obligations . . . My paramount obligation is not to expose the great office of governor but to guard and protect it . . . My duty, clear, plain, unequivocal, is to the people of Massachusetts. To Massachusetts, unafraid, orderly patriotic American, in the discharge of every duty an example to the nation." While Governor he showed a cool judgment in legislation. In June 1919, he vetoed the bill for increasing the pay of members of the Massachusetts House, arguing that their service was optional and not a means of livelihood; it was public service and should not be made a job.

At the Republican National Convention in 1920 he received a few votes on all ten ballots for president and when the voting for vice-president began his victory was at once apparent and he was nominated by acclamation.

The new president is remarkable for the simplicity of his life. When chosen Governor, he did not abandon his modest residence in half of a semi-detatched house in Northampton, but took a single room in a Boston hotel in the business district, returning the hundred odd miles to his home for week-ends. It is said that a visitor, arriving at Northampton from New York, asked the driver of a taxicab standing in front of the railway station if he knew where Governor Coolidge lived. "I know the house," replied the chauffeur, and drove off with his fare. Nor did he show any anxiety regarding the location of the Governor's residence until he had turned into a residental street and drawn up finally before a large frame house, painted white, when he shook his head doubtfully. "Thought you said you knew the house," remarked the fare. "Oh, this is the house, all right," replied the driver, "but Cal only lives in half of it, and I'm danged if I c'n remember which half it is."

Coolidge has the reputation of being a "rotten politician." "So far as I know," said the local blacksmith, a power in Northampton politics, "he has never slapped a man on the back or brought him a drink at a bar." Nevertheless Calvin Coolidge gets the votes, a fact which has always puzzled Judge Field, in whose office the President learnt his law. The judge is an intimate friend and describes how he discovered by chance that young Calvin had won the gold medal essay on the American Revolution and had told no one, either at the office or at home. "Now I say," was the judge's comment, "that a man who doesn't know how to advertise better than that is thoroughly lacking in what, from a practical political view, is the essential qualification." He has never had a nick-name in his life, said the judge. "People who know him call him 'Cal,' but that is as far as any of them will go. He is not what you would call a mixer. He is the quitest man I ever knew."

The new President has an amazing faculty for phrase-making. His speeches are almost always very brief, concise and packed with epigram When elected President of the Senate, he delivered a forty-word speech on taking up his duties. "Honorable Senators—My sincerest thanks I offer you. Conserve the firm foundations of our institutions. Do your work with the spirit of a soldier in the public service. Be loyal to the Commonwealth and to yourselves. And be brief, above all things, be brief." On his induction as presiding officer of the Senate in 1914, he made a longer speech, but a more notable one. "Do the day's work. If it be to protect the rights of the weak, whoever objects, do it. If it be to help a powerful corporation better to serve the people, whatever the opposition do that. Expect to be called a standpatter, but don't be a stand-patter. Expect to be called a demagogue, but don't be a demagogue. Don't hesitate to be as revolutionary as science Don't hesitate to be as reactionary as the multiplication table. Don't expect to build up the weak by pulling down the strong. Don't hurry to legislate Give administration a chance to catch up with legislation." This is political wisdom our own legislators would be well to acquire.

BRITAIN PLACES ON RECORD HER POSITION IN THE REPARATIONS MESS

Curzon's Note Says Government Regards Occupation of Ruhr as Illegal.

LONDON, August 13—The British Government in the publication to-day of the official correspondence with the Allies since June, placed on record its position with regard to the German reparations problem.

Lord Curzon, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, in an elaborate note, sets forth that the British government regards the occupation of the Ruhr as illegal and unauthorized by the Versailles Treaty, thus supporting the German contention in this respect. He offers, however, to submit the point to arbitration by the Hague or by some other body.

While still adhering to a tone of the utmost courtesy, and saying nothing definite with regard to any separate action on the part of Great Britain, Lord Curzon emphasizes that Great Britain cannot agree with the French policy, which he intimates plainly, seems to point to indefinite occupation of the Ruhr.

Lord Curzon still leaves it to the French to suggest a method of creating an international committee to examine into Germany's capacity to pay reparations, but he plainly declared that Great Britain cannot accept the decision of the Reparations Commission on this matter, since that Commission has become a mere instrument of the Franco-Belgian policy.

Finally, Lord Curzon declares that the British Government still adheres to the plan of former Premier Bonar Law, under which Great Britain would be satisfied to obtain from German reparations and Allied debt to Great Britain, a sum sufficient to meet Great Britain's obligations to the United States.

Lord Curzon, in the note summarizing the British viewpoint, says, "His Majesty's Government never contemplated that Germany should be relieved of all reparations payments; they are determined that Germany shall pay to the maximum of her capacity. What the maximum may be should be decided by an Imperial inquiry. To ask more than Germany's capacity, can only destroy the assets whih Germany would be able to offer the Allies."

Rioting and Plunder Are Rife in Germany

Red Flag Is In Evidence And Many Deaths Are Reported.

CREFELD, Prussia, Aug. 13—During the plundering of food shops and other demonstrations against food shortage and currency stringency, four demonstrators were killed and thirty wounded, several of whom are expeted to die, during a clash with the newly organized police force. Several textile plants were seized by demonstrators, some of whom carried red flags.

During a clash with newly organized police, several textile plants were seized by demonstrators, some of whom carried red flags.

Virtually all the manufacturing district of Crefeld is at a standstill owing to demonstrations.

BERLIN, Aug. 11—There has been continuous rioting at the big industrial plants in and around Berlin the past few days, caused by the food situation, money shortage and wage disputes.

At the Gian Siemens Halske works in Siemenstadt, the workers assumed an attitude of passive resistance, refusing to do any work, upon which the management shut down the plants, which normally employ one hundred thousand men.

At other shops and plants the Soviets hoisted the red flag.

BERLIN, Aug. 12—Eleven persons were killed and many wounded on Saturday, in a clash between striking workmen and peasants, at Aix La Chapelle, according to a report reaching Berlin.

After Friday's raid on nearby farms by city workers, peasants organized self-protection squads which proceed to repulse the invaders who attempted forcibly to seize crops and stores of food.

Montreal Has Another Big Fire

MONTREAL, Aug. 13—It is estimated that upwards of four million dollars damage was caused by a fire that completely destroyed a block of property on Osburne and Mountain Streets, opposite the Windsor Street Canadian Pacific Railway Station here this afternon.

The fire originated in Ledoux and Jennigs' Carriage Factory and spread to flats and apartment houses in the block. Scores of families were obliged to vacate these and neighbouring houses owing to the heat, and danger from falling walls.

No lives were lost nor injuries received.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER V.

It pleased Hector McKaye to make an occasion of his abdication and Donald's accession to the presidency of the Tyee Lumber Company. The Dreamerie was not sufficiently large for his purpose, however, for he planned to entertain all of his subjects at a dinner and make formal announcement of the change. So he gave a barbecue in a grove of maples on the edge of the town. His people received in silence the little speech he made them, for they were loth to lose The Laird. They knew him, while Donald they had not known for five years, and there were many who feared that the East might have changed him. Consequently, when his father called him up to the little platform from which he spoke, they received the young laird in silence also.

"Folks—my own home folks," Donald began, "to-day I formally take up the task that was ordained for me at birth. I am going to be very happy doing for you and for myself. I shall never be the man my father is; but if you will take me to your hearts and trust me as you have trusted him, I'll never go back on you, for I expect to live and to die in Port Agnew, and, while I live, I want to be happy with you. I would have you say of me, when I am gone, that I was the worthy son of a worthy sire." He paused and looked out over the eager, upturned faces of the men, women, and children whose destinies he held in the hollow of his hand. "My dear friends, there aren't going to be any changes," he finished, and stepped down off the platform.

From the heart of the crowd a lumberjack cried "Ya-hoo-o-o-o!" as only a lusty lumberjack can cry it. "He's a chip of the old block!" cried another, and there were cheers and some tears and a general rush forward to greet the new master, to shake his hand, and pledge allegiance to him.

When the reception was over, old Hector took charge of the homely games and athletic contests, and the day's delights culminated in a log-burling contest in the Skookum, in which the young laird participated. When, eventually, he fell in the river and was counted out, old Hector donned his son's calked boots and, with a whoop such as he had not emitted in forty years, entered the lists against the young fellows. In the old days in the Michigan woods, when burling was considered a magnificent are of the lumberjack, he had been a champion, and for five minutes he spun his log until the water foamed, crossing and recrossing the river and winning the contest unanimously. From the bank, Mrs. McKaye and her daughters watched him with well-bred amusement and secret disapproval. They could not forget, as he could, that he was The Laird of Tyee; they preferred more dignity in the head of the house.

The McKaye family drove home along the cliff road at sunset. Young Donald paused on the terrace before entering the house, and, stirred by some half-forgotten memory, he glanced across the Bight to the little white House far below on the Sawdust Pile. The flag was floating from the cupola, but even as he loked it came fluttering down.

Donald turned toward the McKaye flag. It was still floating. "The old order changeth," he soliloquised, and hauled it down, at the same time shouting to his father within the house:

"Hey, dad; fire the sunset gun!"

The Laird pressed the button and the cannon boomed.

"We've neglected that little ceremony since you've been away," he remarked, as Donald entered the room. " 'Other times, other customs,' I dare say."

He huried upstairs to dress for dinner a (formality which he disliked, but which appeared to please his wife and daughters), and Donald took his father's binoculars and went out on the terrace. It had occurred to him that he had not seen old Caleb Brent and Nan at the barbeue, and he wondered why. Through the glasses, he could make out the figure of a woman in the cupola window, and she was watching him through a long marine telescope.

"There's my old friend, Nan, grown to womanhood," Danold soliloquised, and waved his arm at her. Through the glasses, he saw her wave back at him.

CHAPTER VI.

The morning after the barbecue, Donald McKaye reported at eight o'clock to his father's faithful old general manager, Andrew Daney. Daney had grown gray in his father's service, and it was no part of Donald's plans to assign him to a back seat.

Well, Mr. Daney," he inquired affably, "what are your plans for the new hired man?"

Old Daney loked up quizzically.

"You do the planning here, Don," he replied.

"You heard me say yesterday that there would be no changes, Mr. Daney. Of course, I haven't grown up in Port Agnew without learning something of my heritage, but, in view of the fact that I still have considerable to learn, suppose you indicate just where I ought to start.

Daney was pleased at a deference he had not anticipated.

"Start in the woods," he replied. "That's where your daddy started. Felling timber and handling it it a fine artfine art, Don. I'd wrestle logs for a month and follow them down the Skookum to the log boom. Then I'd put in six months in the mill and six more in the factory, following it with three months on the dock, tallying, and three months of a hand-shaking tour among the trade. After that, you may sit in at your father's desk, and I'll gradually break you in to his job."

"That's a grand idea, and I'll act on it," Donald declared.

"Well, it's too late to act on it today, Don. The up-river launch to the logging camp left at seven o'clock. However, I have a job for you. We really need the Sawdust Pile for an extension of our drying yard. Our present yard lies right under the lee of that ridge of which Tyee Head is an extension, and it's practically noon before the sun gets a fair chance at it. The Sawdust Pile gets the sun all day long, and the winds have an uninterrupted sweep aross it. We can dry our cedar decking there in half the time it requires now."

"But the Sawdust Pile is——"

"A rat's nest, Don. There a number of other shacks there now—some Greek fishermen, a negro, and a couple of women from the overflow of Tyee. It ought to be cleaned out."

"I noticed these shacks last night, Mr. Daney, and I agree with you that they should go. But I haven't the heart to run old Caleb Brent off the Sawdust Pile. I gave it to him, you know."

"Well, let Brent stay there. He's too old and crippled with rheumatism to attend to his truck garden any more; so if you leave him the space for his house and a chicken yard, he will be satisfied. In fact, I have discussed the proposition with him, and he is agreeable."

"While your father was in Europe with you they horned in, claimed a squatter's right, and stood pat. Old Brent was defenseless, and while the boys from the mil would have cleaned them out if I had given the word, the Greeks and the negro were defiant, and it meant bloodshed. So I have permitted the matter to rest until your father's return."

Donald reached for his hat.

"Caleb Brent's squatter-right to that Sawdust Pile is going to be upheld," he declared. I'll clean that colony out before sunset, or they'll clean me."

"I'd proceed cautiously if I were you, Don. They have a host of friends up in Darrow, and we must not precipitate a feud."

"I'm going over now and serve notice on them to vacate immediately." He grinned at old Daney. "A negro, and a handful of Greeks, and those unfortunate women can't bluff the boss of Port Agnew, Mr. Daney."

"They tell me there's a blind pig dow there, also."

"It will not b there after to-day," Donald answered lightly, and departed for the Sawdust Pile.

As he came to the gate in the neat fence Caleb Brent had built across the Sawdust Pile nine years before, a baby boy, of perhaps three years of age, rose out of the weeds in which he had been playing, and regarded the visitor expectantly.

"Hello, bub!" the young Laird of Tyee greeted the child.

"Hello!" came the piping answer. "Are you my daddy?"

"Why, no, Snickelfritz." He ran fingers through the tot's golden hair. "Don't you know your own daddy?"

"I haven't any daddy," the child drawled.

"No? Well, that's unfortunate." Donald stooped and lifted the tike to his shoulder, marvelling the while that such a cherub could be the product of any of the denizens of the Sawdust Pile. At once, the boy's arms went round his neck and a velvet cheek was laid close to his. "You are an affectionate little snooks, aren't you?" Donald commented.

Two Rooms Will be Furnished by The Red Cross Liners

Commandant H. A. Hurd, the campaign organizer for the furnishings for the new Maternity Hospital, waited on Captain Mitchell of the s.s Silvia, and Captain James of the s.s. Rosalind, and asked them if it was not possible for them to furnish a room for the New Maternity Hospital by taking up a collection among the officers and passengers of the ships, and both the captains thought they could. Captain Mitchell and his officers arranged a concert last trip, and got $24.27, and there is no doubt but that Captains Mithell and James will raise $200 to furnish a room.

This is a splendid chance for anyone who wants to help the most needful thing of our Island Home. Great pleasure will be afforded in placing a brass plate on the door, that rooms have been furnished by you. It's a good investment.

Three little girls held a Garden Party this week among their little friends, their names were Miss V. Stowe, Lorena Tizzard, and Rita Rose. They took in $3.37. They did not know what to do with their money, so after a little thought, they decided to give it to the new Maternity Hospital to help the Children's Ward. They passed the money over to Commandant Hurd for this purpose. This is a splendid spirit and we trust that many more will follow the same.

There were a few little girls' names were overlooked in connection with the giving of the Tag-day results.

Miss Beryl Warren $2.03, Margaret Dunn $2.91, Annie Janes $1.80, Annie Escott $4.20.

This brings Mrs. Pedigrew's total up to $243.22.

The date has been fixed for the opening of the Hospital for Sept. 19, and it is hoped that by that date sufficient funds will have been received to furnish the building.

Commandant Hurd will be pleased to call and see any one who can help in any way this great need.

Adjutant Geo. French has donated $100 to furnish a Children's Room in memory of his wife. We trust others will follow.

Masonic Installation at Bay Roberts

The installation of the Worshipful Master and the investiture of the office-bearers of Lodge McKay, No. 1129 R.S., A.F.& A.M., took place at Bay Roberts on Friday, the 10th inst.

Brother Tasker Cook, District Grand Master Designate, Brother H. E. Cowan, District Grand Secretary, with the other District Grand Lodge officers and several visitors from the city motored over for the occasion.

Brother Dr. T. C. McLeod, P.M., and first master of McKay Lodge, was again installed in that office, and the other officers duly invested and installed in proper form. Representatives from the city and Conception Bay Sister Lodges then tendered congratulations and best wishes to the newly installed Master, and to Lodge McKay.

After the ceremony refreshments were served in the Cable Hall, where Brother Cowan, in proposing the toast to Lodge McKay, reviewed briefly its progress and growth since its inception in 1914.

Brother Uphill, a visitor to the city from the United States, made a very pleasing address, outlining briefly some of the work of the fraternity in that country.

The following are the newly-installed officers:—

WHO FIRST FELT "LIKE A FIGHTING COCK"?

COCK-FIGHTING was born with the cocks.

But it is only 80 years ago that the first man felt "like a fighting cock!"

Now he has brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces, all over the world—all feeling "like a fighting cock!"

It happens this way: A person half sick with bad stomach, dull and heavy headache, takes Beecham's Pills just before going to bed. Immediately the Pills begin to harmonize the digestive and eliminative organs.

Consequently, this person has a good night's sleep and arises in the morning with clear brain, bright eye, keen appetite, and full of energy for work and play.

It is now just 80 years since Beecham's Pills first began correcting disordered stomachs and stirring sluggish livers and bowels to natural activity — and feeling "like a fighting cock" is associated as inseparably with Beecham's Pills, as the pills are with good health.

THE REAL AIM OF FRANCE IN RUHR OCCUPATION

The United States, thanks to its policy of "isolation," is usually regarded as a disinterested observer in European affairs. At times no doubt the character is not entirely sustained, as the recent conference at Lausanne tended to show; but on the whole American opinion holds a steady balance in the judgment of matters in the Old World. When, therefore, many American comentators suggest other grounds for the French occupation of the Ruhr and the British opposition to this manoeuvre, than the chosen spokesmen of either country have been disposed to offer, and when moreover, these grounds are based on the solid bed-rock of commercial ambition, it would be a poor move to disregard their comment as the vague theory of misinformed spectators. Reasoning from an entirely wordly premise and appealing to history for support, they believe that the French care less for actual reparations than they do for the control of the great steel industry of which the Ruhr basin is the key.

From the days of Caesar the Rhine has been a disputed frontier, and Foch expresses no original opinion when he states that the only guarantee for France is to hold militarily the banks of the Rhine. It was for political reasons that the tide of war surged back and forth in this region throughout the Middle Ages. But in the last century a new factor arose. The invention of machinery gave impetus to the industrial revolution and the production of steel became all-important for a nation's prosperity. Bismarck knew this well enough and dictated terms after Sedan which he believed would rob France of all her coal and iron areas. When, not long afterwards, the Lens-Douai coal field was discovered he gnashed his teeth with indignation, that the vanquished foe had unearthed a hitherto unknown supply, and many shrewd students of history declare the acquisition of this coal field to have been the chief object of the German aggression in 1914.

Now, however, the tables are turned. Germany has been compelled to disgorge Alsace and Lorraine and return to France the great field of iron ore which Bismarck took in 1871. In the last fifty years, moreover, steel production has increased enormously and is estimated to have been greater during the present century than in all the preceding years of the world's history. And year by year it continues to increase. France, therefore, seeing an opportunity to establish herself as one of the great steel-producing countries of the world, has steadily shaped her policy to that end. Without the possession of the Ruhr coal field, however, this would be impossible, for the great factories in Lorraine need seven million tons of coke per annum which the French coal fields cannot supply.

For the Rhine steel area differs in this respect from the other two great steel areas of the world. In Britain and America they are both geographical and political entities, whereas in Western Europe, Germany, France and Belgium each have an interest in the field; and, since the return of Lorraine to France, Germany is practically without ore, while France has become the possessor of factories (for which in fact she paid) but has not the fuel to run them. For a while Germany delivered coal to France and Belgium in payment of reparations but always in arrears of the amounts stipulated, until, the patience of the two Allies being finally exhausted, they went into possession less than a year ago and proceeded to control the output of the mines. Results have not been entirely satisfactory, but time may serve to strengthen their hands and ensure an output sufficient for the operation of the French factories in Lorraine. When this is achieved France will hold the economic supremacy of Europe, an object which, say the critics, she is as determined to attain as British industrialists are eager to prevent. That Poincare is in power at present lends color to this view, for, prior to his appointment to the great offices of state, he acted as counsel to the steel interests of France and as Foch argues for the acquisition of a military pied a terre on the Rhine so does Poincare aim at the establishment of a predominant French steel industry by the control of the coal output of the Ruhr.

Strangely enough this case is sometimes unconsciously stated by French writers themselves, when defending the action of their Government. Raymond Recouly, editor of Le Revue de France, writing in the World's Work for June, igenuously describes France's plight.

"France," he points out, "by the acquisition of the metallurgical industries of Lorraine, has considerably increased her deficit in combustibles, more especially in coke. During the last twenty years, the Germans had built many immense factories exclusively worked by coke from the Ruhr.

"France thus finds herself at the head of a vast iron trade. Instead of the 5,000,000 tons of pig-iron she produced before the war she now produces 11,000,000 tons, or more than double the quantity.

"Now, the consumption of pig-iron in France before the war was 4,500,000 tons; it might be increased another 1,500,000 tons, thus reaching 6,000,000 tons, which according to all experts, would be the maximum.

"There remain 5,000,000 tons that France is absolutely obliged to export. But she can only sell it abroad and find buyers on the world's market on condition she is able to produce it very cheaply, which implies that she must obtain the coke necessary for its production, amounting to some 13,000,000 tons, at a very cheap rate. Now, France can count on extracting 6,000,000 of that coke at home. She therefore lacks 7,000,000 that she can obtain only from Germany, that is to say, the Ruhr." The writer explains that, unless coke is forthcoming from the Ruhr, the Lorraine factories must shut down, and "if they shut down it means thousands of workmen being thrown out of work, the failure of powerful industrial organizations, bringing in its wake all sorts of social and economic disaster."

The irony of this position is surely manifest. That a country should feel aggrieved at the burdens imposed by the sudden acquisition of vast wealth is a curious phenomenon, and the dolorous apology for the Ruhr occupation, that, without it, men may be thrown out of work in Lorraine, comes strangely after figures of British unemployment since the Armistice. The latter people have borne an intolerable burden for some years and may be pardoned the suspicion that their Ally has other and stronger reasons for entering the Ruhr than merely to avert her share of labor distress, from which hitherto she has fortunately been exempt.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, MONDAY, AUGUST 13th., 1923.

The Commission of Enquiry

On Friday last, Prime Minister Warren announced that the three gentlemen invited by the Government to form a Royal Commission had refused to act as such. It is now known that the Eecutive Government on Saturday decided to request the Colonial Office, through His Excellency the Governor, to select a party for that purpose; which request was transmitted to the British authorities on Saturday afternoon.

By this decision the Prime Minister and his executive have shown they intend to carry out the Prime Minister's recent declaration that the enquiry should be a full and complete one.

In many respects it is preferable that an outside party take charge of this matter. Probably delay and eventual failure to find other local gentlemen to form a commission would result from further Government efforts in this direction; and, moreover, an outside commission would be calculated to inspire greater public confidence and respect.

A Need for System

Saturday the Advocate referred to the splendid status established by the report of Drs. Zilva and Drummond, of Newfoundland's refined cod-liver oil in the markets of the world.

There is no doubt that, as far as this product has been concerned, we have suffered in the past owing to the fact that the good qualities of our oil have not been made known and that Norwegion oil has been generally considered as the best product.

Owing to the recent investigation by British experts, the Norwegian and Newfoundland product have been very favorably established for Newfoundland, as it is the opinion of both authorities that our product is superior to the Norwegian. We should not lose sight of the lesson indicated from this desirable state of affairs,. While this industry was not governed by intelligent rules and regulations and was not carried out under strict inspection and control, the product was generally inferior. Those who made the good product suffered from others who made the inferior article and who lowered the standard, and, as a consequence, lowered the price. It was thus that the reputation of our refined product was injured and that the Norwegian product, always regulated and controlled, secured its ascendancy.

The active work of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the intelligent and precautionary rules and regulations pertaining to manufacture, the rigid inspection of factories, etc., and the research work, as conducted by British experts, have wrought a complete change.

It must be said that the co-operation of manufacturers was, except in a few cases, always obtainable, and the importance of this fact cannot be underestimated. Should not similar success attend similar efforts in other directions? Our country can furnish unrivalled products in point of quality. What is needed is efficiency of manufacture and marketing. And we can have it all; if only those, more directly interested, would stop a policy of senseless individual competition and get down to a policy of a more general benefit to the country.

The day should be now here when political feeling is no longer the country's curse and the yoke on the necks of our people.

If the attempt made a few years ago to depart from eighteenth century methods of handling fish failed because of political and other differences, it may be there is a better public spirit today. It may be there is more consideration for those who must live in this country from handling a product which, if treated right, has no compeer in any country of the world.

Curzon's Note

The note of Lord Curzon, British Foreign Secretary, referred to in the despatches published to-day contains the long-looked-for pronouncement of Britain's position with respect to the reparations problem. The rising of Parliament without any indication of what line the Government intended adopting caused a great deal of adverse criticism of the Baldwin administration, and feeling has since become so strong that some such statement as that now made by Lord Curzon could not well be longer delayed. Whether or not the decision of the British Government that the occupation of the Ruhr by the French is illegal will mean definite action by Baldwin and Curzon still remains to be seen, but the encouraging stand taken by Italy must serve to strengthen the hands of Britain in whatever course she may adopt.

Yet Mr. Baldwin is in a difficult position. What precisely can he do? He has gone the limit in applying "moral suasion" to the French; but they cheerfully refuse to budge. No one would seriously suggest that the British should help in turning them out of the Ruhr. That would be tantamount to an alliance with Germany against France, which is wholly unthinkable and would not command the support of the British people themselves.

England and Italy are as one on the desirability of an inter-allied debt commission, but France continues stubborn despite alternate threats and moral suasion, and in the meanwhile affairs in Germany seem to be "going to the dogs."

Reports from Berlin and other centres indicate that the spirit of unrest is spreading with a rapidity that might well cause apprehension under normal circumstances, but which is little short of alarming when it is considered in conjunction with the general situation

Decidedly the British leaders have a difficult job to tackle whenever or however they may decide to go at it in real earnest.

Facing the Situation

The vital matter before the minds of a considerable portion of the people throughout the country is the matter of employment.

Its importance has been accentuated by the very poor fishery or by the recent weather which has destroyed the fishermen's chances in places where fish abounds.

Owing to circumstances existing throughout recent years, there is a tendency, on the part of the people, to look to the Government for everything and this tendency has been increased because our Government have been zealous in assisting the people in times of stringency.

In these times, therefore, a new relation has been caused to exist between the people themselves, and their representatives, whose responsibilities are almost unbearably increased. This applies to Government and Opposition members alike. Indeed, there are cases of some members who do no other work than that of trying to help their constituents and provide them with work. While in past years, members did not shoulder such responsibilities and did not interfere regarding matters which it was argued were personal matters, we have them today worrying overtime for their constituents.

It cannot be denied, however, and despite all the regrettable features surrounding the present situation, that there is a limit to which the Government, however desirous to assist, is able to go.

Relief measures of the past year or so saved a very serious situation among the people. It cost the country heavily, as has been shown; but unless they could do the impossible, it could not be otherwise. Severest criticism has been waged against the expenditure, and attempts have been made to raise a public storm of protest against efforts made to save the people. Irrespective of whether Government or Opposition members have appeared shocked over the cost of such relief measures, the Advocate knows that the greatest outcries come from those who went to Government departments and cried "the people wanted relief and were starving."

There being a limit to human nature, it is hard to resist the appeals of district representatives or of the people themselves; but it remains reasonable that if the people must be paid from here to there, or must be provided with relief work or kept with able-bodied relief, they must expect the inevitable consequences of large expenditure, for which they must pay in some way or the other.

While we know the unpopularity, just at this time, of introducing this line of thought, it must be felt that there is a danger of expecting too much from the representatives of all districts, and too much from the Government.

Self-reliance should be cultivated and Government assistance resorted to as the extreme contingency. If the country expects small expenditure on public charities and relief measures, such a line of action, on the part of the public and Government, must be pursued.

Otherwise, the country must pay for it.

Sparks from the Union Anvil

The schr. Cecil and Belle arrived this week from Gander Bay. The Captain reports seeing a vessel bottom up near Carmanville, which he reported to the Dept. of Marine & Fisheries. He has received a message stating the crew were safely landed.

The Cecil and Belle brought a load of lumber for the Trading Co.

The builders are making good progress with the woodworking factory.

The new 70 ton schooner will soon be ready for launching.

The fishermen repor ftair fishing this week. T. King had 30 qtls. in his trap Friday morning.

The "Portia" arrived at 9.30 Thursday night. The roundtrippers from St. John's were surprised to see the buildings, etc., here. They will return with a different impression of the Union. The steamer was delayed on account of the large amount of freight being shipped to Union stores. The passengers enjoyed their stay and passed a pleasant hour on the deck listening to the Jazz Band, while some gentlemen and ladies danced to the lively music furnished by the cornet player, while Percy whipped it to a jingle on the concertina. The step dance by Messrs. White and Cowan certainly "took the cake." When it comes to dancing you can "leave it to Dug."

The steamer sailed about midnight and the people here know as far as the Portia is concerned there is no doubt about it, the passengers all agree that they are out for a good time, and yes, they have no banannas.

The F. P. Union left Saturday evening for Port Union with general cargo.

Fortune favors Port Union and luck follows the F.P.U. fishermen who are wresting their livelihood from the waters of the Straits and Labrador.

Mr. Aaron Bailey returned to Port Union on Saturday by motor vessel F. P. Union.

Mr. Chas. Bryant, who is in charge construction work at Port Union, is to be complimented on excelent progress being made there.

Capt. J. W. West, Carmanville, of the schooner Empress, finished discharging lumber cargo to Horwood Lumber Co. this morning. The cargo was loaded at Alden Hr. of Fogo District, now re-named "Milltown."

Captain West and his crew are a fine crowd of Union men and have done much freighting for the Union Trading Company, first doing such work in the well known vessel "The Union Club" about nine years ago.

Capt. James Troke of the schr. Orient has wired Sir William Coaker that he is returning from the Straits with a load of fish. Capt. Troke outfitted from Port Union.

Bound Home With Full Load

Sir William Coaker is in receipt of a message from Captain Charlie Peckford of the schooner Humber Deal, of Change Islands, saying that he is bound home from Belle Isle with a full load of 1,100 qtls of codfish. The Humber Deal outfitted at Port Union.

The message adds: "All schooners outfitted from Union Trading Co. have bumper trips."

ON "HALTERING" MEN.

MARRIED men are best—
Now please don't jump
At conclusions;
I was going to say
Married men are best
LEFT ALONE;
But I would like to say,
In passing,
That may of them are Extremely INTERESTING,
And NO WORSE
Than the SINGLE ones;
And also no BETTER;
For when all is said
And done,
MARRIAGE is only a TAG
Which ALTERS the owner,
Or, if they have never Been ROPED IN before,
It would be more correct
To say it ESTABLISHES
Their owner;
But women should remember
That TAGGED or not
The breed is the SAME;
And a WISE woman,
After leading him
To the "HALTER," HOBBLES him,
And takes no risks.

Crowds Arriving on Humber

Company Says Impossible Give Further Employment.

We understand Premier Warren has received a message from Mr. Alexander of Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Co., stating that despite previous warnings, many men are still arriving on the scene of operations, for which it is absolutely impossible to find work. These men, according to the message, will have to be sent back to their homes; and it is extremely important, in the interests of men, not to seek employment in person on the Humber, as further employment is not obtainable at present.

Draft Evader Is Now Murderer

EBERBACH, Aug. 13—Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, United States draft evader, shot down and killed one man and wounded another Friday night, when men concealed in his hotel, seized him in a kidnapping attempt.

No Immediate Release of Political Prisoners

DUBLIN, Aug. 12—It was officially announced on Saturday that there would be no immediate release of political prisoners.

Kevin O'Higgins, Minister of Home Affairs, said the Government had evidence that the Republicans are preparing to renew the onslaught on the economic life of the country.

In those circumstances it was not proposed to release immediately and indiscriminately those who had challenged the people.

MONTREAL, Aug. 13—Damages set at five hundred thousand dollars, caused by a fire here Sunday afternoon which destroyed premises at the corner of Osborne and Mountain Sts. of Ledoux Jennings, Carriage Co. Ltd. and which spreading to the neighbouring buildings including Bell Telephone Company's Garage, three dwellings and a hotel, caused great damage; four men including firemen were slightly injured. More than one hundred automobiles were destroyed.

There is something nobly simple and pure in a taste for the cultivation of forest trees. He who plants a tree looks forward to future ages and plants for posterity. Nothing could be less selfish than this.—Washington Irving.

LATEST

BERLIN, Aug. 13—Three times Sunday the Communists at Retthausen, near Giesenkir, erected gallows with effigies of Chancellor Cuno and Hugo Stinnes swinging from them, but each time the police tore them down.

The proceedings ended in an ugly rush on the police by the crowd in which one policeman and five demonstrators were killed and ten wounded.

BERLIN, Aug. 13—After accepting the task Sunday of forming a new government, following the resignation of Chancellor Cuno and cabinet, Dr. Gustave Stressman, leader of the German People's Party held a conference with the representatives of the various parties.

The greatest difficulty seems to be in connection with the foreign minister, and it is thought possible he will take the post himself temporarily.

The new cabinet, it is thought, will be of a strictly political character, including representatives of the United Socialist, Clerical, People's and Democratic parties.

The United Socialists have made it known that they expect to have four seats in the ministry.

The abandonment of Chancellor Cuno by the Socialists was commonly accepted as a concession to their radical followers, and a counter to the Communists who are utilizing the nation's distress as a means of mobilizing working classes around the red flag. It may be said that Herr Cuno was purely a victim of the economic crisis, as the middle parties supporting him were still inclined to stand by his government. But at last the realized the futility of maintaining him in the position of Chancellor in the face of two hundred hostile labor votes in the Reichstag.

The Chancellor's political supporters and President Erbert finally impressed him with the hopelessness of such a proposal and he concluded to resign four party oalitiontinced Pnim resign.

Dr. Stressman was born in 1878, and is one of the most fluent speakers in the Reichstag. He is an out and out party man and is regarded as an adept politician. He has been identified with industrial activities, being president of the German-American Economical Commission which is occupied with endeavoring to further trade relations between the United States and Germany.

Remember that life is made up of loyalty—loyalty to friends, loyalty to the country in which you live, loyalty to our King, and above all—for that holds all other loyalties together—loyalty to God.—H.M. the Queen.

From The Masthead

"The Fifteen Books Which Have Had Most Decisive Influence in World Thinking"—this was the very interesting subject of a discussion in a recent issue of the literary section of the New York Times. The choices of a number of leading authorities were quoted.

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Plato's "Republic," Artistotle's "Ethics," Virgil's Aeneid," Aquinas's "Summe Theological," Machiavelli's "The Prince," Copernicus's "De Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestrium," Calvin's "Institutes," Cerventes's "Don Quixhote," Newton's "Principa," Rousseau's "Social Contract," Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason," Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," and Einstein's "The Meaning of Relativity."

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Without giving the industrial lists of the various literary authorities I will name the books quoted:

The Bible, Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," Shakespear's Plays," Goethe's "Faust," Dante's "Divine Comedy," Boccaccio's "Decammeron," Balzac's "Comedie Humaine," Rousseau's "Confessions," Nietzsche's "Zarathustra," Bernard Shaw's Plays, Schopenhaur's Essays, Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina," "The Classics" of Confucius, Bacon's "Novum Organum," Karl Karx's "Das Kapital," Helmolt's "Physiological Optics," Hum's "Inquiry Concverning Human Undertakings," Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe," Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyers," Dumas' "The Three Musketeers," Flaubert's "Madame Bovary," Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," Ibsen's Players, Freud's books Dostoievsky's Novels, Uncle Tom's Cabin.

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

By the way, how many of the books named have you read? I can say that I have read some eighteen of them.

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

The remarkable point about the choices of the various experts in literature is the lack of unanimity among them. In view of this I am encouraged to give a list of the fifteen books which I think have most influenced the thinking of the world:

The Bible and The Talmud (Jewish Holy Book.)
Confucius's Classics.
The Koran.
Plato's Republic.
Rousseau's Social Contract.
Thos. Paine's Pamphlets, and the American Constitution.
Aristotle's Ethics.
Kant's Critique of Pure Reason.
Karl Mark's Das Kapital.
Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations.
Darwin's origin of Species.
The Revolutions of Heaven, by Copernicus.
Cervente's Don Quixote.
The Decammeron.
Uncle Tom's Cabin.

These are not placed in the order of their estimated importance, but by classification: religious, sociological and political, philosophical, economics, scientific, novels.

* * * *

The influence played by the Bible the Hebrew Talmud is apparent to every reader, presumably. So will the influence of the writings of Confucius when it is remembered that some 400,000,000 people in China today pattern a great deal of their every day life after his teachings—and excellent, humanitarian teachings they are, I assure you, and, in the opinion of many, just as lifty and sound as those of any of the great moralists. The Koran has had tremendous influence on the hundreds of millions of Mahommedans in the world.

* * * *

Plato's "Republic," Rousseau's "Social Contract," and Thomas Paine's pamphlets and the American Constitution, including their Declaration of Independence, I think are the most influential political documents ever written. Plato's Republic set men thinking along new lines and out of the impetus which Plato gave sociological study very great things have since happened.

Out of Rousseau's writings grew the French Revolution and the French Declaration of the Rights of Man and, indirectly, the American Revolution. Paine's pamphlets—"The Crisis," "Rights of Man,' etc.—played a most tremendous part in the American Revolution. The American Constitution about which Lord Bryce wrote his great book, was the world's first written constitution and has been copied by over 100 countries. Gladstone, the great British Prime Minister, declared that the Declaration of Independence was "the grandest document ever struck off by the hand of man."

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

Aristotle, as Grant Overton says, "more than any other individual has shaped our western culture." The great work of the German, Emmanuel Kant, "Critique of Pure Reason," is, according to the same authority, "the Mont Blanc in our philosophical ranges."

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

"Das Kapital"—often called "the workingman's Bible,"—is Karl Marx's famous exposition of Socialism and the Socialist criticism of the existing social, industrial and political order. Read by only a few scholars, it has yet had an influence quite impossible to calculate. Thousands upon thousands of different books, hundreds of daily, weekly and fortnightly newspapers and magazines, millions of pamphlets, etc., in all countries have been published to explain the "Das Kapital" and expound Marx's views. In "Das Kapital" originated the Economic Concept of History, or Economic Determinism. Out of this work have grown over 100,000,000 Socialists in the world to-day, sixty or seventy years after it was written.

Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations" is the Bible of Free Trade, the historic fiscal policy of Great Britain. Need any more be said for its value in influencing the thought of the world?

✣✣✣✣ ✣✣✣ ✣✣✣✣

William Jennings Bryan is stumping up and down the American continent to-day, making vehement speeches, because some years ago Charles Darwin, the famous English naturalist and biologist, wrote "Origin of Species," the Bible of Evolution. And this is but one tiny part of the consequences of the appearance of that book. I suppose there is hardly a scientist in the world to-day who does not believe in the theory of organic evolution, or progressive change. The American Association for the Advancement of Science, consisting of over 1000 distinguished scientists, recently went emphatically on record as believing in it. The British Association has done likewise. Ninety five percent of all the university and college professors believe in it. Next to Socialism I suppose no subject has given rise to such discussion in modern times.

The novel of the famous Spaniard, Miguel Cervantes, namely, "Don Quixhote,"—pronounced Ke-ho-tay—is generally declared to be the greatest novel ever written. By its brilliant satire and burlesquing it killed romantic chivalry in Europe.

The Italian Boccaccio's" Tales of Decammeron" may perhaps be regarded as the foundation of the modern school of realism in literature.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was the book of the great anti-slavery movement in the United States. Its part in the overthrow of chattel slavery was enormous. The novel has been translated into dozens of languages.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Declaring the United States laws made life a burden, objecting her to petty annoyances and depriving her of personal liberty, Mrs. Christine A. Weisel, wealthy widow of 270 Park Avenue, New York, has sailed for France to remain abroad "until," she said, "the United States enacts some sane laws which will preserve the rights of its subjects rather than taking them away."

Mrs. Weisel declares she cared little for drink, but it made her furious for the State to say to her she could not have a drink if she so desired. She said she would buy a villa in Cannes.

Pullman cars equipped with radio receiving sets will be running shortly on the various railway services in England.

Experiments carried out by radio engineers on express trains, using both inside and outside aerials, have been very successful. It has been possible to pick up concerts from broadcasting stations while travelling at 60 miles an hour. Passing trains do not intertere, nor do tunnels make any difference to the clearness of the music and messages.

William M. Hughes, until recently premier of Australia, believes that some day the surplus population of Japan may go knocking at the doors of Australia, seeking relief from the starvation that has compelled them to flee from their overcrowded island empire. And, if this does happen, Australia can hardly bid them be gone if she still lacks people.

Hence, Mr. Hughes argues in an article in the Sydney Telegraph, it behooves Australia to-day to redouble her efforts to fill her vacant spaces with men and women of the white race.

Swedish authorities, considering the motorizing of its highway traffic declare that the general establishment of regular automobile passenger and truck service cannot wait for the construction of new roads and the rebuilding of old ones, but that the motor vehicles must be adapted to the roads.

The roads are to be divided into four classes, according to the weights which they are able to sustain. Trailers, rather than additional motor trucks, are to be used whenever the traffic is large. A curious type of vehicle is recommended for winter use in northern Sweden. This car is to have sleigh runners instead of front wheels, and will be equipped with special drive wheels and gear.

For the financing of this new service yearly subsidies have been proposed, as well as a government loan fund.

A Chinese father's right to chastise disobedient and unjust sons is illustrated by a case in the Civil Court of Wei-hai-wei, and mentioned in the annual report of that colony.

Two sons had attempted to deprive their aged parent of property reserved for their personal use after the remainder of his belongings had been divided. Asked in court why he had not punished the offenders for their greed, the father replied that he was not strong enough.

But as the unfilial sons, who are both over forty years of age, now appeared submissive before the magistrate, the parent gladly senzed the opportunity to administer the overdue correction with a strap supplied to him in court. The sons took the medicine for their moral health without a murmur, while the old man was delighted.

In an effort to reach every sightless person in that part of the country, the collection of books for the blind in the public library, Chicago, has become one of the largest in the United States, according to Nathan R. Levin, assistant librarian of the Chicago Public Library.

The blind from nearly every state in the Mississippi valley patronize this collection, because of its ready accessibility, declares Edward Paterson, in charge of the work. Anybody can apply for a loan, and the government permits the books to be sent out in franked envelopes.

The number of available volumes in raised printing is comparatively small, it is said, but the Chicago library, with 3,500 books, claims to have virtually everything ever published for the benefit of the sightless people.

Labrador Fishery Not Encouraging

Ice and Fog Interfere With Operations of Fishermen.

SYDNEY, N.S., August 7.—The fishery along the whole coast from Battle Harbor to Turnavik does not look very encouraging. Some have got as high as 300 quintals but others have no fish at all due to ice lying in their trap berths.

The outlook for the Bell - Isle Strait voyage is blank failure. On the Newfoundland side of the strait codfish are fairly plentiful, but on the Labrador coast there is little if anything doing.

The Canadian cutter Arras, operated by the Government for the protection of fishermen and the fishery service in general on the Grand Banks, reported at St. John's last week end for fuel and supplies.

The cutter is on this patrol work following representations that Portuguese and French trawlers were doing great damage to hand lines and fishermen.

Capt. Barkhouse stated that the weather had been very foggy all season, and hopes for a good fish harvest are not bright. There is a scarcity of bait, and very little has been done by any of the vessels.

A Small Fishery

The traps set outside this port for the past week or so have only been securing from 4 to 10 cwt. of codfish. It is estimated that between Cape St. Francis and Cape Race that the trap voyage taken all round will be only small. In parts of the shore, just to the north of this port some of the lucky ones have done well and in one or two instances trap crews have taken more fish than they could conveniently handle, but then the majority of traps secured only a few quintals.

All along the Southern Shore from Bay Bulls to Trepassey the voyage may be considered to be a small average one. In Bay Bulls some few traps have secured from 400 to 900 quintals but the majority are credited with only a few quintals.

Taken all round along this stretch of coast from Cape to Cape the fishery is not at all to be compared to that of last year.—Trade Review.

CITY TEAM FOR GRAND FALLS

Mr. R. E. Innes, who is going to Grand Falls as manager of the city team, has received a letter from the Secretary of the Grand Falls Club, stating that all arrangements are finalized for the inter-town series, the opening game of which will be played on Monday during the week.

As Railway accommodation must be arranged by to-morrow all who intend going out with the team should send in their names to-day, as incase sufficient fans offer a special excursion train will be made up by General Passenger Agent Pittman, to leave here Saturday night, the fare for the return trip being $13.80 first class. Last year Grand Falls almost turned the tables on the city team, and it was only Walsh's goal tending that saved the situation. This year Walsh is again going out, while Tail, Thistle, Maddigan, Meaney, Duggan, Hunt, Flynn, Ewing and Coultas are also going which will make a strong aggregation and an interesting series is anticipated.

Portuguese Purchase Green Fish In Nfld.

Will Carry It To Portugal Where It Will Be "Made" Good Price Paid Local Fishermen.

St. John's—For the past two weeks or more the Portuguese three-masted schooner Ondina has been in port, and has been receiving green fish from the fishermen who work off this shore. The vessel, we understand, landed a cargo of salt here, and her captain hopes to, if at all possible, secure a good quantity before he sails. He is paying for the fish from the knife at the rate of $1.25 per cwt., and is securing a fair quantity of the catch coming in here.

The fish will likely be taken to Portugal to be cured, and the skipper is hopeful that the venture will pay. Those local people who are buying the same class of fish have had to advance their rate from $1.00 to $1.25 to compete with the captain, whose action is more or less of an innovation in the business, for it is a new departure for our green fish to be taken to Europe to be "made," and the transaction will be watched with interest, and especially as to how the fish, if cured in Portugal, will turn out.

Some of the fishermen say they believe he will come out of the venture on the right side, and if he does his action will likely be an incentive to others of his countrymen to do likewise, so that there is a possibility of a good quantity of our codfish catch being disposed of in this way.—Trade Review.

Schr. Capsized In Gale

The Susu which arrived yesterday reports that Wednesday's breeze was felt North, and that a marine tragedy was averted only by the merest chance when the schooner S.T.W.B. was struck by a squall a couple of miles off Carmanville and capsized. The vessel was owned by Captain Steve Blackwood and his brother Walter, who with two others of a crew were on board, as was Walter's wife. The schooner was bound from Botwood to Carmanville at the time and was in ballast. When the squall struck the vessel she heeled over and the crew together, with Mrs. Blackwood, who were on deck, immediately jumped in the boat and luckily all got clear and rowed into Carmanville.

The vessel was later picked up bottom up with her sails set and moored about a mile from the land, and Saturday an attempt was made to tow her to Carmanville, where it is hoped to have her uprighted and repaired.

The schooner wac 25 tons and it is understood is insured.

Susu Back From Northward

The Coastal steamer Susu, Captain Roberts, arrived from the Fogo service at 5 p.m. yesterday, after an excellent round trip. The ship reports an improvement in the fishery throughout the district, but he weather has interfered with operations it being very stormy preventing the men from going on the grounds. Whenever the weather is suitable good catches are made with hook and line and also with traps, and fish is reported plentiful.

The Susu brought a part freight and the following passengers:—Miss G. Oake, Miss B. Brown, Miss F. Burden, Miss D. Burden, Miss E. Winsor, Miss B. Gill, Miss A. Stratton, Miss E. Kelloway, Miss N. Buckley, Messrs. A. A. Burden, W. Jamieson, Rev. R. H. Mercer, F. White, H. Burden, Mesdames W. Combes, A.A. Burden, E. Hall, B. Spurrell, W. Stratton, W. Starkes, R. H. Mercer, F. Dewey, B. Burry, Pickford and 2 children, J. Steel, L. Hicks, K. Hicks, J. Hall and 2 children, S. Abbott and 2 children, and in steerage.

Police Court

A 16 year old laborer for attempting to break into the store of Mrs. Downey, Henry Street early Saturday morning, pleaded guilty. He tried force and enterance by way of the shop door; in doing so he broke the glass in the shop door. This aroused the proprietoress and the would-be burglar ran away. A good description enabled the police to locate the culprit, who upon being arested, confessed his guilt.

A labourer from Nunnery Hill, drunk was discharged.

Capt. Murley Well Again

Captain James Murley, commander of the S. S. Sable I. who has been confined to his home in Halifax through illness, arrived in North Sydney last Saturday evening. Capt. Murley has improved greatly in health and took over the command of the Sable I. on her trip to St. John's Monday afternoon. During the absence of Captain Murley the steamer was in charge of the first officer.—Sydney Post, Aug. 8th.

ADVERTISE IN THE WEEKLY ADVOCATE

LOCAL ITEMS

There was a large attendance at Saturday night's match, when the West defeated the East by four goals to nil. The game was interesting and some good play was witnessed.

A taxi-driver while bound cityyards on Friday night killed a cow. and came near ditching his car. A passing motorist came to his assistance and helped to remove the dead animal from the centre of the road.

Caught Under Lizzie's Bonnet

It happened this way. His Ford Car refused to go. He was making some adjustments, when a larger vehicle came along, driven by one who evidently delighted in taking two sides of the road. Striking the smaller car a fearful blow, the bonnet came down over the man's neck, resulting in grave differences of opinion being expressed in the most forcible terms. And all on a Sunday afternoon.

Fisherman Lost on Grand Banks

The Lunenburg banking schooner Dorothy Adams, Berringer master, which arrived at Ferryland on the 8th instant reports that on July 16th. two of the crew while hauling their trawls on the banks swamped their dory. A dory went to their assistance but one poor fellow named George Shovenburg, aged 37, married, two children, went down before the rescuing dory reached the spot.

HOW THEY GOT IT.

It is a long way back to the battle of Hastings in 1066 when the Normans won England from King Harold the Saxon. For bravery at Hastings, Wm. of Normandy gave his scarf to Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, one of his marchalls it is claimed. That scarf is still preserved at Wentworth Woodhouse, the home of Earl Fitzwilliam, and has since been used at the christening of all the Fitzwilliam heirs.

Holyrood Garden Party Is Well Attended

During the week end an exceptionally large number of people went out of town, the majority went to Holyrood for the Garden Party there. In addition to about 200 who went out Saturday there were 73 on yesterday's express and on the excursion yesterday afternoon there was 266.

The Garden Party was a great success and all the visitors enjoyed themselves to the utmost.

Two Men Drowned at Burin

WENT ON FISHING GROUNDS A WEEK AGO AND HAVE NOT RETURNED.

The Deputy Minister of Justice received a message on Saturday from Magistrate Hollett at Burin, stating that two men of that place, William Inkpen and Maxwell Inkepn, were missing, and it was feared were drowned. It seems the two men were fishing together, and on Monday of last week went on the grounds in their motor dory and since then no trace of them has been found found. The people of the place, when they did not put in an appearance, became alarmed, and a search was instituted but without results. The authorities here were acquainted and the Argyle was sent out and cruised along the shore and out to sea, but the search proved futile and all hope of their safety has now been abandoned.

Minister of Marine and Fisheries, George F. Grimes, Shows How Newfoundland's Export Trade May be Greatly Increased by Inauguration of West India S. S. Service

Mr. Chairman:

In submitting these Resolutions to the House, I wish to point out some of the benefits I feel certain must be derived (perhaps not immediately, but within a few years) by the establishment of a direct steamship service between Newfoundland and the West Indies.

Our fish exports to the West Indies at present are only one-third that of Canada. This will be seen by a comparison of the Customs returns of both countries.

Newfoundland Customs Returns for 1921-22 and Canada's for 1922 show fish exports to the West Indies as follows:—

The value of fishery products sent from Newfoundland to the West Indies totals, according to returns, $1,321,000, while that of Nova Scotia is over $3,000,000.

Why this big difference of fishery exports as between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia? There is only one answer, loth as I am to admit it: Nova Scotians have been more enterprising, more wide awake, and more ready to adopt new ways of promoting their economic welfare than we have. They no longer depend on the old-fashioned way of sending fish to the West Indies by the irregular and slower conveyance of sailing vessels but have established fortnightly steam ship service between their province and the West Indies, with the result that they have beaten us badly in the fight for the West Indies fish trade, selling to the fish dealers of these Islands three times as much as we do. What else can we expect? The West Indies dealer, finding he can depend upon this steamship service from Halifax for a continuous supply of fish at regular fortnightly intervals, will do business with Halifax in preference to St. John's, which does not give that assurance, and the Halifax shippers drawt at sight or receive payment in 30 days.

I have been in freight sheds at Halifax when I saw fish in half drums, boxes and bales, varying in weight from qtl. each, being shipped to various points in the West Indies in quantities as low as five to a firm. This shows that the dealers of the West Indies do not like to carry large stocks of fish or herring and will deal only with firms that can supply in small quantities regularly, from fort-night to fort-night or month to month; and the Halifax shipper is ready to meet these wishes.

The old-fashioned method of supplying by sailing vessels cannot establish a stable outright business in competition with the service available to Nova Scotia shippers. We cannot do justice to a country and its shippers by the old-fashioned sailing method. If we wish to get our fair share of the West Indies trade, we must adopt modern methods of shipping; establish a regular steamship service with sailings on schedule time, making regular connections with each of the large fish centres of the West Indies; and by adapting our sales of fish in quantities convenient to the West Indies distributor a large trade will eventually result.

We should carry on a large Herring business with these Islands. Instead of selling the greater part of our Split Herring to Halifax, from whence it goes to the West Indies, we should have the profits made on that herring by the Halifax merchants for ourselves by shipping the herring direct.

Last year the West Indies purchased about 30,000 barrels of herring from Nova Scotia; these herring were bought from Newfoundland and transferred. We disposed of direct, ourselves, about 12,000 barrels. With the cheaper freight rate, which I have no doubt would be afforded by the passage of the bill, we could do all our herring business direct with the West Indies dealers and increase it well beyond its present bounds.

The West Indies needs large quantities of potatoes every year. The Canadian Customs' report for the eight months ending November 1922 shows that

It may be asked, can Newfoundland export potatoes when she imports so much herself from Canada? Anyone acquainted with potato growing in Newfoundland knows that we can supply our own needs, and those of other countries as well, if the encouragement is given to produce. As soon as we devise a proper system of marketing and better transportation facilities within our borders and lower freight rates, as well as opening new markets, this will probably follow. It is well known that the larger number of potato growers in Newfoundland can sell only in the fall or spring of the year. In the fall of the year we have the outport grower sending in large quantities of potatoes to St. John's, glutting the market and forcing down prices to such a level as to discourage them from tilling the land on a large scale for the growing of potatoes. In fact, many of them decrease the acreage for cultivation, because of this, to the limit of their own needs. The establishment of this Service will ensure a market for potatoes; and at the prices obtained by the Canadian seller they could be disposed of at a profit. There is no reason why we should not in the space of five years export 250,000 barrels yearly. In the fall of the year the outport grower, instead of glutting the market and killing himself with cutthroat competition, could dispose of all the potatoes he had for sale to the West Indies, and get a living price if the home market failed to give it.

LUMBER

Nova Scotia supplies the West Indies with millions of feet of lumber, most of it of the same kind we produce in Newfoundland. We have the lumber and the mills, and why should we not make an attempt to secure a fair share of the lumber trade. Our lumbering business has suffered terribly by the trade depression of the last three years. Nearly 300 of our small saw mills closed down, all because the only market for their output was St. John's, Grand Falls and a few of the smaller towns which could not absorb it. Even now the remaining number find competition so keen among themselves that they barely exist, and unless we find a market out side our own country, others will have to close down. We can help them and encourage others to go into the business by making it easy for them to dispose of a large quantity of framing lumber to the West Indies trade. The price obtained by the Nova Scotia millers was $35.00 per thousand, who sold last year over 20 million feet to the West Indies dealers, while our mills sell here as low as $25.00 per thousand. There is no valid reason why we should not sell ten or twelve million feet of lumber to the West Indies at a good profit, and make the lumbering industry in Newfoundland

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER VI.

"Do you live here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Somebody's been teaching you manners. Whose boy are you?"

"Muvver's."

"And who might mother be?"

"Nan Brent."

"Yo-ho! So you're Nan Brent's boy! What's your name?"

"Donald Brent."

"No; that isn't it, son. Brent is your mother's name. Tell me your father's name."

"Aint got no farver."

"Well, then, run along to your mother."

He kissed the child and set him down just as a young woman came down the sadly-neglected shell walk house. Donald opened the gate and advanced to meet her.

"I'm sure you must be Nan," he said, "although I can't be certain. I haven't seen Nan in six years."

She extended her hand.

"Yes; I'm Nan," she replied," and you're Donald McKaye. You're a man now, but somehow you haven't changed greatly."

"It's fine to meet you again, Nan." He shook her hand enthusiastically.

She smiled a little sadly.

"I saw you at colors last night, Donald. When your flag came down and the gun was fired, I knew you'd remembered."

"Were you glad?" he demanded, and immediately wondered why he had asked suh a childish question.

"Yes, I was, Donald. It has been a long time since—since—the gun has been fired—for me. So long since we were children, Donald."

"You weren't at the barbecue yesterday. I missed you and Caleb. You two are very old friends of mine, Nan. Was it quite loyal to you to stay home?"

"You're the only person that missed us, Donald," she answered, with just the suspicion of a tremor in her sweet voice. "But then, we are accustomed to being left out of things."

He made no effort to formulate an answer to this. Truth does not require an answer. Yet he was sensible of a distince feeling of sympathy for her, and man-like, he decided to change the topic of conversation.

"You have neighbors on the Sawdust pile, Nan."

"Yes. They ame when The Laird was in Europe."

"They never would have dared it had he been in Port Agnew. I'm surprised that Andrew Daney permitted it. I had thought of him as a man of courage, but, strange to say, these people outgamed him."

"They didn't outgame him, Donald, He just didn't care. I—I—fancy he concluded they would mage agreeable neighbors—for me."

"I'm sorry, Nan. However, I'm the new laird of Tyee, and I've come down to stage an eviction. I didn't know of this state of affairs until this morning."

She smiled a little wistfully and bitterly.

"I had flattered myself, Donald, you had called to visit your old friends instead. When you waved at me last night, I—oh, you can't realize how happy it made me to know that you had noticed me—that you really were big enough to be the big man of Port Agnew. And I thought perhaps you would come because of that."

He smiled tolerantly upon her.

"Something has occurred to make you bitter, Nan. You're not like the girl I used to know before I went away to school. If it will help you to restore me to your previous good opinion, however, please believe that when I waved to you last night, simultaneously I made up my mind to make an early visit to the Sawdust Pile. The discovery that these cattle have intruded upon you and your old father, because you were unable to defend yourselves and no one in Port Agnew would defend you, merely hastened the visit. I couldn't in decency come any earlier; could I, Nan? It's just half after eight. And if you're going to keep me standing here at the gate, as if I were a sewing-machine agent instead of a very old friend, I may conclude to take offense and regret that I called."

"Oh, I'm sorry! Please forgive me, Donald. I'm so much alone—so very lonely—I suppose I grow suspicious of people and their motives."

"Say no more about it, Nan. May I come in, then, to greet Caleb and your husband?"

"Father is in the house. I'll call him out, Donald. As for my husband—" She hesitated, glanced out across the bight, and then resolutely faced him. "You cannot have heard the gossop, then?"

"I haven't even heard of your marriage. The first I knew of it was when hisl ittle nibs here hailed me, and asked me if I were his father. Then he informed me he was your boy. He's a lovely child, Nan, and I have been the recipient of some of his extremely moist kisses."

She realized that he was too courteous to ask whether her husband was dead or if there had been a divorce.

"I'm rather glad you haven't heard, Donald," she replied evenly. "I much will understand why I cannot invite you into the house, and why you prefer to tell you myself; then you must not be seen talking to me here at the gate. I am not married. I have never been married. My baby's name is—Brent, and I call him Donald, after the only male human being that has ever been truly kind to my father and me."

"Ah," said Donald quietly, "so that's why he misses his father and appears to want one so very much."

She gazed forlornly out to sea and answered with a brief nod. Seemingly she had long since ceased to be tragic over her pitiful tragedy.

"Well," he replied philosophically, "life is quite filled with a number of things, and some of them make for great unhappiness." He stooped and lifted the baby in his great arms. "You're named after me, sonny; so I think I'll try my hand at foster-fathering? I likec hildren. This little man starts life under a handicap, but I'll see to it that he gets his chance in life—far from Port Agnew, if you desire." She closed her eyes in sudden pain ahd did not answer. "And whatever your opinion on the matter, Nan," he went on, "even haa I known yesterday of your sorrow, I should have called to-day just the same."

"You call it my 'sorrow!' " she burst forth passionately. "Others call it my trouble—my sin—my disgrace."

"And what does Caleb call it, Nan?"

"He doesn't call it, Donald. It has not appeared to make any differenec with him. I'm still—his little girl."

"Well, I cannot regard you as anything but a little girl—the same little girl that used to help Caleb and me sail the sloop. I don't wish to know anything about your sorrow, or your disgrace, or your sin, or whatever folks may choose to call it. I just want to know that I know you are a good woman, and when the spir it moves me—which will be frequently now that I have this young man to look after—I shall converse with you at your front gate and visit your decent old father in this little house, and be damned to those who decry it. I am the young laird of Tyee. My father raised me to be a gentleman, and, by the gods, I'll be one! Now, Nan, take the boy and go into the house, because I see a rascally negro in the doorway of that shack yonder, and I have a matter to discuss with him. Is that white woman his consort?"

Nan nodded again. She could not trust herself to speak, for her heart was full to overflowing.

"Come here—you!" Donald called to the negro. The fellow slouched forth defiantly. He was a giant mulatto, and his freckled face wore an evil and contemptuous grin.

"I'm Donald McKaye," Donald informed him. "I'm the new laird of Tyee. I want you and that woman to pack up and leave."

"How soon, boss?"

"Immediately." Anticipating a refusal, Donald stepped closer to the mulatto and looked him sternly in the eye.

"Well, is dat so?" the yellor rascal drawled. "So youh-all's de new lawd, eh? Well, ah'm de king o' de Sawdust Pile, an' mah house is mah castle. Git dat, Mistah Lawd?"

Donald turned toward Nan.

"I'm going to have trouble here, Nan. Please go in the house."

"Proceed," she replied simply. "I have a most unwomanly desire to see that beast manhandled."

Donald turned in time to go under a sizzling right-hand blow from the mulatto and come up with a right uppercut to the ugly, freckled face and a left rip to the mulatto's midriff. The fellow grunted, and a spasm of pain crossed his countenance. "You yellow dog!" Donald muttered, and flattened his nose far flatter than his mammy ever had wiped it. The enemy promptly backed away and covered; a hearty thump in the solar plexus made him uncover, and under a rain of blows on the chin and jaw, he sprawled unconscious on the ground.

Donald left him lying there and stepped to the door of the shack. The frightened drab within spat curses at him.

"Pack and go!" he ordered. "Within the hour I'm going to purge the Sawdust Pile with fire; if you stay in the house, you'll burn with it."

She was ready in ten minutes. Three more of her kind occupying an adjacent shack begged to be allowed time in which to load their personal possessions in an expres wagon. The four Greeks were just about to set out for a day's fishing, but, having witnessed the defeat of the mulatto bully, the fever of the hegia seized them also. They loaded their effects in the fishing launch and chugged away up the river to Darrow, crying curses upon the young Laird of Tyee and promising reprisal.

Donald waited until the last of the refugees had departed before setting fire to the shacks. Then he stood by old Caleb Brent's house, a circle of filled buckets around him, and watched in case the wind should suddenly shift and shower sparks upon the roof. In half an hour the Sawdust Pile had reverted to its old status and a throng of curious towns people who, attracted by the flames and smoke, had clustered outside Caleb Brent's gate to watch Donald at work, finally despaired of particulars and scattered when they saw Donald and Nan Brent enter the house.

BACK ACHED TERRIBLY

Mrs. McMahon Tells How She Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chatham, Ont.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a run-down condition after the birth of my baby boy. I had terrible pains and backache, and was tired and weak, not fit to do my work and care for my three little children. One day I received your little book and read it, and gave up taking the medicine I had and began taking the Vegetable Compound. I feel much better now and am not ashamed to tell what it has done for me. I recommend it to any woman I think feels as I do." —Mrs. J. R. McMahon, 153 Harvey St., Chatham, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has for nearly fifty years been restoring sick, ailing women to health and strength. It relieves the troubles which cause such symptoms as backache, painful periods, irregularities, tired, worn-out feelings and nervousness. This is shown again and again by such letters as Mrs. McMahon writes, as well as by one woman telling another. These women know, and are willing to tell others, what it did for them; therefore it is surely worth your trial

Women who suffer should write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cobourg, Ontario, for a free copy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women." C

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Brighter London.

England needs a new law regulating public houses and places of entertainment, say the owners of London's hotels and dance halls, who have banded together to obtain less stringent laws in the matter of closing their places.

The present law, which is adhered to vigorously by the authorities, was passed in the reign of George II, in 1751, and requires that the dance places of all classes close at the stroke of midnight. Under this act the authorities may grant special licenses for specific places to remain open until later, but generally they stick to the Georgian habits, and night life in London comes to a halt at twelve o'clock.

At the present time many of the cafes in London have permits to remain open a few nights a week, but there is nothing certain in the present arrangements and they are changed as often as a new council is elected or the present members feel inclined.

The hotel and cafe proprietors will ask the London County Council to draw up a new law to be presented to parliament, and they have obtained the backing of the "Brighter London" movement committee which is seeking to make London a rival of gay Paris.

Back to Pirate Days.

Mystery ships plying the Siberian arctic laden with whiskey, which is bartered to the natives for furs, still take their toll of murder in the piratical traffic, according to Captain Andrew Predersen of Archorage, Alaska, who says he was recently an innocent member of such an expedition. The limit was actual murder, he says, when the Siberian government attempted to stop the traffic. Captain Predersen's story follows:

"We sailed out of Nome for what I was told would be a trading voyage to Siberia. I will not tell the names of the owners or skipper of the trader, for reasons best known to myself. At one port the boat took on a large quantity of furs, after getting the natives drunk on moonshine whiskey. An official of the Siberian government came aboard to collect a tax and force payment for the furs. He was thrown overboard and shot. The last I saw of him he was clinging to a piece of ice. I do not know whether he died or was rescued. On the cruise back I heard talk of murdering me because I knew too much. For nights I didn't sleep, and while I rested in the bunk I kept a revolver in my hand ready for action."

Royal Love Affair.

The post-war poverty of many once powerful nobles has brought before the public the sad ending of a royal love affair.

The story is the romance of Princess Louise of Belgium, daughter of Leopold II, who married Prince Philip of Coburg, and about thirty years ago left her husband and her two children to elope with Captain Geza von Mattasich, a Hungarian nobleman.

The princess was divorced by her husband, and Captain von Mattasich lost his commission in the Austro-Hungarian army. Following the war money became scarce, and the lovers were compelled to move from their palatial residence in Vienna to a small village.

The princess disputed the will of her father, who left everything to his morganatic wife, the Baroness Vaughan, but lost the suit. Then she appealed to her sister, the Princess Stephanie Lonyay, former Crown Princess of Austria.

Princess Stephanie offered to allow Louise, who is now 64 years old, to spend the rest of her life at the beautiful castle of Orosziar, in Hungary, on condition that she leave von Mattasich. The offer was accepted, and friends now have found another home for the penniless captain.

U.S. Great Consumer of Opium.

The United States is the greatest consumer of opium of all the world's nations.

No less than thirty-six grains per head of the population each year, enough to keep every person living in that country, in a state of insensibility for twenty-nine days in the twelve months, is the consumption in the States.

India comes second with a consumption of twenty-seven grains. France uses four grains, Germany and China two grains. These nations consume most of their quotas under medical treatment.

The restaurant of the British House of Commons is experiencing hard times, and all because the British Labor Party has sent to reppesent it over 100 total abstainersmen who drink stuff that doesn't give as much profit as booze. No other political party in the House of Commons contains proportionately, as many "drys" as the Labor Party, nor has any previous parliament contained as many, and, in consequence, the receipts of the bar in the restaurant have substantially diminished.

FILLING SILENCE!

There is sentiment and propriety in a gift of rubber blocks, worth $30,000, to pave the roadway round the Cenotaph in Whitehall, London, Eng., so that it will be silent, which has been offered to Westminister by Rubber Roadways, Ltd.

The acceptance of the offer is recommended by the Wesetminister City Council without comment, as is the British way.

SUCCESSFUL OIL-DRILLING IN THE OLD COUNTRY

The success of recent oil-drilling operations in the northern countries of England and in Scotland have led to new drilling operations on a large scale. The oil found, while not abundant, is claimed to be of the finest heavy grade and has lead many geologists to believe that asphalt deposits lie in this section.

Oil has been found in Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Medlothian. At Hardstoft, Derbyshire, a well drilled about a year ago has produced a thousand tons of heavy oil and the well is still flowing. Five other wells in this section have shown traces of oil but have not yet been pumped.

Indications of oil have been found in the Staffordshire coal mines, but the prospects are not believed encouraging for the operator.

Most of the test wells have been drilled by the government in order to prove the theory that oil exists in many of the sections of the British Isles. English operators believe that while the result of the drilling so far is not what was looked for, it is possible to produce oil in commercial quantities.

The football game scheduled for this evening has been postponed owing to the balance of the St. Joseph's regatta events being run off.

Many Fatilities From Rioting In Germany

No Tenderness In Britain For Germany — French Stronhold May Overthrow Economic Situation of World — United States Must Help Save The World.

ANGORA, Aug. 14—The Assembly yesterday elected Kelal Pasha, president by a unanimous vote. National Mustpha unanimous.

BERLIN, Aug. 14—Uninformed rumors from various points in middle Germany indicate much rioting owing to the shortage of food and money.

Twenty persons are reported killed in Hanover, and fifteen in Seitz.

Rioting is reported in Nesso, Silesia. The Comunists strike commission in Berlin has ordered the water works shut down.

LONDON, Aug. 14—What is claimed as an "authoratative and direct footnote on the British foreign policy," was made public last evening by the Central News. It reads:

"There is no tenderness in the British Empire for Germany, but the government believe that if France is out to maintain an indefinite stranglehold on Germany the complete overthrow of the economic situation of Europe, if not of the whole world, is certain, altho there is more than a suspicion that the French policy is directed against the isolation of Great Britain in Europe."

"The British government are not seeking isolation, but the co-operation of France. If that fails, obviously, Great Britain will try her hand at the isolation game.

"Great Britain may then try to win over Italy, to detach Belgium from the support of France in the Ruhr, and bring into line with her, Holland, Switzerland, Sweden and Norway who are suffering equally or more than Great Britain from the effects of the French policy.

"Apart from the immediate aims of the government in Europe, the dominating aim of their policy is ultimate co-operation between Great Britain and the United States for world settlement.

"No imediate or sensational response from the United States need be expected, but Premier Baldwin believes Europe cannot be saved unless the people of the United States join the British in saving them."

PARIS, Aug. 14—The Yellow Book of diplomatic documents issued by the French government contains thirty-seven telegrams and letters between Premier Poincare and the French Ambassador, dated from May 2nd, to August 30th.

Premier Poincare puts the position plainly in his twelvth message to the French Ambassador in London.

He instructs the Ambassador to tell Lord Curzon that "It is the problem of inter-allied debts which prevents us from telling Germany now the exact amount she owes us." The message adds:

"The solution of this problem is in the hands of Great Britain first of all and the United States afterwards. The latter can be approached in comon accord by the allies when they have agreed upon a formula, and it has become evident that every thing depends only upon the attitude of the government at Washington."

Documents in the book emphasize M. Poincare's absolute conviction that Germany can pay, must pay, and will pay, because France will follow a policy of making it easier to pay than to stand the pressure in the Ruhr.

The premier explained his idea of guarantees, suggesting that the Germans deliver the Rhineland railways to the Allies, give them certain Ruhr coal mines, collect customs in gold for the Allies, and otherwise actively co-operate in payment of reparations.

Premier Poincare is firm throughout in the policy of compelling Germany to cease resistance and he refuses to compromise on the occupation of the Ruhr or the amount of reparations except as compensated for by the cancellation of inter-allied debts.

Speaking of the committee to determine Germany's capacity to pay, he says the experts would simply see the German treasury empty and conclude she could not pay, while France knows she can pay.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14—Representatives of union miners and operators in the Anthracite fields were summoned yesterday by the federal coal commission to meet in New York on Wednesday to renew negotiations designed to avoid the suspension of the anthracite production on September 1st.

Repairs Badly Needed Now

The "potholes" on LeMarchant Road, where it joins Mundy's Pond Road in particular, are getting worse and worse and are very annoying to pedestrians. The Council will do the public a great favour to have these filled. It would not cost much and would save the road from further disrepair.

Another Union Vessel Has "Full Load"

The schr. James Jones, Capt. Gideon Brown, has arrived at Badger's Quay, B.B., from the Straits of Belle Isle, with 1,200 qtls. codfish. The Jones was built by the Union Shipbuilding Co. and outfitted at Port Union.

There was a clean docket in the Police Court this morning.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Collishaw and Mrs. B. Hayward left by to-day's express for Canada.

The motor vessel F. P. Union left Port Union at 9.30 for this port.

NOTABLE OPINIONS

To educate citizens is far cheaper than to maintain criminals. The economist does not appreciate the fact that in a social organization so complex as our own and under modern conditions of life, with the franchise almost universal, an imperfect education is a social danger, while ignorance is a menace to the stability and general welfare of the community and its institutions. The choice before a nation seems to lie between education and evolution or ignorance and revolution.—E. J. Sainsbury:

Often it has happened to me to converse with persons who might have been very happy! But, always in a hurry, they had not understood the conditions of their happiness, and this has passed by on one side. They were actually unhappy through having closed their eyes to the reasons for being happy. One must watch one's own life and then one will love it the more.—Jean Finot.

There are degrees of activity, as there are degrees of happiness. In the first place, there is the vain and sterile bustle which should not be confounded with sane, productive labor. There is work whose excessive burden or insanity conditions exhaust the indivd ual, and destroy his health.....the fairest day will be that when all men will labor in a rational way, according to their tastes and to the requirements of their health.—Jean Finot.

Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness, and mall obligations given habitually, are what preserve the heart and secure comfort.—Sir H. Davy.

Thank God for pluck—unknown to slaves—
The self ne'er of itself bereft,
Who, when the right arm's shattered, waves,
The good flag with the left.
—Ethelwyn Wetherald.

Is One Strong Man Sufficient ?

Would He Be Supported By Small Politicians Or Be Betrayed?

Our evening contemporary, the Telegram, cried out yesterday "Give us a leader."

It was not a matter of an opposition leader this time, and, while some may understand the cry to be one of political party tribulation, we believe it had a more general reference and we are led to that belief because our contemporary did us the honor to refer to a previous Advocate opinion concerning the subject discussed; namely the matter of "strong men versus the matter of a strong man."

Without the slightest wish to cast aspersion on the good intentions of our contemporary, we would have, however, considered its references as more graciously given if our case had been presented in such manner as to leave it free from misrepresentation or misconstruction.

The Advocate has at no time denied the need or the desirability of a strong national leader.

But is one strong man sufficient? we asked on Friday last.

Is one strong man a panacea for all our ills? Is it possible to raise such a Hercules in this country or any other country, who will throw back the poisoned darts of small-minded and self-centred politicians even if they only number a score or more?

Nor do the pages of history condemn us; for they blinded the eyes of patriots, burnt noble martyrs at the stake, betrayed the bravest men and crucified the noblest of them all.

If we must have a strong man, he must be one made strong by a strong people, that his work will not be sacrificed by coteries of political timeservers such as are found in all countries who reck of themselves and not of their country.

Until the strength of such as these is broken, until they by political intrigue and the parading of false issues can no longer mislead the common people, then, and not till then, will a strong man be enabled with the people's support to lead us in the path of progress.

History reformers were made strong by the strength of the public opinion behind them and they could never have accomplished, ecept, as the Telegram admits, "by arousing a national spirit which remained."

As far as our national advancement is concerned our "weak" forces are certainly not the common people. They are a species of public politicians and wire-pullers-in-general, crouched to spring upon any one strong man, or body of men, who may have a different and a broader vision from their own.

The day will come, if it has not already come, when our strong people will dispose of such entirely and the strong leader, whom the Telegram desires, will then be able to do his real work.

Many things there are to do in Newfoundland. What is one that readily occurs to us?

It is the question of our staple industry!

Stabilize it, market it, control and regulate its export and sale.

BUT watch the strong man have his heart torn out or his life made a hell and his days shortened by a clique of timeservers who see the business of to-day and look not to the future, whose obsession is self and whose least concern is the welfare of the underdog.

What is needed is the people's strength to put such assailants in their places, showing them the propriety of their being men, strong for their country's best good and not for power and self.

Give us a strong leader by all means but make the small-minded political adventurers cease to be the outstanding weakness of our national condition.

A West-Indian Steamship Service With Newfoundland

We publish today a speech delivered by Mr. George F. Grimes, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on the introduction by him of the resolutions relating to the establishment of a direct steamship service between Newfoundland and the West Indies.

The new Minister is to be congratulated, as the Leader of the Opposition remarked, on his first address to the Assembly as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. His speech opens up a new line of thought in respect to our export trade and its future development; and certainly evidences a lot of excellent research and a grasp of the present situation in relation to future trade and market requirements.

The matter of a West India-Newfoundland service has been much discussed during recent years; and, in many quarters, it is considered as highly essential to such extension of our export trade as will put us in direct touch with newer markets, and consequently will bring better prices to our producers. The visit of Sir Wm. Coaker to the West Indies early in 1922 and his declarations regarding the possibilities of direct trade with these islands has done much to make it a live issue; and the action of the Assembly on the resolutions should be regarded with much interest.

We commend Mr. Grimes' speech to the careful perusal of our readers.

Oddfellows Return From Bridgewater Conference

Two Newfoundland Delegates are Elected to Office

Grand Master MacKay to Visit This Country in September

By yesterday's express there arrived Messrs. George Soper, G. T. Phillips and others of the Newfoundland representatives to the Grand Lodge Session of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, recently held at Bridgewater, Nova Scotia. The Grand Falls representatives detrained at that place. The delegates report a very enjoyable and successful decision and a most successful year for the Society's branches throughout the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

For the first time in the Society's history, St. John's delegates have been honored with offices in both branches of the Grand Lodge. Mr. G. T. Phillips was elected as Grand Conductor of the Grand Lodge and Mr. George Soper as Grand Marshal of the Grand Encampment.

The session opened on Tuesday 10th inst., and closed on Thursday p.m., the 9th inst.

The Grand Lodge delegates, the Daughters of Rebekah, and friends totalling about 1000 persons, were entertained by the logical committee of the Order at Bridgewater and were given an excursion on the beautiful Le Havre river, covering about thirty miles going and coming.

The I. O. O. F. Home for the aged and orphans of the Oddfellows, which is a very beautiful and commodious structure, and which was purchased by the Society and renovated for the present purpose was opened on July 17, during Hector week by Deputy Grand Sire, Herbert A. Thompson of Detroit. The building is beautifully furnished by the Rebekah Branch, who deserve great credit for the excellent taste displayed.

It will be interesting to Oddfellows of Newfoundland to know that Newfoundland delegates learnt that the first residents of the Home at Pictou, were five children of the late Charles Newhook of Grand Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Fraser of the Home are delighted with the children, and, as in the case of the other inmates, are proving a mother and father to them. Being very well-behaved, Mr. and Mrs. Fraser speak very highly of the Newfoundland children. Mr. Newhook was a late member of Exploits Lodge at Grand Falls.

During the session at Bridgewater and following the delegates' visit to the Pictou "Home," a very substantial collection was subscribed to the eldest girl of the Newhook family and will be presented as a birthday present sometime during this month.

All delegates are highly pleased with receptions given by the local committee at Bridgewater, who deserve great praise for their efficient arrangements.

The addresses from the Grand Masters of Ontario and of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were of a very high order, and the general debates were characterized by splendid thought and decorum.

For the coming year, the newly elected heads of the Society are—Grand Master W. A. MacKay of Truro, Nova Scotia, and Deputy Grand Master, Rev. G. W. Whitman of Grand Pre', (the land of Evangeline).

We understand that Grand Master MacKay will visit Newfoundland about the 10th of September next, and will pay a fraternal visit to the Oddfellows' Lodge throughout the country.

Not Plain Altruism.

(Indianapolis News.-

The problem is not merely one of helping Europe, but also of helping ourselves, and wadring off a great danger. Much that was not done might have been done. But it is probable that just now conditions are not propitious. Such, at any rate, seems to be the view of both our Government and the Government of Great Britain which are proposing to issue a joint call for a conference to consider the question of reducing armaments as soon as there seems to be any chance of success.

Awakening the Dog.

(New Orleans Times-Picayune.)

We folk of the West have given the East newspapers, the telegraph, schools, modern weapons, the sales-talk of the office-hunting politician, the catch to use them. What happens in one brownhued dependency is watched keenly in the others. What we do with and to the Philippines will be bazaar talk in India and in Egypt the next day. A skirmish in Mindanoa and a rioa in Manila would find echoes in Bombay and Calcutta and Cairo.

A Step in the Right Direction

The new administration has taken no step that will be more popular than that announced by Prime Minister Warren in connection with outstanding license fees for crown lands.

According to the Prime Minister, notice has been issued through the Department of Agriculture and Mines, to all holders of crown lands who have not paid their license fees, to pay such fees within one month or be prepared to have their licenses cancelled by the Government.

That is a step in the right direction. It will be a lesson for those who hold lands for speculation purposes and are avoiding payment of their licenses. The reversion of such crown lands to the Government will make it possible for the Government to hand them over to parties, who will be ready to develop them.

CONGRATULATIONS

S. S. SABLE I. STRIKES SUBMERGED WRECK

Captain Murley Beaches the Ship Near Lamaline—Ship Needs No Assistance at Present—Forward Compartments Full Of Water

The Farquhar Line steamer Sable I., Captain G. A. Murley, bound here from Sydney via St. Pierre, met with a serious accident last night shortly after leaving the French Colony, and is now ashore near Lamaline with her forward hold full of water. The first news of the accident was received at 11 o'clock last night when Messrs. Harvey & Company, the local agents received a message from Captain Murley, in which he stated that the Sable struck a submerged wreck, that the forward hold was flooded and that the ship was beached near Lamaline. Captain Murley reported that the stokehold, engine room and after hold were dry.

Messrs. Bowring Brothers, Limited, Lloyd's agents, also received word of the wreck, adding that the ship was ashore four miles from Lamaline. No other particulars have been received but apparently all the crew and passengers, if any, are safe at Lamaline. Messrs. Harvey & Company have no word as to any passengers being on the ship, but on receipt of the message they immediately wired Halifax and Sydney for all particulars.

Excepting the foregoing information no further details have been received direct from Capt. Murley or from his owners at Halifax with whom no doubt he is in direct communication. Harvey & Co., the ship's agents here, were in touch with the Mapledawn off Cape Race this morning. The Mapledawn reports that the Sable I. does not require assistance at present, according to information received from St. Pierre wireless station. The ship has some passengers on board but the agents have not received the list. Arch Goobie, of this city, a sergeant-major in the Nfld. Regiment, is known to be one of the passengers. He is returning from Camp Hill Hospital in care of a nurse and orderly. He will be remembered as a member of the firm of Hammond and Goobie, tinsmiths.

Evidently Capt. Murley is satisfied that his ship is safely beached as he does not need outside assistance. The message to the Mapledawn via St. Pierre wireless station is also reassuring to those who may have friends amongst the passengers and crew.

The Sable I. is one of the most popular steamships coming to this port, and for many years has been employed on the Sydney and Halifax service, making weekly trips to this port and owing to the regularity of her arrival and sailing was termed "the express." The ship left Sydney Saturday evening on her regular schedule, calling at St. Pierre en route where a number of passengers were landed, as well as a quantity of freight. The ship was due to leave the French port at 7 o'clock last night and struck the derelict a couple of hours later. Besides general cargo the Sable had some forty head of cattle and fifty sheep on board, a large part of which would be in the forward holds.

The Sable was built in 1914 at Paisley, Scotland, by Messrs. Bow, McLachlan & Company, being especially strengthened to contend with ice, and for several years she prosecuted the sealfishery and was fairly uuccessful. She is 734 tons gross, and 341 net, and was very popular in the passenger service. Captain Murley has only recently recovered from a severe illness, and only joined his ship at Sydney last trip. There will be general sympathy with him in the present accident, while under such weather conditions as prevailed last night we must conclude that he exercised his well known good judgment and seamanship in safely beaching his ship.

Pensions and Disabled.

(Daily Herald.)

Instead of stretching points in favor of men broken and disabled, the local authorities are, in accordance with the wish of the Ministry of Pensions, screwing them down whenever this can be done. We do not suggest that the Ministry has issued definite instructions. The officials are too clever for that. They contrive to get their wish made known without anything in writing. Thus the Ministry can plead "Not Guilty" and ask for evidence to be produced.

No "filler" to rot fabrics

in this purest, new laundry soap

The thing that wears out pretty clothes, delicate fabrics, isn't the actual wear they get—nor yet the washing itself.

It's the harmful "filler" in soap, which rots the fabric.

That's why you will find this new, pure soap saves clothing for you.

There isn't a bit of "filler" in the big bar. Just good, pure soap.

It turns out the most beautifully white, snowy washes. Does it quickly, easily, with the least possible work at rubbing.

And it's easy on sensitive skin for the same reason it doesn't hurt fabrics. Saves your hands from unsightly reddening, and roughening.

Another important thing: being just solid, pure soap, the big bar lasts for an amazing length of time. That's another economy.

The name is MOTHER HUBBARD Pure Laundry Soap. Be sure you have some for the next wash time.

Your dealer has it in stock for you, now.

so prosperous that the Government will have no difficulty in enforcing the collection of one dollar per thousand on all lumber cut on the three mile limit, and obtaining a revenue of at least $10,000 yearly from this source. It is impossible to do this now with the present condition of the lumber trade and its dependence on local demand.

OTHER MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

The West Indies service could be made useful for the export of olemargarine, nails, paint and ready made clothing.

When in Canada two years ago, I was informed that one of the secrets of Canada's growing export trade lay in the co-operation that existed between the Government and the manufacturers. I was puzzled to know the reason why I was offered goods for the Newfoundland trade as high as twenty per cent. under the Canadian wholesale price. I learned after awhile that the Government in order to increase Canadian export trade, and give increased employment to its own people, gave a drawback to manufacturers, of duties from the Customs on all raw materials imported into Canada which entered into articles manufactured in Canada and which was being exported to other countries. Let us see how this would work out. Take the ready made clothing industry of Nfld. By the Government permitting such drawbacks as are given in Canada, the factories here could sell clothing just as cheap in the West Indies, quality for quality, as Canada or the United States. Given a drawback from the Customs of the duty of 35 per cent., plus the surtax and the sales tax, and you make it worth while for the Newfoundland Clothing Company, the White Clothing Company, the Perlin Co., the Royal Stores, the British Clothing Co., to send a wide-awake and pushing salesman to the West Indies to drum up trade. In a few years time, instead of witnessing the factories running with a third of the employees they had in normal times, they would be running to full capacity, and employing at least three hundred employees more than they do at present. What can be said of the clothing factories can be applied to our manufacturers of paints, cordage, nails, olemargarine and other products.

I know such a statement as this will be considered foolish by some. Who are they? Those who are in the same class who think that any other country is better than their own, and consequently retard its progress There is no better quality of all leather boots, price for price, than are produced in Newfoundland. Our creamery butter, and the olemargarine, price for price, is better than any produced elsewhere.

The same can be said of paints, lines and twines and other articles. Unfortunately for Newfoundland, unfortunately for its unemployed, we have not developed that true patriotism which, practised in every day life, would place our country first, her people and her products. Because it is produced in Newfoundland by Newfoundland workmen and Newfoundland work-women, there are too many of us prone to discredit the product of our own kith and kin, and buy the imported article, driving thousands of persons out of our factories and mills to tramp the streets for employment, and eventually become a charge on the Government, over-burdening the country with debt, and forcing hundreds or more to go to foreign lands, never to return.

So much for the possibilities of increasing our Export trade by the establishment of this Steamship Service called for in the Bill.

Another important aspect of this proposal is its connection with the Sealing venture of this country. The sealing steamers now used, are all unsuitable to properly prosecute the seal-fishery. No effort has been made during late years to supply any additional steamer of an improved type. The opportunity to engage five hundred more men to engage in the sealing venture will be afforded by the establishment of those two West India Service steamers. They are to be built suitable for contending with ice. It is not probable that such steamers would be available for the seal-fishery under ordinary circumstances, but, under this Bill, it is possible to have ships built for the service that will be utilized in an endeavour to bring new blood into a fishery from which we received, in the past, a considerable part of our earnings.

RECIPROCITY

We should endeavour to purchase from those who buy our fishery produce. We should take all possible from our friends in the West Indies. For the year 1921-22, we took from them $330,000 worth of goods, made up as follows:—

IMPORTS FROM BRITISH AND FOREIGN WEST INDIES

Kind	Quantity	Value
Molasses,	743,698 gallons	$282,681.00
Rum,	24,471 gallons	29,228.00
Fruit		27.00
Lime Juice		81.00
Spirits		28.00
Sugar		1,293.00
Tobacco		6,314.00
Salt		10,097.00
Foreign West Indies		330.00

We hope by this service to do a larger business in fish and in fruit. Newfoundlanders do not eat enough of fruit. It is too expensive. The delicious Grape Fruit is a luxury. They can be sold as cheap as oranges with a profit. When we have to buy West Indies fruit through New York or Boston, we have to pay the wholesaler in these places his profit. We can buy direct, oranges, grape fruit and bananas by this Service, which can be protected in transit from spoiling, by the special equipment provided for the preservation of fruits, and sell it as cheap as in New York or Boston There is no reason why we could not use from ten or twenty to thirty thousand tons of raw sugar and refine it in this country instead of buying our requirements from New York. We can also do some business with Trinidad in gasoline, kerosene and fuel oils. The proposed steamers are to be oil burners and equipped with tanks along the bottom of the ship, which can be utilized every trip in bringing supplies of gasoline and kerosene oil.

Let us reciprocate and buy all possible. What does Canada do in this respect. In exchange for her fish and other products sold to the West Indies, she takes large quantities of molasses.

From Jamaica alone she takes 524,105 lbs. of grape fruit valued at	$ 20,739.00
From Cuba, 218,964 lbs. of grape fruit valued at	10,987.00
From Jamaica, oranges to the value of	1,794.00
From the other British West Indies Island, oranges to the value of	1,569.00
Dried Bananas from Jamaica, 20,886 lbs, valued at	4,856.00
Canned Fruit from other B.W.I., 161,244 lbs., valued at	24,808.00
Crude Lime Juice from other B.W.I., 47,609, valued at	15,149.00
Cocoa Nuts from British Guiana, 135,900, valued at	1,963.00
" " " Jamaica, No. 1,799,315, valued at	33,678.00
" " " Trinidad and Tobago, 1,479,066, valued at	35,276.00
" " " Other B.W.I., 30,300, valued at	634.00
Arrow Root from Jamaica, 4,407 lbs., valued at	230.00
" " " Other B.W.I., 131,799 lbs., valued at	8,377.00
Sugar Root from Barbados, 57,394,627 lbs., valued at	1,888,755.00
" " " Jamaica, 71,699,256 lbs., valued at	2,471,279.00
" " " Trinidad and Tobago, 48,993,355 lbs., valued at	1,647,026.00
" " " Other B.W.I., 34,114,886 lbs., valued at	1,290,270.00
" " " Cuba, 331,437,694 lbs., valued at	8,590,680.00

We send to the West Indies, as I have already stated, products to the value of $1,631,000 and take in return West India products to the value of $330,000. We now ask our West India friends to take our produce in larer quantities at more regular services, and we say to them, if you do so, we will buy in greater quantities from you. We can take your raw sugar, tobacco, fruit, molasses, gasoline, kero oil and pitch and sisal. We expect you to take from us a fair share of your requirements, in codfish, pickled herring, smoked herring, salmon, potatoes, lumber, paint, nails, cordage, clothing and not-to-be-equalled partridge berry, which might be manufactured in the West Indies and exported to Central America. The cost of such a service will not greatly exceed the cost to the country of the "Prospero" and "Portia." It is considered that it will take seven weeks to make a round trip, therefore such a steamer will not make more than eight trips per year. They will miss one or two during the sealing voyage, but the Bill provides that, if the trade requirements demand continuous service during this period, other ships will be substituted. This service will, therefore, cost less than $120,000 per year.

No grant will be required this year as the new ships cannot possibly begin the service until next Spring, even if a contract is entered into very soon. It is hoped that a contract will be entered into as speedily as possible, in order to have at least one of the steamers for next year's seal-fishery. The proposal has received much consideration the past twelve months at the hands of the Government.

It is the intention of the Government to immediately ask for tenders for the service, as outlined by this Bill, and I feel the House will give it its support, and therefore enable the country to enter a new field of action and extend its activities into new channels that will enable the trade of the country to develop on sound lines and assist the fish exporters in their endeavour to develop fish market and ease the burden that bears so heavily because of abnormal conditions in the European markets.

FRANCE'S WILL IN PRESENT COURSE IS IRREVOCABLE

PARIS, Aug. 13—The Journal Des Debates commenting upon the British reparations note, says:

"Our will to break the resistance of a country that does not wish to fulfil her engagements is irrevocable, and as there is literally nothing in all this enormous text that might lend itself to arrangement, we are forced to consider the possibility of definite separation which will be as repugnant to the government of the Republic as to that of His Majesty, but which we cannot prevent if England really has said her last word."

The Lintransigeant also regards the document as a sort of repudiation of the Entente Cordial, which is extremely regrettable.

La Liberte declares that the note would make one believe that the Baldwin cabinet has set itself to the task of finishing what Lloyd George began, that or embroiling France and England.

BALDWIN NOTE CREATES DEEP IMPRESSION

PARIS, Aug. 13—The most surprising feature of the British reparations note to the French government officials, it is said, was the contention that the occupation of the Ruhr was illegal.

"The legality of the occupation of the Ruhr or any other German territory the Allies might choose was recognized in a document signed at Spain in July 1920 by the British as well as all other Allies, and by representatives of the German government," an official said.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 13—The British reparations note caused a rather unfavorable impression in Belgian official circles, particularly because the legality of the Ruhr occupation was contested.

Great Britain's agreement to accept the amount of her debt to the United States as total payment for reparations and inter-allied debts, however, is regarded as a possible basis of discussion.

LONDON, Aug. 13—The British note to France and Belgium in which the Baldwin government says it regards the Ruhr occupation as illegal under the Versailles Treaty, but is willing to submit the point to arbitration, has made a very deep impression here.

BRUTAL ATTACK PERPETRATED ON 16-YEAR-OLD GIRL

OTTAWA, Aug. 13—One of the most dastardly outrages committed in the history of Carleton County was enacted here Saturday, and Hazel Mackett, the 16-year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Mackett, a well-to-do farmer of Billing's Bridge, lies at death's door on account of a brutal assault made by an unknown man, but of whom the police have a fairly accurate description.

Within a quarter of a mile of her home, in broad daylight, she was terribly battered about the face and throat by her assailant, who, after dragging her into a shed and outraging her, again beat her, and then apparently, left her for dead.

Miss Mackett's plight was not discovered until some time later, when she was found with almost unrecognisable features and hardly able to stagger along the road home.

COMMUNIST AND MILITARY INVOLVED IN CLASHES

LONDON, Aug. 13—Sanguinary fighting between Communists and military forces, occurred to-day in Seitz, Salonia, according to a central news despatch from Berlin.

A large body of Communists stormed the city hall occupied by soldiers, and there was considerable fighting in the streets.

The bodies of nine Comunists were recovered, thirty were injured and many were wounded, the message said.

INCREASING POPULATION

PARIS, Aug. 13—The effort being put forward to check depopulation is still far from successful, for the terporary boom in marriages and births which began after the armistice has already subsided and the decline of births is now more serious than ever.

While other populations are increasing rapidly, France is making slow progress.

NOICE GOT UP FROM OPFRATING TABLE TO SAIL FOR ARCTIC

Young Commander Seeking to Rescue Marooned Party on Wrangel Island is Veteran of Expeditions—Interesting Details of Territory Which Steffansson Claims For British Empire.

Harold Noice has set his hand to the task of solving one of the big mysteries of the Arctic regions. In 1921 four white men*, two of them without previous Arctic experience, made their way to Wrangel Island, in one of the most inaccessible portions of the Polar regions, 400 miles west of Alaska and 100 miles from the eastern tip of Siberia. The purpose was to raise the British flag over the island. With them, as cook and seamstress, went an Eskimo woman.

Have they survived? On the answer to this question depend matters of international import, possibly including jurisdiction over a potential gold field said to be of tremendous value. Transcending the political aspects is the human drama. Are the four white men alive? Have cold and hunger or disease overcome them? Have they perhaps fallen a prey to dissension? Have they wrung subsistence from a region which most of the year seems almost unbelievably inhospitable, a region such as few white men have conquered in the history of Arctic exploration?

And can Noice get through to them, whether they be dead or alive? The whole year long there are but three weeks during which Wrangel Island is accessible to vessels, because of the pecular conditions of ice and currents in the surrounding waters.

ISLAND ON AIR ROUTE.

On Noice's ability to reach the island—his is the second relief expedition to set out within the year—there hinges also the answer to a question which will be of prime importance in that future period when mail carrying airplanes encircle the globe. Wrangel Island lies on the meridan of Greenwich and has already been semi-officially indicated as an airplane point of vantage in a contemplated route from England to Japan—a route plying over the top of the earth because the Meridan of Greenwich offers the shortest path between the two island nations. A point secondary only to this is the importance of Wrangel Island as a fur trading station, which has been stressed by Vihjalmur Steffansson. He predicts a Polar submarine freight service. In his present efforts to induce the British authorities to claim jurisdiction over Wrangel Island, Steffansson emphasizes also the value of walrus and other Arctic meat, whose use he foresees at a time when the cattle producing regions of the earth have become more restricted.

Noice, claiming Seattle as his home, in his present expedition, is acting as the agent of Steffansson, the latter representing a Canadian desire for England's support in securing this strategic island as a part of the British Empire.

LEADER ONLY A BOY

The four white men who have been marooned on Wrangel Island since 1921, two of them formerly subordinates of Steffansson, are:

Allan Crawford, of Toronto, Canada, a university student who was not yet twenty years of age when he undertook to become nominal head of the party of 1921. Although without Arctic experience, he became commander, as he was the only Canadian in the party, and the purpose of the expedition was to claim land for Canada.

Frederick Maurer, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, who was with one of the two divisions of the Steffansson expedition of 1913-18. Maurer was on the expedition steamer Karluk when the latter was crushed by the ice 60 miles off Wrangel Island, in the winter of 1913-14. Maurer was in the handful of men who spent the summer of 1914 on Wrangel Island, after eleven of their companies had been lost trying to reach land and three had perished from exposure on the island itself. Of the four in the party of 1921, Maurer alone knew what Wrangel Island was.

Lorne E. Knight of McMinnville, Oregon, who had seen Arctic service with Steffansson, but had never been on Wrangel Island. He spent six months in 1918 floating on ice in the Beaufort Sea near Wrangel Island, he and his companions subsisting chiefly on seals killed along the edges of the floes. These drifters of 1918 were commended by Steffansson's lieutenant, Storker Storkerson, and previously, in Steffansson's personal party, Knight penetrated to Steffansson's farthest north.

Milton Galle of New Braunsfels, Texas, who had travelled in the United States as Steffanssson's secretary, in that capacity learning Steffansson's philosophy and theory of exploration. Galle, however, a youth scarcely older than Crawford, had had no practical experience in the Arctic.

It is to rescue these four men and Ada Blackjack, their native steamstress, that Harold Noice has undertaken his hazardous adventure. Noice himself, a veteran subordinate of Steffansson, knows the chances run by himself as well as by those whom he would save.

Noice had recently emerged from a New York hospital when he received a cable from his chief to proceed to Wrangel Island. Several years ago while on Victoria Island in the Arctic he fell and dislocated his shoulder, and this summer he decided to have the joint cut open and the bone set back in place. Thus it was that when he set off for his polar destination he carried his arm in a plaster cast which also enclosed the greater part of his chest.

Fresh from high school, Noice went north first in 1916. He was one of the first to greet Steffansson on Prince Patrick Island after the explorer had been believed dead for over a year, and when the trading ship of which he was a crew member sailed south Noice remained as one of Steffansson's party. In the next two years he gained much Arctic experience and grew so enamoured of the Arctic that when Steffansson returned to civilization in 1918 Noice remained and spent the next four years among the Eskimos of Victoria Island, much of the time being the only white man among them. He was adopted into the native communities learned their language, and is thoroughly at home in the polar regions.

He had finished his first book and was busily engaged upon his second when he received the call to go to the relief of the marooned party on Wrangel Island, one member of whom Knight, was with him in 1917-18 on Steffansson's farthest northern sledge trip.

If he fails to get through the ice by boat, Noice expects to wait until the freeze-up and cross upon the ice from Siberia.

FLOWERS AND HUMMING BEES.

Back of all this story of suffering, heroism and daring is Wrangel Island itself, a tiny isolated bit of land given present and probably future value chiefly by the accident of the development of airplane and trade routes and possibly the rage of an ore vein.

There are months in the summer period when Wrangel Island in spite of its position is a little land of grass, flowers and humming bees, but with the turn of the weather, the coastal configuration of the surrounding seas concentrates on the island a mass of ice which seems almost powerful enough to grind away the jutting bit of land among the floes.

The island, 75 miles long and 40 wide, was discovered in 1849 by Captain Kellett, of the British navy, while engaged in the search for the ill-fated Frankl exinpedition, of which it was discovered later that all hands, comprising over 100 men, had starved to death.

Kellett did not make a landing but reported his discovery to the British admiralty and the island bears his name on the admiralty maps of that date and for some years later. He gave at the same time the name of the ship, the Herald, to a nearby rock which still bears that name.

NAMED BY WHALER.

In 1867 Captain Long, of San Francisco, a whaler, also sighted the island. Thinking that he had discovered new land he named it after Baron Wrangel, a Swede, who had for many years been conducting explorations in the Arctic for the Russian government, but who, according to his own journal, had never seen this particular land. In the course of time the new name superseded that of Kellett even upon British maps.

The first actual landing of which there is any record was made in 1881 when the U. S. Revenue Cutter, Corwin, under command of Captain Calvin L. Hooper, touched there while conducting a search for the survivors of the Jeannette, belonging to the DeLong Arctic expedition which was wrecked somewhere north of the Siberian coast.

Later on in the same year a second landing was made by a U. S. Revenue Cutter, this time the Rodgers, under command of Lieut. (now admiral) Berry. It was also engaged in the search for the Jeannette, but, unlike the Corwin, it remained for a couple of weeks and its crew conducted some explorations and also made a rough chart of the island which is still the one in use. They also formally took possession of the island for the United States.

More than thirty years was to elapse before the next visitor arrived at this rocky Arctic islet. In the winter of 1914 the Karluk, flag ship of Stefansson's (Canadian) Arctic Expedition, was crushed in the ice near the island and its crew and scientific staff landed in February and remained until rescued by the King and Winge of Seattle, in September. It was then that several members of the scientific staff lost their lives attempting to cross the ice en route from where the ship was wrecked to the island and three others died on the island.

PEARY'S AIDE IN COMMAND.

Stefansson was not on board the Karluk when it was crushed. He was conducting explorations in another part of the Arctic. The ship was in command of Capt. Robert Bartlett who had commanded Peary's ship and was an experienced polar navigator. When the shipwrecked party reached Wrangel Island, Bartlett and an Eskimo crossed the ice to Siberia and thence made his way along the coast several hundred miles to the nearest point whence word could be sent by cable to Nome and to the outside world of the whereabouts of the Karluk survivors. Their rescue followed soon after.

According to international law the discoverer of new land does not have to make a landing in order to establish a claim for his country. Merely sighting or landing upon an island without any further effort to establish ownership will not hold land indefinitely. Five years is the term which is usually considered the limit beyond which discovery without further occupancy is not binding. Thus Kellett's claim had long expired when the U. S. expeditions of 1881 landed and for the next five years Wrangel island was undoubtedly United States territory. But it in turn had likewise expired by more than a quarter of a century when the British flag was erected by the Karluk survivors in 1914, and the British claim of 1849 revived.

RICH LAND IN ARCTIC.

Vihjalmur Stefansson believes that the polar regions are a much misunderstood land. He believes they will one day prove commercially valuable, and when he returned from his latest expedition in 1918 he advised the Canadian Government to take immediate steps to confirm by occupancy their title to a number of Arctic islands to which the Canadian claim was up to then but nominal. The war had just ceased, however and the Canadian Government had immense financial liabilities to face and could see no immediate necessity for further explorations in the far north. But Stefansson looked at the map and feared the enterprise of Japan insofar as Wrangel Island was concerned. Failing to move the Canadian Government, he organized an expedition an expedition of his own and dispatched it to take possession of Wrangel Island in the name of the British King on behalf of Canada late in the summer of 1921.

Stefansson believed that once Wrangel Island had been claimed for Canada the Government would quickly recognize it as Canadian territory and relieve him of any further responsibility in the matter. It was arranged, however, that the party should spend the winter on the island and brought off by a ship which was to be sent for them the following summer. They would take a supply of provisions and whatever other effects they should require, but they were to depend for their main food supply upon the game resources of the country. Stefansson has been the champion of this form of exploration (living off the country) and Lorne Knight and Maurer were quite familiar with his methods. They would take with them a plentiful supply of ammunition and it was believed that they should have no trouble on the score of food.

In order to occupy themselves and also to help defray the expenses of the expedition, they were to devote their energies to the business of trapping foes and other fur-bearing animals there might be on the island. The polar bear, whose fur is also valuable, would provide a large part of their food. The seal and walrus would also supply a large part of their food requirements.

Clothing is an important factor in the north, and so far no improvements have been made upon Eskimo clothing. For this reason the Eskimo woman was engaged at Nome to accompany the party as seamstress. The Eskimo woman can sew a watertight seam, an art which the most skilled outsider is incapable of mastering.

They were landed at Wrangel Island by the Silver Wave, in September, 1921, and from that day to this no word has been received from or of them. Last summer, according to arrangement, Captain Joe Bernard, of the Teddy Bear, attempted to reach the island, but ice conditions were the worst in years, his propeller suffered from being buffeted against the ice, and he had to abandon the attempt. Reluctantly the little party on Wrangel Island were left to their lonely watch for another year.

Are they alive or dead?

There are two distinct points of view regarding the north, but as far removed one from the other as the two poles. One view, the one held by Stefansson and others who think as he does, that the north is an entirely livable place wherein are to be found all the requirements of life if one have but the skill and the desire to take advantage of Nature's provision.

The other school believes that men of southern climes invade the Arctic only at the perpetual risk of death from starvation or frost. Stefansson points to the Eskimos who have lived in the Arctic for thousands of generations without being dependent upon the corner grocery, and he has furthermore demonstrated that civilized men can do likewise, by doing so himself for a number of years. The others point to three centuries of Arctic eploration during which many hundreds of lives have been claimed by hunger and frost.

As far as is known the waters adjacent to Wrangel Island team with seals and walrus, and there should be polar bears both on the island and on the sea ice. The movement of the ice affects the supply of seals and walrus and also influences the relative ease with which they may be killed, but, generally speaking, most authorities agree that the supply of game should be sufficient to maintain a party such as that now on the island for an indefinite period if they go about their hunting properly and conserve their ammunition.

And here is a point upon which there is some doubt. It must have been known to the members of the party before they left Nome that ice conditions do not always allow of a landing on Wrangel Island, and they must surely have taken ample ammunition to do them for two years if necessary, but upon this point there does not seem to be any definite information. Then again, there is always the danger of ammunition being used too extravagantly the first season and in that way causing it to run short before the next year was up. But this is all conjecture.

There is always the possibility of accident or disease. Furthermore, it is well known by those who have lived in the far north for a winter that one of the hardest things in the world is for a small roup of men to live for a considerable length of time away from contract with other human beings and not develop a tendency to quarrel. This is the general experience and it is not casting aspersions on this particular party to suggest that therein lay one of their greatest dangers.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

A clergyman of Concord, N.H., in the United States, recently signed on a Transatlantic liner as an ordinary seaman for one voyage. He wanted to get to France to see the graves of his two brothers who were killed there, but had no funds from which to pay his way.

Another clergyman, this time at Hempstead, L.I., also in the United States, almost on the same day joined the local fire department. Whenever there is a fire at Hempstead in future this gentleman will be one of the fighters who will try to save life and property.

It seems to me that both of these gentlemen could do many things far worse than the ones I have described. Honest labor is dignified and sacred, and a little of it will work no harm to them in the least.

In fact, I am not sure that it will not do them a world of good. For one thing, it will put them once more in touch with the people in a more intimate way than preaching or visiting ever could do. There is, unfortunately, a tendency for clergymen to be slightly out of active touch with people, and to remain a little aloof. That is very bad. Clergymen who are counsellors to the people—ought to be thoroughly familiar with their life in every respect, don't you think ?

In fact, I am not sure that I would not like to see every clergyman in the world spend a few years at active physical toil. Indeed, to carry it further, why should not all classes of white-collar workers spend a short while at physicial toil? It would certainly help them to appreciate the millions who have to work with their hands, and perhaps go a long distance toward giving them some slight appreciation of and respect for the toiling millions.

*****

Speaking for myself, I have not done active physical work for some years—my work has consisted mainly of writing and reading. But I have toiled with my hands, and I am glad of it. Indeed, I have the determination that sometime I will go back to toiling with my hands. I know this: it was largely the work that I did with my hands, before I began whiting, that gave me the basis of my warm sympathy and respect for the workers of braw. When I see a man digging on the street, or pulling a fish out of the water, or toiling, I feel like taking my hat off to him.

Have you thought at all about that couplet that appears daily on the front page of the Advocate, on the top left-hand corner? "In every rank, or great or small, 'tis industry supports us all." I am afraid that a great many white-collared people don't realize the truth of Gay's words. And yet, where would we white-collared gentlemen be but for the men who toil on the sea, in the mine, on the farm, in the factory and workshop? Where would we be? We wouldn't be! We wouldn't exist, because people cannot live without food and clothing and shelter.

Of course, I wouldn't attempt to lessen the importance of the workers of brain. They, too, have their place. They, too, are needed in the scheme of things. The world needs directive ability.

But, at bottom, the workers of braw do the actual work. It is they who produce. Their labor is made more productive as a result of the directing of some managers, superintendents, industrial engineers, efficiency experts, etc., it is true. But even without those, the toilers would manage simehow to produce enough to feed, clothe and house themselves. But where would the directors be if the toilers gave up producing? They'd starve to death, or go to work themselves.

So, together, workers of hand and brain to the work of the world. They have a common cause, a common destiny. Between them there ought to be the warmest sympathy, and no natural friends.

The enemies of the workers of hand and brain are the loafers, the idlers. They are the drones, the parasites, the leeches. They toil not, neither do they spin—but somehow they appear to get their overflowing share of the good things of life. The workers of hand and brain should extend to those idlers and loafers no more sympathy or respect than they do now to rate and other kinds of vermin. A man who loafs thru life and lives on the labor of others is obviously a parasite.

The saddest thing about it all is that they who do the work of the world today seem to get least out of the product of their toil. They who do no work seem to get the most. As Henry George, the famous economist, said: "Go into any city in the world. Get aboard a cab and tell the driver to take you thru that part of the town where the workers live. He will take you to the poorest, most wretched section of that town. He will take you to the dirty streets, mean houses, evil-smelling surroundings. The people who live in those houses wear wretched clothes and eat wretched food. Yet they are the workers, the producers of wealth."

That condition of affairs has got to be remedied! The big problem that faces mankind is the problem of changing a state of affairs where they who produce the wealth of the world live in poverty, while they who do not work have more than is good for them, more than they can use.

The workers of this earth produce fabulous wealth. It is one of the marvels of the age, how much wealth is produced. Why, it is said that the world produces in one year enough to feed the world for ten years. Then where is the excuse for need, for poverty. Simply this: that we are living under an arrangement whereby the rich can become richer and the poor poorer.

That arrangement must assuredly be broken and a new, a more humane one put in its place!

This is one part, the main part, of the policy of the Fishermen's Protective Union. That is the task which the President and Founder of our Union set himself to accomplish back in 1908, the task at which he has toiled and slaved these fifteen years.

In Passing—

I have been favored with an epistle from some writer signing himself "Arthur English," who says he is a constant and appreciate reader of this column, for which I am highly gratified. I am surprised, though, that he has enquired of me concerning the mysteries of organic evolution, as my knowledge of the theory and of the enquirer had led me to believe that he was closely identified with the theory.

YESTERDAY AT THE HOUSE

Resolutions For Establishment of Pulp in St. Barbe District Passed — Minister of Marine Introduces Bill to Establish Direct Steam Service With West Indies.

Yesterday's session of the House was a busy one and one of the most important pieces of legislation of the present session was brought forward and discussed. Amongst the most important measures given consideration were resolutions granting to Malcolm Joseph Mooney, lumber man, a large area of timber land situated at Orange Bay in the Dist. of St. Barbe, where is is proposed to establish 100 ton pulp mill, actual construction of the mill to commence before November 30th in the present year. The lessee agrees to spend $300,000.00 in the construction work and the cutting of timber within 12 months from date.

The proposition of Harry J. Crowe to erect saw mills and a rossing plant in White Bay, and resolutions for the establishment of a regular steamship service between this country and the West Indies, were also discussed to some extent. The purport and scope of these resolutions may be fully obtained from a persual of the speech of Mr. Grimes, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the introducer of the resolutions, and published elsewhere in this issue. Following questions by Mr. Cashin re the rossing of wood on Government account; the cost of fire equipment purchased during 1922-23 and by Mr. Walsh who seeks a detailed statement of the number of special trains hired out by the Reid Nfld. Co. or the Railway Commission since July 1st. 1920 to date, Hon the Prime Minister moved the suspension of the Rules of the House for the balance of the season.

The House went into Committee of the whole on an agreement between the Government and Dr. M. J. Mooney re the erection and operation of a pulp mill at Orange Bay, Harbor Deep, St. Barbe.

The leader of the Opposition withdrew from taking any part in the discussion which might take place on these resolutions, as his firm was connected, in a professional capacity, with the promoter of the enterprize.

Mr. Sullivan wanted to know if a proper survey had been made of the areas described so that other parties holding Crown leases, may not be interfered with and claims for compensation be made against Government.

In reply the Prime Minister said those areas had reverted to the Crown because the license fees had not been paid. He also announced that the Government had determined to compel all parties now holding Crown lands, in any part of this country, for speculative purposes, to pay up their back fees and comply in other respects with the law. Within the last few days a notice to this effect had been served upon all holders of timber limits, and 30 days given the parties to settle up, otherwise the licenses would be cancelled.

Hon. the Prime Minister also informed the House that the properties now being granted, had been held by speculators who had not paid their rentals for a number of years. Seven or eight thousand dollars were due the Colony.

The Government had therefore cancelled the licenses and had given the land to men who were prepared to put up a pulp mill on it.

Mr. Sullivan congratulated the Government on their action. He hoped others who held land for speculation purposes would be treated in a like manner. Millions of acres of land were being held by speculators who dodged the payment of rentals and at the same time it was keeping development back.

The House then went into Committee on Government—Crowe agreement.

Mr. Higgins asked if the agreement could not be made binding on the contractor to erect pulp and paper mills on the S.W. Coast, instead of it being understood but not in the agreement. If he has the right to export pulp wood from the East Coast it ought to be made clear that he has to erect a mill on the South Coast. If Mr. Crowe is allowed to export pulp wood without operating mills then others are going to demand the same concessions.

The policy of the Government should be made clear. If, in sections where there was no water power, and the timber was unsuitable for manufacture into pulp and paper, a valuable asset was allowed to go to waste by rot and windfalls, the right to export same in the raw state was desirable and he thought it was; then the policy of the Government should be definitely stated, as others were even now, awaiting the decision of the Government to apply for similar concession. Heretofore the policy of the Government, in fact both sides of the House, had stood for the manufacture of the country's timber within the Colony.

The Prime Minister pointed out that the resolutions before the Chair should be considered irrespective of whether pulp and paper mills would be erected at Bay De Espoir. The unwritten law heretofore had been that our timber would be manufactured in the country, but with the exception of the A.N.D. Co. until 18 months ago no outside capitalists came in. True an operation had been started at Terra Nova, but this had been hung up indefinitely. It was now starting up again. The present areas in White Bay, where Mr. Crowe intended to operate were cut off from railway connection and so situated that the product could only be shifted six months in the year. There was no water power sufficient to operate a pulp mill, and he, the Prime Minister, felt under conditions, such as applied in the present case, we ought to permit the rossing and exportation of wood. Every particular application ought to be considered on its merits, and where it was abundantly clear meet the physicial conditions were such as to preclude any possibility of permanent industry in the nature of pulp or paper mills, then the Colony should get the benefit of the labor and export value of timber which otherwise will go to rot, windfalls or be eaten up as so frequently occurs in forest fires.

Mr. Walsh supported the idea, but contended that all others similarly situited as Mr. Crowe's areas were, should, if sought after, be given similar concessions.

Mr. Sullivan advise caution in the reversion of our policy, re the exportation of timber. Conditions of late have materiallyaltered. We have the Armstrong Whitworth Co. building a big pulp and paper mill at tide water at Humbermouth, then there was the prospect of another mill at Bay de Espoir. With the probability in a few years of paper reaching $100.00 a ton, Canada was now prohibiting the export of raw material. He considered a period of 25 years altogether too long to permit the export ation of rossed wood.

Sir William Coaker supported the resolution because he believed the granting of the concession would be the means of having the pulp and paper mills on the South West Coast become a reality in a very short time. The additional supply of timber which would be available from White Bay, in his opinion would induce the capitalists Mr. Crowe had interested to take up the enterprise very shortly. He was strongly opposed to the exportation of raw material as ever, but the present timber properties would never be developed otherwise.

There was more labor and better value to the Colony obtained from the sale of rossed wood than from saw lumber. His principal reason for supporting the present agreement was to make possible the pulp and paper mills on the S.W. Coast. The timber from White Bay would prove a feeder, and furnish the proposed mills with an adequate supply.

Mr. Grimes' speech introducing the West India Steam Service Bill appears elsewhere.

Mr Higgins complimented Mr. Grimes on the excellence of his first ministerial speech. It was not perhaps entirely visionary, but as it represented so radical a departure from regular lines, he thought it would be wise to first obtain the views of capable business men. He asked that time be given the Opposition to consider the resolutions.

Sir Michael Cashin and Mr. Walsh criticised the Bill with considerable detail, but the House as a whole received the measure favorably. It will be further and fully discussed at today's session.

Mr. Higgins asked for information respecting the Commission to investigate the reported scandals. The Prime Minister confirmed the statement already given in the press. Through His Excellency the Governor, a gentleman was being sought in England, who would undertake the investigation.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN re-introduced the matter of the railway and again urged the appointment of somebody responsible to the House to supervise operations. If not, some day you will be faced with a big scandal.

Mr. Warren admitted the justification of the Hon. gentleman's remarks and saw clearly the importance attaching to the point raised, but asked for time.

Mr. Woodford asked for an increase in pay for railroad section men, as he considered it unfair to them that they should be asked to work for less than the minimum allowed workmen on the Humber i.e., $2.50 a day. On the faithful performance by those men of the arduous labor of keeping the track in order lives depend as well as the efficiency of the service. Sections are undermanned as it is, only half the number of men being employed that the job requires.

Mr. Sullivan supporting the views of Sir Michael on railway matters likened the railway at present to a huge political machine to be manipulated for the benefit of the party. In the interest of the country some super vision should be exercised over the railway.

Mr. Higgins could not see that the Government can for a long time to come get the railway off its hands and for this reason urged the attention of the Prime Minister to the suggestions coming from the Opposition side of the House.

The House meet again this P.M. at 3 o'clock.

The millionaire cannot buy better nor even the poorest family use a flour that is more economical.

OBITUARY

MISS NELLIE JACKMAN

After suffering with patient fortitude for a lengthy period, the ravages of an incurable disease, the earthly existence of Nellie Jackman, beloved daughter of the late James Jackman, formerly of Bowring's terminated last evening, and her soul entered into eternal reward.

During her life the deceased young lady was well-known to the people of this city, particularly in the west end, and her cheery disposition made many friends for her who will miss her.

Always an active church worker, her demise will occasion much regret and the loss of her assistance will not be easily counteracted.

Left to mourn her are a mother, brother, and sister, to whom general sympathy is extended.

The funeral takes place to-morrow at 2.30 p.m., from her late residence, 28 Brien Street.

Big Increase In Railway Traffic

There has been a wonderful increase in railway traffic the past few weeks both as regards freight and passengers. The largest train to go out from St. John's for some time was the express which left at 1 o'clock today. Additional first class cars and an extra sleeper had to be put on to accommodate the outgoing passengers.

Gower St. Picnic Postponed

Scholars and teachers of Gower St. Sunday School, will hear with disappointment that the picnic set down for to-morrow has been unavoidably postponed till the following week. This is due to the inability of the railway management to supply the necessary car service. Just now, every available car is otherwise engaged.

The "Yankton" Due This Week

Messrs A. E. Hickman & Company were advised yesterday that the s.s. Yankton which was recently purchased to replace the Anna on the Boston-Halifax-St. John's service, left Boston on her first trip Sunday morning. The ship is capable of doing 14 knots and has recently been put in condition for passenger traffic.

The Yankton is bringing a large freight, but has no passengers this trip.

Burglars Active

On Sunday night the stores of Mr. Mark Pike, grocer, New Gower St., and Mr. John O'Keefe, Job Street, were broken into, apparently by the same person or persons. In each case a large quantity of goods was stolen but the burglars escaped without being detected.

The police have the matter in hand and are making investigations.

Summer School at Brigus

On Monday morning, August 6th, the Summer School was opened by Rev. Oliver Jackson, whose address proved to be a source of inspiration to all those attending, about forty in number.

The morning sessions began at 9 o'clock and were conducted by Rev. R. E. Fairbairn, his theme being "The Life and Teachings of Jesus."

The various sections were:

1—The Purpose and Spirit of Jesus.
2—The Background of Jesus' teaching.
3—The Law of the Kingdom.
4—The Scope of the Kingdom.
5—The future of the Kingdom.

At 10 o'clock the school was divided up for group study led by Rev. Oliver Jackson on "The Pupil," Rev. Dr. Darby on "The Teacher," Rev. Dr. Dunne on "The Organization and Administration of Sunday School." From 10.45 to 11.45 was spent in recreation.

Noonday talks were given by Mrs. S. H. Martin on her work in Manchuria. Miss Evelyn Rabbitts, Superintendent of the Primary Department, Brigus, whom we believe is a cracker-jack story-teller, gave a demonstration of the same, which was enjoyed by all.

The afternoon was devoted to outdoor hikes. On Tuesday afternoon a visit to the lighthouse was made which will never be forgotten. All came back ready to partake of a bountiful supper at the Cabot Hotel. On Wednesday afternoon, the weather being too inclement to go for a hike, we were favored with a lecture by Rev. R. E. Fairbairn, on "Esperanto."

On Thursday afternoon all attended the Brigus Garden Party.

On Friday afternoon, a delightful trip was made to Bull Cove, and on returning a very sumptuous supper awaited us at the school room, which had been prepared by the Brigus ladies. At the close a vote of thanks was proposed by Rev. R. E. Fairbairn and seconded by Dr. Martin, after which the school joined in topical songs.

The evening lectures were open to the public. Monday's was an informal talk by Dr. S. H. Martin. On Tuesday an illustrated lecture was given by Dr. Dunne: "A Trip to Palestine." On Wednesday, was an impromptu concert; on Thursday an illustrated lecture on "Japan" by Dr. Martin; and on Friday the illustrated lecture by Dr. Martin was "Our West China Mission."

Saturday morning brought to a close this delightful event. After votes of thanks had been proposed to the faculty it was decided that the Summer School would take place at Brigus again next year. Dear old Brigus, "She ain't got no style, but she's style all the while."—Com.

Nfld. Poultry Association

The August monthly meeting was held last night at 8 p.m., president G. R. Williams in the chair.

The usual routine business was dealt with. A deputation was appointed to interview the Department of Agriculture with a view to extending the work of the Association in encouraging Poultry culture more generally throughout the island through the Association's agencies for the benefit of the general public. A report was made of a visit by some of the members to the poultry farm of Mr. Leonard Earle, who is raising a thousand chickens this yeas, besides a quantity of ducks. Mr. Earle intends going into poultry raising on an extensive scale and next winter will have some two hundred eggs a day for the city market.

Mr. Earle figures a profit of three dollars a year per hen, and the Association wishes him every success. The meeting discussed the matter of the annual show which will likely be held the last week of November. It is hoped to arrange to give an illustrated lecture each evening on poultry culture, on the three nights of the Show.

Bell Island will likely have their annual show in November also, as usual, and President Hughes and his Wabana committee are making every effort to make it one of the best ever held.

Demand for fresh eggs is extra heavy now, due to the diminishing supply as the fowl are moulting and the egg yield is falling off. The 1923 pullets will not be laying until November and December.

PUBLIC NOTICE

Seal Cove Bridge on the Main Line, Harbor Main District, is closed to all traffic pending constructing or repairs, until further notice. Seal Cove Road from Lance Cove to Indian Pond must be used in the meanwhile.

FEARFUL TRAGEDY IN WYOMING

Mine Explosion Kills More Than 100

RUPTURE BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE IS IMMINENT

Hundreds Are Killed As Rioting Continues

German Provinces Scenes of Disorder and Death.

LONDON, Aug. 14—A Central News despatch says that the Communists stormed the town hall at Aladorf, 8 miles north of Aix la Chapelle, with hand grenades, and that one hundred were killed or wounded.

LONDON, Aug. 14—Hamburg was the scene of further rioting to-day with many killed or wounded, according to a Central News despatch from Berlin.

Communists gained the upper hand at Wilhelmsburg, near Hamburg, disarming the military and taking control of the town.

DUSSELDORFF, Aug. 14—Reports to German newspapers from Aix la Chapelle say fifteen persons were killed and more than fifty wounded in the rioting there.

BERLIN, Aug. 14—With later reports indicating an increase in mob disturbances throughout Germany, Chancellor Stressmann and his government were faced with another anxious period this morning.

During the night rumors came that twenty persons had been killed in Hanover and fifteen in Zeitz, Saxony. Rioting was also said to be in progress in Niesse, Silesia.

The city of Hamburg, by proclamation of the Senate is virtually under martial law as the result of a serious clash between strikers and the police.

President Erbert sent a message to former Chancellor Cuno, thanking him for his services to the country.

HELD ENJOYABLE DANCE

The dance in the Star of the Sea Hall last evening was very largely attended and proved to be a decided success. The music was furnished by the Star Jazola Orchestra and was up to the usual standard, and each item received a hearty encore.

Entente May Not Survive

French Are Taking Pending Diplomatic Upheaval Calmly—Reply To British Note Will Be Sent Before Week-end.

PARIS, Aug. 14—The French reply to Lord Curzon's note on reparations will be probably sent before the end of the week.

Although it is no longer assumed in official circles here that the Entente may survive the present difficulties, the situation is taken with perfect calm in Government circles as well as by the press and the public.

The French have in fact long considered the Entente virtually defunct so far as it concerns co-operation between Great Britain and France on the application of the terms of the British Treaty of Versailles. Lord Curzon's note is taken merely as recognition of the fact by the British Government with the aim of throwing the responsibility for the rupture on France.

GERNANY HAS BEST CABINET SINCE BIRTH OF REPUBLIC

Stressmann's Government Gets Vote of Confidence From Reichstag.

BERLIN, Aug. 14—A vote of confidence came after Dr. Stressmann informed the Chamber that Germany required complete restoration rights in occupied territory, as essential to the abandonment of passive resistance, the setting free of all Germans imprisoned in districts occupied by the French and Belgians, and permission for the return of those who have been sent out of the occupied area, also were made conditions for the cessation of passive resistance.

Dr. Stressmann declared that the change in the government was not a sign of weakness on the part of Germany, on the contrary, the change had brought into being the strongest cabinet as regards opposition to any idea of permitting violation of Germany, that the country had since the Republic was formed.

The Chancellor said that passive resistance was deeply rooted in the firm conviction of its justice, this he declared had been unequivocally recognized by the British, and he assumed this statement of the British conception would find echo in France and Belgium.

BERLIN, Aug. 14—Chancellor Stressmann's new cabinet was given a vote of confidence to-day by the Reichstag. Two hundred and forty deputies out of a total of three hundred and forty-one balloted in favor of the government.

Arms Ship Is Captured

TRIESTE, Aug. 14—One million rifles, three thousand machine guns and 24 mountain batteries, constituted the cargo of the steamer Vulcan and consigned to the government of Jugo-Slavia has been confiscated by the Italian authorities.

The war material was part of Italian war stock which had been purchased by foreigners and resold to Jugo-Slavia.

Motor Coach Plunges To Destruction With Many Passengers.

LOURDES, France, Aug. 14—Twenty-three persons were killed and seven probably fatally injured yesterday, when a motor coach, filled with excursionists, plunged down a 250-foot embankment in the Pyrennes mountains near St. Saveur.

The accident occurred near the Napoleon Bridge which crosses the rushing torrent. The driver in attempting to avoid striking a woman who was emerging from the bushes, swerved the machine sharply in the narrow road that skirts the precipice and the coach turned completely over and crashed to the bottom of the ravine.

Passengers leaving St. John's on Thursday's express will connect with the s.s. Home at Humbermouth for the usual ports of call on the Straits service.

The Watuka, Capt. Holmes arrived at Clarenville yesterday with coal for the Railway Co.

Legislative Council

The Council met at 4 p.m.

On motion of Sir M. G. Winter the house went into Committee of the whole on Electric Light and Power Bill and after some discussion in which Hons. M. P. Gibbs, Sir P. T. McGrath, Sir M. G. Winter, J. J. Murphy, W. J. Ellis and M. Power in which the establishment of a Public Utilites Commission was urged, owing to the exorbitant rates which are charged for electricity by the Reid Company. Hon. J. J. Murphy gave some interesting figures as to the cost, and intimated that his company would not be increasing their rates when they finally reach the city. After the various opinions had been expressed Sir M. P. McGrath moved that in view of the importance of the Bill that it be referred to a Select Committee.

The House then went into Committee of the whole on the shipbuilding Bill, which was passed without amendment.

Mine Explosion Entombs Workers

104 Are Dead; Few Have Been Rescued.

KEMMERER, Wyoming, Aug. 14—One hundred and thirty-five miners, in number one mine of the Kemmerer Coal Company were entombed this morning following an explosion in the lower levels, about a mile into the earth.

Rescuers this evening are making progress but several hours would be necessary before anything definite could be known of the fate of the miners. The body of one pump man has been discovered and later, relief men are reported to have recovered six more bodies.

Fire is raging in the lower levels and experts in mine works said they saw little hope of rescuing the men alive.

A later report from the scene of the disaster, says that rescue workers last night brought out alive thirty-four of the 138 miners entombed by the blast.

It is feared 104 men perished.

The schoner Andreas has sailed from Rose Blanche for Gibraltar for orders taking 3035 qtls of codfish shipped by E. Pike.

Passengers leaving St. John's on Thursday's express will connect with the s.s. Home at Humbermouth for the usual ports of call on the Straits service.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER VI.

Caleb Brent, looking twenty years older than when Donald had seen him last, sat in an easy chair by the window gazing with lack-luster eyes out across the bight. He was hopelessly crippled with rheumatism, and his sea-blue eyes still held the same lost-dog wistfulness.

"Hello, Caleb!" Donald greeted him cordially. I've just cleaned up the Sawdust Pile for you. You're back in undisputed possession again."

He shook hands with old Caleb and sat down in a chair which Nan drew up for him.

"It's good of you to call, Donald," the old man piped. "Put isn't that just like him, Nan?" he demanded. "Many's the day—aye, and the night too, for of late the nights have been bad here—we've thought of you, sir, and wished you were back in Port Agnew. We knew what would happen to those scoundrels when Mr. Donald got around to it." And he laughed the asthmatic, contented chuckle of the aged as Ned related briefly the story of Donald's recent activities.

Their conversation which followed was mostly of a reminiscent character—recollections of boat-races in the bight, fishing excursions off the coast, clambakes, new boats, a dog which Donald had given to Nan when he left for prep school and which had since died of old age. And all the while Nan Brent's child stood by Donald's knee gazing up at him adoringly.

During a lull in the conversation, he created some slight embarrassment by reiterating his belief that this strange man must be his father, and appealed to his mother for verification of his suspicions.

Poor child! His baby mind had but lately grasped the fact that for him there was something missing in the scheme of life, and, to silence his persistent questioning, Nan had told him that some day his father would come to see them; whereupon, with the calm faith of innocence, he had posted himself at the front gate, to be in position to receidve this beloved missing one when the latter one should appear. Donald skilfully diverted the child's mind from this all-consuming topic by sliding the boy down to his foot and permitting him to swing gently there.

Presently Nan excused herself, for the purpose of looking after the embers of Donald's recent raid. The instant the door closed behind her, old Caleb Brent looked across at his visitor.

"You've heard of course, Mr. Donald?" he queried, with a slight inclination of his head toward the door through which his daughter had disappeared.

"Yes, Caleb. Misfortunes come in various guises."

"I would I could die," the pitiful old fellow whispered. "I soon will, but, oh, what will my poor darling do then, Mr. Donald? After we first came here, I was that prosperous, sir you wouldn't believe it. I gave Nan a good schooling, piano lessons, and fine dresses. We lived well, and yet we put by a thousand dollars in six years. But that's all gone now, what with the expenses when the baby came, and my sickness that's prevented me from working. Thank God, sir I have my three-quarter pay. It isn't much, but we're rent-free, and fuel costs us nothing, what with driftwood and the waste from Darrow that comes down the river. Nan has a bit of kitchen-garden and a few chickens—so we make out. But when I die, my navy-pay stops."

He paused, too profoundly moved by consideration of the destitution that would face Nan and her nameless boy to voice the situation in words. But he looked up at Donald McKaye, and the latter saw again that witful look in his eyes—the dumb pleading of a kind old lost dog. He thought of the thirty-eight-foot sloop old Caleb had built him—a thing of beauty and wondrously seaworthy; of the sense of obligation which had caused old Brent to make his task a labor of love; of the long, lazy, happy days when with Caleb and Nan for his crew he had raced out of the bight twenty miles to sea and back again for the sheer delight of driving his lee rail under till Nan cried out in apprehension.

Poor sweet Nan Brent! Donald had known her through so many years of gentleness and innocence—and she had come to this! He was consumed with pity for her. She had fallen but—there were depths to which destitution and desperation might still drive her, just as there were heights to which she might climb again if some half-man would but give her a helping hand.

"Do you know the man, Caleb?" he remanded suddenly.

"No, I do not. I have never seen him. Nan wrote me when they were married, and told me his name, of course."

"Then there was a marriage, Caleb?"

"So Nan wrote me."

"Ah! Has Nan a marriage certificate?"

"I have never seen it. Seems their marriage wasn't legal. The name he gave wasn't his own; he was a bigamist."

"Then Nan knows his real name."

"Yes; when she learned that, she came home."

"But why didn't she prosecute him, Caleb? She owed that to herself and the child—to her good name and—"

"She had her reasons, lad."

"But you should have prosecuted the scoundrel, Caleb."

"I had no money for lawyers. I knew I was going to need it all for Nan and her child. And I thought her reasons sufficient, Donald. She said it would all come out right in the end. Maybe it will."

Do you mean she knowingly accepted the inevitable disgrace when she might have——" He wanted to add, "proved herself virtuous," but somehow the words would not come. They didn't appear to him to be quite fair to Nan.

The old man nodded.

"Of course we haven't told this to anybody else," he hastened to add. "'Twould have been useless. They'd have thought it a lie."

"Yes, Caleb—a particularly clumsy and stupid lie."

Caleb Brent looked up suddenly and searched, with an alert and wistful glance, the face of the young laird of Tyee.

"But you do not think so, do you?" he pleaded.

"Certainly not, Caleb. If Nan told you that, she told you the truth."

"Thank you, lad."

"Poor old Caleb," Donald soliloquised, "you find it hard to believe it yourself, don't you? And it does sound fishy!"

"I don't believe it's Nan's fault," Donald found himself saying next. "She was always a good girl, and I cant look at her now and conceive her as anything else but virtuous and womanly. I'll always be a good friend of hers, Caleb. I'll stand back of her and see that she gets a square deal—she and her son. When you're gone, she can leave Port Agnew for some city where she isn't known, and as 'Mrs. Brent' she can engage in some self-supporting business. It always struck me that Nan had a voice."

"She has, Donald. They had grand opera in Seattle, and I sent her up there to hear it and having a singing teacher hear her sing 'Alice Where Art Thou.' He said she'd be earning a thousand dollars a night in five years, Mr. Donald, if somebody in New York could train her. That was the time," he concluded, "that she met him! He was rich and, I suppose, full of fine graces; he promised her a career if she'd marry him, and so he dazzled the child—she was only eighteen—and she went to San Francisco with him. She says there was some sort of a marriage, but he gave her no gift as I gave her mother—a marriage certificate. She wrote me she was happy, and asked me to forgive her the lack of confidence in not advising with me—and of course I forgave her, and one night the door yonder opened and Nan come in and put her arms round my neck and held me tight, with never a tear—so I knew she's cried her fill long since and was in trouble." He paused several seconds, then added, "Her mother was an admiral's daughter—and she married me!" He appeared to suggest this latter as a complete explanation of woman's frailty.

"The world is small, but it is sufficiently large to hide a girl from the Sawdust Pile of Port Agnew. Of course, Nan cannot leave you now, but when you leave her, Caleb, I'll finance her for her career. Please do not worry about it."

"I'm like Nan, sir," he murmured. "I'm beyond tears, or I'd weep, Mr. Donald. God will reward you, sir. I can't begin to thank you."

"I'm glad of that. By the way, who is towing the garbage barge to sea nowadays?"

"I don't know, sir. Mr. Daney hired somebody else and his boat when I had to quit because of my sciatica."

Hereafter we'll use your boat, Caleb, and engage a man to operate it. The rental will be ten dollars a trip two trips a week, eighty dollars a month. Cheap enough; so don't think it's charity. Here's the first month's rental in advance. I'm going to run along now, Caleb, but I'll look in from time to time, and if you should need me in the interim, send for me."

He kissed little Don Brent, who set up a prodigious shriek at the prospect of desertion and brought his mother fluttering into the room. He watched her soothe the youngster and then asked.

"Where do you keep the arnica now? I cut my knuckles on that yellow rascal."

She raised a sadly smiling face to his.

"Where would the arnica be —if we had any, Donald?" she demanded.

"Where it used to be, I suppose. Up on that shelf, inside the casement of that funny old half-portion grandfather's clock and just out of reach of the pendulum."

"You do remember, don't you? But it's all gone so many years ago, Donald. We haven't had a boy around to visit us since you left Port Agnew, you know. I'll put some tincture of iodine on your knuckles, however."

"Do, please, Nan."

"Do you remember, Nan, the day I struck my finger into the cage of old Mrs. Biddle's South American parrott to coddle the brute and he all but chewed it off?"

She nodded.

"And you came straight here to have it attended to, instead of going to a doctor."

The Late President of the United States

r. Warren Harding brought to the Presidency an infinite patience and kindness in dealing with public questions and men, which enabled him to handle the problems of government without the stress and worry which had handicapped many of his predecessors.

Whatever else historians may say of him there probably will be little dispute that few chief executives came to office in peace time facing problems more complex in their nature or greater in number. All international affairs were unbalanced as never before, with many principal settlements of the Great War still to be effectuated. At home the work of reconstruction had only just begun, with business depressed, agriculture prostrate and unemployment general.

How Mr. Harding measured up to the task before him must be left to the historian, but his friends said that coming to the Presidency as he did with an open mind, a desire for counsel and an intimate knowledge of the processes of government acquired in his services in the Senate, he was the type of man needed for the job at such a time.

Preaching upon every occasion the doctrine of Americanism, he set h is face resolutely against "Entangling Alliances." While thus adhering to what he was pleased to term the principles of the founding fathers, he nevertheless lent the moral assistance of the government in the efforts to heal up the wounds of the world.

That influence was once declared by him to be not inconsiderable, and so America under his guidance had a prominent though it was in the main, in effecting the settlements of many vexing world questions. Its chief contribution was the Washington Arms Conference at which the principal powers covenanted to limit the size of their navies and thus lift from the weary peoples the burden of maintaining the race for naval supremacy.

Along with the proffer of counsel in effecting world settlements went an insistance that American rights be recognized. In polished phrase, he wrote a directness of expression that was not to be misconstrued, the world was given to understand from the very first of the Harding administration that the United States, freely respecting the rights of the other nations, asked for herself only that to which she was entitled in simple justice, and that she could accept nothing less.

While in his dealings with Congress Mr. Harding preferred the role of counsellor rather than dictator, he speedily removed any doubt that his gift of patience denoted any lack of purpose once he had charted a course. Thus he told Congress that soldiers' bonus legislation either should carry the means of financing or be postponed, and when the legislators put aside his advice he promptly vetoed the bill they sent him.

His tenacity of purpose was further exemplified in his continual pounding for economy in public expenditures and again in his insistence that Congress pass the merchant marine aid bill with a view to curtailing the continual drain which the operation of the war-built commercial fleet had become upon the Treasury. His greatest single effort in the field of domestic legislation was in behalf of this measure.

Not infrequently Mr. Harding was called upon to play the role of peace maker in governmental affairs. He intervened in a dispute between Congress and the Treasury as to the form general tax revision was to take, and the program he approved was carried out in the main with a reduction of more than half a billion in the nation's tax burden.

Likewise, his counsel settled the long controversy between the House and Senate on the question of American valuat ion in the tariff law. He proposed in its place a flexible tariff arrangement under which the Tariff Commission was given authority with his approval to increase or lower rates within prescribed limitations. Upon signing the bill, the President declared it constituted the greatest tariff reform in American history.

Mr. Harding came of hardy pioneer stock. He was born at Blooming Grove, Morrow County, Ohio, November 2, 1865, the son of a country doctor, George T. Harding. Like most country boys he went to country school between morning and night chores and later attended college at Iberia, Ohio. He tried school teaching for a year, but having had a smell of printer's ink while sticking type for his college paper, the lure drew him into the newspaper field.

His family meantime had moved to Marion, in an adjourning county, where he obtained his first newspaper job, and where his life interests were centered thereafter. Mr. Harding's ambition was to become a publisher, and it was realized at the age of 19 when he bid in the MARION STAR at a sheriff's sale. The paper was purchased under a heavy mortgage and his friends have often said that the struggles and hardships which were his in making this paper a success had much to do in fashioning his character and developing a broad patience and tolerance which were his chief characteristics.

Whatever his other attainments, Mr. Harding's greatest pride was in his professional accomplishments and training as printer, editor and publisher. Nor did the interests and exacting duties of his high office serve to dull his delight in pottering about a composing room. On his first trip back home after his inauguration, he went to the STAR office pulled off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, borrowed a chew of tobacco and helped "make up" the paper. His luck charm was a printer's rule, carried always in a vest pocket.

As his ambition had carried him into the ranks of publishers, so his fancy took him into the realm of politics. From the first he was an ardent partison, and his insistence upon wearing a "stove pipe" hat, the badge of support of James G. Blaine, while a reporter on a Democratic newspaper brought him a sharp reprimand from his chief, who held it to be inconsistent for a worker on a Democratic paper to so prominently display the symbol of his Republicianism.

The future President's ability as a stump speaker won him early recognition from his local party leaders. Marion County then was in the Democratic column and he undertook to switch it to the Republican party, but his first effort at office on his party ticket resulted in a defeat, though he commanded an unexpected vote.

Mr. Harding's first political office was that of Ohio State Senator, to which he was elected at the age of 34. He served two terms and later was elected Lieutenant Governor of his state. In 1910 he sought the Governorship, but was defeated. Four years later he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served six years, much of the time as a member of the important Foreign Relations Committee. From this place he was elected to the Presidency, the first Senator to be elected Chief Executive.

Early in his years of political service he met William McKinley, to whom his close friends have most often likened him, and with whom he had in common a predominant passion for obligation of class and sectional lines. A friendship sprang up between the two men. Mr. Harding also was close in later days to Theodore Roosevelt, Senators Foraker and Penrose and others high in his party counsels.

The President was a life-long Baptist and was a trustee of his home church in Marion. He also had been a member of the Elk and Moose fraternities for years, and after his election as President he became a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner.

Golf was his favorite recreation, but he also liked to fish, although his opportunities for that sport was limited after he came to the White House. He played hard and possessed the faculty of putting all his worries behind him during his recreation hours.

Paderewski In Paris

PARIS, July 10 (AP)—Ignace Jan Paderewski, the famous Polish pianist and composer, received one of the heartiest welcomes accorded him since his return to the concert stage when he appeared before a Paris audience recently. Thousands of people thronged to see him pass on his way to the theatre, and he was again besieged when the concert, a benefit affair, was concluded.

The French press re-told at great length the story of how the noted artist was expelled from Russia years ago by Emperor Alexander III, after Paderewski had played before the court.

"You are a great artist, and an honor to Russia," the emperor is reported to have said.

"Pardon, Your Majesty," replied Paderewski. "To Poland."

The next day the pianist received an order to leave Russia, and he had never returned since.

The newspapers here also mentioned the fact that on the day of his first concert, Paderewski drove to the theatre box office and purchased nearly a hundred seats at regular prices, which he distributed among his friends.

His only request to the management was that he be given a dressing room, so that he could let his hands soak in very hot water for half an hour before the concert. He explained that he had found this the best way to make them supple.

DEATH OF TUBERCULOSIS AUTHORITY

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 6.—The death of Dr. Rutherford, an international authority on tuberculosis in animals, has brought to the attention of Canadian mothers the debt they owe him for his unceasing work to prevent infection by bovine tuberculosis. His intrest in this particular form of community help came through a sorrowful experience of his own.

The little son on which his hopes were centered, contracted the disease from a cow which had been bought by the doctor with the special design of giving the child the benefit of one cow's milk. This was long before the days of tested cows and the beautiful animal that was supposed to bring life and strength to the little child brought death instead. Out of his own sorrow and loss came Dr. Rutherford's resolve that other children should be protected and in years when many people were not only careless, but regarded the danger of infection as more or less of a fad, he worked and spoke unceasingly of the need of protecting both children and adults from this great danger.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 15th, 1923.

THE BEST MUST BE DONE QUICKLY

It was not expected that all men requiring work would obtain it on the Humber. It was expected that the Humber operations would materially assist the country over a very trying period, made more so by a bad fishery.

When it is considered that over 2000 men are already employed on this new industry who would, otherwise, have no other employment during the past months, it will be agreed that we have something to be thankful for and that the Government's policy has been justified to a great extent.

It is not only the matter of actual employment on the Humber. Large numbers of men are assisted in the activities arising from the operations in the way of handling importations, transhipping or transporting them, and in various sub-contracts here and there. At the same time, there are lots of people, and we are of the number, who think the best is not being done.

With an average fishery, the employment of 2000 men on a new industry would, with our ordinary industries in operation, provide employment for most of the people requiring work just now. The blank fishery in many sections has compelled people to look elsewhere for their means of livelihood and we are confronted with the situation of men seeking work on the Humber, where now no further work is obtainable.

The Armstrong-Whitworth & Company have advised that these men will have to be sent back to their homes. This is poor consolation to those who face the winter with nothing earned at the fishery; and it certainly devolves on somebody to see that every effort has been made on the Humber for employment of men, and, if not, to have more speed injected into operations.

The urgency of the times demands it, and we think the Company would co-operate in any possible way to make the project a great salvation for the laborers in this present year.

In the opinion of some, if the plant is to be established in two years, it will be necessary to widen present operations and surely no time will be more opportune for extensive effort than within the next few months.

It has been suggested that all members of the Assembly make a visit to the scene of operations and have consultation with the Company on the spot, which would give members a better grasp of the works and may have good results to labourers.

After a few months, industrial activities may be calculated to ease employment needs; for with Bell Island, Grand Falls, Bishop Falls, Terra Nova, Lomond and the White Bay (H. J. Crowe) and Orange Bay (M. J. Mooney) and other pitprop and private contracts, there will be more people employed at home than in any year in the history of the country.

What is needed now is preparation and action. We must see that the best is done quickly.

INSURANCE RATES ARE TOO HIGH

When St. John's got a greatly improved water service at a considerable cost to the taxpayers there was forecasted, if not actually promised, a reduction in fire insurance rates for city policyholders. No such reduction took place. The public paid out of their own pockets to minimize the risk taken by insurance companies and to enhance their profits by cutting down their losses on destructive fires, but the insurance companies did not recognize the obligation to the extent of a single cent.

Next, the Government imports an up-to-date fire fighting apparatus, including motor trucks, pumper and aerial ladder, further cutting down insurance companies' risks. There was an idea that the insurance companies themselves had voluntarily donated part of this equipment, but this was not so. The Government now intend to make the Companies pay for the pumper and aerial ladder, the cost of which was $30,000, by increasing their tax by one quarter of one per cent. for a period of years sufficient to accumulate the amount expended. The companies, or some of them, strenuously object to this legislation. Their contention is that they should neither reduce their rates nor pay for the apparatus that is saving them money on their policies. The possibility, nay the probability, was suggested by Mr. Higgins in the House last evening that the companies might add this quarter of one per cent. extra tax to the amount of policyholders' premiums, but another of the St. John's representatives, Mr. Fox, contended that not alone should there be legislation prohibiting the fire insurance companies from increasing their rates, but that legislation should be enforced to make them reduce the rates in view of the greatly improved protection against fire which the better water system and the up-to-date apparatus constitute.

It seems beyond argument that fire insurance companies doing business in this city are not giving their policyholders a "square deal."

"THE UNION LUCK"

Our Union readers will have read with much satisfaction the good reports received by Sir Wm. Coaker concerning Labrador and Straits vessels outfitted from Port Union and captained by outstanding F.P.U. men.

Many of these vessels have arrived at their home ports, several have already discharged at Port Union and some are on the way there. The last to be heard from is Capt. Gideon Bown (son of Messach Bown, well known Union veteran,) who in the schooner James Jones has arrived with 1200 quintals at Badger's Quay.

It is widely thought, thanks to the political propaganda of opponents, that the Union Trading Company is solely a cash business and we know of St. John's gentleman who were convinced of this, until they visited Port Union and saw for themselves.

The truth is the Union Tradin Company is one of our very largest outfitting firms. This fact, combined with President Coaker's efforts in boosting the price of fish, makes the Union Trading Company the greatest commercial factor for good in the whole country.

Canadian Press on Pres Harding's Death

PRINCE ALBERT HERALD.

"The United States mourns the loss of its first citizen and the world one who was its friend in the widest sense of the term. The death of President Harding will be received with universal regret. An apostle of international peace and an energetic worker for its establishment, his sudden death is a distinct blow to humanity."

EDMONTON JOURNAL.

"Brilliant was not an adjective that anyone thought of using in discussing Mr. Harding or anything that he did. It was his quiet force and his envious sincerity that brought him such a measure of popular spirit.

"That such an extended journey made greater demands upon him than should he required of a man is now all too clear."

SASKATOON STAR.

"When the record of his own work is written, it may well be that his contributions to international friendship and peace will seem his principal claim to fame. Fearless of a possible split in the ranks of his party, he stuck by his conviction that America could not remain a spectator of European decay."

VANCOUVER DAILY WORLD.

"The sympathy of all Canadians, and particularly those who met the President in Vancouver, will go out to Mrs. Harding and the members of her bereaved family. Equally, but in a different way, they will be tendered to the people of the United States.

"With the inexpressibly serious conditions in Europe at the present time the sudden death of the President is tragic. It is quite as much so to European nations as the United States."

MOOSE JAW EVENING TIMES.

"The sudden and, what to the human mind appears to be the untimely death of President Harding, removes from the world one of its great peace-makers. His death is a world loss, but, outside of the United States itself, it will be felt nowhere more keenly than in Canada, following, as it does, closely upon the precedent he made in honoring us with a good-will visit."

WINNIPEG TRIBUNE.

'The expressions of sorrow and sympathy which have been flashed from Canada and all parts of the British Empire to a bereaved nation and family, mourning the death of President Harding, are no empty formalities. They are from the heart. No one realized more than the late President that the English speaking peoples must through their united efforts provide the main safeguards for the preservation of peace. In that thought he patiently labored and in that service he died."

OTTAWA CITIZEN.

"There will be various estimates of Warren Harding's eminence in the gallery of American Presidents and the nearness of his demise, the poignancy of the circumstances surrounding it and the fact that all had been led to believe that he was well on the road to normal health again, will perhaps tend to induce an impulse to extol too highly the many admirable characteristics of the man. But this may be said of Mr. Harding, he was one of the people. In him were embodied those virtues and qualities which are believed to make for ideal citizenship.

"Despite the prophecy of those of little faith, President Harding proved himself a capable executive. If he had not the brilliance of some few of his predecessors, he had the more substantial gift of being able to meet with unfailing calm and ready resource the diverse problems which came before him."

Lord Byng, Governor General, sent the following message of condolence to Mrs. Harding, yesterday.

"Please accept the deepest sympathy of myself and Lady Byng in the sad loss of your husband, President Harding."

It was announced that the Canadian Government was sending President Calvin Coolidge, through the usual diplomatic channels, a formal message of condolence in the Republic's loss of its chief executive.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

How Volcanoes Save the World.

Volcanoes, although often referred to as burning mountains, in reality do not burn at all. Neither are they mountains in the true sense of the term.

The scientific definition of a volcano is "an opening in the earth's crust, through which heated matter is thrown up from the earth's interior to the surface, where it usually forms a hill, more or less conical in shape, and generally with a hollow or crater at the top."

Where eruption frequently occur, the heated materials forced upwards pile themselves to heights which cause them to be classed as mountains.

Which looks like fire belching forth is merely the reflection of the molten lava on the clouds of steam which hang over the crater. The steam itself is often wrongly spoken of as smoke.

The cause of volcanic action is not known. The most popular theory is that it is brought about by water getting into the white-hot furnace below the earth's crust. In support of this fact is cited that nearly all the most active volcanoes are close to the sea.

olcanoes are really safety-valves. Without them we could hardly have existed at all, for scientists say it is due to volcanic action that the continents emerged from the sea. Earthquakes, which are usually more terrible in their effects than volcanoes, would occur much more frequently but for these safety-valves.

Between six hundred and seven hundred volcanoes have been counted in various parts of the world, and of these two hundred and seventy are still on the active list. Vesuvius was silent for over two thousand years before it suddenly woke up and in a few hours, destroyed Pompeii. Etna is known to have been active as far back as 500 B.C. In 1186 it destroyed 15,000 people, since then at varying intervals, it has been the scene of a number of disasters.

Harnessing the Steam Power.

In Italy and in some of the volcanic islands of the Pacific the steam power issuing from volcanoes has been harnessed for engineering purposes. The people of the Tuscan town of Lardello light their streets, heat their homes and do their cooking by means of volcanic steam pressure, which generates enough of heat to cook a joint in less than half an hour.

In another district in Italy volcanic energy is exploited for the purpose of making electricity, which is supplied to many towns, some of them more than fifty miles distant. The steam is carried through pipes to huge boilers, where its heat converts water into still more steam which drives the dynamos and provides central heating in many houses. Similar installations are being erected in other parts of Italy, and the future may see that country become a vast electric power station, supplying electricity to half Europe.

The great spectacular volcano of Kilauea, in Hawaii, is to be made to justify its existence in the same way. The crater of Kilauea is a vast lake of molten lava, and this will be harnessed to supply the Haawiian community with light, heat and power.

The time may be not for distant when the largest and most active volcanoes, instead of being a dreaded menace to the safety of man, will contribute materially to his happiness and comfort.

Man's Faithful Friend

"Oh horse you are a wonderful thing; no buttons to push, no horn to honk; you start yourself, no clutch to slip; no spark to miss, no gears to strip; no license-buying every year, with plates to screw on front and rear; no gas bills climbing up each day, stealing the joy of life away; no speed cops chugging in your rear, yelling summons in your ear. Your inner tubes are all O.K., and you can thank your stars they stay that way; your spark plugs never miss and fuss; your motor never makes us cuss. Your frame is good for many a mile; your body wants are few and easy met; you've some thing on the auto yet."—Ranger H. R. Elliott, in the American Forestry Magazine.

A Gigantic Sword Fish.

A gigantic Sword Fish, weighing nearly half a ton, caused a panic in Montaug Bay, N.Y., when, maddened by a lance thrust, it turned on its attackers and demolished a fishing boat by cutting most of the bottom away, throwing the crew into the water. Ignoring the struggling men, the monster charged other boats in the vicinity and sent them scampering in all parts of the bay. Finally a fisher man put out in a power trawler and succeeded in killing the fish after ten minutes of shooting.

A Strong Man?

Italy is a land of level railway crossings. Very few roads go over or under. Hitherto each crossing had its signalman, who closed the gates ten minutes before the train was due, to the despair of motorists, who often had to wait half an hour for a late train. Now Mussolino in a fierce attempt at economy has abolished signal men and gates and left the public to look out for themselves. Hoy will it answer? There are many more ox-carts than autos in Italy.

Kick The Bucket.

Did you ever hear the expression: "Kick the bucket." It arose in the days of the great gold rush to California and Australia in 1849-51. Many unfortunate seekers after gold, losing all in an unavailing effort to find the precious "dust", committed suicide. The suicide tied a rope to a beam in his hut. Then, standing on an upturned bucket, he would adjust the other end of the rope round his neck. When all was ready he simply kicked the bucket from under his feet.

It Was Humble.

Henry Ford as hollowed President Harding an other successful men in purchasing the home of his boyhood. Henry has made his old home just as it was when he was a little bare legged boy coming to his mother to have her mend a tear in his pants. The same old furniture; even the same clock on the mantlepiece he has put there in memory of his darling mother. If only Henry could bring her back as she was then, he would give all his millions.

If you are a Buddist monk and you die, they bury part of you and embalm the rest of you in honey and burn you. If you have been especially saintly, your bones will be pounded down, made into a paste and moulde into an image of the Buddha, to be placed in the monestry.

The Tree of Life.

GOOD-BYES.

When MEN say good-bye
To each other,
They PART—
But when WOMEN say good-bye
To each other,
They stand for a LONG TIME
Talking—
When an "AFFAIRE" ends,
And a MAN says good-bye,
It is the FINISH—
At least, he THINKS it is;
But the only finish
WOMEN recognize is DEATH,
And some do not regard
Even that—as FINAL.
ALL WOMEN are born
Boomerangs—
They always COME BACK;
Sometimes from cussedness,
Sometimes from spite,
But generally, from sheer
Idle CURIOSITY.
This makes life UNEASY
For some MARRIED men—
But does it CURE them?
No! But they "think"
It makes them CAREFUL!

LATEST FROM "SABLE I." WRECK

The latest messages from the s.s. Sable I., which is ashore at Lamaline state that the ship is resting easily and is in no immediate danger of breaking up. The ship is ashore at High Beach, about three miles west Lamaline. It is a very dangerous spot, completely exposed and abounding with rocks and shoals, and according to mariners familiar with this part of the coast, Captain Murley did remarkably well in beaching the damaged steamer.

According to a message from R. G. Bonnell, received yesterday afternoon, all the live stock which included 80 sheep and 45 head of cattle were landed yesterday forenoon, while the passengers were landed during the afternoon and comfortably housed at Lamaline, while it is understood the greater part of the crew have also left the ship. Messrs Harvey & Co. have no word yet as to the number of passengers on board the steamer.

Arrangements have been made to have the passengers connect with the s.s. Argyle which is due at Lamaline to-day, and they will arrive in Placentia to-morrow, from whence they will come to the city by rail.

The Sable had over half cargo and according to sub-collector Pittman the work of salving the cargo begins to-day and the greater part of it will be saved in good condition.

In the meantime Messrs Farquhar & Co. have made arrangements for a steamer to be sent from Halifax with salvage apparatus, when an effort will be made to refloat the ship, and according to Captain Murley, who is standing by her, there is every hope of this being successful.

THE WORLD'S PRESS

A "Moral" Inferiority.
(Manchester Guardian.)

Our own chief "superiority" to China at the present moment consists in our better mastery of the weapons of destruction. That is a superiority which may conceivably be reversed if we provoke the Chinese to turn their minds to a science they have hitherto secured by seeking to destroy their age-long integrity as a political unit. In so doing we should be making the same mistake as France is making today in Germany, only on a far vaster scale and with correspondingly huge perils for our future.

Germany Preparing.
(Cleveland Plain-Dealer.) . . . .

Although it is admittedly true that Germany is not now producing, she is laying anew the foundations of her once great industrial system. Speaking and thinking only in terms of her currency and finance, she is in o hopeless condition. It is this aspect of the situation that argues for the postponement of the definite determination of German inability to pay for a decade or more. Certainly the value of a nation's currency is no safe index of its financial condition in the case of a Government which has deliberately violated every tenet of good finance while actually and some what surreptitiously preparing for the activity in industry which sooner or later is bound to come.

The League of Nations.
(Los Angeles Times.)

In peace of aiding in the restoration of permanent peace we are put in the light of obstructionists. This is perhaps unfair; but our failure to join the League for other nations to lay the blame upon us. The majority who favored joining the League are forced to suffer for the selfishness and narrow-mindedness of the minority which succeeded in blocking the greatest effort ever made by the nations of the world to destroy war before war destroys our present civilization. And no one can truthfully say, in the face of existing conditions in Europe and Asia, that our civilization is not menaced.

Education's Failure.
(Adelaide Chronicle.)

The Melbourne branch of the Carpanters and Joiners comprises 2,700 members, yet among that number there are only four apprentices. It is a large question which should not be discussed at all, unless adequately, whereby the system of public education is concerned with a state of things which the employers and the unions are agreed in deploring—whether the non-utilitarian side is not a little overstressed. A perfect education would have as its two-fold aim efficiency and personal culture, and if the secret of implanting it were discovered we ought to find its fruits tolerably evently distributed among all classes and occupations.

Players Not Rooters.
(The Times.)

Countrymen are seldom loafers. They make their own recreation, and its form is active. To them professional games seem vague and remote. The people they watch with the greatest interest are the enemy bowlers whom they must presently race, or the friendly batsmen, higher than themselves in the order of going in, whose disaster will be their opportunity. All their lives their way has been easy for them, as it has never been for them from neighboring towns. Shere is space in the village; more important, there is a tradition, handed down from the far-off and forgotten days of archery. They can play if they will and are honored for ploying well.

The Broad Mind.
(Brooklyn Eagle.)

If it is a misfortune for Britain that labor agitators and politicians have more to do with to-day's law-making than the Oxford and Cambridge men who dominated Cabinets in the last century, it is a cure for the United States that men of classical training are of little influence in Washington and at State capitals. Littleness is everywhere, in all factions, in all parties, on every platform and in every forum.

Criminal Folly.
(La Presse.)

It is not by the destruction of or damage to the plants which provide them with the work necessary to earn their living, that the workers can expect to improve their lot, and vengeance which consists in cutting off one's nose is the act of a poor fool. If the operatives of the steel works in Sydney are well advised, they will take the initiative in disembarrassing themselves from these unhealthy elements which are so greviously compromising their interests.

World Congress of Surgeons

(London Times, July 19)

The members of the Congress of the International Society of Surgery were, yesterday, the guests of the Government at a luncheon at the Savoy Hotel.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain, Minister of Health, said that in this country we had sometimes, in the past, been accused, perhaps justly, of a certain insularity of outlook. If they lived on an island it was rather difficult not to have an insular outlook. (Laughter). But he assured the guests that if our climate was chilly, our hearts were warm, and we were most anxious to do all we could to make their stay agreeable, as well as profitable from the professional point of view. Modern advances and facilities of transport and of communication were doing a great deal to break down the old divisions that separated one people from another, and international conferences, which were becoming a regular feature of all the professions, were contributing not a little to the general harmony of the world and to a better understanding among nations. Those present, who represented so many nationalities, were united by a common bond. They were all engaged in devising new means of reducing human suffering, and in that work they made no reservations, because if they made any new discovery they did not think of keeping it to themselves, but at once made it known to their colleagues, so that it became the common property of all who were engaged upon that humane task. And as every advance was only made possible by the accumulation of all the advances which had preceded it, so by their action the progress in surgery was multiplied by the number of those who contributed to it.

It might interest them to know that in this country during the last twenty years we had brought down the death-rate from seventeen per thousand, and the expectation of life in that period had increased by about ten years. Infant mortality in the same time had come down from 133 per thousand births to seventy-seven. Those were very encouraging figures, more especially when they remembered that this was a highly industrialized country, in which large numbers of the population were extremely ill-educated from the medical point of view. where they lived under conditions of overcrowding, and where sanitation left a good deal to be desired. But behind those statistics there lay a record which they did not see—a record of thousands of lives made better worth living, and of happiness that came from improved physical condition. Some of this improved and improving record was due to the care of the State; but a much greater part came from the individual labour of the men and women who were devoting themselves to the healing art: He proposed the health of the guests.

Professor Henri Hartmann (France) replied, and said the achievements in this country had contributed largely to the progress that had been made in medicine and surgery. He first came to England to work under Lister. Since that time he had been a visitor on many occasions, and he had been impressed, as all the visiting members to the present Congress were, by English hospitality, for which they desired to express their thanks.

Among those present were:—

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

While I do not believe in the League of Nations, conceiving it to lack the essential basis of sincerity, I must admit that a recent reading of Prof. Fisher's book "League or War" served to dissipate for me a number of the academic and technical objections I had to the convenant or constitution of the League—an organization which is more promising, it seems to me, as an indication of a future international body that for what it is now or is likely, without that basis of sincerity, to become.

It would appear, therefore, from my own experience, that the book might profitably be read by even the bitterest opponents of the League. To proponents of that organization the work is invaluable. (League or War, by Irving Fisher, professor of economics in Yale University; published by Harper Bros.)

* * * *

Prof. Fisher argues well for the dire necessity of abolishing war—"if civilization does not end war, war will end civilization." Whether you believe in the League of Nations or not you must find yourself in profound agreement with his arraignment of war. I quote:

* * * * *

"But, says the cynic, any effort to abolish war is futile. War has always existed an always will. It is natural and inevitable: because man is a fighting animal.

"Every new idea has to run the gauntlet of such objections—'nothing can be done about it.' When cannibalism was in vogue, any who should have proposed to abolish it would have been laughed to scorn. If we could imagine these early men 'rea- would say: "Abolish cannibalism? The idea! It is natural and inevitable. Otherwise it would not be so universal. Human flesh is obviously the best food for making human flesh. The race will degenerate without it, and become a race of molly-coddles.'

* * * * *

"In the same way," continues the author, "even Aristotle, the wisest man of his day, made the mistake of thinking that slavery could never be abolished. In the same way it was argued that dueling could not be abolished. Yet cannibalism, slavery and dueling have actually been abolished almost completely.

"In the present case of abolishing war we can readily disprive the claim that man is so naturally combative as to make war a necessary and and permanent institution.

* * * * *

"The theory that war is natural and therefore inevitable has no sound basis in biology, anthropology or history.

"Every animal has, of course, the instinct of self-preservation. There is, therefore, some pugnacity in every animal. But, beyond this universal attribute common to all animals, man has none of the attributes of a natural fighter.

"Lions and tigers have claws and protruding jaws and fangs, showing plainly that they are, by nature fighting animals. The bull has horns with which to cut.

* * * * *

"But take away from man his artificial sword and gun and other accoutrements of war, strip him naked, and what do we find? He has no claws, no sabre-teeth nor any other natural weapon for aggression. When he fights it is merely with his clinched fists. Man has been forced to use his brains and contrive artificial instruments to make up for the fact that nature did not provide him with fighting instruments. So he has used sticks and stones, bows and arrows, guns, and all the rest."

* * * * *

Professor Fisher after continuing his argument, concludes thus:

"In short, the fundamental reason why war ever occurs is, in general, simply that no alternative method of settling disputes is available. As H. Hagerdorn expresses it:

'O World, there is another way to Serve Justice and liberty than thus to fling
The glory and the wonder of young lives
Beneath the hoofs of horses!'"

* * * *

I bring the column to a close today with this statement by Brig.-Gen. A. B. Fries, of the Chemical Warfare Division of the U.S. Army, as quoted in "League or War."

"The use of poisonous gas at the World was a child's game compared to what it will be in future."

St. Joseph's Regatta Finals Last Night

The final races in St. Joseph's Regatta took place last night, and attracted a large gathering, some thousands witnessing the various events. Owing to the high wind, the Committee very wisely waited till it moderated, hence it was after eight o'clock before the dory race which opened the programme, took place. Four crews entered, including two crews from Flatrock, Edward Everson and Michael Hickey came first by a good margin, while a close race between Wm. Everson and O'Driscoll's dories resulted in the former winning by one foot. The winners in each case hailed from Flatrock.

The next race was the Old Comrades in which three boats entered, the Cadet (C. C. C.) stroked by T. Kearsey, Guard (C.L.B.) and the Nellie R. (C.C.C.) stroked by Phil Brown. It was a close race to the buoys and all three boats turned practically together. The Cadet, however, took the lead coming up, while the Nellie R. and Guard came along neck and neck in the fight for second place. The Cadet finished first with three lengths to spare, while the Guard and Nellie R. went to the stakes together, the former winning by a stroke after a thrilling finish. Time 10.21 1-5.

The District was the final race, in which two crews representing East and West competed. The East Enders were in the Nellie R. and were stroked by Kearsey, and the West End in the Cadet stroked by M. Walsh. The Nellie R. took the lead from the start and finished first winning by two lengths. Time 10.45 1-5.

Owing to the Portugal Cove crew being unable to attend owing to one of their crew meeting with an accident the fishermen's race did not come off, hence there was no championship, and the prize in St. Joseph's sweep for these races will be drawn. The Mt. Cashel Band was in attendance during the evening and rendered a very excellent musical programme. It is understood that from a financial standpoint the Garden Party and Regatta was very successful.

Valuable Prizes For The Highland Games

During the past week the prizes for the Highland Games which will be held on St. George's Field this afternoon, have been on exhibition in the window of Messrs T. A. McNab & Co., and have been favorably commented on.

The display is one of the most valuable that has ever been presented for athletic competition at any sports and the committee is to be congratulated on its choice.

The various articles are handsome and useful, and are well worth the time spent in training.

YESTERDAY AT THE HOUSE

Debate on the Budget Finished — Legislation For Establishment of Pulp Mill at Harbor Deep Passed— Government-Crowe Agreement Ratified— Liquors In Transit Must Pay Duty.

Yesterday's sitting of the Assembly lasted until nearly mid-night. The Order Paper was virtually disposed of, the only items remaining to be considered are part vote on supply, additional estimates, and the resolutions respecting the Encouragement of Trade with the West Indies. Considerable oposition to this project was a feature of Opposition speeches while the House was in Committee on Ways and Means.

While not entirely opposed to the bill, the attitude of the Opposition, such as could be gathered from the remarks of the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Higgins, Sir Michael Cashin and Mr. Sullivan, was that the Colony in the present state of its finances, could not afford to vote the subsidy. It was urged by the Opposition that the proposed legislation stand over until the House met again in February.

Mr. Cashin, (Ferryland) asked if the various resolutions in connection tion with the Normal School; Mr. Walsh required a copy of the census returns for St. Barbe District, or any other districts that have been completed, also a statement of all moneys paid the Auditor General or the clerks of his Department since January 1st, 1923.

Mr Woodford to ask the Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Mines if the land between the Museum and the residence of Dr. H. H. Cowperwaithe is still the property of the Government, if not to whom has it been sold or rented and at what price and to lay on the table of the House a copy of the conveyance or agreement of rental.

The Minister of Finance submitted the various resolutions in connection with his budget proposals. Under those resolutions which became effective at 10 a.m. to-day, the export duty on codfish, salmon, scotch cured herring, and Turbot are entirely removed. The only duty now remaining on the product of the fisheries being the tax of 2 cents per gallon on cod-oil.

An important change is made dealing with liquor in transit is also announced by the Finance Minister. Heretofore liquor in transit was allowed to be landed here on condition that the shippers gave a bond that it would reach its destination. The financial benefit, while the use of the Colony does not receive any port was made for trans-shipment purposes. Under the Customs regulations, made legal by last nights enactment, a tax of seventy five cents a gallon on all liquor landed in the Colony and re-exported.

Mr. Higgins complimented Mr. Cave on his courage in introducing such a resolution. He could see where the country would make a half million dollars on liquor which is not consumed by the people of Newfoundland. Quebec, British Columbia, and now Manitoba are enjoying sane prohibition laws and we have a lot to learn from these sane rational people. He advocated state control of liquor and a discontinuance of the farcial "script" business. That business was a menace to the country. He had heard of doctors building homes in St. John's out of money made out of scripts. Then the farce of calling this country a prohibition country when the Finance Minister acknowledges that we are anything but that by putting in his budget a provision to raise $480,000 on liquor sales. At the present time half a million dollars was been collected from our own people in the form of revenue on liquor sales. Under a properly controlled system the tourist would be paying this revenue in a very much larger sum and the Colony would reap the benefit. Under the proposed change he predicted that a very substantial increase on revenue would result.

Mr. Woodford urged the necessity of immediate work for the unemployed, and advocated in particular, if no other source of work could be found from which returns might be expected, ballasting and other improvement to the railway. In his opinion the railway is ours to operate for many a day whether we like it or not. He wanted it to be clearly understood that he was not advocating able bodied pauper relief.

He advocated most forcibly the cutting out of the Doctor's "scripts" and establishing a system whereby a man could get the same quantity he gets now without having to bear the humiliation of begging and lying to the Doctors for a "script" and paying a fee therefor. He regarded the appointment of Mr. Davey as entirely unnecessary, as in the Public Works Department were men of first class ability to look after the work. In Mr. Wm. Churchill the Department had a man of the highest qualifications, a man who could serve the interests of the country as no other man.

Messrs. Higgins, Sullivan, the Prime Minister and Mr. Fox, discussed the tax intended to be placed on the Fire Insurance Companies to meet the additional cost of $30.000.00 recently incurred in getting up-to-date fighting apparatus. Any attempt made by the Insurance Companies to offset this tax by an increase in premiums will be resisted to the full extent and powers of legislature. Last year $420.683 were collected in fire insurance premiems, and as one member suggested the combine of fire insurance underwriters will not be so mean as to attempt collect this proposed tax by increasing premium rates. They would be well advised to attempt no such action.

The Crowe-Government agreement for the cutting of pulp wood in White Bay was amended to hake provision that if no mill was erected his concessions would terminate in ten years instead of twenty-five, after which it passed the Committee and through all other stages as did also the Mooney in Orange Bay, Hr. Deep.

The Prime Minister, before adjournment, said that he areed with all Mr. Higins had said re the remission of the Bell Island ore tax. He pointed out to the House the conditions existing around Conception Bay, where two thousand men depended on the mines for work. He assured the House that no further evasions would be tolerated by him, but that business would be discussed squarely and above board, and there would be no more mid-winter shut-downs unless the Government was satisfied that such were unavoidable. The House at all times would be consulted in any further agreements.

At 11 o'clock the House adjourned until Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

A WORD OF PRAISE

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir.—Now that the races are over for this year, and hoping that the next regatta held on Quidi Vidi Lake may be more productive of enjoyment than was this year's, due not to mismanagement on the part of the Committee, but to the fickleness of the Weather Man.

I would wish to say a word of praise in behalf of the said Committee, and especially for the good work done by Mr. Arthur Hiscock and Mr. Charles Ellis. I would likewise ask to be permitted to say a good word for Mr. Alfred McNamara (Alf Mac) who for the past thirty years has been indefatigable in his position of timekeeper. Alf is an expert in this line, and we hope that he may live to keep up his reputation and the time of our race boats for many years to come.—KITTY VITTY.

St. John's, Aug. 15, 1923.

Twelve Entries For 10 Mile Walk

The Highland games at St. George's Field this afternoon will be the big half holiday attraction. The sports start sharp at 2.30. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce with Miss V. Allardyce will attend.

Amongst the attractions will be two boxing bouts when lively encounters will be witnessed. Walking has evidently come back as up to last night 12 competitors had entered for the ten mile walk and as the A.A.A. are recognising this event, it should be keenly contested. The Committee has decided to include a 220 yards handicap in the programme, which will be of interest to sprinters.

Mills for the manufacture of paper from ordinary straw may be established in this country soon, according to Sir Frederick Becker, who holds large interests in pulp and paper companies of Canada, and who arrived in Canada from England by the Empress of Scotland yesterday.

Through the discoveries of a French scientist, he said, it has become possible to manufacture writing paper and newsprint from ordinary straw. In Canada, he continued, straw is nearly always burned, and is a total loss in every respect. If the new process becomes successful, Sir Frederick claimed, it would be of great help to the fast diminishing pulp and paper supply of the world, as well as bringing a great deal more prosperity to the farmer, who will be able to utilize what has heretofore been wasted, at a good profit.

Speaking of Canada's huge losses due to forest fires, Sir Frederick stated that re-afforestation was not as dependable a medium for the preservation of forests as was fire prevention. He urged that some steps be taken to prevent the huge losses of the past being repeated in the future.

The United States, said Frederick, at the present time consumes more paper than any other country in the world. The supply is now drawn from Europe as well as Canada, but as soon as the European countries et back to normal, they will use up their own supplies and the United States will have only Canada to depend upon.

FRANCE'S SILENT PREMIER SPENDS DAYS IN WRITING

PARIS, July 23 (AP)—Premier Poincare uses up more pens in a week than did his predecessor, Briand, in a year, a keen observer of the French foreign office said recently. The reason is that Poincare speaks little, but writes much. Briand always had a cigarette in his hand; Poincare always has a pen.

The present premier receives very few callers, and except for Count Panetti de la Rocca, director at the Ministry, and his chief of cabinet, M. Hermitte, Poincare sees hardly any one. He remains at his desk throughout long days—from 12 to 14 hours—writing. There is not a single document coming out of the ministry of foreign affairs, whether they be grave and solemn instructions to ambassadors or minor matters of routine business, that the premier does not see personally, and often times corrects or amplifies in his own hand.

His famous speech delivered at Senlis July 15, written entirely in that crisp, sharp handwriting which is peculiar to the premier of France, went to the government printers without a single correction or erasure.

A steamer with 2000 tons of coal for A. H. Murray arrived yesterday afternoon from the Old Country.

Congratulations To Rev. Dr. Browne

Honors and distinctions seem to be the outstanding feature in the career of our distinguished fellow-countryman, Rev. P. W. Browne, D.D., Ph.D. The Trinity College Record (Washington, D.C.) announces the appointment of Dr. Browne as head of the Department of Modern History at this famed institution. His activities in the historic field are well known both at home and abroad, and, in addition to the editorship of the learned Catholic Historical Review, he occupies the chair of Modern History at the Catholic University and is head of the Department of Church History at the Catholic Sisters'College which has just closed its summer session with the largest enrollment in its history. Both Trinity and Sisters' College are constituent colleges of the University and the academic programme of both is the same as that of the parent institution.

Dr. Browne's work in the field of history has been most extensive and his ceaseless energy has been rewarded by distinctions many and varied.

We understand that Dr. Browne's "History of Newfoundland" will likely appear within the next year. This work has been compiled with a view to meet the needs of the Newfoundland schools and will no doubt meet their requirements admirably. He is perhaps the greatest living authority in this special field, and the fact that he has been for many years a successful teacher will warrant the usefulness of his new work. In addition to his earlier equipment in the academic field, he has pursued postgraduate studies at the Catholic University, at Harvard and at the University of Munich where he spent most of last season in research work.

The s.s. Maud arrived at Botwood yesterday in ballast from New York, and will load pulp and paper for England for the A. E. Reed Co.

Smuts Appeals To European Nations Stand By Gt. Britain

BLOOMFONTAIN, South Africa, August 15—Premier Jan Christian Smuts was given an ovation upon his appearance at the South African Party Congress, after his recent indisposition. It was noticed he walked briskly and looked fresh and well, the result of his rest. Addressing the Congress Premier Smuts appealed for South Africa to stand in sympathy with Great Britain in her effort to save Europe from destruction. He exhorted all nations in Europe great and small to rally round Britain, and avert a world wide distsaer. The position was grave beyond words, he said, and if the United States saw the European nations supporting Gt. Britain, he had faith the United States would again rush to the rescue and save the break up of Europe, the consequences of which might not be wiped out for a century. If all the nations acted together Premier Smuts continued, there was still a possibility that France would see her danger and dissolution of Germany would be far more serious than the fall of Russia. If Germany broke, civilization would be put back a century or more, whether Europe could stand the shock it would be difficult to say as there was even a prespect of a break up of the whole world.

U.S. Judge Holds That High Seas Capture Is Within Law

NEW YORK, Aug. 15—Seigure of alien rum running vessels that hover outside the three mile limit was held legal by Federal Judge Woodrough, yesterday in a decision handed down in the case of the British ship Marion Mosher, seized while transferring liquor to an United States boat eight miles off the coast on July 27th. Judge Woodrough held that the seizure of foreign ships engaged in smuggling liquor into the United States was justifiable, even though they were on the high seas.

Steel Men Have Plan For Dispute Settlement

SYDNEY, Aug. 15—Plan of plant councils for settlement of plant disputes, which was some time ago submitted to the men by General Supt. W. H. Bischoff, and was at that time refused by the workers, goes into effect in the Sydney steel plant of the British Empire Steel Corpn. tomorrow. The Corpn. also announced that a committee of the workmen employed on the plant waited upon Supt. Bischoff last night and requested that the scheme be adopted.

FISH SUCCUMBS TO HEAT WAVE

BUDAPEST, July 22 (AP)—One hundred thousand fish have fallen victims to the heat wave in Hungary at the famous Szegedin breeding ponds. The water evaporated, leaving the fish in the slime. The population was called out to bury the fish which were poisoning the air for miles around.

DE VALERA IS ARRESTED BY FREE STATERS

Republican Leader Fainted on Platform as He Was Rushed By Soldiers While Beginning a Political Speech at Ennis.

EAMONN DE VALERA

ENNIS, Ireland, Aug. 15—Eamonn DeValera, the Republican Leader was arrested by Free State troops here today on his appearance to address a Republican meeting in the election campaign. The arrest was made under sensational circumstances. De Valera was addressing a meeting of electors in the merket square, when Free State troops came on the scene and fired several volleys over the heads of the crowd. A stampade occurred and several arrests were made. Troops then surrounded the platform and took the Republican Leader into custody. DeValara was given a thunderous reception on his arrival to address the meeting.

ENNIS, Ireland, Aug. 15—Eamonn De Valara at last is in the custody of the Free State. He was arrested here to-day as he was starting an election speech to his constituents. He had boldly announced his coming, and when he took his position on the rostrum in the Market Square, Free State troops threw a cordon about him. The crowd had given him a tumultous reception, and he had just started his address in Gaelic, when a shout arose "Soldiers are coming," and simultaneously armoured cars rattled up the vicinity of the platform. The crowd, made up of men, and women, fled in all directions as the soldiers fired several volleys over their heads. Many of the women fainted. As several soldiers rushed towards the platform, DeValera was seen to sway and then to collapse. At first it was thought the Republican leader was shot, but it turned out he had only fainted, probably in consequence of a blow he received during the stampede. When he recovered DeValera was assisted down the steps from the platform by troops. He waved aside a number of persons who were seemingly desirious of attempting to rescue him, and surrendered himself to the officers who received him with a kindly "come along". When the first panic had subsided the people who had been about the platform, returned to Market Square, and many of them hurled insulting epithets at the troops, and for a moment the situation looked ugly. The troops however, took things calmly fixed bayonets and soon restored a degree of order, then with a large crowd following him, DeValera was taken to the country jail.

When he arrived at Market Square for the meeting, DeValera was accompanied by his young son and a priest; he seemed nervous. There was a noticable twitching of his face, he seemed ill at ease, as he sat on a chair before he arose to speak. In the few remarke he was able to make before he was arrested, De Valera said, "When we could not come to you to tell you the truth they said we were anarchists out for destruction. I come here to tell you I never have stood for destruction, I never have stood for the enemy's game which is to incite one party to fight another party. Since the beginning I have preached one gospel which is the gospel I preach to you to-day."

The arrival of the military cut off further remarks. A dozen persons were treated for injuries in the local hospital, two of them suffering from bullet wounds and others from cuts and bruises.

DUBLIN, Aug. 15—The Publicity Dept. of the Free State Government in a statement to the press, fixes on Eamonn DeValera the responsibility for the campaign of the Irish Irregulars, and publishes all his captured correspondence in proof of the charges.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER VI.

"You wept when you saw my mangled digit. Remember, Nan? Strange how that scene persists in my memory! You were so sweetly sympathetic I was quite ashamed of myself."

"That's because you always were the sweetest boy in the world and I was only the garbage-man's daughter," she whispered. "There's a ridiculous song about the garbage-man's daughter. I heard it once, in vaudeville—in San Francisco."

"If I come over some evening soon, will you sing for me, Nan?"

"I never sing any more, Don."

"Nobody but you could ever sing 'Carry Me Back to Old Virginy' for me."

"Then I shall sing it, Don."

"Thank you, Nan."

She completed the anointing of his battle-scarred knuckles with iodine, and for a moment, she held his hand, examining critically an old ragged white scar on the index finger of his right hand. And quite suddenly, to his profound amazement, she bent her head and swiftly implanted upon that old scar, a kiss so light, so humble, so beningant, so pregnant with adoration and gratitude that he stood before her confused and inquiring.

"Such a strong, useful hand!" she whispered. "It has been raised in defense of the sanctity of my home—and until you came there was 'none so poor to do me reverence.' "

He looked at her with sudden, new interest. Her action had almost startled him. As their eyes held each other, he was aware, with a force that was almost ashock, that Nan Brent was a most unusual woman. She was beautiful; yet her physical beauty formed the least part of her attractiveness, perfect as that beauty was. Instinctively, Donald visualized her as a woman with brains, character, nobility of soul; there was that in her eyes, in the honest and understanding with which they looked into his, that compelling him, in that instant, to accept without reservation and for all time the lame and halting explanation of her predicament he had so recently heard from her father's lips. He longed to tell her so. Instead, he flushed boyishly and said, quite impersonally:

"Yes; you're beautiful as women go, but that's not the right way to express you. Physically you might be very homely, but if you were still Nan Brent you would still be sweet and compelling. You remind me of a Catholic chapel; there's always one little light within you that never goes out, you know. So that makes you more than beautiful. Shall I say—glorious?"

She smiled at him with her wistful, sea-blue eyes—a smile, tender, maternal, all-comprehending. She knew he was not seeking to flatter her, that the wiles, the articifices, the pretty speeches of the polished man of the world were quite beyond him.

"Still the same old primitive pal," she murmured softly; "still thinking straight, talking straight, acting straight, and—dare I say it, Donald?—seeing straight. I repeat, you always were the sweetest boy in the world—and there is still so much of the little boy about you." Her hand fluttered up and rested lightly on his arm. I'll not forget this day, my dear friend."

It was characteristic of him that, having said that which was uppermost in his mind, he should remember his manners and thank her for dressing his knuckles. Then he extended his hand in farewell.

"When you come again, Donald," she pleaded, as he took her hand, "will you please bring me some books? They're all that can keep me sane—and I do not go to the public library any more. I have to run the gauntlet of so many curious eyes."

"How long is it since you have been away from the Sawdust Pile?"

"Since before my baby came."

He was silent a moment, pondering this. Since old Caleb had become house-ridden then, she had been without books. He nodded assent to her request.

"If I do not say very much, you will understand, nevertheless, how grateful I am," she continued. "To-day, the sun has shone. Whatever your thoughts may have been, Donald, you controlled your face and you were decent enough to say, 'Poor Nan.' "

He had no answer to that. He was conscious only of standing helpless in the midst of a terrible tragedy. His heart ached with pity for her, and just for old time's sake, for a tender sentiment of lost youth and lost happiness of the old comradely days when she had been Cinderella and he the prince, he wished that he might take her in a fraternal embrace and let her cry out on his breast the agony that gnawed at her heart like a worm in an apple. But it was against his code to indicate to her by word or action that she was less worthy than other women and hence to be pitied, for it seemed to him that her burden was already sufficient.

"Let me know if those people return to annoy you, Nan," was all he said. Then he shook hands very formally, and the young laird of Tyee returned to the mill-office to report to Andrew Daney that the Sawdust Pile had been cleaned out, but that, for the present at least, they would get along with the old drying-yard.

Somehow, the day came to an end, and he went home with tumult in his soul.

CHAPTER VII.

AN UNERRING knowledge of men in general and of his own son in particular, indicated to Hector McKaye, upon the instant the latter appeared at the dinner table, that his son's first day in command had had a sobering effect upon that young man. He had gone forth that morning, whistling, his eyes alert with interest and anticipation; and a feeling of profound contentment had come to The Laird as he watched Donald climb into his automobile and go briskly down the cliff highway to Port Agnew. Here was no unwilling exile, shackled by his father's dollars to a backwoods town and condemned to labor for the term of his natural life. Gladly, eagerly, it seemed to Hector McKaye, his son was assuming his heritage, casting aside, without one longing backward glance, a brighter, busier, and more delightful world.

Although his son's new arena of action was beautiful and The Laird loved it with a passionate love, he was sufficiently imaginative to realize that, in Port Agnew, Donald might not be as happy as his father. Old Hector was sufficiently unselfish to have harbored no resentment had this been so. It had been his one anxiety that Donald might take his place in the business as a matter of duty to himself rather than as a duty to his father, and because he had found his life-work and was approaching it with joy, for The Laird was phisosopher enough to know that labor without joy is as dead-sea fruit. Indeed, before the first day of his retirement had passed, he had begun to suspect that joy without labor was apt to be something less than he had anticipated.

The Laird observed in his son's eyes as the latter took his place at the table, a look that had not been there when Donald left for the mill that morning. His usually pleasant "Evening, folks!" was perfunctory tonight; he replied briefly to the remarks addressed to him by his mother and sisters; the old man noted not less than thrice a slight pause with the spoon half-way to his mouth, as if his son considered some problem more important than soup. Mrs. McKaye and the girls chattered on, oblivious of these slight evidences of mental perturbation, but at The Laird carved the roast (he delighted in carving and serving his family, and was old-fashioned enough to insist upon his right, to the distress of the girls, who preferred to have the roast carved in the kitchen and served by the Japanese butler), he kept a contemplative eye upon his son, and presently saw Donald heave a sigh.

"Here's a titbit you always liked, son!" he cried cheerfully, and deftly skewered from the leg of lamb the crisp and tender tail. "Confound you, Donald; I used to eat these fat, juicy little lamb's tails while you were at college, but I suppose, now, I'll have to surrender that prerogative along with the others." In an effort to be cheerful and distract his son's thoughts, he attempted this homely bandiage.

"I'll give you another little tale in return, dad," Donald replied, endeavoring to meet his father's cheerful manner. "While we were away, a colony of riff-raff from Darrow jumped old Caleb Brent's Sawdust Pile, and Daney was weak enough to let them get away with it. I'm somewhat surprised. Daney knew your wishes in the matter; if he had forgotten them, he might have remembered mine, and if he had forgotten both it would have been the decent thing to have thrown them out on his own responsibility."

So that was what lay at the bottom of his son's perturbation! The Laird was relieved.

"Andrew's a good man, but he always needed a leader, Donald," he replied. "If he didn't lack initiative, he would have been his own man long ago. I ope you did not chide him for it, lad."

"No; I did not. He's old enough to be my father, and, besides, he's been in the Tyee Lumber Company longer than I. I did itch to give him a rawhiding, though."

"I saw smoke and excitement down at the Sawdust Pile this morning, Donald. I dare say you rectified Andrew's negligence."

"I did. The Sawdust Pile is as clean as a hound's tooth."

Jane looked up from her plate.

MRS. COFFMAN ILL SEVEN YEARS

Saved from an Operation by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sidell, Ill.—"I was a nervous wreck. I was suffering from a pain in my left side, which was almost unbearable, and I could not even let the bed clothing rest on my body at night. I had been sick for seven years, but not so bad until the last eighteen months, and had become so run-down that I cared for nobody, and would rather have died than live. I couldn't do my work without help, and the doctors told me that an operation was all there was left. I would not consent to that, so my husband brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged me to take it. I have taken fourteen bottles of it and I feel ten years younger. Life is full of hope. I do all my housework and had a large garden this year. I never will be without the Vegetable Compound in the house, and when my two little girls reach womanhood I intend to teach them to take it. I am never too busy to tell some suffering sister of my help, and you can use my name and letter to spread the good news of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines."

NATIONAL WHEAT BODY ADVOCATED FOR PRICE FIXING

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 14 (AP.)—Creation by the United States of a national wheat corporation which would establish a basic minimum price for all American wheat, and employ other measures for stabilizing the wheat markets is advocated by I. A. Madden farm advisor for Sangamon county and well known in Illinois as a farm authority.

"Allowing the surplus of American wheat to set the price of American farm crops must stop if the farmer is to be saved from ruin," said Mr. Madden in outlining his plan.

"The United States should charter a national wheat corporation and appropriate sufficient funds for working capital. This corporation should then establish a basic minimum wheat price for all American wheat. If at the basic minimum price, then the national wheat corporation should step in and buy wheat.

"Until conditions are more stable in foreign countries, the wheat exported would have to be sold at less than the basic minimum price. To make up the loss sustained on exported wheat every bushel of wheat marketed should be assessed with a differential tax. This tax would vary with the surplus produced. If the basic price was such that there was an overproduction, then the tax would lower the farmers' price to where over production would be discouraged while if there was a shortage of wheat the tax would be lessened and production stimulated.

"This plan would not interfere with the present grain trade, with the development of cooperative marketing, nor with the chance of a price above the basic minimum to the farmer who chooses to hold his wheat until after the harvest rush. It would without subsidizing agriculture, put the labor and capital of the American farmer on a plane with the capital and labor of other industries.

"It would eliminate market 'gluts' due to overproduction placing the burden of overproduction entirely upon the farmer. The consumer of wheat in the United States would be asked to give the farmer an equal chance. Only the extremely selfish would deny this.

"Approximately six hundred million bushels are consumed at home and two hundred million bushels are exported. This surplus is a millstone around the neck of aricultural prices."

The suggestion that American citizens should be induced to buy wheat was denounced by Mr. Madden, who said this plan would only aggravate the situation because, "it increases the amount of the surplus held in America, which sooner or later will cause prices to fall to lower levels."

From The Masthead

By The Lookout

For the Fishermen's Protective Union I have written a song. It has seemed to me that our union movement is lacking in this respect. Now, the labor movement in Great Britain, for instance, has a great many very stirring songs. Never a meeting is held there, or a parade, or indeed any kind of gathering, without union songs being sung. Many of these songs were written by the beloved poet, William Morris. The Rev. Charles Kingsley, who was a great laborite, too, wrote some songs.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

This song of mine I have written to the air of "Maryland, My Maryland," the official anthem of that State in the United States. The national labor hymn of the English labor movement—The Red Flag—which, by the way, is not at all as bad as it sounds! is sung to this same inspiring air. Many movements, indeed, have songs writer to the air of Maryland, My Maryland, including the Salvation Army.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

UNION SONG

(Air: Maryland, My Maryland)

The Union is our bulwark strong
To battle down our ev'ry wrong—
To fight our foes and let us stand
Straight up for freedom in this land.

Chorus:

Strong as the billows of the sea
The F. P. U. will ever be!
As in the past the Union stood
So shall the future Brotherhood!

When fishermen were trodden down
By merchant-dealers in the town,
Then Coaker came and led the fray—
Scattered our foes and won the day.
So, year by year, he toiled and fought
And stood against each onslaught,
And built our Union great and strong
So we can sing this Union Song.
Chorus.

Toilers, all, of Newfoundland
Come boldly out and take your stand!
Our fight is yours, our Cause is, too—
Your place is in the F.P.U.!

Cho.

With our heart and hand we will be true
To Coaker and the F.P.U.!
They stood by us, We stand by them!
This is our vow, the Union hymn.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

I'd like to see F. P. U. Councils sing this song at their meetings. I must write some other songs. I'll print them in this column as soon as I get them done.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

If you read the following story in a novel, you probably would say that it was over-done, and not true to life. But truth is stranger than fiction!

When Walter D. Scott, who had been arrested, appeared in court in New York the other day, charged with vagrancy, or having no home and no visible means of support, a strange story came to light. Years ago he was a clergyman of the Episcopal Church (the American church corresponding to the Church of England.) He had been educated in the University of Toronto where he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts. In Leipsig, Germany, he took his degree of doctor of music. Then he entered the ministry. Taking to drink, he was unfrocked by his church, and his wife divorced him and he sank steadily lower and lower until he was practically a bum.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

When arrested, he had been chased by an excited woman who yelled "kidnapper, kidnapper!" after him. A great crowd gathered around him It seems that he had patted a little girl of five or six on the head and she, looking up into his unshaven face, trusted him and walked along the sidewalk with him. He had just ten cents in his possession and was going to spend it on her in a nearby candy shop. The mother, looking out of her door, saw the little girl walking along hand in hand with the bum, and got almost hysterical at once.

Scott told the judge that, it being Sunday morning, his thoughts had gone back to the days when he would preach to big congregations, and it was in this mood that he noticed the little girl and patted her on the head, the tears standing in his eyes.

He was given six months in the workhouse. He said little and only smiled in a resigned way.

Mr. Outport Customer:

DON'T you remember the never fading dye, the enduring qualities were in the black and blue serges you got from us before the war? Yes, certainly! We can give you the same again. Our latest arrivals are guaranteed dyes and pure wool. Samples and style sheet, with measuring form, sent to your address.

SUDBURY, Aug. 16—Progress has been made in the use of radio in forestry work. It is possible to listen to aviators talking from machines as far as 25 miles away, while in flight. An interesting feature of the work at present being done, has been the tracing of an airplane's progress by means of carrier-waves which serve to indicate its exact location when received by radio at the base.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, AUG. 16th, 1923

More Industrial Activities, and Employment for Our People

From the viewpoint of employment requirements, two very important measures passed through all their stages in the House of Assembly on Tuesday, for which the Government should be much commended.

These were the agreement between the Government and Dr. Malcolm J. Mooney, and the agreement between the Government and Mr. Harry J. Crowe. The former refers to operations in Orange Bay near Harbor Deep, and the latter to operations in the bottom of White Bay.

Under the Mooney agreement, the Government have provided for the erection and continuous operation of a mill or mills capable of manufacturing at least 100 tons of mechanical pulp for every working day. Actual construction must be commenced on or before November 30th of this year and plant must be in complete working order three years from now.

A very important feature of the Government's agreement with Dr. M. J. Mooney is the provided expenditure during the next twelve months of the large sum of $300,000 for the purpose of construction or of cutting timber, it being understood that not less than 30,000 cords of wood must be cut before the first day of August, 1924.

It will be thus seen that this agreement ensures considerable employment and will take care of men not only around the Harbor Deep section of St. Barbe District but from other parts of the country as well. It is expected that upwards of 1000 men will be employed at Orange Bay in the near future.

The Government's agreement with Mr. H. J. Crowe provides for the establishment and installation on timber areas in the bottom of White Bay of one or more rossing plants and one or more saw-mills, each saw-mill with a capacity to saw not less than 25,000 feet board measure per day, and to complete same and put same into operation on or before October 31st, 1924. During the continuance of the agreement the operator must cut yearly 25,000 cords of wood or equivalent of 12,500,000 feet in sawn lumber. And, under the agreement, operations must commence before November 30th of this year.

The operator must erect within the period of ten years a pulp or paper mill, capable of manufacturing at least 100 tons of mechanical pulp per working day.

In all probability, from 750 to 1000 men will be employed in White Bay operations. In both operations at least 1500 men should be employed this winter.

The above are the interesting features of these new industrial operations as far as the workingmen are concerned; and we feel that there will be general appreciation regarding the ratification by the Assembly of the Government's efforts to help out the general employment situation and turn valuable resources to the material benefit of our people.

Development versus Relief

A few days ago The Advocate pointed out that if relief expenditure had to be resorted to, the country and the people must be prepared to pay for such expenditure.

For two years or so, relief work had to be performed in almost every section of the country. It was impossible for the Government to avoid it unless they were prepared to let the people starve; and they were not prepared to do so. Pressure from all sides had to be contended with and the Opposition appeals, notwithstanding their subsequent attitude regarding relief expenditure, were far more insistent than Government appeals, for their Assembly speeches regarding conditions in their districts and the doings of the unemployed in St. John's and vicinity, all of which occupied much time of the Assembly, are within the easy reach of memory. The people themselves were also responsible. Relief was essential, they demanded it and the Government could not refuse it. It is for most of those who secured relief to decide as to whether they gave the most valuable returns possible for it and, perhaps, they can best decide as to who were most responsible for the returns actually given.

Aside from these points, relief cost the country heavily in money and the country has had to pay; and, now when, glancing back, some people wonder if it had been better if people had paid the other way: in hunger, tears and starvation. But many of them were not wondering then.

What is the position to-day? It is, fortunately, much better. It is better because our Government's efforts, in the midst of it all, to provide a substitute that would render large outlays unnecessary and be of a source of financial strength to the country.

Be opinion what it may regarding relief work, it must be conceded that the Government's development policy has been the country's salvation and the hope of the future. In the effort to limit relief expenditure and substitute labour giving operations throughout the country the Government should earn the lasting gratitude of the people.

More men will be employed in Newfoundland this year than ever before, and when we regard the fishery situation in its true light, is not that fact something for which we should all be thankful.

Passengers Due To-night

There was no report from the wrecked steamer Sable I. yesterday and it is presumed the work of salving the cargo is going on apace.

The s.s. Argyle called at Lamaline yesterday and took on board the ship-wrecked passengers. She left there at noon and is due at Argentia this afternoon and the passengers should reach the city by to-night's train.

The schr. Cyril T. sailed from Aguathuna Tuesday with pit props for Sydney.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

Sparks from the Union Anvil

The wood working factory is nearly completed. The machinery has arrived, and will be installed by Mr. Duncan Cook who arrived from St. John's by triin Monday morning.

Visitors are surprised to see how Port Union is growing. Three new houses are being erected there this summer.

Mr. Quinton, Manager Dry Goods Dept., who was on a visit to St. John's, returned to Port Union on Sunday.

The ladies of the C.E.W.A. intend holding a Garden Party at Port Union this week. They are making great preparations and fine weather is all that is required to make the affair a grand success.

Mr. Lanning leaves Port Union this week for Amherst Cove, Bonavista Bay, where he will reside in future. As school teacher there he will no doubt be a success.

Word has been received from Mr. W. J. Forward, advising that he is now in Boston and has secured a very remunerative position. Mr. Forward is a member of the Union Council at Elliston.

About eight Union schooners, with bumper trips, from Labrador and the Straits, have arrived to their home ports.

The motor vessel F. P. Uuion will be ready to sail for Port Union to-night, with general cargo.

Mr. Dug. White of Port Union is now in town on a business trip, and will return by the F. P. Union.

Notes from Herring Neck

During the past two weeks the topic has been about the resignation of ex-Premier Squires and the formation of a new Ministry. There is general satisfaction that the people's choice to looker after the electors interest in their right place is on the Government side of the House.

Several friends from here have gone to the land of Uncle Sam during the past year and last Saturday, Aug. 4th, witnessed the departure of Alfred Kearley, wife and daughter, also Mrs. Kenneth Blandford, being also a daughter of Skipper Alfred, and her family who go to join her husband at New Kensington, Penn., where he has been working for a time.

Skipper Alfred Kearley has already three sons and their families at New Kensington and he has gone to be with them.

Another young lady, Miss Marion Holwell, also accompanied the above party. May success be with them and all others who travel to the Land of Uncle Sam.

Several of our people is at work at various places in the interior and more employment seems to be the thing wanted.

The fishery on the whole is bad and unless a change soon takes place in the fishery situation the voyage will indeed be a poor one.

Geo. J. Carter, Esq., arrived by last Friday's Clyde, August 3rd, from St. John's on a visit to his firm.

Within one month's time we shall be visited with the teacher again after two months vacation.

The "bakeapple" seems to be the password for the past few days among a great number of our people and numbers of our people and numbers of gallons have been picked around the bays. They are a good berry and we believe should have some protection from being picked too early, as hundreds of gallons are picked before they are ripe. We should suggest that 5th of August would be ample time to start picking this most delicious berry.

* * *

We trust that the Dept. of Agriculture will not hesitate to have nitices re picking partridge berries posted at an early date as possible, so as no one would have for an excuse they did not know the date.

Mr. Edgar Simms of Fogo arrived here by motor last evening on his way home from Boston where he spent the winter. He is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Simms until opportunity offers for him to reach his destination.

A little caplin still remains here, which would be a good help to the hook and liners if any fish was obtainable.

Squid seems to be very slack in making their appearance as none have come along yet.

A MATTER OF "FORM"

MARRIAGE, to some girls,
Is a matter of MONEY.
But with MEN
It is often
A matter of "FORM."
You AFTER marriage,
Most women get CARELESS
And don't take the trouble
To keep their FIGURES,
And yet they expect
To KEEP their husbands,
Which, when all is said and done,
Is far more difficult,
For the natural man
Has a keen eye
And a ROVING disposition.
But he can be trained
By CLIPPING his wings,
Or by a WOMAN
Being as DIFFICULT
As the next one,
And by a woman
Who KEEPS herself
So desperately attractive
That he is AFRAID to leave her,
Because he knows
That OTHER men
Also have eyes
And ROVING DISPOSITIONS.

Legislative Session Nears Close

EUROPEAN SITUATION PRESENTS LESS SERIOUS ASPECT

Yesterday's Proceedings at the House of Assembly

The Work of the Session Virtually Completed — The West India Service Referred to Select Committee.— Disappointment Expressed Over Personnel of Railway Commission.

With yesterday's sitting, the work of the present session of the Legislature was virtually clued up. Pending the furnishing of certain information in relation to the sum required to wind up the Militia Department and to provide for payments already made returned men in the form of bonus evening up their pay with the Canadians, this vote in Supplemental Supply was reld over until today.

MR. HIGGINS presented a petition from Freshwater, Bell Island, asking for a small allocation to complete a landing place for fishermen in that locality. The petition was endorsed by Mr. Fox and Mr. Vinnicombe. The House went into Committee on Supply, when the remaining votes Agriculture and Mines were agreed to.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER announced that he had decided, as already stated to cut out the Model Farm entirely and that the position of Agricultural Commissioners was that only one would be employed this year. Whilst the military pensions vote was being finalized. Mr. Cashin and Mr. Moore, members for Ferryland, made a vigorous attack upon the present civilian member of the Pensions Board. The Prime Minister in reply stated that when the Board was created and ever since it had been the policy of the Government to have a civilian on that Board. The Government of the day saw no valid reason for altering that arrangement. Mr. Cashin several times during the debate challenged ex-Lieut. Harvey Small to resist the appointment of Dr. Mosdell, but the member for Burgeo very properly told Mr. Cashin since it was the decision of the past and present governments to have a civilian on the Board he had no objection to offer.

Additional Estimates were tabled amounting to $102,988.58 as follows:

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION strongly objected to paying bonuses to Civil Servants, and particularly did he object to payment for extra services being made to the Auditor General and members of his staff. The extra amounts for the police force was in his opinion entirely unnecessary. $18,500 for Labrador police. The Inspector General read something in the papers that there was something doing on Labrador, so he sent down a force of police. Now, they are coming back. Ten new constables for a prohibition country. There are far too many policemen in this country. People thought that when the Prohibition Act was passed the police force would be reduced. It is by far greater than ever before. This new force for Labrador, even if they were on their way home would not be discharged.. It was admitted and he spoke from full knowledge as a practising lawyer, there were never so many petty larcenies in the country as now.

Mr. Moore, (Ferryland) further objected to Mr. Davey's position as Government Inspector of Works. The Leader of the Opposition raised the technical point, whether Civil Servants, such as he claimed Mr. Davey and Dr. Mosdell to be, could holds seats in the Upper House. He noted that Mr. Alex Mews recently resigned when he was appointed to the Audit Dept., and continued that both gentlemen referred to chould do the same thing.

Mr. Woodford following along the lines of the speech delivered by him on Wednesday, contended that the Woodfordites in Hr. Main District were being discriminated against, and charged the Hon. Mr. Hawco with having an eye single to political expediency when giving out work to Hr. Main folk. The ex-Minister of Public Works became very wrathy and threatened to take up quarters a mensa et thora in the Assembly Chamber, unless he was given the assurance that work for the unemployed would be distributed in his district on the 50-50 basis. Sir Michael Cashin criticised the various votes in supplemental supply. Mr. Moore objected to the importation of plasters to work on the Normal School. Sir Michael Cashin was told by the Prime Minister, that the position of labor agent for the Government at the Humber was only a temporary appointment, and no vote had been taken to provide a salary.

The Leader of the Opposition hoped to see the Normal School, if not by this administration, then by a succeeding one, turned into what is more useful public utility, a hospital. He was in no sense a Normal School man. This country cannot afford it, much less an expert to lay out the grounds. He could show where the country lost thousands of ollars in not accepting the lowest tenders for work.

Mr. Sullivan discussed several matters of importance. He contended after the revelations of the past month that the Audit Act should be amended. If not the Auditor General should be held to strict accountability of the acts of the Government for the current year. Not only police had to be supplied but they had to be dressed in different uniform. Now they were coming back to scrap their uniforms. The Normal School being turned into a hospital he heartily endorsed. There was a crying need for more hospital accommodation as the outport people could not be admitted.

Mr. Vinicombe made a speech referring to the liquor situation.

In reply to a question by Mr. Higgins, if the Government contemplated the appointment of a Deputy Liquor Controller. Hon the Prime Minister said, no, the matter had never been considered by the Government.

The final vote in supply then passed.

!!!! The House went into Committee on Ways and Means.

The Insurance Tax was made one and a half per cent instead of one per cent to liquidate the loan for the purchase of fire trucks, etc. The tax to be continued until the loan of $30.-000 with interest is liquidated.

The Prime Minister introduced resolutions which calls for a loan of $3,500.000. The items of expenditure are made up as follows:

Temporary Loan Bank of Montreal ... .$	855,426.76
Deficit June 20, 1923 ..	850,000.00
Loss on Pit Props, Relief, Seed potatoes, etc. ...	1,000.000.00
Estimated Loss on Railway Operations	400,000.00
Due Bank of Montreal for Expenses of Militia Department	114,573,28
Expenses in connection with Soldiers' Graves .	40,000.00
Roads and Public Improvements	240,000.00
	$3,500,000.00

The Prime Minister stated the Government had appointed the Railway Commission to look after the operation for one year or until other arrangements were made as follows: The Colonial Secretary, the Auditor General and the Government Engineer.

The Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Sullivan objected to the form and personnal of the Railway Commission.

Hon. the Prime Minister replied that the Commission had been appointed mainly because of the insistence of the member of St. John's West Sir Michael Cashin, who properly argued that some one responsible to the House saould have supervision over the management. Mr. Hall, the Government Engineer, had experience gained as a member of the late railway commission and because of his position, while the Auditor General would look after the financial end. This was merely a temporary arrangement to continue until the House meet six months hence. Railway operations are going on at the present time satisfactory. The operating account is in credit and no demands for advances were being made on the Government. The Auditor General had estimated that the default on railway operation this year would not exceed $400.000.00.

Hon. the Colonial Secretary said he did not covet the appointment, but assured the House that so far as he was concerned there would be no discrimination of the 300 men employed on the Come-By-Chance Section. This was the timber the railway management stated could be profitably used and it was decided that the work should be divided equally between the ten districts which would be seeking such employment.

Hon the Prime Minister said he had given orders that the Militia Department be closed up in a month or six weeks. The vote stood over until today. The Revenue Bill and Public Service Act 1923-24 were passed and sent to the Legislative Council for its concurrence. The Bill providing for a steam trade service between the Colony and the West Indies was referred to a Select Committee consisting of Sir W. F. Coaker, Mr. Cave Capt. Randell, Mr. Higgins and Mr. P. J. Cashin.

The House then adjourned until this afternoon at 3 p.m.

New Government May Be Means Of Finding Way Out

Germany's New Chancellor Is Said To Be Seeking To Get In Touch With Poincare

BERLIN, Aug. 16—If Dr. Gustav Stressmann, the new Chancellor, is actually seeking to get in touch with the French Premier, M. Poincare, he will very likely find an enouraging atmosphere for informal pour parleys awaiting him is the opinion of political leaders here. These leaders assert that the path to the French Premier is already made tolerably passable for Dr. Stressmann, thru signaling back and forth between groups of French and German unofficial personages, who nevertheless, are not without authority or prestige.

It is taken for granted in Reichstag circles that the German Industrialists, far from discouraging the new Chancellor from embarking on such an enterprise, would not hesitate to make use of their influence with French industrialists and financial leaders with the purpose of actively furthering any attempt which aims to seek a dignified way out of the Ruhr impasse.

For Germany there has been a marked change for the better in the character of news brought in from Paris by Berlin newspapers during the past forty-eight hours, and instantaneous psychological effect of this on the popular mind has been to stimulate the belief in an early rift in the black Ruhr clouds. That the new government is eminently better situated to effect a solution of the Ruhr embroglio which would not carry humillation and political defeat with it, than was Chancellor Cuno's ministry, is now taken for granted, if only for the reason that Cuno by making an outspoken patriotic issue of the Ruhr situation, gradually became ensnared in a hopelessly deadlocked position from which he was unable to disentangle himself without prejudicing Germany's case.

Arrest of De Valera May Mean Republican Victory

DUBLIN, Aug. 16—It is pointed out here that the Free State Government can intern DeValera, captured yesterday at Ennis, for six months, or try him before a civil tribunal, but indications at present are that the former alternative will be adopted, and that he will be interned with Austin Stack and his associates.

One of the first effects of the arrest has been a large increase in the number of Republican candidates to be nominated Saturday for the Dail Eireann.

The Sinn Fein director of elections announced to-day that fifty candidates selected may be increased to one hundred or more, as messages from constituencies were urging such a course.

The Republicans think their chances immensely improved by the dramatic arrest of their leader.

In dependents and neutral groups also there is hope to gain, they believing the ordinary voter wants peace, and will look for members who have not been associated with either side in the activities of the past year.

No Censure Is Passed On Marvale Commander

Loss of Ship Was Caused Thru Grave Error of Judgment, Is Court Finding.

LONDON, Aug. 16—The court of enquiry into the loss of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Marvale off Newfoundland, May 21st, found the casualty and loss of the vessel due to "grave error in judgement" on the part of the captain, through being over-confident in the position of the vessel. No censure, however, was passed on the Captain.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER VII.

"I hope you sent that shameless Brent girl away, too," she announced, with the calm attitude of one whose own virtue is above reproach.

Donald glared at her.

"Of course I did not!" he retorted. "How thoroughly unkind and unchar itable of you, Jane, to hope I would be guilty of such a cruel and unmanly action!"

The Laird waved his carving knife.

"Hear, hear!" he chuckled. "Spoken like a man, my son. Jane, my dear, if I were you, I wouldn't press this matter further. It's a delicate subject."

"I'm sure I do not see why Jane should not be free to express her opinion, Hector, that the Brent girl is quite outside the pale of respectable society."

"We shall never agree on what constitutes 'respectable society,' Nellie," The Laird answered whimsically. "There are a few in that Seattle set of yours I find it hard to include in that category."

"Oh, they're quite respectable, father," Donald protested.

"Indeed they are, Donald! Hector, you amaze me," Mrs. McKaye chided.

"They have too much money to be anything else," Donald added, and winked at his father.

"Tush, tush, lad!" the old man murmured. "We shall get nowhere with such arguments. The world has been at that line of conversation for two thousand years, and the issue's still in doubt. Nellie, will you have a piece of the well-done?"

"You and father are never done joining forces against me," Mrs. McKaye protested, and in her voice was the well-known note that presaged tears should she be opposed further. The Laird, all too familiar with this truly feminine type of tyranny, indicated to his son, by a lightning wink, that he desired the conversation diverted into other channels, whereupon Donald favored his mother with a disarming smile.

"I'm going to make a real start tomorrow," he announced brightly. I'm going up in the woods and be a lumberjack for a month. Going to grow warts on my hands and chew tobacco and develop into a brawny roughneck."

"Is that quite necessary?" Elizabeth queried, with a slight elevation of her eyebrows. "I understood you were going to manage the business."

"I am—after I've learned it thoroughly, Lizzie."

"Don't call me 'Lizzie,' " she warned irritably.

"Very well, Elizabeth."

"In simple justice to those people from Darrow that you evicted from the Sawdust Pile, Don, you should finish your work before you go. If they were not fit to inhabit the Sawdust Pile, neither is Nan Brent. You have got to play fair." Jane had returned to the attack.

"Look here, Jane," her brother answered seriously: "I wish you'd forget Nan Brent. She's an old and very dear friend of mine, and I do not like to hear my friends slandered."

"Oh, indeed!" Jane considered this humorous, and indulged herself in a cynical laugh.

"Friend of his?" Elizabeth, who was regarded in her set as a wit, a reputation acquired by reason of the fact that she possessed a certain knack for adopting slang humorously (for there was no originality to her alleged wit), now bent her head and loked at her brother incredulously. "My word! That's a rich dish."

"Why Donald, dear," his mother cried reproachfully, "surely you are jesting!"

"Not at all. Nan Brent isn't a bad girl, even if she is the mother of a child born out of wedlock. She stays at home and minds her own business, and lets others mind theirs."

"Donald's going to be tragic. See if he isn't," Elizabeth declared. "Come now, old dear; if Nan Brent isn't a bad woman, just what is your idea of what constitutes badness in a woman? It would be interesting to know your point of view."

"Nan Brent was young, unsophisticated, poor, and trusting when she met this fellow, whoever he may be. He wooed her, and she loved him—or thought she did, which amounts to the same thing until one discovers the difference between thinking and feeling. At first, she thought she was married to him. Later, she discovered she was not—and then it was too late."

"It wouldn't have been too late with some—er—good people," The Laird remarked meaningly.

"In other words," Donald went on, "Nan Brent found herself out on the end of a limb, and then the world proceeded to saw off the limb. It is true that she is the mother of an illegitimate child, but if that child was not—at least in so so far as its mother is concerned—conceived in sin, I say it isn't illegitimate, and that its mother is not a bad woman."

"Granted—if it's true; but how do you know it to be true?" Jane demanded. She had a feeling that she was about to get the better of her brother in this argument.

"I do not know it to be true, Jane."

"Voila!"

"But—I believe it to be true, Jane."

"Why?"

"Beause Nan told her father it was true, and old Caleb told me when I was at his house this morning. So I believe it. And I knew Nan Brent when she was a young girl, and she was sweet and lovely and virtuous. I talked with her this morning, and found no reason to change my previous estimate of her. I could only feel for her a profound pity."

" 'Pity is akin to love,' " Elizabeth quoted gaily. "Mother, keep an eye on your little son. He'll be going in for settlement work at Port Agnew the first thing we know."

"Hust, Elizabeth!" her motherc cried sharply. She was highly scandalized at such levity. The Laird salted and peppered his food and said nothing. "Your attitude is very manly and sweet, dear," Mrs. McKaye continued, turning to her son, for her woman's intuition warned her that, if the discussion waxed warmer, The Laird would take a hand in it, and her side would go down to inglorious defeat, their arguments flattened by the weight of Scriptural quotations. She had a feeling that old Hector was preparing to remind them of Mary Magdalen and the scene in the temple. "I would much rather hear you speak a good word for that unfortunate girl than have you condemn her."

"A moment ago," her son reminded her, with some asperity, for he was sorely provoked, you were demanding the right of free speech for Jane, in order that she might condemn her. Mother, I fear me you're not quite consistent."

"We will not discuss it further, dearie. It is not a matter of such im portance that we should differ to the point of becoming acrimonious. Besides, it's a queer topic for dinner-table conversation."

"So say we all of us," Elizabeth struck in laconically. "Dad, will you please help me to some of the well-done?"

"Subjects," old Hector struck in, "which, twenty years ago, only the family doctor was supposed to be familiar with or permitted to discuss, are now being agitated in women's clubs, books, papers, and the public schools. You can't smother sin or the facts of life unless they occur separately. In the case of Nan Brent they have developed coincidently; so we find it hard to regard her as normal and human."

"Do you condone her offense, Hector?" Mrs. McKaye demanded incredulously.

"I am a firm believer in the sacredness of marriage. I cannot conceive of a civilization worth while without it," The Laird declared earnestly. "Nevertheless, while I know naught of Nan Brent's case, except that which is founded on hearsay evidence, I can condone her offence because I can understand it. She might have developed into a far worse girl than it appears from Donald's account she is. At least, Nellie, she bore her child and cherishes it, and, under the rules of society as we play it, that required a kind of courage in which a great many girls are deficient. Give her credit for that."

"Apparently she has been frank," Elizabeth answered him coolly. "On the other hand, father McKaye, her so-called courage may have been ignorance, or apathy or cowardice or indifference. It all depends on her point of view."

"I disagree with mother that it is not a matter of importance," Donald persisted. It is a matter of supreme importance to me that my mother and sisters should not feel more charity toward an unfortunate member of their sex; and I happen to know that it is a matter of terrible importance to Nan Brent that in Port Agnew people regard her as unclean and look at her askance.. And because that vaccilating old Daney did not have the courage to fly in the face of Port Agnew's rotten opinion, he subjected Nan Brent and her helpless old father to the daily and nightly association of depraved people. If he should dare to say one word against——"

"Oh, it wasn't because Andrew was afraid of public opinion, lad," Hector McKaye interrupted him dryly. Have you no power of deduction? 'Twas his guid wife that stayed his hand, and well I know it."

"I dare say, dad," Donald laughed. "Yes; I suppose I'll have to forgive him."

"She'll be up to-morrow, my dear, to disucss the matter with you," The Laird continued, turning to his wife. "I know her well. Beware of expressing an opinion to her." And he bent upon all the women of his household a smouldering glance.

Apparently, by mutual consent, the subject was dropped forthwith. Donald's silence throughout the remainder of the meal was was portentous, however, and Mrs. McKaye and her daughters were relieved when, the meal finished at last, they could retire with good grace and leave father and son to their cigars.

"Doesn't it beat hell?" Donald burst forth suddenly, apropos to nothing.

OBITUARY

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space in your much read paper to record a few brief remarks concerning the deaths that occurred at Ladle Cove during the short period of seven months, from December, 1922, to July 1923.

During the said time I served as teacher there, and thus after being among these kind people, learning of their ways, bearing with them their burdens, it is not now without sentiments of sorrow and regret that I make these brief remarks.

The first that God was to take from our midst was two dear children (my bright loving pupils) in the persons of Ivy and Harold Welton, aged 11 and 6 years, respectively. Although so young and beautiful, that disease, diphtheria, caught hold of them, and although all that could be done by loving hands was done to restore them to health, yet the result was death. Although it was so hard to the parents to lose their loving children, yet they learned to understand that the Lord, who giveth, has a sovereign right to take away, and that God's ways are always best.

The next that was to go was an aged gentleman, in the person of Abner Stratten. He had lived to a ripe old age, and left to mourn his sad loss many children and grandchildren, and a large number of relatives and friends. Great were the stories he could tell when talking of his life. The sorrowing ones have the consolation to know that "E'en down to old age God can follow us", and that "When hoary hairs shall their temples adorn, like lambs they shall still in His bosom be borne."

The next that was to be called to that better life was an orphan child of, perhaps, about a year old. She was the beloved child of Mrs Adelaide Abbott. The said Mrs. Abbott had lost her dear husband some time previously, but God who does all things well, also saw fit to call to His arms her dear baby. "Suffer little children to come unto me."

The next who was to be called up yonder was a young gentleman of 21 years, in the person of Corb West. The deceased was said to have contracted that dread disease consumption. He went to St. John's in the Autumn of 1922, seeking thereby all means to regain health, but God had ordered it otherwise, and in the month of May, 1923, he was brought home a corpse. Although it was so striking to his relatives and friends, yet "they sorrow not, as they who do have no hope." For some time before he had taken ill-health he had consecrated his life to the service of God, and during his whole life he was always found as a devoted member of the Sunday School. "Our earthly loss is heavenly gained."

The next who was to depart life was the saddest of all. It was a young gentleman of perhaps about 30 years, in the person of John Lewis Wellon. It was a most stricking occurence when the message was received that he, together with two other men were drowned at Aspen Brook. They were going for their day's work and the boat in which they were was leaky, and capsized. It brings to our mind more closely "In the midst of life we are in death." Although it was so hard to know of the poor men who had lost their lives thus, yet we must also be thankful to God that He had spared two other men and a boy who had been in the same boat at that time. He leaves to mourn his sad loss a loving father, one sister and three brothers.

When thinking of these deaths that occurred during such a short period of time, we are compelled to say as the poet, W. F. Lloyd, "My times are in Thy hands; my life, my friends, my soul I leave entirely in Thy care."

Here we have instances of children, youths and aged persons dying. It behoves us to hope to consideration that life is uncertain, that our time is surely coming and we know not when.

To all those who are mourning the loss of their dear ones I extend my greatest and deepest sympathy, and pray that the great God who has promised that He will lay no more on us than we are ableto bear, will ever with them in the time of trouble.

ALMA ATTWOOD.

Boyd's Cove,
July 19, 1923.

To The Editor, The Advocate,

Dear Sir:—Please allow us space in your esteemed paper, the Advocate, to record the death of our dear brother, Alfred John LeDrew, who passed peacefully away on June 19th.

All that loving hands could do was done for him, but all in vain. He was taken home, where there is no parting and no sorrow. We trust and hope some day we will meet our dear brother.

He leaves to mourn father, mother three brothers and one sister and a large number of friends.

He was buried in the Church of England cemetery. The service was conducted by lay reader, Hubert Lewis.

Inserted by his brother and sister.

Notes From Middle Brook

Middle Brook,
July 12th, 1923.

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir.—Will you please publish in your much read paper, the Advocate, a few items concerning our recent "tea and dance" in the C. of E. school, Middle Brook, in honour of our dear old teacher, Mr. George Chant, who is leaving us to-day. Mr. Chant came here about five years ago, teaching school. "He was a stranger who had come unto us and we took him in." Since that time he has made many friends and no foes. He is a man who was liked by all. We believe Mr. Chant felt the blow of departure keenly from so many kind friends. We believe he enjoyed himself well with us. We know Mrs. Chant did not enjoy herself so well as she had been sick nearly all the time, but it seems she is improving now. The dance was kept up till dawn, when Mr. and Mrs. Chant wended their way home. The blow was felt by all when Mr. and Mrs. Chant started to shake hands with men, women and children. A large number of small children was there to bid adieu to their good old teacher, Mr. Chant. Mr. Chant also did his duty in the Church as lay reader. Mrs. Chant was formerly Miss Dominey of Greenspond. She is returning back to her native home. We trust she will enjoy good health.

We wish Mr. and Mrs. Chant and daughter a long and happy life. I wish to say Mr. Chant was over 30 years teaching school. Mr. and Mrs Chant have said good-bye to the people who loved them unto the end.

West India Service Bill Referred to Select Committee

At last night's session, Prime Minister Warren moved that the West India Service Bill be referred to a Select Committee with power to sit out of session and report when the House next meets.

The committee consists of Sir W. F. Coaker, Mr. Cave, Capt. Randell, Mr. Higgins and Mr. P. J. Cashin.

Despite the News' statement this morning, the case of the wish being father of the thought, the West India Service Bill is not finished, and in all probability it will materialize at next session, when the Select Committee, who will have had an opportunity to investigate thoroughly into the matter, will report to the Assembly. Coming as it did on the end of a summer session, and being generally misunderstood, it will be just as well that a full knowledge of the possibilities of the service may be acquired during the next few months. The short period intervening before the House again meets will not make any appreciable difference, and it is preferred that the House discuss the matter with a fuller understanding than to debate it under the present conditions.

We understand considerable opposition to the service comes from Water Street exporters. This fact, however, is no criterion of the advantages or disadvantages of the service. If some of these displayed as much interest in the general welfare of Newfoundland as in matters affecting their own personal interests, the fishermen all over the country, would not be face to face with a shipping season that will again see rushed cargoes, glutted markets and sacrifice prices.

The conviction is becoming established that if anything has to be accomplished for the country's advancement, it must be done in the face of the protests of Water Street exporters, contorted to a semblance of public opinion.

The Case of the Fishermen

The time passes.

From all over the country comes the news that the fishing season has spent itself. Fishermen believe the most has now been done. Windy weather and the fall season will soon keept the boats to their collars and close the fishing season.

And men's minds are turning more directly to the few quintals which they have procured since early spring.

In those few quintals, many of them see their winter's livelihood, large or small as the case may be.

The value to the fishermen depends upon the price per quintal they will get; and the price per quintal will depend upon what the exporters will do.

But, the time passes. Already it is almost too late, even if exporters showed a willingness to shake of their deadly inertia No such willingness is apparent. The fishermen's case is allowed to shift for itself, and the exporters are employing their old-time methods to get ahead of their competitors in the rush to market.

Advocate's Suggestion Acted Upon

In the report of the Municipal Council weekly meeting, it will be seen that the Council have decided to make some very necessary repairs to Long's Hill, Freshwater Road, Prescott and Cochrane Streets.

The condition of the above streets has long since needed repairs, and the public will be glad to hear of the Council's decision to deal with a matter, which, as the Advocate recenlty pointed out, was getting worse and worse.

FRANK COMMENT ON RUHR

LONDON, July 24 (AP)—London has heard some frank comment recently on the situation in the Ruhr.

J. Thomas, the Labor leader, said recently at Shrewsbury: "It appears we are at the parting of the ways in European affairs, so far as France is concerned. No one wants to excuse Germany for her misdeeds, but we should say to France that the only solution of the present state of affairs is to get together, talk things over frankly, and watch the future with a desire to forget the past. We cannot stand by and allow the continuance of a policy which is ruinous to France as well as to Germany, and can but lead to disaster for ourselves."

President Sleeps In Quiet God's Acre of His Home Town

A Restful Spot, Sweet Smelling From Myriads of Flowers Piled Thickly Around—Military Pomp Banned—Widow Says Farewell at Graveside—Closing Scene All Very Simple.

(Special Despatch to The Toronto Globe)

MARION, O., Aug. 10.—The body of Warren G. Harding, twenty-ninth President of the United States, rests tonight in Marionn Cemetery. Near the brown-stone receiving vault, where the metal casket containing his still form was placed this afternoon, are the mounds which cover the bodies of his mother and sister. Round about are the graves of many with whom he was on terms of intimacy in Marion's pleasant community life. A quiet and restful spot, this God's acre of Warren Harding's home town, sweet smelling from myriads of flowers piled thickly around his temporary tomb, a spot suggestive of all that God's acre should be.

Tonight, while silent soldiers of the army guard his body, the widow of the President is on her way back to Washington to oversee the removal of many personal possessions of her husband and herself accumulated during their residence of more than two years in the White House.

Mrs. Harding Bans Pomp

All that could be done was done by Mrs. Harding to deprive her husband's requiem of every and any appearance of pomp and ostentation. She resisted the efforts of those who would make this pleasant, tree-shaded, homelike little city the scene of a great ceremonial. With that decision for which she is noted among her friends, and to which she has tenaciously adhered by a supreme exercise of will since the sudden passing of her husband eight days ago, she courteously but firmly vetoed the suggestions of some of those in authority in Washington to surround the obsequies with military display and the paraphernalia of official spectacle.

No troops were in that simple procession which followed the body of the late President to the tomb save that little band of soldiers, sailors and marines which had guarded the metal casket in its travels across the continent to Washington, and from Washington to Marion. No uniformed or ununiformed organization had a place in that line. There were many of national distinction in the funeral cortege—the President of the United States; the Chief Justice, himself once a President; Senators, Generals and Admirals, the great and near-great, and the would-be great—but the trappings of officialdom were conspicuously absent.

The Soldier's Farewell.

In only one thing did the widow conform to the tradition and custom which have surrounded the final rites for a President of the United States. Under the Constitution he was the Commander-in-Chief of the army and the navy, commissioned by the suffrages of the people through their chosen electors to be the generalissimo of an armed citizenry in war as well as their guide and leader in the ways of peace. So while the processional to the tomb was in progress, guns boomed a parting salute, and as the final words were said a bugler sounded "Taps," its mournful notes echoing through the valleys roundabout. It was the soldier's farewell

As the khaki-clad bugler stood in the doorway of the tomb and sounded his mournful farewell, leaning on the arm of her husband's devoted friend and secretary, the widow of Warren Harding passed through the door to say her own word of parting.

Widow's Display of Courage.

She was there but a minute, and when she stepped out again into the sunlight, it was with the dignity of a Queen. Traces of suffering could be discerned on the countenace behind that black veil. But her shoulders were erect, her eyes looked neither to the right nor left. She saw nothing of the President of the United States or those scores of men of note clustered around and about the resting-place of her husband.

Down the gravelled roadway, clear of spectators, she went with a firm step that gave majesty to her progress. Leaning only slightly on Mr. Christian's arm, flanked on one side by her husband's intimate, Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, his and her personal physician, and on the other by Major Baldinger, a Marion boy, personal aide to the late President, she moved the distance of 50 yards or so to where her car was waiting. Those who watched her will never forget that display of courage.

Closing Scene Very Simple.

"I will not break down," she had said over and over again in her assertion of will during that depressing journey from the Pacific Coast to Washington. She may have been saying it to-day as she walked from the place where she had left the man who was everything to her, and of whose achievements she was proud. To those who looked on she showed no signs of breaking. Hers was a private grief not to be shown to the multitude.

It was all very simple, the closing scene. The tens of thousands who stood along Marion's streets in the glare of the sun to watch the passing of the funeral procession—many or most of them strangers who had come to witness an historic spectacle that had none of spectacle in it—made it clear by their presence in such vast throngs that this was no ordinary funeral. Soldiers of the Ohio National Guard lined the way, performing the duties of civilian police, but beyond this evidence there was nothing to give to the last rites of a President of the United States the appearance that they were in memory of one so distinguished in the affairs of a great country.

In the house of the late President's father in East Centre street, where the casket lay since it was brought from Washington yesterday, simple prayers were said shortly before 2 o'clock this afternoon. The funeral procession formed and moved on when the heavy casket was placed in the grey motor hearse which carried it yesterday from the railroad station.

No Band of Music.

There was no band of music to give cadence to the mournful peace of that procession. It passed along East Centre street from the residence of Dr. Harding to State street and out Delaware avenue to the cemetery. Great crowds lined the way Before the head of the procession appeared the lawns of the pretty houses in Centre and State streets and in Delaware avenue were crowded with people, who made themselves at ease on the grass. Many others sat waiting on the spacious porches which are a striking and attractive feature of Marion homes. Along the edges of the sidewalks were many thousands more, shaded from the heat of the afternoon sun by the overspreading branches of the great trees which make Marion in summertime a bower of beauty.

Situation In Germany Is Improved

BERLIN, Aug. 16—The labor and food situation in greater Berlin today showed improvement over the previous days. This was due to the calling off of the general strike by the Communists.

Attempts of the Reds to paralyse the city proved to be a fiasco, owing to the opposition of the regular labor unions.

The currency shortage continues.

Reparations Must Take First Place

PARIS, Aug. 16—The Inter-Allied Reparations Commission formally notified Germany to-day that reparations constitute a prior claim on the resources which Germany has expected to utilize to guarantee her new gold loan. The commission decided upon this action Tuesday, the British delegate abstaining from voting.

"You Said It, Marceline!"

By MARCELINE d'ALROY

ON FOOLISH MATCHES

If a man does not make
A FOOL of himself,
There is always a WOMAN
Who will do it FOR HIM—
This is why
Nobody is surprised
If a CLEVER man marries
A FOOLISH woman
(Foolish being, in America,
"DUMB").
But if a WOMAN
Makes a foolish match,
Everybody is AMAZED,
For women are NOT expected
To make fools of THEMSELVES.
MEN are SUPPOSED to fall
For Youth and Beauty;
Women are NOT supposed
To fall at all;
They are intended
To CAUSE the slip.
Then, if the man is worth it,
Pick up the pieces
And treat them so tenderly
That the poor "TUMBLER" begs
To be led to the nearest altar
To be stuck together
For LIFE.
And the poor "LEMON" never suspects
That his little "orange blossom"
Was—a BANANA SKIN!

THE WORLD'S PRESS

Child Welfare.

(Philadelphia Ledger.)

Child welfare is a many-sided subject, revolving on a single pivotal point—the good of the child. Usually it is the good of the poor child. The best that the welfare workers may hope to do is to help that child to clean, healthy, honest manhood or womanhood. That, to be sure, is a tremendous best; and most institutions and most welfare agencies are bound to fall short of it. But it is a mark to be shot at; and the more shafts that can be made to hit the butt, whether or not they cleave the bullseye, the better for the community.

Reform in Egypt.

(Egyptian Mail.)

It is useless to expect the Egyptian woman to play an important part in public life when not one per cent of Egyptian womanhood can read and write; the precise figure is somewhere about seven in every thousand. Therefore, the first and most important stage in the program recently enunciated by Madame Sharawi Pasha is education and that means that there is spade-work to be done over many years before the Egyptian woman is likely to be able to make out her claim to vote and to stand for Parliament.

A Bliblem of Civilization.

(Le Canada.-

If we are concerned over the exodus from our rural districts, it is none the less a problem in many countries, in few of which indeed is it altogether absent. It has become a serious question in France, and an economist of that country deplores the fact that one should call that spoch one of progress which the number of citizens increases, while country people are more and more eager to leave their fields. To abondon the soil hardly seems to us a sign of progress, since, with the decrease of agricultural production life becomes more and more difficult.

Britain's Problem.

(Daily Chronicle.)

The support of our large population upon our small island area, with many handicaps both of soil and of climate, is anyhow a tough proposition. Possibly there is room for more than shame in our record of grappling with it. Yet so long as millions live below a decent subsistence is subject to continual uncertainty, room for shame remains.

Wilson's Idealism.

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

No system could exist in which both capital and labor were not actuated by self-interest. The best that can be hoped is that the self-interest on both sides shall be an enlightened self-interest, premeated by the spirit of justice, generiosity and humanity. Mr. Wilson's "The Road Away From Revolution" is the vision of a lofty-minded, warm-heared idealist, confined too much in his study.

SAFETY FIRST

Louisville Courier Journal—Screen your open-grate fires in the winter, swat the flies in summer, stop, look and listen at grade-crossings, don't start the kitchen range fire with the kerosene can, keep your nose out of other folks' business, and maybe you will live to be run over by a drunken joyrider.

JUST A CRIMINAL

LATEST

NEW YORK, Aug. 17—The outlook for a peaceful settlement of the controversy of the anthracite coal miners' dispute is discouraging, it was declared last night by John Hayes Hammond, chairman of the United States' coal Commission which met with both sides yesterday, in an effort to avoid a strike on September 1st.

PARIS, Aug. 17—The movement in the Rhineland, looking to the establishment of a Rhineland Republic, is beginning to be looked upon seriously by France since the three factions of Separatists have shown a disposition of getting together. Considerable interest is aroused by the proclamation issued by Separatist leaders in Coblenz, committing the proposed Republic to the payment of Rhineland share of reparations owed by Germany.

LONDON, Aug. 17—Great Britain, acording to The Morning Post, is arranging a loan of six million pounds for the Irish Free State. In effect, the paper says the government is abandoning claims for compensation for damage to British property in Southern Ireland during the period of disturbance.

BERLIN, Aug. 17—Greater Berlin is normal again, big plants are resuming full shifts, and beyond food-rioting, and pillaging of farms the situation is becoming much calmer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17—The five-power Naval Treaty, negotiated at the Washington Armament Conference, and the four-power Pacific Treaty, concluded here in December, 1921, will become effective at noon to-day.

NOTE OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. Primmer of Barr'd Island wish to thank all kind friends for sympathising messages and letters received during their hour of bereavement over the loss of their daughter. We also want to thank those who sent wreaths to adorn the casket: Miss Mary Blakey, Misss Laura Rendell, and also nurse Harvey, who helped to make the beautiful wreath, the broken harp and also Miss Cerry of Joe Batt's Arm, for another wreath, and Miss Taylor, C. of E. Teacher of Barr'd Island.

We also wist to thank kind friends of St. John's for sympathising letters Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. Wilton, of Bonne Bay, Mr. and Mrs. Snow of Carbonear, and every one far and near who did anything to help the deceased one during her illness, especially Nurse Harvey for prompt attention and Dr. McKenzie of Fogo, who never delayed when called upon and Mrs. Donnohue, South Side, Joe Batt's Arm, who immediately after hearing the sad news sent a very heart-felt message.. We also wish to express our sincere sympathy for the loss of her dear husband a few months ago. May God help us to bear our troubles on earth, knowing that we all shall meet in Heaven.

Eric Geddes Sees Dismal Future For British Trade

LONDON, July 24 (AP)—"I put the settlement of the European situation first and foremost of all measures which can be taken for the improvement of trade and the reduction of unemployment in this country," said Sir Eric Geddes, former cabinet minister and economic authority, addressin the Bradford Branch of the Federation of British Industries the other day.

"The general upward trend of trade," continued the speaker, "is checked because of the disturbed condition of Europe, and while I have fair reason to hope for an upward trend in the cycle of trade, I can at present see nothing but blackness when I look for a resumption of the upward progression in the general level of trade shown during the last century.

"Our unemployment is caused by the state of Europe. The working, trading, and banking community of the country cannot too insistently bring before the government the conviction that the great problems of this country would melt as mist before the sun if a stabilized condition could be brought about in Europe.

"Not only can Germany not purchase from us, but Italy prefers to purchase from Germany because German cost of production is much lower owing to her depreciated currency. And it does not stop there. India cannot purchase from us because Germany cannot purchase India's products, and so throughout the world.

As proof that England still lagged behind America in the efficiency of her factory operatives, Sir Eric said that while English hands did no more work than they did some years ago, in America there had been an all-round improvement of fifteen percent. in the efficiency of factory workers.

The royal family of Japan is engaged just now, you will be interested to hear, in the study of the subject of Socialism. A number of members of that family are busily reading books on Socialism. For instance the Prince Regent is studying such a book, while Prince Chichibu, second son of the Emperor, is attending a course of lectures on the development of Communism from the time of the French Revolution.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

A desire to keep abreast of the times in political thought—this is said to be the cause of their interest in Socialism. "We do not propose to study a dangerous Socialism which is subversive of the welfare of the State," explained one of the authorities of the royal family, "but we intend to study and understand the healthy economic phases of State Socialism and to foster healthy thought which is fitting to the present age."

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

The son of the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain, is a Socialist. The world's five greatest living writers are Socialists: Anatol France, Gerhardt Hauptmann, H. G. Wells, G. Bernard Shaw and Maxim Gorky.

A great hospital for disabled Negro veterans has been erected by the American government at Tuskegee, in the State of Alabama. It was decided to fill the many posts of doctors, nurses, etc., with colored people.

Immediately there was a great howl from the Ku Klux Klan and other bigots in the Southern States against the plan to give these posts to Negroes. They should be given to white people, it is claimed.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

This would be amusing if it were not disgusting and revolting. In no Southern hospital is a Negro doctor or nurse employed. Indeed, no colored doctor or nurse is permitted to treat or attend to a white person in those States.

And yet the whites want the posts of doctor, nurse, etc., in this hospital which is to be used exclusively by Negroes! It shows to what lengths of ridiculousness greed can carry men.

There is much good sense in these words, spoken by Henry James Forman, an American writer:

"The test of a nation is in what it most values.

"There was a time when success in business or on the Stock Exchange constituted greatness in this country. We are, however, in process of shifting. When our standerd of value is completely changed and we as a nation, put the highest value upon intellect, then great thinkers and writers will arise in this land to an extent yet undreamed of.

"Let the heroes in public schools for a generation be great thinkers, writers and spiritual leaders, rather than generals and merchants, and the attitude of our nation will be materially altered.

"Extol the man who never could compromise with prejudice who dared to face and speak the truth, however unpopular. He surely is the type of hero to put before the youth of the nation."

A very remarkable thing was done by doctors in an American hospital some time ago. In the New Haven Hospital a woman was suf ering from a severe abdominal hemorrage from which patients rarely recover Quick work was required. The blood expert was summoned, the blood was drawn from the abdominal cavity, the wounded vessels tied, and the blood almost immediately filtered and reinjected into the dying woman's veins. The effect was almost instantaneous and the woman recovered. In this and other case handled on the same day the citrate method is used, the citrate being added to the blood to prevent coagulation.

It is things like this that cause me to want to take off my hat whenever I see a representative of Science. Can we ever estimate the debt humanity owes its Scientists?

Ponder well these words, written in the Manchester Guardian, the famous English liberal newspaper, by Bassett Digby:

"China has more booksellers than we have, and far more than there are in America. Japan is the bookiest nation in the world."

And yet we send missionaries to convert the Chinese and Japanese "heathen!"

Official Spanker For San Francisco Chinese

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 14 (AP)—"Spanking neatly done" might be the sign on the door of the headquarters of the Chinatown squad at the Hall of Justice here. Police Corporal Jack Floyd is the official spanker, and rarely a day passes that he does not imprint his trademark on some incorrigible Chinese youth.

Corporal Floyd, who, because of the fierce aspect he assumes on punitive occasions, is also known as the "Mandarin of Chinatown," first entered his present profession about three months ao when a worried Oriental parent confided to him:

"My boy, Sam, he no likee go school. All-time lun away. Take him juv'nile court—no good. No like juv'nile court. Sam jus' lun away some more. You spankee him, Mistah Floyd." And Floyd did.

So appreciative was the parent of Floyd's handiwork that he presented him with a canary bird in a picturesque cage. Today a dozen canary birds at the Hall of Justice testify that Floyd's business is expanding.

Board of Fire Underwriters in connection with the "Fire Protection Week." It was decided that Councillors Outerbridge and Dowden will represent the Council. The Inspector General also thanked the Board for the Maps of the City given him.

The offer of Mr. B. B. Stafford to pay his proportion of cost for curb and gutter fronting his residence, Allandale Road, was accepted.

A communication was read from Mr. Mews, Deputy Colonial Secretary, informing the Council their request for proportion of road grants for the city will be brought to the notice of the Executive Council at the first opportunity.

E. A. Crowther, for the Trustees of Victoria Hall, will be forwarded the required informatiol re taxes on public buildings.

J. C. Nichols applied for position as spare man on the Sanitary Staff. There is no vacancy at present.

Mr. Viscount's complaint re light, Murphy's Square, will be attended to by the Reid Nfld. Company.

A communication was read from the Colonial Cordage Company complaining of the condition of Pleasant Street and Mundy Pond Road. This was referred to the City Engineer.

J. H. Larkin, wrote, asking opportunity to tender for plumbing work in connection with the new Sanitary Stables. He will be given an opportunity when the work is ready to be proceeded with.

Claim of M. Parsons, Freshwater Road, for compensation for hens destroyed by dogs was referred to the City Solicitor.

Messrs. Murdock and Gillard, Convent Square, are to be given permit to install electric motor.

Bowring Brothers wrote stating the sluice at the Southside premises is at present filled up with salt, etc. The matter was referred to the City Engineer, who will have it attended to.

Permission was granted Mr. B. J. Miller to fence his land, Hill of Chips. The Engineer will give him the street line.

Mrs. A. Cochrane's request to build extension to her residence, Cabot Street, was granted.

E. D. Phelan's application to erect bungalow on Summer Street was refused, until such time as he submits ground plan.

John Earle, 33 Field Street, applied for permission to build garage at the side of his house. Permit was refused.

The City Engineer's report for week was read, giving an account of the number of new services installed; that the main on Duckworth Street had been repaired and the pipelaying at Mullowney's Hill completed—the only work remaining to be done at this place being the installation of the 16" hatch box, 2 air valves and 2 sluices, connections for which will be made the first favourable opportunity; that the gullies on Cuddihy Street, Theatre Hill and Goodview Street were completed, and the following streets and roads were undergoing repairs: Southside Road Barter's Hill, Alexander Street, Hutchings Street, Lime Street, Robinson's Hill; also Water Street West and King's Bridge Road were being macadamized and Monkstown Road was receiving a coating of oil. He informed the Council that the work in connection with the oiling of Streets had been considerably delayed owing to the unfavourable weather. He stated that the number of miles of roads within the city limits was 48½, namely in the East End 22 miles, and the West End 26½ miles.

With reference to the appropriating of houses, LeMarchant Road, the Engineer is to see the owners and report back for next meeting.

On the suggestion of Councillor Ryan, some necessary repairs and improvements to Long's Hill and Freshwater Road are to be proceeded with, and as suggested by Councillor Outerbridge, improvements will be made to Cochrane and Prescott Streets.

The tender of Messrs. Bolger Bros. for the building of the new Sanitary Stables was accepted, it being the lowest. He is to give the necessary guarantee for the faithful performance of the work. It was ordered that the old office and outhouses at the Sanitary Yard be advertised for sale.

Editor, The Evenong Tdvocate,

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me space to record the death of Hettie, darling child of Archibald and Martha Moore, aged eleven years, who died at St. John's on June 29th, where her mother had taken her for medical treatment. She being a member of the Methodist Sunday School, a large number of children followed her to the grave, each wearing a white knot of ribbon and dropping it on the coffin biding farewell to their dear little companion until the Resurrection Morn, when they hope to meet again. To know Hettie was to love her; such a dear bright girl. Being the Supt., I often went to see her and shall miss her sweet voice joining so heartily in the singing.

She leaves to mourn her, father and mother, two sistere, three brothers and lots of friends. They also wish to thank all the kind friends who helped them in many ways in their bereavement and for writing dear Hettie in her illness.

Though cast down, yet not forgotten;
Though afflected, not alone;
Thou didst gove, and thou hast taken,
Blessed Lord, thy will be done.

Passengers Tell Story of Stranding of S.S. Sable I.

From the passengers of the stranded steamer Sable I., who reached the city by special train last night, it was learned that the ship left Sydney Saturday evening last for St. Pierre where she arrived on Monday. Here some passengers and 1200 cases of liquor were landed and the ship resumed her voyage to this port at 7.10 p.m.

A heavy gale was blowing at the time, with rain, and the ship could make only seven knots. Everything went well till 9.22 p.m., or little over two hours after leaving the French port, when the ship struck what is believed to have been a submerged wreck or some other obstruction.

When the steamer struck she shivered from stem to stern, but did not hold, as she went straight on, which gives rise to the belief that it was not a rock that caused the accident.

The chief officer was on the bridge at the time, and Capt. Murley was in the engineer's room. Immediately the accident occurred, he took charge, and as the steamer began to leak badly in the forward compartment, Capt. Murley ordered the boats lowered.

The discipline was excellent, and there was no panic of any kind, all the crew and passengers taking up their repective stations, and in quick time the boats were ready in case those on board would be forced to abandon the ship.

The pumps were set going but failed to stop the flow of water which kept gaining, and as the steamer was going down by the head, Captain Murley decided that the only thing to be done was to betch the ship, and, looking up his chart, he selected what he believed was a suitable spot, and within forty-five minutes the Sable I. was safely beached, and according to those in the vicinity, Captain Murley did better than if he had had a pilot on board.

The ship went in over a reef and is lying on the inside with fourteen feet of water under her stern, and her forward hold full of water. Some forty-five head of cattle were in the after hold, and in less than half an hour after the steamer struck, the water was up to their legs. After the beaching the pumps became choked owing to feed and other cargo getting into them.

On Monday night all the passengers and crew slept on board, as there was no immediate danger, and it was Tuesday afternoon that the passengers went ashore, the Sable being then high and dry on the beach. On Tuesday morning the cattle were landed in slings and are now on Lamaline Island where they are being cared for.

The passengers were received most hospitably by the people of the place who did everything possible for them until they joined the Argyle for Argentia.

All speak in glowing terms of Capt Murley for the manner in which he safely beached the ship, while they also have a good word for the crew, who remained at their posts all thru the ordeal.

There were twelve passengers on the Sable I., including Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Baldwin of Chicago, Mr. W. E. Baldwin and son, Richard, aged 14 years, of Montreal, the former manager for Canada of the Fidelity Phoenix Assurance Co., of New York, of which Mr. Geo. R. Williams is the local agent; Harry S. Mevartney, of the firm of Oliver and Mecartney, Attorneys, of Chicage, who is here on a fishing trip, Edwin Burton, Sergt. Major Arch Goobie who was accompanied by a nurse, Miss C. M. McDonald, a tourist, V. T. Bateman, Miss Mildred Ball, Mrs. A. J. Dove, and Miss J. E. Dove.

The Sable is in a very exposed position and the chances of her being refloated are not bright. The s.s. Yankton, due to-day, called at Lamaline yesterday, where she landed pumps and other gear, while the Stella Maris and the American are also enroute with divers, pumps, etc., and as soon as they reach the scene operations will start immediately. The Yankton is bringing along a quantity of fruit and other perishable goods that was included in the Sable I's. cargo.

Opening and Dedication Corpus Christi Church

The opening and solemn dedication of the new Church of Corpus Christi at Waterford Bridge, Kilbride Parish, will take place on Sunday next, August 19th, at 11 a.m.

The new Church has now been completed. During the past week the new Altars—two of which, the main Altar, and the Sacred Heart, kindly presented by Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hanley, while the third Altar, the Blessed Virgin's, generously donated by Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Murphy—were placed in position.

The Church will be dedicated by His Grace, the Archbishop, who will be assisted by Rt. Rev. Mgr. MacDermott; Rev. J. J. Rawlins, the Pastor, and the City Clergy of St. Patrick's and Cathedral Parishes. The ceremony will consist of the laying of the Corner Stone, the blessing of the Bell—the gift of Hon. F. McNamara—and the blessing and dedication of the Church. It was in the year 1864 that the Corner Stone of the old Church was laid by Dr. Mullock. That Church was destroyed by fire in the year of the Great Fire of 1892. During all the years the people of the parish, assisted by their kind friends outside, have been energetically working to gather funds whereby they would be able to erect another home to the Living God. The ambition of years has now been fulfilled. To this dedication ceremony on Sunday they extend a very hearty invitation to one and all of the friends and supporters of the parish. At the conclusion of the Solemn High Mass the sermon for the occasion will be preached by Rt. Rev. Mgr. Dermott. The Cathedral Choir under the leadership of Mr. Hutton will be present, while the C. C. C. Band will also be in attendance.

Fish Scarce at Labrador

The following report has been received from the Captain of the S.S. Home:—

"Bad fishing on Labrador, Newfoundland side, practically nothing doing. The weather for the past few weeks has been very poor."

PERSONAL

Mr. C. F. Taylor is leaving by the Rosalind to-morrow for New York.

Mr. E. R. Bowring, Jr., leaves by the Rosalind to-morrow, for Halifax.

Mr. Sclater Ellis and his sister, Miss Mary Ellis, are leaving for New York by the Rosalind to-morrow.

Mr. A. H. Streeter who for the past fifteen years has been employed at Marshall Bros., has accepted a position with Jas. Baird Ltd.

Mr. Caleb Clarke, brother of Mrs. Andrew Goobie of this city, who left Brigus 35 years ago, arrived by the s.s. Rosalind yesterday morning on a visit to the old Homestead.

Captain Eric Chafe who was on a business trip to the West Coast returned by last night's train. Captain Chafe was at Lamaline when the Sable I. went ashore and the passengers are loud in their praise of the manner in which he assisted in making them feel at home.

Mr. William J. Murphy, brother of Mr. T. Murphy, builder, Cross Roads, leaves for his home at Boston by the s.s. Rosalind. Mr. Murphy was on a visit to his brother, and while here enjoyed the company of his old friends. Thirty-five years ago he left Blackhead, St. John's for the States, where he became an electrician. He has paid a few visits to St. John's since he first left it.

S. S. Sable I. Will Probably Be Refloated To-morrow

The s.s. Stella Maris is at the wreck of the Sable I installing wrecking pumps. If weather conditions are favorable the Stella Maris expects to tow the ship off to-morrow. The present plan is to tow the Sable I to Halifax for repairs. The pumps now being installed will keep the ship in seaworthy condition. It may be that some temporary repairs will have to be made, in which event the ship will be taken to Burin or Lamaline. Practical seamen are of opinion that the Sable I's damages are not very serious and they back their conclusions from the fact that such ship was able to steam 45 miles and be kept afloat with the aid of her own pumps before being beached. The work of repairing the ship if she can be successfully towed to Halifax will be rushed and we hope to see this popular boat on her old route in the course of a few weeks.

Young Lady Finds Boarding Expensive And Quits Country.

A young lady who arrived here early in July to spend a vacation, apparently did not receive the welcome home she anticipated. The first few days were spent with her mother, but family affairs caused her to move to the residence of her brother-in-law. This happened about five weeks ago. In the interim the 'visitor' spent two weeks around the bay. When she came to change boarding houses on last Saturday she was presented with a board bill which she refused to pay, and her brother-in-law held her trunks. The Judge, while sympathizing with the visitor, had to enforce the cold maximum of the law, which says "Nothing for nothing;" but he cut the bill in two, as there had been no specific arrangement of terms of board. He also made an order for the delivery of the trunks. The young lady is leaving by the Rosalind to-morrow and says 'twill be late when she comes again to spend and "old home" month with her mother's people. This can only happen if she is provided with a wad large enough to provide a suite de luxe at the Ritz-Carlton.

Fishery Reports

Brigus to Bay Roberts Point—Codfish prospects poor.

Cape Race to St. Shotts—Codfish prospects fairly good. There are 15 schooners on the fishing grounds; fish fairly plentiful for trawls and jiggers. Some traps got good hauls last week.

Change Island—Fishery prospects not very encouraging. There has been a little improvement during the week in traps but fishermen have not been able to work traps owing to adverse weather.

The traps around Trinity have all been taken in and the fishery practically abandoned.

From Channel to Port aux Basques—There has been no improvement in the fishery for the week ending August 11th.

Reports from Winterton, T.B., indicate there is a marked improvement in fishery there during the last few days. What is needed is good weather to enable people to get on the grounds. Trawls are doing good, securing 1 to 4 quintals each.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Back in the old days when William Hohenzollern, now living quietly in Holland, used to enjoy travelling about Europe as the German emperor, the steamer Bremen often saw him installed in the imperial suite, built gaudily for his personal use. And at that time it was related, though never proved, that a sumptuous royal coffin was always carried on this vessel, in case of eventualties

It now appears this story was true. The Bremen is to-day the Constantinople, running between Sandy Hook and the Golden Horn. Down in her hold there was found recently the coffin referred to. It is a pretentious affair, lined with silk and decorated with gold and silver. William last travelled on the Constantinople in 1912.

Argentina abolished the death penalty from the penal code about a year ago, and since then there has been a noticeable increase in crimes of violence in this city. The question of restoring the death penalty has arisen, and a bill to this end has been introduced in Congress.

Large numbers of emigrants from Europe, many of them belonging to the criminal classes, have come to Argentina recently, and the present crime wave is attributed to this undesirable element.

A Fascist party, after the model of the Italian Fascisti, has been organized in Roumania. Its motto is "Justice to the just, death to the evil; Fascismo never forgets."

In its program the new party declares that Roumania needs, first of all, a dictatorship for the restoration of order, security, and honest dealing. It calls also for the expulsion of foreigners, whose presence to the extent of 2,000,000 persons gravely complicates the housing problem.

Women to succeed in business must learn to dress comfortably without losing the charm of their sex, and to take correction from the boss without weeping, according to Mrs. Alice Foote MacDougall, New York business woman.

Mrs. MacDougall, who predicted recently that within a century women will be "doing all the business," said that the observance of a few simple rules would hasten the time when they would take over such control. Other suggestions were:

"Discuss abstract questions without making personal application of everything that is said.

"Stick to agreements without squirming if you are getting the wost of it.

"Say 'no' at the right time."

British Income Tax Relief

(Editor Evening Advocate)

The new Finance Act contains a section of interest to certain residents abroad, viz; public servants. In such cases it is now provided that, when liability as a resident arises, emoluments, pensions and annuities payable in Great Britain or Northern Ireland shall be changeable to tax which will be deducted by the paying authority.

So far as payment of Tax is concerned, it is now possible to claim for three years ended 5th April, 1923, and it is apparent that many persons have yet to discover that they are entitled to claim under one or more of the following classes of relief:

1—Exemption in respect of dividends on certain British Government Securities where the beneficial owner is ordinarily resident abroad.

2—Exemption in respect of interest or dividends on foreign or Colonial Securities, stocks, &c., owned by a person not resident in the United Kingdom .

Reduction or exemption from tax on Income from sources within the United Kingdom, in the case of British subject, Crown servant, widow of Crown servant, servant of British Protectorate, employee of missionary society, resident in the Isle of Man or Channel Isles, or resident abroad for sake of own health or health of member of the family.

4—Reduction of tax where Income Tax has also been paid on the same Income in another part of the Empire.

A Cattle Story

MORLEY, Alta., Aug. 13—Mrs. Winifred Reeve, "Onto Watanna", so widely known as a writer has given Canadian setting to her latest novel, "Cattle." For the past seven years Mrs. Reeve has lived on a large ranch near here where her husband has been engaged in the breeding of Hereford cattle. The whole story of "Cattle" is woven round the pure-bred cattle industry, with which she has become so familiar, and Hereford bulls, for which Alberta has become world-famous, figure in the novel with almost as much importance as the various characters.

SCRAPPING OF SHIPS TO BEGIN AT ONCE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17—The Naval Limitation Treaty and four-power pact of the Washington Conference finally became effective to-day when representaives of all the signatory powers gathered at the State Department and formally exchanged ratifications.

The formality took place shartly after oonn and was accompanied by any public ceremony.

The actual scrapping of first line ships under the Naval Treaty will be gin immediately and by the terms of the four-power pact, the Anglo-Japanese Alliance is terminated automatically by to-day's ratifications.

Should Give Mutual Aid

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 18—An offer from British Columbia to help the Maritime Provinces in their efforts to have Canadian goods routed thru Canadian ports rather than thru Portland, Maine, was contained in a communication received by Mayor Fisher

The communication pointed out that both East and West had their problem and should aid each other in seeing that Canada was indeed a land for Canadians.

The western problem was oriental immigration.

Beautiful Gift To Mrs. Harding

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 6—Bearing the Canadian Coat-of-Arms, embossed on a cover of mole morocco and tooled in gold, the only and original copy of "Canada Beautiful" was presented to Mrs. Harding, wife of the President of the United States, at the reception at the Jericho County Club recently. This is the gift of the committee of American-born women resident in Vancouver to the "first lady of the land" as a souvenir of her visit to Canada.

The title page is illustrated with a picture of Mrs. Harding, and the book contains some of British Columbia's finest views. Each is illustrated with a poem by a well-known writer.

Condemns Canadian Text Books as Stimulating Spirit of War

TORONTO, Aug. 6—At the "No More War" demonstration held here last Saturday Miss Agnes MacPhail, M.P., devoted herself largely during the course of her address to a criticism of the text-books used in Canadian schools, which she stated glorified war and thus created a false impression in the minds of the young, at an age when they are most impressionable. "What we desire," she said, "by this movement is to stimulate the minds of the people, to influence them to read and come to a fuller appreciation of the relations between countries. There should be no secret treaties, but the fullest light of publicity should shine upon all international agreements."

HOME BANK OF CANADA HAS MANY BAD DEBTS

TORONTO, Aug. 18—The board of directors of the Home Bank of Canada announce that they have received from the recently appointed general manager of the Bank, an official report of a serious character, as to the amount of bad and doubtful debts contracted by the Bank and as to the extent of the appropriations necessary to be made in respect to a number of large loans and investments.

"It is apparent from this report and from enquiry with respect thereto by the board, that the resources of the Bank are seriously impaired. As no readjustment of capital or reserve could meet the situation disclosed, an endeavour has been made by the board to have the assets and liabilities of the Bank as a going concern taken over by some other bank or banks, but this has been found impracticable.

"The liquid resources of the Bank have been practically depleted and the board, for the purpose of conserving the assets of the Bank for pro rata benefit of depositors and other creditors according to their legal status respectively, have decided to suspend payment.

The Canadian Bankers' Association having been notified of this action according in accordance with the provisions of the Bank Act, appointed a curator to supervise affairs of the Bank and to protect the rights and intrests of its depositors and shareholders.

"The suspension in no way involves the value of bills of the Bank in circulation; these will be redeemed at face value."

CHANGES ARE MADE IN KING CABINET

OTTAWA, Aug. 17—Important cabinet changes were announced tonight:

Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Trade & Commerce since the formation of the King Government, takes the portfolio of Immigration and Colonization.

Hon. T. A. Lowe, member of the cabinet, without portfolio, succeeds Mr. Robb as Minister of Trade & Commorce.

Hon. E. M. McDonald, acting Minister of National Defence, becomes Minister of Defence.

The changes entail two bye-elections: Mr. McDonald will seek re-election in Pictou and Mr. Lowe in South Renfrew.

Up to the present the Immigration Department has been in the hands of Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, and Mr. Robb, it is announced, will give full attention to the developing of the immigration plan already worked out by Mr. Stewart and the government for an energetic and carefully considered campaign for immigration and settlement.

CHINESE BANDITS ATTACK AND BURN MISSIONS

LONDON, Aug. 18—Chinese bandits attacked the town of Tsaoshih yesterday morning burning the London Mission Hospital, Catholic Church and Foreign Headquarters.

The bandits looted the town, and two Irish Catholic priests are reported missing and eighty Chinese captives were taken.

Husband Missing

TORONTO, Aug. 6—The Ontario Motor League is asked many strange questions by tourists, but perhaps the palm is borne off by a woman who stated that her husband had taken the car out and she hadn't seen him for seven days. She felt it was the duty of the League to locate him for her.

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

A Letter from Mrs. Smith Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Trenton, Ont.—"I am writing to you in regard to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would not be without it. I have taken it before each of my children was born and afterwards, and find it a great help. Before my first baby was born I had shortness of breath and ringing in my ears. I felt as if I would never pull through. One day a friend of my husband told him what the Vegetable Compound had done for his wife and advised him to take a bottle home for me. After the fourth bottle I was a different woman. I have four children now, and I always find the Vegetable Compound a great help as it seems to make confinement easier. I recommend it to my friends."—MRS. FRED H. SMITH, John St., Trenton, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system, so that it may work in every respect effectually as nature intended. Thousands of women testify to this fact.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

(By PETER P. KYNE)

CHAPTER VII.

"It does, laddie."

"I wonder why?"

The Laird was in a philosophical mood. He weighed his answer carefully.

"Because people prefer to have their thoughts manufactured for them; because fanatics and hypocrites have twisted the heart out of Christion religion in the grand scramble for priority in the 'Who's Holier than Who' handicap; because people who earnestly believe that God knows their innermost thoughts cannot refrain from being human and trying to put one over on Him." He smoked in silence for a minute, his calm glance on the ceiling. "Now that you are what you are, my son," he resumed reflectively, "you'll begin to know men and women. They who never bothered to seek your favor before will fight for it now—they do the same thing with God Almighty, seeking to win his favor by outdohim in the condemnation of sin. A woman's virtue, lad, is her main barricade against the world; in the matter of that, women are a close corporation. Man, how they do stand together! Their virtue's the shell that protects them, and when one of them leaves her shell or loses it, the other assess her out of the close corporation, for she's a minority stockholder."

"Mother and the girls are to their eyebrows in the work of an organization in Seattle designed to salvage female delinquents," Donald complained. "I can't understand their attitude."

Old Hector hooted.

"They don't do the salvaging. Not a bit of it! That unpleasant work is left to others, and the virtuous and respectable merely pay for it. Ken ye not, boy, 'twas ever the habit of people of means to patronize and coddle the lowly. If they couldn't do that, where would be the fun of being rich? Look in the Seattle papers. Who gets the advertising out of a charity ball if it isn't the rich? They organize it and they put it over, with the public paying for a look at them, and they attending the ball on complimentary tickets, although I will admit the bills are paid and the last shred of social triumph has been torn from the affair, the Bide-a-Wee Home for Unmarried Mothers can have what's left—and be damned to them."

Donald laughed quietly.

"Scotty, you're developing into an iconoclast. If your fellow plutocrats should hear you ranting in that vein, they'd call you a socialist."

"Oh, I'm not saying there aren't a heap of exceptions. Many's the woman with a heart big enough to mother the world, although, when all is said and done; 'tis the poor that are kind to the poor, the unfortunate that can appreciate and forgive misfortune. I'm glad you stood by old Brent and his girl," he added approvingly.

"I intend to accord her the treatment which a gentleman always accords the finest lady in the land, dad."

"Or the lowest, my son. I've noticed that kind are not altogether unpopular with our finest gentlemen. Donald, I used to pray to God that I wouldn't raise a fool. I feel that He's answered my prayers, but if you should ever turn hypocrite, I'll start praying again."

CHAPTER VIII.

Donald left the following morning in the automobile for the logging-camps up-river, and because of his unfamiliarity with their present location, his father's chauffeur drove him up. He was gone all week, but planned to return Saturday afternoon to Spend Sunday with his family.

As the car wound up the narrow river road, Donald found himself thinking of Nan Brent and her tragedy. Since his visit to the Sawdust Pile the day before, two pictures of her had persisted in his memory, every detail of both standing forth distinctly.

In the first she was a shabby, bare legged girl of thirteen, standing in the cockpit of his sloop, holding the little vessel on its course while he and old Caleb took a reef in the main sail. The wilderness of gold that was her un-cared for hair blew behind her like a sunny burgee; her sea-blue eyes were fixed on the main sail out of which she adroitly spilled the wind at the proper moment, in order that Donald and his father might haul the reef points home and make them fast. In his mind's eye he could see the pulse beating in her throat as they prepared to come about, for on such occasions she always became excited; he saw again the sweet curve of her lips and her uplifted chin; he heard again her shrill voice crying, "Ready, about!" and saw the spokes spin as she threw the helm over and crouched from the swinging boom, although it cleared her pretty head by at least three feet. He listened to her elfin laugh as she let the sloop fall off sufficiently to take the lip of a comber over the starboard counter and force Donald and her father to seek shelter from the spray in the lee of the main sail, from which sanctuary, with more laughter, she presently routed them by causing the spray to come in over the port counter.

The other picture was the pose in which he had seen her the morning at the Sawdust Pile, when, to hide her emotion, she had half turned from him and gazed so forlornly out across the Bight of Tyee. It had struck him then with peculiar force, that Nan Brent never again would laugh that joyous elfin laugh of other days. He had seen the pulse beating in her creamy neck again—a neck fuller, rounder, glorious with the beauty of fully developed woman hood. And the riot of golden hair was subdued, with the exception of little wayward slips that whipped her white temples. Her eyes, somewhat darker now, like the sea near the horizon after the sun has set but while the glory of the day still lingers, were bright with unshed tears.

The sweet curves of her mouth were drawn in pain. The northwest trade-wind blowing across the bight had whipped her gingham dress round her, revealing the soft curves of a body, the beauty of which motherhood had intensified rather than diminished. Thus she had stood the outcast of Port Agnew, and beside her the little badge of her shame, demanding the father he had never known and would never see.

The young laird of Tyee wondered what sort of a man could have done this thing—this monumental wickedness. His great fists were clenched as there welled within him a black rage at the scoundred who had so wantonly wrecked that little home on the Sawdust Pile. He wondered, with the arrogance of his years, assuming unconsciously the right of special privilege, if Nan would ever reveal to him the identity of the villain. Perhaps some day, in a burst of confidence, she might. Even if she did tell him, what could he do? To induce the recreant lover to marry her openly and legally would, he knew, be the world's way of "righting the wrong" and giving the baby a name, but the mischief had been done too long, and could never be undone, unless, indeed, a marriage certificate, with proper dating, could be flaunted in the face of an iconoclastic and brutal world. Even then, there would remain that astute and highly virtuous few who would never cease to impart in whispers the information that, no matter what others might think, they had their doubts. He was roused from his bitter cogitation by the chauffeur speaking.

"This is Darrow, Mr. Donald. I don't believe you've seen it, have you? Darrow put in his mill and town while you were away."

Donald looked over the motley collection of shacks as the automobile rolled down the single unpaved street.

"Filthy hole," he muttered. Hello! There's one of my late friends from the Sawdust Pile."

A woman, standing in the open door of a shanty on the outskirts of the town had made a wry face and thrust out her tongue at him. He lifted his hat gravely, whereat she screamed a curse upon him. An instant later, an empty beer-bottle dropped with a crash in the tonneau and Donald, turning, beheld in the door of a Darow groggery one of the Greek fishermen he had dispossessed.

"Stop the car!" Donald commanded. "I think that man wants to discuss a matter with me."

"Sorry, sir, but I don't think it's wise to obey you just now," his father's chauffeur answered, and trod on the accelerator. "They call that place the "Bucket of Blood,' and you'll need something more than your fists if you expect to enter there and come out under your own power."

"Very well. Some other time, perhaps."

"You don't appear to be popular in Darrow, Mr. Donald."

"Those people left the Sawdust Pile yesterday—in a hurry," Donald explained. "Naturally, they're still resentful."

"They were making quite a little money down there, I believe. Folks do say business was good, and when you take money from that kind of cattle you make an enemy worth while. If I were you, sir, I'd carry a gun and watch my steps in dark alleys."

"When I have to carry a gun to protect myself from vermin like that mulatto and those dirty little Greeks, I'll be a few years older than I am now, Henry. However, I suppose I'd be foolish to neglect your warning to mind my step."

He spent a busy week in the woods, and it was his humor to spend it entirely felling trees. The tough experienced old choppers welcomed him with keen interest and played freeze-out each night in the bunkhouses each night to see which one would draw him for a partner next day; for the choppers worked in pairs, likewise the cross-cut men. Their bucolic sense of humor impelled the choppers to speed up when they found themselves paired with the new boss, for it would have been a feather in theca p of the man who could make him quit or send him home at nightfall "with his tail dragging," as the woods boss explained it.

H. B. C. TREATS MRS HARDING ROYALLY

VANCOUVER, Aug. 16.—A remark of Mrs. Harding's, overheard in a movie show, showed how practical a woman is the wife of the late President. As the weather grew colder she feared for the health of her husband's secretary, whose wife was absent: "George, I hope you brought warm underclothing with you." She herself was not allowed to be cold, with all the gifts of furs showered on her. An old world historical touch was given when the Hudson's Bay Company carried out a custom required by the charter of the Company (1670) that whenever a royal personage should visit Canada the company should "deliver a supply of furs." They chose to do honor to the President's wife and made her a "royal" by investing her with a silver fox stole from the Peace River district. The platinum catch bore the Company's coat of arms and the box containing the stole was done in a beautiful illuminated design of the "None Such" setting sail in 1668.

At Juneau Mrs. Harding was presented with a magnificent set of silver fox skins, at other points she received a gold nugget necklace and a collar her dog, Laddie Boy, of leather inset with walrus ivory and gold, besides countless other souvenirs.

ON MEN WITH "CENTS"

What would life be WITHOUT the MEN?
What would Christmas be Without SANTA CLAUS?
That's the ANSWER!
Of course, men are not everything,
But NOTHING seems much
Without them.
They really ARE
The LIFE of the party.
But they must be "NICE MEN,"
And CLEVER men,
With enough "CENTS"
To make dollars;
And enough SENSE to know
That though their dollars
HELP the machinery of life
To run more SMOOTHLY,
Money is NOT EVERYTHING;
Neither will it buy everything.
And men must remember
Nice women
CANNOT BE BOUGHT.
Yet, just the same,
They have to be PAID FOR.

Yesterday's Proceedings at the House of Assembly

Loan Bill For Three and One Half Million Dollars Passed—Business of Session Finishes—Prorogation This Afternoon—Change In Personnel of Railway Commission Announced.

Yesterday afternoon saw practically the close of the present session of the Legislature. The closing scene of the last day for practical work was marked with cordiality between the Opposition and Government, which could be almost felt. The asperity and personal ill-feeling, so manifested in recent years, was entirely absent. The anticipated final "bout" over the Railway Commission did not materalize, because at a party meeting held just prior to the opening, the former Commission was cancelled and the Colonial Secretary, the Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Hon. George Shea and the Hon. Tasker Cook, were designated a Commission to supervise Railway management until the House again meets.

The Colonial Secretary, in reply to Mr. Sullivan, said that Dr. R. H. Brehm was acting Physician to the Fever Hospital and Dr. A. Carnell acting Doctor of the Port, neither had received full appointment.

Strong objection was made to the publication of the speeches, in pamphlet form, of the late Prime Minister on the Humber and Railway resolutions, by the Leader of the Opposition and Sir Michael Cashin.

Hon the Leader of the Opposition expressed his appreciation of the manner in which the Government had received the objections raised to the Commission as announced yesterday. He thought the new Commission was perhaps the best that could be done under the circumstances, and felt that the public would have confidence in the gentlemen composing the Committee.

Sir Michael Cashin further criticised the vote for the Militia Department Hon. the Prime Minister replied it was the intention to wind up the department as speedily as possible.

Hon. Mr. Warren also said that a quarter of a million would be available for allocation on a per capita basis to relieve the unemployment situation and an additional $50,000,00 would be spent on railway improvements. There was also a balance due the Government on temporary loan which would be available later on. He estimated that the Armstrong Whitworth Co. now were employing 2000 men and an additional 1500 would find work in the lumber woods when the season opened. The A.N.D. Co. would be taking their usual quota, the Mooney and Crowe enterprize—there would be other operations carried on, cutting pit props, and he thought these combined industries would furnish employment for about 8000 furnish employment for 2000 or 8000

Mr. Higgins said he also trusted that those who were to be employed would be given useful public work and no more able bodied pauper relief as in the year past. He also enquired as to the Municipal work. He hoped the necessary guarantee would be given to enable the Council to carry out their plans.

If any emergency arose which called for extraordinary expenditure, he felt that the Opposition should be consulted.

The Finance Minister said the loan would be put up for tender and the fullest opportunity given entertaining bidders to have their tenders treated in a business-like manner.

Mr. Fox in commenting on the item of $1,000,000 required under the new loan to meet the loss on Pit props and other accounts incurred by the Department of Agriculture and Mines, asked the Prime Minister whether the proposed Commission of Enquiry would be appointed under the Public Enquiries Act.

Hon the Prime Minister said that the Public Enquiries Act was the only Act under which the investigation could be held. The only case he ever knew of such powers granted to a Commission was that mentioned by Mr. Fox, the Parnell case. Even in the Supreme Court a witness may decline to answer a question if such answer might incriminate him and lay him open to prosecution. He doubted the wisdom of amending the Public Enquiries Act.

Mr. Fox in reply stated that now that the matter had been specifically drawn to the attention of the Government, the responsibility rested with them. He hoped that the views of the Prime Minister, in whom he had the utmost confidence, would be amply realized.

The House then went into Committee on the Retiring Allowances Bill. This was passed without comment.

The Prime Minister introduced two Bills one, an Act respecting Preferential Tariff on the Products of Spain; the other respecting a Preferential Tariff on the Products of Jamacia.

These bills were read and sent to Committee of the Whole. The Committee passed then without debate.

The Loan Bill then passed as did also the Retaining Allowances Bill. This finished all legislation before the House.

The House adjourned until to-day at 2.30 when His Excellency the Governor will attend for prorogation.

Coolidge's Childhood

By ROSE C. FELD.

On the day President Harding died, Miss Rose C. Feld of the Sunday staff of The New York Times was sent to the scenes of Calvin Coolidge's childhood to get first-hand articles about the new President's childhood, anecdotes of his youth, recollections of his ki nand friends.

The Advocate begins publication of her story to-day which will be continued from time to time. It is a story of another son of the people rising to the highest position by pluck, honesty and ability. Harding was an industrious printer, and Calvin Coolidge a farmer's son.

PLYMOUTH NOTCH, Vermont, is the place where Calvin Coolidge, president of the United States was born and raised. Because "the child is father of the man," I went up to this remote and hidden little hamlet in the mountains of New England last week, and spoke to some of the people who knew him and lived with him during his early boyhood. His father was one of them, his aunt on his mother's side was another; two childhood friends and a cousin who lives in Pekinsville, some twenty miles from Plymouth Notch, were still others.

Plymouth Notch has no railroad station. One goes to Ludlow and takes an automobile. For thirteen miles the road winds up through woodland hills until the summit is reached. There stands the white frame dwelling which is the home of John C. Coolidge, the father of the president. Across the road is the general store of Plymouth Notch run by Miss Florence V. Chilley, a childhood associate of "Cal's."

Mr. Coolidge Sr., was on his front lawn having his picture taken by some newspaper people from Boston. He submitted, not without an air of weariness, to the posture of joyous congratulation showered upon him. It was Saturday morning, a day after his son had taken the oath of office in the old-fashioned little parlor whose only means of illumination is still the oil lamp. Think of that. The thirtieth president of the United States being sworn into office under the radiance cast by a lamp his great-great-grandfather might have read by!

The President's Father

After the photographers had left I talked to Mr. Coolidge. His greeting was kindly and courteous. One can't imagine him being anything but that. He is a man of seventy-eight, rugged, well-preserved and active. His hair is not yet gray. There is something Emersonian about his features. There is also an Emersonian dignity about him.

"Sit down," he said, motioning to the hammock strung across the proch.

"Now, what is it I can do for you?"

"Tell me about the kind of boy Calvin Coolidge was."

He smiled.

"That's a new one. You want to know the kind of boy he was? Pretty much the same as the man he is to-day. Quiet, thoughtful, rather shy and very good. He lived the normal life of a farmer's son. His mother died when he was thirteen. I kept the store across the road. Whenever I'd have to go to town or any place away from The Notch, I'd tell Calvin what needed to be done at home. That was all that was ever said. When I came back I'd say, 'Calvin, was the horse fed?'

" 'Yes,' he'd say.

There wasn't much conversation wasted. We understood each other.

"He was an excellent hand on the farm. He did all that was asked of him and never complained about the task. He wasn't much to look at in size, but I always felt that he could hold his own against any boy his age. What the other fellow had in extra weight, Calvin equalled in brain. Not that he was brilliant, but he was a good thinker. He was shrewd. He could see exactly where the weak spot lay in a situation and go at it in his quiet, unassuming way. He never made a noise about anything. Not that he didn't join in the fun the other boys had. He did, but you couldn't tell by looking at him that he was especially happy. He seemed very fearful of expressing any feeling.

Calvin as a Horseman

"From early childhood he gained a knowledge of horses. His grandfather who died when Calvin was six years old was very fond of him. One day when Calvin was no more than three he put him on a horse and told him to hold tight. The chain did. His legs clung to the sides of the animal but because of the insignificant weight or for some other reason, the horse bucked and threw him over his head. The child's arm was broken. Not his spirit, however. After the arm was set, his grandfather again put him on the horse. That was several days later. It was good discipline. This time nothing happened.

"Calvin is a good horseman to-day. He never was much of an athlete at school but he was never out of things entirely. He managed to take part in everything in his own, quiet, yet telling way.

"When he was at Amherst, for instance, he didn't stand out especially in any one activity. Yet when it came to choosing class orator, much of the attention of his classmates was directed to him. In the same class was a boy from New York, rich, influential, aggressive, and a fine speaker, the kind that is considered a social light and a good mixer. Cal didn't have any of these things to back him up. In Calvin's class and rooming with him was a boy named Deere, a son of the man who manufactures Deere ploughs. Some of the New York boy's friends came to Deere and asked him for his vote.

" 'Coolidge is good enough for me,' he said.

"The men then came to Calvin and asked him to step out of the race, they impressed upon him that he stood no chance of drawing the votes necessary for election and that his staying in the game would only deprive the other man of his strength. Calvin didn't say whether de'd step out or not. He wouldn't commit himself. He rarely does. On the day of the election, however, he drew all but thirteen votes of the class.

"I don't know whether he made a good speech or not. Calvin is not a brilliant talker. He has a dry humor all his own. If you like that, then you'd think he was a good orator. If you like the more colorful talker, then I guess maybe he'd bore you.

Invitation to Study Law

"There was one man, however, whom he didn't bore that day. That was Mr. Hammond, Judge Hammond of the law firm of Hammond & Field of Northampton, Massachusetts. The day after Calvin got home from college after graduation, he received a letter from Mr. Hammond inviting him to come and read law with him. I don't know that Cal ever thought much about being a lawyer before. He never spoke muc habout being anything. For a time I thought I'd like him to be a physician. He was very good in physiology. He apparently didn't care for that, tho. He didn't show a likeness for anything, for that matter. When he was getting ready to go to college, I asked him once what it was he wanted to study for. He didn't know, he said. He guessed all it was he wanted from college was an education.

"When the letter came from Hammond & Field, I asked him what he thought about law. He wasn't enthusiastic, but he thought he'd try it. There were two good lawyers here in Vermont with whom he might have studied, but he chose to go to Northampton. In Vermont in those days a man had to read law for three years before he could take the bar examination. In Massachusetts, apparently, you could take the examination whenever you thought you could pass it. Calvin didn't work especially hard to get ready for it, but about a year and a half after he had been with the firm, Mr. Hammond suggested that he try his luck at it.

" 'Why don't you take the examination, Calvin?' he asked.

" 'I guess I got to know something before I can pass it,' Calvin answered.

He didn't say much more, but when the next examinations came up, Calvin quietly took them and passed. He didn't come off with honors, but he passed. He opened an office for himself in Northampton soon after. He was a little over twenty-four at the time, I should say.

"That isn't telling much about his childhood, is it? But you see, there isn't much to tell. He was a mighty good boy. I never had to spank him. I never believed much in spanking. There are other ways of instilling discipline. But Calvin never needed much. He seemed to get things in his quiet, knowing little way. He kept out of trouble or if he got into it he managed somehow to get things straight.

A Pilferer of Candy

"Not that he wasn't mischievous. His mischief was of the quiet kind. He never did things that drew a wild guffaw of laughter. They might draw a smile or a chuckle. His grandfather used to tell a story about him which I can't vouch for, for I didn't see it with my own eyes. When I ran the general store Calvin would cross the road and toddle in to see me very often. I had a candy showcase the same as you see in every general store. One day when I was busy at work, his grandfather used to tell, young Calvin, who was only three or four years old, tried to open the sliding door of the candy case. He couldn't, so he drew up a chair behind the counter, and then climbed on the glass showcase, hoping to break the glass and so get at the candy. Fortunately he didn't succeed.

"Calvin spent a good deal of his time at his grandmother Coolidge's when he was a boy. His grandfather died when he was about six. The old lady as lonesome and Calvin and his sister, Abbie would go to stay with her. Abbie was Calvin's younger sister, the only sister he had. She died when she was fifteen. She was a very clever child. At thirteen she taught school. Calvin and she were very greatly attached to each other. You couldn't tell by the way they treated each other, but if you knew them, and their traits you couldn't help feeling that there was a great bond between them.

He was fond of her and he was fond of his stepmother. This fondness for his stepmother continued thru the years of his maturity. When she was sick before she died Calvin was never so busy with politicians and state's problems but what he would find time to write her a weekly letter.

"Calvin was alweys a great hand at reading. He doesn't read as much as his own boy, Calvin, but he used to read more than did any of the other boys in his community. That didn't prevent him from being a good hand with tools. He had to be, he was a farmer's boy." He stopped. "Come this way, will you?" the old man said after a pause.

Mr. Coolidge rose and led the way upstairs. On the first landing stood a small cabinet of drawers. Mr. Coolidge smiled.

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

A Printer's Funeral

To-day in the little Ohio town of Marion a printer is being buried. For him the King and Queen of the British Empire and all their stately court wear mourning. Toward his bier the great ones of the earth bow in sorrow.

And yet up in a bare Alaskan printing office they are showing proudly the last "stickful" of type he set up, or ever will set up. Wherever he went—into the up-to-date new offices of a great New York daily, or into the dingy composing-room of a country weekly—it was his delight to take off his Presidential coat, and step up to a printer's case, and feel with his aging fingers for the type he had never ceased to love.

As Senator for Ohio and President of the United States, he has written and spoken many fine things and sent them reverbating around the world from the sounding-board of his high office. But the work of his pen that is most widely known and will be longest remembered is a simple code of right conduct which he drew up in his editorial days for the guidance of his office colleagues. It is not spectacular. It is not pharisaical. It was written for daily use, and not for show. But it was born in the mind of a true gentleman of decent instincts, and today is pasted admiringly on the walls of hundreds of working newspaper offices.

It is his Gettysburg speech.

A great democracy can have no finer achievement than that it lifts such a man to the lofty pinnacle of its Chief Executive. It might so easily in its large carelessness permit itself to be captured by sordid intrigue for the head-centre of a conspiracy to legally loot the nation, or by a quack charlatan full of dazzling promises and soaring words, or by the cunning instrument of predatory interests.

But the American democracy chose a master-printer. And he has sunk more warships than Nelson—sunk them with the wand of peace. He stilled the raucous cry of the more uncouth among his own countrymen for the shoddy glory of possessing "the biggest navy in the world." He governed with a quiet dignity and won the respect of mankind. And he died a martyr to his belief that the United States could not stand aloof from the effort of earnest souls everywhere to establish a world-wide reign of law and justice.

On Wednesday in Washington they paid their homage to the dead President. To-day in peaceful Marion, they are burying a local printer whom they all love.—Montreal Daily Star.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, AUG. 18th., 1923.

THE HOUSE PROROGUES

At 2.30 this afternoon His Excellency the Governor, Sir William Allardyce, prorogued the first session of the twenty-fifth General Assembly.

The session has been in many ways a memorable one, but in point of important business transacted, there have been few sessions of the House since Responsible Government, in which Legislative measures of so far-reaching a nature have been enacted.

The inauguration of the Government's industrial policy marks an epoch in the country's history and constituted in itself a program of no inconsiderable importance.

The present has been one of the latest sessions on record, and in view of the Prime Minister's intention of calling the House to meet again in February only a few months will have elapsed between the prorogation of this and the opening of the next sitting. By that time it is earnestly hoped that the seeds of industrial development which have now been sown will have begun to bear fruit in the form of increased prosperity for our people.

The Way of the Nations

In 1914, the first year of the war, Britain's total expenditure on education equalled her expenditure on armaments. In 1923, Britain's expenditure on education is some thirty-eight million less than her total expenditure on armaments.

This striking statement, for which Sir Donald Maclean, M.P., is responsible, shows in what fashion the great war has fulfilled the hope of the ages, the assurance of peace.

As we look around the world to-day, the spirit of peace is not abroad; and almost can be heard the rumblings of another conflict, mightier, crueller and more terribly devastating because of the advance of science and the construction of deadlier weapons for destruction of mankind.

France is buckling on her sabres and entrenching in the Ruhr. Her finest officers are engaged militarising the manhood of countries and states of middle Europe, and the war tide rises high in the veins of her people.

While bloodshed follows wholesale rioting throughout Germany, Britain, with stagnant industries and millions of unemployed, partially deserted by her ally, gropes to find a way out, and silently prepares for the worst. Under those conditions military disarmament must be forgotten about.

Science and invention are drawn upon for self-protection—and wholesale destruction. There is no reason, says Edison, the inventive genius, why a gas cannot be spread over London or any other great city, and its millions be destroyed in three hours.

If mankind does not end war, war will end mankind, says another authority.

In the war's predicted results, mankind has not ended war, and the question arises burningly to-day: What of the future? Is the world heading for chaos?

Upon whose shoulders must the responsibility rest?

Some would say th eworld's leaders have failed in their responsibility: that they have betrayed the common people. Others blame the Churches and say religion has failed miserably, while others speak of class hatred and unpreventable unrest resulting therefrom.

Whatever the cause, the situation exists.

So small has the world become, there is no victory and there are no victors, for nations are too inter-dependent to crush the others without bleeding themselves, and victorious peoples become the helpless victims of crushed foes.

There is a proof of this in Europe to-day; Britain, with her unemployed, struggling to preserve peace and restrain France from destroying the German trade, a food for Britain's workers; and militant France, standing in the Ruhr on Germany's neck, while industrial inactivity reigns and no reparations are available to relieve her people and pay for enemy devastation. And, in the meantime, the fires of national hatred are made to smoulder and perhaps to blaze across the plains of Europe.

The minds of men are moving. Appeals are made to common peoples of the world to stop the butchery of mankind.

Below we reprint an article published in a London newspaper, which bespeaks the growing public opinion respecting the present situation.

TO GOVERNMENTS AND PEOPLES

By E. D. MOREL

Nine years ago you led your peoples to the shambles.

With cunning tools, through devious paths, in secret conclave, by plot and counter-plot, outmatching your rivals in astuteness, you had long prepared, equally with them, the way of Death for multitudes.

You prated to them of liberty, justice, progress, security and peace.

You bade them slaughter in the name of God, claiming his sanction for your enterprise, invoking the Merciful Christ, Whom you crucified afresh upon the Cross.

You promised them a world purged of the lust of hate.

Purified by their sacrifice, sanctified through their martyrdom, cleansed with the tears of women, washed white in blood:

In the blood of the Young.

Month followed month: years died and were born; still you bade them slay.

Stamped formless into the thirsty earth, torn and shattered; gory hollows which once were breasts; eyes from sockets blown, limbs mutilated, hanging loose; dying of thirst and wounds in shell-holes, writhing on barbed wire, trailing their entrails, rotting alive amid the stench of corpse-strewn trenches; gibbering maniacs—you made them so:

You! You!

What quarrel had they with those they fought, or these with them?

"Common people" all: this lad from Devon, that lad from Gascony, this youth from Baden, that youth from Tuscan plains—all filled with the joy of life, all products of a common human stock, sharing common hopes and sorrows:

Workers of the world.

If you had kept faith with those who strove but fell not,

Immeasurable was still your guilt.

If you had fully ministered to the needs of the widowed and fatherless,

Immeasurable was still your crime.

Yet forgiveness you would have gained. For infinite is the patience of the People, infinite the simplicity of their hearts, infinite their generosity and long-suffering.

But you have betrayed them!

* * *

Where is the liberty you promised them? Is it the liberty to starve amid rioting of luxury?

Where the freedom? Is it the freedom of the insufficient dole?

Where the justice? Is it the justice of the Poor Law and the Workhouse?

Where the security? Is it such security as the homeless have?

Where the prosperity? Is it the "prosperity" of impoverishment?

Where the peace? Is it the "peace" of Death?

* * *

For now you prepare once more a rich harvest for Death's sickle.

In your madness you create yet viler engines of destruction.

In your wickedness you devote anew the peoples' substance to their undoing.

In your blindness you seek again to drown your treacheries in the blood of the innocent.

You pollute the skies with winged flotillas of annihilation, which presently shall envelop sleeping cities in poison-storms:—

Destroying in a night the patient labour of centuries,

Raining incendiary shells upon the narrow buildings where your wage-slaves live,

Belching lethal gases o'er the countryside,

Asphyxiating entire communities.

In cold blood, with a cynical ruthless ness and deliberation which make of you the Master-Criminals of the ages, you plan the Peoples' doom.

Feverishly you cut down forests of spruce and fir, hickory and ash for your planes, turn your laboratories into vestibules for assassination, your chemists into hired assassins.

Science you prostitute in Murder's service.

Massacre on a scale never before dreamt of you elevate to the dignity of virtue.

Destruction you contemplate with a comprehensiveness staggering in its imbecility; destruction of teeming centres of population, of great hives of industry, of crops and all vegetable life.

The targets of your bombs will be the homes of the workers in shop and factory, in yards and fields.

* * *

In God's name, who and what are you that do these things? Whence your right to rule, to govern, to administer? Does warning of a wrath to come not cross the threshold of your complacency?

Deem you limitless the toleration of the Peoples?

The Problem of Education

There are many amongst our public men who seem to regard the proper education of our youth as a "fad." Their contention is that every effort made to keep abreast of the times in respect of education is so much time thrown away. On the other hand we have a state of affairs that is admittedly deplorable so far as the percentage of illiterate young men and women in the Colony is concerned and those who seek to deprive the growing children of today of the mental training that the times call for in every sphere of life and activity, are doing a grave injustice.

The following editorial from the Toronto Globe of August 11th will be found illuminating:

LIBERAL EDUCATION FOR ALL.

Dr. Merchant, who attended the Imperial Conference in London, England, in July, has brought home the findings of that body. Among the matters dealt with at the conference was vocational instruction. It was generally agreed that up to the age of 14 years instruction should be general, in the sense of giving a common equipment for life and citizenship, whatever may be the destined occupations, and should not be subordinated to the specific needs of particular industries and professions. But this view is declared not to be inconsistent either with the training of eye and hand or with the fullest use of the local environment of each school as a starting point. Sir Daniel Hall showed that, although rural education must provide for many who will dwell in cities, it need not, therefore, disregard the farm; and the same principle underlies the growing sense of the value of the study of local lore as an initiation to history. This discussion was largely in terms of rural schools. The problems of rural education are naturally vital ones in the more sparsely settled parts of the Empire.

The problem of rural schools was discussed in Ontario recently in connection with adolescent education. Representative farmers complained that education was increasing the drift from the country to the city. Clearly the remedy is not to give less education in the country, or to make education mainly agricultural for children who are receiving practical training of that kind at home. It is rather to give the country boy and girl advantages equal with those of the cities and at the same time to recognize the interest, dignity and value of the farmer's calling. Among other means to this end is the study of pioneer histories, such as those of Mr. W. L. Smith, and the reading of such poetry as Whittier's, in which labor of all kinds is dignified. If any special instruction in agiculture is needed, it should be of a kind that the country boy is not likely to obtain in practical work.

The old-fashioned idea was that liberal education should be reserved for those who intended to follow a learned profession, or were likely to occupy some exalted station in life. Others must not be educated "above their station," and, perhaps, filled with ambitions unsuited for farm or factory "hands." It was with great difficulty that any kind of education was provided for those who were insolently called the lower classes. "The three R's" were reluctantly conceded, and two even these were used in a very restricted sense. Writing was not to go much beyond penmanship, and reading was not supposed to include the study of literature and the inculcation of a taste of the best books.

Universal suffrage has destroyed any force there might be in this contention. There is no use in giving men and women votes unless they have some understanding of public affairs, and such an understanding means a broad and liberal education. Human brains cannot be arbitrarily divided into lower, middle and upper classes. The only way to try them out is to educate them all to the fullest extent of their capacity. Moreover, education is required not only for earning a living, but for leisure, in which an immense amount of good or mischief may be done; and the spending of the leisure of those engaged in manual labor, even unskilled, and of those whose occupations are of a monotonous and routine kind is just as important as that of the leisure of a professional or business man.

We hear many complaints of the frivolity of this age, and especially of the young: of their love of amusement, jazz music, freak dancing and moving pictures. There is no use in denouncing these things unless something better is supplied. One of the most important functions of the school, especially for those who cannot afford a collegiate education, is to open the gateway of knowledge and prepare pupils for continuing their own education by books and other means. If more serious thinking is required, children must be taught to think.

Service to the Greatest Number

The Advocate has no apology to offer for keeping before the eyes of the country the case of our fishermen.

They toil hard, not only for themselves, not only for their children, their education and their homes, but for the whole country, for every merchant in it, every schoolteacher, every preacher, every clerk, everybody—for Newfoundland. All others have their place to fill and are essential to the welfare of the whole, but these, our fishermen, who are also loggers, sealers and workmen, are the bone and sinew of our country's strength. These are the active lives which give movement to the whole Prosper them and we prosper Newfoundland. Neglect them and we neglect our country. Betray them and we are no friends of Newfoundland.

How then can we help the men whose boats bespeck, at sunrise, the waters of our coasts, who drag at fishing lines, very often unavailing, and tear at grapnels with cracked hands from Monday morning to Saturday night. How can they be helped and befriended? How can those, who are dependent upon their toil and their industry, do their duty by these men?

The fish exporters can give them a square deal, export their fish aright and give them the best prices after taking a fair profit for themselves. All our public men should do their duty by the men who elected them to office, standing fearlessly in their interests; unafraid to speak the truth and, what is better, to act the truth. And theer is a work for the others, the preachers and teachers, etc., not the least of which is to understand that their role in life is no nobler than that of the hard-handed fisherfolk.

Is not the time here when the lines of self-thought distinction should disappear, and all may consider themselves the equal of the other and members of the one family of Newfoundland? Would not more of good then be done for the people? Would not there be less of cross-currents, political, business and otherwise, which sweep away the prosperity of people and drive them from our shores?

Surely, there is enough of brains or thought in Terra Nova, enough of great-heartedness and enough of muscular strength to make this a country worth living in, and fitted for a people, made worthier because of living in it. Surely, the clouds are not so black as to be no hope for Terra Nova, without our resources of potential wealth and tested manhood.

In the words of poems recently published in a Canadian newspaper, and which may well be "an ode to Terra Nova," the task of all is the greatest servant to the common country.

We are the nation's builders,
If we strive, with heart and hand and brain, to raise the walls
And glorify the temple, we but yield
To conscience that, with unrelenting voice,
Guides us to justice; and the house we build
Must be the house of justice.
Light and law
Shall shine within its portals.
Let it be
A palace worthy of the Lord, whose love
Smiles on no worthless effort.
And unless
He build with us our labor is in vain;
And our achievements, howsoever brave,
Are like the splendors of a sunset cloud;
And howsoever high the house we build,
And bright with grandeur, 'tis but a Babel Tower,
A monument of folly and of shame.

—Daniel J. Donahoe, in "An Ode to America."

BACK FROM GOLD FIELDS

Capt Butler Reports Finding no Traces of the Precious Metal and Satisfied No Gold Exists in This Locality—Other Prospectors Still Carry On

The yacht Silvia II, Capt. Butler, reached port at exactly noon to-day and dropped anchor off Bowring Bros. An Advocate representative immediately boarded the yacht and had a brief interview with Capt. Butler.

No Gold at Stag Bay

Capt. Butler, and his cousin Patrick Cochrane, who is a mining engineer of repute are both satisfied that no gold alluvial deposits are to be found in Big Brook. It may be that further up in the mountains in the rock formation gold may exist, but certain the presence of the previous metal as stated was not found by them. An old experienced Klondyker named Edwards, who returned as a passenger by the Silvia II, was much more expressive in giving his opinion. Even said he "the rocks bear no indication of being gold bearing and the man who says there's gold in paying quantities in Stag Bay is———" The Butler party went up Big Brook about 30 miles; other prospectors who had previously arrived on the scene had gone inland 50 miles, but from no source had he been able to get reliable information, that gold in any quantity had been located. The Silvia II arrived at Stag Bay in the early evening of July 21st. When they got there the Labrador police had already erected their station and the Watchful was anchored in the bay. The Aerial Survey Motor boat Prixy B. and the Climax, Capt. Peter Roberts, had also arrived with supplies for the Butler party. The Silvia II was skilfully navigated up the river several miles, the brook is very shoal and Capt. Butler's opinion is the Silvia was the first vessel to attempt to navigate the river, and she will probably be the last.

Frank May's staff of prospectors, which it will be remembered left here by the first Labrador trip of the Sagona were camped 3 miles up Big Brook and contrary to Capt. Butler's opinion, Capt. Jefferies, himself an old miner, and a practical mining engineer, is confident that gold can be obtained in commercially paying quantities. The May party were working away in normal fashion, and are still sanguine of success. Asked if they found any trace Capt. Butler said traces of gold were found during the northern cruise at Temple Bay and Chatteau but the signs were such as one might find in his backyard and were not worth bothering about. Both on the trip north and homeward bound very boisterous weather was experienced but the party are enjoying excellent health and barring failure to bring back to civilization a record of fame and fortune, all concerned enjoyed the trip immensely. Capt. Butler wishes it to be understood the present expedition was undertaken by him not as a business venture, but purely as a yachting trip with relatives and friends. His present plans are to remain here for two weeks when he intends taking the Silvia II to Boston. One striking coincidence which the captain called to mind was that they left here just as the gun on Signal Hill was firing the noon hour, they passed inward through the narrows at exactly 12 o'clock to-day when it was found that the ship's time which had never been regulated or altered was found to be correct.

You Said It, Marcelline

We learn that our popular service "You said it, Marceline," by Mlle Marcelline d'Alroy, only released about ten days ago, and which is running, with popular effect in scores of papers in the United States, will be thrown on the movie screens throughout the American continent and over the English-speaking world; and, no doubt, will find the way to St. John's theatres.

The popularity which has attended "You said it, Marcelline", in the columns of the Advocate is assurance of its screen success, should any of the local theatres have the fortune of securing it.

A DIFFICULT CHOICE

(Daily News)

It is agreed that we do not want to be controlled by traffic combines and railway companies. The alternatives open are direct and open government from Whitehall, with existing local authorities as advisers side by side with the combines, or a new agglomeration of local authorities under a large amount of control from Whitehall with the combines unofficially at Whitehall's ear.

AN ACT

An Act for the Confirmation of an Agreement Between the Government and Harry J. Crowe, Timber Merchant.

WHEREAS the Government has entered into an Agreement with Harry J. Crowe, for certain purposes, and it is desirable to approve and ratify the same.

Be it enacted by the Governor, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, in Legislative Session, convened as follows:—

1. The Agreement made between Harry J. Crowe at present of St. John's, Timber Merchant, of the one part and His Excellency Sir William Lamond Allardyce, K.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland and its Dependencies-in-Council, of the other part, dated the ninth day of August, 1923, and forming the Schedule to this Resolution is hereby approved and ratified, subject to the condition hereinafter contained, and all and singular the several clauses, provisions and conditions thereof are hereby declared to be valid and binding upon the parties thereto, and each of them respectively, and all and singular the several acts, matters and things therein provided to be done or performed on the part of the said parties are hereby declared to be proper and lawful.

2. The operator shall in each year during the continuance of the Agreement in the Schedule hereto cut upon the timber areas mentioned in the said Agreement at least (25,000) cords of wood.

3. Unless the said Harry J. Crowe shall have erected in the Colony a pulp or paper mill, capable of manufacturing at least one hundred tons of mechanical pulp per working day, section one of the Schedule hereto shall cease to be of any effect at the expiration of ten years from the date hereof.

SCHEDULE.

THIS AGREEMENT made at St. John's in the Ireland of Newfoundland this ninth day of August in the year of Our Lord One thousand nine hundred and twenty-three BETWEEN HARRY J. CROWE, at present of St. John's aforesaid, Timber Merchant, (hereinafter referred to as "the Operator," which expression shall where the context permits include his assigns) of the one part AND HIS EXCELLENCY SIR WILLIAM LAMOND ALLARDYCE, K.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland and its Dependencies in Council, (hereinafter referred to as "the Government") of the other part.

W. L. Allardyce
Governor
(L.S.)

WHEREAS the operator has acquired by purchase certain timber inland from White Bay, Newfoundland, and comprising in all an area of seven hundred and twenty-five and one-half square miles;

AND WHEREAS the operator is desirous of developing the said properties, and establishing a permanent industry in connection therewith;

AND WHEREAS the absence of favourable economic conditions precludes the operation of a pulp and paper plant in that locality.

AND WHEREAS the operator proposes to erect, install and operate a Saw-mill and Rossing Plant upon or in connection with said property;

AND WHEREAS the proposed erection, installation and operation will result in a permanent labour-giving industry which it is to the interest of this Colony to encourage;

NOW THEREFORE THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH:—

1. In consideration of the undertaking and agreement of the operator, and subject to the conditions hereinafter contained, the Government hereby grants to the operator the right to export rossed or drumbarked pulp-wood, cut or taken from the said areas, for a period of twenty-five years from the date hereof.

2. The operator undertakes and agrees to establish and install upon or in connection with the said timber limits, one or more rossing plants, and one or more saw-mills, each saw-mill with a capacity to saw not less than twenty-five thousand feet board measure per day, and to complete same and put same into operation on or before October 31st, 1924.

3. In addition to the rentals payable under Chapter 129, Consolidated Statutes (3rd Series), entitled "Of Crown Lands, Timber, Mines and Minerals," and Amendments thereof with regard to the said timber areas, and to the royalties on sawn lumber now imposed and made payable by the said Acts, the operator shall pay in lieu of export duty and royalties on [illegible] of twenty-five years as follows: On every cord or fraction thereof shipped for export by him during the first year free, during the two following years at the rate of twenty-five cents per cord, and for the remainder of the said term at the rate of fifty cents per cord. Such payment shall be made from time to time as and when such shipments are made, and for the purpose of determining the amount so payable from time to time, the records of the export furnished to the Department of Customs, shall be prima facie evidence of the quantity shipped.

4. The Government may at any time appoint a person to supervise and creck each shipment as it is loaded on board ship or other conveyance, and the operator shall at all times give every reasonable facility to such person for the purpose of ascertaining and verifying the amount of the shipments.

5. The operator agrees to commence operations before November 30th, 1923.

6. The Government also agrees that all plant, machinery and material required for the erection and equipment of the said Saw-mill and Rossing Plant, and other erections auxiliary to the operation of same, and to the transport and loading of the products of same shall be admitted into this Colony free of duty.

7. In the event of the operator failing to carry out and observe the agreements and conditions herein contained, and on the part of the operator to be carried out and observed for a period of six months, after notice in writing of such failure has been given to him by the Government, the right to export said rossed or drumbarked wood shall cease and determine.

8. This Agreement is subject to the approval and ratification of the Legislature.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF His Excellency the Governor in Council has caused the Great Seal of the Island of Newfoundland to be set hereunto, and has signed these presents, and the said Harry J. Crowe has hereunto his hand and seal subscribed and set the day and year first before written.

By His Excellency's Command,
(Sgd.) W. W. HALFYARD,
Colonial Secretary.

Witness to the signature of Harry J. Crowe.
(Sgd.) W. J. CAREW.

AN ACT

An Act for the Confirmation of an Agreement Between the Government and Malcolm Joseph Mooney, Lumberman.

Rendell twenty five miles and forty chains more or less; thence North sixty-one degrees East fourteen miles, North forty-six degrees East eighteen miles, and North twenty-eight degrees East nine miles, North fifty-three degrees West four miles and forty chains, North sixteen degrees East one mile and forty chains, South seventy-three degrees East six miles, North forty-three degrees West nine miles and forty chains, North forty-seven degrees East two miles, South forty-three degrees East four miles and forty chains, North sixteen degrees East seven miles and forty chains, North thirty-nine degrees East eight miles, and North seven miles more or less to the place of commencement: TO HOLD the same unto the Lessee for the term of Ninety-nine years, computed from the day of the date hereof at the annual rental of Two Dollars per square mile, payable by the Lessee to the Government on the first day of March in each year.

2. The Lessee shall be entitled, (so far as the Government can, consistently with any grants heretofore made and actually subsisting, grant the same), to have, use and enjoy in his business, all streams, lakes, water-courses, springs or water in, upon, under or intersecting the area hereinbefore described, and all the water-power or powers of the rivers flowing into Orange Bay; and for any of his works and operations aforesaid, to divert, stop or dam up any such stream, lake or water-course, and to make, construct and maintain any dams sorting booms, water-courses, culverts, drains and reservoirs, for any of his works and operations as aforesaid; and the Government agrees to demise to the Lessee, free of rental or other charge, for a like term, and subject to the same qualifications, such Crown Lands within the drainage area of the said rivers as the Lessee may reasonably require for overflowage and other purposes connected with the development of such power. And the Lessee shall have the right to sell to others any surplus power above that required to run the said mill or mills. The Lessee shall pay to the Government a rental of twenty-five cents per horse-power developed; the said rental shall be payable half-yearly on the first day of May and the first day of November during the currency hereof; and the Lessee shall keep the Government informed as to the quantity of power developed: Provided always, that if any person or persons shall hereafter, during the said term, require the temporary use of any streams, lakes, or water-courses, or any dams or sorting booms, for the purpose of floating logs or lumber, belonging to such other person or persons, to their mills, such person or persons shall be at liberty to use such streams, lakes and water-courses, and such dams and sorting booms for the purpose aforesaid, on payment to the Lessee of a reasonable sum in respect of such use, such sum in case of difference to be determined by the Government, whose decision shall be final. Provided always further that any person or persons or sorting booms constructed by or for the time being in the possession of the Lessee, shall not in any way interfere with or prejudice the business or operations of the Lessee.

3. There shall be reserved for public use a right of way twenty-five feet wide around and adjoining all lakes and ponds, and on both banks of all rivers within the area hereinbefore described. Where the land adjoining any lake, pond or river is required to be used or occupied for building or other purposes by the Lessee, the Government may permit such use or occupation.

4. The Government may, upon the nomination of the Lessee, appoint a Chief Fire Warden, who shall be paid by the Lessee, and who shall within the area hereinbefore described, possess all the powers in respect of the prevention of forest fires and the prosecution of offenders, as are given to any ranger or other official under any Act of the Legislature in reference to the prevention of forest fires. The said Chief Fire Warden may, on the nomination of the Lessee, appoint Assistant Fire Wardens, who shall be paid by the Lessee, and who shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Chief Fire Warden and approved by the Government. The Chief Fire Warden and Assistant Fire Wardens nominated by the Lessee shall hold office during the pleasure of the Government, and shall be dischargeable by either party. Every tourist or party of tourists shall be required to employ one at least of such Assistant Fire Wardens as guide, at the usual fees, when entering on the area hereinbefore described. Every person entering upon the area hereinbefore described shall, when requested to do so by the Chief Fire Warden, furnish his name, address, proposed duration of his stay, parts of the area he intends to visit, and any other information the Chief Fire Warden may require.

5. For the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of power actually developed, the Government may appoint an Agent for that purpose, and he shall have free access to all parts of the works of the Lessee, and to all books, plans or records in connection therewith bearing on the quantity of power developed, and he may make measurements, take observations and do all such things as he may consider necessary or expedient for such purpose.

6. All construction materials and machinery and accessories for paper, pulp and lumber mills, both for the original installation and the further extension of same, but not in substitution for old, shall be admitted duty free into the Colony.

7. Within and in the vicinity of the area aforesaid the Lessee shall have the right whenever and wherever necessary or advisable for the operation of his plant or plants to build, maintain and operate roads, conveyors, tramways and railways; to erect, maintain, and operate power transmission lines, and to build, maintain and operate for the purpose of communicating between its factories, mills and camps, electric telephone and telegraph lines.

8. The Government shall and will grant free to the Lessee out of the Crown Lands, within or in the vicinity of the said area available for such purposes, sites and rights of way for the Lessee's factories, plants, power stations, dams, shipping piers, wharves, warehouses and other buildings and works, and for necessary roads, railways and electric lines of all kinds: Provided that the selection of such lands shall be made by the Lessee within two years from the date of this Indenture.

9. If the Lessee shall at any time or times be desirous of acquiring on or over private land, within or in the vicinity of the area aforesaid, any such site or rights of way as are mentioned in the last preceding clause of this Indenture, and shall be unable to agree with the owners or occupiers of such land as to the compensation to be paid therefor, the Lessee may, with the consent of the Government, enter upon and take such land, and the compensation to be paid to the owners or occupiers of such land shall be determined by arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Judicature Act, 1904. In estimating such compensation the Arbitrators shall not take into account any increase in the value of the land so taken which is attributed to the operations or intended operations of the Lessee.

10. The Lessee shall erect a mill or mills capable of manufacturing at least one hundred tons of mechanical pulp for every working day, and shall operate in a bona fide manner each year the mill or mills provided for herein, and the said mill or mills shall be in continous operation except, however, in the case of fire, strikes, lock-outs or other conditions beyond the control of the Lessee. The actual construction of such mill or mills, or factory or factories shall be commenced on or before the thirtieth day of November One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-Three, and such mill or mills or factory or factories shall be completed and in working order within three years from the date of this Indenture. And the Lessee shall expend the sum of not less than Three Hundred thousand dollars in construction and / or cutting timber within twelve months from the date hereof, it being understood that he shall cut or cause to be cut before the first day of August One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-Four not less than Thirty thousand cords of wood. Failure on the part of the Lessee to carry out or perform any of the obligations imposed by this section shall render this Agreement null and void.

11. The Lessee shall have the right to export from the Colony such portions of trees as cannot profitably be converted into pulp.

12. The Lessee shall have the right for a period of twenty-five years from the date hereof to export, free of duty, all pulp or paper manufactured by him upon the area hereinbefore demised; and for the said period of twenty-five years from the date hereof, the Lessee shall be at liberty to export rossed wood and such portions of trees as cannot profitably be converted into pulp upon the terms following, that is to say: Until the first day of January, 1925, such export shall be free; for the next succeeding two years the Lessee shall pay an export duty of twenty-five cents per cord; and thereafter, until the expiration of the said twenty-five years, the Lessee shall pay an export duty of fifty cents per cord. All sawn lumber exported by the Lessee shall pay an export duty of fifty cents per thousand feet.

13. The Lessee shall make returns to the Government yearly, and shall in such returns show the number of trees or logs and contents which during the year, to which each return respectively relates, have been felled by the Lessee upon the area hereinbefore described and converted into rossed wood, sawn lumber, or exported as portions of trees which cannot profitably be converted into pulp as aforesaid, and shall also show the amount in board measure as defined in the Schedule to Chapter 129 of the Consolidated Statutes, (Third Series), of all trees so felled and converted into sawn lumber as aforesaid. For the purpose of checking the returns to be made the Government may appoint an Agent, and he shall have free access to all parts of the works of the Lessee, and to all books, records or documents in connection therewith, and to all such things as he may consider necessary or expedient for such purpose.

14. The Lessee's property as hereinbefore demised or which hereafter may be demised to him outside St. John's, including the Lessee's mill and factory property, shall be exempt from all municipal taxation.

15. The debentures, debenture stock and other securities to the Company to be incorporated as afore said shall be exempt from taxation.

16. With a view to preventing as far as may be possible injury to the areas above described by fire, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, except servants and agents of the Lessee, to enter upon the said areas between the first day of May and the thirty-first day of October in each year, except with the permission of the Lessee or his duly authorized agent or unless accompanied by a fire warden.

17. All provisions and concessions hereby granted shall apply to the Company to be incorporated as aforesaid, and all or any subsidiary companies thereof, and to all areas which may hereafter be granted or demised to the said Company or Companies, wether acquired directly or indirectly in connection with the said undertaking.

18. Subject to the conditions contained in sections four and sixteen hereof, the public and every member thereof, shall have the right to fish, hunt, shoot and trap over the area herein demised, and the Lessee shall have no exclusive right to caribou, moose or game on the said land nor shall the Lessee by fences or barriers interfere with the annual migration of caribou or moose.

19. The Lessee shall forthwith furnish a bond acceptable to the Government to the value of Twenty-five thousand dollars in Newfoundland currency as security for the due and faithful performance of this Agreement: Provided that the said bond shall be cancelled upon the expenditure by the Lessee of the sum of Four hundred thousand dollars in labour and / or in the erection of the buildings and machinery as hereinbefore set forth, otherwise the said bond to remain in full force and effect.

20. This Agreement is subject to approval and confirmation by the Legislature of the Colony.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF His Excellency the Governor-in-Council has caused the Great Seal of the Island of Newfoundland to be set hereunto and has signed these presents, and the Lessee has hereunto set his hand and seal at St. John's aforesaid the day and year first above written.

By His Excellency's Command,
(Sgd.) W. W. HALFYARD,
Colonial Secretary.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I suppose that at least 99 p.c. of the readers of this column would answer "yes" to these questions:

1. Do you think that murderers should be killed? 2. Do you think that those who commit crime should be put in jail or fined? 3. Do you believe in punishment for offenders against the law?

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Not alone 99 p.c. of my readers would answer "yes" to these questions—99 p.c. of all the readers and others in the whole world would probably give the same answer.

About the time that Christopher Columbus, discoverer of the new world was getting his vessels ready to sail around the globe, 99 p.c. or 100 p.c. of the people on the earth would have given an emphatic "yes" to the question: Do you think that the world is flat, like a table.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

You see, the great mass of people of that day had not given much thought to the subject of the shape of the earth. What little thinking they did would naturally have to be bounded by the facts then in current use. And the "facts" all seemed to point to the earth's being flat. Why, could not any man see for himself that it was flat?

But a few thinkers and scientists like Columbus began seriously to look for the "main pan" of facts on the subject. They soon discovered that the world was round.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Similarly, today the mass of people believe certain things about the subject of crime and criminals, and their thinking naturally has to be bounded by those facts about the subject that are in current use. And, unfortunately for sound thinking on the subject, those "facts" are nt facts, but mere tradition or false generalization.

But meanwhile an ever-growing band of scientists are digging for the main vein of facts on this tremendously important subject.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Dr. Ernest Bryant Hoag, A.M., special lecturer on Criminology and Mental Hygiene in the University of California, and Dr. Edward Huntington Williams, Psychiatrist in the Superior Courts, Psychopathic division of Los Angeles, are two of these investigators. They have written jointly and just published a book on the subject. (Crime, Abnormal Minds, and the Law; Bobbs-Merrill Co., Philadelphia, publishers.)

In the course of a special study which I made in this subject last winter, I read some twenty-five or thirty books on Criminology, Psychiatry, and the criminal law. These were written by some af the greatest criminologists of the world: Baccaria, Carrara, Pessina, Lombroso, Ferri, Goring, MacDonald, Ellis Mercier, Lydson, Henderson, Galton, Tarde, Osborne, Darrow, White, etc.

I do not hesitate to say that I have enjoyed none of them more than I have this particular work. It is very modern, being based on the latest evidence, and makes mighty suggestive reading.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

"Punishment as such has little or nothing to do with lessening it (crime,)" declare these scientists, "for the application of punishment in every conceivable form has been in effect for many centuries, all without result..

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

"The control of crime, which is now sweeping the world, can not possibly come about through popular demands for more police, better prisons, more hanging, probation, self-government of prisoners, indeterminate sentence, moral or other kind of education.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

"Very few," continue the authors, "know or seem to care to learn that the theory of deterrance thru fear of legal consequences has never had any considerable effect upon the number of crimes committed; yet such are the plain and easily demonstrable facts."

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Chief Justice Harry Ilsen of Chicago, the eminent jurist, they quote as follows:

"Thus far," says Justice Olsen, "little or no impression has been made on the statis (stationary) existence of crime by our efforts at punishment and prevention, and one would have supposed that this fact alone would have directed those vitally interested in the subject, such as jurists and sociologists, to check themselves up and cast a critical glance over the past, and into other directions for the future.

"There were at one time in England 16 crimes punishable by death, without making any effect on the volume of crime.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

"In turn," explains Judge Olsen, "maiming, mutilating and branding were practiced, then the idea of adding humiliation was the next invention, and the unfortunates were ducked in the pond in the public square, where they also had pilories and whipping posts, or they were whipped through the streets. Burning at the stake was also in usage for certain crimes. The idea of solitary confinement followed; the ball and chain was next added.

"At this stage a new light appeared, probably as reaction to the then existing conditions, and the idea of reformation was introduced into penology. Next came parole, and probation, and yet in spite of all these efforts extending over long years, the percentage of crime and criminals remains static; two percent of the general population are still criminals."

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

The authors of the book quote Clarence Darrow, the famous American lawyer and lecturer, from his book, "Crime, Its Causes and Treatment:"

"If doctors and scientists," says Darrow, "had been no wiser than lawyers, judges, legislators and the public, the world would still be punishing imbeciles, the insane, the inferior and the sick, and treating human ailments with incantations, witch craft, force and magic. We should still be driving the devils out of the sick and into the swine. The treatment of the criminal class has as yet, however, scarcely advanced beyond this ancient stage of ignorance and mysticism."

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

The fact of the matter, as Doctors Hoag and Williams explain, is that "criminals in a large percentage of cases are people with defective minds, and the question of moral responsibility can never be settled by a jury or a judge; for this is as much a matter for expert diagnosis as the most complicated case of physicial disease. No court would pass upon an obscure case of bodily ailment; yet courts every day do pass judgement without hesitation upon far greater questions of mental disorder and responsibility."

"We are beginning," they explain, "to understand that the unrelenting and retributive idea of 'an eye for an eye' has no application to the irresponsible. The idea of punishment for a deed presupposes responsibility.

We are learning that many of the criminal insane and feeble-minded on whom legan punishment has been inflicted in our courts were not fully responsible, and their punishment did NOT work their reform."

One more quotation and I am done for today:

"The idea of differences in personal responsibility as these are fund in different people, is at last coming to be recognized not only by physicians and psychologists, to whom this is a matter of professional interest, but even by our courts and moral leaders, to whom the matter is one of vast practical importance. Modern psychology, sociology, psychiatry and medicine have contributed much to the understanding of human behavior, and have swept away the old principle of free will, with its consequent theory of the equal responsibility of all."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS EXPENDITURE

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 6—In view of the oft-repeated assertion that the League of Nations is being run on costly and extravagant lines and of the recent statement that "the expenses have grown beyond expectation," thus giving an impression of wasteful and uncontrolled expenditures, the League of Nations Society in Canada draws attention to the concluding paragraph of the Supervisory Commission appointed to check the League's Budget for 1924.

The commissioners say: "As a result of these additions for the labor office and for the provision of a pension scheme the General Budget of the League as approved by the Supervisory Commission amounts to 24,988,875 francs. It will be noted that notwithstanding the inclusion in the estimates for 1924 of the sum of 2,520,274 francs for the Working Capital Fund as compared with 500,000 francs in the budget for 1923.

"The Supervisory Commission believes that as a result of the reductions willingly accepted by the competent officials, the League will have been placed in a very strong financial position without the United States members, being called upon to increase their contribution during the coming year. After the careful and exhaustive reductions are possible in the Budget without affecting the essential work of the organization. The Commission therefore earnestly recommends to the Assembly that the Budget should be passed in the form now presented."

The Canadian Society points out and emphasizes the fact that the combined cost of the League, of the Permanent Court of Justice and of the International Labor Bureau for the ensuing year is $4,986,702., which is only one-fourth of the amount spent by Great Britain alone for one day's war expenditure and is about one-third the cost of one first-class modern battleship.

Canada's contribution to the League of Nations, it is pointed out, is $198,668 a year, or about $3,800 weekly, not a big price to pay for the best available insurance against another world war when it is remembered that this country will have to provide $56,629,480, or more than one million dollars a week, during 1924 to pay for the aftermath of the last conflict. The details of this expenditure are:—

Great War Pensions	$32,583,700
Soldiers' Civil Re-Establst.	12,862,000
Administratn. of War Taxes	2,200,000
Soldiers' Settlement	8,400,000
War Graves Commission ..	573,780
Grant for Blind Soldiers ..	10,000
	56,32,480

It is interesting to learn that the salaries paid in the Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment Department and the Board of Pensions Commissioners total $4,508,900, or only $476,000 less than the total cost of the League of Nations, Permanent Court and Labor Bureau combined.

In view of the widely held belief that the League of Nations Society deserves financial assistance from the sums voted by Government for the League of Nations, it is opportune to say that the Society in Canada is maintained entirely by voluntary subscriptions.

Jewels Cause Worry

The possession of rare and precious jewels is a source of great worry to many people. It is so easy to lose them.

Jewel thieves are such well-dressed rogues that they almost look like gentlemen, and it is difficult for the unwary to anticipate that the man is making himself such an agreeable companion is actually planning a raid on a well-filled jewel-case.

If only jewel thieves were compelled to wear some distinctive mark of their profession—say, a broad arrow on the forehead—it would relieve the anxiety of all lovers of priceless gems.

I was once asked by a woman, says a writer in an English paper, what were the best precautions to take to guard against jewel thieves. I replied that if I had £50,000 worth of jewels no thief would ever steal them I should just sell them.

That is the sort of answer a man would give, but it does not help a woman very much. As a matter of fact one can only give the general advice that common sense and reasonable care should be exercised. Assume that if you leave your jewels unguarded somebody is going to take them away, and act accordingly.

A very famous jewel thief named Nicholson used to say that so many temptations were placed in his way that he could not resist them. He never blamed himself but always the women who were so careless with their valuables.

He appeared in the dock for the last time at Middlesex Sessions, in London, some years ago, when the late Sir Ralph Littler sentenced him to ten years' penal servitude.

"My lord," he pleaded, "I am an old man and I'm afraid I shan't live to serve that sentence."

"How old are you?" asked the judge.

"Turned seventy, my lord," was the reply.

"I suppose you are right," said the judge. "Well, look here, Nicholson, do as much of it as you can!"

He did his best and died six years later in Parkhurst Prison.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Bishop William T. Manning has ordered removed from the high altar of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine a receiver for a system of amplifiers.

"Nothing of a worldy nature should be in this sacred place," he said. "Besides, communicants should know their service by heart and it should be unnecessary for them to hear the words of the celebrant."

The altar receiver was a part of a system recently installed at a cost of $9,000. There are nine amplifiers throughout the cathedral and now even the choir and clergy can hear every word of the sermon. The Bishop, himself seated on his throne, can "listen in."

No objection to the amplifier system as a whole was made by the Bishop. He merely held that the placing of a receiver on the altar was carrying "modernism" a bit too far.

The army of unemployed in England which is living on the State is indicated by statistics just published. In the borough of Popular in London one-fifth of the population is living on Government doles. Recently there were 1,345,000 persons who received poor law relief in England and Wales. In the first three months of this year one in every twenty-eight of the population was living on Government doles. George Lansbury, Popular member of the House of Commons, has just asked when employment would be found for his constituents, saying that many young persons are becoming demoralized by the recipt of doles. In many cases in court lately it has been ascertained that the offenders were persons who received doles. Premier Baldwin told the House of Commons that the Government had spent $2,000,000,000 in the last few years for the relief of the destitution and poverty arising from unemployment.

THE DRUNKEN DRIVER MENACE

Indianapolis News: A convicted drunken driver should be placed on the defensive. He should not be permitted to drive a car until he has regained the right by reforming his attitude toward public safety. When all drivers are licensed after examination to prove their fitness, there will be an easy and effective way to get rid of drunken and all other convicted incompetent drivers.

The Daily Telegraph: After all the bewildering changes of recent years, the earthquakes and landslides that have altered the face of Europe, one world-famed institution remains unshaken and untouched. The visitor to our shores, prepared, perhaps, in these sad days for disillusionment, still finds the London policeman all that he was represented to be.

I think that friendship asks the best
that's in us;
It calls for all that's highest, truest too,
For loyalty, and strength, and never doubting,
For glad believing, and for courage
true.
To keep one's heart quite free from all suspicion,
Though years may roll between work
and play;
To hold old memories as rarest treasure,
As swept to muse on as a summer
day,
To firmly stand, with waves of trouble
rising,
Rare sympathy and hope to freely
lend;
To show the world alike in shine and shadow
Just what it means to really be a friend.

Footballers Leave For Grand Falls

The city football team, together with a large number of fans, leave for Grand Falls by special train at 10.30 o'clock to-night, where they are scheduled to play a series of three games next week for the Inter-Town trophy. A strong aggregation are going out, including the following:—R. Walsh, R. H. Tait, W. Thistle T. Delahunty, M. Maddigan, W. Elton, Flynn, C. Quick, R. Meaney, Goldstone H. Coultas, S. Vavasour, Ewing and Duggan.

The first game will be played on Monday night, and it is expected a game will also be arranged with the Alconda's crew, which ship is now at Botwood. On Thursday night the visitors will be the guests at a dance which is being held in the Town Hall, while it is understood a dinner will be arranged at the Staff House. The Tennis Club has extended the use of the club to the visitors, and a good time is assured all who are going.

The Star Jazzola Orchestra is making the trip with the team, and will play at the dances. Grand Falls is making a big bid to carry off the trophy this season, and the outcome will be watched with interest.

OBITUARY

ALEXANDER RODGER

At 11.30 last night Alexander Rodger passed into the Great Beyond. He will be sorely missed by many. His kindly greeting, dry humor and wide knowledge of men and affairs ensured him a welcome wherever he foregathered with his friends.

Although his years were many, he remained young at heart, a genial companion, and a loyal friend. Ill health has been his portion during recent months, but in the interval of apparent convalescence he was always cheerful, and ready to enrich the lives of others from the rich stores of his ripe experience.

Moving quietly and unobtrusively through life, preferring pursuit of its even tenor to the glare of the footlights, his was a mind enriched with the world's best literature, and a vision that ever looked forward.

In the Masonic Club his chair is now vacated, but it will be long before the name of Sandy Rodger will pass from the memory of his brethren.

Alexander Rodger was born in Crieff, in Scotland, some four and seventy years ago. He came to St. John's at the age of 19, to the firm of Ayre and Marshall, by whose partners his ability and efficiency were soon recognized. From the junior place he soon rose to the most influential one, and for years was the buyer for the firm. When partnership was dissolved, Mr. Rodger Joined Mr. Alex Marshall and established the firm now known as Marshall Brothers. Later he became senior partner in the firm of A. & S. Rodger.

In recent years Mr. Rodger had retired from the more active life, and with his youngest son, William, has carried on a Commission Agency, representing some of the best-known houses in the United Kingdom. His wife, daughter of the late Mr. Freeman, formerly of the G.P.O., died some years ago.

Three sons survive, Stanley of the Royal Stores, Herbert in Denver, and William, a war veteran, and his father's partner and companion in his declining years. His sister-in-law, Mrs. Brotherton, of Seattle, is at present in St. John's on a visit.

The funeral takes place on Sunday at 2.30 p.m., from his late residence, Barnes Road.

When you once use Ivory toilet soap you will wonder why you did not get to using it before for Ivory gives perfect soap satisfaction at little cost. Ivory is the purest soap and gives best value. At all Union Stores now.

No Further News From S. S. Sable I.

Farquhar & Co's representative in the city, Mr. King, informs us that there is no additional news from the Sable I. An attempt to refloat the ship will be made by the Stella Maris to-day.

Police Court

A laborer, charged with the larceny of three silk blouses, was fined $25.00 or 1 month.

A domestic who does not seem to be able to keep a place and who has been frequently obliged to apply at the Police Station for safekeeping was sent down for 10 days on a vagarancy charge.

A husband charged with assaulting his wife was bound over to keep the peace; a condition of the bond is that if he again illtreats his wife he will be given a term in the Penitentiary.

Humber Party Leaves 7 p.m. To-morrow

Sir William Coaker Likely Join Party at Clarenville

PERSONAL

Mr John Clouston leaves by the Rosalind to-day for New York on a business trip.

Mr. W. J. Long, Mechanical Supt. of the Union Publishing Co., who has been confined to his home the past week suffering from a severe cold, is able to be around again and has almost fully recovered from his illness.

Messrs. C. J. Cahill and C. J. Ellis, who had been at the Knights of Columbus Convention at Montreal in the interests of Newfoundland Councils, are returning by the express today.

Mr. Abraham Morgan of Coley's Point celebrated his 82nd. birthday on Sunday August 12th. Mr. Morgan is looking well and attends to his regular duties about his premises every day. His son George accompanied by his wife, and other friends who had been spending a holiday with the old gentleman returned to town by Thursday evening's train.

Captain G. J. Whitty, M.C., Dominion Secretary of the G. W. V. A. (Nfld.) who has been attending the British Empire Service League Convention in London, is leaving Liverpool to-day on the s.s. Digby for here. When the convention closed Captain Whitty toured the battlefields of France and Belgium and visited the graves of our fallen soldiers.

The Yankton Arrives

The S.S. Yankton, the new purchase of the Boston-Halifax-Newfoundland S.S. Company, arrived from Halifax at 1 p.m. yesterday bringing a part general cargo to A. E. Hickman & Co., the local agents for the ship. The Yankton was formerly the British Steam Yacht Penelope and was built at Leith, Scotland, in 1893, later becoming the property of the great French Tragedienne, the late Sarah Bernhardt.

In 1898, the United States Government purchased her and she was used as a despatch boat at Santiago. In 1908 she made a world cruise with the American fleet, and since then she has been used in many trades, until finally she was purchased by her present owners.

The ship brought no passengers, as alterations have yet to be made. The Yankton is in charge of Capt. Braithwaite, who sailed out of Bishop and Monroe's employ years ago in the schooners Empire and Ethel. His many friends were very pleased to see the captain looking so well and accorded him a hearty welcome.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

(Chicago Tribune)

The truth is that in France, as elsewhere in Europe, the practical application of Socialism in public utilities, public ownership and operation, "peopleization," or whatever term we like to camouflage it under, is a failure. It loads government with huge debts without producing good service. It keeps armies of men in a life of petty officialism who ought to be using their wits and energies in private enterprise. It is a huge economic and social waste, and nothing could aid so powerfully to the restoration and invigoration of Europe, in our opinion, as the abolition of state Socialism and the turning over to private initiative of its basic services.

RE-FORESTATION.

(L'Evenement)

The distressing droughts of recent summers are attributed to the devastation of our forests. There can be no doubt that too rapid a drainage of water in the spring does in fact modify the conditions of evaporation in the Laurentian Valley. The woods formerly used to act like a sponge and regulated the flow of water. In those days floods, at the time of the melting of the snows, were less dangerous, and streams did not often dry up during the hot season. For our own protection, so far as it is humanly possible, against the spring inundations and the summer droughts, it is a matter of urgent importance to plant the banks of our numerous water courses.

London Letter

(By Mrs. CECIL CHESTERTON)

Public interest this week has been focussed on the conference of surgeons. The most amazing discoveries in modern surgery have been explained in the simplest terms by practitioners who have devoted years of quiet study and research to the acquisition of that skill with the knife which has literally carved out a new future for the maimed. Curiosity has centred not on the Russian, Dr. Serge Voronoff, who has grafted monkey glands on aged men, thus securing octogenarian activities in the fox trot; but on the work of Dr. Banting, the young Canadian surgeon who has found a cure for diabetes. It is a new departure for any branch of the medical profession to take the laity into their confidence. But even the general practitioner these days condescends to explain the reason for his conclusions, and though it does not materially decrease suffering to be told why you must adopt a rigorous and bleak diet, at any rate you have the comfort of knowing what the regime is supposed to do. Dr. Banting still remains extraordinarily modest, and resists all attempts to lionize him in society. He was at a first night at a West-End theatre, however, where he received an ovation, somewhat to his embarassment.

Now begins the holiday exodus to all parts of Great Britain. It is astonishing that compared with Scotland, the number of visitors to Wales should be so small. Ye there are spots whose grandeur and lofty inaccessibility can compare with anything the Highlands can show. One of the most lovely places is Llangollen, in Denbighshire, where the river Dee tumbles like silver in the sunshine. At Llangollen can still be seen the house of the "Old Maids," picturesque figures of Georgian times who collected unique examples of carved oak. The house—recently purchased by a wealthy American—is full of rare pieces. In the dining room you will find a magnificent carving representing St. John the Baptist in the wilderness. It so resembled an altarpiece that I was moved to make enquiries, when I discovered that most of the carving had been bought by the old maids from an adjacent Catholic Abbey, which at the time of the Gordon riots had been dismantled.
