Lloyd-George Is Due In States Oct 5.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—David Lloyd George will arrive in the United States on October 5th., and will go direct to Canada, where he will deliver the first speech of his Canadian tour at Montreal, on October 6th or 7th, says a despatch to The Tribune from its Washington Bureau.

The Tribune claims to have come into possession of the compelte intinerary of Lloyd George's tour.

POINCARE WILL NOT BE FOOLED BY VAGUE OFFERS

PARIS, Sept. 12—Having informed Berlin that negotiations cannot be opened in the reparations deadlock while the German policy remains one of resistance, the French government is waiting to see whether approachment rumors emanating from Berlin are only trial balloons sent up to attract a full expression of French opinion or whether Germany is ready to discuss a settlement that will satisfy France.

France adheres to her determination to make abandonment of passive resistance the first condition to opening direct negotiations.

Premier Poincare let it be known that he will consider in a conciliatory spirit any well-defined German proposal that is made after obstructionist tactics have ceased ; but he is also said to be determined not to be led on by vague offers of negotiations.

Germany Is Now Ready To Give Real Guarantee

BERLIN, Sept. 12—Chancellor Streseman, in an address to-day, declared we are ready to give a real guarantee in order to secure the freedom of the Ruhr.

He admitted that the solution of the problem could not be obtained by passive resistance.

NEGROES ARE THREATENED

SOUTHBEND, Sept. 12—Between one thousand and fifteen hundred negroes are reported to have left the city in the last twenty-four hours, following receipt of a threatening letter by a well-known member of the negro community here.

Although no violence has followed receipt of the letter, many negro residents, it is said, left for fear that their safety is in danger.

RELIEF FOR JAPAN

MANILA, Sept. 12—The transport Meris has sailed from here for Japan with more than a million dollars worth of suplies for earthquake sufferers.

The cargo included $960,500 worth of army goods alone.

The balance of the cargo consisted of Red cross supplies. Medical supplies sufficient for a population of 150,000 for two months were sent besides.

Three Hundred Thousand May Attend Fight

NEW YORK, Sept. 12—New York has become the fight fan's mecca. Advance arrivals to-day of boxing followers from various parts of the country as well as from overseas, pointed to a gathering of one of the most cosmopolitan fight crowds in history, when Jack Dempsey enters the ring at the Polo Grounds on Friday night, to defend his heavyweight title against Luis Firpo.

It is estimated that between two and three hundred thousand fans from beyond the Metropilitan limits will view the title struggle.

More than five hundred uniformed police, and hundreds of plain clothes men will be in attendance.

Weather conditions are predicted favorable, but if rainy the fight will be held Saturday night.

MORE BUSINESS IN RELIGION

NEW YORK, Sept. 10—(A.P.)—Installation of business methods in the Episcopal churches of America is the aim of Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President of the Episcopal National Council.

Mr. Franklin, a prominent New York banker, believes there is no incompatibility between modern business and religion, and he has issued a call for 4,000 volunteers to serve as church business managers.

"Business needs more Christianity and Christianity needs more business" Mr. Franklin explained. "Good management and effective organization in church affairs are the results sought for."

CHAPTER XXIV.

"I'm not prepared to-night to abandon you, Nan. I must have some time to get inured to the prospect."

"Did you come over to-night to tell me good-bye before going back to the woods, Donald?"

He nodded, and deliberately she kissed him with great tenderness.

"Then good-by, sweetheart," she whispered. "In our case, the least said is soonest mended. And please do not write to me. Keep me out of your thoughts for a month, and perhaps I'll stay out."

"No hope," he answered, with a lugubrious smile. "However, I'll be as good as I can. And I'll not write. But—when I return from that month of exile, do not be surprised if I appear to claim you for good or for evil, for better or for worse."

She kissed him again—hurriedly—and pressed him gently from her, as if his persistence gave her cause for apprehension.

"Dear old booby!" she murmured. "Run along home now, won't you, please?"

So he went, wondering why he had come, and the following morning, still wrapped in a mental fog, he departed for the logging-camp, but not until his sister Jane had had her long deferred inning. While he was in the garage at The Dreamerie, warming up his car, Jane appeared and begged him to have some respect for the family, even though, aparently, he had none for himself. Concluding a long and bitter tirade, she referred to Nan as "that abandoned girl."

Poor Jane! Hardly had she uttered the words before her father appeared in the door of the garage.

"One year, Janey," he announced composedly. "And I'd be pleased to see the photograph o' the human being that'll make me revoke that sentence. I'm fair weary having my work spoiled by women's tongues."

"I'll give you my photograph, old pepper-pot," Donad suggested. "I have great influence with you, have I not?"

The Laird looked up at him with a fond grin.

"Well?" he parried.

"Will you remit the sentence to one of washing out the mouth with soap and water to cleanse it of those horrid words you just listened to?"

"That's not a bad idea," the stern old man answered. "Janey, you may have your choice, since Donald has interceded for you."

But Jane maintained a freezing silence and swept out of the garage with a mien that proclaimed her belief that her brother and father were too vulgar and plebian for her.

"I'm having the deil's own time managing my family," old Hector complained, "but I'll have obedience and kindness and justice in my house hold, or know the reason why. Aye—and a bit of charity," he added grimly. He stood beside the automobile and held up his hand for his son's. "And you'll be gone a month, lad?" he queried.

Donald nodded.

"Too painful—this coming home week-ends," he explained. "And Nan has requested that I see no more of her. You have a stanch ally in her, dad. She's for you all the way."

Relief showed in his father's troubled face.

"I'm glad to know that," he replied. "You're the one that's bringing me worry and breaking down her good resolutions and common sense." He leaned a little closer, first having satisfied himself that none of the women of the family was eavesdropping, and whispered: "I'm trying to figure out a nice way to be kind to her and give her a good start in life without insulting her. If you should have a clear thought on the subject, I'd like your advice, son. 'Twould hurt me to have her think I was trying to buy her off."

"As I view the situation, all three of us have to figure our own angles for ourselves. However, if a happy thought should dawn on me, I'll write you. Think it over a few weeks and then do whatever seems best."

So they parted.

CHAPTER XXV

A FEW DAYS subsequent to Andrew Daney's secret scuttling of the motor-boat Brutus, Nan Brent was amazed to receive a visit from him.

"Good-morning, Nan," he saluted her. "I have bad news for you."

"What, pray?" she managed to articulate. She wondered if Donald had been injured in the woods.

"Your motor boat's gone."

This was, indeed, bad news. Trouble showed in Nan's face.

"Gone where?" she faltered.

"Nobody knows. It disappeared from the garbage barge, alongside of which it was moored. I've had men searching for it for two days, but we have given it up as lost. Was the Brutus, by any chance, insured against theft?"

"Certainly not."

"Well, the Tyee Lumber Company used reasonable care to conserve your property, and whilst there's a question whether the company's responsible for the loss of the boat if it's been stolen, even while under charter to us, nevertheless, you will be reimbursed for the value of the boat. Your father had it up for sale last year. Do you recall the price he was asking?"

"He was asking considerably less than he really believed the Brutus was worth," Nan replied honestly. "He would have sold for fifteen hundred dollars, but the Brutus was worth at least twenty-five hundred. Values shrink, you know, when one requires ready cash. And I do not agree with you that no responsibility attaches to the Tyee Lumber Company, although under the circumstances, it appears there is no necessity for argument."

"We'll pay twenty-five hundred rather than descend to argument," Daney replied crisply, "although personally I am of the opinion that two thousand would be ample." He coughed a propitiatory cough and looked round the Sawdust Pile appraisingly. "May I inquire, my girl," he asked presently, "what are your plans for the future?"

"Certainly, Mr. Daney. I have none."

"It would be a favor to the Tyee Lumber if you had, and that they contemplated removal to some other house. The Laird had planned originally to use the Sawdust Pile for a drying yard"—he smiled faintly—"but abandoned the idea rather than interfere with your father's comfort. Of course, The Laird hasn't any more title to the Sawdust Pile than you have—not as much, in fact, for I do believe you could make a squatter's right stick in any court. Just at present, however, we have a greater need of the Sawdust Pile than ever. We are getting out quite a lot of airplane spruce for the British government, and since there's no doubt we'll be into the war ourselves one of these days, we'll have to furnish additional spruce for our own government. Spruce has to be air-dried ,you know, to obtain the best results, and—well, we really need the Sawdust Pile. What will you take to abandon it and leave us in undisputed possession?"

"Nothing, Mr. Daney."

"Nothing?"

"Precisely—nothing. We have always occupied it on The Laird's sufference, so I do not think, Mr. Daney, that I shall turn pirate and ingrate now. If you will be good enough to bring me over twenty-five hundred dollars in cash to-day, I will give you a clearance for the loss of the Brutus, and abandon the Sawdust Pile to you within the next three or four days."

His plan had worked so successfully that Daney was, for the moment, rendered incapable of speech.

"Will you be leaving Port Agnew?" he sputtered presently. "Or can I arrange to let you have a small house at a modest rental——"

She dissipated the verbal camouflage with a distainful motion of her upflung hand.

"Thank you. I shall leave Port Agnew—forever. The loss of the Brutus makes my escape possible," she added ironically.

'May I suggest that you give no intimation of your intention to surrender this property?" he suggested eagerly. "If a word of your plan to abandon got abroad, it might create an opporunity for some person to jump the Sawdust Pile and defy us to dispossess him."

Mr. Daney sought, by this subterfuge, to stimulate an interest in the physical possession of the Sawdust Pile which he was far from feeling. He congratulated himself, however, that, all in all, he had carried off his mission wonderfully well, and departed with a promise to bring over the money himself that very afternoon. Indeed, so delighted was he that it was with difficulty that he restrained himself from unburdening to The Laird, when the latter dropped in at the mill office that afternoon, the news that before the week should be out Nan Brent would be but a memory in Port Agnew. Later, he wondered how far from Port Agnew she would settle for a new start in life and whether she would leave a forwarding address. He resolved to ask her, and he did, when he reappeared at the Sawdust Pile that afternoon with the money to reimburse Nan for the loss of the Brutus.

"I haven't decided where I'll go, Mr. Daney," Nan informed him truthfully, except that I shall betake myself some distance from the Pacific Coast—some place where the opportunities for meeting people who know me are nebulous, to say the least. And I shall leave Port Agnew"—she looked Mr. Daney squarely in the eyes as she said this—"I shall see to it that no man, woman or child in Port Agnew—not even Don McKaye or The Laird, who have been most kind to me—shall know where I have gone."

"I'm sorry matters have so shaped themselves in your life, poor girl, that you're feeling bitter," Mr. Daney replied, with genuine sympathy, notwithstanding the fact that he would have been distressed had her bitterness been less genuine. In the relization that it was genuine, he had a wild impulse to leap in the air and crack his ankles together for very joy. "Will I be seeing you again, Nan, before you leave?"

"Not unless the spirit moves you, Mr. Daney," she answered dryly. She had no dislike for Andrew Daney, but since he was the husband of Mrs. Daney, and under that person's dominion, she distrusted him.

"Well then, I'll bid you good-by now, Nan," he announced. "I hope your lot will fall in pleasanter places than Port Agnew. Good-by, my dear girl, and good luck to you—always."

"Good-by, Mr. Daney," she replied. Thank you for bringing the money over."

LABOR THE COMING POWER IN ENGLAND

The Story of the Amazing Rise of the Workers' Movement in the British Isles

Article 3

WHAT DOES THE PARTY STAND FOR?

By J. R. SMALLWOOD.

But for what does the Labor party stand?—what does it want that the old-line parties do not offer? In a word, Socialism.

The British Labor party is definitely Socialist. Its platform is a Socialist platform. It wishes to put Socialism into practice in Great Britain. Its chief leaders are ardent Socialists: Ramsay MacDonald, Sidney Webb, Philip Snowden, Arthur Ponsonby, Col. Josiah Wedgewood, "Bob" Smillie, Rev. Campbell Stephen, and the others; while the intellectual wing of the movement, and the one that gives it its tone, consists of the Independent Labor party and the Fabian Society, both of which are Socialist propaganda organizations.

The British Labor party does not stand for Communism, or Bolshevism. Nor, needless to say, does it stand for Anarchism. It stands for Socialism. The Communist party in Great Britain has elected only one member—Newbold—and him the Labor party has deliberately refused to accept in its membership, so that in the Commons he acts as an independent. While in sympathy with the attempt of the Russians to hew out of their country a state that will meet the ideals of the Russian people—a thing, after all, with which all honest men ought to be in sympathy—the British Labor party has no connection, or anything in common, with the Bolshevist principles.

Social Ownership of Industries.

In a word, the Labor party wants the industries of Great Britain to be owned by the people who operate them, and who consume the wealth produced with them. The party stands for the socialization of the coal mines, the railroads, and all other means of production and distribution. And more than 4,000,000 citizens of Great Britain voted last General Election for socialization of these industries, believing that socially-used industries ought to be socially-owned.

To-day, says the Labor party, the vast mass of the people of Great Britain are without property and without capital. They possess nothing but the power to labor by hand or brain, plus natural ability and a deep fountain of enthusiasm. But it is impossible to produce wealth with these alone. There was a time, it is true, when little more than a man's skilful hands and brain were required to produce sufficient wealth to supply half of this income. That is to produce sufficient wealth to supply half of this income. That is to him. But that was before the era of mass production, before the era of great machine-production. So long as production was carried on with small toils used by individual men, it was comparatively easy for individual men to own and operate their own means of production (tools), much as the fishermen of Newfoundland today own and operate their own tools—namely their fishing-boats, hooks and lines, traps, etc. But to-day, on account of the fact that production is performed with vast machines costing great wealth, it is impossible for each man to acquire his own means of production.

Private Ownership Now.

Consequently, therefore, the vast mass of the people of Great Britain are without the means of producing the food, clothing, shelter and other articles they must have if they are to continue to live.

The means of producing and distributing this necessary wealth—namely, of course, the mines, mills, factories, workshops, stores, railroads, steamships, etc.,—these means of production are owned by a handful of individuals.

The vast mass of the people has nothing left to do, therefore, but to apply their labor-power, ability and enthusiasm to these means of production owned by the handful of men. They operate these industries, and out of the total sum of wealth thus produced (a fabulous sum) get back from the owners of the means of production a certain small proportion, in the shape of wages and salaries. All wealth is the result of a union of labor and tools—and the big question lies in the division of the wealth so created. The proportion that labor gets—wages and salaries—is rarely more than enough to keep them alive and in condition to produce more children, who, in their turn, will work to produce wealth for the sons of the present owners of the means of production.

Thru their ownership of these means of production and distribution, the handful of men are able to get, and get, the cream of the wealth produced by the labor and ability of the multitude in conjunction with the means of production. Out of this "cream" the owners (or capitalists) do two things; but mostly they re-invest their surplus wealth in other industries in their own country, or in some foreign country where capital is needed—in which case, naturally, the same process is repeated and more wealth pours into their laps.

Condition of the People.

This condition has reduced the vast mass of the British people to need or actual poverty, and kept the handful in luxury. The condition is shown very eloquently by the figures of the distribution of the wealth of Great Britain.

The accumulated wealth of the nation is $150,000,000,000.

Ten per cent. of the people (the handful) own 90 per cent. of this wealth.

Ninety per cent. of the people therefore own only 10 per cent. of the wealth.

The annual income of all the people of Great Britain from rent, interest, profits, salaries and wages is $15,000,000,000.

One-ninth of the people (just over 5,000,000 people) receive between them just over one-half of this income.

That means that the remaining eight-ninths of the people (over 41,000,000) receive less than one-

Ninety percent. of all the people are absolutely landless, owning not even the land on which is built the house they live in (nor the house either, in most cases).

About 2,500 persons own more than half the land of the United Kingdom.

Twelve families between them own a quarter of all the land of Scotland!

Of the 700,000 people who die in an average year in Great Britain 620,000 die owning no property. That means that the remaining 80,000 people die leaving all the wealth that is left, namely, $1,250,000,000. (And remember that that wealth goes to swell the fortunes of the already-wealthy.)

There are, according to Lloyd George, three and a half millions of people who live in slums in the country that could spend ten thousand million pounds sterling in a war.

Oddfellows Honor Grand Master MacKay

A large gathering of city Oddfellows attended the banquet at the West End Restauraht last evening in honor of Bro. W. A. MacKay, Grand Master of the Order for the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland, who has been paying an official visit to St. John's.

The occasion, under the chairmanship of Bro. W. T. Quick, P.G., P.C.P., was a successful and enjoyable one from every point of view and both the brethern and guests must have felt glad to be present.

The Grand Master, in replying to the toast of the evening which was proposed by Bro. J. .C Philips, P.B., P. D. D. G. S. gave a lucid exposition of Oddfellowship and reviewed the history of the Order from its early inception, which acording to all the information at his disposal, was first founded in England in the year 1720 being then known as the Ancient Order of Bucks, the three bucks' heads being their sign or symbol. This later gave place to the Ancient Order of Oddfellows, and it is generally believed that the three links were originally adopted when it was known as the Bucks. Coming down to 1819, the Order was firmly established at Baltimore, with a membership of five, and from that time the Oddfellows have gone along by leaps and bounds, until to-day it has a membership of two and a half millions and is spread throughout the greater part of Canada and the United States.

It was in 1855 that the organization was first introduced in the Maritime Provinces, when two lodges were opened and the total membership was 32. To-day there are 127 lodges and over 14,000 members in this jurisdiction. The Grand Master explained the various functions of the Grand Lodge all of which were most interesting and instructive to the members present. He expressed himself as very highly pleased with the progress in Newfoundland and he would bring back the kindest greetings from brother members and lodges here.

Another notable speech of the evening was that of Bro. Gordon Bradley in responding to the toast "The Land We Live In." Mr. Bradley pointed out the ills from which Newfoundland to-day suffers. Principal amongst which were the deside of capital to exact too much from labor and the reluctance of labor to give a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. He believed that this country, even to-day, is one of the best under ches un in which to live; but while we should have optimism in dealing with the problems that confront us it should not be the optimism that winks out of sight that which is unpleasant and sees only that which is to our liking.

During the evening a pleasing event took place when the chairman, on behalf of Atlantic and Colonial Lodges, presented the Grand Master with a whitecoat, suitably mounted, as a memento of his visit to Newfoundland. In thanking the members the Grand Master felt at a loss for words to express his feelings. He said, however, that during his short stay, he had been shown the greatest hospitality, and the goodfellowship of Oddfellowship was fully exemplified. It had been a great pleasure and a delight to him and he sincerely thanked the brethern for their splendid and unique gift, which he would always treasure.

The musical part of the programme was under the direction of Mr. Era Fox, while the catering was excellent, and thes peeches were of a very high character and the affair will be long remembered by city Oddfellows.

The following was the complete toast list:

"The King"—Prop. the Chairman; Resp. God Save the King.

"The Land We Live In"—Pro. Bro. Walter Garf; Rest. Bro Gordon Bradley, P.G.

"The Grand Lodge, Grand Encampment, and Grand Master"—Pro. Bro. J. C. Philips, P.G., P.D., D.G.S., Resp. Grand Master of Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland, Bro. W. A. Mackay.

"Subordinate Lodges"—Prop. Bro. Gordon Philips, P.G.; Resp. Bro. J. Butler, N.G., Atlantic Lodge; Bro. P. Dwyer, N.G., Colonial Lodge.

"Song"—Bro. Gordon Hibbs.

"The D.D.G.M. and G.C."—prop Bro George Soper, P.G.P.C.P.; Resp. Bro. G. T. Philips, D.D.G.M. and G.C.

"The Press"—Prop. Bro. Edward Spurrell, P.G.; Resp. C.T. James, (Mail-; P.O'Reilly, (Telegram); J. P. Moakler, (News); R. T. Joy, (Advocate).

The Grand Master leaves by the express to-day and enroute will visit the Lodge at Grand Falls, afterwards continuing on to North Sydney.

The Guards Sports

A New Long Distance Runner Gives Spectacular Performance and Wins 3 Mile Race—A Large Attendance and Ideal Weather.

THE GUARDS' Sports, which were held at St. George's Field yesterday afternoon, lost nothing because of enforced postponement earlier in the season. Weather conditions were all that could be desired, and the various events were well contested.

S. Parsons and W. Linegar carried off the laurels of the day. Parsons won the 100-yds. and in the first heat tied with Raymond Halley in the 220-yds. dash. The second run between these two sprinters was a thrilling affair, and because of their splendid performance, both were awarded prizes.

Tommy Morrisey broke the record in putting the shot, his 30 ft. 7 in. with the regulation shot, being one foot greater than Coefield's throw in the A.A.A. meet last week.

The Piercy brothers showed up well in the one mile walk, while Harvey Skirving again carried off the male and half-mile events.

The Guards' tug of war team went down to defeat after a splendid record during the last few years, when they carriad off this event at all outdoor and indoor meets.

The Cadets won the first pull, having a few inches to spare when the allotted ten minutes were up. In the second pull, the Cadets got away at the sound of the pistol, and the Guards were slow in getting down. The Cadets were given the decision by the judges, though an argument resulted, the Guards claiming they were not ready. However, the decision was final, and the trophy was awarded the Cadets.

W. Linegar, a dark horse, won the three-mile race. This was his first race, and he crossed the tape in 16.-14 4-5, thus breaking O'Toole's record by 18 4-5 seconds. "Like father, like son." Yesterday's champion is a son of Mr. T. Linegar. Blackhead Road, who in his boyhood was one of our long distance champions.

A field of five competitors entered for the event: T. Piercy, J. Willar, J. Ralph, G. Stone and W. Linegar. Stone took the lead at the start, while Linegar was last for the first two rounds. Then he moved rapidly forward, and running beautifully, soon won the admiration of the fans, who cheered him to the echo. He completed the first mile in 5.08, and the second in 10.32, and finished the course in 16.14 1-5, having lapped Ralph and Willar, and beating Stone who came second, by over 200 yds.

The course was verified this morning by Mr. Noel, but those who measured it last evening at the conclusion of the Sports, know that it is correct.

The Guards' Band was in attendance. The prizes were presented by Mrs. Hon. Tasker Cook, and President Russell, at the conclusion of the events, on behalf of the Guards' Association, thanked Mrs. Cook for making the presentation.

The Guards' Meet winds up the athletic events for the season, which has been one of the most successful in the history of athletics in the city.

The following were the various events and winners:

220-Yds.—Parsons and Halley, tie; 26 secs.

1 Mile Walk—T. Piercey; F. Piercey; 8.35 2-5.

Putting the Shot—T. Morrisey, 30 ft. 7 ins.; W. Coefield, 30 ft. 4 ins.

3-Mile Race—W. Linegar; G. Stone; 16.14 1-5.

Football Fives—Guards vs. Star—Won by Guards.

One Mile—H. Skirving; Perry; 4.53 1-5.

Tug of War (Final)—Guards vs. Cadets. Won by Cadets.

Obstacle Race—Gower Stone.

W. J. Higgins, K.C., was Captain of the Field. By him and his aides, the afternoon's program was carried out without a hitch, thus adding materially to a very enjoyable afternoon for all concerned.

Board of Trade To Form Exhibition Committee

A meeting of the Board of Trade is being held tomorrow afternoon for the purpose of forming a committee to look after Newfoundland's interests in the coming British Empire Exhibition.

This step follows upon the invitation extended by Premier Warren to the Board of Trade to co-operate with the Government in the matter of the country's participation in the exhibition, for which purpose the Legislature has granted the sum of $50,000.

The Board of Trade is undoubtedly the proper body to look after our interests in this connection, and the Government's action in seeking their co-operation will meet with general commendation.

The Real Reason for A Pretty Skin

Why is it that one girl has a fresh smooth complexion and another a skin which is lifeless, dull and sallow? Is it a gift of nature or some guarded beauty secret?

It is a secret, but an open one in which every woman may share. It consists in knowledge of the care which keeps the skin free from clogging, poisonous accumulations. In the removal every day of all dirt, oil secretions, excess cold cream, powder and rouge.

To do this, use mild soap, massage it thoroughly into your skin and remove with many rinsings. The mildest soap you can choose for this purpose is Palmolive. It contains Palm and Olive oils. These rare oils are the mildest cleansers nature ever produced. They are the oils used by Cleopatra thousands of years ago.

Their combination in Palmolive produces a profuse, creamy lather which penetrates every tiny pore, removes every trace of dirt, oil, rouge and powder and leaves the skin smooth and fresh as a rose.

Firpo Expects to Have Crowd Against Him, But Isn't Worrying

By LUIS ANGEL FIRPO

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Sept 4—I know that when I go into the ring to fight Jack Dempsey for the champion ship of the world, I will be surrounded by a crowd shouting for my defeat. As I go through the crowd from my dessing room to the ring, men will stand on their chairs and shout evil things at me. They will lose their heads and call me bad names and tell me that Dempsey will do terrible things to me. I will not know what the words are, but one does not need to know a language to know the meaning when a man scowls and shouts and shakes his fists. I will smile and wonder to myself if these brave men who wish me ill in so loud a voice would like to come up in the ring with me and call me names. I will wonder if perhaps six or eight of them at once would like to come into thering with me and call me bad names.

"CRACK" AT FANS

I do not think they would do so even if they had the chance, Men who speak insults from the crowd are like those who write bad letters and sign no names. They are cowards and it is easy to laugh at the things which cowards say, no matter how bad they may be.

Some have asked me whether it would discourage me to have the crowd against me? That is a little bit funny to me. It would discourage me me perhaps if thec rowd in a strange country was not against me because then I would think that I was so little feared that I could not make enemies. Some writer, I cannot remember his name, once said that when the critics in the newspapers no longer took the trouble to say that he was no good then he would think that he was no longer a great author.

It is so with me. So long as the boxing critics think it is worth while to print colums about me saying that I am no good, I am not worried. So long as the cowards and the mean ones in thec rowds that come to watch me fight and trouble to stand on chairs to boo and hiss and scream insults at me, that long I know that I am dangerous and have a chance to win

To prove this I have only to say that it was only after the mean ones in the North American crowds began to think me dangerous that they began to boo and hiss me. The first time this happened was at Jersey City, when I fought Willard. Then for the first time I think some began to think that perhaps after all I might beat Willard and then defeat Dempsey and become champion of the world, and so then, for the first time, the mean ones booed and hissed and screamed insults at me.

ALL NOT UNFAIR

I would not have the people who read what I say think I meant that most of the North American crowds are not fair. It is only of the few I speak, the few cowards that can be found in all great crowds who scream and hiss, the few like those who shouted insults at poor Criqui, the Frenchman, when he was fighting at his best and having his championship taken from him.

I have had read to me acounts in some newspapers saying that I was having trouble with my left arm. Some have said that I had neuritis and others that I was bothered with rheumatism. The truth is that I slightly strained the muscles in my left arm in practising a new method of using it. It was just a little sore for two days, but it is all right again. I have never at any time felt better before a fight. I am in the best physical condition and I am satisfied that my progress with my training is all that I could wish.

Lord Birkenhead

(The Seer in Halifax Herald.)

Lord Birkenhead has arrived in the United States. He is an interesting man. He is coming on to Canada. The Seer has known of him for several years. He is said to be a clever and successful lawyer;; and he has been Lord Chancellor of England.

He is not, however, a wise man, nor a sane counsellor. He has no vision. He has no place for idealism. He is not an asset to any country—rather a menace. He announces that self-interest is the necessary motive-spring of human endeavour. This is a bald and deplorable heresy. Many will like to hear this: and some will be found to applaud it. But the seeing eye will not be deceived. The seeing mind will check up this futile and emphemeral chatter by bring it to the touchstone of fact and eternal truth.

The Seer is certain that Lord Birkenhead is wrong. He criticizes Woodrow Wilson for calling his nation to a high task of international knight-errantry, and on the ground that the nation was not ready for such a call. The Seer has heard of the godly fellowship of the Prophets, of the glorious company of the Apostles, of the noble army of Martyrs. He thinks they all did something. He finds them good citizens—national assets. He knows their names live for evermore. And he knows why they live. Everybody knows.

Lord Birkenhead is out of office. The Seer has faith to believe that British people will keep him out.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, SEPT. 13th., 1923.

Premier Warren Leaves For England On Digby

Prime Minister Warren will leave for England by Digby on Saturday. There are various matters which necessitate the Prime Minister's visit to the Old Country at this particular time, principal among which are the Imperial Conference, to be held in October, and the Labrador Boundary question, which has now reached an advanced stage, both the Newfoundland and Canadian cases having to be ready for presentation to the Privy Council during the fall.

At the Imperial Conference will be representatives from all the dominions and colonies of the Empire, and it is only fitting that Britain's oldest Colony, represented by the Prime Minister, should take part in the discussion of the very important subjects outlined for the conference programme.

Prime Minister Warren does not go as one unknown in London's official circles. His previous visits in connection with Newfoundland's affairs have made him widely and popularly known throughout the Empire's capital, and from his present mission, it is to be hoped, that results, both respecting the conference and the Labrador Boundary dispute, will prove favourable to Newfoundland.

With the Humber agreement ratification a common industrial bond more firmly links our Dominion with the Mother Country and makes for a greater necessity of mutual understanding and action.

During the Prime Minister's absence, Hon. Geo. Shea will be Acting Prime Minister. Hon. Mr. Shea has previously filled the high position, and his wide experience in public affairs admirably suit him for the responsibilities of office. His appointment as Acting Prime Minister will be received with general satisfaction.

Taking Chances

Insurance companies are extending their activities along many peculiar lines these days and are certainly keeping up with the advancement of the times.

Says the New York World:—

WHAT NEXT IN INSURANCE?

Insurance against damage from lightning, from hailstorms, from tornadoes, is common. Insurance against accident to plate glass, to a steam boiler, to a race horse or other valuable animal, to the fingers of a pianist, to the voice of a singer, is either common or sometimes known. Temporary insurance of special enterprises against loss from the death of a monarch or financier or from bad weather attending some great public ceremonial is frequent, and the records of Lloyd's of London are full of cases of insurance, or rather wagers, of a more or less bizarre character.

But unique at least in the annals of American insurance is probably the policy of $10,000 issued by a New York company to Swarthmore College scientists insuring them against rain, high winds or dust-clouds during 179 seconds, seventeen seconds after 2.34 o'clock p.m. on Sept. 10, in the State of Durango, Mexico, when and where they will be to observe and photograph an eclipse of the sun. If the vision is thus obscured at the precise time, the company loses $10,000. If not, the company wins the $500 premium paid.

Presumably the company had beforehand provided itself with weather reports for the season from that part of Mexico so that it could strike a law of averages on which to calculate its risk. But the incident suggests the question of what next in the line of insurance once it has tied up with human adventures beyond the earth. Possibly an underwriting of voyages to Mars.

TIME

I saw Time in his workshops carving faces;
Scattered around his tools lay, blunting griefs,
Sharp cares that cut out deeply in reliefs
Of light and shade; sorrows that smooth the traces
Of what were smiles. Nor yet without fresh graces
His handiwork, for ofttimes rough were ground
And polished, oft the pinched made smooth and round;
The calm look, too, the impetuous fire replaces.

Long time I stood and watched; with hideous grin
He took each heedless face between his knees,
And graved and scarred and bleached with boiling tears.
I, wonderin, turned to go, when lo my skin
Feels crumpled, and in glass my own face see Itself all changed, scarred, careworn, white with years.

—Frederick George Scott, in "Time".

The British Empire Exhibition

Amusements Will Cover Every Pahse of Sporting Activity

(Concluded)

Where the Pacific Ocean rolls its swell there are still laughing nations of happy children "who have never grown up, and lands where the curse of Adam, which is that with the sweat of the brow must bread be won, has not fallen. Civilisation intrudes now, more urgent each year, to impose conformity with its life: and the Paradises of the South Seas yield to its advance—here with the sullen and passionate resentment of the angry child, there with the pathetic listlessness of the child too afraid to be angry. But still there survives much that has the atmosphere rather of the Garden of Eden than of this curious world which civilised man has made for himself. The life of these Pacific Islands will be reproduced by the British Empire Exhibition, side by side with the life of India, the West Indies, of Burma, of Malaya and of the British Settlements in China.

To the scientist this will be an opportunity for the study of the different types of culture in mankind. To the humanist there will be an inexhaustible interest in studying the natural life of strange races, and noting how they are responding to contact with Western civilisation. To the curious there will be an opportunity of getting a general knowledge of the races of man; he can survey them all within the Exhibition grounds.

The Social Side

The social side of the Exhibition will not be neglected. What is aimed at is that this should be a joyous pageant of the British people: a splendid display of all their capacities in the arts of peace, and a hospitable Family Party. The Mother Country will see to it that the representatives of her children nations, and those nations which accept her tutelage in learning the arts of civilised life, are treated with the warm and gracious hospitality due to guests.

It is recognised that the children of our British race overseas, even when they have been separated by more than one generation from direct knowledge of the Mother Country, still cherish in their hearts either the knowledge, or the aspiration for knowledge, of her beautiful countryside, with its greaious flowers, lawns and trees. So there has been a special effort made to preserve as far as possible the woodland amenities of Wembley Park. Not a tree has been sacrificed unless at the call of stern necessity. The art and industry of the gardener have been called upon to intersperse the halls of exhibits with lovely gardens. Thus the Exhibition will strive to show England at her best.

To emphasise the fact that it is a "Family Party"—a happy gathering of the British clans, in which the hospitality will have the easy intimacy of the family circle—the British Empire Exhibition has made a "home-made-cakes" rule for its entertainments. Food and beverages will be as far as possible Empire products only. This will not mean that the most fastidious will need to go hungry. Rather it will give an opportunity for those who are curious about food to find out how splendidly varied and abundant are the resources of the Empire.

Amusements

The British Empire Exhibition, though its chief purpose is to display the achievements of man in art, science and industry, will not neglect the appeals of sport and amusement to human nature. The sports events, which during the Exhibition will be held in the greatest arena ever yet provided for trials of skill and strength, will cover every phase of sporting activity. The native races which live under the shelter of the Empire will show their sports and amusements. In the great Amusements Park all the most modern devices by which civilised man endeavours to avoid the tedium of life will be displayed. The philosopher looking upon these elaborated amusements, and contrasting them with the simpler sports of the Asiatics or Africans, may indulge in the reflection, if he pleases, that it is hard work to amuse the modern man. But the average visitor to the British Empire Exhibition will be glad that he can have for his choice all the sports and amusements that the world knows.

Our Friends Abroad.

With a particular appeal to the peoples under the British flag, the British Empire Exhibition will have a special appeal to our friends of the United States, South America, Europe, and all parts of the world. To this Family Party of the British Empire, showing every phase of the Empire's life from the primitive village of the savage tribe making its first faltering steps towards the light of civilisation up to the hall wherein is displayed man's latest scientific victories, the people of the United States especially will come as honoured and friendly guests because the work thus shown (on the whole worthy work for humanity) is work in which they have had a large part. The common heritage of the United States and of Great Britain is far more important than their separate shares in the British Empire's achievement. Our friends on the European Continent will come also, we hope, in a friendly and inquiring spirit. France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Spain have colonial problems of their own, and their citizens will be interested to see how those problems are met by the British race. Nor will other countries fail to find matters of vivid interest. Indeed all the world should know the way to Wembley in 1924.

More About A Library For St. John's

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir,—I was greatly interested in your editorial of Saturday's date. It was surely a clear exposition, and you are worthy of congratulations. I notice that "Citizen" has paid pou a compliment in yesterday's Advocate, in relation thereto, and I assure you, sir, it is most deserving, and he fully upholds your contention that a public library is a necessity and should be established in this city. By so doing, it would afford an immense amount of instruction, and it would be a lasting monument to our educative progressiveness.

Your contributor, "Citizen," has written relating to the gift of $50,000 by Mr. Carnegie, which is correct. The following comment, published at the time when the public library was being largely talked of, may be of interest to your readers. It says as follows.

"Hon. Mr. Morris got his Public Library Bill through. It provides for the appointment by the Governor in Council, of Boards of five persons for towns or hamlets in thic Island, who shall have power to acquire lands, accept donations, and establish such libraries. The first reason for the bill was that Judge Prowse had secured a generous offer of $50,000 to erect a library building in St. John's on condition of a guarantee being afforded of $5,000 annually for its up-keep. The Government could not give such guarantee or assume any responsibility, so it became necessary to arrange for some machinery by which the funds of the benefaction could be reaped. Through Judge Prowse's efforts, the Athaneum site had been secured free of charge. The Judge had also obtained the concession from Mr. Carnegie that the whole building need not be used for Library purposes. It was also thought that in various ways and from different sources, the requisite guarantee could be secured, and it was necessary to engineer these schemes to some practical end, and that a board of control be appointed. Later on, similar boards would be appointed in other places, and eventually travelling libraries might be circulating all over the Island, bringing the benefit of good literature home to even the most isolated of our fisherfolk."

Sorry I am to say, sir, that all the noise and clamour made over the proposed public library only ended in smoke. So here we are to-day, no better off as regards having the facilities to offer to the thousands in the city and elsewhere, by which they could enjoy themselves in their spare moments and to educate their minds from that reservoir of literature, a public library.

Mr. T. B. Bowring, cousin to Sir Edgar and Mr. Henry Bowring, generously donated a free library to Moretonhampstead, England, some years ago. At the presentation of the building to the citizens, and in returning thanks for the ovation tendered him, Mr. Bowring said he had spent twenty years of his life in the United States, and when there he was always impressed by the fact that wherever he went, in whatever town of importance he arrived, there was a free library. He attributed a great deal of the unusual intelligence to be found among the masses of the people of the United States, to the presence of the free libraries, and their constant use.

I find, Mr. Editor, that the first public library known was founded at Athens, (B.C. 540) by Pisistratos, and after all those centuries, we find that St. John's, with all its vaunted display of grandeur and education, is still devoid of such a beneficent and progressive institution.

well may we exclaim: "Where are we, and whither tending?"

I remain, yours truly,

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

St. John's, Sept. 11, 1923.

Agrees With Advocate Re Examinations

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—There will be many in this country who will agree entirely with your remarks yesterday concerning the C. H. E. examinations.

Much pertaining to the present system under which the exams are outlined and conducted is undesirable and needs to be remedied if we are to have an examination system adaptable to our conditions and to the particular needs of the children. The system is not practical enough. There are children who leave school, having passed examinations, who are unable to adjust their knowledge to the solution of the simplest practical problem. It is not the children's fault. It is the system's fault; the system which "crams" for examinations, fills the minds with bookish information, which is forgotten during the summer holidays.

It is true that those who fail in the exams by the want of a few marks in a subject have sometimes just as much of practical side of things as those who pass. Whatever system is adopted, that could not be easily overcome.

What is objectionable about the system is the way examination papers are set, the lack of practical insight into our local conditions and the forced necessity of cramming candidates to the detriment of other scholars who do not happen to be sitting for examinations.

Yours truly,

ONE INTERESTED.

QUEBEC, Sept. 13.—The Prince of Wales began his vacation in real earnest here to-day. He had not been ashore an hour before he had started out to act just like he would if he were really no other than Lord Renfrew, under which title he is to be known in Canada on this occasion. He came down from his rooms in Chateau Frontenac and wandered around Rotunda for a few moments, then seeing a side door leading to the street, he struck out and strolled up Duffery Terrace, looking with interest at the shipping on the river below. Thence he went to the Citadel, which he looked through, after which he sauntered back to the town and made several purchases in stores along the way. In the afternoon he played eighteen holes at Quebec golf course, losing several balls into Montmorency Falls, adjacent to greens. Hon. Martin Burrell played with Renfrew and Sir Godfrey Thomas, and beat them. "Yes, we have no Bananas," played by the orchestra, decided the Royal Visitor change his mind about remaining in his rooms during the evening. This famous Jazz melody set his feet alonging to dance, and he discovered that the Chateau staged a dance every night. He announced his intention of attending, and the news went like wildfire about town, with the result that in a short time the greater part of Quebec junior, four hundred, were on the way to the Chateau. The Prince danced with several girls he had met when here in 1918, and with many others. One novel incident, and the only occasion of any person disregarding his incognito occurred, when the Prince entered the Citadel, the guard recognising the visitor called out buglers, who sounded the Royal Salute. The Prince was evidently pleased and thanked the Guard personally, but asked them not to repeat salute when he departed. He will leave for the West to-morrow afternoon, and will make no stops enroute.

DONCASTER, Sept. 13—Papyrus, Derby winner, was beaten to-day by two length by Lord Derby's fleet filly, Tranquil, and besides suffering this blow to his prestige, came out of the race with lacerated legs suffered when he was crowded half a mile from the start. Neither blow will prevent him sailing for the United States as scheduled, to meet the fastest three-year-old in that country.

MEXICALI, Lower Calif., Sept. 13—Wireless messages received here late to-day, report destruction by a tidal wave, of San Jose de Carbo, a small fishing town on the west coast of Lower California.

The number of lives lost is not known. Most of the five hundred residents of the town are believed to have escaped to higher ground when the tidal wave swept over the place yesterday.

NORTH SYDNEY, Sept. 13—Mrs. George McIver, daughter of M. J. Ross, of North Sydney, was married here at five o'clock, this afternoon, to J. Howard Trapnell of St. John's, Nfld.

FREDERICTON, Sept. 13—At the conclusion of the government meeting here to-night, it was announced that an order in council had been passed abolishing liquor export warehouses in the province.

ATHENS, Sept. 13—A semi-official statement issued yesterday declares that the arrest has been ordered of Colonel Bolzaris, Greek member of the International Commission.

ATHENS, Sept. 13—The island of Corfu has now the aspect of an Italian base. A full Italian army corps has been landed, and there are indications that there will be a prolonged occupation.

MADRID, Sept. 13—Army officers at Barcelonia have revolted and martial law has been declared.

BARCELONIA, Sept. 13—The main telephone exchange here was occupied at four o'clock this morning by a hand of revolutionaries, who are reported to be led by General Primo Riviera.

THEY CALLED HIM AN "OLD PILL"

THAT was years ago when he packed a terrible grouch, a mighty irritable stomach and a liver that refused to do the things that all good livers should. No wonder his friends called him an "old pill" and stayed away.

But that was years ago—long before he discovered Beecham's Pills and learned that two at bedtime can bring sunshine into a man's life. Today, he's an optimist, a hero to his wife, and a staunch believer in Beecham's Pills.

The cheer that Beecham's Pills bring into a man's disposition, is the incomparable cheer of sound digestion, active liver, and the regular habits that make good health.

At All Druggists—

THE GUILELESS CHILD

The late Bishop of Norwich, says The Tatler, was walking one day in a quiet street when he heard the piping voice of a little girl saying, "Please, sir, would you mind opening this gate for me?"

He at once went to her assistance and held back the gate while she went in, but, noticing on closer inspection that she was older than he had at first thought, he asked her pleasantly why she herself had not opened the gate.

"Well, you see, sir," she said with an arch smile, "the paint is wet, and I should have got it all on my hands."

A hasty examination of his own hands convinced the bishop of the truth of her statement.

GRIM OUTLOOK CAUSED BY VIOLENCE OF NATURE IN LAND OF CHERRY BLOSSOM

Inventions of Modern Civilization Broke Down Before Crushing, Grinding, Consuming Power of Mother Earth When Japanese Cities Were Destroyed.

OSAKA, Sept. 5.—As wan, half-starved and crippled refugees are drifting into Osaka, into Kobe and other points beyond Japan's area of death and destruction today, it is now possible for the rst time, to construct this complete story telling of the great quake which wiped out Yokohama, razed Tokio, and brought death and injury to as yet unnumbered thousands.

Kokohama has virtually disappeared. Tokio is but a shadow of the city which but a few days ago was the pride of the Orient. Smouldering ruins, great gaps in the hard baked earth, the stench of the dead, the cries of the dying, literally millions wandering here and there in search of food, wreckage suffering, destitution on every side—these things tell the story of the violence of nature visited upon the land of cherry blossoms.

Science, inventions of modern civilization, all that minds of eastern and western civilizations have built in recent generations, broke down before the crushing, grinding consuming powers of nature. Gas mains, constructed as a means of comfort, became instruments of destruction. Wrenched from the ground by the twisted upheaval of the earth, they spat forth flame. Electrical systems became death traps. Modern buildings came tumbling to earth, or were dissolved in fire.

And after the first big crash, followed by constantly recurring tremors Fuji Yama looked down for three nights and three days upon the glare of flames and the smoke of disappearing cities.

UNUSUAL HEAT

Through the summer Japan has sweltered in unusual heat. The humidity has been high. All foreigners and Japanese of wealth who could possibly leave the city, went into the mountains particularly over the week-ends. Saturday was a typical day. Most of the foreigners had left the city But the Japanese masses thronged the markets and Asakusa Park, the great play-ground of the city, was jammed. The little narrow streets, with their gay bunting drooping in the humid air, were filled with people.

It was shortly after noon. The life of the city was at its height.

The earth trembled. Streets seemed to rise. In houses the floors bulged upwards. It was a rising, four inch vertical shock. One came upon the other. The litle Japanese dwellings, built to withstand shocks with their dove-tailed walls and ceilings, swayed as in a mighty wind. Families huddled under their beams. Larger buildings, of firmer and less pliable construction, came crashing to earth.

The great tower at Asakust Park fell. It buried hundreds beneath it The brightly decorated shops and booths of the park took fire. Hundreds were killed or injured as they were buried beneath wreckage, or fought for safety, trampling upon each other.

Prisons, hospitals and other institutions were shaken apart, or fired. Criminals, who were not killed, or injured were liberated. Invalids were left helpless in the great disaster.

Streets became impassable. Gas and water mains burst. There was no means of combatting the rapidly spreading conflagration.

Premier Yamamoto was meeting with those he had called to form a new government. The city was being shaken down, or burned about them, but the cabinet was completed and the task of rescue immediately under taken.

TOKIO ISOLATED

The Union Station withstood the shock, but as thousands poured in that direction they were found there with no means of leaving the stricken capital. Railroad tracks were torn up. All telegraph wires were down. Tokio was isolated.

Indescribable terror gripped the city. As night came on the great fire spread, sweeping through ward after ward, destroying such houses as remained standing, and burned the debris into a great field of flames.

The military took control. Wild animals, liberated from the zoo were shot. Some looting was reported. Suspects were killed.

The military rushed to save the Prince Regent. Buildings which it was feared might communicate the fire to the palace were dynamited. The roar of explosions, the din of collopsing buildings, the rush of flames, added to the terrors of the scene. The heat of the burning city became all but unbearable. Hundreds crazed by terror, leaped into the Sumidi River. Others died in their homes, or their bodies strewing the streets, were thrown back into the flames. Burial was impossible.

Buddist and Shino priests, clad in their heavily brocaded, or white and purple robes chanted prayers for the dead, as they were consigned to the flames or piled in the streets.

From Kamakura came word of Prince Matugata being badly crushed when his house collapsed. At least three other members of the Royal Family were killed or injured. And in addition to royalty, Japan's merchant princes and others of means, who escaped death or injury, became helpless refugees along with the humblest of the poor in the face of the disaster.

DEVASTATING FIRE

The entire working forces of many industries were wiped out. Numerous incidents are reported of malls, and buildings—such as the Government printing office—collapsing and crushing practically all occupants to death.

Roads connecting Tokio with outlying points were torn up. Trees were felled. Then airplanes were pressed into service to fly over the stricken city. But so dense was the smoke arising that they were forced to fly high above the scene of the catastrophe, and the avaitors could determine little of what was transpiring beneath them.

At Yokohama, the scenes of Tokio were duplicated. The destruction, there, however, was accentuated by an even more devastating fire. The great wharves of the Japanese port were destroyed. Shipping in the harbor took fire. The quake was followed by a tidal wave. Ships that might have escaped were hurled back upon the shore, as the giant waves arose and flooded miles of the coast-line.

Even after escaping from the catastrophe, refugees were not safe. Ten thousand of them took refuge in a great military compound south of Tokio. The compound, no longer in use by the army, was surrounded by deep water and access to it was by means of wooden bridges.

Fire, having no connection with the conflagration they had left behind, broke out, consumed the bridges, destroyed the compound and burned to death practically the entire ten thousand refugees, who had no chance to escape.

FOREIGNERS' FATE

From the rst foreign stragglers to reach the outside world came news of the fate of Americans and Europeans trapped in the blackened cities of Tokio and Yokohama. Many American lives are feared to have been lost in the crumbling of the naval hospital under the first impacts of the shocks of Saturday. The American commander of the hospital was injured. Other Americans who were at Mount Harkone and at Nikko are feared to have been killed or injured.

At the latter resort were the Emperor and Empress of Japan. Their villa was shaken by the quake, and they narrowly escaped with their lives. Immediately they were safe their first thought was for their eldest son, the Prince Regent, who will succeed to the throne.

The Prince was in Tokio, at the Imperial Palace. It has been learned since that when the first quakes shook the city and the palace, the Prince hurried from his tumbling house to the royal chapel, where he worshipped while the earth heaved all about him and the crash of buildings in the Royal pa— sounded above the rumblings of the earthquake. Later, the Prince returned to his house and was escorted from thec ity by Imperial Guards.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Relieved of Nervousness and Other Distressing Ailments by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound four years ago, and am taking it now for the Change of Life and other troubles and I receive great benefit from it. I am willing to let you use my letter as a testimonial because it is the truth. I found your booklet in my letter-box and read it carefully, and that is how I came to take the Vegetable Compound myself. It has given me quiet nerves so that I sleep all night, and a better appetite. I have recommended it already to all my friends and relatives."—Mrs. ENGLEMANN, 2032 Palmetto St., Ridgewood, Brooklyn, N.Y.

For the woman suffering from nervous troubles causing sleeplessness, headache, hysteria, "the blues," Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine. For the woman of middle age who is passing through the trials of that period, it can be depended upon to relieve the troubles common at that time.

Remember, the Vegetable Compound has a record of nearly fifty years of service and thousands of women praise its merit, as does Mrs. Englemann.

You should give it a fair trial now.

POLICE COURT

A domesetic, in for safe keeping, was discharged.

An engineer from a foreign ship berthed at Bowring's, Southside, created quite a scene on the Southside last night at 10 p.m. He was caught peeping through the windows of private residences. His explanation was that he was looking for a restaurant or cafe, in which to regale himself and any friend who might happen along. A phone to the police station brought Sergt. Green to the Southside, and he placed the suspect under arrest. A full bottle of Eau de Cologne was found on his person. Judge McCarthy fined the inquisitive stranger $2.00 and costs.

A lad from Fox Trap, who has been running wild since June, sleeping in barns, haystacks, etc., was up on a charge of larceny. He admitted stealing a piece of salt beef from a store in Fox Trap; in fact he has lived on food stolen or begged for the past two months. His aged father was in court, but says the boy is incorrigible. He will not stay home and is continually getting into mischief. A fine of $10 was imposed, which the father was unable to pay, but he is willing to take the boy home if he behaves himself.

CHINESE MILLIONS ARE WITHOUT LAWS OR GOVERNMENT

Four hundred million Chinese are without a ruler. Three hundred and ninety-nine million of them do not care a jot.

The President, Li Yuan Hung, has "retired" to Tientsin. He refuses to leave his safe retreat till order is restored. There has been no Vice-President since 1917. There has been no Vice-President since 1917. There has been no Parliament since the failure of the elections in 1920.

True, there is a shadowy ghost of an unrecalled Parliament now in session. But it does not sit. There is no Prime Minister. The Cabinet has ceased to exist, though three of its members issue futile orders as self-styled Regents in charge. But nothing can be legal without a Presidential mandate.

In all this chaos the great mass of Chinese, hundreds of millions of them, neither know nor care whether they have a Government or not. They cultivate their rice fields and evade the brigands as best they can.

"The mass of Chinese are not in the least interested in the fact that they have no Government," said a high Chinese official. "They are like the fish in the bottom of the ocean, going about their necessary business heedless of the storm tossed waves above."

IN ARMS

The storm-tossed waves are the military governors of the various provinces. They are up in arms, each with a few thousand men at his back, hurling threats and defiance at each other. Not a blow is struck.

Every day go out long messages from the headquarters of the various war-lords, breathing death and destruction in the politest of classical Chinese:

"This despicable and ignoble personage presents his humble, unworthy, and altogether contemptible compliments to the illustrous, high-born, and estimable Wong Lu, and regrets that he must forget his lowly station for such time as will be needful for him to perform the distasteful and disagreeable but extremely necessary duty of slitting the honourable throats of some thousands of the iridescent Wong Lu's valorous men-at-arms."

But no one of the governors wants to be President. That would mean to bring upon himself a swarm of claimants, police, office-seekers, troops, foreigners, each with a grievance and a claim for money.

OPPORTUNITY

Also, none of these fire-breathing war-lords seems to want really to fight. They only take advantage of the chaos in the Government to stand about, with their followers at their backs, and send each other polite notes of deadly hatred.

"But what are a few thousand armed men to the four hundred millions of the Chinese nation?" said the official interviewed. "A mere unimportant handful."

If the peaceful masses in China are undisturbed by the collapse of the Chinese Government, however, the Chinese Legation in London is greatly affected.

They have no head. There is no Government to direct them, no money to pay them. The Chinese Minister to London, Mr. Wellington Koo, has been away eighteen months. When he left England he was supposed only to be on leave to Peking. But now, though he has never been formally recalled from his duties, he has been made Minister of Foreign Affairs in China, according to the latest news at the Legation.

This section of the Chinese puzzle is particularly difficult. How can a minister be appointed to take Dr. Koo's place when there is no President in China to appoint him?

PUZZLING

(London Telegraph-

As in other things we have had an inquiry into the reason for the high price of farm produce, with the usual recommendations. And in the midst of the inquiry there came the news that sugar was to be reduced five shillings per cwt. Hard on the announcement came the "official" statement that the reduction wouldn't reach the consumer for several weeks. Can anyone say why it is that when sugar prices increase the effect is felt the next day by the housewife?

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

There has been hardly a genius since the world began who was not mad himself, or the son, brother, cousin or father of mad relatives. I ought to qualify the word "mad." I do not mean quite that. After all, to say that a man is mad is like saying that he is "sick. As there are a hundred and one forms that sickness may take, so are there innumerable forms that madness or insanity may take. Consequently, when I use the word above I mean it to embrace or include any of the different forms of insanity.

Is there a great writer, musician, scientist, statesman or other for home your have great admiration? Look down thru this ominous list and see if he is here, and what was "wrong" with him.

* * * * *

Swift suffered from congenital weakness, giddiness, impaired sight and muscular twitchings, while he was also deaf. He had violent explosions of temper and sometimes addressed strangers in an abrupt and enigmatical fashion.

Dr. Johnson was a hypochrondriac. dread of insanity haunting him, and at times he was at the brink of mental derangement.

Cowper suffered melancholia, and made many attemps to committ suicide, eventually being committed to an asylum.

Southey died in a state of imbecility.

Shelley suffered hallucinations.

Byron's father was insane, his mother unbalanced, and his relatives committed suicide. He himself feared suicide, was a glutton and a sot, and was epileptic.

* * * * *

Campbell, whose maternal relatives suffered insanity, and himself died in a state of mental debility.

Mary Lamb, his famous sister, stabbed their invalid mother to death and was committed to an asylum.

Landor used to suffer from allucinations, and referred to himself as "the late Walter Savage Landor."

Chatterton suicided at eighteen.

Rousseau suffered hallucinations and melancholia, and lived under the constant dread that his life was being conspired against; died of apoplexy.

Pascal had hullucinations and epileptic convulsions.

Chateaubriand belonged to a mad family, and made many attempts at suicide.

* * * * *

Holderlin's insanity lasted nearly forty years.

Poe made attempts at suicide, was hyprochrondiac, and died of brain disease at forty.

Addison suffered depression of spirits and left a weak-minded daughter.

Sheridan had "queer" relatives, lived riotous life, had epileptic fits from which he died.

Coleridge's father was eccentric and his family noted for nervous instability, he was morbid himself, using opium.

* * * * *

Scott's family were premeated by nervous disorders and himself suffered from apoplexy.

Keats had violent and ungovernable temper, and died at twenty-five of consumption, almost delirious; at times he was under bodily and mental suffering.

Budwer Lytton had an eccentric family, and himself fits of melancholia and dejection; he was ab rutal husband and kicked and bit his wife.

Bronte sisters were consumptive, and had a father who was dangerously "eccentric."

Dickens suffered from giddiness (vertigo).

* * * * *

Balzac was most eccentric and queer, had what is known as "password" mania, slept usually from 6 p.m. until midnight, when he arose, put on the white robe of a Dommican friar, with black scull cap, and wrote until exhausted.

Flaubert was epileptic and morose.

Dumas had a most eccentric grandfather,, who first married a full-blooded negress and then his house-keeper; his mother was subject to epileptic fits, and he himself became an imbecile.

Goethe suffered hallucinations.

Hugo's elder brother died in an asylum.

Moliere was epileptic.

Shakespeare, his brothers and sisters, with one exception, exhibited strongly the conditions of a neuropathic family, and he died of epileptic fits and nervous disorders.

* * * * *

Music lovers quake in your shoes! Unless you have a strong heart, read no more:

Bach had one son an idiot and one more than half insane, and was himself very nervous.

Handel's mother and himself subject to paralytic fits.

Mozart, whose mother had epileptic fits, broke down physically and mentally soon after age of thirty; had hallucinations, and died of inflamation of brain.

Beethoven had eccentricities which bordered upon insanity; a post-mortem examination showed his brain to be in a deteriorated condition.

Mendellsohn had deformities, blindness, apoplexy, paralysis and epilepsy in unbroken sequence in his family, and himself broke down before he died.

Schumann, early in his youth, had fits of melancholia and suicida: impulses; he had hallucinations, hearing spirit voices, etc., and feared being shut up in an asylum.

Paganini: epileptic.

Rossini had a cousin an idiot, and he himself labored under hallucination that he was miserably poor.

Donizetti during the latter years of life confined to asylum.

* * * * *

Among the great artists:

Michael Angelo had several nervous ailments and suffered from vertigo.

Raphael was addicted to sexual excesses.

Salvator Rosa sank into imbecility.

Turner came near to idiocy.

Romney was a hypochrondiac.

Dandseer described by his biographer: "Always a man of nervous susceptibility, he had hints that the human mind and the body which surrounds it are mortal."

Turner's mother became insane, and himself had hallucinations of an insane order.

Hayden suicided.

* * * * *

Among the great soldiers, philosophers and scientists:

Alexandar the Great was a neuropathic.

Julius Caesan had epileptic fits.

Marlborough had vertigo and epileptic fits.

Frederick the Great's father was eccentric to the point of insanity

Pitt, the elder, at times almost insane, was eccentric, died of apoplexy.

Socrates had ecstatic fits, was eccentric and heard "voices."

Bacon's mother believed to have been insane.

Swedenborg was not only suffering from epileptic fits, but at times was an irresponsible maniac.

Comte became insane and for nearly a year was confined to asylum.

Kent became an idiot in his declining years.

Descartes had hallucinations.

Hegel's sister was insane.

Liebnitz suffered from vertigo and fits.

Scropenhauer's father committed suicide.

Kepler ruined himself by own misconduct and died of violent fever accompanied by brain disease.

Newton's mind gave way and temporarily he had some delusions of insanity

Ampero was eccentric

Volta had an insane son.

* * * * *

If you think that I revelled goulishly among these great spirits of the past you are mistaken. Some of my warmest ideals are in the list above, and it pains me no less than you to find them in such company.

But realism is realism. The list given seems to prove pretty conclusively that genius is akin to insanity. If not actually a form of insanity.

Mrs. James Judge of Grand Falls, who has undergone a serious operation at the General Hospital, is now much improved.

Mr. James Moore, M.H.A., for Carbonear, arrived in town to-day for a short visit.

Mr. Ken Brown, M. H. A., who has been in town for the past few days, leaves by to-day's express for Grand Falls.

Mr. A.T. King, agent for Farquahar & Co., Halifax, arrived by the Rosalind today. Mr. King tells us the Sable I. will be ready to take up the North Sydney freight and passenger service by the middle of next week.

LOCAL ITEMS

A message from Elliston reports very good fishing recently, boats getting from 2 to 8 quintals daily. Up to a few weeks ago, fishing was the worst for years in this section.

LEAGUE FOOTBALL — TIE CUP — St. George's Field this evening, 6.15 sharp, Saints vs. C. E. I. Admission 10 cents. Ladies free. Grand Stand 10 cents extra. Boys free.

AT THE CROSBIE:—H. B. and Mrs. O'Neil, Montreal; H. B. Gillis, Sydney; James Moore, Carbonear.

The Circuit Court was at St. Anthony on Tuesday and was expected to leave for Little Bay to-day.

Workmen Return From Bermuda

Amongst the passengers on the Rosalind to-day were some 30 workmen returning from Bermuda. Most of these men were engaged at carpenter work, building a hotel. Their wages were $4.50 per day and found. The men worked under a four months contract, and had their way paid back and forth. Some of them would have remained longer but the climate did not agree with them. Their accommodations were not what they expected. This was particularly so of the food. The cooks were colored men who knew little about the kind of grub a Newfoundlander wants to be fed if a fair day's work is to be expected of them. The returned men have no complaint to make against their employees and think if Newfoundland cooks, who knew their business, were employed it would be much more satisfactory to all concerned.

Saturday's Campaign

We understand from Commandant Hurd that all arrangements regarding Tag Day, Saturday, September 15th, have been successfully made, and that high hopes are entertained for this part of this initial part of the general programme respecting the new Maternity Hospital opening on Wednesday, September 19th.

The management of the Board of Trade has kindly given their rooms as headquarters for the Saturday's campaign, while Messrs. W. J. Higgins, H. E. Cowan and J. R. Williams are acting as a financial committee.

The selling of the tags will be principally in the hands of the Daughters of the Empire Association, assisted by the Girl Guides, both under the supervision of the most capable campaign leaders of the city.

The tag to be sold will be a Red Cross on a white ground, bearing the words: "I have subscribed, etc."

The high social purpose of the campaign itself, combined with expert management, bespeaks a thorough success on Saturday.

Cadets and H. C. Draw

In last night's Junior League championship game the Cadets and Holy Cross played to a draw, neither team scoring.

The result of this game makes the interest in thec hampionship more keen. The Cadets and Holy Cross have both to play the T. A. and Wesley has to play the Scouts and St. Mary's before the final game, Cadets and Wesley next Wednesday. Should Wesley win all three games they will be champions. The same applies to the Cadets should they win their games. If Cadets and Wesley, after winning the first games draw, it will make these teams and Holy Cross equal (providing Holy Cross win their next game. With this situation the Junior League championship still lies in the balance.

WEDDING BELLS

REID—BASTOW

On Wednesday, September 12th at the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, a very pretty wedding was solemnized, the contracting parties being Miss Winifred Reid, fourth daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Reid, of this city, and Mr. William A. Bastow, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Bastow, also of this city.

The bride, who was attired in a gown of irovy crepe-de-chene with overdress of silver embroidered net and hat to match, and carrying a boquet of carnations, sweet peas and maiden hair ferns, entered the church leaning on the arm of her uncle, Mr. Walter H. Reid, and was attended by her sister, Miss Mabel Reid and Miss Marjorie Bastow, sister of the groom

The bridesmaids were gowned in sax crepe-de-chene with black beaver hats, and carried boquets of pink and white asters.

The groom's present to the bride was a handsome pearl lavilier, and to the bridesmaids, birthday rings.

Following the ceremony, throughout which very appropriate music was rendered by the organist, Mr. F. J. King, a reception was held at Donovan's, where Rev. Canon Bolt proposed the health of the bride, to which response was made by the groom.

The groom proposed the health of the bridesmaids, which was responded to by Mr. Malcolm Stone, best man.

Only the intimate relatives of the contracting parties were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Bastow were the recipients of many handsome presents, testifying to the esteem in which they are held.

Amidst showers of congratulations and good wishes, the happy couple left by motor for Holyrood, where the honeymoon will be spent.

About the Silvia Contributions

In response to an enquiry at this office respecting a recent contribution in The Telegram newspaper regarding the P. Marine Disasters Fund versus the new Maternity Hospital, The Advocate is now in a position to state that no funds collected on the s.s. Silvia, Capt. Mitchell, were handed over to the new Maternity Institution except those funds which were explicitly collected for that institution. No funds that were collected for the P. M. D. Fund on board that ship were given by Capt. Mitchell or anyone else to any other cause than that for which they were collected, and, in justice to all concerned, it is well that this should be publicly known.

Finishes Discharging To-night

The work of discharging the pit prop cargo of the steamer Roxburgh at the Furness Withy Pier will be completed to-night when the ship will be ready to go on dock for repairs. Her cargo makes a number of huge piles of timber in the Furness pier yard and the work of discharging has given a good deal of much-needed employment. The steamer's damages are extensive and divers who surveyed her report that there are huge chunks of rock wedged in the holes made in her stem and bows when she struck the land. Her repairs will occupy several weeks.

Removal of Ministry Revolutions Object Says Primo Riviera

MADRID, Sept. 14—Spain is in the travail of a revolutionary coup. Originating in Barcelona, it has spread rapidly through the various districts and provinces of the country, and has roused the deepest concern of the government.

The Captain-General of Barcelona is head of the movement. Primo Rivera, is a man of strong influence, and has powerful associations. Behind him are officers of the army, who have been chafing many months under the ignominy of the Morroccan campaign; and with the officers are the rank and file ,who seem ready to follow their leaders to the end.

Primo Riviera told the government the revolt was against the same measures that that body passed. He says his object is to relieve the country of the immoral policies of the present government ,and declares that the troops in Madrid and throughout Spain hope for a decision by the King removing the ministry, which is prejudicial to the nation.

No disorders or fighting has occurred, and life in Spain on the surface pursues its normal course.

King Alphonso is at San Sebastian, but is said to be returning to Madrid.

NF. STEAMER HAS BEEN PUM RUNNER

Herbert Green Is Captured and Is Held on Bonds.

NORTH SYDNEY, Sept .13—The schooner Alase, Captain J. D. Boer, of Jordon River, Shelbourne County, has been fined four hundred dollars by the Customs Department for failing to comply with port regulations at Cow Bay, C. B., a month ago.

The schooner, with 350 cases of liquor aboard, entered Cow Bay during heavy weather, for shelter, and failed to report to the Customs House.

After being detained four weeks, thes chooner and cargo were released on payment of the fine imposed.

The steamer Herbert Green has been released in bonds of two thousand dollars to comply with the decision of the customs department.

The steamer was seized at North Sydney and has since been detained following the finding of a large quantity of liquor stowed away in her life boats.

The Herbert Green is owned in Newfoundland.

Sagona From Labrador

All the Floaters Have Done Well—Bad Weather Retards Fish-Making—Three Steamers Loading on the Coast.

The S.S. Sagona, Captain Burgess, arrived from the Labrador at 11 o'clock last night. The ship made all ports of call, as far as Hopedale, completing the trip in good time. She reports that fishery operations during the latter part of the season were hampered by stormy weather, but that during the past couple of weeks it has been moderately fine, and the fishermen are now busily engaged making their catch. Captain Burgess says that with very few exceptions thefloaters have done well and at all the ports that he called he met with no floater who had not used his salt. In all the years Captain Burgess has been visiting the coast he has never seen a better average amongst the green fish catchers.

Notable exceptions where poor results had been obtained were McCrae's crews at Grady and Munn's crews at Flat Islands. The voyage with them had been practically a blank.

Fishermen returning south reported to the Sagona when they finished loading at the Queen's Lake the first week in September, there was an abundance of fish to be trapped.

From Batteau to Pack's Harbor the voyage has been a very poor one, while from Batteau south the stationers had secured an average voyage. In some cases around Snug Hr. a crew of 4 men had killed a voyage of 700 quintals. Cape Harrison and the Ragged Islands crews did well also. At the Farmyards Capt. Geo Barbour reported plenty of fish.

There were three steamers on the coast loading for the Meditteranean market.

Job Brothers are loading one steamer at Hawke's Hr., there is another loading for Baine Johnson at Battle Harbour, while Munn's steamer is at Flat Islands. They will be ready to sail, within the next ten days or a fortnight.

The Sagona reports that Tobias LeDrews schooner was lost at Griffin's Hr., and her crew came home by the ship and were landed at Cupids yesterday. The vessel had no fish on board at the time, but part of her gear was saved. Captain Jesse Winsor's schooner which is now at Assize's Hr., has been given up as a total loss, as she has been so badly damaged that it was useless to effect repairs, and the remainder of her crew, who weres tanding by the wreck, came south by the Sagona. Several medical men, who had been engaged at the Grenfell Missions during the summer came by the ship, their work being completed for this season. The Sagona reports that there are still two prospectors at Stag Bay despite the fact that Jefferys and the others are confident that there is no gold there. They will likely be returning from their quest by the Meigle next trip.

The Danger Is Past

PARIS, Sept. 14—Danger to the peace of Europe from the Italian occupation of Corfu, ended to-night, when, after a difficult session, the Ambassadors' Council came to a full agreement, and Italy agreed to evacuate Corfu about September 27.

The agreement also provides that if on the date of evacuation the inter-allied commission of inquiry reports Greece has not done all possible to apprehend and punish the assassins of the Italian members of the Boundary Commission, the fifty million lire deposited by the Greek Government, shall be paid over to the Italian Government.

RIVIERA REFUSES ABANDON ATTITUDE

Appeal To Primo's Patriotism Fails.

MADRID, Sept. 13—The government this afternoon telegraphed Captain General Prima Riveroa, at Barcelona, considered to be the leading spirit in their revolt, asking him to abandon his attitude of rebellion, and appealing to his patriotism.

BARCALONA IS SCENE OF REVOLUTION

Outbreaks In Other Towns Expected.

MADRID, Sept. 13—Army officers at Barcelona have revolted and martial law has been declared.

The rank and file of the army have joined in the revolt but the navy personnel is quiet. The main telephone exchange here was occupied at four o'clock this morning by a band of revolutionaries who are reported to be led by Captain General Primo Riviera.

It is believed that the movement will signalize outbreaks in other chief towns in Spain.

A document addressed to all Spaniards, and signed by Riviera, was published this morning. It criticised the present government and professional politicians for seizing power and annihilating the will of the King.

Authorities of the new regime will occupy the headquarters of the Communists and Revolutionary Associations, prisons, banks, electric power stations, and points at which the water supply is controlled. All suspects will be arrested.

Thousands Will Witness Dempsey-Firpo Champ Fight

NEW YORK, Sept. 14—Jack Dempsey, King of the squared circle for the past four years, will go into conflict to retain his crown to-night at the Polo Grounds an overwhelming favorite against the grim-visaged South American, Firpo; but while most of the experts predict a decisive victory for the champion, others, who have followed the meteoric rise to fame of Firpo, believe that the mighty right that has cleft his way to second place in the heavy-weight world, may bring the ultimate glory to the wild bull of the Pampas.

The influx of fans who have come from the four corners of the world, including some from Australia and about a hundred Argentinians from Firpo's home land, has crowded the hotel close to capacity, and it is estimated that thirty thousand more will arrive to-day.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXVI.

BY AN APPARENT inconsistency in the natural order of human affairs, it seems that women are called upon far oftener than men to make the hardest sacrifices; also, the call finds them far more willing, if the sacrifice is demanded of them by love. Until Andrew Daney had appeared at the Sawdust Pile with the suddenness of a genie (and a singularly benevolent genie at that), Nan had spent many days wondering what fate the future held in store for her. With all the ardour of a prisoner, she had yearned to leave her jail, although she realized that freedom for her meant economic ruin. On the Sawdust Pile she could exist on the income from the charter of the Brutus, for she had no rent to pay and no fuel to buy; her proximity to the sea, her little garden and a few chickens still further solved her economic problems. Away from the Sawdust Pile, however, life meant parting with her baby. She would have to place him in some sort of public institution if she would be free to earn a living for them both, and she was not aware that she possessed any adaptability for any particular labor which would enable her to earn one hundred dollars a month, the minimum sum upon which she could, by the strictest economy, manage to exist and support her child. Too well she realized the difficulty which an inexperienced woman has in securing employment in an office or store at a wage which, by the wildest stretch of imagination, may be termed lucrative, and, lacking in funds wherewith to tide her over until she should acquire experience, or even until she should be fortunate enough to secure any kind of work, inevitable starvation faced her. Her sole asset was her voice; she had a vague hope that if she could ever acquire sufficient money to go to New York and buy herself just sufficient clothing to look well-dressed and financially independent, she might induce some vaudeville impressario to permit her to spend fifteen minutes twice or four times daily, singing old-fashioned songs to the proletariat at something better than a living wage. She had an idea for a turn to be entitled "Songs of the 'Sixties."

The arrival of Andrew Daney with twenty-five hundred dollars might have been likened to an eleventh-hour reprive for a condemned murderer. Twenty-five hundred dollars! Why, she and Don could live two years on that! She was free—at last! The knowledge exalted her—in the reaction from a week of contemplating a drab, barren future, she gave no thought to the extreme unlikelihood of anyone's daring to steal a forty-foot motor boat on a coast where harbors are so few and far between as they are on the Picific. Had old Caleb been alive, he would have informed her that such action was anologous to the theft of a hot stove, and that no business man possessed of a grain of common sense would have hastened to reimburse her for the loss after an inconsequential search of two days. Had she been more worldly wise, she would have known that business men do not part with twenty-five hundred dollars that readily—otherwise they would not be business men and would not be possessed of twenty-five hundred dollars. Not only realized that in handing her a roll of bank-notes with a rubber band around them, Andrew Daney had figuratively given her the key to her prison, against the bars of which her soul had beaten for three long years.

Now, it is doubtful whether any woman ever loved a man without feeling fully assured that she, more than any other person, was better equipped to decide what was best for that man. Her woman's intuition told Nan that Donald McKaye was not to be depended upon to conserve the honor of the McKaye family by refraining from considering an alliance with her. Also, knowing full well the passionate yearnings of her own heart and the weakness of her economic position, she shrank from the task of repelling his advances. Where he was concerned, she feared her own weakness—she, who had endured the brutality of the world, could not endure that the world's brutality should be visited upon him because of his love for her. Strong of will, self-reliant, a born fighter, and as stiffnecked as his father, his yearning to possess her, coupled with his instinct for fair play, might and probably would lead him to tell the world to go to hang, that he would think for himself and take his happiness where he found it. By all means, this must be prevented. Nan felt that she culd not permit him to risk making a sorry mess of a life of promise.

Consumed with such thoughts as these, it was obvious that Nan should pursue but one course—that is, leave Port Agnew unannounced and endeavour to hide herself where Donald McKaye would never find her. In this high resolve, once taken, she did not falter; she even decided to risk rousing the suspicions of the townspeople by appearing at the general store to purchase badly needed articles o clothing for herself and her child. She resolved to leave Port Agnew in the best clothes she had, merely pausing a few days in her flight—at Vancouver, perhaps—to shop, and then continuing on to New York.

On the morning of their departure, the butcher's boy, calling for an order, agreed, for fifty cents, to transport her one small trunk to the station. The little white house which she and her father had built with so much pride and delight, she left furnished as it was, and in perfect order. As she stood at the front door and looked back for the last time, the ticking of the clock in the tiny dining and living room answered her mute "Good-by little house; good-by" and though her heart was full enough, she kept back the tears until she saw the flag flying bravely at th cupola.

"Oh, my love, my love!" she sobbed. "I mustn't lave it flying there, flaunting my desertion in your dear eyes."

Blinded by her tears, she groped her way back to the house, hauled down the flag, furled it, and laid it away in a bureau drawer. And this time, when she left the house, she did not look back.

At the station she purchased a ticket for Seattle and checked her trunk at the baggage room counter. As she turned from the counter and started for the waiting room, she caught the interested eyes of old Hector McKaye bent upon her. He lifted his hat and walked over to her.

"I happened to be looking down at the Sawdust Pile when you hauled your flag down this morning," he explained, in a low voice. "So I knew you were going away. That's why I'm here." To this extraordinary speech, the girl merely replied with an inquiring look. "I wonder if you will permit me to be as kind to you as I can," he continued. "I know it sounds a bit blunt and vulgar to offer you money, but when one needs money——"

"I have sufficient for my present needs," she replied. "Mr. Daney has paid me for the loss of my motorboat, you know. You are very kind; but I shall have no need to impose further upon your generosity. I think the twenty-five hundred dollars will last me nicely until I have made a new start in life."

"Ah!" The Laird breathed softly. "Twenty-five hundred dollars. Yes, yes! So he did! And are you leaving Port Agnew indefinitely, Nan?"

"Forever," she replied. "We have robbed you of the ground for a drying yard for nearly ten years, but this morning, the Sawdust Pile is yours."

"Bless my soul!" The Laird ejaculated. "Why we are not at all in distress for more drying space."

"Mr. Daney intimated that you were. He asked me kow much I would take for my squatter's right, but I declined to charge you a single cent." She smiled up at him a ghost of her sweet, old-time whimsical smile. "It was the first opportunity I had to be magnanimous to the McKaye family, and I hastened to take advantage of it. I merely turned the key in the lock and departed."

"Daney has been a trifle too zealous for the Tyee interests, I fear," he replied gently. "And where do you plan to live?"

"That," she retorted, still smilingly, "is a secret. It may interest you, Mr. McKaye, to know that I am not even leaving a forwarding address for my mail. You see, I never receive any letters of an important nature."

He was silent a moment, digesting this. Then,

"And does my son share a confidence which I am denied?"

"He does not, Mr. McKaye. This is my second opportunity to do the decent thing toward the McKaye family—so I am doing it. I plan to make rather a thorough job of it, too. You—you'll be very kind and patient with him, will you not? He's going to feel rather badly you know, but, then I never encouraged him. It's all his fault, I think—I tried to play fair—and it as so hard." Her voice sunk to a mere whisper. I've always loved Donald, Mr. McKaye. Most people do; so I have not regarded it as sinful on my part."

"You are abandoning him of your own free will——"

"Certainly. I have to. Surely you must realize that?"

"Yes, I do. I have felt that he would never abandon you." He opened and closed his big hands nervously, and was plainly a trifle distrait. "So—so this is your idea of playing the game, is it?" he demanded presently. She nodded. "Well," he replied helplessly, "I would to God I dared be as good a sport as you are, Nan Brent! Hear me, now, lass. Think of the thing in life you want to do and the place where you want to do it——"

"No, no, Mr. McKaye; there can be no talk of money between us. I cannot and will not take your son—for his sake, and for my own saks I cannot and will not accept of your kindness. Somehow, some place, I'm going to paddle my own canoe."

"Guid lass; guid lass," he whispered huskily. "Remember, then, if your canoe upsets and spills you, a wire to me will right you, and no questions asked. Good-by, my dear, and good luck to you!"

He pressed her hand, lifted his hat, and walked briskly away in the direction of the Tyee Lumber Company's office, quite oblivious of the fact that his interview with Nan Brent had been observed by a person to whom the gods at birth had given more than an average propensity of intrigue, romance, and general cussedness—Mr. Daniel O'Leary, of whom more anon.

"Andrew," he began, "you've been doing things. What became of old Caleb Brent's motor boat?"

"DIGBY" ARRIVES

SHIP TAKES FIRST SHIPMENT OF APPLES TO MARKET

The Furness liner Digby, Captain F. W. Chambers, D.S.C., arrived from Halifax last midnight after a passage of 38 hours. Rough weather was experienced practically all the way, with fog on Wednesday night, otherwise the ship would have docked much earlier. The Digby has on board the first shipment of new apples for the Old Country, in all some 3,500 barrels of this year's crop. The Digby is especially fitted for carrying apples, and last season also took over the first of the Nova Scotian crop. There are also 700 tons of general cargo for this port while the following passengers landed here:—J.P. and Mrs. Carey, Harold Carey, Cyril Carey, Mrs. James Bates, James Bates, Romaine Bates, Miss Helen Bates, Mrs. R.A. Brehm, Mrs. F. H. Grimmer, Miss B. T. Grimmer, J. L. McGregor, Miss A. I. Tessier, Miss C. Walsh, Mrs. J. T. Walsh, Miss G. Anthony, Mrs. M. Brennan, Miss E. Dwyer, Miss M. King, Miss B. Lawton, Miss E. Madigan, W. K. and Mrs. Murphy, Mrs. M. O'Neil and Miss M. Tibbs.

The Digby sails for Liverpool tomorrow morning.

Salvage Steamer Returns To Port

On Saturday night the steamer Strandhill, owned by Beazley Bros., left port an the salvaging enterprize of getting the guns off the wrecked cruiser Raleigh on the coast of Labrador, but she had scarcely gone thirty miles before it became apparent that she was not in fit condition to stand the voyage, her maximum rate of speed being about four knots, so she returned to port and is at present lying in the stream. She will probably have to go on dock for repairs before renewing the trip.——Halifax Chronicle.

AT THE CITY HALL

THE REGULAR weekly meeting of the City Council was held yesterday afternoon. The Mayor and full Board were present.

The meeting was a very short one, routint matters only, being discussed. C. O'N. Conroy, on behalf of Messrs Sullivan, Murray, McGrath and self, asked if the concrete curb and gutter at present being extended along the front of the adjoining residences be continued in front of their dwellings, they undertaking to pay their proportion of the cost according to frontage, for this improvement.

Request was acceded to.

Solicitor Fenlon notified the Council of the injury sustained by his client, Mr. Ryan, Howley Ave., owing to the sidewalk being obstructed. He informed the Council that the question of legal procedings is to be left in abeyance pending the report of the physician attending. He further requested that the necessary precautions, such as warning lights or guards be placed to avoid further accidents.

This has already been done.

The Hon. Secretary of the Committee in charge of Fire Prevention week applied for a contribution of one hundred dollars towards campaign expenses. The Constabulary Department and Board of Fire Underwriters having agreed to contribute a similar amount.

It was ordered that the necessary amount be forwarded the committee.

Application of William Dunne for position of Inspector, was ordered to be placed on file.

Contract for the supply of lead pipe was awarded to James Crawford.

Application was ordered filed.

Residents of Pennywell Road asked that lights be placed in that locality, between Prince of Wales St. and Golf Avenue.

Lighting committee will give this matter consideration.

Residents of Beaumont Street complained of the condition of this thorofare.

The matter was referred to the Engineer for attention.

James Vardy asked for permission to instal electric motor on his premises, Clift's Cove.

The Engineer will visit the place and report.

Permits

Permission to be given to C. T. James to repair dwelling, Brazil's Square.

The aplication of Tessier and Co. to repair building, Theatre Hill, was referred to the Engineer.

Plans

The following plans were passed, subject to the approval of the City engineer: F. J. O'Keefe to rebuild dwelling corner Hamilton and Brine Streets; A. H. Murray to erect coal shed, Waterside premises, conditional upon the building being constructed of inflammable material; B. J. Miller's application to erect temporary shed, Hill of Chips, of sheet iron, was granted. Such erection to be moved by the first day of June next. George James will be given permission to erect stable on Barter's Hill, provided he gives a written agreement to carry out the suggestions of Medical Officer of Health.

The City Clerk having informed the Board that sufficient funds were available to undertake the work of replacing old stone sewer on Waldegrave Street, it was ordered that same be proceeded with immediately.

Medical Health Officer reported 13 new cases of Scarlet Fever and one of Typhoid in the city during the past week.

With reference to regulations recently published re the erection of display bills, placards or advertisements in the city limits, it was ordered that the St. John's Light and Power Co. be communicated with with a view to having the electric poles throughout the city cleaned and painted.

The reports of City Engineer, Sanitary Supervisor and other officials, were tabled.

Accounts presented were tabled, after which the meeting adjourned.

TheS .S. Sagona is being replaced on the Labrador route by the S.S. Meigle. The last named ship sails for Labrador at 9a.m. tomorrow.

Nfld. Poultry Association

At Monday's meeting in the Board of Trade Rooms, the Poultry Association discussed their arrangements for the 1923 show. This exhibition will be held in the C. L. B. Armoury on November 28th, 29th and 30th, the building being already engaged for this purpose. The new Minister of Agriculture, Hon. J. Downey, will do all that is possible to assist the Association in making this year's show a success. A judge will be engaged from Canada as usual to make the awards. It is hoped to secure permission to run a lottery of various prizes to help to pay the deficit of the expenses. The show costs nearly eight hundred dollars to finance. The express charges on all birds sent in from the outports will be paid one way by the Committee. The railway will be asked to arrange special one -way excursion fares for the last week in November which will bring scores of folk to the city to see the show and transact business with the stores. The Committee meets this week to arrange for prizes and an effort will be made to double the prize money—and reduce the various classes so as to award a silver cup for each breed. It is likely a lantern lecture will be given every evening during thes how from eight to nine. The ladies of Spencer Club have already applied for permission to provide teas and refreshments in aid of their funds. This will be a great convenience to visitors and the Committee. Two gentlemen have started poultry farms this year. Mr. Korner with about 400 head on the Torbay Road and Mr. Leonard Earle with some 1000 head of poultry on the Logy Bay Road. His Excellency the Governor is Patron of the Association and is kindly presenting a silver cup this year to the winner securing the largest number of blue ribbons at the exhibition. Next Monday another meeting will be held and a flashlight photograph taken of the meeting in order to reproduce the same as an illustration of a members conference for the lantern lecture given by the Association

Last Night's Footer Game

SENIOR LEAGUE

The second draw in the tie-cup series was recorded last evening when the Saints and C.E.I. met and divided the honors, scoring one goal each. Weather conditions were not favorable; a high wind interfering with play.

To-night the Star and C.E.I. will line up, and a good game is expected.

JUNIOR LEAGUE

Wesley defeated the Scouts by 3 goals to 1 in last evening's Junior League series game on the Campus. The defeated team, nevertheless, put up a particularly plucky fight, and it was not until near the end of the contest that the victors had matters "cinched."

To-night the T.A. and Cadets will be the contesting teams.

Shore Train Delayed By Accident To Engine

Owing to an accident to the engine last night's shore train was four hours late, and did not reach the city till 1.15 this morning. The accident occurred just west of Duff's and it took three hours before repairs were effected by Engineer Candow. This is the first accident to occur this season on the Shore line train which has been making fairly regular time. A number of passengers who left the Sagona at Cupids in order to reach the city earlier made a bad choice, as the steamer got here at 11 o'clock.

Sachem Has Large Freight

The Furness, Withy Company were advised yesterday that the Sachem left Liverpool at p.m. Wednesday. The ship has 1350 tons of general cargo for this port, which is one of the largest freights to come from the Old Country in recent times. There are also 38 passengers coming by the steamer, which should reach here on Thursday next.

Young Girls Need Care

FROM the age of twelve a girl needs all the care the thoughtful mother can give. Many a woman has suffered years of pain and misery—the victim of thoughtlessness or ignorance of the mother who should have guided her during this time.

If she complains of headaches, pains in the back and lower limbs, or if you notice a slowness of thought, nervousness or irritability on the part of your daughter make life easier for her.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for such conditions. It can be taken in safety by any woman, young or old.

Read How These Mothers Helped Their Daughters

Vancouver, B. C.—"My daughter is a young girl who has been having severe pains and weak and dizzy feelings for some time and had lost her appetite. Through an older daughter who had heard of a woman who was taking it for the same trouble, we were told of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My daughter has been taking it for several months and is quite all right now. I am never without a bottle of it in the house, for I myself take it for that weak, tired, wornout feeling which sometimes comes to us all." Mrs. J. McDonald, 2947, 26th Ave. East, Vancouver, B.C.

Hamilton, Ontario—"When my daughter was thirteen and until she was fifteen, she suffered every month so that she could hardly move around the house, and when she would have the pains in school she would have to be carried home. She also had headache, dizzy and faint spells, and soreness in her back. I saw your advertisement in the 'Hamilton Spectator' and got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for her. She does not have the least bit of trouble now, and we recommend your medicine. She works in a candy-shop now and seems well and strong."—Mrs. I. P. Clause, 83 Oxford St., Hamilton, Ontario.

Earle Spicer's Concert Was Tremendous Success

To have missed the Earl Spicer Concert at the Methodist College Hall last evening, was to have missed one of the greatest musical treats that a St. John's audience has had for many a day.

The gathering well nigt filled the spacious auditorium and included, amongst other notables, His Excellency the Governor and Suite.

The stage was beautifully bedecked with flowers and the entire setting was one worthy of the occasion. The program was well chosen and both vocal and instrumental numbers were rendered as only real artists could render them. The accompaniments by Miss Allison Rennie and Mr. Gordon Christian were a feature of the magnificent musical fete.

The opening number was a concerto (Mendelssohn) by this popular duo, Miss Rennie presiding at the piano, while Mr. Christian manipulated the organ with the touch of a master.

The other items on the program were:

(a) The Sands O' Dee—Fred Clay.
(b) Come Not When I am Dead.—Josef Holbrooke
(c) The Heart Worships—Gustav Holst
(d) The Fishermen of Newfoundland

EARLE SPICER

From the plaintiff notes of "The Sands O' Dee" to the rollicking Irish love lilt, and on to the stirring cresendos of "The Gunner," every item was a triumph, and each more productive of enthusiastic and sincerely appreciative applause than the last. As Doctor Robinson, in his eloquent vote of thanks at the conclusion, said, only an artist could attempt to comment adequately upon the efforts of the performers.

There was nothing in the vocal part of the program of a highly classical nature, but those masterpieces of melody and pathos which appeal to the very soul rather than to the trained ear, predominated, and had weeks been spent in a most exacting choice of selections calculated to carry the message of profoundest sublimity to the audience or lift them to the heights of greatest good humor, no greater success could have been achieved. Unboubtedly the greatest success of the evening was the selection "The Fishermen of Newfoundland," both music and ords of which were new. The interpretation of the piece by Mr. Spicer was marvellous.

Mrs. Dunfield, who has delighted so many St. John's audiences by her violin selections, bade a touching "good-by" last evening. Mrs. Dunfield said farewell to her admirers as only an artist can. Her chief selection was a beautiful melody by Weir, beautifully interpreted. Her encore was "Auld Lang Syne," and it was played with such a wealth of feeling that the instrument almost spoke.

Mrs. Dunfield leaves by the Digby to-day, to make a new home on the other side of the Atlantic, and she takes with her the best wishes not only of her personal friends, but of a large circle whose admiration has been won through the entrancing strains of her violin. She has given her talent with extreme generosity, and the cordial reception given her last night, and the hearty applause that followed her contribution might be regarded as an expression of grate ful appreciation, as well as a tribute to her ability.

Mrs. Outerbridge, whose selections are ever humorous and ever entertaining, also had a place on the program, and was as pleasing as ever.

Mr. Gordon Christian acted thruout as accompanist, and his triumph was all the greater because his time of preparation was limited. The program was not prepared until Mr. Spicer's arrival, and it is a tribute to his great talent that he accompanied in a manner, masterly and sympathetic.

At the conclusion of the program, Dr. Robinson, on behalf of the Permanent Marine Disasters Fund Committee, expressed their aprpeciation of the great service which had been rendered by the performers, particularly by Mr. Spicer, who had broken his journey to the Old Land to help this deserving fund. Mr. Spicer leaves to-day by the Digby. His visit has been brief, but it has been very welcome, and he carries away the thanks and best wishes not only of those who were privileged last night to hear him sing, but of every one to whom the needs of the widows and fatherless make appeal.

Miss Lillian Caul, daughter of Mr. M. F. Caul, Colonial Street, leaves by Sunday's express enroute to Boston, where her marriage to Mr. Louis Haskell of that city will take place shortly. Miss Caul is a graduate nurse, having completed a course at St. Vincent's Hospital, New York, extending over several years. The Advocate joins with Miss Caul's numerous friends in wishing her every happiness.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, SEPT. 14th., 1923.

SOUNDS LIKE LAST YEAR

According to the Sagona's report, the Labrador fishery, which started very unpromisingly, has been much improved during the last few weeks. Most of the floaters have done well, which will be glad news for all.

But hark to another story which does not bode such good tidings.

"Three steamers are now on the Labrador coast, others are expected to go there in a few days and in all about 90,000 quintals of fish will be leaving the coast this season."

It sounds like last year's experience, when eight steamers chased each other across the ocean from the Labrador to dump the people's fish into the European markets in order to create a slump in prices there, and prices here.

It reminds one of the disastrous effect last year's business methods had on the fishermen who held their fish over, came up to Wesleyville and, subsequently, to St. John's, and were faced with the problem of selling at "slump" prices.

When shall our trade profit by experience?

When will the interests of the people be considered in the marketing of our staple article?

DESERVING OF SUPPORT

On to-morrow, the promoters of the new Maternity Hospital are making their final public appeal before the formal opening by Lady Allardyce on Wednesday next, for funds for that institution.

While in these days, the calls for public assistance are many, it will be generally recognized that to-morrow's cause is of such a deserving and beneficial nature that public sympathy towards it will be demonstrated in a practical manner.

The most outstanding of our social leaders have taken a keen interest in the erection of the institution, and the success which has been attained, could only be the result of consistent and concerted efforts, particularly when it is realised that achievements have been made in years marked by financial stringency and general hard times.

Conspicuous among the promoters are the Salvation Army, whose high social activities in this country and in all countries, have earned the world's respect and marked that organization as one of the most uplifting social agencies of the universe.

The Advocate is confident that the public response will be indicative of a public desire to uplift the social order of things, and that the practical results of the campaign will enable the campaign promoters to carry the institution completion to a great financial success.

EDUCATIONAL AFFAIRS

Discussing the proportion of St. John's as against outport passes in the C. H. E. examination, the Telegram yesterday referred to the conditions under which many outport teachers have to work in schools where every class from the A B C to the Intermediate Grade must be attended to by the one teacher. In its contention that therein lies the great difficulty of getting results either in examinations or with the whole school, the Telegram is right.

It is manifestly impossible to expect efficiency under a system which necessitates such a congestion of classes in one room, under one teacher; and it is certainly not always that this room is either well lighted, heated or properly cared for from hygenic points of view.

But what may be done under circumstances where the educational grants cannot be increased, where two teachers cannot be afforded, where old buildings cannot be torn down and replaced by new modern erections, and where the denominational system necessitates three or more schools in the one locality with three or more poorly paid teachers struggling under impossible conditions?

It is a problem which requires much thought and action, and its solution is essential to the attainments of a proper educational status.

Parents and teachers say the school boards are responsible for much that is lacking in local conditions, that they seldom visit the schools only when some repairs necessitate a few hours' work, that they leave this to the clergymen who are members of school boards, but whose other duties preclude frequent visits in the interests of school matters.

We fear that however justifiable these assertions, the real cause lies deeper.

The fact remains, for it has been demonstrated by outport pupils, under the most rigid conditions as referred to above, that outport pupils are equal to the best that the city can produce. Indeed, it is safe to assert that, given equal conditions with the colleges of St. John's, examination results would not be so unevenly balanced as shown this year.

When we can look forward to a condition that will revolutionize outport school affairs that will give children, (other than examination candidates), a chance to receive due attention, and that will substitute practical tuition for "cramming" forgettable knowledge into pupils, before examinations, then will outport teachers and outport scholars show their ability to win their spurs.

Board of Trade Discusses British Empire Exhibition

Committee Formed To Begin Active Work Towards Preparing Newfoundland's Exhibit — Government and Trade Co-operate to Make Our Exhibit Worthy of Occasion.

At the call of the President, the members of the Board of Trade met in their rooms at noon to-day to hear the report of the Committee of Council on the progress already made, and to give sanction to the decisions already arrived at between the Government and the Board.

Mr. Leonard Outerbridge, President of the Board, outlined the steps which had already been taken towards getting matters into shape. On August 11th, in response to an invitation from Prime Minister Warren, a small committee of council ment the Premier and agreed that the sum of $50,000 should be allocated for the purpose of financing Newfoundland's share in the Exhibition.

The committee felt that, in view of the stringency of the times, it was desirable that we should keep within this amount, and that if a further sum was required, it might be obtained from the Trade. There were perhaps persons who may be thinking seriously whether we ought to spend a dollar on the Exhibition; but he (Mr. Outerbridge) and the committee thought there was a very general opinion that this was a case where we cannot afford to remain outside.

It was pointed out by the chairman that Reids, the Armstrong Whitworth Co. and the A.N.D Co. had been communicated with, and favorable replies had been received. Tentative plans for a £5000 Newfoundland Building had been received recently, but some elaborate fittings shown on the plans might, it was thought, be dispensed with, as the building was not to be of a permanent character. The time was getting short, and decisions had to be arrived at if we are to be ready for the opening of the exhibition.

At a recent meeting of the government, the following Committee of seven was appointed from the Government and Opposition to join with a similar number of the Board of Trade, in forming the nucleus of the general committee: Hon. J. Downey, Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Mr. Higgins, K. C., Hon. Geo. Shea, Hon. Geo. Grimes, M. S. Sullivan, Esq.

The following selection made by the council of the Board of Trade, was submitted by the President, and upon motion by W A. McKay, seconded by Mr. I. H. Cowan, were unanimously confirmed to act in conjunction with the Government and Opposition members named above: L. Outerbridge, Pres Board of Trade; Sir M. G. Winter, C. O'N. Conroy, Mayor Cook, D. M. Baird, R. B. Job, E. A. Bowring. Gentlemen of special qualification in any particular branch of trade, or members of the civil service whose special knowledge would be of service, were purposely ommitted, but they will be used on various subcommittees in working out plans for the general result. All present seemed enthusiastic for the best possible exhibit Newfoundland could put forward, in view of our present financial position. Now that a real start has been made, it is hoped that all would cooperate and lend a hand, financially, if possible, but in any way by giving support to the end that Britain's Oldest Colony will be fittingly represented at the forthcoming Exhibition.

Northcliffe's Kin En Route to Canada

NEW YORK, Sept, 7—The Hon. Esmond Harmsworth, M.P., nephew of the late Lord Northcliffe, arrived on the Acquitania today, en route to Canada and Newfoundlnad. Mr. Harmsworth is a director of the syndicate of papers which his uncle controlled and he will inspect some of the mills which supply newsprint for the Northcliffe papers while on this side of the Atlantic. He also plans to visit western Canada on a vacation trip.

Unique Shoplifting Cases

TORONTO, Sept. 14—Two shoplifting cases have aroused interest lately. In one case half a dozen women formed a chain—as boys sometimes do stealing apples from the corner grocery. In the other instance was that of a well-dressed French woman stealing from a large department store. She used as decoys two little girls, one six and the other eleven years old. With unusual coolness the woman admitted she had showed the girls how to steal with the aid of paper bags, from the counters.

"I never did it before," she said, and started to cry. "Then why do you do it today?" asked the detective. "I don't know—I have plenty of money." was her reply.

Anyone can say "Thank you," but not everyone can say it pleasantly.

He who speaks, speaks twice; once with the words, and once with the the tone of his voice.

What Is Good Luck?

While talking with her market woman, an oldish, tired little body, a woman in a certain small town happened to spy a four-leafed clover in the grass. "Well!" she exclaimed. "There is another four-leafed clover! I am always finding them, but they never seem to bring me good luck."

"Is there really a four-leafed clover?" asked the market woman, peering over the back of her wagon. "I never in my life found one. But I find lots of six-leafed ones."

"Oh, that is bad luck!" exclaimed her customer.

"Well, I don't believe it," replied the little woman. "I've found them all my life, and I've never had anything but good luck!"

Good luck! Why, the poor little woman was the pity of all of the townfolk! Every week she brought her produce from door to door, in sunshine and in rain, in winter and in summer. She had peddled vegetables right after she was married: she still peddled them now, years later, with her wagon piled high with children. Who was she? Townfolk had been quick to find out. She lived in a dilapidated house and had a worthless husband; she not only marketed her vegetables but sowed the seed, raised them and picked them. Hard work, few pleasures and many cares were her lot; and yet she had "never had anything but good luck!"

Many of the housewives to whose doors she had brought her wares had everything they could desire. Yet, let some little unpleasant incident occur, and you would be likely to hear the complaint, "There, that's just my usual bad luck!"

Smiles or tears, good luck or bad—which shall it be? Cobden strikes the nail on the head when he says, "Luck is ever waiting for something to turn up. Labor, with keen eyes and strong will, will turn up something. Luck lies in bed and wishes the post man would bring him a legacy. Labor turns out at six o'clock and with busy pen or ringing hammer lays the foundation of a competence. Luck whines. Labor whistles." Or as Addison says, "A good character, good habits and iron industry are impregnable to the assaults of all the ill luck that fools ever dreamed of."

Let us have the soul of the little market woman! It is such characteristics as she possesses that have formed characters like Lincoln's.

IRELAND PROVES HER FITNESS

Ireland has confronted her critics and silenced her enemies. For centuries the knowing ones, snugly confident of their own omniscience, have lunged at Irishmen the shaft that she is unfit to govern herself. It has never seemed to occur to anyone, save to the Irish themselves, that the imposing of an alien government upon them has been the irritant that has caused most of the troubles to fester and break out.

Today Ireland has shown the world that when it comes to a choice between law and anarchy, order and disorder, the sons and daughters of Erin are overwhelmingly on the side of constituted authority. President Cosgrave has himself received a tremendous majority at the polls, most of his Ministers have been re-elected, and the Free State Party has a fine majority of more than three to one.

The issue was abundantly clear and the small number of votes polled by the Labor and Independent candidates in the election is evidence that the majority of Irishmen fully realized the crux of the question. The agreement with Britain, by which the Free State was created, had apparently been approved by the majority of Ireland, though, as was only natural in a country that had been the duelling ground where hot passion had given place to coal reasoning, there had been for a time a dwindling but regrettable display of violence and bloodshed.

Ireland has chosen the path of constitutional government and she has shown her preference by a more powerful weapon in the world of democracy than the sword—the ballot-box. Her friends everywhere—and no nation has enjoyed a wider or more genuine sympathy among sister nations—will rejoice that she has laid the foundation of her "Fitness to Govern" by declaring in constitutional fashion and by an overwhelming number of suffrages that she is on the side of law and order.—Montreal Star.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

It would be interesting to know just what percentage of the "pit props" being exported from this country are really pulpwood, and whether or not there is any method employed of preventing this practice.

To-day the world holds its breath in suspense while there hangs in the balance that momentuous issue as to whether Firpo is able to knock Dempsey's block off or the Irish-American "hero" has it in him to disembowel the "Spanish Italian." In the presence of this grave crisis in the world's affairs, interest and awe in the Japanese disaster which precipitated nearly a million souls into eternity disappear, the Ruhr question becomes a matter of minor importance and the nations cease to care a hange whether the Italians leave Corfu or take root there.

Quebec has been given a shock, according to cable despatches—not an earthquake, but a real honest-to-goodness, breath-taking surprise. The Prince of Wales after landing there and being closely watched by keen observers was seen to be acting like a real man. His acts, the messages tell us, were almost human in their simplicity. He saw a door in the Chateau Frontenac, he went out and proceeded for a walk and, not content with that, he entered stores and made purchases. He even looked at the shipping on the river and capped the climax by dancing at night to the tune of "Yes, we have no bananas." Truly, this is a democratic age.

A correspondent to the Montreal Daily Star says you can't stop liquor-drinking by prohibition, and that the best means of stopping drunkenness is to punish the booze artist and also the man who supplies the "paint." That might be a good plan or it might not. In our own case I think it would first of all be necessary to greatly enlarge the Penitentiary before adopting the scheme.

It's the case of many a good girl, like many a good man, to find herself without home or money in this city. When a girl for any reason finds herself in this position she has to go to the Lock-up and ask for shelter, and no matter how respectable, how decent or how industrious she may be, she is arraigned next morning before a judge styled as a "vagrant." We have men paid to chase stray poodle pups and to see that night-walking tom-cats are in their homes at a respectable hour; we have ubiquitous old ladies gazing at draft horses' shoulder blades thru lorgnettes to make sure that the hair is not rubbed off, but the poor girl who is decent and honest, and who finds herself in a strange town without a place to lay her head for the night, can walk the streets till some policeman finds her and takes her in for "safe-keeping," "God bless the mark."

The scions of our local aristocracy who attended the Earl Spicer concert last evening must have found it necessary to grasp the wings of their "swallow tails" hard to keep from going thru their collars with sheer amazement when they realized that "the fishermen of Newfoundland" could really be the subject of that tremendously stirring song of praise rendered with such power by Mr. Spicer.

Boosting the Germans

There is a keen controversy those days about the speed records of ocean liners.

A few weeks ago the now-American-owned "Leviathan" established a new record and beat the Olympic by a few knots on the average run.

The British-owned Majestic has since succeeded in making a record equal to, if not better, than the Leviathan's.

In view of the fact that both liners were built in Germany and were among the war spoils taken from that country, it does seem rather funny that the British and Americans should be taking such a great national pride in the speed powers of their boats. Their actions are but boosts for German workmanship.

THE MEN WHO CATCH FISH

ARE THE PROP OF US ALL.

All you who have read of our dear Island's story,
Pray, give your attention to those lines of song.
Draw around me and listen, you wig and you tory,
While the truth I unfold, and it won't keep you long.
There are some who despise him, they're not to be heeded;
But all true men and women, the big and the small,
Hold them in respect, and dame truth has conceded
That the men who catch fish are the prop of us all.

Yes, they are the prop of the land that begot us,
They toil for their bread on the blue bounding foam,
And their actions all show what true love in a cot is,
Which is often not met in a millionaire's home.
There's no one among us has cause to be frowning
On those who work for us, spring, summer and fall,
Whom dear Terra Nova, with wealth keeps on crowning;
Oh, the men who catch fish are the prop of us all.

You big folks among us who have every pleasure
That name and position, and gold can command,
Do you, let me ask you, most rightfully treasure
Those brave, honest men of your dear native land?
If not, why not do it, for they're braving the dangers
For all that is needed on them we must call.
Be good and don't treat them as if they were strangers,
For the men who catch fish are the prop of us all.

TERRA NOVA.

First Radio Concert Picked On Labrador

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir—Your readers might be interesting in a news gitem notin the fact that the first radio concert program ever picked up in Northern Labrador was heard at the Moravian Mission in Hopedale on the evening of Tuesday, August 28, 1923. It was broadcasted from the station of the General Electric Company in Schenectady, N.Y.,(1,200 miles away. The company listening in on this important occasion comprised the following: Mrs. W. W. Perrett, Misses Ethel and Edna Perrett, family of Rev. W. W. Perrett, Moravian Missionary, (who happened to be away visiting the mission at Makkovik at the time-; Rev. S. J. Townley, Moravian Missionary from Hebron, Okak, and far northern points: Samuel Bloomfield, of Jack Lane or Big Bay, Game and Fisheries Warden for Northern Labrador; A. V. Ward, Mission Store-keeper at Hopedale;and Dr. Alfred Sidney Johnson, of Chicago, Ill., U.S.A., Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts of London Eng., who was at Hopedale awaiting S. S. Harmony, on a cruise of geographical investigation to Hudson Strait, representing Rand McNally & Company, Publishers, of Chicago.

Yours very truly,
(Dr.) Alfred S. Johnson,

LABOR THE COMING POWER IN ENGLAND

The Story of the Amazing Rise of the Workers' Movement in the British Isles

Cause of it All.

This condition of poverty on the part of the multitude and riches on the part of the handful, says the Labor party, is caused by one thing: the fact that the mass of the people do not own the means of producing the wealth of the nation, while the handful does. Thru its ownership of these means of producing the national wealth, the handful is enabled to exact this heavy toll of the nation, in exactly the same way as ancient robbers used to exact toll from all people passing over a bridge or thru a mountain pass.

But, says someone, should not the "handful" own these means of production, and collect the cream of the wealth produced with them, if they produced the means of producing wealth? If they produced, if they created, if they brought into existence these means of producing new wealth, ought they not get the cream of this new wealth?

No, says the Labor party; no, for the sufficient reason that the handful did not produce, create or bring into existence these means of producing factories of the nation, the mills of the nation, the workshops of the nation, the land of the nation, the mines of the nation, the railroads of the nation, and all the other industries and machines of the nation? These are the means of producing the wealth by which the nation lives.

Who Produced Them;

The people produced and created these means of production, says the Labor party — the people who lived yesterday and before. The land and mines, of course, were put there by Nature — not by the present owners or the people, either. And if Nature placed the land and all it contains, it is not at all to be supposed that Nature had any handful of men, however virtuous they might be, in mind. God is no respecter of persons!

(In precisely the same way as the forefathers of the present generation produced and created the means of production at present in existence, so, in exactly the same way, the present generation of people are producing the means of production that will be used next generation to produce new wealth. The coal and iron miners, steel workers, fabric, factory and workshop workers, and all workers, are to-day producing the wealth that will be used next generation to produce new wealth. According to the argument now used by the present owners, the sons of the present owners will claim the cream of that wealth by saying that, as they own those means of production, they are rightfully entitled to the cream!)

Let The Nation Own Them!

The only workable and just social system, says the Labor party, is to have these means of producing the nation's wealth owned by the nation — to nationalize them. Or, if you prefer to use the word society, instead of nation, to socialize them, or make them the property of society. (Look up the word in any dictionary.) Why dispute over a word?

So the Labor party believes that all wealth should be equally divided among the people? That every man should have an equal share of all the wealth of the country? No, the Labor party believes nothing of the kind. If you took all the wealth of the land and divided it equally among the people, points out the Labor party, why, in a week you would have won back their wealth again, and you'd have the same old system once over again. And, in any case, if you wanted to equally divide the wealth of the nation, how could you do it? How would you go about equally dividing the mines, the land, the factories, mills, workshops, railroads, ships, etc.? Give each man a piece of railroad track, or a locomotive wheel, or a ton of metal, or any other part of an industry? That has only to be stated to be shown ridiculous.

Then what do you propose, asks someone? We propose, answers the Labor party, to have the means of producing wealth—not the wealth created—owned by all the people, by the public. That wouldn't mean that any individual man would own any part of an industry or a mine, to call his own. It would mean that all the people would own all the means of producing wealth. It would not even mean that the wealth then produced by those nationally-owned industries would be divided equally among the people. It might rather be found advisable to have a graded scale of wages or salaries, so as to provide additional incentive for men to exert themselves. Naturally, there would be, to start with, a good minimum that should be enough to supply a decent livelihood—and that would be more than the people have now. But over and above enough, it might be desirable to give an extra share in return for special social service rendered.

Efficiency Necessary

Because, of course, if the people owned all industry, it would be just as necessary as now to have production continue, else people would have to do without. For that reason, of course, there could be no fooling in the operation of industry. There could be no such thing as electing foremen, managers, superintendents, industrial engineers and experts, etc. These would have to be efficient men in their line, and would have to be chosen for one reason and one reason alone: ability to perform!

The fact of the matter is this: the great owners of industry in Great Britain to-day do not operate or run the industries they own, except in a few cases. They hire managers, foremen, superintendents, industrial engineers, etc., to run them, and about all they do is attend directors' meetings, decide policy, and clip their profit coupons. In all probability, under social ownership of industry it would be the same men as now who would do the managing and superintending of industry.

* * * *

This, then, is the main plank of the Labor party platform, for which over 4,000,000 have voted. It is nothing other than Socialism.

The party believes in abolishing capitalism (which is the private ownership of capital, capital being the means of production) to abolish capitalism gradually, so as to prevent disorder. They believe in feeling their way, and taking one industry at a time.

The other planks are of immediate, topical importance, such as the advocacy of a Capital Levy for the purpose of wiping out the nation's terrible debt, taking care of the housing shortage, etc. The platform includes a cure for unemployment, a sane attitude on the European question, disarmament, peace, etc.

It is because the British Labor party has its clear-cut, straightforward platform, and because it knows exactly what it wants to do, and has taken the people into its confidence, and because it has no black past, and because it is the only party that holds out any hope at all to the great multitude of harrassed people, that it will be elected to power to try its hand where others have failed.

And I have no doubt whaever about the outcome.

Canada and United States

Pointing to the fact that the gain in the value of Canadian sales to the United States for the twelve months ending June, 1923, was larger than the gain in the value of United States exports to Canada, as a significant indication of Canadian prosperity, the New York Trust Company recently published an article on the relations of Canada and the United States during the twelve months amounted to $979,979,003, or approximately one-eighth the total value of United States trade with the entire world. Canada purchased goods from the United States valued at $585,732,788 and sold to the United States products amounting to $394,246,215.

Another significant fact is said to be that Canada's import and export trade with the United States was greater in value than her total trade with the British Empire despite the fact that the Dominion trade showed gains in the value of products imported from and exported to countries of the Empire by the year mentioned.

After noting that with a population approimately one-twelfth that of the United States, Canada developed a world trade to the amount of $1,844,893,547 during the twelve months as compared with a world trade of $7,738,336,000 by the United States in the same period, the article continues:

"More than one-half of Canada's trade July, 1922-June, 1923) was with the United States, and there are indications that in the further development of Canadian commerce the interchange of products with the United States will continue to be greater than trade with any other country. Trade rivalry between ourselves and the Dominion thus will be for a long time to come mainly a competition as to which of the two countries sells the most goods to the other. Canada is our second best customer and in that role is not far behind Great Britain. Her future development and expansion may easily make her our best customer."

It is then noted that commercial ties between the two countries are being strengthened by enlarged United States investments in Canadian state issues and private enterprises, "a late estimate of which places the total at $2,500,000,000." This amount is almost as great as the British investment in Canada.

The article concludes:

"Canada has made great progress in various industries, but it may be said, without detriment to her remarkable achievements, that she has yet to come into her own industrially. This applies especially to manufacturing. Naturally, with her vast expanse of territory and comparatively sparse population, it has followed that agriculture and kindred industries have taken the lead. Latest available estimates of capital invested in her various industries disclose the pre-eminence of Canadian agriculture. The figures are agricultural investment (1921) $6,831,022,000; total manufactures, $3,230,686,368. (1919)."

NOTES OF INTEREST

"This happened when there were two Fridays in one week," declared a young woman, when the Tottenham magistrate, on Saturday, asked her to fix the date of a certain occurrence.

"Two Fridays in a week!!" gasped the magistrate.

The Woman—Yes, one of them came on a Thursday.

Questions and cross-questions seemed all in vain. Then up spoke the girl's mother.

"I can't explain," she said. "There was only one Friday in the week, of course. She got a bit mixed, because that was the week when the Friday came on a Sunday."

The magistrate gave it up.

A serious dispute is proceeding between the British Admiralty and those who would keep the Air Force separated from Admiralty control. Lord Rothermere, who was the first "Secretary of State for Air," has plunged into the controversy, pointing out that Aircraft are the eyes of the fleet, that the officers and men engaged in naval air work should be trained and commanded under the exclusive auspices of the navy, and that to separate them from naval control would be like maintaining tanks as a force independent of the army.

Canada's mining industry has recovered almost entirely from the slump of the last few years, according to a report on the mineral production for the first six months of 1923, just issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The value of production in that period totalled $87,152,248, as compared with $60,361,109 in the same period last year, an increase of 44 per cent.

Gold mining is in a satisfactory position, although there has been a slight decrease in production, due entirely to the prolonged power shortage in Porcupine this spring, a dry fall followed by a late breakup of ice on the lakes and rivers, proved a serious handicap to the power companies. With increased crushing capacity and one new producer assured it is expected that 1923 total will equal that of 1922.

For the first six months of this year the gold production of Canada amounted to 530,402 fine ounces, valued at $10,964,382. Silver production in the same period showed a slight decrease, the total being 8,336,946 ounces, valued at $5,506,469, as compared with 8,905,458 vounces valued at $5,997,199, in 1922.

Says the Countess of Warwick, famous in Great Britain as the original of George Bernard Shaw's novel, "The Socialist Countess," to an interviewer:

"I have belonged to the Labor Party for as many years as it has existed, so that the discovery of my views is hardly new. I am glad to be working with those who are treating with serious consideration and more adequate groppling with present problems of our time. With such combination of talent and earnestness they have shamed other political parties.

"Those who have direct knowledge of the suffering, mental, moral and physical, to which millions of our fellow countrymen are subjected in our present social and industrial conditions, areh olding out welcoming hands to this great labor movement which will assuredly make for the spiritual and economic emancipation of the people.

"Thus we are working, and trust that ere long the government will be in these able hands."

It is ignorance only—sheer ignorance—that allows anyone to speak disparagingly of the Chinese people. Wherever under thes un we go the idea that the Chinese people are uncivilized is more than I can figure. Why the Chinese have been civilized these thousands of years—aye, they were civilized while as yet we of the westernw orld were chasing each other with stone axes. Furthermore, they are more civilized today than we are—we, who, having just concluded a fierce and bloody war that cost us the death of 14,000,000 fresh young lives, are already well under way toward the next bloody outbreak. I have often tried to imagine the feelings of the Chinese who witness the arrival and sermonizing of missionaries from this mad Western world. Nowhere on earth are there more patient, philosophical, calm, thoughtful people than these Chinese, and all scholars who have gone there from the western world report them to have ordered their lives so as to exceed even the best of us in peacefullness and happiness and joy of living. Ti an informed Chinese—informed of the utter madness, inconsistency, confusion of the western world—itm ust be a spectacle rich in humor.

* * * * *

Personally, I consider it a grevious insult in our part to send missionairies to "civilize" the Chinese "heath en." The utter effrontery of it is amazing.

I know most people would be startled if Chinese missionaries were to arrive here to civilize us. And yet it would be a more sensible and practical thing than our serding of missionaries to them! We need civilizing and humanizing more than they need it.

* * * * *

Oh, but you're crazy, I hear someone exclaim. Why, the western world passed China ages ago! Look at our machines, our railroads, our great ocean steamships, our automobiles, our wireless telegraphs, our radio, our airplanes, our submarines, our great battleships, our marvelous factories and workshops, our vast processes. And look at their antiquated method of production and distribution!

And I reply that machines, factories processes have nothing whatever—nothing whatever— to do with civilization!

If material progress meant civilization, why we should to-day be the most civilized people under thes un. But it does not. The ancient Greeks, who had no railroads or submarines or radio or airplanes or factories, possessed a civilization to whose peaks we today can only aspire.

This train of thought has been set going by reading a description of a famous encyclopaedia complied by the Chinese in the fourteenth century.

It required 2,169 scholars to write this marvellous work. They toiled for three years under the guidance of five chief directors and twenty subdirectors. Judging from an account of it published in 1795, it must have run to over 500,000 pages. It was never printed, because of the cost of the block-cutting; but under the reign of a subsequent emperor two extra copies were made, and one of these, imperfect to the extent of about 20,000 pages, was in the Han lin College at Peking as late as 1900. In that year, unfortunately, the college was burnt to the ground. An attempt was made to save the encyclopaedia, but heaps of volumes had been destroyed, and the effort had to be given up. Writing about the seige of Peking in 1900, Lancelot Giles says: "I secured volume 13,-345 for myself."

Hats off to Gov. John Parker, of Louisiana, U.S.A., who recently defied the Ku Klux Klan cut-throat gang to its very face. He was returning by train to the State Capiol from a town in Alabama, where he had addressed a meeting. The train stopped at a town in Missouri, where three cars of hooded Klansmen were attached to the train. There were more than 500 of the hooded gangsters. They soon heard that Gov. Parker was on the train, and brushing aside the conductor a number of them in full regalia pushed their way into the car where the Governor sat. They came from both entrances. Thes pokesman said:

"Are you Gov. Parker."

"I am," he replied.

" Stand up and let us look at you," commanded the men in the mask.

The Governor complied.

"What do you think of us?" he was asked.

"I think just what I have always thought," replied he in a calm and steady voice. "I consider your organization a menace to law and order. If you will take off your masks I will tell you better what I think of you."

* * * * *

When you remember the countless outrages committed by the Ku Klux Klan—thew hippings, torturings, tarring and feathering, burning, shooting, and other kinds of killing—you begin to appreciate thec ourage of this brave man who stood there under such dramatic circumstances and actually defied them to their faces.

In different parts of the United States recently numbers of the Klan have been fired up by great crowds of non-Klansmen, and several were killed and injured. This was a grevious mistake. These are the methods adopted by the Klan, and they ought to be confined to the Klan. Decent men ought to be too proud to decend to the level of fighting the Klan in its own cowardly weapons. As soon as you yourself adopt the methods employed by a slimy opponent, you lend complete sanction to those metods. The only effective way in which the American people can fight the Klan is that of continuing to expose that bloody organization's outrages, to show the Klan up in its dual colors of murderousness and ridiculousness. What America needs today is another Voltaire—another giant among humans who will laugh out of existence the countless forms of utter nonsense and childishness that choke free thought and free expression in thatc ountry.

But the same might be said of every country, and of the world!

C. H. E. Returns

Enquiry by the Advocate at the C. H. E. office this morning elicited the information that no further lists of passes will be ready for publication for a day or two as the returns have to be arranged alphabetically and otherwise prepared for the papers. In the meantime, we are informed that copies of the lists were sent out to all the schools on Monday and Tuesday last.

Linegar Ran Correct Course

"COKE" CAHILL TO THE FORE IN MAKING THINGS COMFORTABLE FOR OUR BOYE

John Bell, R. O'Toole, G. Burnell, Newfoundland representatives in the Canadian track and field championships, arrived in Halifax yesterday, accompanied by Stanley Cullen, their trainer. The Newfoundland contingent is the first to arrive and is being warmly greeted.

John Bell, marathon runner, is well known to Haligolians as the plucky youngster who chased Victor MacAulay in the Herald and Mail marathon of two years gao. O'Toole is a middle distance runner and Burnell is a walker. All these arec hampions of Newfoundland.

Yesterday, Coke Cahill, Wanderers athlete, who resided in Newfoundland for two years, escorted the visitors to places of interest in Halifax and made arrangements for workouts at the local tracks.

The Ontario and Western athletes are due in Halifax Thursday and most of the competiters will probably work out Friday afternoon. While the Maritimee will be well represented, Upper Canada entrants outnumber those of the east.

Cecil Coaffee, world spint ace, now in Chicago, will come direct to Halifax from the windy city and will be on the track several days before the meet.

Secretary Fred Dickie will have the official entry list prepared tomorrow and the drawings for heats in the spints will be made in the presence of the various officials.—Halifax Herald, Sept. 11th.

DEMPSEY DEFEATS FIRPO IN SECOND ROUND

Spanish Rebel Leader Will Form A Cabinet

Ninety Thousand Fight Fans Saw Defeat Of Firpo

NEW YORK, Sept. 14—Jack Dempsey retained his world's heavy-weight championship crown to-night before ninety thousand raving fans at the Polo Grounds, when he knocked out Luis Firpo, of Argentine, in the second round of the scheduled fifteen-round bout.

Dempsey weighed in at 192 1-2 pounds, and Firpo at 216 1-2. Both fighters received a deafening ovation when introduced.

Johnny Gallagher, of New York, was referee, and brought the men to the centre of the ring at 10.04.

When Firpo got up, Dempsey knocked him down again, and when he got up, chased him to his corner and knocked him down again.

When Firpo got up after the fourth knock-down, he knocked Dempsey through the ropes, and the champion came back groggy.

Firpo pounded Jack on the chin with sledge-hammer rights when the round ended, and both men went to their corners groggy and bleeding.

Firpo staggered into the ring for the second round, and Dempsey caught him with left and right hooks to the chin, that sent him to the floor, blood trickling from his mouth and nose. He remained on his back for the count of ten, and the fight was over—fifty-five seconds from the start of the second round.

Other messages received, containing news of the fight, were as follows:

To The Anglo at Midnight

"Both Firpo and Dempsey knocked round; Dempsey knocked thru ropes. In second round, Firpo went down for count of five, and came up into a clinch, out of which Dempsey got in two blows in quick succession, knocking Firpo out."

As Heard by Mr. J. J. Collins

"At 10.03 Dempsey and Firpo squared off. Dempsey knocked out Firpo in second round. Firpo went down with a left to the body and a right to the jaw. He went down crashing on his back and was counted out. Firpo got to his knees dazed and utterly defenceless."

NEW YORK, Sept. 15—Only a masterpiece of generalship plus the inexperience of Firpo, saved Jack Dempsey from taking defeat towards the close of the spectacular first round, when Firpo rose from the fifth knock-down to drive Dempsey thru the ropes with a terrible right swing to the jaw.

This was the first time Dempsey was knocked off his feet since he became champion, four years ago.

Firpo is confident that with further experience, he will return and defeat Dempsey.

Crowds of people in Buenos Ayres, on hearing the result of the fight, went and threw stones at the electric sign which bore the words: "Dempsey won." It was a great disappointment to South American people.

OXFORD JUNCTION, N.S., Sept 15.—Just as the Maritime express for Montreal was pulling away from the station this evening, an unknown man dashed for the front end of the baggage car and slipped beneath the wheels and was cut to pieces. Neither money nor railway ticket were found on the body, and the only thing by which identification might be effected, was a black cord tied about the man's neck and fastened to a button on his coat.

The dead man had been wearing a dark suit of a good quality and was apparently about thirty-five. He had carried a lunch wrapped up in a paper parcel.

The body is being photographed for identification purposes.

YOUNGSTERS WATCH THEIR HERO
While giving his training quarters the once over Jack Dempsey met some real country kids. They asked their hero to honor them by riding on their bike and the champion did so. He proved to be as good a bike rider as he is a boxer.

Note Sent To League

PARIS, Sept.14 —The text of the note addressed by the Council of Ambassadors, to Greece, has been officially communicated to the League of Nations with a covering note expressing the opinion that the situation created by the assassination in Greece of General Tellini and other members of the Italian Commission may be said to have been regulated in a satisfactory manner.

The text as now made public, gives the five conditions which Greece must fulfill.

The fifth condition says that the Inter-Allied Commission investigation into the assassination will commence its work on Sept. 27, at Janina, and that five days later, it will telegraph its first observations. If the culprits are not discovered by that time the Commissioners will report the conditions under which they are working, and the Ambassadors' Council will decide from this report whether the fifth condition of its note to Greece: that exemplary punishment of the guilty parties should be undertaken with all possible speed, has been fulfilled.

NO UNPLEASANT CONSEQUENCES FEARED

PARIS, Sept. 14—The French official opinion is that a solution of the Spanish crisis will probably be arranged in Madrid without tragic consequences.

The attitude of the French government is one of absolute detachment, except that events are being followed wih friendly interest and hopes for Spain's welfare.

Rivera Is Asked To Form New Ministry

MADRID, Sept. 14—King Alphonso this afternoon asked Captain-General Primo Riviera, the leader of the military movement against Alhucema's cabinet, to form a government.

It was announced by Captain-General Muniz Cobo, of Madrid ,who is in charge of the maintenance of public order, that a proclamation of martial law was necessary.

Martial Law Proclaimed In Madrid

MADRID, Sept. 14—Martial law has been proclaimed and the streets of Madrid are patrolled by military forces.

Primo Riviera, leader of the revolution, who has been asked by the King to form a new ministry, has instructed the military judges to institute proceedings against Santiago Alba, former Foreign Minister, and has issued a proclamation inviting all Spaniards to declare themselves on the political morality of the former minister, who is believed to be a refugee in Biarritz.

Riviera declared this afternoon that the King, with whom he conversed by telephone, has accepted the directorate proposed by the military chiefs.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXVI.

"I opened the seacock, cast it off, andl et it drift out into the bight on the ebb tide, one night recently."

"Why?"

"In order that I might have a logical and reasonable excuse to furnish Nan Brent with sufficient funds to leave this town and make a new start elsewhere. I have charged the twenty-five hundred to your personal account on the company's books."

"You also indulged in some extraordinary statements regarding our pressing need for the Sawdust Pile as a drying yard."

"We can use it, sir," Daney replied. "I felt justified in indicating to the girl that her room was desired to her company. Your son," he added, deliberately, was treading on soft ground, and I took the license of an old friend and, I hope, a faithful servant, to rid him of temptation."

"I shall never be done with feeling grateful to you, Andrew. The girl is leaving on the train that's just pulling out, and—the incident is closed. My son is young. He will get over it. Thank you, Andrew, dear friend, until you're better paid—as you will be some day soon."

"I'll have need of your friendship if Donald ever discovers my part in this deal. He'll fire me out o' hand."

"If he does, I'll hire you back."

"Hell will pop when he finds that the bird has flown, sir."

"Let it pop! That kind of popping is music in my ears. Hark, Andrew, lad! There's the train whistling for Darrow's Crossing. From there on the trail is lost—lost—lost, I tell you! O Lord of Hosts, I thank Thee for Thy great mercy!"

And, quite suddenly, old Hector sat down and began to weep.

CHAPTER XXVII.

NAN BRENT'S departure from the Sawdust Pile was known to so few in Port Agnew that it was fully ten days before the news became general; even then it excited no more than momentary comment, and a week later, when Donald McKaye returned to town somewhat sooner than he had anticipated, Port Agnew had almost forgotten that Nan Brent had ever lived and loved and sinned in its virtuous midst. Even the small gossip about her and the young laird had subsided, condemned by all, including the most thoughtless, as a gross injustice to their favorite son, and consequently dismissed as the unworthy tattling of unworthy suspicious old women. Life in the busy little sawmill town had again sagged into the doldrums.

For several days, a feeling of lassitude had been stealing over Donald. At first he thought it was a mental depression, but when, later, he developed nausea, lack of appetite and pains in his head and back, and extremities, it occurred to him that he wasn't feeling physically well and that The Dreamerie was to be preferred to his rough pine shanty in the woods, even though in the latter he had sanctuary from the female members of his family.

He came in unexpectedly on the last log train on Saturday night; tired; with throbbing head and trembling legs, he crawled off the caboose at the log dump and made his way weakly up to the mill office. It was deserted when he got there at half-past six, but in his mail-box he found something which he had promised himself would be there, despite certain well-remembered assurances to the contrary. It was a letter from Nan. He tore the envelope eagerly and read:

Donald dear, I love you. That is why I am leaving you. We shall not meet again, I think. If we should, it will doubtless be years hence, and by that time we shall both have resigned ourselves to this present very necessary sacrifice. Good-by, poor dear.

Always your sweetheart,

NAN.

He read and reread the letter several times. It was undated. Presently, with an effort, he recovered the envelop from the waste-basket and examined the postmark. The letter had been mailed from Seattle, but the post-date was blurred.

With the letter clutched in his hand, he bent forward and pillowed his hot face in his arms, outspread upon his father's old desk. He wanted to weep—to sob aloud in a childish effort to unburden his heart, scourged now with the first real sorrow of his existence. His throat contracted; something in his breast appeared to have congealed, yet for upward of an hour he neither moved nor gave forth a sound. At last, under the inspiration of a great hope without mental effort or desire for it, so thoroughly crushed was he, the black, tousled head came slowly up. His face, usually ruddy beneath the dark, sun-tanned skin but now white and haggared, showed a fleeting little smile, as if he grinned at his own weakness and lack of faith; he rose unsteadily and clumped out of the office building.

Gone! Nan gone like that! No, no! He would not believe it. She might have intended to go—she might have wanted to go—she might have even started to go—but she had turned back! She loved him; she was his. During those long days and nights up in the woods, he had fought the issue with himself and made up his mind that Nan Brent was the one woman in the world for him, that there could never, by God's grace, be any other, and that he would have her, come what might and be the price what it would. Rather than the fortune which his father had toiled and sacrificed for, Donald preferred Nan's love; rather than a life of ease and freedom from worry, he loked forward with a fierce joy to laboring with his hands for a pittance, provided he might have the privilege of sharing it with her. And The Dreamerie, the house his father had built with such great, passionate human hopes and tender yearnings, the young laird of Port Agnew would abandon without a pang for that little white house on the Sawdust Pile. Round steak and potatoes, fried by the woman destined to him for his perfect mate, would taste better to him than the choicest viands served by light stepping servitors in his father's house.

What, after all, was there worth while in the world for him if he was to be robbed of his youth and his love? For him, the bare husks of life held no allurement; he was one of that virile, human type that rejects the doctrine of sacrifice, denial and self-repression in this life for the greater glory of God and man's promise of a reward in another life, of which we wot but little and that little not sufficiently authenticated. He wanted the great, all-compelling, omnipotent Present with its gifts that he could clutch in his fierce hands or draw to his hungry heart. To hell with the future. He reflected that misers permit their thoughts to dwell upon it and die rich and despised, leaving to the apostles of the Present the enjoyment of the fruits of a foolish sacrifice.

"She came back. I know she did," he mumbled, as he groped his way through the dark of the drying yard. "I'm sick. I must see her and tell her to wait until I'm well. The damned dirty world can do what it jolly well pleases to me, but I'll protect her from it. I will—by God!"

He emerged into the open fields beyond which lay the Sawdust Pile, snuggled down on the beach. The Brent cottage was visible in the dim starlight, and he observed that there was no light in the window; nevertheless his high faith did not falter. He pressed on, although each step was the product of an effort, mental and physical. His legs were heavy and dragged, as if he wore upon his logger's boots the thick, leaden soles of a deep-sea diver.

At the gate, he leaned and rested for a few minutes, then entered the deserted yard and rapped at the front door; but his summons bringing no response, he staggered round to the back door and repeated it. He waited half a minute and then banged furiously with his fist upon the door-panel. Still receiving no response, he seized the knob and shook the door until the little house apepared to rattle from cellar to cupola.

"Nan! Nan! Where are you?" he called. "It is I—Donald. Answer me Nan. I know you haven't gone away. You wouldn't. Please answer me, Nan!"

But the only sound he heard was the labored pumping of his own heart and the swish of the wavelets against the timbered buttress of the Sawdust Pile. The conviction slowly came to his torpid brain that he was seeking admission to a deserted house, an dhe leaned against the door and fought for control of himself. Presently, like a stricken animal, he went slowly and uncertainly away in the direction whence he had come.

Andrew Daney had put out the cat and wound the clock and was about to ascend to his chamber (now, alas, re-occupied by Mrs. Daney, upon whom the news of Nan's departure had descended like gentle rainfall over a hitherto dry district) when he heard slow footsteps upon his front veranda. Upon going to the door and peering out, he was amazed to see Donald McKaye standing just outside.

"Wel, bless my soul!" Daney declared. "So it's you Donald. Come in, lad; come in."

Donald shook his head.

Save the Mothers and Children

Nursing Combined With Teaching

TORONTO, Sept 14—'—'The Public Health Nurse", modelled in plaster by Merle Foster, brought before women at the National Exhibition a figure new to the older generation, as she stood, alert and ready, in the Government Building, "a new and potent influence in community life."

Hers has been a unique mission; it has combined nursing with teaching, and always uppermost has been the great impelling motive "Save the Mothers and Children."

Most of the larger cities now possess their own public health nursing service, but there is still a serious shortage in the supply of health nurses for the smaller and more sparcely settled communities.

Public Health nursing requires a special preparation not supplied during the three year's hospital training. That preparation has for the past three years been the sole purpose of the public health course at the University of Toronto, which was first financed by the Red Cross and which now has been formally taken over by the University as one of its established courses. Last year 44 nurses received their diplomas, and in the previous two years there were 91 graduates in all. Of the total 135 graduates, practically all are actively engaged in public health work, many of them in Ontario; others have been appointed to fields in other Provinces of the Dominion, while one has gone as far afield as Brazil.

Compared with private duty nurses, the advantages appear to be on the side of the public health nurse, according to statements from authorities. Thec urrent average salary of $1,500 a year, thought seemingly small at first glance, is in reality substantially higher than the private duty nurse's wage total for the year, as the woman who is on "case" work must of necessity plan for numerous rest periods when she is not receiving any income.

ENGLISH PEOPLE SEEK KNOWLEDGE OF CANADA

LONDON, Sept. 14—Interviewed on her arrival in this country, Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith, of Vancouver, who has been sent to England by the Federal Government to give a series of lectures and talks on Canada's opportunities for settlers, said she had just been to the Lancaster County Show, held in Liverpool.

"I was proud to see Canada so well represented," said Mrs. Smith. "Her various fruits, grains, ores and other products were presented in a most attractive form and the exhibit was drawing large crowds to the stand.

"The number of people who were passing in and out, asking for literature, and the eagerness with which they were seeking information, convinced me of two things. The first is their strong desire to make a new start in a new land; the second is the great need for an educational campaign on the part of Canada thruout the British Isles, and the necessity of making the Dominion and all that she has to offer more widely known."

Empire Councils

DOMINION PREMIERS' PLANS.

(London Weekly Times))

Preparations for the Imperial Conference and the Economic Conference are well advanced, and within the next few days several of the Dominion delegates will be on their way to London.

Mr. Massey and his party arranged to sail from Auckland on Tuesday, and Mr. Bruce has booked his passage in the Orvieto, which sails from Melbourne on Saturday next. Both Mr Bruce and his colleague, Senator Wilson, will be accompanied by their wives, and it is stated that the Australian party will number more than twenty.

General Smuts, who is not carrying out his original intention of attending the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva, will leave Cape Town on September 4. Mr. Mackenzie King is sailing eleven days later, and Mr. Warren, the new Prime Minister of Newfoundland, expects to arrive in London about September 28.

The original plan was that the Conferences should hold their opening meetings on October 1, but it will be impossible for either Mr. Bruce or Mr. Massey to be in London until some days later, and a short postponement appears inevitable. Mr. Bruce intends to land at Toulon on October 3 and travel overland with all possible speed. It is generally believed that the two Conferences, which will meet simultaneously, will last for four or five weeks.

It is understood that General Smuts has reserved accommodation in a ship leaving for South Africa on November 20.

Kyle's Passengers

The Kyle arrived at Port aux Basques at 7.30 a.m. yesterday, bringing a large mail and the following passengers:—Mesdames J. Ball, S. Rose, J. Hartigan, JJ. Kellowway, A. McIssac, G. Gillis, M. SEA GHOSTS

Whenever a ship rides down the bay
Out to the surging sea,
Hundreds and hundreds of little gray ghosts
Follow it wistfully.

You can hear in the whir of sea birds' wings
Or glimpse in the silver foam
Trailing each outgoing vessel the ghosts
Of those who are left at home.

They hide in the banks of gray sea fog,
Or dance in a rainbow spray;
Caressing a cheek when a gentle wind blows—
Following night and day.

Under the vast sea dome,
Hundreds and hundreds of little gray ghosts
Will pilot it safely home.

TORONTO, Sept. 14—What the Women's Institutes throughout the province are accomplishing in their own quiet, resourseful way, and what one particular institute is doing, formed the subject of a delightful address by the well known Canadian farm woman and writer, Mrs. Nina Moore Jamieson, at the farm kitchen in the Women's Building of the C.N.E.

Some twelve years ago the Westover Institute at Beverley, Ont., comprising about thirty members, resolved to turn its serious attention to renovating two graveyards in the village. "A regular old-fashioned bee" was held, to which men and women came and helped to level the graves. Then one of the village's unemployed men was hired to keep the grounds in condition. "It was all a matter of bringing the neighborhood together," said Mrs. Jamieson.

RECEIPT FOR LASTING LOVE

(London Sunday Pictorial)

Judge Graham, of San Francisco, advises all women who wish to keep their husbands to have their hair bobbed.

Happy the home where the hair is bobbed
And no wayward tresses stray
Over the mouth and round the eyes,
And get in the nose's way;
For the love that laughs at locks and bolts
Is not of the lasting sort—
But love won't bolt; it will linger long
If the locks are nice and short.

Don't ever wear your wishbone where your backbone ought to be.

Mexico Has Refused To Join League

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 14.—Mexico has declined the invitation of the Latin-American delegates to the League of Nations to become a member of the League.

The fact that diplomatic relations between Mexico and Great Britain have not yet been resumed, and that Great Britain has a delegate in the League Council, is declared to be the obstacle preventing Mexico from making aplication for admission to the League.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, SEPT. 15th., 1923.

Rebuilding A Nation

The Japan of to-day is confronted with the most gigantic, the most overwhelming task that has faced a nation in modern times. Yet, the stricken Nipponese accept with proverbial oriental fatalism the burden which angry Nature has imposed upon them.

While the ashes of devastated cities are still warm and the fate of thousands within the demolished area is still shrouded in mystery, the unostentatious but dogged courage that has made the Japanese people a power in the Eastern World, has asserted itself and the rebuilding of the nation has begun. For it is the very heart of the Japanese nation that has been disrupted, the centre of her political, industrial and commercial life that has been visited by disaster, complete and terrible.

Well might such a blow prostrate a race less indomitable and less ready to accept without question the inscrutable workings of the Gods. The bare contemplation of the appalling horrors of that awful, death-dealing eruption, the frightful echoes of which have been heard thruout the world, is in itself staggering, but Japan, with sublime courage and marvellous fortitude accepts the inevitable and takes up that burden which might well crush the bravest and strongest.

Great, however, as has been the property loss as a result of the tragedy that has shocked every continent by its awfulness, the loss of precious lives has been greater because it is irremediably. Indeed the imagination fails to grasp the full horror of the holocaust, nor can human mind estimate its actual extent. Less shocking in most respects was the ravaging of Belgium by the Huns of Germany in 1914, less complete the devastation of the treasure places of France thruout all the days of the world war than was the wrecking in one fell swoop of the teaming towns and cities of Japan, and what Nature has thus ruthlessly levelled, a stricken but undaunted people now begin to re-erect.

In no city of the East are there to be found more modern or more magnificent speciments of architectural art than those which have been reduced to debris within the quake zone of Japan. Tokio in recent years showed a tendency to copy the most modern structural enterprises of the West, and the country entertained a justifiable pride in the modernity of the sky-scrapers and the beauty of the palaces and theatres of its capital city. To what extent these have been included in the general havoc wrought by the earthquake there is as yet no definite information, but it is estimated, according to latest despatches, that the cost of reconstruction will be $500,000,000. Truly the devotion of the nation will be taxed to the utmost in the carrying out of this tremendous task, but no time has been lost in vain murmurs against the cruel fate that has set the wheels of progress back centuries and destroyed the treasures which were the accumulation of ages.

In their stupenduous undertaking the Japanese people will have the sympathy of the nations of the civilized world, a sympathy which is already finding expression in practical assistance.

The New York Times' Story

In another column there is published to-day an article from the New York Times on the subject of the Fishermen's Protective Union and its President. The article deals in a very comprehensive way with the rise of the Fishermen's movement and reviews its various commercial, political and social expansions along the years which have made Union history for this country.

From the historic night in Herring Neck Orange Hall, and the raising of the F. P. U. banner along our northern rockbound coasts till Port Union has risen to its present proportions, the story will be found most interesting, particularly to F.P.U. readers.

Only by dint of hard work and the utmost confidence in a persistent leader, could the Union achievements have become of such magnitude.

In all countries Sir William's works, on behalf of the fishermen, are widely recognized, and it is not surprising that one of the leading journals of the United States, where true worth is always recognised, should give its valued space for the purpose of informing its readers of the results of honest persistent effort on behalf of the people.

Another "Daniel"

There are those who talk from day to day of "signs that are not wanting." They pretend to see clouds on the horizon no bigger than a man's hand, and the hand writing on the wall" is often the subject of their interpretation.

So very careful have such people been in their repetitions of "Signs that are not wanting" and "of the mills which grind exceeding small," that one is led to believe Patience is their outstanding virtue.

They have been doing it for years.

How long, O Lord, how long! is never heard from their lips, though eyes are fixed on the "signs not wantin," and pen traces the proverbial handwriting.

Since northern fishermen decided about 15 years ago to take a strong hand in public matters of their own country, and in pursuance of that democratic purpose, joined hands in a Fishermen's Union, built their Union halls for discussion of public matters, placed representatives in the Assembly, secured better sealing and other laws, and also established an extensive commercial business, the public horizon has been filled with "signs" and "little clouds," and walls of newspaper offices rival those which witnessed Belshazzar's feast.

The poor paid instruments of the destructionist group pose as Daniels come to judgment, and "every day in every way" for many a year, strut out with an interpretation, thereof.

But, when shall these things be?

One instrument follows another in this parody or farce with mouths filled with words crammed into them by the lords who have hired them.

Passing judgment upon a people!
Talking about the mills which grind exceeding small!

Loan of $500,000,000 Could be Float..ed Here, Is Heartening Message of Mellon.

SAN FRANCISCO IS CITED AS EXAMPLE OF SPIRIT

United States is Expected to Furnish Much Material for Building of Modern Nippon.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—A new Japan, greater, stronger and more substantial than before will grow out of the devastation caused by the earthquake disaster, according to the belief of Japan's o cial representatives in the United States. This view is also held by officials of this Government and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to-day expressed the confident belief that Japan would have no difficulty in floating in this country a private loan of $500,000,000 or of any other amount.

Reports received by the Japanese Embassy show the Japanese Government in the midst of the tragedy is already planning to rebuild Tokio and Yokohama, together with other devasted sections.

This reconstruction work will move swiftly and the armada of mercy which is now concentrating at Yokohama will soon be succeeded by a flotilla of commerce bearing to Japan the material needed for the rebuilding of its capital, its railway lines and its great port of entry.

The new Japan will substitute, so far as possible, steel and concrete construction for the more flimsy material previously used and will under take to make its buildings strong enough to withstand future earthquakes. The old Japan will pass more quickly than would have happened without the disaster, and the new Japan will be modern and built to withstand anything except the most violent earth convulsions.

Look for Boom Times.

As the men of Japan see it a new era, comparable only to that which followed the opening of the country when Admiral Perry sought admission, will follow the present catastrophe. The terrific toll of life, the immense loss of property and the interruption of steady progress which Japan has suffered have been a severe blow, but the fateful moment having passed, the Japanese are all for the future.

Marvellous as has been the progress of Japan, they argue, it is the product of only fifty years' of effort and followed another earthquake disaster seventy years ago, which exacted a toll of 100,000 lives.

Japan came out of the war period practically unscathed from a financial viewpoint and with a national debt of only $1,346,000,000. Compared with the debts of Great Britain, France and the United States, this is a small obligation.

At the Japanese Embassy it was confidently predicted that the reconstruction of both Yokohama and of Tokio would be accomplished with astounding rapidity. Only the possible closing up of the harbor by the quake, which has been suggested but not definitely determined, it is maintained, can prevent the rebuilding of the port on a scale never imagined in connection with the older Yokohama. In the meantime, Kobe and Osaka will carry the bulk of the business which formerly went through the destroyed city.

San Francisco Cited

Just as the people of San Francisco refused to abandon their city when it had been destroyed by quake and fire, so the Japanese, it is claimed, will refuse to be conquered by the force of nature with which they have been struggling for generations. The immediate task will be that of caring for the victims and for the population during the fall and winter.

In this work of reconstruction the United States is expected to have a large part. The increased demand for steel will have its effect here and after the errands of mercy have been accomplishey, the merchant fleet of the Pacific, which has not always beens busy, will be kept occupied carrying the material needed to rebuild the new Japan.

Although the Japanese losses cannot be estimated, she is well covered with insurance. The total amount of insurance in all Japan, according to Department of Commerce figures is $5,435,429,000. The bulk of this, it is understood, was placed in Great Britain.

While nothing can minimize the loss of life, nor lighten the suffering, it is assumed the large insurance carried will help Japan materially in getting on her feet, provided the British insurance firms can stand the burden. These same British firms were hard hit by the San Francisco disaster, but did not default.

If my soldiers thought, there would be no wars.

—Frederick the Great.

FROM A LONDON LETTER

WE ARE back again, in "unsettled conditions" — meteorologically. The temperature and the type of weather are normal for this time of the year. Sufficient rain has fallen during the past week to dispel fears caused by the recent drought, and vegetation in this short time has been transformed. The new luxuries of greenery is grateful to the eyes which had become accustomed to the parched and shrivelled appearance of the country side in the last two months. Although the storms at times have been heavy, the "bright intervals" have been very bright indeed, and have brought full compensation. With the memory of the long spell of intolerable heat and fiery skies still fresh, few people venture to grumble at the change which is now experienced, though it may take a little time to get accustomed to the chilly nights which have come to remind us of the approach of autumn.

City Honors from Premiers.

As at present arranged, the public presentation of the Freedom of the City of London, honoris causa, to Mr. Baldwin, the Prime Minister, and to the Prime Ministers of Australia and Canada, will take place at the Guildhall on Friday, October 12th. The Lord Mayor will give a luncheon in their honor at the Mansion House after the ceremony.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer a few days ago announced the receipt of £1,500 as a contribution towards the reduction of the National Debt, from a gentleman who wishes to remain anonymous. Mr. Baldwin expressed on behalf of His Majesty's Government, his grateful appreciation of this gift to the nation. The last previous contribution of this kind was £100 from "One who was too old to fight." Two years ago a gift of £1,000 was made. Other contributions announced have been £2,500 five per cent. war loan stock, "F. S.T.'s" surrender of 20 per cent of his estate of about £580,000, notified in a letter to The Times in June, 1919, and individual amounts of £130,000, £15,000, £15,015, £12,000 and £25,000.

American Visitors Departing.

American visitors during the past week have left this country in great numbers, for their homes. There has been a procession of big liners in and out of Southampton, indicating a turn of the traffic. The Majestic, the largest British ship, and the Belgenland, the Biggest Belgian boat, left on Wednesday and Thursday. On Saturday three vessels sailed for New York alone, headed by the 52,000-ton Berengaria. All the outward-bound American steamers are heavily booked.

In Her 107th Year.

The death is anounced from bronchitis at Oak Grove, Anerley, of Mrs. Garrett, who celebrated her 106th birthday a few weeks ago. Born in 1817, Mrs. Garrett was married in the year of Queen Victoria's coronation, and saw the coronation procession. Her two children died several years ago, and her eldest grandchild is Mrs. Bruce Kingsmill, the wife of Colonel J. Bruce Kingsmill, of St. Margaret's, Twickenham.

Luxurious Air Liners.

An indication of the degree of comfort and even of luxury which will be provided on the great air liners of the near future, is given by the Air Ministry. Sir Samuel Hoare is calling for tenders for the construction of a machine adapted for use on Imperial transport routes. It is to be equipped with electric cooking apparatus and a wireless cabin. It will also have an electric fan, driving air through a screen down which water can be dripped, to secure the comfort of the passengers in a hot climate. Collapsible tables and a small ice-chest are also included in the equipment, while the machine must be able to climb ten thousand feet, and carry enough petrol and oil for a flight of 1,300 miles at that altitude at a speed of ninety miles an hour. Another machine is intended for passenger transport in the Middle East, and while following the last machine in many respects, will have an engine or engines of not more than 1000 h.p., a crew of two instead of four, and accomodation for not fewer than eight passengers. These machines, when completed, should be air liners far in advance of anything at present in use. They present special difficulties in the way of design, and it is not likely that orders will be placed for their construction for some little time yet.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

The spasmodic efforts of the police to keep motorists within bounds seem to have been permanently abandoned, and many drivers of cars are now trying to outdo each other in reckless driving.

The League of Nations has decided with all due seriousness and solemnity that war is a crime, and the members of that body have "promised" not to be found guilty of committing it. Before now war must have been regarded as a form of worship. Has the League, we wonder, succeeded in getting up another "scrap of paper"?

Educationalists bemoan the fact that we cannot pay salaries sufficiently attractive to induce capable teachers to remain long in outport schools, yet we continue to pay two and three men or women of different denominations to teach in the same settlement despite the fact that the total number of pupils no more than constitute an ordinary class. What is the use of trying to do better for outport education while such a system has to be pandered to?

And that reminds me of the giant strides education has made in St. John's. When one sees a crowd of full-grown males and females sitting off with serious singing "Barney Google" he cannot but be convinced that we have reached the appex of mental culture—and have started to "skid" down the other side.

Trotsky is not dead gain again, according to a message received a day or two ago. Disgusting how those European politicians refuse to accommodate pressmen in such trivial matters.

Pulp and Paper Industry

Says the Monthly Commercial Letter of the Canadian Bank of Commerce: A preliminary official report on the pulp and paper industry for 1922 shows a satisfactory recovery from the unfavourable conditions prevailing during 1921. The industry increased steadily in importance up to 1920, when the total net value of its production reached$236,420,176, owing mainly to high prices, but during the period of reconstruction in 1921 it fell to $151,003,165. The total of $155,785,338 for 1922, however, shows a trend toward more normal market conditions. The total production of pulp last year in the 71 mills engaged in its manufacture was 2,150,251 tons, valued at $84,947,598, as compared with 1,549,082 tons, valued at $78,338,278, in 1921, an increase in quantity of 38 per cent. The 61 mills manufacturing paper produced 1,336,815 tons, valued at $107,075,766, an increase in quantity of 34 per cent. over 1921. Meanwhile the capital invested in the pu lp and paper industry increased from $379,812,751 in 1921 to $381,006,324 in 1922. Newsprint forms about 80 per cent. of the annual production of Paper in Canada. In 1 922 the production of this class of paper amounted to 1,081,346 tons, valued at $75,971,327, an increase of 34.3 per cent. over 1921. With the installation of several new newsprint machines during 1923 it is probable that Canada's newsprint production will in the course of a year or two exceed that of the United States, and thus make this country the world's greatest producer.

LATEST

DIGBY, N.S., Sept. 15—James M. Power, mate of the schooner Lucille B., which arrived at Meteghan a week ago, reporting a piratical attack off the Massachusetts coast, in which twelve thousand gallons of alcohol were said to have been taken off the Lucille B. at the points of guns in the hands of fifteen sea thugs, was arrested to-day on information laid by the owners of the schooner, and her skipper, Captain LeBlanc, of Wedgeport.

The story given out when the Lucille B. reached Meteghan last Sunday morning, was that the piratical attack occurred while the skipper was ashore in Boston, and that immediately after the outlaws departed, Mate Power set sail for home, not waiting for his Captain.

It is also said that another story was told to the effect that the cargo was jettisoned during a heavy storm.

Captain LeBlanc stated in his information that the mate sailed for home, leaving him in Boston, to which port he had gone on business, and it is charged that Mate Power disposed of the goods to agents, who came out from Massachusetts, and kept the proceeds for himself. The mate is in jail, and will be given preliminary hearing on Tuesday next.

The crew are being held aboard ship as material witnesses.

CHAPLEAU, Ont., Sept. 15—A special train carried Lord Renfrew and party westward, and arrived at Chapleau yesterday afternoon, where some two hundred people turned out to catch a glimpse of the distinguished visitor.

During the ten minutes stay, the Prince remained in the train, reading, and smoking a briar pipe. When the train began to move out, the crowd cheered, which the Prince acknowledged from the rear platform.

MADRID, Sept. 15—King Alfonso, who returned to-day to Madrid, was besought by Premier Alhucemas to provide methods for punishment for the revolting military men, but he declined to do so, and Alhucemas immediately handed in his resignation and that of his ministry.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15—No greater victory short of overthrow the federal government could be won by the Communists in this country than to bring about recognition of the Soviet regime in Russia by this government. It is declared in an article of a series in which the United Mine Workers of America seek to prove that a plot is afloat to bring about a revolt in this country and in Canada, and establish the dictatorship of the Communists.

Internationals from the Moscow United Miner Workers charge that millions of dollars for the Communist movement were raised in the United States under the guise of Russian famine relief. This money was deposited in the banks of New York and Chicago in the name of relief committees, and eventually found its way, after passing through various other bank accounts, into the hands of real Communist emissaries in the United States.

BELGRADE, Sept. 15—All the reports circulated in the past few days alleging that tension existed between Jugo-Slavia and Italy because of the interruption of the work of the Fiume Conference Committee, are unfounded, says a statement issued by the Foreign office. It adds that the desire of both countries for an agreement is undiminished.

The time limit set by Italy for redmination of the status of Fiume, expires to-day, although there have been intimations that Rome would extend it so as to permit direct negotiations with Jugo-Slavia.

The annexation of Fiume, it is reported, in Paris recently, would be accompanied by the withdrawal of Italian troops from Porta Barros and the adjoining harbor, and by the renunciation of the Italians of their claim to Sussak.

The Doctor Knows

Doctors who know Minard's by the work it does are unhesitating in their praise of its healing and soothing qualities.

Dr. Jos. Aug. Sirois, of St. Isidore, Que., writes:—"I have frequently used Minard's Liniment and also prescribe it for my patients always with the most gratifying results, and I consider it the best all-round Liniment". C. A. King, M.D. also recommends Minard's in the following words:—"I have used Minard's Liniment myself as well as prescribed it in my practice when a liniment was required, and have never failed to get the desired effect". 27

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

LONDON LETTER

BY MRS. CECIL CHESTERTON

The American exodus from London has commenced, but as the Yankees depart the French seem to come in. The seaside places on the south coast annually receive a contingent of young people. It is part of the system of adoption in which an English municipality acts as a kind of fairy godmother to one of the devasted towns. Return visits have been arranged and in some cases a six months change of homes has been effected with gratifying results from the language point of view. I do not remember to have seen so many French people in London. They are mostly of the middle class and put up at quiet, little hotels in the less fashionable quarters. The interesting thing is that the women make extensive purchases of hats and frocks. It seems that, notwithstanding the rate of exchange, clothes are cheaper and of a better quality than in Paris and that a number of French women prefer to wait for an opportunity to get a bargain over here than to acquire the latest fashion in Paris.

The personnel of the Ministry of Pensions is once more causing question. The statement was made in Parliament that while exservice men are without employment, well-paid jobs were still held by women not dependent upon their earnings for a living. The Minister of pensions undertook to appoint a Commission of Enquiry. Up to the present nothing further has been done. The Ministry, is, in fact, hopelessly overstaffed. Hundreds of young girls are engaged without any knowledge or experience with the result that numbers of unfortunate pensioners are kept waiting weeks on end for their payments. On the other hand, it is urged that if a woman has the necessary qualifications, there is no reason why she should not have as good an appointment as a man. The point is agitating feminist circles and I hear that Lady Astor intends to start a campaign when Parliament re-opens. At the moment there are a number of temporary girl clerks in the Civil Service who have been there for the past five years. In every case it is the "temporary" girl who gets a higher salary than those on the staff, though the latter have to pass a general examination before being engaged. The feminists are organizing public meetings to put the women's case. Meanwhile ex-service men are agitating on their own account, and it looks as if the Minister of Pensions at any rate will be forced to a decision.

A number of prohibition meetings have been aranged for the early autumn. Most of the speakers are said to be Americans and it is also said that they ares upplied with money for the campaign from that side of the Atlantic. There is, of course, no danger of prohibition over here, but the result of the Scotch vote on the local veto will undoubtedly have its influence.

A Colliery At Wembley

NOVEL COAL MINING EXHIBIT.

(From a Correspondent)

A full-sized colliery, complete with headgear, pit ponies, underground stables, washeries and all the most up-to-date paraphernalia of coal-mining, seen in actual operation, is to be one of the many sensations of the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley next year.

A veritable wonder city is rapidly rising from the chaos of concrete, building material and giant cranes, nothing is being omitted to make the Exhibition worthy of its great object—the exposition of the British Empire's wealth in natural resources and human enterprises in every industrial field.

Coal-mining, the mainspring of our national wealth, requires to be represented in some special manner consistent with its importance, and the sinking and construction of this working colliery has been the final decision. The idea originated in the Mining Association of Great Britain, the coal owners' organization, which granted the money necessary for the purpose. The cost of plant and construction was estimated at £100,000 but the sum was readily voted. It was felt that so comprehensive an undertaking as the British Empire Exhibition would not be complete without some idea being given of the problems with which the coal mining industry has to deal, and of the enormous progress that has been made in technique since the early days.

The Mining Association invited the co-operation of the Institution of Mining Engineers and of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain in working out the scheme. A joint committee of representatives of the three bodies has been engaged on this work for some time, and plans are now prepared for the commencement of the operations of sinking the shafts, excavating the underground galleries, and installing the elaborate and costly surface plant which is an essential part of the equipment of every colliery.

One of the principal features of the mine will be an electric winding engine which will be able to lower into the workings 2,000 people an hour. Over the top of the shaft, which will be 18 feet in diameter, will be erected a steel headgear 80 feet high. The headgear will be equipped with pulleys fifteen feet in diameter, and will be of lattice work construction.

Next to the winding engine house will be a lamp room containing electric and oil lamps. Adjacent to this will be offices, bath-rooms for miners, a motor ambulance house, workshops and electrically driven air compressors. An electrically driven fan will be seen in operation, ventilating the labyrinth of underground tunnels that extend about a quarter of a mile.

After inspecting the surface plant, visitors will be lowered in a two-decked cage to the shaft bottom, and will step out into actual underground workings. The cage by which the public will be taken underground will be an actual reproduction of a colliery cage which lowers and raises the minors daily, and hoists coal to the surface.

The first machinery that will catch the eye underground will be an electrically driven pump busily at work pumping water. Different methods of supporting the ground overhead will be shown, including the use of steel as a main support. Next will be seen a haulage engine which hauls the coal from the workings, which in many colleries are over a mile away from the bottom of the shaft. The public will see the pit ponies in their underground stables where their lives are spent. The manner in which they are cared for will be explained.

Penetrating farther into the mine, the explorers will observe the various methods of getting coal, first by colliers with the pick and secondly by electrical and compressed air mechanical cutters. Mechanical conveyers will be seen moving the coal to pit trams in which it is hauled to the bottom of the shaft, ready for hoisting. Another interesting underground department will be a fully equipped ambulance room, where first aid is rendered in case of accident.

After leaving the workings, visitors, having regained the surface, will pass into a large hall, where they will see the progress that has been made in the mining industry during the past fifty years. The primitive tools used by miners will be on view together with the early lamps carried by the miners, and the more elaborate safety lamps of today. The visit to the Wembley Colliery will conclude with a cinema entertainment showing miners actually at work underground.

The purpose of the exhibit is to give the general public a glimpse into the highly technical and complicated business of coal-mining. It should prove one of the strongest attractions of the whole Exhibition.

BIG WHEAT CROP THIS YEAR

The 1923 wheat crops of countries north of the Equator, which produce about four-fifths of the world supply, is estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at 2,683,306,000 bushels, compared with 2,568,510,000 in 1922, and 2,477,638,000 in 1921. Production in Europe outside of Russia and Germany was given at 1,001,167,000 bushels compared with 839,218,000 last year, and 979,879,000 in 1921. The estimate of the French crop included in these figures is 290,456,000b ushels, compared with 243,315,000 last year. Rye production in France was estimated at 36,927,000 bushels, compared with 28,412,000 last year.

He was arrested and tried, condemned to death, and led off to execution; but at the eleventh hour when the noose was round his neck, and hew as expecting death at any moment, he awoke with a start, and heard—thel ast of the twelve strokes of the clock.

LESS CIGAR SMOKING

Decrease in cigar smoking is reported in the United States, according to latest statistics, while consumption of cigarettes is increasing by leaps and bounds. In 1920 the country used 8,304,618,767 cigars. Last year showed a decrease of 1,683,319,876. There have been no increase in cigars made since 1902. Of cigarettes in 1920, there were 2,615,618,795 smoked, while by 1922 the numbers had jumped to 50,068,203,130—an increase of more than 47 billions. No reasons were given, but the cigar-makers expressed considerable dissatisfaction.

AN EARLY FALL

Existence of abnormal ice fields in the North Atlantic and in Hudson Bay have been verified by the U.S. Hydrographic and Geologic Survey office. In the early season icebergs were sighted farther south than ever before, and ships were warned to alter their courses. To failure of the sunto melt the usual amount of ice and thus compel recession of the Arctic refrigeration to the usual distance north, is ascribed the late spring and the heavy snows, which swept across New England and northward late last winter and early in the spring. The sun is already half way back from its annual northern trip, with the result that the unusual accumulations of snow and ice have not been melted. This accumulated cold of the Arctic has a good start on its yearly journey southward, a fact that presages an early fall, according to some weather experts.

SIR W. COAKER,
President of the F. P. U.

Fought for the Fishermen

Organized the Fishermen of Newfoundland to Better Their Lot — Controls Island Politics — Runs the Co-operative Supply and Marketing Enterprises of His Sea Toilers' Union.

(New York Times.)

Sir William Coaker of Newfoundland is the only man in the world who is both the President of a union and a knight. He is notable in other respects, too. He makes and breaks Governments; he is political tactician, successful industrialist and merchant, orator and agitator of eloquence and power. As the organizer and leader of the Fishermen's Protective Union he has written his name large in Newfoundland history.

In the spray-drenched harbors of the Newfoundland coast flourish councils of the Fishermen's Union. Once a week, when the fishermen are at home from the sea, the councils meet to hear the latest circular letter from President Coaker — "Mr. Coaker," he is to these men, even now that he has been knighted. The circular deals with the important public matters, and through it the thirty thousand members of the F. P. U. are kept informed of affairs at St. John's.

Once in a while a circular will fall into the hands of newspapers opposing the union, and never does such a paper fail to give the contents prominent publicity. In this way most non-union people in the island often get their first inkling of matters of great national interest. The union men have likely heard and discussed the information and advised President Coaker on it weeks before, which will give some idea of the power of the Fishermen's Protective Union.

Coaker's Achievements.

William Coaker founded the union fifteen years ago and has been its President and manager ever since. He has been in practically every fishing settlement and knows every union member. He is leader and spokesman of the Fishermen's Union Parliamentary Party, which, with its ally, the Liberal Party, controls the Government. The Tory Party has thirteen members in the Legislature. The Unionists and their friends, the Liberals, have twenty-three. Prime Minister Warren is a warm friend of Coaker's. Coaker himself is a Cabinet member without portfolio.

But he is rarely in St. John's. His activities centre in Port Union, the town he established a few years ago as a home port for the union and its various industrial and commercial enterprises. There is located the Union Shipbuilding Company which turns out trim wooden vessels for the coastwise and foreign fish-carrying trade. There, too, is the Union Electric Plant that supplies the port and neighboring towns with light, heat and power. And there are the great fish and trading stores of the Union Trading Company and the Union Export Company, all the work of Mr. Coaker. Port Union has the biggest piers in Newfoundland.

The Trading Company collects and exports the largest quantity of codfish of any firm in the world. It has nearly fifty branches in Nfld. bays and harbors. It does annually $4,000,000 worth of business, and it has paid a 10 per cent. dividend every year but one in the last ten years—this in spite of the fact that it pays the fishermen more for their fish than any other merchant and sells them supplies at current price or lower. The Union Export Company markets abroad the fish, oil, lobsters, herring, &c., collected by the trading company.

Coaker is head of the entire works, trading, export, shipbuilding and electric, besides running the Union Publishing Company, which prints a daily newspaper for the fishermen. And his salary as President of the union, manager of the companies and philosopher and guide in general to the whole co-operative movement is $25 a week. Not $25 a week per job, but $25 a week for all the jobs combined.

He won't take any more, though pressed by the union to do so. True, the union has built and furnished a pretty bungalow in Port Union for him; but that and the $25 are his only rewards—except the pride and satisfaction of achievement. Visitors come from all over the world to his bungalow. He takes tremendous pleasure in showing them the town, the living monument that he has built for himself.

A small gasoline boat carries Coaker up and down the coast. His living expenses are negligible, for wherever he goes in all Newfoundland he has friends to put him up and feed him. He vowed long ago to die a poor man, and he seems to be keeping the vow. For the first three years of the Union's existence he would take no compensation whatever. His $1,000 a year as a member of the Legislature he gives to charity. When he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries he contrived to part with his pay in the same way.

Sir William Coaker was never himself a fisherman, although he had considerable experience in various land branches of the codfish industry, Newfoundland's greatest occupation. He was born in St. John's, went to school there, was a newsboy for one of the papers that now attack him bitterly, and worked as a laborer in the fish wharves. Unloading salt dried codfish from vessels at the wharves, he got his first contact with the toilers of the sea.

As a dealer for a fish firm in one of the fishing harbors, as a telegrapher and, later, as a farmer, he thought of the injustices that he had seen on the St. John's waterfront. He knew that codfishing meant life to most of Newfoundland, just as wheat growing does to most of Canada. He knew that the fishermen were subjected to extortion by those who sold them supplies, and to trickery by those who bought their fish. For sixteen years as a farmer on an island in Notre Dame Bay he wondered how the lot of the fishermen could be bettered. At last he conceived his great plan that is now in successful operation.

For generations the fisherfolk had been grubstaked each season by the merchants. In early Spring a fisherman would go to the local dealer and get supplies on credit; flour, beef, oil-skins, lines, hooks, gasoline and oil and enough food to keep his family through the summer while he was away at sea. Custom required him to sell his catch to the merchant, and required the merchant to pay him the current price for his fish—and the current price was always discouragingly low when the fish began coming in. The merchants, with their gentlemen's agreement, saw to that. So the fisherman was caught coming and going. Often, indeed, the difference was against him, so that he ended his year's work in debt.

Fish prices were phenomenally low in the fall of 1908, and the outlook for the coming Winter was black. It was the moment Coaker had waited for. On his island farm he had planned every important move that he has made since. He had even drawn up the constitution that is now the law of the union.

His first step was to organize the fishermen, those quite poor, quite powerless and at last quite hopeless toilers. The fishermen, organized, should import and distribute their supplies and export and market their fish themselves. Then, the better to effect direly needed reforms, they should go into politics as a party and make a fight for representation in the Legislature.

Coaker Builds the Union

Coaker held his first meeting at the small hamlet of Herring Neck. His idea caught the imagination of the fishermen. He moved on to the next harbor and held another meeting, and again he got a response. Thence to many other harbors he went all that Fall and Winter, and by Spring he had councils in dozens of settlements.

By the second Spring the news of his doings had reached St. John's, and the merchants and the newspapers were turning on him furiously, for he had orgnaized thousands of fishermen and things did not look so funny. Those newspapers still attack him.

The initiation fee in the union was 10 cents a man. The expenses of the union were small. Coaker took no pay until, after the third year, he saw that the movement demanded all his time; and then, giving up his farm, he would accept only $50 a month salary from the new organization. Amid a great uproar from all sides the union grew to a membership close to 30,000. Coaker founded a little newspaper to circulate among the fishermen, writing most of it himself. There was no limit to his capacity for work. In one year he wrote, with his own hand, 3,000 letters.

In the election of 1913 the union put up several Assembly candidates and every one was returned victorious, with Coaker himself at the head of the bloc. Sir Edward Morris was then head of the Tory Government. He had a hot and uncomfortable time of it, for Coaker and Sir Robert Bond, leader of the Liberals, entered into a rough co-operation in their common opposition to the Tories.

Coaker put through the famous Loggers' bill, revolutionizing conditions in the lumber camps, and the Sealers' bill, which was a new Magna Charta to the thousands of fishermen who go to the icefields to hunt seals. These measures he forced through the House by dint of the most obstreperous filibustering tactics ever known in Newfoundland. He would talk until Morris would groan and give in. Coaker can deliver a mighty speech; but he doesn't need to resort to oratory any more.

After the war the old Liberal Party had disappeared from the lower house, and the only opposition was the fishermen's group under Coaker. So the Hon. R. A Squires, a member of the Upper House (which is non-elective, like the House of Lords in England), reorganized the Liberal Party. At the general election of 1919 the Liberal-Unionists swept the country, Squires became Prime Minister, and Coaker, busy man though he was in his manifold union activities, took a seat in the Cabinet. As Minister of Marine and Fisheries he would be in a position to lead the fight for the epochal fish regulations which he intended to introduce.

Coaker's Hardest Fight.

Those regulations aimed at something approaching nationalization of the codfish exporting and marketing business. For years the exporting of Newfoundland codfish has been done by forty or fifty competing merchants, who always feel a pressing need to get rid of the fish quickly. The natural result of that selling method is that the European and other markets become glutted every year, the price slumps, and all Newfoundland suffers.

The cure Coaker says, is to regulate the exporting. He would have a governmental board of control say when a cargo should leave, to what port it should be shipped, and how much the minimum acceptable price for it should be. He has some of the biggest exporters with him in the idea, for they know well the harm that lies in unrestricted competition.

But the Tories have fought the regulations bitterly. It is charged that they have even importuned the dealers in England to refuse to buy Newfoundland codfish and in this way help them break Coaker's popularity and power and restore the political status quo.

As a result of the furore stirred up by Coaker's political enemies the regulations have had to be lifted after a two years' trial. But Coaker is still working for a better system, believing that it will mean a blessing to the island.

Coaker and the Fishermen's Protective Union are stronger than ever before.

Strike Plans Abandoned Because of Rival Union's Opposition

"If music be the food of love, play on," or words to that effect, was the decision reached by the Musicians' Mutual Protective Union, Local 310, after a stormy meeting Sunday night at which they called off the strike which threatened to close New York theatres yesterday.

The union postponed the strike until it gains control of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians which opposed the strike. President Mulieri of the M. M. P. U. said a million-dollar defense fund would be raised.

NEW YORK COLORSCOPES

By MARY MARGARET McBRIDE

New York City.—Almost every day there is a thrilling race among the ships which bring immigrants to this country from Europe. Most of the steerage passengers have sold their all and staked their hopes on getting into the Promised Land. Yet, if the quota from their country is filled when they land, they will be sent back.

The stories, therefore, which come from the island are often sad ones. But recently there slipped out one that had the happiest of happy endings.

Three strapping Poles and their families arrived to try farming in Minnesota. They had written an aunt in this country to meet them at Ellis Island. When they arrived they found her as they expected but with her was a stranger, a gray-haired eager-eyed man who looked longingly at them and then burst into tears. The aunt went, too, as she explained that the old man was their father.

Twenty years before he had gone to America after a disagreement with their mother. The mother, who got a divorce and married again, told the children their father was dead and in all that time he had no communication with them until he heard from his sister that they were bound for his adopted land.

Theodore H. Price, financier and publisher, is known through all New York as the demon statistician of Wall Street. He collects figures on extravagances and waste perpetrated by persons playing golf and also records which show the number of men who die on the links each year from over-exertion. In addition, he has worked out a chart to prove how much each minute of a business man's busy day is worth.

"In going in for this golf statistics thing, I have undertaken a task that is unpleasant," he admitted, "because so many of my friends are misguided enough to think they are golfers. But if I can only save a few of them from the death they are courting, I shall gladly brave their displeasure."

The high-brows have a restaurant all their own in Carnegie Hall building. You get in by card and once you're in, you eat what's set before you or get out. Writers, singers, cartoonists and actors are the daily patrons, meekly consuming the number of calories that the proprietress of this unique eating-shop thinks each needs. No meat is served and none can be obtained by bribery or threats, but the place is always filled and if you want to obtain a card you must put yourself on a waiting list, remaining there presumably until some card-holder dies or otherwise leaves the city.

Virginia Pope's summer hotel for birds is doing a rushing business. Cockatoos, parrots, canaries, magpies and many varieties of songsters are her guests. They swing on their little private perches in the sunny aviary all day and fill the house with their cries. One parrot sings "You've Got To See Mama Every Night" and other popular songs, with a southern accent.

Miss Pope entertains many of the same birds every summer when their owners go away to the seashore and mountains. She has kept the bird hotel for years and says it is the most interesting business in the world, though she admits her guests are sometimes as temperamental as human beings.

It looks as if "Home, Sweet Home" might soon be only a tradition in this city of kitchenettes and table d'hote restaurants. Or so a recent survey of the ambitions of school girls has led thoughtful spirits to fear. Out of some ten thousand girls who were asked what they hoped to become, only twenty-five said anything about marriage.

Of this twenty-five, one added, "And I'd like to have six children." Five out of the remaining twenty-four announced that marriage would not interfere with their having other careers. Many wanted to be actresses, but mostly they leaned toward "Big Business" careers, where, they noted, the "salaries are large and the opportunities practically unlimited."

This is a story I did not believe until I was shown and even now I can only tell what I saw.

Vaudevillians, it seems, have added onions—preferably Bermuda ones, to the array of stage necessities contained in the makeup box. The reason for this is the prevalence of the "cry" songs—"Why Should I Cry Over You," "Every Night I Cry Myself To Sleep Over You," and the like. These songs have become so numerous and so popular with audiences that even experienced actors find themselves worn out producing natural tears. Glycerine they say is impractical on the stage. So they have called upon the old, homely onion as a tear-maker, relying upon its well-known persuasive powers when folded in a handkerchief to turn on the lachrymal faucet.

GIANT PLANE EXCEEDS HOPES ON FIRST FLIGHT

The wildest dreams of its designer and other air service officials were surpassed by the Barling bomber, the world's largest airplane, in its maiden flight at Wilbur Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio. The ease with which the dreadnaught of the air was maneuvered, both on the ground and in flight and the slow "take-off" and landing speeds, was the chief feature of the performance. This was the most promising maiden flight ever undertaken by any air craft. Walter Barling, an Englishman, is the designer of the ship. Compare the giant of the air with the two average sized men standing beside her.

Brotherhood of Railway Employees Convention

CALGARY, Sept. 17 (By Canadian Press).—Characterizing the United States Railway Labor Board as "a greater menace to railway employees than any other combination of individuals on the North American continent," A. R. Mosher, President of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes, in his address at the Biennial convention of that body here this afternoon, expressed satisfaction that the organization he headed had been the first to succees in breaking some of the United States Board's power to determine wages in this country.

The president of the brotherhood called upon the membership to meet the appeal of the Canadian Government for co-operation towards making the National Railways a success. While expressing the view that the deficits facing the Government lines resulted through "too much of the money spent in building finding its way into the pockets of contractors and crooked politicians," Mr. Mosher pointed out that failure to secure the successful operation of the railways would undoubtedly throw still heavier burdens upon the backs of the workers of Canada and employes of the Government system in particular.

Service and publicity were recommended to the brotherhood by its president as more satisfactory means of improving working conditions than direct action. "The strike," said Mr. Mosher, "is, in the case of an essential public service like transportation, too powerful a weapon for use in any ordinary circumstances. Furthermore, in the case of the Government lines, the public is both the receiver of the service and at the same time the employer, so that those of us employed on government lines work for the public in a double sense. The way for us to get the best possible wages and working conditions is first, to deserve them, and second let the public know that we deserve them. That is the keynote of our policy in attaining the second of our objectives—best possible wages and working conditions—must be service and publicity. Our golden rule for success, therefore, is this: give the best possible service to the public; strive for the greatest possible improvement of this service; help fellow members and strengthen the brotherhood in every possible way; and make known to the membership and the public what we are doing and trying to do."

Continuing along this line, Mr. Mosher indicated some of the means by which the railway employees could carry out the policy he advocated. He urged them to study wage conditions and felt that experts should be engaged to give attention to economic matters, the collection of data and the compilation of statistical information. He believed there should be systematic collection of railroad data embracing operating figures, financial facts, traffic problems and operating methods. This material, the president thought, should not only be collected but should be digested and made available for general use in terms which could be understood by anyone. If this were done, the brotherhood he felt, would be ready to meet government officials, railway officials or anyone else in the discussion of railroad subjects.

"For example," said Mr. Mosher, "you all know what powerful enemies of public ownership of railroads there are in Canada and what a great volume of propaganda there is to discredit the value of the government lines and to magnify the burden of debt which the ownership of railroads puts upon the citizens of the Dominion. Now you believe, and I believe, and many others believe, that ownership of these railroads is a good thing for Canada. But it isn't sufficient to call the enemies of public ownership liars—we must prove they are wrong if we are to be of any real service either to the people or to ourselves. I am convinced we can prove it but require the assistance of the skilled expert to do it most effectively."

Mr. Mosher reminded the brotherhood that it had repeatedly gone on record as favoring public ownership of railways and other public utilities. Under these circumstances, he argued, it was the duty of the workers to demonstrate the soundness of the principle they advocated insofar as they could with justice to themselves.

The president urged members of the brotherhood to think for themselves and not be satisfied to accept things as presented to them without giving them mature consideration. He deprecated any tendency to unjust criticism within the ranks of the organization but opined that constructive criticism was helpful and much to be desired.

During Mr. Mosher's address he touched on many details of the brotherhood's activities. He felt it was now in the strongest position it had enjoyed since its beginning and that there was every prospect of continued progress.

One of the first subjects touched upon by the president after he had made his introductory observations was the activities of the United States Railway Labor Board which he criticised at some length. He accused the American tribunal of aiding railway managements "in their attacks upon the pay envelopes of the workers." Referring to the board he said: "It is a United States Government tribunal which has made itself ridiculous in the eyes of every right-thinking person on this continent by declaring that a living wage for workers was impractical and impossible."

Mr. Mosher claimed that while the United Sates Railway Labor Board had no direct jurisdiction in Canada, its decisions were being applied in Canada by railways in Canada and that employes in this country were as much affected by its judgments as were the workers across the line.

"The longer I have been on the bench the more certain I have grown that crime is at base a social disease and must be so treated. Personally, I hope to see the time when some medical body like the Rockefeller Foundation will take up this whole subject of crime, cause and crime cure. It is THE great social problem.

"It seems to me that this effort must work about in two ways. First, we must apply every scientific method known to the prevention and abolition of such conditions as breed crime and criminals. Again, such criminals as may crop up in spite of social prophylaxis must be handled by intelligent, modern and scientific methods.

"The whole present system is antiquated, cumbersome and stupid. WE ARE TREATING TWENTIETH CENTURY CRIME AND CRIMINALS WITH SEVENTEENTH CENTURY AGENCIES."

These wise words were spoken by Judge Louis D. Gibbs, New York. Judge Gibbs has tried 99 per cent. of all the felony cases originating in the populous borough of the Bronx of that city since 1914, and in the last nine years he has handled over 10,000 criminal cases.

So, having this experience, and being a man who is interested in studying the causes of crime, his opinion is worth remembering.

THANK GOD FOR FOOLS

Thank God for fools—for men who dare to dream
Beyond the lean horizon of their days;
Men not too timid to pursue the gleam
To unguessed lands of wonder and amaze.

Thank God for fools! The trails that ring the world
Are dark with blood and sweat where they have passed.
Theirs are the flags on every crag unfurled;
Theirs—ashes and oblivion at last.

Blunder, fumbling up the frowning years;
Stumbling through deeps too foul for moon or star;
Hearing—and heeding not—the scoffs, the jeers;
Falling at last while yet the goal was far.

Poor ragamuffin heroes, doomed to fail,
And leave their bones beneath ironic skies,
They never knew their wandering blazed the trail,
Their blunders taught their wisdom to the wise!

Thank God for fools—absurd and blind and great.
We rear our temples on the stones they laid,
Ours is the prize their tired souls might not wait;
Theirs—the high requiem of the unafraid!

Here is news of great interest. The famous Dr. Voronoff, gland specialist, has a plan of breeding a new race of what might be called super-sheep, which will yield wool sixteen inches long! His confident expectations are based on the success of experiments he has performed on rams.

France, quick to appreciate the importance of the possibility, plans to take advantage of the great scientist's discovery or invention—whichever it is! That country is now importing about 2,000,000 franc's worth of wool annually, mostly from England and Australia. Her idea is to transform this excess of imports into an export surplus, by increasing her own production of wool by 1,000 per cent.

The man who laughs at science is a fool or an ignoramus.

Fear is expressed by some in Canada that if the proposed union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches takes place, it will become such a powerful orginization as to force itself into the position of "State Church,"—not in name, of course, but actually. The proposed union would bring together 29.56 per cent. of the total population of the country, the new body to be known as the United Church of Canada. The "Basis of Union," a document outlining the terms of union, was approved in 1911 by the latter two churches, while the Presbyterian General Assembly recently went in favor of it by 426 votes to 129 against.

Two points strike me about this matter. It is a fine thing, I think, to see people of different beliefs getting together—it is a sign of toleration, and so far as those getting together are concerned, it will eliminate bigotry. Of course, if the newly organized body simply combined in one force the bigotry and intolerance possessed by a certain minority of each of them, and instead of that bigotry being directed against each other was directed against some remaining body, it would be most undesirable. What I mean is this; suppose that in each of these three churches there were a number of people who were bigoted and intolerent, and that their bigotry was expressed for one another. That would be bad. Now, if they decided to get together in one body, it would have the happy result of eliminating that bigotry, so far as hating one another was concerned. But if the combined bigotry of all three was now directed against some other body, the situation would be worse than ever. Someone might reply: "Yes, but that only proves that the next step ought to be the further union of the remaining bodies of opinion.

And I reply that if all the people of a country were united in one church, and therefore believed the same thing, you would have a deadly unanimity and uniformity and standardization of thought and belief that would cause fatal sterility. No, there must be differences of thought and ideas—standardization of machine parts, fish cull, and such material things, but not standardization of ideas! I fear that if the elimination of bigotry depends on all the people of a country getting together in one church, and believing all the same, then bigotry will never be eliminated. Because, supposing that all the people of a country did get together and did believe the same, and bigotry were eliminated between them (and it's a great stretch of imagination to suppose such things!) the bigots would soon find someone to hate, find some outlet for their bigotry; they would turn to some other country and hate the people of that country with all the bitterness they use now in hating the people of other faiths.

* * * * *

For, remember, the basis of bigotry is the basis also of junkerism or jingoism, or to use a word more familiar, of one people's hatred for another people. That basis is ignorance, unenlightment, misinformation.

In Newfoundland, unfortunately, there is a sad profusion of bigotry and intoleration; fanned and kept burning by politicians, as it undoubtedly is, and is made possible only by ignorance.

Mind, I do not claim that an educated man is not bigoted or intolerant. Often he is. But his bigotry is not religious bigotry, in ninety-nine cases out of 100. And the rottenest, most despicable and reprehensible kind of bigotry in the world is religious bigotry.

Remember that good manners are the result of right thought, and is a sure sign that you are striving to treat the other fellow as you would have him treat you.

What we are to-day is the result of our past thinking, as right thinking results in right action. So your future depends on your present.

Newfoundlanders Are Suspected Of Complicity In Big Rum-Running Plot

American Authorities May Extend Investigations To This Island.

That the names of prominent Newfoundlanders have been revealed in connection with a gigantic rum-runing syndicate with headquarters in the States, is the story told by a gentleman who arrived here by the Rosalind from New York on Thursday.

For some time past, so the tale goes, the American authorities have been on the trail of one of the most audacious plots to beat the Volstead Act that have been conceived since Prohibition reared it unpopular head in the United States. Large quantities of liquor have recently been going into United States ports, liquor which is known to have its origin neither in St. Pierre nor the West Indies. Large shipments of whiskey bearing the brands of "Old Country" distillers have been flowing in, running successfully in most cases, the blockade established by enforcement officers around the coast.

Where the liquor came from immediately before it arrived in the States was the question puzzling the brains of the authorities who early established the fact that it was not coming in over the border but was being brought along by sea. Canadian ports were watched by eagle eyes, but no clue could be obtained.

Enquiries eventually led the American authorities to turn their eyes towards the Newfoundland coast as a possible explanation of the riddle they had been so long fruitlessly trying to solve and while just what the result of their attention to this Island has been, was not definitely known to our informant, the belief is that with one or more safe and accessable bases on a certain section of our coast, agents have been acting as go-betweens for the American importers of liquor from Old Country distillers. It is said that while this practice has been in vogue for some time, it has increased considerably of late, due to the fact that Canada has "tightened up" on her liquor transhipment business at the lehest of the United States.

It is likely, in view of the developments referred to, that the United States Enforcement and Customs authorities will extend their investigations to Newfoundland in the near future Not alone has this illicit liquor traffic, in which it is alleged, Newfoundlanders are important factors, been setting at naught the efforts of the United States to enforce with any degree of success the dry law, but the practice has resulted in worsting the revenue department to the tune of millions of dollars.

These disclosures may or may not contain the explanation of the fact that in several instances Newfound land captains have been offered commands with berths for crews on vessels whose identities and the nature of their work were in all cases kept more or less surrounded by mystery, but which proved on closer acquaintance to be neither more nor less than blockade runners in the liquor traffic. Further developments in the sensational "case" will be looked for with interest.

Assualt Victim Is Dead

Michael Fewer, the man who it is said was assulted at a dance in Chapel's Cove, Harbor Main, two weeks ago and who has since been unconscious, died at the General Hospital at 7.30 this morning. Since the assault the deceased has been unconscious. He therefore made no statement regarding the unfortunate occurrence.

Western Boat Lost In Gale

The Sub-Collector at Lawn wired the Deputy Minister of Customs yesterday that the boat "Brothers" of Marystown, harboured at L'Anse au Barque in the storm Thursday night, and in the height of the gale broke both chains yesterday morning, and drove ashore, becoming a total loss. The vessel is owned by Thos. Miller, of Marystown, and it is persumed was returning from the fishing grounds when she met with d isaster. The present master is Joseph Mitchell. Only some of the rigging, mainsail and mainmast was saved.

The S.S. Hangerland with 10,000 tons of ore for Sydney and the Oria for Port Talbot with 6500 sailed from Bell Island yesterday.

Holy Cross Anniversary

September 14th is a red letter day in the Calender of Holy Cross Schools Yesterday the anniversary was celebrated in a manner worthy of the occasion. Most of the present and quite a number of the past pupils gathered at the early morning Sacrifice at St. Patrick's Church. Having duly honored the Religious Aspect of the Festival, a holiday was declared and a large number of senior boys assembled in the school whence they motored to the spacious playgrounds of Mt. Cashel where the day was spent in manly games and athletic feats. The boys of Mt. Cashel graced the occasion by discoursing a selection of the classic music for which their band is deservedly famous. Needless to say the courtesy of the Mt. Cashel Community was highly appreciated. During the day the presence of some of the ex-pupils made the re-union all the more memorable. At 6 p.m. return was made to the city, and there was unanimity of feeling that the 1923 Festival of the Old School was the best yet.

Goes Insane Because Widow Refused Him

A 23 year old man residing on Mundy's Pond Road was taken in charge by the police last night because of the strange manner in which he has been acting. He was examined by Dr. Anderson this a.m. who pronounced him insane. The principal cause given why the young man has been acting in an irresponsible manner of late is said to be that he became enamoured a charming young widow with three children who did not reciprocate his inclination towards the matrimonial venture.

POLICE COURT

An ordinary drunk was discharged.

A husband, arrested at the instance of his wife, who says he has been drinking for months and will not work, was given one more chance. He was placed under a bond of $100. for his future good behaviour, a condition of which is that he must keep sober. If again brought before the Court he will be given a jail sentence. The wife says she will apply for a separation.

Two Young Girls Sentenced To Ten Days For Disorderly Conduct

The needs of a reformatory again presented themselves in a forcible manner in the Police Court this morning when Mr. McCarthy was obliged to sentence two young girls of the city to a term of ten days in the Penitentiary. At the hearing, which was in camera, the girls aged respectively 18 and 14 years gave evidence of degeneracy which was shocking to find in girls so young. They appeared lost to any sense of moral rectitude. One, the younger of the two, appeared to be crazy, but Dr. Anderson who later examined her says no. Here is a case where segregation is absolutely necessary. The sad part of this affair is that both girls have parents, a police officer was sent to investigate this a.m. when he was told that one was thought to be at the other's house when they did not go home last night, subsequently the parents arranged to pay the $5.00 fine. There can be no doubt of the crying needs for a reformatory for boys and girls in St. John's. Misdirected efforts of well-meaning people would find a worthy work right here in creating such a wave of public opinion in favor of a reformatory as would make those whose obligation it is to provide such an institution to get down to their duty without further delay.

St. Bon's Trophies

Kearney's window yesterday was the centre of attraction for passers-by The mass of silverware, gold medals, and photos, with the tasteful decorations drew hundreds of citizens to view one of the best collections of trophies ever seen in the city. The College colors, Blue and Old Gold was prominent and the whole scheme of decoration justly earned for the genial George the congratulations showered upon him.

Prominent in the display was a beautiful set of Gold medals won by the College hockey team last winter. These were the gift of Mr. John McGrath, an ex-pupil, and one of the best all round athletes of the many St. Bon's boys who have made names for themselves in the field of sport. The medals are the best obtainable. On one side is a miniature of Burton's pond, while on the other is inscribed the donor's name and the name of the fortunate winner.

In this connection there is a coincidence worth noting. The day the St. Bon's won the championship. Rev. Bro. Strapp received a letter from Mr. McGrath, telling him he was donating medals to the winning team. Bro. Strapp had the pleasure of thanking Jack in person some few weeks ago when he met him in New York during a vacation.

Mr. McGrath is fast coming to the fore. At present he is President of the Inter-State Fish Corporation with branches at Boston, Gloucester and Rockport, Maine. Mr. Strapp also had the pleasure of meeting several other ex pupils in the persons of Fred Collins, Nix Duchemin, Walter Godden, all of whom are doing well, and fast making substantial progress in their respective professions. Brother Strapp was given a real Newfoundland welcome at the home of Mr. Collins, where old college days were revived and many a good laugh indulged in.

The collection of Trophies displayed at Kearney's is one St. Bon's may well feel proud of, and to Rev. Bro. Strapp, in no small measure, is due the credit for the magnificant collection referred to. He has taken a deep and keen interest in athletics and his work has not been in vain.

Making Good Road

The badly reeded repairs to Long's Hill have at last been undertaken and judging from the present progress of the work, this important thorofare will be made into a splendid road. For months the hill from Harvey Road to Queen's Road has been in a wretched condition and while it was, perforce, the most used street leading from the Higher Levels to the business section of the city, it was the least suitable of all the city streets for either pedestrians or motor traffic. We trust the Council will extend the good work to other streets.

The S.S. Kriton has entered at Port Union.

ITALY BOMBARDS CORFU

Old fortress of Corfu, recently seized by the Italian Navy. Corfu is a Greek Island in the Ionian Sea, the town of Corfu being the capital. Its strategic importance of the Island is made by its entrance to the Adriatic, and it was a base for Allied naval forces during the war. It was the seat of the former Kaiser's summer palace.

Independent — But Loyal

(Morning Post)

The Dominion of Canada is virtually an independent nation. Canada alone among the Dominions has concluded a treaty—the halibut fishery treaty—with the United States independently of the British Government. But Canada attained her position under the wise guidance of British Ministers and by virtue of the cordial help of the British Government. By reason of the existence of the Royal Navy, Canada, until the Great War, has never had to deal with a foreign enemy. Under the protection of England, with England's men and England's money, she has founded her civilization and has begun—but only begun—to develop her immense natural wealth. For more than half a century Canada has been a Dominion. She owes her superb position in the Empire alike to her own efforts, and to the unfailing support of Great Britain. That, apart from politics, Canadians as a whole regard their place in the Empire and their relation to the Mother Country with pride we believe to be the fact.

NOTICE

Prince As Engineer

Was at Trottle as C. P. R. Train Pulled Into Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 16—When Lord Renfrew, the Prince of Wales, arrived in Winnipeg Saturday, he came as a Canadian Pacific railway engineer.

At Whitemouth, 80 miles east of here, the Prince ordered the train stopped and announced to the locomotive driver that for the rest of the journey he wished to be at the throttle.

Although dressed in an ordinary suit of tweeds, he mounted the cab just ts the famous Casey Jones did. Just so he might not "step on it too hard," Thomas Ward, the official engineer, stood behind him and checked up the steam gauge and other little things.

The S.S. Cranley arrived at Botwood on Saturday from Landon in ballast, and will load paper for the A.N.D. Company.

33,767 Dead, And 120,000 Missing Is Tokio's Loss

OSAKA, Sept. 16—Final figures tabulated by the prefecture of Tokio on the earthquake casualties, place the dead in Tokio at thirty-three thousand, seven hundred and sixty-seven, in addition to one hundred and twenty thousand persons missing.

It is estimated that more than a million refugees have left the capital for the surrounding country.

While the material loss through earthquake, fire and tidal wave was tremendous, the country is not so badly hit as at first appeared. The damage caused in the neighborhood of Tokio represents less than one quarter of Japan's productive plants, as the chief spheres of industrial activity are situated elsewhere.

Fiume Treaty Is Registered With League

Italy's Ultimatum Is Extended. All Danger of Hostilities Is Removed.

LONDON, Sept. 16—An exchange Telegraph despatch from Geneva says that it officially announced that both Italy and Jugo-Slavia have agreed to register with the League of Nations, the Treaty of Rapallo of the two nations.

LONDON, Sept. 15—Italy's notice to Jugo-Slavia with respect to the Fiume problem, sometimes referred to as an 'ultimatum,' which was due to expire to-day, has been extended according to official quarters here.

It is stated that diplomatic negotiations regarding Porto Barros and the Delta there, immediately adjacent to Fiume, will continue on the basis of some new Italian proposals, the nature of which is as yet unknown. All danger of hostilities between Italy and Jugo-Slavia has been removed, British officials believe.

LONDON, Sept. 16—Five thousand persons are reported to have perished in the floods which followed upon the typhoon at Trotti, north west of Kobe, Japan, on Saturday, according to an Osaka despatch to the Central News.

OSAKA, Sept. 15—A typhoon broke over the mainland to-day. The ships carrying relief materials, took refuge near the coast.

The town of Tottori, north west of Kobe, is reported to have been inundated.

A SOUND POLICY

Jonannesburg Times: The world needs trade recovery more than reparations. In any case there cannot be reparations without trade recovery, and a policy which aims at bleeding Germany to death and making her pay her debts at the same time is obviously impossible. South Africa's interests clearly lie in giving support to Great Britain's policy, which is sound, reasonable and practical.

Two Vessels Are Lost

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 15—The steamer Hancock County, operating between Mobile and Windward Islds., arrived yesterday, bringing survivors from the United States schooner Egalite, of New York, lost off Trinidad several days ago.

The vessel also brought news of the Vimy, a sister ship to the Egalite; the two schooners going down within a short time of each other.

Whether any lives were lost when the Vimy went down, was not stated.

The Egalite was making her maiden voyage. Her survivors told of terrible suffering during several days in an open boat at sea before they reached San Dominican City and were finally taken on board the Hancock County.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXVII.

"No, I've only come to stay a minute, Mr. Daney. Thank you, sir. I—I notice you're running a light track from the drying-yard to the Sadust Pile. Stumbled over it in the dark a few minutes ago, and I——" He essayed a ghastly smile, for he desired to remove the sting from the gentle rebuke he purposed giving the general manager—"couldn't seem to remember having ordered that track—or—suggesting that it be laid."

"Quite so, Donald; quite so," Daney answered. "I did it on my own initiative. Nan Brent has abandoned the Sawdust Pile—moved away from Port Agnew, you know; so I decided to extend the drying-yard, and squat on the Sawdust Pile before some undesirable took possession of it."

"I see. Well, suppose Nan takes a notion to return to Port Agnew, Mr. Daney. She'll find our drying-yard something of a nuisance, will she not?"

"Ah, then, Nan called on you again?"

Mr. Daney sighed.

"No, I called upon her."

"With reference to what?"

"To settle with her for the loss of the Brutus."

"When did you lose the Brutus?"

Mr. Daney pulled at his ear, gazed at the porch light, rubbed his Adam's apple and gave the exact date.

"What happened to the Brutus?"

"She just disappeared, Donald. She was tied up alongside the barge——"

The heavy hand on Mr. Daney's shoulder tightened a little. Donald was merely holding fast to the general manager in order to stay on his feet, but Mr. Daney credited him with being the victim of rising anger.

"When did Nan leave Port Agnew, Mr. Daney?"

"Let me see, Donald. She left two weeks ago yesterday. Yes; she left on the nineteenth."

"On the sixteenth," Daney answered glibly.

"How much?"

"Twenty-five hundred dollars. It was more than the Brutus was worth, but I disliked to appear niggardly in the matter, Donald. I knew you and your father would approve whatever sum I settled for—and the loss of the little boat provided a nice opportunity for generosity without hurting the girl's pride."

"Yes—thank you, Mr. Daney. That was kind and thoughtful of you." Donald spoke the words slowly as if he searched his brain carefully for each word and then had to coax his tongue into speaking it. "You settled, then, two days after the boat disappeared. Fast work. Nobody up here would steal the boat. Too much distance between ports—run short of gasoline you know, on her limited tank capacity—and if anybody bought gasoline around here to load on deck, you'd know of it. Hard to conceal or disguise a forty-foot boat, too." His fingers closed like steel nippers over Mr. Daney's shoulder. Where did you hide the boat, Mr. Daney? Answer me. I'll not be trifled with."

"I scuttled her—if you must have the truth."

"I knew you wouldn't lie to me. On whose orders, Mr. Daney? My father's?"

"No, sir; it was my own idea." Daney's face was white with mental and physical distress and red with confusion by turns. His shoulder was numb.

"Why?"

"I figured that if the girl had some money to make a new start elsewhere, she'd leave Port Agnew, which would be best for all concerned."

"Why, Andrew Daney, you old hero! Cost you something to confess that, didn't it? Well—I guessed you or my father induced her to go, so I concluded to start the investigation with you." He passed his hand over his white dripping brow before resuming what he had to say. "The Tyee Lumber Company isn't equipped to carry on its payroll Mr. Donald McKaye and the man who interferes in his private affairs, even though actuated by a kindly interest. You rip up that track you're laying and leave Nan's home alone. Then you clean up your desk and hand me your resignation. I'm sick—and your damned interference hurts. Sorry; but you must go. Understand? Nan is coming back—devilish hot night—for this time of year, isn't it? Man, I'm burning up."

It came to Mr. Daney that the young laird was acting in a very peculiar manner. Also, he talked that way. Consequently, and what with the distress of being dismissed from the McKaye service in such cavalier fashion, the general manager decided to twist out from under that terrible grasp on his shoulder.

Instantly, Donald released from this support, swayed and clutched gropingly for Mr. Daney's person.

"Dizzy," he panted. "Head's on strike. Mr. Daney, where the devil are you? Don't run away from me. You damned old meddler, if I get my hands on you I'll pick you apart.—yes, I will—to see—what makes you go. You did it. Yes, you did— even if you're too stupidly honest—to lie about it. Glad of that, though, Mr. Daney. Hate liars and interfering duffers. Ah—the cold-blooded calculation of it—took advantage of her poverty. She's gone—nobody knows—May heaven curse your soul to the deepest hell— Where are you? I'll kill you—no, no; forgive me, sir—Yes, you've been faithful, and you're an old employee—I wish you a very pleasant good-evening, sir."

He stepped gingerly down the three wide stairs, pitched forward, and measured his length in a bed of panzies. Mr. Daney came down, struck a match and looked at his white face. Donald was apparently unconscious; so Mr. Daney knelt, placed his inquisitive nose close to the partly open lips, and sniffed. Then he swore his chiefest oath.

"Hell's bells and panther tracks! He isn't drunk. He's sick."

Fifteen minutes later, the young Laird of Port Agnew reposed in the best room of his own hospital, and Andrew Daney was risking his life motoring at top speed up the cliff road to the Dreamerie with bad news for old Hector. Mrs. McKaye and the girls had retired, but The Laird was reading in the living room when Daney entered unannounced.

Od Hector looked up at his general manager from under his white, shaggy brow.

"Ye, Andrew," he saluted the latter gently, "I see by your face it's not welcome news you bring. Out with it, man."

So Andrew came "out with it," omitting no detail, and at the conclusion of his recital, the old man wagged his head to emphasize comprehension.

"My son is not a dull man by any means," he said presently. " He knows what he knows—a man sure of himself always—and oh, Andrew, man, because of the brain of him and the sweet soul of him, it breaks my heart to give pain to him. And what does the doctor say?"

"From a cursory examination he suspects typhoid fever."

"Ah, that's bad, bad, Andrew."

"The boy has the strength of a Hercules, sir. He'll beat through, never fear."

"Well, he'll not die to-night, at any rate," old Hector answered," and I can do no good puttering around the hospital to-night. Neither would I alarm his mother and the girls. Send for the best medical brains in the country, Andrew, and don't quibble at the cost. Pay them what they ask. 'Twill be cheap enough if they save him. Good night, Andrew, and thank you kindly." He stood up and laid his hand affectionately upon the shoulder of his faithful servant and walked with him thus to the door. "My good Andrew," he murmured, and propelled the general maneger outside, "there's no need to worry over the dismissal. When the lad's well, he'll recind his order, so, in the meantime, do not leave us."

"But if he shouldn't recind it?" Daney pleaded anxiously. Although he was comfortably fixed with this world's goods and had long since ceased to work for monetary reward, the Tyee Lumber Company was, nevertheless, part of his life, and to be dismissed from its service was akin to having some very necessary part of him amputated.

"Tush, man; tush! Don't be building a mare's nest," old Hector answered and closed the door upon him. For The Laird was losing control of himself and he could not bear that any human eye should gaze upon his weakness.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE MORNING following Donald's admittance to the hospital, the company doctor confirmed his original diagnosis that the patient was suffering from typhoid. The disease had evidently been two weeks incubating, for the woods boss reported that his superior had complained of being "under the weather" for ten days before yielding to the former's repeated advice to go down to Port Agnew and have the doctor look him over. As a result of Donald's stubborn refusal to acknowledge his illness, the disease had reached a fair stage of development by the time he received medical attention.

He was not delirious when The Laird and Mrs. McKaye reached the hospital that morning, however, and they were permitted to see him for but a few minutes only.

"Has he a fighting chance?" old Hector demanded bluntly of the doctor. It seemed to him that his son's face already wore the look of one doomed to dissolution at an early date.

"Yes, he has, Mr. McKaye," the doctor replied gravely; "provided he'll fight. You will understand that in typhoid fever the mortality rate is rather high—as high as thirty per cent. However, in the case of Donald, who is a husky athlete, I should place the odds at about ten to one that he'll survive an attack of even more than moderate severity. That is," he added, "under the most favorable conditions."

CANADIAN CHAMPIONSHIP MEET

Newfoundland Representatives Were In Poor Form

O'Toole Drops Out of Five Mile Event — Bell Comes Fourth in Five Mile, and Burnell Fourth in One Mile Walk.

THE FAILURE of our boys to make a better showing than they did, in the All-Canadian meet at Halifax, is not to be wondered at, when we consider the conditions under which they entered the various contests. As the results proved, they were up against speedier opponents, but it must be conceded that neither of our entrants were fit physically to give out their best efforts.

The Newfoundlanders struck a stormy trip to Halifax. O'Toole, especially was in no condition. Besides suffering from sea-sickness, he also developed a boil on his right leg. In the second lap of the race he collided with another runner, and in the 11th lap he was obliged to withdraw.

Burnell was not in the class of Granville of Hamilton, Ont. who, according to records, covered the mile in 6.54, while our best walkers have never been able to do better than 8 minutes.

The Maritime Provinces on the whole, did very little better than Newfoundland, the honors going to Upper Canadian Provinces, Toronto leading the list and Montreal coming second.

As an example of the class of athletes who competed, it may be cited that Francis, of Charlottetown, won the mile in 4.35 1-2; McKay, Toronto, carried off the half-mile in 2.02 1-2 seconds, and the hundred yards was won by Vince, Toronto, in 10 seconds flat.

In the city, the results were eagerly awaited, and during the afternoon many hundreds gathered at the Anglo office to follow the various bulletins that were issued through the courtesy of the Superintendent.

Saturday night, the following message, which speaks for itself, was received by Secretary P. J. Grace of the A.A.A., from Mr. Stan Cullen, who accompanied the Newfoundland trio as trainer:

"There were seven competitors in the mile walk. Sawler, the favorite, took the lead at the start, but was overtaken by Granville, who held it to the finish. Metten, 2nd.; Shell, 3rd.; Burnell, 4th; Time 6.57. Burnell's time, 7.56.

"In the five-mile, O'Toole took the lead, and as McAulay passed, fell in behind him, Bell Running seventh. In the second lap O'Toole was accidentally struck on the sore leg and fell. When he got going again he was 12th. The order of the first mile was: McAulay, Ladrierre, Ray, with Bell still seventh. The second mile finished with McAulay, Ledrierre, Ray, and Bell 7th and O'Toole 8th. The positions in the 3rd mile was Ray, Ledrierre, McAulay, with Bell 5th. In the 11th lap, or 4th mile, O'Toole gave up the race, which finished with Ray 1st, McAulay 2nd, Wright 3rd, Bell 4th, Ledrierre 5th. Ray beat McAulay by 200 yds, and was in good form. He lapped everybody but McAuley, Wright and Bell. Ray's time was 26.18. McAulay's 26.48, and Bell 27.25. Ray ran a great race and is a beautiful runner. O'Toole had a boil on his right leg; others of team in good health and send thanks to A.A.A for messages of encouragement. We all regret could not do better. Sports were well run, and team received every courtesy."

Hammer Throw—Steve Kennedy.

Prospero Arrives From Northward

The Northern Coastal steamer Prospero, Capt. J. Field, arrived in port at 5.30 p.m. yesterday. The ship had fairly good weather on the passage but was delayed somewhat by fog, otherwise the trip was uneventful. The Prospero reports fish still plentiful on the French Shore, and the fishermen in this section are still adding to their already large catches.

The weather has been very foggy of late and the fishermen are now looking for good weather in order to prepare their fish for market.

The fishery in Green Bay has shown no improvement; it is the worst in the history of the Bay

When the Prospero was coming south a large steamer was loading pitprops at Jackson's Arm, and will be leaving there during the next couple of days.

The Prospero brought a full cargo of fish and oil as well as some 300 barrels of berries and the following passengers:—Messrs. N. Piercy, Rev. Reid, R. J. Cann, P. Bromley, F. B. Boone, F. Thistle, J. W. White, Colbourne, W. Brett, E. Brett, Rev. Fr. Casey, J. Brett, C. V. Leslie, J. Kenney, D.Scott, R. G. Winsor, W. Tiller, Roberts, J. Carter, George Field, Tomin, Dr. Fitzgerald. Lieut. Col. Bernard, S. Elliott, J. Lockyer, A. Ebsary; Mesdames, Bungay, Reid and 2 children; Taafe, Brett, Kelly, Scammell and boy, Vatcher and boy, Carter, House, Courage, Wiseman, Shute; Misses Garrett, Gale, Knight, Thistle, Strong, Murcell, Cox, Brett, Parsons, Casey, Wylie, Blackler, Wells, Penney, Scammell, Tuff, Winsor Coaker, Cousins, Duder, Miller (2); Fitzgerald, Stone,, Field, Stone, House Miffin and 49 second class. The Prospero sails North again on Wednesday, at 10 a.m., and freight is now being received at the Coastal wharf.

Tag Day on Saturday

CONSIDERING the condition of the weather, Tag Day was very successful indeed. Miss Furlong and rMs. Hutchings had the districts well lined up, and all the taggers were on the grounds on time.

Up to 11 o'clock the weather had become worse, and consequently, a great many taggers got wet, and had to give it up.

There were one hundred and twenty taggers in all.

At 3.30 o'clock the Finance Committee, Messrs W. J. Higgins, H. Cowan, and J. R. Williams commenced their job of opening the boxes. The largest box being brought in was the one by Miss H. Wills, $40.36, followed by Mrs. J. W. Tessier, $23.81, and E. F. Crowdy, $21.89. The other boxes ranging from 15c. up to that amount. The total for the day was $501.35. Had the weather been favorable, there is no doubt we would have reached the objective, which was set at $1000.

Commandant Hurd wishes to heartily thank the Daughters of the Empire and the Girl Guides for the splendid effort put forth in this direction; also the Financial Committee, and Miss McNeil for her kindness in putting her car at the disposal of Miss Furlong for distributing boxes; also Mr. Silverlock, who also put a car at the disposal of Commandant Hurd and will assure them that this is very much appreciated.

The opening of the Hospital will take place on Wednesday, at 3 p.m., conducted by Colonel Cloud. His Excellency the Governor will preside.

Lady Allardyce will declare the building open. The Salvation Army Girl Guides, headed by a band, will form a guard.

His Excellency will open the Garden Party at Lester's Field at 4.15 p.m. The bands of the C.C.C. and C. L.B. by kind permission of their O. C's., will be giving musical programs; also the Salvation Army united bands.

Ladies from various denominations are supplying tables and will serve suppers, while many of the ladies will be supplying candy. There will also be ice cream and refreshments on the grounds. You will all get a hearty welcome; don't forget to patronize the Garden Party.

Wedding Bells

GRANTER—KNEE

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Alban's church, Badger's Quay, B.B., Aug. 14th, at 4 p.m. when Miss Fannie Granter was united in Holy Matrimony to Mr. Frank Knee, an employee of the R.N. Co'y for 7 years on the S.S. Clyde. The bride being the only daughter of the late James B. Granter and Elizabeth Granter of Greenspond. Wilson Humphries did the honors as best man and Miss E. J. Knee, sister of the groom chief bridesmaid, while little Pouline Bragg did honors as flower girl. The bride was attired in white satin trimmed with pearls and bridal veil and carried a boquet of carnations and maidenhair fern. Following the ceremony, the wedding party wended a sumptuous supper was partaken of.

A reception was held at the bungalow, at which the Captain and crew were guests, and presented the bride with a handsome silver tea pot and biscuit barrel.

The presents included severad gold pieces. Their future home will be at Greenspond.

Few Changes

The oldest will in the world was found recently at Kahun, Egypt, by Dr. Flinders Petrie. It is now a part of the archaeological collection of the museum attached to London University.

When the will was found, it was folded vertically and sealed with the impression of a scarab, which typified the resurrection of the soul after death. It was made by an Egyptian named Uah and executed in 2548 B.C., antedating by more than a thousand years the time of King Tut Ankh-Amen. It was written on papyrus.

In his will Uah provided for the disposition of his property, named a guardian for his boy, provided a home for his wife and left instructions as to where he should be buried. The will is remarkable for the clear and definite way in which it expresses the wishes of its maker.

Translation of the Will of Uah.

I, Uah, am giving a title to property to my wife, Sheftu, the woman of Gesab who is called Teta, the daughter of Sat Sepdu, of all things given to me by my brother Ankh-ren. She shall give it to any she desires of her children she bears me.

I am giving to her the Eastern slaves, 4 persons, that my brother Ankh-ren gave me. She shall give them to whomsoever she will of her children.

As to my tomb, let me be buried in it with my wife alone.

Moreover, as to the house built for me by my brother Ankh-ren, my wife shall dwell therein without allowing her to be put forth on the ground by any persons.

It is the deputy Bebu who shall act as guardian of my son.

Done in the presence of these witnesses:

Kemen, Decorator of Columns.
Apu, Doorkeeper of the Temple.
Senb, son of Senb, Doorkeeper of the Temple.

Lord Rothermere insists that the "Royal Air Force" as a separate arm should be abolished. He forsees that in the next war by sea each side will endeavour to destroy the other's battleships from the air, and that chaos will result if the air scouts needed for the sea routes have not been specially trained for naval purposes. It will be worse, he says, than if in a land operation an Air-Marspal were directing the air attack, while a Field Marshal was directing separately the troops on the ground.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

United States Senator Smith W. Brookhard of Iowa, up his return from a tour thru Russia, and the rest of Europe, declared that the Soviet government is without exception the most stable government extant in Europe today.

"The world believes that a small group of Russians is ruthlessly ruling a great and passive majority," he said. "But that is hardly true. Every man, with the possible exception of the dyed-in-the-wool monarchists, are getting a square deal in Russia today."

* * * * *

Lenin, the Senator said, is as firmly entrenched in the hearts of the Russians as is Abraham Lincoln in the hearts of his own countrymen. It is this fact primarily that is responsible for the all-powerful machine that Lenin has been able to build up almost from nothing.

Lenin, who is recognized as the governing genius of Russia, said the Senator, has as his aid Leon Trotsky, who is a business man and financier endowed with all the mental agility of a Kuhn or a Morgan or a Vanderlip.

* * * * *

You can hardly take up a newspaper without reading that Russia is in a terrible state, that the Bolshevists are murderers and tyrants, that people are killed every day, that the mass of the people hate the government, that there is no freedom, that the government oppresses the church, etc.

I delight in printing now and then an item that paints a different sort of a picture about Russia. Remember: it is impossible to get a truthful picture of anything or anyone from reading what the enemies of that thing or person say about them.

* * * * *

Could you get a truthful and fair idea of Coaker from the Daily News and the Telegram? Could you get a fair idea of the F.P. U. from its enemies?

* * * * *

Senator Oscar W. Underwood has tossed his hat into the ring as being a candidate for appointment by the Democratic party as its Presidental candidate in the election next year. He is the first man to so declare himself. Senator Underwood will come out strongly for prohibition and for strict enforcement of the Volstead act.

William G. McAdoo, also mentioned prominently in connection with the Democratic nomination as candidate, isalso a strong prohibitionist.

Calvin Coolidge, thirtieth President of the United States, has declared firmly for enforcement. He is likely to be candidate for President in 1924 for the Republican Party.

The wets in America have slim hopes!

* * * * *

The Jones Bros. Tea Co., U.S.A., which owns a chain of 628 grocery stores, is expanding and plans to add another thousand stores to its chain in the near future. The sales of the present 628 stores for this year will be $35,000,000. (The total revenue of Newfoundland is seven or eight millions—the total imports into the country amount to less than half that amount.) The company now has 6,000 employees, and over 2,000 warrons and automobiles on the road daily. The stores are in 200 cities.

This, you recognize, is another bit of evivdence of the great trend in retailing in the United States today: the trustification or consolidation of merchandizing.

* * * * *

The great productive industries—steel, coal, iron, copper, rubber, leather, tobacco, sugar, fabrics, railroads, steamships, etc.—were trustified long ago, and the trend, so far as they are concerned, is toward trustification of trusts, or the continued amalgamation of existing trusts and corporations.

The trustification of distribution is a newer movement. It will go on untill all the merchandizing field is in the hands of a few individuals. Then the productive and distributive trusts will amalgamate, until eventually, in a few years, the production and distribution of the wealth by which America exists will be owned and controlled by a small but enormously wealthy and powerful group. The American people then will be working for this small group. In return therefor they will get enough to keep them alive, so that they can continue working and breed new children to carry on the good work.

The distributive field in America (as in all countries, of course) is enormously wasteful—for more wasteful than the productive field. This is caused by two facts; the existence of two many stores and the consequent competition between them to get trade. There are 1,500,000 retail stores in that country today, whereas 250,000 would serve the distributive field provided they were efficient stores. That would be a saving of the expenses now incidental to the maintainance of 1,250,000 stores.

The trustification of distribution will cut down the number of stores and increase the general efficiency of distribution. And then, just as now a great corporation like the United Cigar Co., finds it easy to operate 11,000 stores thruout the country, so would a super-trust (the government, say I-) find it easy to operate 250,000 stores! !

The trustification people in the distributive field do not know it, but they are making it easier for the state to take over the business of distributing to the people the things that private enterprise now distributes for private profit.

There is terrible pathos in this poem by Fenton Johnson:

TIRED

I am tired of work; I am tired of building up somebody else's civilization.
Let us take a rest, M'Lissey Jane.
I will go down to the Last Chance
Saloon, drink a gallon or two of gin, shoot a game or two of dice and sleep the rest of the night on one of Mike's barrels.
You will let the old shanty go to rot, the white people's clothes turn to dust, and the Calvary Church sink to the bottomless pit.
You will spend your day forgetting you married me and your nights hunting the warm gin Mike serves the ladies in the rear of the Last Chance Saloon.
Throw the children into the river:
civilization has given us too many.
It is better to die than it is to grow up and find out that you are colored.
Pluck the stars out of the heavens.
The stars marked our destiny
The stars marked my destiny.
I am tired of civilization.

Standard Oil Is Rushing Kerosene To Stricken Nation

An extra force of men was set to work yesterday at the Bayonne plant of the Standard Oil Company loading the steamship Stanley with 1,500,000 gallons of kerosene oil in ten-gallon cans. The rush order came from Japan, and it is expected the ship will be ready to sail about Sept. 15. All the kerosene warehouses in Yokohama were destroyed by the earth quake and fire.

Sebastapol Forced To Return

The S.S. Sebastapol sailed for Fortune Bay, via St. Mary's Bay ports of call, Saturday afternoon, but was obliged to return to port yesterday morning, as the coal that was put on board here was unsuitable and steam could not be kept up on the boilers. The ship only got as far as Bay Bulls when, as it was usless to proceed under such conditions, she returned to port. The coal now in the bunkers will be discharged and the new supplies put on board, after which the Sebastapol will resume her voyage.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, MONDAY, SEPT. 17th., 1923.

Profession And Practice

THE WORK OF UNIONISM IN THE NORTH

There are many people who profess that what this country wants is development. Development of resources means employment for the people. Progress in trade may be taken as indicating national advancement, and the building of business premises, stores, wharves and factories, by whatever people, represents valuable assets to the country.

But professions in those respects do not agree with the practice of many regarding the very actions of the people themselves.

A trip down through the north will convince all and sundry that the Union northern people, who turned their hands to building up a great commercial enterprise, have been successful in placing at upwards of forty centres, splendid businesses doing a large trade with the people.

Around Trinity Bay, Bonavista Bay, Fogo, Notre Dame and St. Barbe Districts, there is a chain of Union stores which turn over some millions of dollars of business yearly, give much employment and benefit the people through competition with other businesses.

While only a comparatively few years in business, these Union men under the leadership of the most abused man in Newfoundland, have built up a commercial headquarters, far and away superior to any business premises in St. John's or outports.

They have performed a service to the country in establishing these assets of commerce. They have given employment continually to many hundreds of men and even built up a town where several hundreds in population, live contented and prosperous lives from Union activities.

The Union Trading Company, the Export, Shipbuilding and Electric Light Companies operating at Port Union demonstrate the ability of the people to do something when they have the necessary leadership.

That they have succeeded in the face of the bitterest opposition should bespeak the utter futility of attempts to discredit their efforts now.

If those who talk of expansion of trade and development of our resources would only consider the great work of Unionism for the last decide, they should adopt a new attitude towards Union undertakings.

A Wealthy Candidate

They say this is the age of business men. In the realm of Government the old diplomacy is replaced by commercial figures. One outstanding instance of this is the case of Prime Minister Baldwin of England: but hear what a New York journal says of the candidacy of Mr. Henry Ford for the Presidency of the Great Republic:

CROESUS IN POLITICS.

Among the thirty citizens whom the American people have raised to supreme executive power less than half a dozen were men of wealth. Only three, possibly four, were worth any considerable portion of a million dollars. None was a millionaire. Most of them were lawyers. Washington, Jefferson, Roosevelt and Harding were men of fortune.

Throughout the years the call for "a business man" to administer the Government has been growing. The foremost of these business men who is a Presidential candidate has just rendered an accounting. In the last year the company which he largely owns has increased its assets from $409,820,133 to $597,339,236, a general rise of about $188,000,000.

It might be assumed that the business man whose enterprise enjoys such financial dominance is the candidate of the "interests." The picture which would be drawn of him by a resident of Mars, picturing the golden heap represented by those ciphers and digits, would be that of a stout, ruddy, hard-faced mortal, garbed in broadcloth, weighted down with watch-chains, seated amid mahogany in Wall Street, with the sound of tickers punctuating his imperial dreams. Not so. The candidate is the adored of Communists, radicals and Ku-Kluxers. He lives not in Wall Street, but in Detroit. His favorite newspaper is not the Wall Street Journal but the Dearborn Independent. For his name is Henry Ford, and the company he owns, which has a fortune greater than the wealth of Ophir and of Ind, is the Ford Motor-Car Company.

Manners and customs change, and man changes with them. Fords, trucks and Lincolns at an average profit of $43.32, with an increase of 800,000 in annual output, are the articles of commerce on which these great assets were realized. The Virginian manors and slaves of Washington and Jefferson, the Manhattan realty of Roosevelt, the prosperous Middle West newspaper plant of Harding, are left forever in the background of popular riches as the wealthiest candidate who ever lived anywhere descends into the lists to do battle for the common man.

JAPAN SWEPT BY EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE

A view of the Imperial Palace, Tokio, Japan, destroyed by fire which followed the severe earthquake and tidal wave that wrought destruction and devastation to a large portion of the island. The disaster was the worst in the history of Japan.

Tokio Just Plain "Hell," Living Hordes Engulfed In Fire, Writes Witness

Crazed, Screeching Fugitives Drop Exhausted in Sea of Flame — Thousands of Corpses Litter Streets —Landslides and Explosions Add to Chaos.

HONOLULU, Sept. 6 (Associated Press).—No other word but "hell" can depict the scene in Tokio during and after the earthquake, according to the Tokio correspondent of the Hawaii Shinpo, who to-day sent from Sendai, Japan, an "eye-witness" story of the disaster.

"The first great quake came at 11.55 a.m. Saturday last," the correspondent said. "It was without warning. Most of the buildings of Tokio collapsed at the first shock. The centre of the quake seemed to be in Tokio and Kanagawa, but it was felt throughout the entire region between Nagoya on the southwest and Aomori on the north, a region comprising virtually the northeastern half of the Island of Hondo.

"The earthquake was preceded by a tremendous landslide along the Sagami coast.

"Fires which followed in the wake of the earthquake were partly due to the incendiarism of Coreans, who applied torches to fallen buildings.

"With the proclamation of martial law, Gen. Fukuda was appointed emergency commander of the Tokio area. Admiral Homaguchi, commander of the Yokosuka naval base, was appointed commander of the area including Yokohama and Yokosuka.

"After the earthquake Tokio was a living hell.

"Crazed, horrified refugees stormed the parks to escape the flames. Those who were too slow or too weak from exhaustion and excitement were soon ovrtaken by the flames, which engulfed them. The fire spread with remarkable rapidity.

"In the chaos and pandemonium children were torn from their parents and wives from their husbands. The surviving populace ran wildly about, helter-skelter, their screeching mingled with the crackling of mountainous flames, explosions and other thunderous noises.

"In a short time thousands of bodies were strewn about the streets. The Imperial gardens and the military barracks throughout the city were opened to refugees. The Cabinet appropriated 9,500,000 yen for relief."

Germany Must Pay For French Accord

Poincare Asserts Economic Pact Demands on Reparations Payment

VERDUN, Sept. 10.—France accepts an economic Accord with Germany as a necessity to both countries in the future, Premier Poincare told an audience at the dedication of war monuments near Verdun Sunday. But an accord can come only after reparations are paid and the Ruhr returned to Germany.

"Any other way of doing it would be as we farmers say—putting the cart before the horse," the Premier said.

Premier Poincare's public answer to Chancellor Stresemann's conciliation speech in Stuttgart last Sunday was madei nsurroundings vividly recalling the four years of battle over eastern and northern France. The Premier stood in the village square of Damvillers with the total population, 300 peasants, gathered about him. Many houses in the village are merely plank shacks thrown up after the armstice to shelter the people, although five years of work has made the shell holes, trenches and fields almost normally productive.

"Last November Chancellor Cuno offered me, through the German Ambassador in Paris, conversations with leading industrialists with a view to reach an accord with French industrialists, since Germany produces coal and we iron and the industrialists of the two countries would have the most to gain by this economic conversation understood before preparing such an accord that they should allow the Government of the republic to obtain in the reparations problem certainties and results.

Newfoundland

Exhibition Pavilion To Cost £12,000,000.

It is announced by the Board of the British Empire Exhibition that the Acting High Commissioner for Newfoundland has nowe received definite instructions to proceed with plans for the erection of a Newfoundland Pavilion in the British Empire Exhibition next year. The cost of the Pavilion is not to exceed £12,000. This decision ensures that every part of the British Empire of any size will now be represented at Wembley.

The High Commissioner for South Africa has accepted the tender of Messrs Sir Robert McAlpine & Sons for the building of the South African Pavilion, and work is to be begun at once. The pavilion is to be completed before the end of September.

The Kenya government has increased the sum allotted for the building of its pavilion from £10,000 to £12,000.

Klan Will Stage 600 Night Shows

Huge Series of Demonstrations to Be Held on Same Night in Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH, Sept 8.—A gigantic series of Ku Klux Klan demonstrations, spread over every city and hamlet in the State, is planned, according to an announcement by a representative of the Imperial Wizard, who is in this city. He said that at least 600 blazing crosses will call Klansmen to meeting places and that 90 per cent. of the members of the Invisible Empire in this State will obey the call.

The Klan representative said there would be no disorder and that Klansmen would not meet with the idea of avenging themselves on their enemies. He did intimate, however, that the recent killings and violence at Carnegie, Steubenville, O., and Wilmington, Del., have aroused Klansmen to a "realization that their rights are being trampled on."

The Knights of the Flaming Circle, declared by its organizers to be the nefesis of the Klan, is gaining recuits rapidly in Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia, since its organization at Kane, Pa., several weeks ago.

It was made public today that the new "secret society" welcomes Catholics, Jews and Negroes as members, but excludes all members of Protestant, churches. It is an avowed anti-Klan organization but does not counsel parades or violence.

All the societies composed of Americans of alien origin who have been invited to join these Knights are said to have accepted en masse.

The House of Commons Mace

The House of Commons Mace has an interesting history attached to it. For a long time it was believed that, when Oliver Cromwell dissolved the Long Parliament and bade a soldier "take away that fool's bauble," the Mace had gone for good. It was said to have been removed to Jamaica and used in the Assembly there.

The facts are that the Charles I. Mace, being an emblem of Royal authority, was removed within a few days after the execution of that monarch, and has not been heard of since. A new Mace was ordered to be made by one Thomas Maundy, and was first used on June 8th, 1649, and it continued in use until Cromwell dissolved the Long Parliament on April 20th, 1653. Its reappearance was made during the Barebones Parliament, and probably during other Commonwealth Parliaments.

On May 21st, 1660, at the Restoration, new Maces were ordered to be made for the two Houses. But this order was not literally carried out. The Commonwealth Maces were converted by carefully eliminating all the emblems and devices of Commonwealth authority and adding the Royal emblems. The shaft of the Mace now in use is, therefore, identically the same as the one Cromwell ordered to be removed in 1653.

It is a tradition that the Mace should be regilt at the end of every Parliament. No business can be done in the Commons without the Mace. It goes away with the Speaker and comes back with him. When the Mace is on the table, the Commons is a House; when under the table, it is a Committee.

"Laurentic's" Gold

Nearly £5,000,000 Salved By Divers — Regained From Depth of 20 Fathoms — Three Years' Work.

WHEN THE White Star vessel "Launentic was torpedoed by a German submarine in January, 1917, 15 miles of the Donegal coast, she carried to the bottom with her about £5,000,000 worth of bullion, consigned by the British Government to American bankers.

As the result of three years' work, nearly all the gold has been recovered by Admiralty divers, and it is expected that the few remaining bars of the value of £300.000 will be brought to the surface before the close of the summer.

A Great Feat

The Laurentic is a vessel of 14,892 tons, and she was torpedoed while serving as an auxiliary cruiser. The ship lies nearly 120 feet below the surface, and for three years, H. M. S. Racer, the Admiralty salvage ship, has been sending down divers to locate and recover the bars of gold and silver specie in the Laurentic's strong room.

In 1921 treasure amounting to £600,000 was regained, but this year the value of the bullion raised reaches nearly £2,000,000. By the end of September, when the work has to be abandoned at the approach of rough winter conditions, it is possible that the last gold bar will have been raised and that the Admiralty will then issue a report of this diving feat successfully accomplished by patient labor and in the face of great difficulties.

Dozen Divers at Work

About a dozen naval divers have been at work this year, and sixty seamen have been employed on surface operations in the Racer. The salvage vessel steams out every day to the buoys which mark the wreck, and at an early hour the first diver descends into the depths. Within a minute his heavily laden dress takes him to the ocean bed, and then the difficult and slow search begins.

Each diver is in telephonic communication with the directors of operations in the Racer, and immediately reports his finds. He carries the silver specie or gold bars—each of which weighs between one and two stone—to the special receptacle in which the bullion is raised, and when a full load has been obtained, the treasure is hoisted on board.

Twenty fathoms is a fair depth for salvage work, and with a pressure of over 53 lbs. to the square inch, the diver can safely remain below for not more than thirty minutes. At such depths the great pressure dissolves nitrogen in the blood, and if this is released by too sudden a reduction of pressure during the ascent, there is a danger of bubbles forming in the heart region and causing death.

33 Minutes to Raise Diver

Thediver's emergence from the sea, therefore, is as slow as his descent is rapid, and 33 minutes should be occupied in raising the man. Three times, at stated depths, there must be pauses, first of five, then of ten, and lastly of fifteen minutes.

Should a diver through loss of weighter equipment or through untoward circumstances be brought out of the water too quickly, the best remedy lies in his quick transference to a compression chamber, in which the balance of pressure is restored. If such an apparatus is lacking, fresh weights must be added and the man thrown back into the sea. The greatest care has been taken to prevent mishaps to the divers searching the Laurentic

The gold and silver recovered are taken in consignments to an English port and conveyed thence under guard, to the Bank of England.

Portia Goes For Fishing Crews

The S.S. Portia is now at the Coastal wharf having taken bunker coal from the S.S. Tres, and will be making a special trip to the Labrador about the latter part of the month to bring up the fishing crews, who will be leaving the coast during the early part of October. On returning the Portia will be docked for repairs.

STESEMANN, BACKED BY TIMID MEN, UNABLE TO AWE BIG BUSINESS GROUP

German Premier, Though Fearless and Supported by Many Small Industrialists, Is Hampered in His Program—Lost Chance for Real Power.

Mr. Dosch-Fleurot, The World's chief Central European correspondent, is now in New York. He is well acquainted with Chancellor Stresemann, subject of the following sketch, and is thoroughly conversant with the situation in Germany at the present moment.

By ARNO DOSCH-FLEUROT.

Gustave Stresemann, Germany's bull-necked Premier, needs the world's sympathy. Whether Germany needs or deserved the world's sympathy is a disputed question, but about Stresemann there can be no doubt. He is a Premier without power, and big business, which has the power, is against him.

He has forced Germany to admit that passive resistance in the Ruhr long has been broken, but that was largely a case of telling the German people an unwelcome truth.

Stresemann's main task is to make the men who have the wealth of Germany in their hands turn over part of it to the Government. Since the war no one has been able to do this, and it is questionable whether Stresemann can do so, even with the disruption of Germany staring him in the face.

Backing Is Weak.

Stresemann, as nominal leader of the Deutsche Volkspartel (the German People's Party), really has been the representative in the Reichstag of the smaller, and incidentally the less predatory, industrials. He is backed by the worthier, smaller manufacturers. In mass they are very numerous, as Germany is a clutter of factories, but they have no strength as against the big fellow. Stinnes by himself, with the control of the banks in his hands, can make them all jump.

Stresemann for months has been trying to organize the mass of German industry sufficiently to force the big fellows to behave. In the course of this effort he has had several sharp encounters with Stinnes and the big speculators, but he has never done more than keep alive, whilet the big fellows bowled merrily ahead, forcing the Government to speed up the printing presses and ruin Germany that they might be great.

The Sccialists, knowing they have no power now in Germany, saw the only chance for saving the republic in backing the small and honest businesa men and manufacturers in their fight against the big fellow. That is why they threw their vote to Stresemann, constructing what seems like a broad coalition.

But Stresemann in power is the same Stresemann who has for months been trying unsuccessfully in the Association of German Manufacturers to curb Stinnes and the speculators. As Premier he can do no more with Stinnes than he could before.

For the Stresemann Administration to succeed in pulling Germany out of danger there is only the one hope that he and the mass of smaller manufacturers who stand behind him can bring a settlement of the reparation problem. They are all anxious to buy their way free, and perhaps they will have the courage to follow Stresemann through, even though he defies the big fellows with a law confiscating a portion of their wealth in lieu of the taxes they have not paid since the war.

Trickled by Fate.

In Stresemann's Premiership at this time is the irony of fate. He has taken over the Government with all the odds against him, when he might once have had it with everything in his favor.

The failure of a telegram to arrive in time prevented Stresemann from taking over the Government at the time of the London ultimatum. The telegram was from Lloyd George to the British Ambassador in Berlin, Lord D'Abernon, instructing him to inform Stresemann the British Government would back him even to the point of preventing the rich mines of Upper Silesia going to Poland if Stresemann and the German industrials would take over the responsibility for reparation fulfilment.

The telegram should have arrived before midnight on the day the Reichstag, in desperation, accepted Wirth as Premier rather than suffer the consequences of the London ultimatum—chiefly the occupation of the Ruhr, which was not avoided in the long run anyway. But the telegram did not arrive until 6 o'clock the next morning. Meanwhile Wirth, with his policy of fulfilment, but without the support of the industrials, who could make the policy of fulfilment a success if they wished, had taken office.

If Lloyd George's telegram had arrived six or eight hours earlier, Stresemann would have taken over the obligation of fulfilling the Treaty of Versailles, two years ago last May. Lloyd George would, incidentally, also have taken over the responsibility of seeing to it that Poland was not given the lion's share of Upper Silesia, but that would have been Lloyd George's affair.

Is Without Fear

At that time Germany was still a going concern. It was still very republican in spirit. The monarchists in those days were singing soft and low, and Stinnes and the big speculators could not defy the Government then as now. If that telegram had arrived earlier, it would have made a vast difference. The reparation problem might have been settled by now.

But Stresemann would not take the power then unless he had something to offer big industry—such as Lloyd George's promises to give Germany Upper Silesia—because he would not undertake to pay reparations unless he had big industry in line.

Now he has been compelled to take over power, against an openly hostile big industry, with infinitely less chances of doing anything in a country that is almost desperate.

Of the three "fulfilment" Premier of Germany, Wirth, Cuno and Stresemann, the strongest but the least prepossessing is Stresemann. Wirth was big, amiable, rather stupid and good. Cuno was suave, well meaning, presentable and without character when it came to dealing with Helfferich, the monarchist, of Stinnes, the industrial lord.

Stresemann is a squarehead with a red neck. He is the type of German the French soldiers labelled "boche." He is not afraid of anything. He has proved that by attacking Stinnes when no one else dared. If he had a group of squareheads like himself instead of a lot of fearful small manufacturers and spineless Socialists behind him he might go further. The trouble is the squareheads are all against him. They are backing the monarchists and the big industrialists, who are on the monarchist side.

Despair Grips Ship Workers

LONDON, August 31.—(Canadian Press Cable).—Not a single contract for a new ship hsa been reported from the Clyde or the east coast of Scotland this month, and the vessels under contract and launched in August have totalled only nine small ones, aggregating 1,865 tons, the poorest August outport in many years.

"The engineering unions are practically penniless and losing members every week. There are 2,000,000 men in the engineering trade in this country without prospects of bettering their condition, with no hope, with nothing but despair in their hearts."

These words prefaced a speech here by John Muir, M.P., Socialist, who ascribed the martyrdom of the engineers to the fact that in the engineering industry capital increased three-fold during the war and the ensuing boom and therefore triple profits must be made in order to pay the pre-war rate of interest on capital.

Empire Defence and Trade

NEED OF A BROAD POLICY.

(From Times Melbourne Correspondent.)

In an address to the Australian branch of the Empire Development Union, Mr. Bruce, the Prime Minister, disavowed the idea that he was going to the Economic Conference solely to urge that tariff concessions should be given to Australia. The Imperial and Economic Conferences were linked together, since the defence of the Empire without a great Empire trade would be impossible.

Australia, he said, wanted population, but was not going to take emigrants unless it was sure of markets. It was of far greater importance to Great Britain that some Empire policy should be evolved than it was to any one of the Dominions. Preference for Empire products was possible without any tariff protection. It could be accomplished by an Empire-wide movement giving preference to Empire products, improved means of transport and communication, and freight arrangements to equalize the disadvantage of higher charges on Australian primary products exported to Britain.

Some day, he declared, Australia would be greater than Britain and have a greater population; then, perhaps, it would be possible to shift the heart of the Empire to the Southern Seas.

Mr. Bruce will return from the Conference through Canada and the United States.

Call For All Masons To Give Aid to Japan

To the World:

May I, through The New York World in this manner make quick appeal to all Lodges of Free and Accepted Masons in the State of New York and to all individual Masons, to contribute through American Red Cross channels to the relief of the stricken people of Japan?

All Masons, I am sure, will make practical manifestation of the spirit of fraternity and brotherhood, and emphasize the Masonic doctrine that our "charity shall be as boundless as the wants of our fellow creatures." The terrible suffering and great need call for prompt and generous action. Send contributions through American Red Cross Headquarters, Washington, D.C., or to any local chapter, and send to Grand Secretary or me statement of contributions. Newspapers outside of Greater New York please copy this appeal.

CHRISTABEL, THE EXPECTANT EVANGELIST

TORONTO, Sept. 14 — Christabel Pankhurst, now an eloquent speaker on evangelistic lines, who last winter spoke to crowded church gatherings, has published a book "The Lord Cometh", or, "The World Crisis Explained." The Manchester Guardian notes that she is now a devotee, wholly absorbed in expectation of the early return of Christ. This is a paragraph from her book:

"Well, then, the women; But we women, too, are human, different in some respects from men, but with our full share of human nature and human failing. Assuredly our political enfranchisement was a necessary measure of justice, whereby we ceased to be politically irresponsible; and having now become politically responsible, we can more easily relize that we are wholly unable, just as men are unable, even to form, much less to effect, a policy that will regenerate the world."

The Manchester Guardian says: "In places we are almost made to feel that, if we had Miss Pankhurst's sense of evidence, we could find in anything ever written a prediction of any sort of event that happened afterwards. Was this, one asks in wonder, the mind that launched a thousand effective suffragette leaflets? Well, we are glad of one thing—women's suffrage is sure and cannot be undone."

Mother Is Charged With Death Of 3 Weeks Old Babe

Twenty-Two-Year Old Married Girl Is Arrested For Death Of Child

Brought Child In Woods and Took Its Life, Burying Body Amongst Trees Is Charge Against Prisoner Who Is Wife Of Six Months

One of the most sensational cases of infanticide known to the police in recent times is that which has come to light following the arrest of a twenty-two-year-old married woman at Hr. Grace on Friday.

The story, as we have been able to learn it, is that the young woman, who was married about six months ago, gave birth to a child, which, when it was about three weeks old, she took in the woods and returned without it. Her husband has been away for some time and, it is stated, it was in anticipation of his return shortly, that she wished to rid herself of the infant.

The absence of the child became known to neighbors, who suspected that something was wrong and ultimately the police were informed and arrested the mother on the charge of having caused the child's death. It was after the arrest, we understand, that the unfortunate girl was induced to go with the police into the woods and point out the place where the body had been buried. Following the exhumation of the remains the accused was placed in jail at Hr. Grace, and will likely be brought on to St. John's as soon as the preliminary investigation is completed.

Prisoner will be Tried by Supreme Court in October For Death of Michael Fewer

IS NOT ASKED TO PLEAD

As a result of the death of Michael Fewer, of Chapel's Cove, Harbour Main District, which took place on Saturday morning at the General Hospital, Anthony Hawco, aged 33, of the same place, was before Mr. McCarthy, J. P., and formall charged as Fewer's assailant, with being responsible for Fewer's death. Upon the charge being read by the court Hawco was told that he was not asked to plead at the present time. He was not represented by Counsel. Mr. H. A. Winter, acting for the Dept. of Justice, asked that the prisoner be further remanded. He is being held without bail pending the preliminary enquiry which will be proceeded with in time to have the case ready for the Supreme Court in October.

POLICE COURT

Three drunks were discharged.

A carman who failed to obey the police instruction to keep close to the curb on the left hand side of the street was ordered to pay costs. Mr. McCarthy pointed out for the information of truckmen generally that those traffic regulations are made for public convenience, and when the police officer gives instructions to carmen, cabmen, motorists, &c., they are obliged to obev the lawful orders given. He excused the defendant from a fine, it being his first offence but cautioned him to obey the traffic regulations in future. If brought before the court again a heavy fine would be imposed.

Commission Issued

We are informed that the Commission to Mr. T. Hollis Walker, K.C., has been issued.

We understand the terms of reference fully cover all the matters which led to the disruption of the late government.

The Kenmount Road

We understand the contract for repairing the Kenmount Road has been awarded by the Public Works Dept. and that the work will be started in a few days.

While these repairs are urgently needed and should result in this road being put in condition to handle much of the traffic between St. John's and South Shore settlements, we hope that the Government will see that a competent inspector who has more than an amateur knowledge of road making will be put on the job and kept there till the work is finished to see that it is carried out according to specifications and for the amount stipulated in the tender.

That the contractors will do their best to have the work performed faithfully we have no doubt, but we understand they are new in the road-making field and it is well at this stage that there should be no semblance of impropriety in connection with public works of this kind.

The Poor Asylum

There are at present in the Poor Asylum one hundred and twenty-eight inmates, seventy-five men and fifty-three women. The institution is all that can be desired under the management of Mr. Miller who is to be complimented on the manner in which the inmates are cared for.

A matter which is causing much dissatisfaction, however, is the almost impossibility of getting patients in there from the more remote settlements of the Island while St. John's and one or two nearby districts seem to have an over-proportion of inmates in the institution. There are, too, a certain number of able bodied men in the Poor Asylum from St. John's while many really deserving cases in the outports cannot be considered for admission.

Weather Prevents Fall Fishing

Passengers arriving by the Prospero from Bonavista Bay report that owing to bad weather, fishing operations are considerably handicapped. There is a little fish to be caught if the weather was favorable. They also say that newspaper reports convey a wrong impression of the catch on Labrador, while it is true that the floaters have done well on the whole, it must be remembered that the fleet which went north green fish catching this year, is the smallest on record and the voyage on the whole will not by any means be an average one.

"Scotch Cure" Season Opens

The season for Scotch Cure herring opened on Saturday, the 15th. But, as in every year, very few people will engage in the business of packing for several weeks from the opening date under the regulations governing the Scotch Cure pack.

From what can be learned, however, this year's business will be prosecuted on the usual scale.

Mr. "Paddy" Keegan Lands Two Big Ones

On Saturday his Excellency the Governor was in receipt of what was probably the biggest salmon hooked this season. The fish tips the scales at 35 lbs., and was landed last week from the Lower Humber by Mr. Paddy Keegan, son of Dr. L. E. Keegan. This is said to be the heaviest salmon caught this season, and it took the ardent Waltonian who landed it 1.40 minutes play his fish. On the same day Mr. Keegan captured en eighteen pounder, which we say is a record for big fishing in a single day.

ST. JOHN'S
Municipal Council
PUBLIC NOTICE

WHEREAS Section 150, Sub-Section "D," of the St. John's Municipal Act, empowers the Council to license and regulate or prohibit the posting of bills or placards, and the erection or display of advertisements in the city limits, the following regulations were adopted at a Regular Meeting of the St. John's Municipal Council held August 31st, 1923:

(1)—No bills, placards, or advertisements which tend to direct or interfere with traffic, vehicular or pedestrian shall be erected or attached anywhere within the city limits unless the sanction or authorization of the City Council shall have been first obtained.

(2)—No bills, placards or advertisements shall be erected or attached to property in the city limits, unless the consent of the occupier, or failing the occupier owner or agent of the property to which the bill, placard or advertisement is intended to be erected or attached shall have been first obtained, nor in any case without the consent of the Council. "Property" in these Regulations shall mean buildings of any sort, walls and fences surrounding occupied or vacant property, telegraph, telephone and electric light poles and any other erection to which a bill, placard or advertisement can be attached.

(3)—Upon the occupier, or faling occupier, owner or agent of any property, giving permission for the erection or attachment of any bill, placard or advertisement to his property, or property under his control, such occupier, owner or agent shall be held personally responsible for such bill, placard or advertisement being kept in a tidy condition and for the removal of same when ordered by the Council.

(4)—The firm, company, organization or individual whose goods or business is advertised by any bill, placard or advertisement which offends against clauses (1) and (2) of these regulations, shall be held to be the party or parties responsible for the offence, and shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter imposed.

(5) The penalty for each and every breach of these Regulations shall be a fine of not less than Twenty-five Dollars or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days.

By order,
J. J. MAHONY,
City Clerk.

CALIFORNIAN TOWN IS WIPED OUT BY FIRE

THE PRINCE IS WORKING ON HIS RANCH

Gets Royal Reception at High River.

HIGH RIVER, Alta, Sept. 17.—The special train bearing the Prince of Wales and party arrived here Sunday evening. The Prince will spend a care free holiday at the E. P. ranch which he purchased during his official visit in 1919. The ranch is situated at Pekisko, about twenty-six miles southwest of here.

HIGH RIVER, Alta., Sept. 17.—Lord Renfrew, Prince of Wales, spent all the morning from eight until twelve of his first day on his ranch working with the other hands to fill a big silo with sunflowers to provide feed for blooded cattle and live stock. He put on old working clothes and led the actual work of chopping up the sunflowers and filling the silo with a vim that kept the other men hustling to keep up with him.

HIGH RIVER, Alta., Sept. 17.—Ranchers and towns people accorded Lord Renfrew a royal welcome when the special train pulled into the depot yesterday. For the first time since his arrival in Canada the Prince walked from the depot platform to the main street of the town unaccompanied by either secret service men or policemen. As the Prince reached the street, David Bearspaw and Red Cloud, minor chiefs of the Stoney Indians from the Morely reservation, were waiting to greet him. Bearspaw spoke in perfect English: "Greetings, Chief Morning Star. Your brothers of the Stonies salute you." The Prince answered, "Morning Star is proud to greet his brothers." The Indians were very much pleased with the Prince's reply. Later the Prince proceeded to his ranch by motor car.

BANDIT GETS BIG HAUL

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 17—Ten masked bandits armed with automatic guns and revolvers held up the Wayside Inn, a roadhouse three miles from here, early Sunday and after robbing approximately one hundred and seventy-five patrons and a gambling game in the rear of the place, escaped with cash and jewelry amounting to fifteen thousand dollars.

FIRE SWEEPS WESTERN TOWN

Students Are Killed, Many Injured and Hundreds of Houses Burnt.

BERKLEY, Calif., Sept. 17.—Two unidentified students of the University of California were killed when they fell through the burning roof of a house today and scores of injured are reported to be in Berkeley general hospital as a result of a fire which at five o'clock this afternoon had destroyed hundreds of homes and doomed the business section of the city and entire residential section of North Berkeley. The fire started in the bush of the Contra Costa County hills and swept over the ridge into the University City. Dynamiting was resorted to in a desperate effort to check the flames. At five o'clock the business buildings on University Avenue and Shattuck Avenue in the heart of the city were ablaze. A fierce north wind was blowing.

NEW IRISH PARLIAMENT WILL MEET TOMORROW

DUBLIN, Sept. 17.—The new Parliament will meet Wednesday. The House, without the 44 Republicans, contains 109 members, among whom President Cosgrave has 63 definitely pledged supporters. The embarrassment caused by the absence of nearly one-third of the members elected, constituting the second largest party has reawakened the activities of the peace makers who will attempt to establish a working arrangement between the Government and its Republican opponents, and as an initial step will ask for immediate release of 29 members in jail.

TWELVE KILLED IN DEMONSTRATION

LONDON, Sept. 17—Twelve persons were killed and fifteen wounded during a demonstration against the high price of food at Sorau, Bradenburg Province, when fighting occurred between police and demonstrators, says a despatch from Berlin.

Spain's Military Directorate Will Expell Politicians

New Regime Will Have Nothing To Do With Parties; Riviera Is Now Dictater.

PORT VENDRES, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Sept. 17.—The Military Directorate formed as a result of last week's revolution, has decided to expel thirty-one of Spain's leading politicians, including former Premier Panchez Guerra and several prominent Liberals and Catalinist Syndicalists, it is learned from advices coming over the border. The expulsion will occur this week. The military regime is refusing to have anything to do with politicians or parties. Senator Ventosa, former Spanish Minister of Finance in several cabinets, was stopped at the frontier while endeavouring to reach France, and advised he would be detained until the military regime had decided his status.

MADRID, Sept. 17.—King Alfonso has signed a decree dissolving parliament. No disturbance and little excitement has been caused by the establishment of the military regime and the publication of decrees by the new Government. For the present General Primo Riviera is the only responsible Minister. He has power to publish decrees which thereby become law. As the country is now governed by a military directorate Primo Riviera's title appears to be President of the Council of Ministers. The Foreign Ministry and Ministry of War will be retained, but it is understood all other Ministries and sub-Secretaryships have been suppressed. The various departments will be under control of a higher Government official to be chosen by seniority. He must, however, submit all matters to the President of the Directorate for decision. The Military Directorate will begin rigid economies in National expense, but without prejudicing the functions of the administration. Riviera has notified all captains and commanding generals and the general staff of the army that he has taken the oath of office as President of the Directorate and has appealed to the patriotism of the people, the army and navy that they maintain discipline and loyalty to the new Government.

REVOLT IN JERUSALEM

JERUSALEM, Sept. 17—Authoritative reports say that a revolution has broken out in Arans-Jordania against Emir Asdullah. Advices from Jerusalem on September 5th reported a revolt by 3000 Arabs under thel cadership of Sheik Es Salt. The rebels at that time submitted an ultimatum in which they demanded an equitable system of taxation, expulsion of all foreigners and the formation of Parliamentary Government.

MARTIAL LAW PREVAILS IN OKLAHOMA

OKLAHOMA, Sept. 17—The spotlight of national interest turned today upon this city, which is in the second day of martial law. The military have superseded the police and machine guns are trained upon the City Hall. The Grand Jury has been cancelled and a military tribunal set up instead, and citizens are being told when to get up and when to go to bed. Governor Walton declared in the martial law proclamation that Oklahoma city was the headquarters of the Ku Klux Klan and that it was here the sovereign power of the state was defied when the Grand Dragon publicly proclaimed in substance that the sovereign state of Oklahoma could not break the power of the Klan.

LEADERS ARRESTED

BARCELONA, Sept. 17—The principal leaders of the revolting Communists and Bolsheviks have been arrested and others are fleeing towards the French frontier which is being closely watched.

ROME, Sept. 17—Governor Fiardino, third in command of the Italian armies, has been appointed military Governor of Fiume.

RIOTING CONTINUES

DUSSELDORF, Sept. 17—Labour troubles continue at Dortmund, Hoerde, Witten and Duisburg. A serious riot occurred in a Dortmund factory yesterday. The police were obliged to fire, killing two and wounding seven.

LEAGUE HAD STORMY SESSION

Italy Defied League and Must be Dealt With.

GENEVA, Sept. 17—"Stormy" was the word employed Sunday in summarizing the session of the Council of the League of Nations which was hurriedly convoked Saturday night and which did not adjourn until early Sunday morning. The session was devoted to the delicate question of how to deal with Italy. The Graeco-Italian conflict now has been happily settled, say the delegates who have foregathered in Geneva, and thanks to the motive power of the League of Nations backed by world opinion, but they declare Italy has defined the League and that Assembly should take some action calculated to reinforce the prestige of the League.

CALIFORNIA FEELS SHOCK

EUREKA, Calif. Sept. 17—Sharp earth-quake shock was felt here today beginning with mild vibrations, accumulating in violence, and ending abruptly.

POSTED AS MISSING

HALIFAX, Sept. 17—The schooner Review, Capt. W. A. Beattie, of Pictou, now one hundred and twenty days out from Halifax for Demerara with lumber, has been given up as lost with all hands. With Captain Beattie, as a sailor, was his son Angus. Capt Beattie was eighty-two and bore a notable record as a deep sea navitator.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Well, what's wrong with the conditions in this case?" The Laird demanded crisply. "You can have anything you want—if you're shy on material to work with, and I've sent for the best physician in the state to come here and consult with you."

"The hospital conditions are perfect, Mr. McKaye. What I mean is this: It is a well recognized principle of medical practice that a patient combating a disease of extreme severity and high mortality is sustained quite as much by his courage and a passionate desire to get well—in a word, by his morale—as he is by his capacity for physical resistance. Your son is, I think, slightly depressed mentally. That is the sole reason I see to warrant apprehension."

"Oh—so that's all, eh?" The Laird was relieved. "Then don't worry about him. He'l put up a battle—never fear. Why, he never quit in his life. However, in case he might need a bit of encouragement from his old daddy from time to time, you'll have a room made ready for me. I'll stay here till he's out of danger."

That was a terrible week on old Hector. The nurse, discovering that his presence appeared to excite her patient, forbade him the room; so he spent his days and part of his nights prowling up and down the corridor, with occasional visits to the mill office and The Dreamerie, there to draw such comfort from Daney and his family as he might. While his temperature remained below one hundred and four, Donald would lie in a semi-comatose condition, but the instant the thermometer crept beyond that point he would commence to muter incoherenly. Suddenly, he would announce, so The Laird could hear every word, that he contemplated the complete and immediate destruction of Andrew Daney and would demand that the culprit be brought before him. Sometimes he assumed that Daney was present, and the not unusual phenomenon attendant on delirium occurred. When in good health Donald never swore; neither would he tolerate rough language in his presence from an employe; nevertheless, in his delirium he managed, at least once daily, to heap upon the unfortunate Daney a generous helping of invective of a quality that would have made a mule skinner blush. Sometimes Mr. Daney was unfortunate enough to drop in at the hospital in time to hear this stream of anathema sounding through the corridor; upon such occasions he would go into The Laird's room and he and old Hector would eye each other grimly but say never a word.

Having demolished Mr. Daney with a verbal broadside, Donald would appear to consider his enemy dead and direct his remarks to Nan Brent. He would reproach her tenderly for leaving Port Agnew without informing him of her intention; he assured her he loved her, and that unless she returned life would not be worth living. Sometimes he would call upon the old dead Caleb to reason with her in his behalf. About that time he would be emerging from a Brand bath and, with the decline of his temperature, his mutterings and complaints gradually grew incoherent again and he would sleep.

Thus two weeks passed. Donald showed no sign of the improvement which should ordinarily be looked for in the third week, and it was apparent to the doctors and nurses who attended him that the young laird was not making a fight to get well—that his tremendous physical resistance was gradually being undermined. His day-nurse it was who had the courage, woman-like, to bring the matter to an issue.

"He's madly in love with that girl he's always raving about," she declared. "From all I can gather from his disconnected sentences, she has left Port Agnew forever, and he does not know where she is. Now, I've seen men—little, weak men—recover from a worse attack of typhoid than this big fellow has, and he ought to be on the up-grade now, if ever—yet he's headed down-hill. About next week he's going to start to coast, unless Nan Brent shows up to take him by the hand and lead him back uphill. I believes he could do it—if she would."

"I believe she could, also," the doctor agreed. "Perhaps you've noticed that, although his family have listened to him rave about her, they have never given the slightest indication that they know what he's raving about. The girl's tabuu, apparently."

"The Laird appears to be a human being. Have you spoken to him about this—Nan girl?"

"I tried to—once. He loked at me—and I didn't try any more. The fact is," the doctor added, lowering his voice, "I have a notion that old Hector, through Daney, gave the girl the money to leave the country."

"If he knew what an important personage she is at this minute, he'd give her more money to come back—if only just long enough to save his son. Have you spoken to Mr. Daney?"

"No; but I think I had better. He has a great deal of influence with The Laird, and since I have no doubt they were in this conspiracy together, Daney may venture to discuss with the old man the advisability of bringing the girl back to Port Agnew."

"If she doesn't appear on the scene within ten days——"

"I agree with you. GuessI'll look up Mr. Daney."

He did. Daney was at his desk in the mill office when the doctor entered, and without the least circumlocution, apprised him of the desperate state to which Donald was reduced.

"I tell you, Mr. Daney," he declared, and pounded Daney's desk to emphasize his statement, "everything that medical science can do for that boy has been done, but he's slipping out from under us. Our last hope lies in Nan Brent. If she can be induced to come to his bedside, hold his hand, and call him pet names when he's rational, he'll buck up and win out. There are no dangerous physical complications to combat now. They are entirely mental."

While the physician was speaking, Andrew Daney's face had gradually been taking on the general colortones of a ripe old Edam cheese. His chin slowly sagged on his breast; his lips parted in horror and amazement until, finally, him mouth hung open slackly, foolishly; presently two enormous tears gathered in the corners of his eyes and caskeded across his cheeks into his whiskers. He gripped the arms of his chair.

"O God, forgive me!" he moaned. "The Laird doesn't know where she is, and neither do I. I induced her to go away, and she's lost somewhere in the world. To find her now would be like searching a haystack for a needle."

"But you might telegraph a spacead to every leading newspaper in the country. The Laird can afford to spend a million to find her—if she can be found in a hurry. Why, even a telegram from her would help to buck him up."

But Andrew Daney could only sway in his chair and quiver with his profound distress.

"The scandal!" he kept murmuring, "the damned scandal! I'll have to go to Seattle to send the telegrams. The local office would leak. And even if we found her and induced her to come back to save him, she'd have to go away again—and if she would not—if he would'nt permit her—why don't you see how impossible a situation has developed? Man, can Donald McKaye wed Nan Brent of the Sawdust Pile?"

"My interest in the case is neither sentimental nor ethical. It is entirely professional. It appears to me that in trying to save this young fellow from the girl, you've signed his death warrant; now it is up to you to save him from himself, and you're worrying because it may be necessary later to save the girl from him or him from the girl. Well, I've stated the facts to you, and I tried to state them to The Laird. Do as you think best. If the boy dies, of course, I'll swear that he was doomed, anyhow, due to perforation of the intestines."

"Yes, yes!" Daney gasped. "Let The Laird off as easy as you can."

"Oh, I'll lie cheerfully. By the way, who is this girl? I haven't been in Fort Agnew long enough to have acquired all the gossip. Is she impossible?"

"She's had a child born out of wedlock."

"Oh, then, she's not a wanton?"

"I'm quite sure she's not."

"Well, I'll be damned! So that's all that's wrong with her, eh?" Like the majority of his profession, this physician looked upon such contretempts with a kindly, indulgent eye. In all probability most of us would if we but knew the secrets of men as do our doctors and lawyers.

Long after the doctor had left him alone with his terrible problem, Mr. Daney continued to sit in his chair, legs and arms asprawl, chin on breast. From time to time, he cried audibly:

"O Lord! What have I done? What shall I do? How shall I do it?"

He was quite too incoherent for organized prayer; nevertheless his agonized cry to Omnipotence was, indeed, a supplication to which the Lord must have inclined favorably, for, in the midst of his desolation and bewilderment, the door opened and Dirty Dan O'Leary presented himself.

The International Exhibition of 1862

We Were Awarded Medals for Exhibits of Minerals, Skins, Furs, etc., But Our Codfish Samples Were Offensive.

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir—Seeing that an exhibition will be held in London next summer, I hastily collected these few notes for your esteemed and widely-circulated journal, as I believe that they will be of interest to your readers.

I hope that all who are directly interested in the Exhibition will go into the work heart and soul, and that good results may accrue. We have not in the past been as energetic and as patriotic as we should have been in putting forth our best endeavors to advertise Newfoundland and her products, and among the foremost, in fact, the chief product of all, the fisheries. The following is a clipping copied from a report from the merchants, on fish making, in 1869, which shows that the chief cause of our having fallen behind in the sale of that staple, is due to our negligence in its cure. The extract says, in relation to the curing of codfish:

"Past negligence in this respect has very materially damaged the character of Newfoundland produce abroad and has much assisted in the competition of our Norwegian rivals in displacing us from markets of which we have had an almost exclusive possession." In one of his forcible and patriotic letters, which was penned in 1863, His Lordship, Rt. Rev. Dr. Feild said when commenting on the toilers of the deep. "Few persons are better acquainted than I with the Newfoundland fishermen. There is no trade, no occupation with better deserves or will requite the fostering care of government."

It behooves us all to assist in its promotion by every means in our power. First and foremost, better methods should be devised in its cure; the merchants should deal as liberally as possible with the fishermen, and the latter will then be encouraged to take a greater interest in what his toil has collected from the waters of the deep. Now, as regards the Exhibition of 1862, the following note will explain what our fish exhibit came to, addressed to Nefoundland's representative:

Dear Sir—Complaints are made of the condition of your dried fish which are becoming exceedingly offensive under the Commissioner's offices, and must be removed. Will you give orders accordingly?

Yours truly
P. L. SIMMONDS.

Exhibition Bldg.
South Kensington St.,
July 10th, 1862.

I find that at the Paris Exhibition, of 1867, we were, to put it in cricket parlance, "bowled out" by Nova Scotia. Here is an extract from a local newspaper published at that period in reference to the Exhibition:

"It is a miserable state of affairs when Newfoundland, which is a fishing country, should be beaten in relation to her own staple, by Nova Scotia."

We were awarded five medals for our exhibits at the International Exhibition of 1862. In the speech of Governor Bannerman at the opening of the House of Assembly in 1863, His Excellency said: "Upon the occasion of the Exhibition in July last, arrangements were made for the products of this country being worthily represented, and it will doubtless stimulate those amongst us engaged in mining and agricultural pursuits to learn that medals were awarded for the specimens and samples forwarded for those branches of native industry."

My object in writing the above is traceable to the fact that I want to impress on my countrymen the extreme care which should be given our chief industry, the codfishery, and that the best samples of all products, that we can send, should be sent to the great Exhibition in 1924.

Yours truly
CITIZEN.

OBITUARY

SYLVESTA TUFFIN

(To the Editor)

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to record the death of the oldest person of this place.

Mr. Sylvesta Tuffin passed peacefully away on July 26th at the age of ninety years and five months. Mr. Tuffin bore his age well and, up to two weeks before his death, he was quite hearty. When sickness came he bore it without a murmur. He was like a person slumbering until the end came and he passed away as if falling asleep. He was a man respected by all who knew him. He lived a Christian life for quite a number of years; he has often been leader in class meetings and other religious services. Such men as Mr. Sylvesta Tuffin mean much to a community. Who will be the next to perform such work as he did? We hope some other will continue his good work. He was laid to rest in the Methodist Cemetery, the funeral being conducted by the Rev. Mr. Morgan. He leaves an aged widow, two sons, one daughter and a number of relatives to mourn their loss.

At the close of the service in the cemetery his favorite hymn was sun:

Oh where are the reapers that garner in
The sheaves of the good from the fields of sin?
With sickles of truth must the work be done
And no one may rest till the harest is home.

A SINCERE FRIEND.

Herring Neck.

WILLIAM G. TIPPETT

(To the Editor)

Dear Sir:—Would you please allow me space in your much read paper, the Evening Advocate, to record the death of our friend in the person of William G. Tippett of Ragged Hr., Musgrave, Fogo District, who died at Harper Hospital, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A. in July. He left his home on May 25th with a chum, C. L. Mouland, en route to Detroit for work. He had an attack of the Flu early in May but was getting over its effects but still not in good health. He would listen to no persuasion of staying but was fully determined to go, thinking that the warm summer and change of climate might act to restore him to health again but was different, from the first day he arrived there, June 8th. He obtained work and was working for a while but still seeking doctor's advice until after a week or so he was advised to go to a hospital for treatment, which he did, hoping in a short while to be able to resume his work again. He entered the hospital July 25th but despite all the doctor's skill and nurse's attendance and kind friends visits, etc., nothing could be done for him and he was called to a higher life.

It was a severe shock to his beloved wife and aged father and mother. He was the youngest of the sons and as is mostly the case was the pride of all. He was always pleasant and was a favorite with all whom he came in contact with. He was a Salvationist and the writer in conversation with him before his departure heard him mention a donation in the form of a mantle lamp he intended to present to the new S. A. Citadel now nearly completed. His wife and parents are very grateful to friends at Detroit who kept them informed of his condition during his illness, both by wire and letter. His body was interred in respect at Detroit being looked after by R. A. and Chas. L. Mouland, the latter having gone there with him and no roubt he has felt the loss keenly having roomed together before entering the hospital and on his returning home will still have to leave him behind. He leaves to mourn his loss a loving wife, two little boys, mother and father, sister and two brothers, besides a large circle of relations and friends to whom the writer extends sincerest sympathy in this their sad hour of bereavement.

Hoping I have not trespassed too much on your valuable paper.

I remain,

Yours truly,
A FRIEND.

Toll Great Bell of St. Paul's only for Royal Family

The great bell of St. Paul's, London England, is tolled only on the death of a member of the royal family in the line of descent from any English sovereign. The honor is paid only to a member of the royal family who could under any circumstances succeed to the throne. This rule does not apply to the consort of the sovereign, of the heir apparent, or of a prince or princess on the steps of the throne. The booming of the great bell of St. Paul's was the first intimation the citizens of London received of the death of the Prince Consort, which occurred at 11 o'clock on the night of Saturday, December 14, 1861. Outside the royal family the only persons for whom the bell is tolled are the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Dean of St. Paul's, and the Lord Mayor of London dying in his year of office. The bell tolled is not Great Paul, but the old great bell on which the hours are struck. On the occurrence of a death in the royal family the Home Secretary at once communicates with the Lord Mayor, desiring him to convey news to the Dean of St. Paul's with a request that the great bell may be tolled. The bell is then tolled at intervals of a minute for an hour.

Russia Steadily Making Progress

Sir Donald Mann Says Food Plentiful and Every One Working.

There is plenty of food in Russia and everyone is working.

This sums up the view of Sir Donald Mann, who has just returned from a visit to that country. He is very hopeful as to the future of the land of the Soviets.

"The people may not be well dressed," he said, "according to the Canadian standard, they may have no white collars or fine linen, but they have plenty to eat and lots of work to do.

"During my stay there I came in contact with many heads of Government departments, and they were extremely hospitable and considerate. When I left Moscow to visit the Black Sea they told me they would wire friends to look after me."

Petrograd impressed Sir Donald as an empty house. It has only half its former population. The city is greatly run down but repair work has begun on the streets, and they are starting to build the houses. In Moscow, however, the situation is different. Everything is active and business is good, new houses are being built, old ones repaired and new shops opened, and plenty of meat. Things were improving fast.

"While there is no lack of food there is no alcohol," added Sir Donald. "There is some native wine, and claret and white wine which have every little alcoholic strength and there is also beer obtainable. The tea is excellent, the coffee is not so good, but the bread and butter fine. There was plenty of beef, mutton and lamb at the hotel I was at, and some game birds were brought in too. And as to fruits and vegetables, there is every variety in abundance."

Sir Donald spoke of the churches and said they are crowded. The persecution of the clergy, he said, was due principally because they commenced propaganda against the existing Government.

"It will be very interesting to watch how the soul of Russia will emerge from the many tides and cross currents of opinion that prevail there," concluded Sir Donald. "These people believe that they are going through the refiner's fire, and coming out pure gold."—Montreal Star.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, TUESDAY, SEPT. 18th., 1923.

The Passing of Governor Davidson

No more worthy representative of the Royal head of the Empire ever occupied Government House than Sir Walter Edward Davidson, whose sudden passing was made known to Newfoundland yesterday in a cable from Sydney, N.S.W., to Sir William Allardyce.

The names of Sir Walter and Lady Davidson are inseparably united with this Colony's splendid war effort, and by the manner in which both threw themselves unsparingly into work which won for Newfoundland an enviable place amongst the dependencies of the British Crown, they endeared themselves to our people in no ordinary measure.

That deep and genuine sympathy which Sir Walter at all times evinced for the parents of our brave lads whose names from day to day appeared on the honour roll of heroic dead will now be returned a thousand-fold to Lady Davidson in the great sorrow which she is called upon to bear. From thousands of homes in Newfoundland will ascend the prayer "requiescat in pace."

Sir Walter Davidson was born sixty-four years ago at Killyleagh, County Down, Ireland. He was a Cambridge man, and entered the Civil Service in Ceylon in 1880, where he occupied various positions of great responsibility throughout a period of twenty years. From 1902 to 1904 he was Colonial Secretary in the Transvaal Administration. The next eight years were spent as Governor of the Leychelles Islands. In 1913 Sir Walter came to Newfoundland, leaving four years later, prior to assuming his Australian Governorship. He was twice married, his widow being a daughter of the late General, the Hon. Sir Percy Feilding, and closely connected with the noble families of Denbigh and Bath.

Two daughters of the second family survive, and one son of the first.

Deadly Inertia or Action

It is at this time of the year, when the need of a fishery system, as discussed by "Citizen" in another column, is brought most forcibly home to the great majority of the people.

The fishermen have now practically ended their voyage, both with the Labrador and shore fishery. They gave their whole energy to the arduous task of getting their catch, and faced storms, with ice and fog, in the struggle for a livelihood.

Their minds are now turning to the price of fish; and there they are confronted with a tragedy.

With feverish excitement every exporter is trying to get a cargo in the market—before the market is congested and the price drops, and the country suffers.

Like madmen, struggling for an outlet in a lunatic asylum, everyone of them wants to get their first. Under present circumstances, they are not to blame for thus trying to make early shipments and prepare for the losses which inevitably follow. It is the system that is responsible for the injury. The exporters are to blame insofar as they, or some of them, are responsible for the system.

There is hardly one of the exporters who will defend the present condition of affairs. They all recognize the cloud which covers the fish marketing business.

They have not the public spirit to get together and do something on the lines of regulation of shipments. Those few who would welcome some arrangement that would stabilize prices and give all fishermen the benefit of the same price all the year round are powerless in the face of those who prefer to let the country suffer and the people pay. All then must engage in the policy of suicide, while foreigners reap the fruits of the toilers' toil.

Even, now, the Advocate asks:

Is there not time to do something and save the slump in prices which is inevitable upon market congestion?

Will the exporters act now and save the situation?

SIR. WALTER DAVIDSON DIED SUDDENLY

Yesterday His Excellency Sir W. L. Allardyce received a cable message stating that Sir Walter Davidson, Governor of New South Wales, had died suddenly at Sydney.

The following message was sent to Dame Margaret Davidson, Sydney, N.S.W.:—

"Government and people of Newfoundland deeply shocked at sad news of Sir Walter's death, and desire me to express profound sympathy.

(Sgd.) ALLARDYCE."

THE B. E. S. L.

Newfoundland's delegate to the British Empire Service League, Capt. Gerald J. Whitty, O.B.E., M.C., was given a fitting reception last evening when he appeared before his brother members of the Great War Veterans' Association to give an account of the happenings at that momentous conference of the veterans of the Empire held in London this summer.

Captain Whitty's lecture, which embodied a report of the Empire Service League proceedings and an account of his visit to the battlefields of France and Flanders in company with Lt. Col. Nangle, was characteristic of the man who delivered it, and the combined thoroughness and conciseness with which he placed before the members of the organization the wealth of valuable information gained by his visit was in keeping with the manner in which Captain Whitty has handled the affairs of the G. W. V. A. since he has been Dominion Secretary.

His report contains much that must be read by ex-service men, whether of the navy or army, with both pleasure and profit and we trust that a copy of it will eventually reach the hands of every veteran in the country, no matter how remote his location may be. We feel sure that in this way much will have been done to assure a hearty response to Capt. Whitty's closing appeal to all ex-service men "to join the G. W. V. A. so that by our united efforts we may exert a common influence for good upon the land in which we live."

Professor Huntsman and Dr. Gardner Address Business Meeting At King George Institute

THE HABITS OF FISH IN NEWFOUNDLAND WATERS MADE THE SUBJECT OF SCIENTIFIC ENQUIRY THIS SUMMER.

Professor Huntsman, Secretary of the Atlantic Biological Society of Canada, now stationed at St. Andrew's, N.B., and Secretary of the International Committee engaged in fishery research work, was the principal speaker at a meeting of the Business Men of the City which was held in the King George Institute this morning.

His Excellency the Governor presided. The audience included practically every business man engaged in the fisheries; and those who were privileged to hear the practical information afforded, must have felt that the need for scientific research along the lines indicated by Prof. Huntsman and Mr. Gardner were very great so far as a fishing country like Newfoundland is concerned. For the past six weeks the party has been engaged in investigating the currents, taking temperatures, and ascertaining as far as possible, the feeding grounds for cod, lobster, herring and other food fishes around our coast. The cruise began on the Cabot Strait, and following along our north and western seaboard, as well as the Canadian side, the investigators worked right around the Island, arriving here three days ago. Two boats—a Canadian patrol ship and a 60 ton motor boat were engaged in the work. A great of valuable information and data was obtained, which when put into the shape of a report, will be available for general use by those interested in this most important subject. The main points brought out by the lecturer will be outlined in a subsequent issue. Mr. Gardner, an Old Country specialist, who accompanied Dr. Huntsman on the expedition, as Nfld's representative also gave a very interesting resume of the work accomplished, and made some practical suggestions whereby this country might engage in a small way in obtaining valuable information as to the habits and location of certain fish at certain periods. His Excellency the Governor proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturers, while Mr. L. Outerbridge, President of the Board of Trade, tendered a vote of thanks to His Excellency for presiding.

The party lunched at Government House to-day and sail this afternoon to continue their work along the South West Coast. Some time will be spent in Fortune Bay waters before returning to Canada.

The Hard Coal Industry

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 17—Despite the fact that anthracite coal wage controversies so often occupy much front page space in newspapers, there is a considerable number of persons who do not know that this fuel is found in a comparatively small part of Pennsylvania. No commercially worth while amount of anthracite is found in any other part of the United States. It is confined to nine counties in an area of about 496 square miles in the northeastern quarter of the state. Five of the nine counties yield more than ninety per cent of the annual production.

The coal is found at all depths, ranging from outcroppings on the surface to about 1400 feet underground. It is found under cities, rivers and other streams.

There is no strictly bituminous coal in the anthracite area. Bituminous coal is found in central and western Pennsylvania in more than a score of countries.

There are more than 300 anthracite collieries, employing approximately 155,000 men and boys. Of these about 400,000 are skilled miners who blast the coal. These men hold certificates obtained after two years experience in the hard coal mines under the mining laws of the states.

Empire Exhibition

AIR MINISTRY PLANS FOR AIRCRAFT SHOW

Arrangements are being made by the Air Ministry, in conjunction with the Society of British Aircraft Constructors, to organize a special air show in connexion with the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley next year.

Unfortunately it is impossible to hold the show in the exhibition grounds, especially as flying demonstrations are to form part of the aerial section. The choice of venue seems to rest between Cricklewood and Hendon aerodromes. Considerable space is required to make an adequate show of the leading types of British aircraft, and the sheds at either of these aerodromes provide that accommodation without expense of construction. This solution is not ideal, for any subsidiary part of an exhibition which is not housed on the same site tends to sufferr from the disinclination of people to make a further journey, but is the only practical one.

There will be, in addition, a small aircraft section at Wembley as part of the main British Government exhibit, but it is doubtful if much more than models can be shown here on account of space.

Albion's Stand.

(Louisville Courier-Journal)

A spirit of co-operation is the only hope for these war-torn countries, and England is hoping against hope to bring about some sanity along this line. It has met with utter failure so far. Baldwin and Curzon have been balked by Poincare at every turn. They will soon refer the case to the people. And yet what hope there may be in this seems almost forlorn with the attitude of France wholly unchanged. Perfidious Albion" indeed, when Albion is standing alone in the struggle for the preservation of the world.

The Need For System

Fisheries Will Be Deserted If Exporters Continue Useless Policy of Selfishness.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir:—

There is every reason to harken to the opinions freely expressed by fishermen, daily arriving in this city, from northern outports. The voyage for this season is practically over, and the question uppermost in the minds of our fishermen to-day is "What price are they going to get for their fish?" because after all is said and done, on the price paid the fishermen depends to a great extent the prosperity, or otherwise of this country. The merchant, in his counting house, smiles complacently, when he learns through the press, his agents, or otherwise that the voyage has been a fairly prosperous one, and that for the most part his dealers will be able to square their accounts; but he does not take into serious consideration, the far more important element, and ask himself the question is this man, who has worked all summer, in a position to keep himself financially independent, at least to the extent of providing for the winter months for himself and family. Let those fish buyers and suppliers realize once and for all that unless the men who catch the fish are paid a living wage they will refuse to catch it any longer. The evidence of this condition of affairs must be apparent to all thinking men. There exists in this country to-day an altogether too big a corterie, whose main purpose in life seems to be, to so exploit the Nfld. fisherman, as to provide for themselves a fat living. To this class principally belongs the free trader. The merchant who holds up his hands in holy horror at any honest attempt to benefit those who catch fish by sane laws, which will control the export, and regulate the price. The men who have tried to bring about such conditions have been hounded down by political assassins, whose only purpose has been to get control of the Government of the Colony, and so manipulate our affairs as to keep the fishermen in a state of semi starvation.

Those political ranters who claim that the Fishery Regulations injured the fishermen are now going into their third year as free traders. In the matter of the Regulations, Coaker and the North have yielded to the insistence of Water Street for a free hand. And now in the name of fair play, where has that free hand landed us? Look on, if you will at the spectacle of fish buyers sending steamer, after steamer, into the markets with thousands of quintals of fish and ask yourselves is such a policy of trade not suicidal? Already this fall, cargoes have been bought by Fish Exporters who have contracted in advance at a price, which will net them handsome profits on first cargoes. Once these requirements have been met the fishermen is told to go to—hades; his fish is of little or no value. Along Water Street, St. John's, to-day, the methods of doing business are such, that no man who strives to be fair in his dealings can rely on the prices offered him. Every bulwark built by the F. P. U. for the fisherman's protection is being assailed and the props to support our fishery trade abroad are being one by one knocked down by those whose only concern in life is how much profit they can make out of the toilers of the land. But, as above stated, even those shylock-minded individuals, whose love of self and ease and luxury is only equalled by their hatred for Coaker are threading on very thin ice. Is it their purpose to turn every earner worth his salt away from the fishery to seek a sure means of livelihood at a more certain and remunerative calling? Then if this be so, just a few more years and their work of destruction will be complete so far as the Nfld. fisheries are concerned. This very day we had pointed out to us that a voyage of one thousand quintals of fish, caught by ten men will not net the sharemen sufficient wages to pay for their summer's up-keep—tomorrow next day, when they settle up, these very men, who have done well, so far as fish catching was concerned, will have to go begging for a barrel of flour. Now, there is but one solution for this difficulty so far as the toiler is concerned; he must refuse longer to continue at the fishery, unless he has the assistance and legal protection that his voyage will be sold to the best advantage, netting him every dollar and cent for which it can be disposed of. This can only be done, when the markets which consume our fish are properly controlled and regularly supplied in the manner advocated by the F.P.U.

Thanking you for space.

Yours truly,

CITIZEN.

England's Highest Houses

Dwelling Perched on Mountain Tops.

Persistent in its claim to be the highest inhabited house in England is Kirkstone Pass Inn, on the summit of the pass of the same name in the Lake District of Westmorland. It is 1,481 ft. above sea level, or 400 ft. higher than the top of the tower on Leith Hill, in Surrey.

The ascent to this little hostelry is so steep on each side of the pass that it justifies a local rhyme which says:

He is surely an arrant ass
Who pays to drive up Kirkstone Pass;
He'll find, in spite of all their talking,
He's got to walk, and pay for walking!

But that rhyme was composed before the days of the motor-car.

Scotland Beats The Lot.

There are several other inhabited houses in England, all licensed premises, which are higher. Tan Hill, in Yorkshire, is 1,727ft. above sea-level.

Other public-houses which are higher than the Kirkstone one are the Sat and Fiddle, near Buxton; the Isle of Skye, one of the few public-houses which can boast of a punning sign, and Shaw House, both in the Pennies; and the Travellers' Rest, at Flash.

If, however, we include in this category the observatory on Snowdon, this will beat the lot and take front rank as the loftiest dwelling in the British Isles, with the single exception of the observatory on Ben Nevis, in Scotland.

GRAND SEMINARY STUDENTS ENROLLED

QUEBEC, Sept. 7.—With the usual impressiveness, but marked by no special ceremony, one hundred and seventy-five theological students were admitted ta the Quebec Grand Seminary this morning. Out of that number 61 were new, which is a little over the usual quota, showing that there is very little decrease in the number of those attracted to the service of the altar.

They came from all parts of Canada, the United States and Newfoundland. The length of the course varies from three to four years, after which the theological students are given the order of sub-deacons, deacon, and finally ordained priest.

Before Judge Boote, in the Yonkers City Court, charged with speeding, Ralph Lane of Tuckahoe said he had good reason for speeding, as he was transferring a lunatic from one asylum to another. He was dismissed.

Charles Toth of Boston will strike most people as a real sport. Conditions favoring, he was the third American to swim the English Channel this year. It was two days too late to win £1,000, but Toth said he would try anyhow, "just to prove to the folks back home that I could do it." Folk back home ought to be satisfied.

As Canada's estimates of wheat production go up those of the United States go down. The latest figures from Washington indicate that the U. S. wheat yield will be 789,000,000 bushels, not twice as much as Canada's, although the population of Canada is only about a twelfth of that of the United States.

That tidal action in the Pacific, following the earthquake in Japan, sufficiently affected navigation to drive the seven destroyers wrecked on the California coast out of their calculated course is a theory which has the merit of explaining what would otherwise be inexplicable. If navy officers are inclined to withhold judgment while the facts are sifted, the people may well be content to do the same and view the loss of ships and men with unmixed regret.

In a letter to the Chicago Coolidge-for-President Club, the Executive has said of its plans to boost his candidacy: "I have given no thought to the matter to which you refer, and I am merely doing what I can to take up the burdens of my office. I very much prefer to discourage thought and activity in any other direction. The task before me is to carry to a successful conclusion the policies inaugurated by President Harding and I am sure you will understand that if I ask your help to this end, rather than in the way you have suggested, it shows no lack of appreciation of your kindness."

Resolutions condemning the Fascist movement and charging employers with seeking to introduce it into this country to fight American unions were adopted by the New Jersey annual convention here to-day.

"The fascist movement of Italy," reads the resolution, "under the leadership of Dictator Mussolini, is doing all in its power to extend its influence to the United States to destroy all that our Italian fellow-workers have built up in long years of struggle and self-sacrifice.

"The fascist movement is indorsed by all Chambers of Commerce, Rotary Clubs and manufacturers' associations, which are forever fighting the American labor movement."

STRANGE MURDER CASE.

Harold C. Barrington, 29, a farmer, who resided on Fort Jackson road, four miles from Winthrop, N.Y., shot and killed Miss Alberta Stokes, then committed suicide by shooting himself. The tragedy occurred at the St. Lawrence State Hospital recently, where Miss Stokes was a pupil nurse, and the cause is said to be that Miss Stokes had refused to marry Barrington.

After firing at Miss Stokes from a distance of 50 feet, Barrington jumped into his car, started it, and when he had reached a point east of the power house on the hospital grounds he placed a new shell in the single-barrelled gun and, holding the weapon close to his head, pulled the trigger. The car followed the road for a short distance, turned to the right across the grass and ran into an artificial lake, coming to a stop about 15 feet from the edge of the pond in about two feet of water. Barrington's body was found hanging over the side of the car, with the shotgun lying beside it. A letter was found in his pocket, addressed to an aunt, saying he was going to end it all.

Most of the mischief in the world would never happen, if men would only be content to sit still in their parlors.—Pascal.

OBITUARY

M. T. FLYNN.

A message received yesterday announced the death at St. John, N.B., on Sunday of Michael T. Flynn, of Marystown, P.B. Deceased, who was one of the most widely known men on the West Coast formerly carried on an extensive business at the latter place. In recent years, however, it was found necessary to curtail somewhat while with the burden of years pressing on him, Mr. Flynn gradually withdrew, leaving the management to his eldest son, James.

Mr. Flynn was a man of genial disposition, and his hospitality was proverbial. In other days his home was thrown open to the visitor, and his passing will be regretted not only by his more intimate friends and associates, but by those who, as "ships that pass in the night," were the recipients of his hospitality.

He is survived by a widow and several children.

"That's Me They're Burying"

AMAZING STORIES OF SURVIVAL AFTER "DEATH."

There are few romances with such a haunting fascination as those of men and women who walk the earth in the flesh long after mourners have wept at their graveside.

Alexander I. of Russia was reported to have drawn his last breath, his hand clasped in that of his wife. His coffin was exposed for seven days in the Kazan Cathedral, and was placed with pomp in the Imperial vault. And yet, it is said, he survived his official death forty years, to end his long life as Feodor Konsmitsh, a saintly hermit, at Tomsk.

Married to a Madman.

A still more remarkable story of after-death survival is that told of Princess Christina of Brunswick, who gave her heart and hand to Alexis, son and heir of Peter I. of Russia. For a few weeks Christina was ideally happy; but soon the madness that was in Alexis's blood began to snow itself in cruel words and deeds of violence.

Thrice he tried to poison her. More than once he knocked her senseless at his feet. And when at last news came that she was dying, all the answer he vouchsafed was "Let her die! The sooner she's buried the better!"

A few hours later St. Petersburg was horrified to learn that the Princess was dead and buried. At dead of night a coffin had been carried out of the Palace, with a small escort of mourners; and after a brief service it was lowered into a grave.

To the world the Princess was dead. Mourning was worn for her, while she herself was slowly fighting her way back to life in distant Paris.

A few months later, while those who had loved her were making pilgrimage to her grave, in which a log of wood lay interned in a coffin, the woman who should have worn the crown of Empress was beginning a new life in Louisiana as Mme. Hersfeld, and finding in the love of a good man peace and happiness.

A good many years ago one of the "Wild Darrells," a Kentish family famous for the lawless living of its sons, found himself faced by ruin and disgrace, and decided that his only escape from his creditors and the law was death and burial.

With the aid of a loyal servant and a friendly doctor he duly "gave up the ghost," and his body was carried to the graveyard, to which the whole countryside flocked to see the last of "the most wicked of the Darrells."

Among the mourners gathered around the grave was a man whom no one recognized—a man muffled in a large cloak, in which his bowed face was concealed from view—whose voice joined reverently in the responses.

As the coffin was being lowered into the grave the mysterious stranger tapped the person standing next to him on the arm and whispered. "That's me they're burying," accompanying the startling statement with a low laugh, from which his neighbour turned away in disgust.

At the close of the ceremony the cloaked figure vanished as mysteriously as he had come; and it was not until some days later that the story of his strange statement at the graveside began to rouse speculation as to whether it could possible have been Darrell who had assisted at his own obsequies.

Many years passed. The story and Darrell himself were almost forgotten when, one day, the sexton of the church, when preparing a grave, came across a massive oak coffin. His curiosity aroused, he forced the lid open; and to his amazement saw, not the remains of a body, but a number of heavy stones. It was found that this was the very coffin at whose interment the stranger had been present.

Rod May Search For Spanish Gold on Bottom

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Ernest Edward Brookes, Vice Principal of the Leicester Technical School, whose invention of gold divining rod has been successfully tested on the wrecked Laurentic, off the coast of Donegal, he claims, may go on another submarine treasure hunt, he said in an interview here to-day.

He also revealed that injuries received during his diving may cost him the sight of his right eye.

He said he has been approached by the promoters of a scheme for the recovery of the treasure believed to be aboard a Spanish galleon that foundered about 330 years ago off Tobermory, Isle of Mull.

Apparatus Seems Simple

Mr. Brookes allowed inspection of his discovery in his laboratory in a stone tank filled with salt water. Apparently, it is a simple piece of apparatus consisting of a galvanometer and a piece of wire with a spear-head attached. An electric current is used. Gold and silver coins were dropped to the bottom of the tank and also pieces of copper, iron and aluminum.

When the spear-head was placed on the gold and silver the hand on the galvanometer swung to the left, and when the spear-head touched the baser metals it swung to the right.

"There is no doubt that the spear could be made in such a form that it could be driven into mud and sand, and would indicate the quality of metal touched," said the inventor.

Broomstick First Used.

Hanging outside the door of the laboratory was the spear used in the Laurentic experiments. It was a crude-looking rod about four feet long, made of a broomstick tipped with metal and a metal wedge bound three-quarters the way up the handle.

"I was attached during the war to the Dover patrol," said Brookes, "in connection with a patent for use in the detection of stationary marines. There I met Commander Damant, captain of the salvage ship Racer, which had been receiving gold from the Laurentic. He invited me to help in that work. But before I had time to arrive he had located the bulk of the gold.

"However, my apparatus was successfully tested there on gold and other metals. We got useful data whereon I am sending two scientific reports to the British Admiralty.

Right Eye Hurt In Dive.

"I went down to the bottom of Port Salon Bay twice during the experiments, and thought I had suffered no ill effects. But three hours after I had gone to bed I felt that the sight of my right eye had gone."

Brookes said that the apparatus wherewith he believes it will be possible to recover buried treasure will cost about £15 to make.

LIKE MOTHER, LIKE CHILD.

TORONTO, Sept. 14—The mother of the child prodigy, Winnifred Sackville Stoner, Jun., who walked and talked before she was one year of age composed jingles and could read when 18 months old, and spoke 14 languages at the age of 17, has been visiting this city. Mrs. Stoner, who writes M.D., Ph.D., after her name, was the originator of the Natural System of Education, which system she used in the training of her wonder daughter, teacher, doctor, mother she is a marathon dressmaker, being able to make a dress in four minutes. "And that's quite long enough," she said. "I believe women should spend less time on their clothes and more time in their kitchen. If housewives would throw away the can-opener, we'd have fewer divorces."

ANOTHER DEVASTED AREA

Los Angeles Times: The devastation of Europe was not measured by the amount of gunpowder shot away. There is an economic desolation as complete as that wrought by the sword. Loss of man power in industry through idleness inflicts the same hardships upon the progress as its loss of citizenship through the war. Economic devastation is going on in Europe, although the war itself is over. In this way Germany is as great a sufferer as any of the powers. During the war her soil may not have been invaded by hostile armies, but in the quest for peace there is an industrial devastation so complete as if miles of factories were blown to atoms.

"Le me kiss those tears awav, sweethear," he said, tenderly.

She fell into his arms, and he was busy for a few minutes. But the tears flowed on.

"Can nothing stop them?" he asked, breathlessly.

"No," she murmured. "It's hay fever; but go on with the treatment."

10,000 Feet Aloft, Planes Sink Ship

ABOARD U. S. ARMY TRANSPORT ST. MIHIEL OFF CAPE HATTERAS, N.C., Sept. 5.—Ability of the airplane successfully to bomb a battleship from an altitude above 10,000 feet was demonstrated here today by army airmen from Langley Field in the first phase of the attacks on the obsolete battleships New Jersey and Virginia, the first American war craft to be marked for destruction under the naval limitation treaty.

The Virginia was sunk by bombs fired from an air fleet of eight Martin bombers from Langley Field, using 1,100-pound bombs.

Most of the bombs fell close alongside, ripping open the hull. One of them, however, struck the after turret and demolished both cage masts. Three smokestacks and the boat davits also were destroyed.

The Virginia went down thirty minutes after the attack began. Meantime the New Jersey still was afloat but had a bad list to port. It was planned to sink her during the afternoon.

Five planes dropping 2,600-pound bombs, scored five direct hits on the New Jersey at the 10,000 foot altitude but little damage was done to the ship. In a second flight the planes dropped 2,000-pound bombs, six of which struck alongside the New Jersey, which, although apparently leaking, seemingly was not greatly damaged.

There never was a time, in my opinion, when some way could not be found to prevent the drawing of the sword.

NOTES OF INTEREST

The death rate from cancer in Great Britain has increased threefold in the past two generations, although in this space of time there has been a substantial reduction in the number of deaths from tuberculosis and other diseases, according to a report just issued by the Ministry of Health. The committee recently appointed to inquire into the cancer scourge confesses complete ignorance as to the cause or a cure for it, but deprecates the use of quack remedies.

The committee suggests that the medical men throughout the country should co-operate, together with the local health authorities, to bring about an improvement in the local facilities for the tereatment of cancer.

The report dwells on the fact that chronic irritation is a contributory cause of cancer, and advises the removal of rough stumps of teeth and the replacement of badly fitting dental work. It also advises a change in the habit of pipe-smoking, if it produces a sore spot on the lip or tongue. If a person's clothing causes any irritation, particularly in the region of the body, it should be altered the report says.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I do not recall any book I have read in the past half-year that has given me so much pleasure as has the Hon. Bertrand Russell's study, "Political Ideals." Mr. Russell, who is a grandson of the late Lord John Russell, twice Prime Minister of Great Britain, is a warm supporter of the British Labor Party. He is generally thought to be the world's greatest living philosopher. His latest book deals with the questions of China, and it, like all his books, is extremely thought-provoking. He boldly calls into question the intrinsic worth of what we are pleased to call "our western civilization." But it is with "Political Ideals" that I am concerned today.

* * * * *

"Under our existing system," he writes, "although what is recognized as robbery is forbidden, there are nevertheless many ways of becoming rich without contributing anything to the wealth of the community. Ownership of land or capital, whether acquired or inherited, gives a legal right to a permenent income. Although most people have to produce in order to live, a privivleged minority are able to live in luxury without producing anything at all.

"As these are the men who are not only the most fortunate but also the most respected, there is a general desire to enter their ranks, and a widespread unwillingness to face the fact that there is no justification whatever for incomes derived in this way.

* * * * *

"It is not, as a rule, by means of useful inventions, or of any other action which increases the general wealth of the community, that men amass fortunes; it is much more often by skill in exploiting or circumventing others. Nor is it only among the rich that our present regime promotes a narrowly acquisitive spirit. The constant risk of destitution compel most men to fill a great part of their time with the economic struggle.

* * * * *

"Private ownership of land and capital is not defensible on grounds of justice," he states, "or on the ground that it is an economical way of producing what the community needs. But the chief objections to it are that it stunts the lives of men and women, that it enshrines a ruthless possessiveness in all the respect that is given to success, that it leads men to fill the greater part of their time and thought with the acquisition of purely material goods, and that it affords a terrible obstacle to the advancement of civilization and creative energy."

* * * * *

I love to quote Mr. Russell—nearly every paragraph is worth quothing.

"Our present economic system is wasteful on the production side, and unjust on the side of distribution. It involves a life of slavery to economic forces for the great majority of the community; and for the minority a degree of power over others which no man ought to have. In a good community the production of the necessaries of existence would be a mere preliminary to the important and interesting part of life, except for those who find a pleasure in some part of the work of producing necessaries. It is not in the least necessary that economic needs should dominate men as they do at present."

* * * * *

"Few men seem to realize how many of the evils from which we suffer are wholly unnecessary, and that they could be abolished by a united effort within a few years. If a majority in every civilized country so desired, we could, within twenty years, abolish all abject poverty, quite half the illness in thew orld, the whole economic slavery which binds down nine-tenths of our population; we could fill the world with beauty and joy, and secure the reign of universal peace. It is only because men are apathetic that this is not achieved, only because imagination is sluggish, and what always has been is regarded as what always must be. With good-will, generosity, intelligence, these things could be brought about.

"Institutions which will diminsn the sway of greed are possible, but only through a complete reconstruction of our whole economic system. Capitalism and the wage system must be abolished; they are the twin monsters which are eating up the life of the world. In place of them we will need a system which will hold in check mens' predatory impulses, and will diminish the economic injustice that allows some to be rich in idleness while others are poor in spite of unremitting labor. A better system can do all these things, and can be established by the democracy whenever it grows weary of enduring evils which there is no reason to endure."

I think that Mr. Russell is specially effective whenever he writes upon thes ubject of freedom of thought and expression—indeed, it would be safe to call him the greatest living champion of free speech and press. His "Freedom in War Time" was a very capable book, well worth reading.

"Progress comes through the gradual effect of a minority in converting opinion and altering custom. At one time it was considered monstrous wickedness to maintain that old women ought not to be burnt as witches. If those who held this opinion had not been silenced, we should still be steeped in medieval superstition."

And if other advocates and champions had been silenced, today we should have America ruled by men over the set; we should have chattel slavery in the United States; we should still believe that the sun goes around the earth, instead of believing as we do that the earth goes round the sun; we should still believe that the way to cure people of disease is to hold long processions in the streets; we should still believe that the way to cure insane people is to beat them unmercifully, so as to drive the evil spirits out of them; we should still believe that little infants go to hell unless baptised—indeed, many people still believe that!

"Society," he says, "cannot exists without law and order, and cannot advance except through the initative of vigorous innovators. Yet law and order are always hostile to innovators and innovators are, almost always, to some extent, anarchists. (Philosophical anarchists, he means.) Those whose minds are dominated by fear of a relapse towards barbarism will emphasize the importance of law and order, while those who are inspired by the hope of an advance towards civilization will usually be more conscious of the need of individual initative. Both temperaments are necessary, and wisdom lies in allowing each to operate freely where it is beneficent. It is the innovators who have difficulty in being allowed to exist and work. Each generation believes that this difficulty is a thing of the past, but each generation is only tolerant of PAST innovators. Those of its own day are met with the same persecution as though the principle of toleration had never been heard of."

* * * * *

"There should be an attempt to encourage, rather than discourage, the expression of new beliefs, and the dissemination of knowledge tending to support them. But the very opposite, in fact, is the case. From childhood upward, everything is done to make the minds of men and women conventional and sterile. And if, by misadventure, some spark of imagination remains, its unfortunate possessor is considered unsound and dangerous, worthy only of contempt in time of peace, and of prison or a traitor's death in time of war.

"Yet such men are known to have been in the past the chief benefactors of mankind and are the very men who receive most honor as soon as they are safely dead."

* * * * *

One more quotation and enough for today:

"Just as patriotism does not prevent a man from feeling family affection so the international patriotism ought not to prevent a man from feeling affection for his own country. But it will somewhat alter the character of that affection. The thing which he will desire for his own country will no longer be things which can only be acquired at the expense of others. He will wish his own country to be great in the arts of peace, to be eminent in thought and science, to be magaminous and just and generous.

"He will wish to help mankind on the way toward that better world of liberty and international concord which must be realized if any happiness is to be left to men. He will not desire for his country the passing triumphs of a narrow possessiveness, but rather the enduring triumph of having helped to embody in human affairs something of that spirit of brotherhood which Christ taught and which the churches have forgotten. He will see that this spirit embodies not only the highest morality, but also the truest wisdom and the only road by which the nations, torn and bleeding with the wounds which scientific madness has inflicted, can emerge into a life where growth is possible and joy is not banished at the fancied call of unreal and fictitious duties. Deeds inspired by hate are not duties. Life and hope for the world are to be found only in the deeds of love."

"The milk that good cooks use"

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every can

YOU can get it now—milk that will give your cooking greater richness and flavor.

Libby's Milk—cow's milk made double rich!

Good cooks everywhere are using it. So many of them, in fact, that it is now generally known as "the milk that good cooks use".

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every can

The reason for its popularity is simply this: there are 7½ teaspoons of pure butter fat in every 16 oz. can of Libby's Milk! And it is butter fat you know that makes butter and cream such great enrichers of food.

You wonder, perhaps, how Libby's Milk can contain so large a percentage of this enriching substance.

As you know, there are certain sections of this country which are famous for their dairy products, where fine pasture lands encompass wooded hills and fresh streams that flow through grassy valleys. Cows naturally produce their finest milk where nature and man combine to help them.

And you know, too, that certain kinds of cows give richer milk than others.

Libby gets milk only from selected herds in these favored sections.

Then we make it double rich by evaporating more than half the moisture from it. Nothing is added to it; none of its food values taken away. Libby's Milk is just the finest cow's milk in the land, made double rich, then carefully sealed and sterilized in air-tight cans so you can get it fresh and pure no matter where you live.

Greater richness, finer flavor

Order a can of Libby's Milk from your grocer today. See what new richness, what delightful flavor it gives to your soups and sauces, your cakes, breadstuffs and desserts—to anything you make with it.

Dab a few drops on the top of the next loaves or biscuits you bake—just before you put them into the oven. Note what a tempting brown the crusts take, and how tender they are.

You'll actually find new joy in cooking when you've used Libby's Milk and heard what your family and guests will say.

Wedding Bells

BARNES—SNOW.

The wedding of Victor George Snow to Ethel Barnes, both of this City, took place on Saturday, September 15th, at Hopewell Church, Upper Gullies, where the nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. H. W. Facey.

The bride who was given away by her father was beautifully attired in a costume of navy blue poiret twill and wore a hat of midnight blue velvet and carried a bouquet of carnations and ferns. She was attended by her sister, Miss J. Gilbert, while the duties of the best man were performed by Mr. A. J. Snow, brother of the groom. After the ceremony a reception was held at Mrs. Kelly's. The bride and groom left by Sunday's Express, for Ocean Pond, to spend their honeymoon.

Guards-Feildians Game

The Guards and Feildians are scheduled for this evening in the Tie-Cup series. On Monday last they played to a draw and since then a protest has been lodged with the League by the Feildians in connection with the first goal scored by the Guards.

Athletes Returning

The Newfoundland athletes who competed at Halifax, are returning home by the Silvia, leaving to-day, and are due here Thursday morning. Quite a number of citizens were hoping that O'Toole could remain at Halifax to compete in The Herald marathon, on October 5th, but the A. A.A. Executive have thought otherwise, and he is returning with the other members of the party.

American Schooner Had Trying Experience

Capt. Abram Kean, who was at Carmanville in connection with the American schooner Copperfield, returned by the Susu yesterday. Capt. Kean states the Copperfield, which is now loading laths at Carmanville for New York ,from the Horwood Lumber Company, was recently in trouble near Peckford's Island. The vessel met very thick weather when nearing her destination, and, getting close in shore, anchored under Pickford's Island.

A south-east wind shortly after sprung up, and the schoner began to drift with both anchors out, and was within ten yards of the rocks, when fishrmen of the place put off in their motor boats and towed her off.

The Copperfield being in danger of drifting ashore, however, the crew left her and went ashore, until the weather moderated.

In the meantime, the Captain sent to Horwood's for assistance, and the s.s. Walter Kennedy was despatched to the scene and towed the Copperfield to Carmanville. In doing so, the windlass was put out of commission completely, and all attempts to raise the vessel's anchors were unsuccessful and both were lost together with a large quantity of chain. Captain Kean and Captain Stuart of Dale & Co's., were at the scene in the interests of the underwriters.

Fined For Speeding

Motorist Pays $10 For Hitting The High Spots.

The kind Providence which usually protects speeding motorists from the just penalty of their offence deserted a Water Street business man, who owns a new Buick Sedan, when he attempted to smash the record from town to Topsail a few days ago.

Nemises, in the person of the Inspector General was on the road in his car and being passed by the offending Buick at a good clip, he took up the chase but could only catch the Sedan's dust. During the run the Inspector General's speedometer was registering thirty and thirty-five miles an hour which was accepted as proof that the accused's car which was driven by his chaffeur, must have been doing something better. As there was very little traffic at the time, Judge McCarthy imposed a fine of only $10.00.

Popular Wedding on Thursday

The Advocate learns that the marriage of Miss Blanche Fitzpatrick, daughter of Mrs. and the late Capt. Fitzpatrick, of Placentia, to Mr. Peter Cashin, M.H.A., eldest son of Sir Michael and Lady Cashin, is to take place at noon on Thursday of this week.

Monkeys Go On Spree

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 12—Fifteen monkeys in a local park went on a chloroform "jag" when a keeper dropped a bottle of the fluid in their cage here.

Two of the animals engaged in a fight and in an attempt to separate them, the keeper saturated a piece of cotton with chloroform and held it near the fighters' noses. In the melee the bottle was knocked from his hand. The other monkeys sniffed inquisitively at the liquid and soon all became hilariously drunk. It was some time before order restored among the former jungle residents.

CALIFORNIA COULD FLOAT A BATTLESHIP IN WINE

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 15—(A.P.)—There is enough wine in California, literally to float a battleship, according to a recent report of Rex B. Goodcell, collector of internal revenue for the Southern California district, who says that on July 1, last, approximately 36,000,000 gallons were held in wineries throughout the state.

In the fiscal year ended on that day the southern part of the state produced 2,524,909 gallons, while withdrawals in the same district in the same period, totaled 1,079,744 gallons. Of the quantity withdrawn, 635,889 gallons were shipped to points outside the state.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 17—All spare cells at Worcester police headquarters having been filled to overflowing with contraband beer and whiskey, federal prohibition agents stationed in this city and surrounding towns have begun to store their seizures in Worcester County House of Correction. GERMAN LETTERS COVERED WITH 1,000-MARK STAMPS

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (A.P.)—In the days before the war Germany, conforming to the standard practice of international mail transmission, could send a letter to New York, for instance, for the customary blue stamp of 20 pfennings, one-fifth of a mark, or approximately 5 cents.

Letters are now coming to New York from Berlin, bearing six one-thousand-mark postage stamps. At the old rate of exchange, these stamps would have cost $1.500, and based on marks, the rate is 30,000 times greater than it was before the war.

Successful Nfld. Nurse

HALIFAX, N.S., Sept. 10.—The Nurse's training School of the Halifax Infirmary was the happy scene recently of the announcement of results in the final examinations in advanced practical nursing ((both oral and written), recently held by Drs. Finn, Miller, Morton and P. A. Macdonald. The young ladies who are soon to graduate from the institution, have practically completed their three years and three months of arduous study, and have been thoroughly prepared to assume the duties of their important calling.

One of the four nurses who were successful in passing the finals was a young Newfoundland lady, Miss Margaret Oakley Knee, of Bonavista Bay. Miss Knee is the second nurse from the "Old Colony" to win success at the Infirmary, Miss Spares, who was in last year's class being the first from Newfoundland to secure the Diploma from the Halifax Infirmary. Miss Knee who passed with a particularly high percentage, is a much valued member of the nursing staff, and was warmly congratulated on her success in the finals. It is her intention to practice nursing in Halifax for a time and she will return to St. John's with a view to taking up nursing in that city.

Sister Elizabeth Seton, Directress of Nurses at the infirmary, who personally supervises the practical training, deserves much commendation for the high standard shown by the present graduating class. It is probable that all four young ladies will continue in the field of nursing in this city. The names of the young graduates who comprise the present class are as follows: Miss Margaret Knee, Bonavista Bay, Nfld.; Miss Henrietta Rankin, Sydney; Miss Stella Grady, Halifax; Miss Florence M. McKinnon, New Glasgow.

The requirements necessary to win a diploma at the Halifax Infirmary are particularly high, so that the successful candidates may well feel proud of their graduation.

G. W. V. A. Lecture

There was a large attendance of ex-service men at last night's lecture and smoker, held at the Grenfell Hall under the auspices of the G. W. V. A.

Vice-President Crocker presided, and the speaker was Capt. G. J. Whitty, O.B.E., M.C., Dominion Secretary, and Delegate to the recent Conference of the British Empire Service League, with which the GW.V.A. is affiliated.

Captain Whitty was given a splendid reception, and his report and lecture, was splendidly delivered and most interesting. The lecture was illustrated with excellent slides and films of the Conference and the battlefields of France and Flanders.

At the conclusion, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded Captain Whitty, being proposed by Mr. Harold Mitchell, who expressed the thanks of the Association, and the audience for the work accomplished by the secretary since he took over that important office, while the chairman also, during the evening, made a strong appeal for increased membership for the G.W.V.A.

Previous to the lecture, a short program was gone through with Mr. Ern Fox at the piano. A French horn solo by Mr. Arthur Bulley, songs by Mr. Mon. Noseworthy, and a comic reading by Mr. A.E. Holmes, and the usual regimental choruses by the gathering, made up a very excellent program.

Whalers Do Good Work

By the Susu yesterday a shipment of 300 barrels of whale oil arrived from Beaverton, for trans-shipment to Boston. The oil was manufactured by the Nfld. Whaling Company, who began operations this season. This is the only company operating in our waters, and their two steamers, the Cabot and Cachalot have secured 56 fish to date.

In some cases the ships were obliged to go many miles to sea, but the success that they have met with is encouragement to the company, who went into the venture after the fishery had been abandoned in this country.

Susu Arrives

The S.S. Susu Capt. Roberts, arrived from the Fogo Mail service at noon yesterday after a fairly good round trip. The ship reports very little improvement in the fishery, the disagreeable weather hampering operations while bait is also scarce. Fish is reported fairly plentiful on the grounds whenever the boats are able to get out.

The Susu brought a full freight and the following passengers:—Mrs. C. Moore, and child; Miss M. Pardy, Nurse Scammell, Miss M. Newell, Miss Woolfrey, Miss Hallett, Miss P. Goodyear, Miss E. Vincent, Messrs. C. Woolfrey, Capt. A. Kean, W. Perry, H. J. Miller and A. Guy.

PRESSMEN'S STRIKE HOLDS UP NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 18—New York went without its leading newspapers for the better part of twenty-four hours to-day, when a strike of twenty five hundred web pressmen, prevented publication of majority of the city's morning and evening dailies. Late in the afternoon twelve afternoon dailies published composite newspaper George L. Berry of the International Union of Pressmen characterized the strike as illegal and urged strikers to return to work, and sent out a call to pressmen in other cities whether union or not, to come here.

NEW YORK, Sept. 18—With the exception of New York Evening Post which by strenuous efforts got out one edition at eleven this morning, no morning or evening papers were published in this city to-day owing to a strike of the Web Pressmen's Union number 25 which was called shortly after midnight. The strike was decided upon after a four hour meetine and it is said only one delegate present voted against the walk out. The cause of the strike is the inability of the Union and Publishers to agree upon a new working contract to replace that which expired on September 1st.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXIX.

THANKS TO THE constitution of a Nubian lion, Dirty Dan's wounds and contusions had healed very rapidly, and after he got out of hospital, he spent ten days in recuperating his sadly depleted strength. His days he spent in the sunny lea of a lumber pile in the drying-yard, where, in defiance of the published orders, he smoked plug tobacco and perused the Gaelic American.

Now, Mr. O'Leary, as has been stated earlier in this chronicle, was bad black Irish. Since the advent of Oliver Cromwell into Ireland, the males of every generation of the particular tribe of O'Leary, to which Dirty Dan belonged, had actively or passively supported the battles of Ould Ireland against the hereditary enemy across the Channel, and Dirty Dan had suckled this holy hatred at his mother's breast; wherefore he regarded it in the light of his Christian duty to keep that hate alive by subscribing to The Gaelic American and believing all he read therein anent the woes of the Emerald Isle. Mr. O'Leary was also a member of an Irish-American revolutionary society, and was therefore aware that presently his kind of Irish were to rise, cast off their shackles (and with the help o' God and the German Kaiser) proclaim the Irish Republic.

For several months past, Daniel's dreams had dwelt mostly with bayonet-practice. Ordinary bayonets, however, were not for him. He dreamed his trusty steel was as long as a cross-cut saw, and nightly he skewered British soldiers on it after the fashion of kidneys and bacon en brochette. For two months he had been saving his money toward a passage home to Ireland, and the purchase of a rifle and two thousand rounds of ammunition —soft-nosed bullets preferred—with the pious intention of starting with "the boys" at the very beginning and going through with them to the bloody and triumphant finish.

Unfortunately for Dirty Dan, his battle in defense of Donald McKaye had delayed his sortie to the fields of martyrdom. On the morning that Nan Brent left Port Agnew, however, fortune had again smiled upon The O'Leary. Meeting Judge Moore, who occupied two local offices—justice of the peace and coroner—upon the street, that functionary had informed Dan that the public generally, and he and the town marshal in particular, traced an anology between the death of the mulatto in Darrow and Mr. O'Leary's recent sojourn in the Tyee Lumber Company's hospital, and therefore subpoenaed him to appear before a coroner's jury the following day at ten o'clock, a.m., then and there to tell what he knew about said homicide.

Dirty Dan received this summons with outward nonchalance but with tremendous secret apprehensions, and immediately fled for advice to no less a person than Andrew Daney.

However, the Fates ordained that Andrew Daney should be spared the trouble of advising Dirty Dan, for as the latter came shuffling down the hall toward Daney's office door, The Laird emerged from his old office and accosted his henchman.

"Well, Dan!" he greeted the convalescent, "how do you find yourself these days?"

"Poorly, sir, poorly," Dirty Dan declared. "'Twas only yisterday I had to take the other side av the shtreet to av'id a swamper from Dar row, sir."

The Laird smiled.

"Well, Dan, I think it's about time I did something to make you feel better. I owe you considerable for that night's work, so here's a thousand dollars for you, my boy. Go down to southern California or Florida for a month or two, and when you're back in your old form, report for duty."

"God bless ye, me lord, an' may the heavens be your bed!" murmured the astonished lumberjack, as The Laird produced his wallett and counted into Dan's grimy, quivering paw ten hundred-dollar bills. "Oh, t'ank you a t'ousand times, sor. An' ye'll promise me, won't ye, to sind for me first-off if ye should be wantin' some blackguard kilt?"

"I assure you, Dan, you are my sole official killer, laughed The Laird, and shook the O'Leary hand with great heartiness. "Better take my advice about a good rest, Dan!"

"Sor, I'll be afther havin' the vacation of me life."

"Good-by, then, and good luck to you, Dan!"

"Good-by, an' God bless ye sor!"

Five minutes later, Daniel J. O'Leary was in the general store fitting on what he termed a "Sunday suit." Also he brought himself two white shirts of the "b'iled variety, a red necktie, a brown derby hat, and a pair of shoes, all too narrow to accomodate comfortably his care-free toes. Next, he repaired to the barber shop, where he had a hair-cut and a shave. His ragged red mustache, ordinarily of the soup-strainer pattern, he had trimmed, waxed, and turned up at each end; the barber put much pomade on his hair and combed it in a Mazeppa, with the result that when Daniel J. O'Leary appeared at the railroad station, the following morning, and purchased a ticket for New York City, Hector McKaye, loitering in front of the station on the lookout for Nan Brent, looked at and through Mr. O'Leary without recognizing him from Adam's off ox.

It is perhaps, superfluous to remark that Dirty Dan was about to embark upon an enterprise designed to make his dreams come true. He was headed for Ireland and close grips with the hated red coats as fast as train and steamer could bear him.

Now, Mr. O'Leary had never seen Nan Brent, although he had heard her discussed in one or two bunkhouses about the time her child had been born. Also, he was a lumber jack, and since lumber-jacks never speak to the "main push" unless first spoken to, he did not regard it as at all necessary to bring himself to Hector McKaye's notice when his alert intelligence informed him that the Laird had failed to recognize him in his going-away habiliments. Further, he could see with half an eye that The Laird was waiting for some body, and when that somebody appeared on the scene, the imp of suspicion in Dirty Dan's character whispered: "Begorra, is the father up to some shenanighans like the son? Who's the girrl? I dunno. A young widder, belike, seein' she has a youngster wit' her."

He saw Nan and The Laird enter into ernest conversation, and his curiosity mastering him, he ventured to injuire of a roustabout who was loading baggage on a truck, who the young lady was. Upon receiving the desired information, he, with difficulty repressed a whistle of amazement and understanding; instantly his active imagination was at work.

The girl was leaving Port Agnew. That was evident. Also, The Laird must have known this, for he had reached the station before the girl and waited for her. Therefore, he must have something to do with inducing her to depart. Mr. O'Leary concluded that it was quite within the realm of possibility that The Laird had made it quite worth her while to refrain from wrecking the honor of his house, and the watched narrowly to observe whether or not money passed between them.

One thing puzzled Dirty Dan extremely. That was the perfectly frank, friendly manner in which his employer and this outcast woman greeted each other, the earnestness with which they conversed, and the effect of the woman's low-spoken words upon the color of Hector McKaye's face. When The Laird took his leave, the lumber-jack noted the increased respect—the emotion, even —with which he parted from her. The lumber-jack heard him say, "Good-by, my dear, and good luck to you, wherever you go;" so it was obvious Nan Brent was not coming back to Port Agnew. Knowing what he knew, Dan decided that, upon the whole, here was good riddance to the McKaye family of rubbish that might prove embarrassing if permitted to remain dumped on the Sawdust Pile.

"Poor gurrl," he reflected as he followed Nan aboard the train. "She has a sweet face, that she has, God forgive her! An be th' Rock of Cashel, she has a voice like an angel from heaven."

He sat down in a seat behind her and across the aisle, and all the way to Seattle he stared at the back of her neck or the beautiful rounded profile of her cheek. From time to time, he wondered how much Hector McKaye had paid her to disappear out of his son's life, and how that son would feel and what he would say to his father when he discovered his light o' love had flown the cage.

The following morning Dan boarded a tourist sleeper on the Canadian Pacific, and, to his profound amazement, discovered that Nan Brent and her child occupied a section in the same car.

"I wonder if the young Caddyheck himself'll meet her here," Mr. O'Leary reflected, alive with sudden suspicion, and springing into the taxicab that drew in at the stand the instant the taxi bearing Nan and her child pulled out, he directed the driver to follow the car ahead, and in due course found himself before the entrance to a hotel in lower Broadway—one of that fast disappearing number of fifth class hotels which were first-class thirty years ago.

Dirty Dan hovered in the offing until Nan had registered and gone up to her room. Immediately he registered also, and, while doing so, observed that Nan had signed her real name and given her address as Port Agnew, Washington. With unexpected nicety, Dirty Dan decided not to embarrass her by registering from Port Agnew also, so he gave his address as Seattle.

RESOLVED, That, being invested by the Creator with the same capabilities, and the same consciousness of responsibility for their exercise, it is demonstrably the right and duty of women, equally with man, to promote every righteous cause by every righteous means; and especially in regard to the great subjects of morals and religion, it is self-evident that her right to participate with her brother in teaching them, both in private and in public, by writing and by speaking, by any instrumentalities proper to be used, and in any assemblies proper to be held; and this being a self-evident truth growing out of the divinely implanted principles of human nature, any custom or authority adverse to it, whether modern or wearing the hoary sanction of antiquity, is to be regarded as a self-evident falsehood, and at war with mankind.

This paragraph, taken from the famous resolution passed at the Seneca Falls Convention, New York State, on July 19-20, 1848, where seventy-five years ago the first woman's rights convention took place, may be regarded as woman's declaration of independence. It was at Seneca Falls recently that the world congress of women, called by the National Woman's party, of America, was held.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

In 1848 all of a married woman's earnings belonged to her husband. He was the sole guardian of the children. He had the legal right to beat her in moderation—i.e., with a stick no thicker than a man's thumb. There were no free public high schools for girls. There were almost no women's societies except church sewing circles. It was "unwomanly" to belong even to a temperance club. She could not make a will or contract. Her husband had the right to lock her up. He if he died before her, could bequeath their children away to strangers.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

But the women, led by Susan B. Antheny, Elizabeth Blackwell, Elizabeth Coady Stanton, Lucretia Mott, Alice Stone Blackwell and Harriet Stanton Blatch, have since then organized and won rights which remedy that barbarous state of affairs.

We haven't got woman suffrage in Newfoundland yet.

Said J. K. Bobison, rear admiral and Engineer-in-Chief of the U.S. Navy, and Chief of the Bureau of Engineering of the Navy Department, U.S.A., in an address before the Michigan Bankers' Association at Detroit:

"It is not great armies or great navies or great guns that all the world. These are but symptoms. The underlying causes of war lie in economic competition, the unequal distribution of raw materials, inequal distribution of population helplessness of potentially rich countries and racial hatreds. Burglaries are not caused by the existence of burglars' tools; the tools exist because there are burglars."

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Reduced to plain English, the admiral wishes to say that the policy of grab employed by the big nations is the cause of modern wars. The grabbing, of course, is not done by the plain people: it is done by the big corporations, trusts and financial oligarchies of the big nations, who try to gobble up all the oil and mineral lands of any helpless country they happen to see. The competition among these trusts and financial monarchs results, periodically, in a fearful clash, and the deciding of the issue is done by sending the plain people of the nations out to fight and kill each other.

The cost of carrying on this fighting is borne by the great financial and industrial monarchs. Isn't it? Well, you ought to know: you, who have been suffering ever since the end of the latest war from that terrible shrinking in your income and the equally terrible swelling of prices.

But, then. What does a trifle like that matter? The French industrial monarchs have the rich Ruhr valley coal fields now, and the American millionaire-oligarchs have a monoply of the world's financial market. The English industrial magnates have the rich oil fields of Mesopotamia. Doesn't it make your chest swell out with pride and gratification? For these results wasn's it worth fighting for five years and killing 14,000,000 of the world's best manhood?

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

Newfoundland is the most sparcely-populated part of the British Empire. The following figures give the number of people per square mile:

United Kingdom	394.0
Canada	2.5
Newfoundland	1.5
Australia	1.8
New Zealand	11.7
South Africa	1.8

This country ought to have a population of 500,000 at least—she could support 1,000,000 if her natural resources were developed.

Lieut.-Commander the Hon. J. M. Kenworthy, R.N., M.P., writing in "Foreign Affairs" after a visit to Soviet Russia, says:

"Now, it is a fact that very few people in Russia expect the fall of the Soviet government. Even its most bitter opponents admit that it is stable. Lenin or any of the other great leaders may die or be stricken down by sickness, and the machine can carry on. There are a few irreconcilables who hope and pray for the intervention of foreign armies, and they admit that it is only by military action from outside can they hope for the fall of the present government.

"Furthermore, I believe that the great mass of the people are actually averse to the overthrow of the Soviet government. They know it will mean tremendous confusion, anarchy and civil war. Nor is there any other group or party fit or able to take its place."

Remember that, next time you read that the Soviet government is "about" to fall!

AUNT JANE WOULD WELCOME LETTERS FROM READERS

She Wants to Know What Other Union Women are Doing

Dear Mr. Editor:

JIM SEZ I must write again to The Advocate, as he has had a letter from Mr. Coaker, saying he was pleased with the last letter. Now, it's alright for Jim to tell me to write, and as I promised to love honor and obey him, I suppose I must do it, but I hardly know what to write about.

We women are busy these days picking and jamming berries, and I haven't much time for letter writing.

If some of the other women of the Union would write and tell us how they are getting along, it would be interesting reading, but I am sure some of your readers must be getting tired of reading Aunt Jane's letters.

It was away back in 1911 that I started writing, and at that time I could hardly write more than two sheets at a time, but they tell me practice makes perfect, and I suppose that is the reason I can write long letters to-day.

Don't you think it would be a good idea if some of the women would write to me, care the Advocate office, or to Change Islands, and tell me all the latest news about the Union at their places and then I would have something to write to The Advocate about.

I would like to hear sometimes from little girls, as I have heard they like to read my letters. You know this is a very small place, and as my rheumatics won't allow me to go out in rainy weather, I have to wait for someone to come in to give me the news.

How I wish I was young again, so I could go to Port Union and St. John's every spring and fall. Then I'd pick up some news for sure. Jim sez a woman's place is in the home but I say the women should take an active part in politics and in everything that benefits the land we live in.

I didn't think like that when I was young, or I would have started a fish ermen's union before Sir William thought of it.

I remember the first time he came to Change Islands about forming a Union here. Jim was against him at first, but I told him I'd get a divorce if he didn't go to the meeting and find out what this man Coaker had to say.

Jim was gone so long that I had to put on my bonnet and go down to where they had the meeting, and walk up and down the road until they came out. It seemed like six weeks to me waiting there in the cold, but I couldn't rest home and when they came out Jim was so excited he couldn't talk to me about it, but told me to get home as quick as I could and he would be up to the house in about five minutes.

Now that's the way men treat us women. Anyone would think we had no interest in anything but keeping house for them. When Jim came in he didn't want to talk, but I made him tell me something about the meeting, which he said was private. Now, they say the only way to get at a man is to feed him up good, so I gave Jim a good feed and got out his slippers and filled his pipe, and then his tongue commenced to wag.

I promised not to say one word about it to anyone, but of course I had to tell Tom's wife, as I never keep anything from her.

She promised to keep it a secret. About a week after, Skipper Bill's wife came in and told me I had no right to give away Mr. Coaker's secrets. I asked her how she heard, and she told me her son's wife told her all about the meeting, but made me promise not to mention it. I found out then that Tom's wife told her sister, and Annie to her cousin Sarah, who promised faithfully not to mention it, but Sarah never kept a secret in her life. So she had to tell Skipper Bill's wife about what happened.

Now, Mr. Coaker left thinking his meeting was a secret, and no doubt it would have been if Tom's wife had not told anyone what I told her Jim told me.

It's an awful thing to be a gossip, and I'm sure Tom's wife will get into trouble one of these days.

Well, we women soon settled that the union would be a good thing for Newfoundland, and when Mr. Coaker came back, he found quite a lot of our men ready to join, and Change Islands was soon looked upon as the union stronghold.

I'll never forget the picnic we women gave Mr. Coaker in 1913. We had a great time and I know Mr. Coaker enjoyed himself, as he took three pieces of my cake, and after the picnic he told me my cake was the best. I asked him how he knew it was my cake, and he told me that Jim told him it was mine, and advised him to put a couple of pieces in his pocket, as he might get hungry later on.

I hope all the women who are married to Union men will make sure their husbands attend the meetings of the Union this winter, as I know the meetings will be interesting.

I think it would be a good idea if we women got together and held meetings during the winter to talk about union matters and how we can improve ourselves and our children, and the place we live in. We could bring our knitting and we would want to keep our meetings secret and not do any gossiping, as gossiping never did any good.

Next time, I'll try to have more to write about.—AUNT JANE.

MINERAL THAT WORKS MIRACLES

Disease Cured By Bottled Rays.

One of the results of the new campaign against cancer will be that we shall learn much more of the nature and possibilities of radium, the mysterious mineral discovered twenty-five years ago by M. and Mme. Curie.

The Government has placed its available supplies of radium, valued at £80,000, at the disposal of those in charge of the campaign, and scientists are being asked to devote their energies to studying it with a view to applying the gift to the best possible use.

Comparatively few people have seen radium, and possibly fewer still would recognize it at sight. Radium is usually kept in a special kind of glass tube in which are fixed a tiny screen, a piece of talc, and a minute magnifying glass. The radium rests on the talc, and looks like a tiny yellow smear no bigger than an ordinary full-stop. A speck of radium this size may be worth anything up to £15,000.

Seen in the dark a speck of radium glows fiercely enough to be visible yards away, and it glows for years at the same intensity. Radium has been tested in liquid air, far below freezing point, and in super-heated furnaces without in any way being affected by these extremes of temperature. Another little-known fact is that it throws off enough heat to bring its own weight of water to boiling-point every hour for two or three thousand years!

One of the strangest chapters in the history of the miracle mineral, as radium has been called, is the story of how it came to play its great part in the treatment of disease.

The action of the mineral on the human tissues was quite unknown and unsuspected until one day Professor Becquerel, a famous French scientist, incautiously put a tube of radium in his waistcoat pocket.

Fourteen days afterwards he noticed on his skin a sort of rash, which quickly developed into inflammation of the affected part. Experiments were carried out, with the result that radium rays, of which there are several, opened up a new era in medical practice.

Many striking cures have been effected. Ulcerous growths disappear before the rays, while such diseases as gout, rheumatism, neurasthenia, and affections of the join's are dispersed with equal certainty. Radium rays transform weak body cells into strong, vigorous ones, which not only resist disease, but help the whole constitution to resist it.

One question that is exercising the minds of scientists just now is whether there will be a radium famine.

Some of the most promising deposits of radium-bearing ores have lately given out, leading to a search, so far not very encouraging, in other parts of the world. Canada and South America, as well as Russia, Portugal, and Cuba, have been secured for supplies, with a success far short of expectations.

£500,000 An Ounce

Up to the time of M. and Mme. Curie's discovery, pitch-blende, the jet-black mineral in which radium is found, was regarded as being almost valueless. One mining company in the United Kingdom actually paid large sums to have the residue of its pitch-blende supplies, from which another mineral had been extracted, away to the destructor. It was estimated that the firm in question lost nearly £20,000 in radium.

In conversation with the writer, Sir William Bragg, of London University, stated that there are reasons for believing that large deposits of radium-bearing ore exist deep in the earth in hitherto unexploited parts of the world, and that these supplies may of radium is roughly £500,000 an soon be tapped. At present the price of radium is roughly £500,000 an ounce.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 19th, 1923

The Governor's Appeal

In another column we publish an appeal issued by His Excellency, Sir William Allardyce, to the people of Newfoundland on behalf of the earthquake sufferers of Japan.

As His Excellency points out in his letter, "we have numerous urgent claims to meet in the case of our own people, many of whom are in straightened and indigent circumstances owing to unemployment, financial stringency and otherwise," but the appeal having been made, it is to be hoped that the response will be one of which the country need not be ashamed.

The Advocate will be glad to receive and acknowledge any contributions towards the Japanese Relief Fund and forward them to His Excellency's Private Secretary, who will act as Treasurer of the Fund.

Propaganda, Pure and Simple

The avidity with which our morning contemporary jumps on anything in the nature of propaganda coming from the European fish markets is really remarkable. The tone of hopelessness with which this sort of transparent propaganda is published by our m. c. would be amusing were it not disgusting. The foreign dealers in our produce throw the bait, and poor fish of the Daily News type swallow it, hook, line and sinker.

A few days ago a letter from an Oporto firm, written a month ago, turned up at the Board of Trade, and the Daily News published it this morning with the following pessimistic caption: "Oporto Market Not Looking Good For New Arrivals." The letter in question contains this statement: "The market here continues dull, the consumption being too low in proportion to stocks, which stocks will be increased with the cargoes now at sea." The News publishes this without question or comment, notwithstanding the fact that its issue of a week ago contained the following remarks anent the same market: "A report to the Board of Trade from the Oporto market for last week shows that the consumption for the period was 12,229 qtls. which was a record and evidently means that the importers are disposing of old stocks at an attractive figure to make room for the new fish coming in."

It is quite apparent that the Daily News is only too anxious to play the game of those whose object it is to keep prices down, for the attitude of that paper can be interpreted in no other way.

The Conference and Preferential Tariff

The Toronto Mail and Empire expresses the belief that the Imperial Economic Conference has been called by the British Government for the purpose of promoting preferential trade. Commenting on this opinion of the Mail and Empire, the Toronto Globe says:

"The British Government has a large majority in "both branches of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, "and if that body is in favor of a preferential tariff for the "staple products of the Dominions the thing can be done "without delay, and it is quite certain that no opposition "will come from the Dominions. It would be a queer pro-"cedure to call an Imperial Conference in order to ask the "representatives of the Dominions whether they would "have any objection to better access to the markets of the "United Kingdom.

"The Dominion Premiers might, however, be asked to "say what they would be willing to do in return for a Brit-"ish preference, and we doubt whether our contemporary "would be wildly enthusiastic over a proposal to reduce the "Canadian duties on British imports. The obstacle on our "side is the protective tariff. The obstacle in Great Britain "is opposition to protective taxes on food."

To the People of Newfoundland:

The appalling calamity that has befallen Japan has stirred to its depths the hearts of the people of the civilized world. It is reported that the official returns place the total casualties at one and a quarter millions and the number of houses destroyed at over 300,000. Such a catastrophe is unique. Our common humanity demands that our deepest sympathy which has already been communicated to the Government and People of Japan, should take a practical form. I have conferred with the Heads of the various religious denominations and suggested that a "Japan Relief Sunday" be held not later than the end of November and that the offertories be devoted to the cause of the sufferers. This is receiving consideration.

Notwithstanding that we have numerous urgent claims to meet in the case of our people, many of whom are in straightened and indigent circumstances owing to unemployment, financial stringency and otherwise, I feel confident that this appeal for assistance on behalf of those who have been suddenly stricken and rendered destitute and homeless by earthquake and fire will be met in a liberal spirit.

The Press have kindly undertaken to receive and acknowledge subscriptions from those anxious to help, and my Private Secretary will act as Treasurer of the Relief Fund.

W. L. ALLARDYCE,
Governor.

Fishery Research Around Newfoundland Coast Line

Some Details of Interest to Fishermen Gathered From Prof. Huntsman's Lecture In King George Institute.

Iti s a pity that the practical fishermen of the country were not present at Professor Huntman's interesting lecture delivered at the King George Institute yesterday.

Regarding fisheries and particularly the cod fishery little, if anything, has been done by Newfundland to obtain scientific information concerning the fisheries, which may be turned to practical account. We are primarily a fishing people and will continue to be so, unless because of the apathy of Governments and the avarice of exporters we reduce the producers to such a state of hopelessness, in the matter of securing adequate returns for their labor as to lead the people to abandon the fisheries as a means of livelihood. On the one hand there is no avocation which the true born Newfoundlander prefers to follow than that of the fishermen; while again, the dread of a precarious living is taking such a firm hold on the younger generation as to make it quite clear to all thinking men that our national asset is being seriously impaired every year. In many cases, an abandonment of the fishery by our wage-earners, means an abandonment of their native soil, as a place upon which to carve out a future. Consequently the neighboring dominion, but particularly the United States, are being enriched with the best blood of Newfoundland. Our place as a fishing country, should be in the van guard, and not lagging behind, as we have been in methods of catch, marketing and conservation. As Professor Huntsman pointed out, for the past twenty years Canada have been giving close attention to the scientific side of her fishery problem. The Canadian Government shows its practical interest in increasing proportion year by year, and are convinced that public money expended in this way brings results.

It is to be hoped that this country will continue to co-operate with Canada and the United States, in fishery research to the full extent of our financial ability. Yesterday's meeting ought not to be dismissed from the minds of the gentlemen of the Board of Trade, as a passing incident of minor importance. The work being done by Hunstman and his associates is of major importance and should receive the hearty co-operation of the Government and the trade.

Governor Allardyce enunciated on a simple truth, when he said in introducing Professor Huntsman and his associate, Mr. Gardner, that the fisheries were, and had been all down through the centuries, Newfoundland's unfailing means of support and her greatest asset—the fisheries were our all in all. We lived by the fisheries and every bit of information, technical or otherwise, which appertained to them, should appeal strongly to a Newfoundland audience.

Professor Huntsman in opening his address, said he was glad of the opportunity afforded him to speak to a St. John's audience. He particularly wished to thank the people of the Straits Shore for the hospitality extended; at Red Bay and other sections visited, the region reminded him of the conditions existing in his own home territory of Northern Ontario—the rocky formations, hills of granite and the hard conditions under which the people live. At Red Bay the fishery this season had been a total failure, but this did not interfere with the hospitality of the people of which the speaker wished to pay public tribute.

The present investigations were being carried on under a joint arrangement between Canada, the United States and Newfoundland, and had for their principal object scientific research relating to deep sea fishes. The initial steps were taken last year when a number of drift bottles were thrown over board from the Digby on her eastern passage from St. John's and two sets put off the S. S. Kyle in the Cabot Strait. These tests were undertaken not so much for navigation purposes as to determine the circulation of the currents and their consequent effect on animal life in the sea. The lecturer pointed out that these currents circulate in a definite form and gave as an illustration the brine contained in a cold storage refigerator service. There was every reason to believe that those various currents which caused changes in temperature were responsible for the movements of fish and other sea life. The International Committee had been at work along these lines for several years. Associated with him, for the present season, was Mr. Gardner, representing Newfoundland. This gentleman has had extensive experience in investigating from a scientific view point the habits, food, etc. of fresh water fishes in the Old Country and along the Irish Coast, and had been of great service on the present expedition, particularly so because of his knowledge of the various form of animal food life obtained from the sea and classfying it. Mr. D. J. Davies, was the Newfoundland representative on this committee, and had also rendered valuable service. The data as gathered would be exchanged and he hoped for concerted and united efforts on the part of the countries concerned, and felt certain that the ultimate results would repay all the labors and seemingly insignificant efforts now being made.

The drift bottle experiments made off St. John's with the bottles put off the Digby had not given very definite results, although some slight indications as to the course of the currents sweeping our Eastern Sea Board made it possible to hazzard an opinion. The only returns came from St. Mary's and Placentia Bays, were a couple of bottles were picked up. A year after the bottles were distributed from the Digby; one of the lot was found on the coast of Iceland. The presence of those bottles in St. Mary's and Placentia Bay would indicate that the Labrador current rounding Cape Race from the eastward did not go west of St. Pierre.

The bottle tests in the Gulf gave much more satisfactory results and indicated extraordinary conditions as to the temperature of the water. The drift bottles put off the Kyle had been picked up at Flower's Cove The current investigations demonstrated there were two distinct currents coursing through the Straits of Belle Isle, a southern current starting in the Strait and running south with the ebb tide, the out flow showed a speed of nine miles. While with the flood tide the movement was northerly at the rate of six miles.

The methods by which the temperature of the water obtained and the current measured were explained with much detail. Every scientific precaution is taken to secure accuracy. A double thermometer is attached to an oblong aparatus which is let down the required depth for the purpose of obtaining the water temperature. By reversing a lever the valves are closed, and by moving the machine upside down the mercury in the tube is broken, so that the exact temperature at the required depth is shown on the register when the testing machine is hauled on board the ship. For the purpose of confirming tests of tide or water temperature, two ships are used at a required distance, in the case of the Straits, one boat was moored on the Newfoundland side and the other on the Canadian side. The tests were made simultaneously and extraordinary results obtained. On the Newfoundland side it was found on occasions the conditions were favorable for fishing, while 7 miles away cold weather prevailed, to use a Nfld. expression, on the Canadian side you would want your cuffs on to work while on the Nfld. side it was short-sleeve weather. Fish of certain varities will only frequent waters where the temperature is suitable and food of the kind liked is obtainable, Dr. Huntsman pointed out that no where in his knowledge were such rapid changes in temperature noticed over small areas as around the Nfld coast line. The presence of fish in one locality and its absence a few miles away was referred to, and this seeming phenomena in a measure accounted for by the prevailing winds and tides and the bluff head lands.

A cone shaped callico net, top of which is as large as a puncheon head and which tappered away to the size of ordinary boats kettle and to the smaller end of which was attached an ordinary tin kettle was exhibited as the principal means by which the scientist obtained, what he described as a very good voyage. The smaller things are sought after by the investigator. He does not seek to trap the cod, but the food which the codfish, lobster or other fish seek; where these are obtained the fish also frequent. The various kinds of cod were also referred to. The Rock Cod which was very abundant in Hudson Bay and arctic waters was a different fish from what is known as Nfld. codfish, though we are likely to consider it of the same family. The Tom Cod was also a different species. The lecturer also pointed out that bait fishes might be present in plenty, but the cod fish was not to be found. He then pointed out that at Chatteau this summer fish was plenty, at Blanc Sablon, none until very late. At Carpoon, there was also a great difference. The fish might strike in and off without any apparent reason, but all these things were subject to the temperature of the water, upon which the prevailing winds had a lot to do.

He, Dr. Huntsman, urged that Newfoundland should make a start in a small way; no elaborate outfit was necessary, and the resulting good would be far more than we can realize. The Canadian programme was now 20 years in operation, and the success achieved was shown by the fact that the activities of the Committee were being enlarged year by year. The Budget this year contained an appropriation treble what it was when the work of scientific fishery enquiry was undertaken in a systematic and persistent manner. Akin to this work of investigating the habits and movement of sea fish, was the conservation of the lobster in Canada; finding the cause and remedy for redding of fish. Fish freezing, the lecturer thought, was a most important factor in the future of fish handling in Nfld. as well as elsewhere, and while it may be far afield the properties obtained from fish products and used in the new treatment for diabetes, were also within the scope of the work, and might prove of immense value to humanity. Results can only be obtained little by little. It was acknowledged by all, that our methods of fish curing were very imperfect and far from satisfactory. Traditional usages have to be broken down, and if intelligent and persistent effort is put forth, a big future is in store for the fishing industry of Newfoundland.

Mr. Outerbridge introduced Mr. Gardner, whose services on this expedition had been arranged for by the Home Authorities on behalf of Newfoundland.

Mr. Gardner said his work for the past three years had had to do with fresh water fishes. He found the conditions so absolutely different that it was not possible to speak with authority on the results obtained. He said much valuable information had been obtained, which when properly classified, ought to be of permanent value. He advocated simple experiments which might be made at little cost, such as testing the bottom, taking temperatures, noting weather conditions, the directions of winds, etc., each season. Co-relating these facts he thought might help materially in indicating where the fishing would be good or otherwise, and explain why in certain seasons fish was obtainable in one section and not in another. In Mr. Gardner's opinion, the action of the wind or fish food—these small actions, which to layman mean nothing—had a very important bearing on the presence or absence of fish in quantity. The fish followed the food where it could be plentifully obtained and vice versa, provided the temperature of the water was suitable.

The hope was expressed by Mr. Outerbridge that Mr. Gardner's services to continue the work would be available to the Colony next year. He is a gentleman who appears to be thoroughly painstaking and capable and while not so definite in his statements as one would wish, due no doubt to lack of sufficient data, we feel the result of this years work will be of considerable value. Spasmodic attempts will prove valueless. What we want is intelligent and persisted effort.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Much Interest Being Shown in the Large Number of Women Safely Carried Through the Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Following Letters Are Impressive

Owing to modern methods of living, few women approach this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying and often painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, nervousness, headaches, melancholia and irritability are only a few of the symptoms incident to this trying period of a woman's life, and the following letters prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to overcome these abnormal conditions.

"Fisherville, Ky.—"For several months I was under the doctor's care as he said my nervousness, chills, hot flashes and weakness was caused by the Change of Life, but I did not seem to get any better. I was not able to work and spent most of my time in bed. A friend called to see me and asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you how much good the medicine did me, as I had such a hard time before taking it. I can only advise every woman passing through the Change of Life to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it did so much for me."—Mrs. EDWARD B. NEAL, Star Route, Fisherville, Ky.

A Michigan Woman Helped

Ionia, Michigan.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and had been under the doctor's care without any relief. A friend in Lansing, Mich., asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel fifty per cent better already. If any one in this condition doubts the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to help them I will gladly answer their letters."—Mrs. MAX W. HAHN, 537 N. Jefferson Street, Ionia, Mich.

A New York Woman Helped

Syracuse, N. Y.—"I was used up with nervousness, weakness and hot flashes so I could hardly keep around, and could not get out much on account of those awful prickly feelings. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helping another woman with symptoms like mine. My husband got some for me, and after taking it five months I can get around and even do my housework, washing and ironing included, and my friends can see what a change it has made in me."—Mrs. SIDNEY HUMPHREY, 626½ Burnet Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y.

American Blood To Mingle With That of British Royalty

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Despite cautiously worded official denials, reports persist in well-informed quarters here of the pending engagement of Prince George, youngest son of the King and Queen, to Lady Alexandra Curzon, youngest daughter of Foreign Secretary Curzon by his first wife, who was Miss Mary Leiter of Washington.

Lady Alexandra is nineteen. The Prince will be twenty-one on Dec. 20. The World to-day is informed the betrothal will be announced on the Prince's 21st birthday. It is said about six months will elapse between the engagement and the marriage. The wedding would mean, for the first time, a distinct American blood relationship with British royalty.

Governor Forced Gas Down Can't Raise It

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N. Y.

Governor W. H. McMaster, of South Dakota, who started the sudden tumble in the price of gasoline throughout the Middle West by putting the State into the retail oil business. He forced the price of gas down to 16 cents and faces the problem of forcing it up again to 20 cents which he now finds necessary to "give the independents a fair deal." So far, he has failed in the latter effort.

CORRESPONDENT GIVES VIVID ACCOUNT OF JAPAN HORROR

LONDON, Sept. 10. — (Associated Press)—The Tokio correspondent of the Central News, cabling from Kobe, under date of September 8, describes some of his experiences in the capital and aboard a Canadian steamer after the earthquake. He says:

"Passing the palace of the Prince Regent, who fortunately was away at Nikko with the Emperor and Empress, I saw huge sections of the wall gone; the main gate of the Diet building nearby likewise was badly damaged. The other Government buildings, made of modern brick, seemed to have borne the shock well.

"Passing Hibiya Park, in the centre of Tokio, the gate posts of which were a mass of ruins, I came to a large two-storey restaurant. The roof of this building lay flat on the ground, and fire had broken out in one of its rooms. This was the first outbreak of the fire in Tokio, which spread rapidly and added horror to the already appalling spectacle.

"My greatest surprise was to find the Imperial Hotel, a massive stone and brick building, standing rock like, entirely intact.

"I soon reached the Imperial Palace; here I found the damage considerable. Two modern police headquarters, the Imperial Theatre, some office buildings and the wall enclosing the palace grounds, which had stood for centuries and had been constructed on shock proof lines, had all crumbled.

WHOLE STREETS AFIRE

"Soon after passing this spot I experienced another sharp shock, which caused large buildings in front of me to sway and eventually to topple. At a rough guess 80 per cent. of the modern structures of the city survived the shock. But there was a different tale to tell soon afterwards, when smoke began to curl up in different parts throughout the city. Within an hour fierce flames were shooting skyward."

The correspondent tells of making his escape from Tokio in a motor car filled with men and women. Finding the car useless outside the city, because the roads were torn up and the bridges gone the correspondent made his way to Yokohama on foot. He found that the villages had the same terrifying experiences as Tokio.

"People were wandering aimlessly about; others were sitting huddled together in the road, others bringing out their belongings from ruined homes. From the ruins came groans of the injured. Many lay dead on the ground. At length I came into the main road, one which was an endless stream of refugees, all making for Yokohama. At last I reached the suburbs of Yokohama, only to find that it had suffered the same fate as Tokio. The whole streets were afire."

After sleeping on the platform of a suburban railway station, except when interrupted by shocks, the correspondent proceeded to Yokohama to find a steamer.

"I passed another long stream of Japanese refugees," he continues, "similar to those with whom I trudged on the previous day. They are foodless, many almost without clothes, staring hopelessly and wearing dumb expressions, all seeking shelter from inferno. Coming into the heart of Yokohama I beheld a scene more tragic than anything I had witnessed.

ON EMPRESS OF CANADA

"The sanitary department were piling up many hundreds of dead; on both sides of the street; a dying mother clinging to her baby was lying in the gutter; ambulances were hastily removing the dying and injured, who lay thick in all directions.

"On board the steamer I found a scene of great confusion. Women were sobbing, children were groaning, but some people were calming, helping them and endeavouring to relieve the suffering of the injured, and many lives were saved by this kindly help. The vessel was the Empress of Canada. Many refugees had arrived aboard with rags tied around their feet. Men were without shoes, women without stockings, their dresses in shreds.

"But nearly all were bearing up bravely; they even enjoyed a little laughter over the grotesque garb in which they had escaped, notwithstanding that some of these passengers were penniless, though wealthy the day before.

"As we proceeded along the coast we saw fresh fires spring up in the distance: burning oil blazed, sending clouds of smoke and flames skyward, while the cries of foodless natives wandering along the shore could be heard.

"When the scene of havoc had faded in the distance the refugees flung themselves exhausted on deck chairs and floors. The regular passengers organized a relief scheme, distributing clothing, sharing their cabins with the refugees, raising funds and with patience and sympathy, listening to the poor people as they related their experiences.

"Before our ship reached harbor late in the afternoon it slowed down, while a casket bearing the remains of an infant who had died of exposure was lowered over the side. Down below decks a woman who had lost all her family was raving mad.

For Cash on Hand Now $200,000,000

RESERVE PILES UP DESPITE DAILY PAYROLL EXCEEDING $500,000.

DETROIT, Sept. 11.—Two years of unprecedented prosperity are responsible for the cash balance of about $200,000,000 shown in a financial statement of the Ford Company. Officials of the company say that the year 1922 piled up a far greater cash surplus than this year.

Mr. Ford began to pile up this tremendous amount of cash shortly after the depression of 1921, when he reorganized his company so that savings of more than $50,000,000 annually in open costs resulted. In the fall of last year his statement of cash on hand showed that he had $170,000,000, and this has been increased $30,000,000 during the first six months of 1923.

The reason that Henry Ford has not done as well in piling up a cash surplus this year is said to be due to the fact that he has expended at least $60,000,000 during the first half of the year for expansions and improvements which he did not make during 1922.

At this time his company is manufacturing slightly more than 7,000 cars a day, and he expects to reach a total of 10,000 daily before the end of the year. By Dec. 31, statisticians here say, he will have a cash reserve of $250,000,000 if the production plans are carried out and no tremendous improvements are made.

It is pointed out that at the very ordinary rate of interest of 5 per cent. Henry Ford would have an income of $10,000,000 a year, even if he never realized a cent beyond the interest on cash in hand at this time.

The Ford Company has a distinct liking for cash and very little of the cash surplus is tied up in bonds or other salable securities, usually listed as "cash." The majority of his money is deposited in banks, scattered from coast to coast. Many of these banks he controls himself, such as the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit, one of the largest and most powerful in the Middle West.

A great deal of cash is also kept on hand to meet payrolls, which average more than $500,000 a day. No outsider knows just what the Ford payroll amounts to, but every day in the week is pay day at the Detroit factories, and he is said to have more than 100,000 persons on his payroll at a minimum rate of $5 a day.

Britain's Air Power

Why Predominance Must be Kept
By Lieut.-Col. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, M.C., M.P.
(Empire Mail)

Colonel Moore-Brabazon is widely known both on account of his pioneer work on behalf of British aviation and his keen interest in discussions on air questions both in Parliament and at gatherings of experts. He has the distinction of being the first Englishman successfully to fly a biplane, and in 1909 achieved an early triumph on behalf of the British aircraft industry by winning the "Daily Mail" prize of £1,000 for the first aviator to fly a mile on an all English-made machine. Since 1918 he has represented the Chatham Division of Rochester in Parliament.

The decision of the Government to increase the Air Force, with the view of defending the heart of the Empire —London—from air attack is a welcome one, although it is belated. As one considers the small extent of our air power, and then sees how many of the units composing the force are abroad, the position from the point of view of the defence of our own country becomes nothing short of alarming, and it is therefore a welcome action on the part of the Government that provision is to be made, in some small way at any rate, for dealing with any enemies that may come against the Mother Country.

The condition of Europe is in such a state of flux that one does not really know from day to day what is about to happen, and with tempers high, and nations always thinking that their pride is being hurt, it is not a wise moment to entertain those dreams of disarmament which we should like to see realised, both from humanitarian considerations and because of our pockets. The race in armaments between ourselves and France is a particularly unfortunate affair, although I think that, with real goodwill on both sides, we might be able to stop it.

France's Naval Squadrons

This country, however, can in no way be accused of aggression, and our Allies, the French, have acknowledged this quite frankly. At the same time, many of us think that the provision made for the French Air Force is too large for their present needs, and that it forces us to compete against them, unless we are to be bullied, on any question of policy that may arise. The institution by France of 50 naval squadrons cannot be directed, as is often stated, against the East, as the possible subjugation of Germany or Moscow will not be accomplished by naval squadrons. Is it not natural, therefore, that we should ask against whom are these 50 French naval squadrons to be directed?

It is not the time, nor is it our intention, to rush this question of aerial defence, but I believe it is the firm resolve of this country to see that, although we are pacific and not wish to waste our money in armaments when it is so badly wanted for other purposes, we are not deprived of the control in the air, which, at the end of the War, we dominated so completely.

EXPERT TELLS HOW TO PROTECT GARDEN PLANTS FROM COLD

READVILLE, Mass., Sept. 16 (AP) —Put a damp, warm air jacket on your garden plants if you want to protect them from frost this autumn. That is the advice of Alexander McAdie, director of the Blue Hill Observatory, who speaks as one with authority on the subject because of his success in aiding orange growers in California to keep their crops from freezing.

"Your grandmother probably loved flowers and took good care of them," said Director McAdie, who also is professor of meteorology at Harvard. "She had the right idea, when the crisp early fall nights came round, of protecting the flowers from frost by wrapping newspapers around them carefully, pinning the paper so that there would be no gaps and wide-open places. In this way her plants would keep their blossoms until October.

"But grandma did not know it all; we think we know a little more than the old lady did. We now wrap the newspaper around the plant just as before, but after pinning it tightly we twist another sheet of paper into some thing like a rope about an inch thick and pin it in place. We then take a third sheet and wrap it around just as was done the first sheet. We now have an air space about an inch thick between the two wrappings and this air jacket prevents loss of heat. It is an excellent heat insulator. We have practically bottled up the inside hot air around the plant, and if this is done about three o'clock in the afternoon it almost as effective as keeping a small stvoe near the plant. Also we should sprinkle the plant and the ground with water, sprinkle it well, before we wrap the papers around it.

"With most flowers and small fruits the temperature has to fall four or five degrees below the freezing point and remain there for several hours before damage is done. Plants can be cooled to a point below freezing and yet if gradually warmed up, not injured.

"So water the plants freely, cover them tightly, put an air jacket on them and after uncovering the next morning sprinkle again with water that is rather cold. Don't use hot water. And shade the plants from the sun for several hours.

"Of course for garden truck, larger gardens and orchards, where the protection of the crop is a commercial problem, it is more practical to cover with light weight cloth or use orchard waters, oil pots, etc. Besides heating, the smoke serves as a screen or cover."

Canadian Indians Appeal To London

Toronto, Sept. 12.—For the second time within two years, the Six Nations Indians of Canada, are appealing direct to the Great White Father beyond the seas, for redress of grievances.

Chief Deskaheh, Speaker of the Six Nations' council, is now in England, where he will lay before King George the complaints of his people and their demand for recognition of their autonomy. He will also present to the Hague Tribunal, a petition signed by the chiefs of the federated tribes, urging intervention on their behalf.

Spencer College

The Intermediate C. H. E. results were announced yesterday, and all the candidates passed excepting one, who failed in arithmetic. This is a splendid showing for the College and we congratulate Miss Cherrington, the Principal, and her efficient staff. Miss Barlow, the trained specialist, in Art and English, has telegraphed that being unfortunately ill in hospital she is unable to fill her engagement. She will be replaced by Miss Keefe who has spendid certificates for the Art subjects as well as for English and history. Miss Keefe is due here by the next Liverpool steamer.

Referee's Decision Upheld

At a special meeting of the Junior Football League held last night, the protest of the Holy Cross team claiming the goal scored was not a goal, came up for discussion, and after consideration, the referee's decision was upheld.

To-night's Game

At 6.15 to-night the Cadets and Wesley teams will play off for the Championship honors, when the game of the season is anticipated. A win for either team gives them the championship, whilst a draw puts both teams and the Holy Cross on the same level. With this in view, a lively contest is anticipated, and a large attendance is predicted.

Motor Car Stolen

On Monday night, a motor car owned by W. G. Smith, Allandale Road, was stolen from in front of his residence where he had left it. The robbery occurred between 8 p.m. Monday and 6 a.m. yesterday, causing Mr. Smith much inconvenience and trouble.

The matter was reported to the police who made a search, but no trace of the car has been found. The car is a new one and the number is 4527. During the past season several cars have been stolen and in one case, several hundred dollars damage was done.

POLICE COURT

A drunk was discharged.

A domestic who has no home, and who has been repeatedly before the Court, was sent down for 30 days.

A young man given in charge by his mother for being drunk and disorderly in her house, was placed under bond.

A 24 year old labourer who has a police record, was arrested on suspicion of being the party who robbed the clothes of two carpenters employed on the Waterford Bridge Road. a $10-bill and a razor were stolen from the shack, in which the workmen left their clothes. The man was produced in Court this morning, but the witnesses were unable to identify him, and he was thereupon released by Mr. McCarthy.

A Logy Bay fisherman charged with the larceny of two motor rugs valued at $50.00, the property of Richard Voisey, was released on bail of $200.00 furnished by Mr. Robt. Crosbie. He denies the charge and is defended by Mr. Higgins, K.C. The case was put off for a week.

HOLY CROSS DEFEAT T. A.

In the height of the rainstorm the T. A. and Holy Cross played off for honors in the Junior League last night. At 6.40 the referee called the teams together, the Holy Cross defending the western goal and the T. A. beginning play with only seven men. At the very outset Holy Cross made an onslaught on the T. A. goal and within half a minute Neville had recorded. At this point the T. A. had been strengthened by three additional men and the game became very interesting with play about evenly divided. Several charges were made on both goals to be repulsed by the goalies. Good play was impossible owing to the condition of the field and ball. Just before half time Jackman made a beautiful run through from centre, notching up No. 2 for the Holy Cross.

The teams changed over and fought hard in spite of the fact that the players were wet to the skin, but despite the best efforts of both teams no further scoring resulted.

Pope Strengthens Edict Against Immodest Dress

ROME, Aug. 24 (AP)—As a result of the recent sensational incident when 150 women, forming a part of a deputation to the Pope, were turned back from the Vatican because their dresses were low cut at the neck and had short sleeves, the Papal Majordomo has issued a new set of regulations for dress when being received by the Pope.

Women must wear dresses covering the arms to the wrist and the neck to the chin, says the regulations. The dresses must be made of thick material and not transparent, and be long enough to reach down to the ankles of the wearer. Dresses giving undue prominence to the figure are discouraged.

Gloves must not be worn and only wedding or engagement rings may adorn the fingers of intending visitors to the Vatican, who are now submitted to three examinations, viz., first at the door, second at St. Damaso Courtyard, and if they pass these posts their invitation card is crossed with a blue mark. The third examination is made in the Papal anti-chamber, where successful candidates receive a red cross on their cards.

Make-up of any description is strictly forbidden. Hair dye is tolerated provided it is not of the conspicuous peroxide tint.

Schr. Jessie Bell Is Beached

VESSEL BECOMES WATERLOGGED

The Deputy Minister of Customs received a message from the sub-Collector at St. Lawrence yesterday, stating that the boat Jessie Bell, Edward Power, master, of Ship Hr., Placentia Bay, which left St. John's on Sunday, for home, arrived at Little St. Lawrence Monday in a waterlogged condition, and in order to save the lives of those on board, the little craft was beached. The captain reports the boat, which had a cargo of provisions on board, as being in a bad condition.

To Make Coke and Cut Out Hard Coal

Eighty Idle Ovens at Sydney to Start. Steel Busy.

SYDNEY, N.S., Sept. 13—(Canadian Press)—From unofficial sources, it is learned that the British Empire Steel Corporation plans to put into operation the battery of coke ovens erected two years ago by the Koppers Corporation. These ovens, which cost several millions, have been idle since erection, the company securing sufficient coke from two batteries constructed early in the war. There are 120 ovens in operation, but eighty more will be put into operation.

With this the corporation hopes to be able to supply the Upper Canadian market with coke for domestic use, and will make an effort to enter that market and cut into the sale of anthracite coal in that part of the Dominion.

Another blast furnace is to be blown in within the next few weeks. Three furnaces are operating, but not since the war has the corporation operated four. It is apparent that business with the steel company is good, and a fairly large number of orders are on hand.

ROYAL SLUR PROVOKES IRE OF GERMAN TYPISTS

LEIPSIG, Aug. 27 (AP)—Princess Margarete of Hohenlohe-Oehringen started something when she pleaded in defence of the aid she gave the notorious Captain Ehrhardt that she was so lonely that she "even thought of becoming a typist." Scores of self-respecting women stenographers have risen to protest against the use of "even" by the princess, who is now serving a prison sentence for the shelter she gave Ehrhardt, to the great displeasured of his wife.

One intelligent correspondent wrote the following letter to a German newspaper: "Becoming a typist is surely greatly to be preferred to being in jail for six months. We typewriting girls, who have taken part in all the big conferences from Versailles to Genoa, should have welcomed the princess in our midst. We should have taught her with womanly tact and delicacy that the world has turned round a little, and that work is the honorable task of a German today. Further, we should have taught her that one must always speak the truth, and that by having a 'friendship' with a married man one destroys one's chance in life. The princess will doubtless be lonelier than ever in jail."

All inquiries regarding Job work, Advertising and Subscriptions should be addressed to the Business Manager of the Advocate.

Ocean Air Line Is Nearly Ready

Zeppelin Type Machines to be Used—Can Cross in Three Days.

Preparations are now almost complete for the establishment of what will be the first trans-Atlantic airway.

It is anticipated that trial trips will be made in the spring of next year, but no definite date has yet been fixed for the inauguration of the service proper.

Airships of the Zeppelin type are to be used, and there will be two simultaneous flights each week in each direction. The time allowed for the crossing, which is between Spain and the United States, will be three days ten hours.

It is intimated that the airships, which will be fitted with nine engines developing a total of 3,600 horsepower, will accommodate forty passengers and about ten tons of mail and other freight, and will be capable of a speed of about eighty-two miles an hour.

BLAZING SOME TRAIL ALRIGHT

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 19—Thirty-nine gentlemen adventurers, who arrived here on August 25th, aboard the yacht Frontiersman, in a trail-blazing voyage in the interests of a British airplane flight around the world next year, to-day were said to face the possibility of becoming 'longshoremen at Los Angeles harbor. The yacht has been seized by Federal officers for a violation of the liquor laws and libelled by commercial firms twice for alleged debts, and the ship's surgeon has been stricken with malaria. Many of the men, who resigned all kinds of positions for the adventure of the voyage, are war heroes and never have worked as 'longshoremen but they are said to consider that work in the near future.

CONFERENCE BETWEEN BRITISH AND FRENCH PREMIERS ENDS IN APPARENT FAILURE

While No Solution Is Expected Meeting Discovers "No Difference of Purpose or Divergency of Principle."

PARIS, Sept. 19—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, of Great Britain, who has been visiting France, had a private conference with Premier Poincare to-day, at the British Embassy.

It is announced in an official communication that while no definite solution of any question is expected from the brief meeting, it had happily been discovered that there was "no difference of purpose or divergency of principle" between the two governments.

Mr. Baldwin is remaining in Paris until Friday at least, and perhaps longer. This is taken as an indication that the conversations will be continued, and the hope is expressed in French circles that they will at least be fruitful in creating a feeling more favorable to complete accord.

There is strong expectation that the premiers will agree, and that France and Great Britain being in full accord on the vital principles involved, will find a way of putting settlement details on a basis which will prevent further friction.

PARIS, Sept. 19—A meeting of the prime ministers of France and Britain took place this afternoon, presumably upon the reparations question. Their conversation ended at 4 o'clock, when they separated, after which an official communication was given to the press stating that the outcome of the conference could not be expected to furnish any solution to the difficulties confronting the two nations, and that no report of their deliberations was to be made public.

MC DOUGALL RESIGNS AS V. PRESIDENT OF B.E.S. CORP.

SYDNEY, Sept. 19—Colonel D. H. McDougall has resigned as Vice-President of the British Empire Steel Corporation. Mr. McDougall has been associated with the conmanies now forming the Corporation, for the past twenty years.

He filled the position of Superintendend of the Wabana ore mines, General Manager of the Dominion Coal Company, General Manager of the Dominion Steel Corporation, President of the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., and Vice-President of the British Empire Steel Corporation.

For some time he has been in charge of the Corporation's operations in Cape Breton. It is understood that Mr. McDougall intends to take a short vacation before devoting his time to private interests.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXIX.

For two days he forgot the woes of Ireland and sat round the stuffy lobby, waiting Nan Brent's next move. When he saw her at the cashier's window, paying out, he concealed himself behind a newspaper, and watched her covertly as the clerk gave instructions to the head porter regarding the disposition of her baggage. The instant she left the hotel, accompanied by her child, Dirty Dan approached the porter and said with an insinuating smile.

"I'd give a dollar to know the address of the young lady wit' the baby bhoy give you f'r the delivery av her trunk.

The porter reached for the dollar and handed Dirty Dan a shipping ping tag containing the address. Mr. O'Leary laboriously wrote the address in a little memorandum book, and that afternoon made a point of looking up Nan's new habitation. He discovered it to be an old brownstone front in lower Madison Avenue, and a blue-and-gold sign over the area fence indicated to Mr. O'Leary that, from an abode of ancient New York aristocracy, the place had degenerated into a respectable boarding house.

"'Tis true," Dan murmured. "She's given the young fella the go-by. Hurro! I'm bettin' I'm the only lad in the wide, wide wurrld that knows where's she's gone. Faith, but wouldn't Mr. Donald pay handsome for the information in me little book."

Having, as he judged, followed the mystery to its logical conclusion, Mr. O'Leary was sensible of a sudden waning of his abnormal curiosity in Nan Brent's affairs. He acknowledged to himself that he had spent time and money on a matter that was absolutely none of his business, but excused himself on the ground that if he hadn't investigated the matter thoroughly, his failure to do so might annoy him in the future. If, for no other reason than the desirability of being on the inside track of this little romance of a rich man's son, his action was to be commended. People have no business disappearing without leaving a trace or saying good-by to those that love them. Dan had not the least idea of selling his information to Donald McKaye, but something in his peculiar make-up caused him to cherish a secret for its own sake; he had a true Irishman's passion for being "in the know," and now that he was in it, he was tremendously satisfied with himself and dismissed the entire matter from his mind. Old Ireland and her woes were again paramount, so Dan presented himself before the proper authorities and applied for a passport to visit Ireland.

Now, while Dan did not know it, one of the first questions the applicant for a passport is required to answer, is his reason for desiring to make the journey, and during the Great War, as everybody of mature years will recall, civilians were not permitted to subject themselves to the dangers of a ruthless submarine war without good and sufficient reason. Dan had a reason—to his way of thinking, the noblest reason in all the world; consequently he was proud of it and not at all inclined to conceal it.

"I'm going over there," he declared, with profane emphasis, "to kill all the damned English I can before they kill me."

His interlocutor gravely wrote this reply down in Dan's exact language and proceeded to the other questions. When the application was completed, Dan certified to the correctness of it, and was then smilingly informed that he had better go back where he came from, because his application for a passport was denied. Consumed with fury, the patriot thereupon aired his opinion of the government of the United States, with particular reference to its representative then present, and in he pious hope of drowning his sorrows, went forth and proceeded to get drunk.

When drunk, Dan always insisted in the early stages of his delirium, in singing ballads descriptive of the unflinching courage, pure patriotism and heroic sacrifices of the late Owen Roe O'Neill and O'Donnell Abu. Later in the evening he would howl like a timber wolf and throw glasses, and towards marning he always fought it out on the floor with some enemy. Of course, in the saw-mill towns of the great Northwest, where folks knew Mr. O'Leary, and others of his ilk, it was the custom to dodge the glasses and continue to discuss the price of logs. Toward Dirty Dan, however, New York turned a singularly cold shoulder. The instant he threw a glass the barkeeper tapped him on the head with a "billy;" then a policeman took him in tow, and the following morning, Dirty Dan, sick, sore, and repentant was explaining to a police judge that he was from Port Agnew, Washington, and hadn't really meant any harm. He was therefore, fined five dollars and ordered to depart forthwith for Port Agnew, Washington, which he did, arriving there absolutely penniless and as hungry as a cougar in midwinter. He fled over to the mill kitchen, tossed about five dollars worth of ham and eggs and hot biscuit into his empty being, and began to take stock of life. Naturally, the first thing he recalled to mind was The Laird's remark that Donald planned to make him foreman of the loading sheds and drying yards; so he wasted no time in presenting himself before Donald's office door. To his repeated knocking there was no answer, so he sought Mr. Daney.

"Hello, Dan! You Back?" Daney greeted him. "Glad to see you. Looking for Mr. Donald?"

"Yes, sor; thank you, sor."

"Mr. Donald is ill in the company's hospital. We're afraid, Dan, that he isn't going to pull through."

Dan gasped, horrified on two counts. First, because he revered his young boss, and second, because the latter's death might nullify his opportunity to become the foreman of the loading sheds and drying yard. "Sure, what's happened to the poor bhoy?"

Before Daney could answer, a terrible suspicion shot through the agile and imaginative brain of Dan. In common with several millions of his countrymen, he always voiced the first thought that popped into his head; so he lowered that member, likewise his voice, peered cunningly nto Andrew Daney's haggard face, and whispered:

"Don't tell me he tried to commit suicide, what wit' his poor broken heart an' all!"

It was Andrew Daney's turn to peer suspiciously at Dirty Dan. For a few seconds, they faced each other like a pair of belligerent game-cocks Then said Daney:

"How do you know his heart was broken?"

Dan didn't know. The thought had not even occurred to him until ten seconds before; yet, from the solemnity of Daney's face and manner, he knew instantly that once more his feet were about to tread the trails of romance, and the knowledge imbued him with a deep sense of importance. He winked knowingly.

Beggin' your pardon, Mr. Daney, an' not m'anin' the least offense in life,, but—I know a lot about that young man—yis, an' the young lady, too—that divil a sowl on earth knows or is goin' to find out." He tried a shot in the dark. "That was a clever bit o' wurrk gettin' her out o' Port Agnew——"

Andrew Daney's hands closed about Dirty Dan's collar, and he was jerked violently into the latter's office, while Daney closed and locked the door behind them. The general manager was white and trembling.

"You damned, cunning mick, you! he cried, in a low voice. "I believe you're right. You do know a lot about this affair——"

"Well, if I have, I haven't talked about it," Dan reminded him with asperity.

"You knew the girl had left Port Agnew and why, do you not?" Daney demanded.

"Of course I do. She left to plaze The Laird and get rid o' the young fella. Whether The Laird paid her to go or not I don't know, but I'll say this: that if he gave her anything, at all, 'twas damned little."

"He didn't give her a red cent," Daney protested.

"I believe you," Dan assured him, as solemn as a Supreme Court Judge, "I judged so be the way she traveled an' the hotel she stopped at."

Daney made another dive at the returned prodigal, but Mr. O'Leary evaded him.

"Where did she travel, and what hotel did she put up at?" the general manager demanded.

"She travelled to the same places an' put up at the same hotels that I did," Dirty Dan replied evasively, for his natural love for intrigue bade him hoard his secret to the last.

Daney sat down and said very quietly: "Dan, do you know where Nan Brent may be found?"

"Where she may be found? Faith I can tell you where she can be found—but I'll not."

"Why not?"

"Because 'tis her secret, an' why should I share it wit' you?"

"Your sentiments do you honor, Dan—a heap more honor than I thought you possessed. If Mr. Donald's life should happen to be the price of your silence, however, you'd tell me, wouldn't you?"

"I would. The young gintlemen's blood runs in my veins, sor."

"Thank you, Dan. Give me her address."

"Number one eighty-five Madison Avenue, Noo York City," Dirty Dan replied. "More than that I don't know. Am I on the payroll agin?"

"You bet! I'll pick out a good job for you as soon as I find time to think about it."

"Could I have a dollar or two in advance?" the wanderer asked, as Daney hastened toward the door.

"Certainly." The door slammed, and Dirty Dan could hear the manager shouting in the general office. "Dirty Dan is back. Give him some money."

Dan sighed contentedly.

THEY TELL THEIR NEIGHBORS

Women Tell Each Other How They Were Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Woodbridge, Ont.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles. I would have headaches, backaches, pains between my shoulders and under my shoulder-blades and dragging down feelings on each side. I was sometimes unable to do my work and felt very badly. My mother-in-law told me about the Vegetable Compound and I got some right away. It has done me more good than any other medicine I ever took and I recommend it to my neighbors. You are quite welcome to use this letter as a testimonial if you think it will help some poor sufferer."—Mrs. EDGAR SIMMONS, R. R. 2, Woodbridge, Ont.

In nearly every neighborhood in every town and city in this country there are women who have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the treatment of ailments peculiar to their sex, and they take pleasure in passing the good word along to other women. Therefore, if you are troubled in this way, why not give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from roots and herbs, has for forty years proved its value in such cases. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. C

NEW MATERNITY HOSPITAL FORMALLY OPENED

Function Largely Attended — Lady Allardyce in Graceful Speech Declares Institution Ready For Beneficial Work.

THE PEOPLE of St. John's turned out in goodly numbers yesterday afternoon to witness the formal opening of the new Maternity Home. Efforts to have the stores and offices close for the afternoon were not found practicable, otherwise there would have been a much larger attendance and better financial results. Now that this institution has been started on its mission of mercy, we bespeak for it the sympathetic and financial assistance which it so justly merits. The Salvation Army once again showed its truly humanitarian side in the splendid efforts put forward toward erecting this spacious and up-to-date building, dedicated as it is to the alleviation of human suffering. We bespeak for the management a continuance of the spirit of helpfulness which has enabled the Army officers to make such head-way in those strenuous times

Much yet remains to be done in furnishing and equipping the institution. That the necessary financial assistance will be forthcoming, we have no doubt.

His Excellency the Governor, Lady Allardyce who was to conduct the formal opening, and suite, arrived at the site at 3 p.m. They were accompanied by Miss Allardyce Major Wilberforce-Bell and Captain Goodfellow; other prominent personages present were The Lord Bishop of Newfoundland, Rev. Canon Bolt, Rev. E. C. Earp, Rev. R. J. Power, Mayor Hon. Tasker Cook, Mr. I. C. Morris, Mr. H. E. Cowan, Dr. McPherson, Lady Winter, Mrs. R. G. Reid, Mrs. H. Outerbridge, Colonel and Mrs. Cloud and many prominent Army Officers.

The ceremony opened with the hymn "O God our help in ages past," played by the band, and sung by the large concourse present. The dedicatory prayer was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Power, after which Staff-Capt. Tilley introduced His Excellency the Governor, who then took charge of the ceremony.

Lady Allardyce formally opened the building, and in doing so expressed the great pleasure it gave her to open a building that meant so much to Newfoundland in caring for our women and children, and she hoped that all would show their gratitude by doing their best to keep the institution going.

Colonel Cloud, leader of the Salvation Army of Newfoundland, said how grateful they all were for having their Excellencies amongst them at the opening of this splendid building, made possible by the toil and generosity of the people. While the building had been erected, our responsibility does not end, but it is only now beginning.

The Colonel explained that people thought it was a maternity home, where as, it was a maternity hospital, which is quite different. The Army were not giving up their present maternity home on Cook Street, which would still be continued. This new institution had been erected for the benefit of the entire Colony, and people will be admitted to it on the recommendation of their medical advisers. The Colonel pointed out that a portion of the hospital would be reserved for such cases as girls of good character who fall, either thru ignorance or being led astray; in the case of outcasts, the Maternity Home will still be available.

The Colonel instanced several cases where the Army assisted, and he gave some of his experiences during his recent tour of Notre Dame Bay, where people who were ill had to travel a great distance in order to receive medical aid, and he pointed out that the new hospital would be the means of alleviating a great part of this suffering, by its proposed training course, which all Army officers would take before they go out to take up their several duties in the various outports throughout the Island.

The cost of training nurses would be in the vicinity of $300 each which could not be done without assistance.

Colonel Cloud regretted very much that through an oversight the medical profession were not included in the day's program, and he offered an apology. Without the assistance of the medical profession the Hospital could not carry on, as no nurse would graduate from the institution without first having obtained her certificate from the medical profession. He regretted exceedingly the ommission. All patients would be admitted on the advice of their doctors, and he felt the institution would fill a long-felt want in the community. At present only two floors are completeted, with accomodation for about 30 patients. The top floors are not finished because there are not sufficient funds available, but he believed that once the people realize the great benefits that will accrue, this matter will be speedily remedied. Only yesterday he received a cheque of $2,500 from the General, and a further $2,500 towards the cost of the top storey, and on behalf of the General he thanked all who through their generosity made the building possible. In conclusion, he announced that competent nurses who are now being trained in Canada, would be employed at the Institution and would arrive here shortly to take over their duties.

COLONEL CLOUD.

The Hon. Mayor Cook said that building was erected in the best interests of humanity, and it was an institution that the city and the counry were in need of. He regretted that owing to conditions existing, sufficient money to complete the building was not forthcoming, but he felt that this was not the fault of the people, and when times brighten up, the necessary funds will be gladly subscribed. The building was one that would be of great benefit, and he felt that it had the support of all citizens and he wished it the success it deserves.

MRS. CLOUD.

Mr. H. E. Cowan, Secretary of the campaign committee, who looked after the drive for funds, followed, and he eulogized the work of Their Excellencies since they came amongst us, and also the enthusiasm displayed by Sir M. G. Winter, who, as chairman of the general committee, rendered yeoman service, despite the many set-backs that had to be faced when the movement was first started. He felt that in the opening of the new hospital a better day had dawned for our manhood and womanhood, and that it was a movement that deserved the hearty support of the community and country at large.

Commandant H. A. Hurd, Financial Representative, gave a brief outline of the work to date. In all, $96,000 had been raised, and to date, $102,000 had been expended, leaving a deficit of $6,000, which must be met, and he made a strong appeal for the balance needed. To furnish the rooms would cost about $10,000, while the kitchen and laundry, etc., had yet to be furnished. The Commandant read messages from Sir. M. G. Winter and Commissioner Southen, wishing the institution every success.

Sir Marmaduke's message was as follows:

Brighton, Eng.,
Sept. 19th, 1923.

Sincere Congratulations and best wishes for successful opening.

(Sgd.) WINTER.

This completed the opening ceremony, after which the building was thrown open to the public and some hundreds availed of the opportunity of looking it over.

The garden party which was held in the hospital was then opened by His Excellency the Governor. The C.L.B. Band was in attendance and rendered a special program, while a musical program by the S. A. Band was also discoursed, Col. and Mrs. Cloud and Commandant and Mrs. Urquhart also giving numbers, all of which were thoroughly enjoyed.

Later in the evening, the C.C.C. Band were present and rendered a delightful program.

The various tables were largely patronized and a goodly sum was realized which will be devoted to the Hospital Fund.

GENERAL BROMWELL BOOTH, who has donated £500 to the new Grace Maternity Hospital, and who will donate a further £500 when the building is completed.

What Man Can Do

To the people of Japan the sympathy of the whole world goes out in their terrible time or trial. Thousands of homes have been laid waste, thousands of lives lost through a visitation from Nature that no man could foresee.

To a whole nation earthquake and fire have brought sorrow, panic and incalculable distress. And yet this awful death-roll is but a fraction of the great host of young lives that were sacrificed on the battlefields of Europe a few short years ago. Horror and overwhelming pity are the response of the world to the tragedy wrought by Nature. All the world seeks to help and to aid. What is the world response to the call to end, once and for all, disasters that spring from human activities and that human effort can prevent?

Everywhere to-day the "great" nations of the world still go on with their competitive systems, their arrogant nationalisms, and their ceaseless preparations for more wars. What have they learnt of the value of human life?

How is it that when a city is destroyed by an earthquake it is called a disaster, but when it is destroyed by man himself with fleets of aeroplanes and clouds of poison gas it is reckoned a victory and a triumph?

These are questions that demand an answer, and at no time more than when the Angel of Death hovers, as now, over the world. It is, indeed, well to remember that, by some strange madness in humanity, it is still given to the Mussolinis of the world to let loose even greater forces of destruction and suffering than those with which the mysterious powers of Nature have devastated the cities of Yokohama and Tokio.—London Daily Mail.

Ethel Talbot Cohen Believes Day of Drudge Is Passed and That of Equality Really Here

New York City.—"No girl who marries an artist without a working interest in his art can expect happiness!"

Mrs. Cohen, herself a professional musician, has degrees from Trinity College and Cambridge University, London. She played in orchestras with her husband before her marriage and also in orchestras he conducted. As a matter of fact, their romance began in an orchestra pit.

Since their marriage, Mr. Cohen has become musical director of one of the largest theatres in America, the Missouri of St. Louis. Mrs. Cohen helps him prepare all programs and special features, and the marvelous musical events at the Missouri are due to the joint efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Cohen.

Mrs. Cohen is very fond of American music and optimistic for its future. She believes no amount of "uplift" or "high-brow" art will kill the public's love for the ballad type of song.

In her tune shopping she found Irish melodies still very popular. "River Shannon Moon", a favorite Irish waltz, is one of her chief prizes from the expedition.

"The Irish tunes will always be successful waltzes," she asserted. "They are not of the fox trot variety and their charm lies, I think, in the fact that they are inseparable from the waltz. They indeed seem to be the music for which waltz steps were originated."

N.S. STRIKE WAS FIRST OF REVOLTS MOSCOW PLOTTED

NEW YORK, Sept. 13—Collection of funds from Americans of high and low degree for the promotion of social, economical and political revolution has become an organized industry in the last two years, it is charged by the United Mine Workers of America in article one of a series which purports to be an expose of a far-reaching plot to spread the dictatorship of the communist internationale at Moscow over this continent.

The outstanding feature of the program, which failed of wide fulfilment, is alleged in the "exposure" to have been the unauthorized strike of steel and coal miners in Sydney which was ended only after the president of the mine workers' ousted Dan Livingstone, president, and J. B. McLachlan, secretary of the district.

Laborers, society leaders, school teachers and well-meaning philanthrohists, ignorant of the menace they are promoting, add millions of dollars annually to the war chest of the underground workers for revolution in America, it is charged. Other millions are described as streaming in from Moscow, Berlin and Stockholm, to make a total impossible of estimate.

SET UP COMMUNISM.

Capture of the miners' union is alleged to be the first aim of communist agents in this country, as a step toward establishment of the "One Big Union" principle in all industrial labor coal mines under the soviet form rules as a preliminary to nationalization of every industry; then forcible overthrow of the Governments existing in the United States and Canada and establishment of communism after the Moscow pattern.

Solicitation of funds is said to have been most active among the miners. Money usually is asked for some "defense" or "relief" cause.

A conference of "reds," whom the author names, was held at Pittsburg, February 10, out of which grew a platform alleged to contain these planks:

1—Establishment of headquarters at Pittsburg for an aggressive campaign to re-organize the miners' union in accordance with communist doctrines:

2—To bring about a general strike on April 1.

3—To hold a convention of miners' delegates of the United States and Canada at Pittsburg the first week in June, when would be launched a new international organization to absorb the United Mine Workers' and eliminate its international and district officials.

JUNGLE TOLL FOR YEAR IS 3,263

The toll of the Indian jungles, as recorded year after year, does not grow less. The figures for last year show that 3,263 people were killed by wild animals, tigers being responsible for 1,603, leopards for 509, wolves for 460, bears for 105, elephants for 55, hyenas for 9, wild boars and pigs for 90, and crocodiles and alligators for 255.

The mortality from snake-bite rose to 20,000. During the year 23,368 wild animals were destroyed, including 1,766 tigers, 6,108 leopards, 3,188 bears, 1,629 wolves, and 5,837 snakes. Rewards totalled 85,000 rupees.

Calcutta is at present in the grip of an unprecedented epidemic of dengue fever, nearly 40 per cent. of the population suffering from it. Business firms are seriously affected, in some instances 30 per cent. of the staffs being prostrated. The fever usually lasts four or five days, but the after-effects are worse than the disease, the patients being afflicted with stiffened joints, weakness, dizziness and shooting muscular pains.

Medical authorities attribute the epidemic to the unusual prevalence of tiger mosquitoes.

The S. S. Susu, Capt. Roberts, sailed on the Fogo service at 2 p.m. yesterday, taking a full freight and the following passengers:—M. Woolfrey, Mrs. Rowe, Mrs. Woolfrey and Miss Pinsent.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, THURSDAY, SEPT. 20th., 1923.

Scientific Investigation

The members of our Board of Trade assembled at the Grenfell Hall on Tuesday to hear Professor Huntsman, from New Brunswick, lecture on the scientific investigation of the fisheries. The scientific investigation of the fisheries is undoubtedly an interesting subject, and in some respects a profitable one, but a knowledge of it, superficial or profound, is as far from being a panacea for this country's ills in respect of her fisheries as the North Pole is from the South.

What our Board of Trade needs, and in this instance we speak of the Board of Trade as the body in whose hands rests the responsibility for the disposal of our fishery products, is scientific investigation of market conditions and a knowledge of the important science of marketing. That knowledge, however, cannot be gained by a lecture or two; indeed it would require a series of lectures of the most absorbing interest lasting from now till New Year to stir our exporters to even a mild interest in the subject.

To talk of scientific research of the fisheries to a crowd of men who cannot market the smallest catch at better than beggarly prices, who do not make an effort to get the best possible for their wares, is simply to waste so much valuable time and energy.

What does Newfoundland want with scientific research at the present juncture when fish is coming to our shores every year in millions of quintals only to pass on untouched, scarcely disturbed in its course by trap or trawl, because a system of marketing that has become a curse to the country has driven hundreds of fishermen from their boats to seek a livelihood at other avocations.

What does it matter to Newfoundlanders whether the codfish spawns in the placid waters of the South Pacific or in the icy reaches of Arctic seas, when its coming to our coast each summer is as certain as the coming of the seasons? What care our fishermen whether a codfish lives but a few years or, in the natural course of its existence, becomes an octogenarian when their pay is pittance and poverty their portion after slaving from midnight to midnight thruout heart-breaking weeks and months to wrest from the deep what by rights should be as valuable a product as that which takes form under the hands of any class of toiler the world over?

If our people are ignorant of those matters relative to the fisheries, which scientific investigation is calculated to reveal, they have nothing to learn on the score of catching it; neither have they cause to fear competition in "making" that which they catch.

For the needs of the markets to which we have been catering for hundreds of years, Newfoundland produces an article which is unsurpassed. That the seas surrounding our Island are as prolific in the marvellous wealth of fish-food as they ever were, there is not a doubt, nevertheless, each year sees a disastrous and depressing slump in the fishing industry which not all the scientific research in christiandom or beyond it can stay.

The total catch this season will be the smallest for many years, not altogether because fish has been particularly scarce, but mainly due to the fact that the experience of the past two years has sickened many fishermen of the thankless toil of producing cheap food for foreign consumers, while they themselves are bled to the last drop of their blood for a living not more oppulent than that attained by the objects of this country's ill-timed charity. For indeed charity seems to be the underlying and all-pervading motive for the manner in which our exporters deal with their foreign customers. They assidiously avoid taking any steps that might have the effect of getting the most possible for the fish they sell to European consumers, and their excuse for this overflow of philantrophy is that "the Europeans ar too poor to pay." Was ever such arrant rot heard from the lips of supposedly sane and sensible business men? What consideration do these good angels of impoverished Europeans give our own people We have yet to hear of them cutting down prices of food or supplies to a figure commensurate with the fishermen's ability to pay.

Our exporters have spent the summer in indolence and indifference while fishermen slaved to drag a bare existence out of the water. Now that the fall is upon us these "friends of the poor Europeans" are galvanized into life and the mad rush to glut the markets with fish has begun. Steamer load follows steamer load across the Atlantic without order or method, and the great sacrifice in which the fishermen and their dependents are to be offered up on the altar of the twin gods of greed and stubborness, has begun. The question of price, once the fish gets on the other side, appears to be a matter of absolute indifference. The exporters will simply take what the buyers think fit to pay them and, indeed, it does not mean so much to the exporters as the ordinary individual may imagine whether they get a big price or a small one. They get their margin of profit anyway and it is the fisherman who pays the piper. Not all exporters, be it said to their credit, are so callously indifferent to the fate of the toilers as to care not whether prices are high or low so long as they themselves are able to garner the usual harvest of sheckels. There are many exporters who would welcome any move towards the bettering of marketing conditions, many who did welcome such a move when it was made and gave practical and honest assistance in forwarding it, but they were the few and the knockers, the "unrestricted trade" advocates were in the majority.

To the foolish argument advanced against our taking decisive measures to get better prices for our fish, to wit, that our customers are too poor to pay more than they are paying at present, there is but one answer. If our customers cannot pay more, then we must cease to produce and get out of the fishing business altogether because fishermen cannot stick to the fishery any longer at starvation prices. Already the number of boats that have been hauled upon the beach to rot is appalling, but the cry of the fishermen is "what's the use to catch fish if we cannot get paid for it?"

The Advocate has persistently fought for an export system that will give us better prices. It has done so in the face of the bitter opposition of other papers, notably the News and Telegram, which organs, by their stand on this question, have indelibly branded themselves as double-dyed hypocrites. With one breath they pretend to deplore the continual drain of our young men from the fishery and characterize as lunatics those who suggest that the fishery may not forever remain the Colony's staple industry while, with the next they jump with both feet on any attempt to stabilize the industry and allign themselves with the avowed enemies of the country's best interests when any change from the old, wornout and disastrous system is mooted.

Now, what is the spectacle in Europe to-day? Take Portugal for example. The consumption of our fish in Oporto within the past month jumped from something like 7,000 quintals a week to 12,200 quintals and from that in another week to 12,800 quintals, notwithstanding the fact that there are stocks of Norwegian fish in the market. If this proves anything, it proves that there is a demand for Newfoundland fish beyond the ordinary, and it requires no marketing expert to draw the conclusion that if this market were properly fed with sanely regulated shipments, the present demand could be kept up indefinitely and fair prices could be maintained. What applies to Portugal applies with equal force to the other markets of Europe.

Our exporters took no such considerations into account. Whether times or conditions were propitious or otherwise for the inauguration of a system of shipping never gave them a thought. Instead, they kept their eyes and minds fixed on the date when the first steamer-loads of fish would be available and when the race would begin on this go-as-you-please plan, with every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. This mad and suicidal scramble, started by those who have no concern beyond reaping the profits of the present by digging pitfalls for the future, must be joined in, perforce, by others who realize only too well what such a policy means, but who, having bought fish from their dealers, must be as far in the forefront of the race as it is possible to get unless they would be caught by the slump which is an inevitable consequence of the system. Thus, not only the irresponsibles, but the best-intentioned of our exporters swell the tide that is slowly but surely inundating the very foundation on which rests the commercial and economic structure of our country.

Over Half-Million Cars Registered In Canada In 1922

OTTAWA, Sept. 12.—Automobiles and other motor vehicles registered throughout the Dominion in 1922 numbered 514,657, an increase of 10.9 per cent. over the previous year. A circular issued by the Highways Branch of the Department of Railways and Canals also shows that revenues from registrations and license fees aggregated $9,279,243 in 1922, an increase of 21 per cent. over 1921. The grand total of automobiles entering Canada last year from the United States for varying periods was 996,329. Assuming that each car carried four persons, the total number of persons entering Canada from the neighboring Republic for touring purposes was 3,985,316. Canadian cars entering the United States for turing purposes during the year numbered 100,810.

Scarlet Fever is Not on Wane

Fever Hospital Is Full and Twenty Five Houses In City Quarantined.

The Scarlet Fever epidemic in the City is by no means on the wane; as a matter of fact it is on the increase.

The Fever Hospital, where at least one death has occurred, is filled to capacity with about forty patients, while twenty-five houses, in some of which there are several patients, are under quarantine in the City. Every day several new cases are reported.

The question now arises "are sufficient precautions being taken to guard against the further spread of the disease?" In our opinion the city schools should not be open while the danger of a more wide-spread epidemic is imminent. It should not be necessary for teachers to drop their classes altogether, but a plan should be adopted immediately whereby the school curriculum could be attended to in some measure without keeping the children in the class rooms for several hours a day. The idea of closing the schools at the beginning of the new term is bound to be an unpopular one, but this is a case of choosing the lesser of two evils.

Notes and Comments

According to Halifax papers, Mr. Alfred B. Morine is en route to Newfoundland on another visit.

Hugo Stinnes is seeking new worlds to conquer and is now thinking of going into the potato-growing business in Russia.

It has been announced that the marriage of Japan's crown prince, which is to cost the state some millions of yen, will not be put off on account of the recent disaster. One would imagine since the world is in such a sweat to help the stricken Nipponese, that the Crown Prince would be doing the decent thing by cutting out the needless expense of such a "flare-up."

A Toronto paper says the Prince of Wales is one man who cannot be accused of seeking the limelight. From the way the poor man is being trailed by press correspondents it would be no wonder if he sought the seclusion of a dungeon.

It will soon become a real distinction to pass in one of the C. H. E. examinations.

Women are no longer permitted to enter the Vatican unless they are properly attired. It would be another step forward if they were not permitted to enter churches without a decent amount of clothes on.

The Ford Motor Company's profits are given by latest statistics as $1,000 a minute. Some speed for "Lizzies".

The Ku Klux Klan occupy a unique position in the United States. In one State they are denounced as murderers and black legs, in another martial law is proclaimed while they are being wiped out, and in a third a church service is held in their honour, and one of their number is invited to occupy the pulpit.

The Telegram wants St. John's made a desirable haven for "lame ducks". No special effort is necessary. The City, if not the port, is a bring-up for all kinds of them.

Citizens are now wondering just how far keepers of disorderly houses are permitted to go in their nefarious trade before the authorities think it time to take a hand.

U. S. NAVY TRYS OUT WORLD'S SMALLEST SEAPLANE

The U. S. Navy is now testing out the smallest seaplane in the world for its adaptability in being flown from the deck of a submarine. It has a wing spread of 18 feet, carries 12 gallons of gasoline, has a cruising radius of three hours, can make 103 miles an hour, is equipped with a 60 h. p. motor, and carries a complete radio, which can be stored in the hold of a submarine. Photo shows Lieut. A. E. Pond, who is conducting the tests, in the cockpit of the ship.

QUEENSTOWN, Sept. 20.—A wireless message from the United States steamer West Arrow, from Liverpool for Boston, reports that she was in collision at 12.20 yesterday with the White Star liner Haverford, which struck her on the port side ten feet from the stern, the Arrow proceeding to her destination under her own power, and making no water.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Sept. 20.—Governor Walton is ready to keep Oklahoma under martial law, for a year if necessary, in order to stamp out lawlessness, and declared he has men and money necessary to carry on the fight for a year.

PARIS, Sept. 20.—Reports are coming from Belgrade of an attempt by Communists to overthrow the Government in Sofia, Northern Bulgaria, at present. Members of the Agrarian Party are acting with the Communists. Several classes of opposing armed forces are reported.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—Slight earth tremor occurred yesterday noon at Cromer, Norfolk, according to the Daily Mail. Houses shook and ornaments and dishes were displaced. Tremors accompanied by loud rumbling.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—Eamonn DeValera and other leading Republicans now held prisoners will be brought to trial at an early date, according to Dublin reports. DeValera is being constantly removed from one military prison to another in order to guard against possible rescue attempt.

VANCOUVER, Sept. 20.—Big season for export grain is heralded in bookings to-day through merchants exchange. These total two and quarter million bushels. At this date last year not a single bushel of grain had been booked.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20—Owners of the metropolitan newspapers affected by the strike of pressmen last night, served notice on George Berry, International President of the Pressmen's Union that they would not deal further with the local organization. They characterized the strike as illegal.

The owners told Mr. Berry that they would await his promised action to revoke the local union's charter and form a new organization; until that time, they said, they would continue to print limited editions of "combined New York newspapers."

BOSTON, Sept. 20—Spencer William Brown, seaman, was killed and sixteen other members of the McFarland's crew were injured, but none dangerously, when the United States Destroyer McFarland was rammed by the battleship Arkansas in manouvres near the eastern entrance of Cape Cod Channel yesterday.

The crash occurred at four o'clock in the morning, when the McFarland was moving slowly with riding lights on. The battleship struck her in the bow, smashing the forepeak of the destroyer and causing her oil tanks to burst. Oil flooded the sleeping quarters of the crew, and Brown was drowned in oil as he slept. Firemen Stack and Smith were hailed as heroes on the destroyer for saving at least six lives by going into a well of oil in the flooded forecastle and each time bringing out a man.

HALIFAX, Sept. 20—Oxford University debaters are due to arrive in New York on Sept. 25, will debate in Dalhousie University at Halifax on October 20th, and afterwards at the Acadia University at Wolfville, and Mount Allison University at Sackville, according to advices received here.

POLICE COURT

The keeper of the house on Beaumont Street, with an inmate and a young man, were before the Court this morning, on a charge of drunk and disorderly conduct. The women were helplessly drunk at 6.20 p.m. on Sunday last, and so conducted themselves as to cause the neighbors to send for the Police. Constable Pitcher visited the premises, and this morning told the court of the disgraceful condition he found the parties in when the house in question was visited.

Two women, living in the neighborhood, also gave evidence of the disgusting language used. The cab-man who drove them was also called as a witness. In justice to him, he wants it stated that he was simply hired to drive the women home and was not under the influence of liquor. The young man in the case recently came into a considerable sum of money by the sale of a house belonging to his father's estate. The three were fined $5.00 each and costs. "The fool and his money soon parts," as is the case with this young sport. It is understood that he also paid the $100.00 fine which was imposed on one of the women, the proprietoress of the Beaumont Street house, a few days ago.

A drunk and disorderly laborer, who annoyed the residents of Rennie's Mill Road yesterday afternoon, by ringing door bells etc., was fined $2. or 7 days.

A drunk who had a set-to with his wife on duckworth Street, near the Majestic Theatre at 6.30 yesterday evening, was fined $2 or 14 days. He thought the fine rather stiff for a first offence, but he would do well to avoid coming before the court again, else he might find the bets doubled against him.

A street-walker, who has been before the Court previously, but of late has shawn improvement in her conduct, was given another chance.

A 16 year old boy, charged with indecently assaulting another lad, 8, escaped severe punishment because there was no corroborative evidence to support the serious charge made against him. The case was heard in camera and the accused was defended by Mr. C. E. Hunt.

"ALL GONE BUT FAITH IN GOD"

(New York World)

"All gone but faith in God."

This is what Bishop John McKim cabled through the State Department yesterday from Tokio to the Department of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, No. 281 Fourth Avenue. In addition he told of the destruction of the Tsukiji section of Tokio, in which most of the Episcopal missionaries have been at work.

He places the loss of property at over $1,000,000, but reports that while his house and other residences of the missionaries have been destroyed none were killed. There is great need of food and clothing, the cable stated.

Bishop McKim was authorized by the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church to draw $25,000 from its treasury for immediate use.

Among the builders which the Bishop said were destroyed, St. Luke's International Hospital was the best known throughout the Far East. Patients came to it from Singapore, Java, Hongkong, Vladivostock and Manchurian and Korean cities. Dr. R. B. Teusler of Virginia, a cousin of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was its head. He has been a medical missionary in Japan twenty-three years.

Within the last year ground was broken and the foundation laid for an extensive addition to the hospital building. The Japanese Emperor contributed $25,000 from his personal funds to the hospital and the citizens of Tokio gave $50,000. In addition, the Japanese Government suspended its tariff laws to permit the free importation into Japan of all building material for the hospital.

The officials of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith at No. 343 Lexington Avenue, have not received any message from their missionaries in Japan, many of whom are stationed in the stricken districts. The society has appealed to their members throughout the country for funds. The money will be used for immediate relief.

Relief Funds Arrive

A cablegram was received yesterday by Dr. F. M. North, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, No. 150 Fifth Avenue, from the Rev. W. A. Main of Shanghai. Dr. Main, Treasurer of the Methodist missions in China, told of receiving $10,000 sent to him Sunday and of forwarding it to Japan Tuesday. This is thought to be among the first of the relief funds to reach the strckein district.

Dr. North believes the buildings of the Aoyama Gakuin, the Methodist College in Tokio, which was attended by 1,600 students, has been saved. Reports of the destruction in Tokio have not mentioned any damage from the earthquake in the Aoyama district.

At a meeting of the Committee of Reference and Counsel of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, held yesterday at No. 25 Madison Avenue, steps were taken to bring about a concerted campaign of the churches in co-operation with the American Red Cross in soliciting funds for relief in Japan.

At the meeting were a dozen representatives of missions engaged in missionary work and those formerly stationed in Tokio. Dr. William I. Chamberlain, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in America, presided. A committee was appointed to go immediately to Washington to consult with the Red Cross there.

Those Who Will Aid.

Among those at the meeting were Bishop John W. Wood of the Protestan Episcopal Church, Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, formerly of Japan, Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; James M. Speers, Vice-President of James McCutcheon & Co., representing the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; Dr. John R. Mott, Dr. James H. Franklin, Mrs. Charles A. Longstreet, representing the Friends Foreign Mission Association in Philadelphia, and Dr. James L. Barton, Secretary American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

A cablegram was received yesterday at the Salvation Army's local headquarters, No. 120 West 14th Street, from Gen. Bramwell Booth, international head of the organization. He said he was without specific information as to the fate of the 110 Salvation Army officers and fifty institutions in Yokohama and Tokio.

Commander Evangeline Booth, head of the Salvation Army in the United States, consulted yesterday with her territorial and national department, heads concerning their share in the Army's world drive for $10,000,000 for relief.

Fear was felt for their workers in Japan as the Western Union Cable Company had reported inability to deliver three cables sent Saturday to leaders in the stricken district. The Army's headquarters yesterday were notified these cables had been delivered. No answer has yet been received.

New Cable Laid

Seaside Thrill For Many Holiday-Makers.

(London Daily Herald.)

Watched by throngs of sightseers on the beach, the Commercial Cable Company started laying at Weston-super-Mare on Saturday what is described as the world's greatest cable.

A posse of police was on duty to prevent the crowds from interferring with the operations of the cable crew, who came on a lighter bearing the shore end.

The working gangs soon began to haul in, and after 90 minutes' work the cable touched the shore of Weston, and the flags of Great Britain and the United States were unfurled on the beach. The cable was then landed.

Snow Two Inches Deep; Heavy Frost

Fifteen Degrees of Frost In Saskatoon —Real Winter Day.

SASKATOON, Sask., Sept. 13—One quarter of ice lay on ponds and sloughs at Unity, Sask., today, folowing Tuesday night's heavy frost. Garden growth was killed and practically all standing grain was damaged to some extent.

The University of Saskatchewan weather observatory here registered ten degrees of frost. Themometers in lower-lying sections of the city recorded from 12 to 15 degrees.

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE,, Man. Sept. 13—Reports received here yesterday from points south of the Assiniboine river in the Portage district record the first snowstorm of the season.

At Oakville and other points south of the river it began to snow during the night and when the daylight came it showed to be about two inches of the ground, a real wintery day.

SEE THE POINT!

The Inefficiency of Lessons.

(Daily News.)

Many a man who does brilliantly in the schools cuts only a very moderate figure in the workaday world. There is no absolute reason why a genius in the schools should not be almost an imbecile in the workshop or the counting-house. It is discouraging to have to admit it, but it is plainly true.

A Costly Luxury.

(Daily Express.)

The week-end habit may be a solace to hard-pressed men who want the stimulating air of the countryside, the ozone of the sea, or the unqualified peace of the golf links. Even then it is a sacrifice of business time. The end-of-the-week feeling is ten times more costly. It practically reduces the working week to four good days. No millionaire can afford it.

A Deserving Charity.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The sympathy of the entire world, and of the United States in particular will go out to stricken Japan. If we feed and clothe those whose homes have been destroyed through the brute insensibility of man, how much more should we extend our help to those unhappy thousands who are left hungry and destitute through an act of nature! America will need little urging to do its full duty.

England's Bitter Pill.

(Daily Chronicle.)

Clearly things have come to a sorry pass when foreigners look to Scotch teachers as the best exponents of the English language. It is imperative that something be done to remove a reproach, for which, alas! we must confess, there are such good grounds. As a nation, we have inherited the Roman love of oratory and public speech. But how few of our speakers are capable of clear articulation. The same applies to our concert singers. Women, in particular, are bad offenders.

Foreign Trade Rivalry.

(Morning Post.)

The foreign producer is doing his utmost by means of skilled organization to extend his market in this country, and we suggest to the Dominions that they should meet organization with better organization. It is a matter in which Australia, New Zealand, Canada and South Africa might well combine their forces: and they might consider it advisable to invest a certain amount of public money in the business. Without presuming to suggest a definite scheme, we would say that the need for action is urgent.

Men And Capital.

(Auckland Weekly News.)

Untouched resources crying for development abound. All that is needed is man-power and capital. That people would come is admitted by the department when it says that if a more open policy were adopted the number of immigrants arriving per annum could be doubled. Various means are open to secure the needed capital for the development work by which they could be absorbed without causing the disruption and dissatisfaction apprehended. The Empire Settlement Act is the most obvious.

A Bad Symptom.

(The Times.)

There is a final point in the return to which reference must be made---the falling birth-rate. It is easy to exaggerate the importance of this phenomenon, and many of those who do exaggerate its importance appear to forget that the fall in the death-rate and in the infant death-rate are compensatory factors of great importance. On the other hand, a low birth-rate has never been regarded favorably by students of national health in the broadest sense of the term, for it points either to increased hardship or to a growing love of luxury and ease.

The Honest Banker.

(Louisville Courier Journal.)

The century banker is chosen not so much for shrewdness and efficiency as for dependability. When a small bank invites the people of the country side to open the stock-treasury and to take from under the flagging or the old fire-place the tin box containing the savings representing self-denial and even privation, character must back up the invitation. The reliability of citizens has been established reputation for honesty has been proved so often in the case of the country bank's choice of officers that people hardly ever question it.

Where Misers Hide Their Gold

Curious Tales About Hoarded Money.

"Half-crown Saunders" was at one time a well-known character in Somerset. He acquired his curious nickname through a habit he had of asking his patrons to pay him, whenever possible, in half-crowns.

After his death the reason of Saunders's preference became apparent. An immense hoard of half-crowns was found in a hollow iron gate-post of his house. In all, more than 4,000 coins were recovered, making a sum of over £500.

The clue to this remarkable hiding-place was discovered by Saunders's son. On going through some old papers belonging to his father, he came across a small note-book headed "Gate-Post Account." The gate-posts were accordingly examined, and the fortune revealed.

John Hammond, a miser, who lived in Nottingham, chose a strange place in which to secret his hoard. The fact that he lived in abject poverty aroused neighbourly curiosity, as it was known that his wife, at her death, left him a considerable sum; and he also received a good income through his trade of a builder.

When Hammond died, the only article of any value found amongst his belongings was a large and handsomely-carved marble cineary urn. This had been intended to contain the ashes of his dead wife. On being removed from its place, its great weight caused Hammond's relatives to open it.

They found inside a bag containing £1,700 in gold! All round and underneath this bag, the urn was stuffed with bundles of bank-notes. Some were for £10 and £500 and £10 notes were found. In all, the sum of £3,000 was discovered.

In a lodging-house in the East-end of London, a room was occupied by an elderly woman. She received regularly registered envelopes supposed to contain money alowed her by a relative; and, as she lived extremely quietly, she was expected to have saved a considerable sum.

When she died her room was searched for her savings, but the seekers were disappointed.

Eventually, when the contents of a letter rack, containing only a number of old letters, were thrown on to the fire, the old lady's savings were discovered. As one envelope smouldered, it showed the charred number of a Treasury note, and when this envelope was snatched from the flames it was found to contain ten £1 notes!

Evidently the other envelopes—most of which, with their contents, were burnt—were similarly filled, for a few scraps of £1 and £5 notes were recovered; but the greater part of the hoard was lost.

A convenient and not ingenius hiding place for a miser's hoard was discovered in a suburb of London about three years ago. The contents of a house in a suburb of London were being sold by the landlord, who had distrained for rent overdue. Amongst the effects was a grand-father clock, which the landlord himself bought.

Bookshelf as Bank.

He subsequently sent it to a clock maker to have it put in working order and its weights were found to have been removed and replaced by two long, narrow canvas bags. These bags were filled with gold coins!

The scene of another improvised "bank" was a small secondhand bookshop. The shop was kept by an old man and his granddaughter. During his lifetime, the old man frequently pointed out to the girl one particular line of six or eight books that he wished her to keep.

After his death, however, when the girl examined these books, she found that the line was only a "dummy," such as is used by furniture dealers to fill bookcases. The backs of several books had been pasted on to a small wooden box, which stood on a top shelf in the shop. Inside this box was another, containing the old man's life savings.

Constitution Week In U. S.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15 (AP)—The week beginning tomorrow will be observed as "Constitution Week" throughout the United States, a week set aside by the Citizenship Committee of the American Bar Associaion for study of all phases of the national constitution.

Plans for the week were started several months ago and before made public had been submitted and received the endorsement of many government officials and leaders in public life.

The main purpose of the program is to "re-establish the constitution of the United States and the principles and ideals of our government in the minds and hearts of the people" according to the citizenship committee. Much was left to the local organizations, which will be in charge of the programs in their respective communities, the bar association committee simply giving a general outline.

Cooperation of every organization interested in civic activities was sought, and in many instances has been promised. Indiana reported plans for discussing the constitution at the fall country school teachers' institutes, thus reaching approximately 25,000 school teachers. In some communities the American Legion has agreed to take the initiative. In other such organizations as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Daughters of the American Revolution, Parent-Teachers' associations; Sons of the American Revolution, Women's Federated Clubs, Council of Jewish Women, Masonic Service Association of the United States, Knights of Columbus, and Boy Scouts. The program for the schools will include setting aside available assembly periods at which some lawyer or person well versed on the constitution and its history will speak.

Well Earned.

The report on Ellis Island made by Sir Auckland Geddes to Lord Curzon is a national humiliation to the United States. What the British Ambassador says about the principal immigrant receiving station in America is horribly true. All well-informed citizens of this country have known for a long time that the conditions under which immigrants, or would-be immigrants, are received, examined and detained are impossibly bad.

Vital Religious Influence Needed

London Preacher Deplores Present Day Materialistic Outlook—War's Evils—Conflict Left Spirit of Fear and Aggressiveness

(Montreal Star)

Christianity as an International Religion was the subject of a sermon preached at the Church of the Messiah in Montreal recently by Rev. W. H. Drummond, of London, England, secretary of the conference of Free Christians. Since being in Montreal three years ago, Mr. Drummond said he had travelled in many countries in Europe, and had foun deverywhere groups of Christian men and women, and the problem was how to bring these groups into vital contact with the evil in the world, so as to cure it.

"No one," said Mr. Drummond, "can travel in the old world in these days without becoming keenly aware of the terrible condition into which society has fallen. The war has left great evils in its train. Instead of uniting the nations closer together, it seems to have produced a spirit of fear and aggressiveness. The newly-created little nations do not seem to find it easy to be fair or just to their neighbors. One of the great disasters of the war is that men and nations have ceased to trust one another."

Ugly Selfishness

Human selfishness was being shown in all its ugliness. In every large city in Europe there were men devoting their activities and energies to the amassing of wealth and the gaining of power. Their success led others to follow their example, and the spirit of materialism spread and increased.

"The only cure for the deluded and the perverted will," declared the preacher, "is a vital religion. Everywhere men and women are coming to see that what the world needs most at the present time is a religion that kindles men's hearts ,moves in their lives, and changes their character. Political readjustment and wise economic administration bring itself, but they do not go to the root of the matter which is moral. Moral ills can only be cured by moral means, found in religion."

Churches' Opportunity

Christian churches and congregations, Mr. Drummond declared, have a great opportunity at this time. He related incidents of his experience showing that great statesmen are agreed that the need of today is a vital religious influence.

Broader Outlook

"We must come to the international conception in our own religious lives," Mr. Drummond concluded, "while retaining our personal religious life and loyalties, we must add the broader international outlook. There is a danger of even the most beautiful life becoming selfish, so wrapped in our own homes, in the life and destiny of our own country, that the life and destiny of other countries seems far away and outside our concerns.

International sympathy and understanding is a matter of lifelong growth, but we need to be moving in that direction. The truest patriot is one who loves his own country so well that he desires to make it an effective instrument in the hands of God for helping and redeeming the world."

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

I venture to assert that were all or most clergymen of the various churches of the world of the fearless and realistic type of the Rev. Dr. M. F. Burns, New York, there would be a vast flocking of working people to the churches.

As it is, what do we find! Why, that the workers in all the great countries mistrust the churches, and for the most part do not attend them. This is particularly so in Great Britain—but it is also true in the United States. A number of editors of union papers and magazines in that country were recently queried as to labor's attitude to the churches. Most of them replied that the workers felt that the clergy took sides against them in all industrial disputes.

But Dr. Burns cannot be accused of taking sides against the workers.

* * * * *

"The more systematically and scientifically you investigate the present economic and industrial institutions of this country," he declared, "the more you are convinced that many of these institutes are non-Christian, some un-Christian and a few anti-Christian.

"As nearly as we can discover thru government statistics," he said, "thirty-two millions of our people are on incomes of $2,000 or less per year; twenty-seven millions are on incomes of $1,500 or less per year; fifteen millions are on incomes of $1,000 or less per year; ten millions are on incomes of $500 or less per year; practically ten million others are without incomes; while only five millions of all the income producers of America enjoy incomes over $2,000 per year.

* * * * *

"Just after the war had started,' he declared, "I sat at lunch with a fine Christian gentleman. He said: 'Doctor, I have made a net profit during the past twelve months of practically $5,000,000.'

"I replied:

"'How many folks do you employ?'

"'About 15,000.'

"'Who are they?'

"'Women and girls.'

"'How much do you pay them?'

"'From $8 to $10 per week.'

"'Mr. Blank, do you think that a woman or girl can live virtuously, dress as she must to meet your clientele, eat such food as she should, on from $8 to $15 per week?'

"He replied: 'Doctor, I am not concerned as to that item. I am living well within the business ethics which the church has builded up during the past two thousand years.'

"I then said: 'Mr. Blank, what would happen if your minister should preach sermons on social justice, condemning the present social and economic order, then demanding such changes as most economists believe should take place?'

"He replied: 'I suppose we would have a change of ministers at the coming session of our annual conference.'

* * * * *

"There is also the glaring fact of unequal distribution. We are told that in 1920 there were fifteen men in the state of Illinois whose combined income was twenty million dollars. There were, on the other hand, in that state, THIRTY THOUSAND FAMILIES who altogether had no more than these fifteen men.

"Professor Sims states that 'one hundred and eighty men possess one-quarter of the wealth of the republic.' And the additional statement has been made that the same 180 men control 85 percent to 90 percent. of the wealth of the nation, and a very large percent. of the wealth of the World. H. H. Klein, in his book "Dynamic America," gives the names of 100 families who now virtually control the railways and the fourteen basic industries of the country."

"Have we," asks Dr. Burns, "as the greatest of all the nations, the passion of moral equity and social justice to readjust and recreat industry so as to acord with the principles and teachings of Jesus?

"In some way we must make good our claims to democracy in industry as well as in political life. Somehow, co-operation must displace the old competition and conflict. Finally national brotherhood must be inaugurated."

When the Earl of Birkenhead, former Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, arrived in the United States recently, the newspapers printed interviews with him. The New York World began its article:

"Fred Smith, Earl Birkenhead, etc."

Similarly, when recently the youthful Earle of Northesk married an American chorus girl in Chicago, and applied to the marriage bureau for a license to be married, he gave his name as "Earl of Northesk," and the clerk politely informed him that that was not a name, and proceeded to make out the license for "Herbert So-and-So," and earl's real name.

"Fred," otherwise known as the noble Earl of Birkenhead, and perhaps more often as "F.E.," or "Galloper" Smith, for all the joking that took place over ex-President Wilson in an address before an American audience—in spite f these minor points, he managed in an interview to speak some sound sense, especially about France's doings in Europe lately.

"I can see no prospect of a settlement of European problems as long as—in spite of these minor points, he declared. "As long as France remains in the Ruhr, German industry will remain idle. There can be no settlement of our problems until Germany's great industries function again.

"It is not possible for Germany to pay while France is in the Ruhr, and France has her reasons for staying there.

Roosevelt Tells Farmers To Unite

SYRACUSE, Sept. 11—Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as principal speaker for Home Bureau and Farm Bureau Day at the State Fair to-day, advised farmers to combine and co-operate to better their condition. He said:

"That our farmers have suffered of late years is a matter of common knowledge. This is not healthy for our country, and should be a matter of grave concern to all interests.

"In my opinion, the farmer has not kept step with the times. With the complication of modern society business has organized and co-ordinated on a gigantic scale. The day of the small individual has, to a large extent, passed. Economy and efficiency are vital to success. It is axiomatic that either in buying or selling, if you deal in bulk, you can deal to your own advantage.

"There is only one way the farmer can meet this condition. He must combine. If he does not combine and co-operate with his brother farmers he will unquestionably be forced under.

"I want to issue a word of warning again "quack medicines." All over the country there are sincere, but mentally limited fanatics, and self seeking politicians peddling false doctrines. Steer clear of these, these. Remember, that in the long run, anything which hurts the country hurts the farmer, just as surely as anything which hurts the farmer hurts the country."

The Government's part in aiding the agriculturalist, he said, should be confined to legalizing fullest co-operation and assisting it through the Federal agencies of information, and in extending credit facilities "where it serves some practical purpose."

The amount of damages will be thirty cents, but Mr. Meredith wishes the satisfaction of getting Senator Brookhart under oath.

How to make your skin fresh and clear

Every woman passes as pretty if only her skin is fresh, smooth and young. It is within the power of every woman to possess this attraction to make her complexion as beautiful as she longs for it to be.

The secret? Cleopatra knew and practiced it in the days of ancient Egypt. She observed a daily ceremonious cleansing. The cleansers she used were the same you may have today, Palm and Olive oils.

These beautifying oils are scientifically blended in famous Palmolive Soap. They give it mildness, wonderful soothing qualities, profuse, creamy and refreshing lather.

Cleansing with Palmolive is a beauty treatment in itself. No woman should say her skin is too sensitive to use soap until she has tried Palmolive.

The attractive green cake, the natural color of the oils, is within the reach of every one who appreciates that cleanliness is the greatest beautifier.

Child Welfare

COLD WEATHER DANGERS.

With the first cool nights comes the temptation to close the windows, so gladly left open all summer. "Little Jennie is delicate and takes cold easily," so mother shuts out the life-giving fresh air which would strengthen Jennie's system to withstand stormy weather. The open window makes the room seem cool when mother takes a last good-night look at the sleeping children, so she shuts the window down to a few inches, instead of providing warm sleeping-suits that would prevent chill no matter how restless they may be. But in a cool, fresh room they will not be restless. Snuggled down under the blankets with only little faces peeping out, they will sleep more sound if a current of fresh air is blowing through the room. No one who has experienced the delicious sense of well-being that is felt when sleeping in winter snuggly wrapped on an open porch will fail to realize how much a child is robbed of vitality when allowed to sleep in a closed room. This is the season of the year to be watchful in preventing the thoughtless shutting off of this source of strength. As the nights grow colder adapt the night-clothes and bedding to the change. A quick jump from bed to close the window half an hour before getting up time will give the room time to warm up for dressing.

Ill-judged carefulness in keeping the baby warm is often the real cause of pneumonia. In many homes as winter approaches the baby's cot is kept near the radiator or stove. As the fire dies down during the night the sensitive little being is subjected to marked change of temperature. When taken out of doors by the proud mother it is plunged suddenly into a temperature which has the same effect on it as may be seen when any other kind of hothouse plant is exposed to sharp cold. Far, far better and safer to keep the baby all winter in a cool room which will remain about the same temperature day and night. With the scarcity of coal many families will have only the stove lighted, and a young mother may think that her baby must be kept near it. If she is wise she will put the cot at the farthest end of the room, or in the adjoining room with the door left open between. She may assure herself by feeling the baby's hands and feet that it is dressed warmly enough, and only at bathing time will it be necessary to bring him near the stove.

Doctors are agreed that there would be many fewer cases of bronchitis and pneumonia among infants and young children if they were not subjected to these dangerous alternations of heat and cold.

Big Profits Made In Bootlegging

HAMILTON, Bermuda, Sept. 12.—Thirsty United States citizens who buy liquor from bootleggers contributed indirectly 0157,204.80 to the Government of Bermuda in the form of an export tax of $2.40 on each case shipped from the island between April, 1922, and September 1, last.

During this period rum runners have taken out of Bermuda more than sixty thousand cases, as well as 41 barrels of liquor, all of which has found a market in New York and vicinity. This is a total of more than 750,000 bottles, which at an average retail price of $8 a bottle would mean a return of $6,000,000 on cargoes that were bought here for about $1,000,000.

Most of the business has been carried on by a New York man, who, so far, has been successful in landing all his shipments. The purchase prices of this man's cargoes amount to $68,615 or 30,246 cases, or 362,952 bottles, which, if retailed at $8 each, brought him a return of $2,903,616. His schooner carries a crew of nine men, and has made eleven trips.

In addition to this dealer, two others with headquarters in New York are in the Bermuda trade.

The White Bay Timber Project

Mr. H. J. Crowe is now making preparations for his proposed timber operations this winter. We understand that he does not propose to take advantage of the period allowed in the Act for the exportation of Pulp Wood except for a very few years—probably not more than from one to three years. He is pushing forward as fast as possible the organization of a Company for the development of his South Coast interests, and proposes to utilize White Bay as a feeder. He hopes that Pulp Wood from White Bay will, in a very few years, be manufactured into Pulp and Paper in Newfoundland. Meantime according to a report there will be an important industry established at the bottom of White Bay in connection with the manufacture of Timber and the drum-barking of wood.

It will be remembered that Mr. Crowe has built and operated Mills, established settlements and fostered labour at Botwood, Point Leamington, Gambo, Gander Bay, Glenwood, Indian Bay, Notre Dame Junction, Lewisporte Norris Arm, Badger and Millertown, and that his efforts resulted in the establishment of the Paper Mills at Grand Falls and Bishop's Falls.

We are further informed that Mr. Crowe has interested the United States Smelting Refining Mining and Exploration Corporation in certain Newfoundland Copper Properties, with a view to the establishment of smelting works at a central point, where large bodies of Ore could be assembled for refining purposes, and that the Corporation in question will be sending their Engineers to examine the properties for this purpose.

The Corporation is one of the largest refiners and exporters of silver in the world and has large copper plants in Mexico, California, Utah and New York.

These undertakings point to the employment, in the near future of a large number of men, which is to be welcomed in present conditions.

Cruiser's Repairs Are Completed

The Portuguese cruiser Carvalhoe Araugo came off dry dock yesterday forenoon, her repairs being completed. The ship berthed at A. Harvey's where she takes coal and supplies after which she returns to Lisbon.

The shipwrecked crew of the Algrave who lost their vessel on the Banks and have been staying at the Institute for some weeks past, are being sent to their homes by the cruiser. The five men who had their legs broken while the ship was ashore at La Manche, are still in hospital where they are doing well, but they will not be able to rejoin their ship before she sails.

Pit Prop Steamer Is Docked

The S. S. Roxburgh which went ashore near Botwood some two weeks ago, went on dry dock yesterday afternoon to have repairs effected The ship's stem is badly bent and there is a big hole forward, while some fifteen feet of the keel has been carried away and several plates damaged.

Repairs will occupy several weeks as the keel plates have to be ordered from New Glasgow. A part of the rock which the ship struck in protruding from the hole made in the ship's bottom.

Cadets and Wesley Draw

The result of last night's Junior League football game between the Cadets and Wesley was a draw, each scoring two goals. Perchard and McKinley did the necessary for Wesley while the Cadet goals were got by Hayes and Power.

The result of this game leaves the championship still undecided.

WEDDING BELLS

KENT—MULLOWNEY.

The marriage of Miss Clare Mullowney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mullowney of Witless Bay, to Mr. John Kent, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Kent of this city, took place at Witless Bay at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Rev. Dr. Greene, P.P., officiating, assisted by Very Rev. Fr. McCarthy.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in a dress of white canton crepe, trimmed with rosettes of orange blossoms, and wore a veil of Brussels net with coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a beautiful bouquet of white carnations, stock and maiden hair fern. She was attended by Miss Bride Walsh, who wore a dress of grey canton crepe, with henna and grey hat. Miss Helen Murphy, cousin of the groom, was flower girl. The duties of best man were capably performed by Mr. Frank Hickey. As the happy couple left the Church the wedding march was played, while joy guns re-echoed again and again. The wedding party drove to the home of the bride's parents, where a reception was held, when the young couple received the best wishes of their numerous friends, while many telegrams were received from at home and abroad. The health of the happy couple was proposed by the Rev. Dr. Greene, while congratulatory speeches were made by Rev. Fr. McCarthy, Mr. L. Mullowney, Mr. P. Hanley and Mr. F. Hickey, to which the groom replied. After the wedding supper was over Mr. and Mrs. Kent motored to Holyrood, where they will join to-day's express on a honeymoon trip to Montreal and Toronto.

Saints vs. C. E. I. Tonight

A meeting of the Nfld. Football league was held to-day at 12.30 p.m., when the Feildians' protest was discussed. In the meantime, it has been decided to play the C.E.I.-Saints game this evening at 6.15 sharp.

This game is necessary owing to the first game between these teams ending in a draw, and their second encounter should prove interesting.

Scouts Send Sympathy

Tasmanian Essay

PRIZES AWARDED.

During the past school year the Victoria League of Tasmania offered through Lady Allardyce, a prize of one guinea for the best essay on Tasmania written by a pupil in the Public Schools of Newfoundland. This prize was very graciously added to by His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce, who each offered an additional prize of five dollars ($5.00) for two extra essays. The matter of precedure was referred to the Department of Education, and the Superintendents prescribed the rules under which the essays had to be written. A circular was then issued to the schools concerned, which were limited to certain Superior Schools, and to pupils under fifteen years of age. The essays on the whole were good, and very creditable to the schools. The results are as follows:—

Cluney Batt, C. E. School, Salt Hr., Herring Neck.

Violet McCarthy, Convent School, Renews.

Annie McCormick, St. Joseph's School, Salmonier.

Rum Runners Like St. John's

And Uncle Same Sends Agent There To Find Out Why.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Sept. 17.—It is understood here that the American revenue authorities are turning their attention to Newfoundland to seek an explanation of the source of the big liquor shipments that are finding their way into America. They have eliminated St. Pierre and believe that the bootleggers have now begun to exploit this country and its seamen for their activities. An agent of the American Government is expected here shortly to conduct an investigation.

In this connection it is interesting to note that at the recent session of the Legislature, the Government decided to abandon its policy of demanding heavy bonds for the safe delivery at port of consignment of liquor shipments routed via St. John's. Instead the revenue authorities exact a tax of a dollar and a half per case. This it is stated in some quarters has tended to induce bootleggers to use St. John's as a port of trans-shipment instead of St. Pierre, where the tax is two to two dollars and a half per case.

[The above story was first given publicity as an exclusive in the Advocate of Saturday last.]

OBITUARY

MASTER ARTHUR WILSON.

At 4 o'clock last evening, after a short illness, at the Fever Hospital, there passed away, fortified by all the rites of Holy Mother Church Arthur, son of James and Margaret Wilson, and grandson of the late Capt. James Wilson, Examiner of Masters and Mates, in the 15th year of his age. The cause of his demise was Scarlet Fever which developed into pneumonia. Arthur was one of the foremost pupils of the Christian Brothers' School in St. Patrick's Hall, and his bright intellect and kindly disposition endeared him to all his comrades, as well as to his teachers, by whom his smiling countenance and cheery and respectful salutations will be sadly missed.

His schorastic attainments were of a very high order, and he had the honor of capturing three scholarships in three successive years, as well as the gold medal presented by the late Rev. Bro. Fleming. There was indeed a bright future for the young pupil, but the Almighty God in His Wisdom ordained that it was not to be, and called his pure young spirit to Himself—and peacefully and resignedly little Arthur rendered it up to Him who gave it: Requiescat in peace. Strandhill off To Sea Again

Steamer Bound For Belle Isle to Salvage Raleigh's Guns.

The wrecking boat Strandhill, owned by Beazley Bros., sailed on Saturday night for the Strait of Belle Isle, where she is intending to salvage the guns of the wrecked cruiser, Raleigh. This is the second attempt to carry out the expedition, and it is doubtful even now whether the ship can accomplish her purpose before the early winter of the Labrador Coast hinders her. The Strandhill was in dry dock on Saturday having her keel scraped of the barnacles that had impeded her progress in the first attempt. She is under command of Captain Smeltzer.—Halifax Chronicle.

IRELAND PAYS TRIBUTE TO DEAD LEADERS
While hundreds looked on, President Cosgrave unveiled a Cenotaph in Dublin, Ireland, erected to the memory of Michael Collins and Arthur Griffith. In the name of the Irish Nation, the president offered the Cenotaph as a symbol of Ireland's gratitude to and sorrow for the two heroic men who followed the path of duty, led their people to greatly sought freedom. Photo shows the Cenotaph after unveiling.

HENRY PEDDLE OF CONCEPTION BAY IS KILLED

Young Nfldr. Was Crushed To Death In Crane at Sydney.

SYDNEY, Sept. 20.—A verdict of accidental death was returned tonight by Coroner Townsend's Jury which investigated the death of Henry Peddle aged 28, machinist, who was killed while repairing a crane at the Besco Steel Plant this afternoon. Peddle was working under the machine, when the operator unaware of his presence started it, and the man was drawn into the gears and crushed to death. He was a native of Conception Bay, Nfld., and is survived by a widow and one child.

ASKS IMMIGRATION AUTHORITIES LET RENFREW REMAIN

WINNIPEG, Sept. 30.—Officials of the Canada Colonization Association would like to keep the Prince of Wales permanently in Canada. Howard Everett, General Manager of the Association, to-day sent the following telegram to Captain G. M. Dix, Chairman of the Joint Conference of Immigration and Employment officials being held at Saskatoon:—"Understand a British harvester travelling under the name of Renfrew now employed on a farm in Alberta. Can the Conference arrange to secure winter employment for Renfrew and keep him in Canada permanently."

Major Brackley of Hanley-Page Fame in Canada from Japan

Airman Well Known In Newfoundland Tells of Horrors of Earthquake.

MONTREAL, Sept. 20—The first refugee from Japan to pass through Canada, arrived here to-day in the person of Major M. H. C. Brackley, adviser to the Imperial Japanese Naval Air Service. He stated that in his war service he had seen nothing like the Japanese horror.

He was standing in the offices of the Japanese Navy Department in Tokio at exactly noon, when suddenly there came a tremendous shock; the whole face of the earth seemed to move, first vertically, and then horizontally in real earth waves.

Major Brackley, with hundreds of others in the building, were unable to keep their feet, and crawled out on all fours. "Then we saw fires breaking out in all directions.

"The whole effect was so terrible that the people could hardly keep their senses. I do not know that the war produced anything more terrible I know Europeans who chopped off their legs in frenzy, with axes, when pinned under the falling buildings, and others who met an equally awful fate, but the whole thing was such an inferno no one could imagine a fragment of its horrors."

Major Brackley, with other refugees, walked twenty miles to Yokohama from Tokio until they encountered the huge oil tank explosions of the Standard Oil Company and Rising Sun Oil Company, with burning oil running in all directions. They escaped by taking higher ground.

Dawn over Yokohama presented a spectacle of everything wrecked, burned, dead or dying at that city.

They were cut off from the sea by burning oil but finally succeeded in getting to the Empress of Australia, on which there were easily six thousand people crowded.

(Major Brackley referred to above is an air officer, who has been engaged in aviation instruction in Tokio, and will be recalled by many here as the pilot of the big Handley-Page bombing machine that came here in 1920 and was stationed at Harbor Grace. The other officers included Admiral Mark Kerr, and Major Gran the Norwegian explorer and airman. Major Brackley was married a few months ago to Miss Freda Mond, niece of Sir Alfred Mond.)

Ford May Run or He May Not.

MONTREAL, Sept. 20.—"I am not running for or against anything, no man knows what he will do from one day to another," said Henry Ford today when seen by a Herald reporter as he passed through here on his way to Seal Harbour, Maine, where his family has been for some weeks. Mr. Ford had been asked if he would run in the next Presidential campaign in the United States. He declared that he was neither Republican nor Democrat. "They will have to show me the difference before I affiliate with either party," he declared, adding, "they are both tarred with the same brush." In regard to prohibition in the United States and elsewhere Mr. Ford said it was the law and should be enforced. "They should put the army and navy to work," said Mr. Ford, presumably meaning the work of enforcing the law.

The Winifred Lee arrived at Grand Bank yesterday from the Banks with 500 qtls. codfish.

SHOCK FELT IN MANY PARISHES

Tremors Shook East Coast of England.

LONDON, Sept. 20—The tremors that shook parts of England to-day were felt in many parishes on the east coast, including Cromer, Mundesley and Sheringham, but were not noticeable far inland.

The shock occurred at 11.15 a.m., and was felt mostly by people seated or lying down, but not by those standing or walking. Windows, and ornaments in houses were loosened and men working on a tennis court in Cromer said they felt the earth shake for ten seconds, while iron standards supporting the netting around the tenis courts shook as if caught in a violent wind.

It has been suggested that the tremor was caused by an explosion at sea, but none has been reported.

TWO MILE PIER AT CAPE RACE WOULD END OUR COLD WEATHER

Dimitri Joanowici is prolific in ideas as to the keeping open of the St. Lawrence River all the year round. So certain is he that it can be done, that he is ready to show a fresh way in which the difficulty can be overcome.

For $35,000,000 the trouble can be settled forever, according to a scheme he explained in detail this morning. And incidentally the climate of Eastern Canada will be geratly modified, while probably England and Scandanavia will get the full benefit of the frigid temperature from which only the Gulf Stream has preserved them in the past.

The Arctic-Labrador current, Mr. Joanowici explains, runs down the coast to Cape Race, and there swings round into Cabot Strait, bringing immense fields of ice with it. The ice jams there and stays, in the greater part, but the icy current flows right on towards the United States coast. It passes between the coast and the Gulf Stream, which it meets on the latter's northward journey, and striking it on the western side, deflects its course toward Europe.

Mr. Joanowici suggests that the expenditure of about $35,000,000 would enable a pier two miles long and three quarters of a mile wide to be built over the Newfoundland bank, straight out into the sea from Cape Race. This would be sufficient to deflect the Arctic-Labrador current out into the Atlantic, and drive the ice-fields into the Atlantic also.

The firs benefit derived from this would be that the Cabot Straits would not be jammed with ice-fields each winter, and the icy stream would not refrigerate the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The incoming tide would carry the warm flow of the Gulf Stream up the river, where it now carries up the cold current from the Arctic regions.

England might complain in consequence of the loss of the Gulf Stream, but Eastern Canada would benefit. The beneficial warmth would be felt at least as far as Quebec, and possibly even up to Montreal, Mr. Joanowici claims.

As an alternative, air-blowers might be operated at Cape Race to blow the ice-fields out into the Atlantic. This would be cheaper at the outset, but would not divert the currents, and therefore Mr. Joanowici thinks the extra benefits of the Cape Race pier are well worth the thirty-five million dollars they would cost.

Says Turks Will Jeer Their First Woman M. P.

BUCHARST, Sept. 21 (A.P.)—"Does a round of eager applause await Mme. Mustapha Kemal, who has just been elected to the Turkish parliament, when she takes her seat in that body." is a question asked recently by N. Batsaria, a Roumanian diplomat, who was formerly a member of the Ottoman senate.

"What I predict is that she will be greeted with grittings of teeth and with dark looks of resentment," he went on, replying to his own question. "The young woman who has been chosen by a Turkish electorate to defend its interests will have a hard road to travel. In the national assembly at Angora there are many hodjas—teachers and interpreters of Islamic law—who will regard the advent of a woman into the assembly as a blow at the sacred institutions of their religion.

"They will curse Mustapha Kemal under their breath for imposing the society of a woman upon them as an equal. For Mme. Kemal they will adopt a thousand and on ways of indicating to her personally their intense disapproval of her course.

"Lady Astor's first appearance on the floor of the House of Commons was an event pleasant in its associations, because the west has a profound regard for women as a thing of both beauty and usefulness. But the young Turkish woman will receive from her colleagues no such tribute of appreciation. The Turk never associates with a female on any basis approaching equality."

ELECTED TO LEAGUE COUNCIL

GENEVA, Sept. 20.—Major George W. Stephens, of Montreal, was elected to-day by the Council of the League of Nations to succeed R. D. Waugh, Winnipeg, as member of the commission governing the Saar Valley.

ENDING OF RESISTANCE MEANS RETURN TO INDUSTRIES

BERLIN, Sept. 20—Since the Government formally announced its inability further to finance passive resistance in the Ruhr and Rhineland, there has been a marked cooling of ardor in the ranks of resisters, and one of the immediate effects of withdrawal of official credits to industrialists, employers and labor organizations, is reflected in the growing inclination on the part of many workers to return to their former posts.

The altered attitude is not ascribed to wavering patriotic faith in Germany's cause, but to the fact that the social chaos accompanying the passive resistance has become unbearable.

Alaskan Memorial To President

JUNEAU, Alaska, Sept. 21—(A.P.)—A brass plate now marks the pew in the Indian Presbyterian Church in Sitka, where the late President Harding attended public religious services for the last time before his death at San Francisco. On the plate are inscribed the words: "President Harding occupied this pew on Sunday, July 22, 1923; his last attendance at public worship."

Only a few members of the president's immediate party accompanied him to the church, and it was not generally known that he was to attend services there. When the collection plate was passed the President dropped in a gold coin. The sermon was preached by the Rev. R. A. Buchanan.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXIX.

"Oh-ho, 'tis the great life we live," he murmured, and hastened outside to present himself at the cashier's window, while Andrew Daney continued on to the Tyee Lumber Company's hospital, tiptoed down the corridor to the room where the young laird of Port Agnew lay dying, and rapped lightly on the door,. A nurse came out and closed the door after her.

"Well?" Daney demanded.

"No change. His temperature fell two degrees during the night and he slept a little, but the fever is up again this morning, and he's raving again. Any news at your end?"

"Yes. I have the girl's address. She's in New York. Is his father inside?"

"Yes."

"Ask him to step into the reception room for a few minutes, please."

The Laird appeared promptly in response to this message, and the two men walked slowly down the hall to the reception room. Daney closed the door and resolutely faced The Laird.

"The doctors and the nurses tell me things, sir, they're afraid to tell you," he began. "Ordinarily, the boy should be able to fight this thing thru successfully, for he has a splendid body and a lot of resistance, but the fact of the matter is, he isn't trying. He doesn't want to get well."

The Laird's face went white.

"They believe this?" he cried sharply.

"They do. His subconscious mind clings to the memory of his loss. He keeps calling for her in his delirium, doesn't he? Now that he is assured she has dropped out of his life forever, he doesn't give a snap whether school keeps or not—and the doctors cannot cure him. If the girl were here—well, she might. Her very presence would bring about a strong mental and physical reaction—" He paused a moment Then, "I know where she can be found."

The Laird raised his haggard face and though his stern gray eyes were dull with agony, yet Daney saw in them the light of an unfaltering resolution.

"I have left my son's honor and his life in the hands of God Almighty. I have made my bed and I'll lie in it," he panted.

"But if the boy should die——"

"Rather that than—than—"

"But you're not going to take a chance on his pulling through, in the face of the advice of the doctors that only the girl's presence can stimulate him to a desire to live. I tell you, Hector McKaye, man, he's dying because he's not interested in living."

"God's will be done, Andrew. If I asked her to come back and save my lad, I'd have to surrender him to her, and I would be derelict in my duty as a father if I permitted that. Better that he should pass out now than know the horror of a living death through all the years to come. God knows best. It's up to Him. Let there be no talk of this thing again, Andrew." Abruptly he quitted the room and returned to his vigil by the side of the son who was at once the light and shadow of his existence.

The nurse came stealthily to the reception room entrance and looked in inquiringly. Daney shook his head, so she came into the room and pointed at him a singularly commanding index-finger.

"If that old man is permitted to have his stubborn way, Donald McKaye will die," she declared.

"So will old Hector. He'll be dead of a broken heart within a year."

"He's sacrificing his son to his Scotch pride. Now, his mother is far more bitter against the girl than The Laird is; in her distress she accuses the Brent girl of destroying her son. Nevertheless, Mrs. McKaye's pride and resentment are not so intense that she will sacrifice her son to them."

"Then give her this address," Daney suggested weakly, and handed it over. "I'm caught between the upper and nether millstone, and I don't care what happens to me. Damn the women, I say. Damn them! Damn them! They're the ones that do all the talking, set up a cruel moral code, and make a broad-minded, generous man follow it."

"Thanks for the compliment," the nurse retorted blithely. "If I had time, I'd discuss the matter with you to your disadvantage, but, fortunately I have other fish to fry. My job is to keep Donald McKaye alive for the next five or six days until Nan Brent can get here. She'll come. I know she will. She'd lie down in the street and die for him. I know it. I spent two days with her when her father was dead, and let me tell you something, Mr. Daney: "She's too good for them. There! I feel better now."

"What a remarkable woman!" Mr. Daney reflected as he walked back to the mill office. "What a truly remarkable woman!" Then he remembered the complications that were about to ensue, and to the wonderment of several citizens of Port Agnew, he paused in front of the post-office, threw both arms aloft in an agitated flourish, and cried audibly:

"Hell's bells and panther-tracks! I'd give a ripe peach to be in hell or some other seaport. O Lordy, Lordy, Lordy! And all the calves gone loose!"

CHAPTER XXX.

AS A WIFE, it is probable that Nellie McKaye had not been altogether an unqualified success. She lacked tact, understanding and sympathy where her husband was concerned; she was one of that numerous type of wife who loses a great deal of interest in her husband after her first child is born. The Laird's wife was normally intelligent, peacefully inclined, extremely good-looking both as to face and figure, despite her years, and always abnormally concerned over what the most inconsequential people might think of her and hers. She had a passion for being socially "correct." Flights of imagination were rarely hers; on the few occasions when they were, her thoughts had to do with an advantageous marriage for Jane and Elizabeth, who, it must be confessed, had not had very good luck holding on to the few eligible young bachelors who had seemed, for a brief period, to regard them with serious intent. The poor soul was worried about the girls as well she might be, since the strides of time were rapidly bearing both into the sere-and-yellow-leaf period of life. For her son, she had earnest, passionate mother love, but since, like all mothers, she was obsessed with the delusion that every girl in the world, eligible and ineligible, was busy angling for her darling, she had left his matrimonial future largely to his father. Frequently her conscience smote her for her neglect of old Hector, but she smoothed it by promising to devote more time to him, more study to his masculine needs for wifely devotion, as soon as Elizabeth and Jane should be settled.

Her son's acute illness and the possibility that he might not survive it had brought her closer to the Laird than these twain had been in twenty years; the blow that had all but crushed him had not even staggered her, for she told herself that, during this crisis she must keep her feet and her head. A wave of pity for her husband and a tinge of shame for her years of neglect of him revived more than a modicum of the old honeymoon tenderness, and, to her mild amazement, she discovered that she was still, in old Hector's eyes, young and beautiful; her breast, her lips, still had power to soothe and comfort.

In those days she was The Laird's greatest asset. With maternal stubbornness, she resoultely refused to entertain the thought that her son might die. She could understand the possibility of some other woman's son dying, but not hers! she, who knew him so well (or thought she did, which amounts to the same thing,) met with gentle tolerance and contempt the portentous nods and anxious glances of doctors and trained nurses. 'Fraid-cast—every last one of them! She told old Hector so and, to a considerable extent succeeded in making him believe it.

After The Laird's interview with Daney he came home that night to The Dreamerie, and, to please Nellie, he pretended to partake of some dinner. Also, during the course of the meal he suddenly decided to relate to his wife and daughters as much as he knew of the course of the affair between Donald and Nan Brent; he repeated his conversation with Nan on the two occasions he had spoken with her, and gave them to understand that his efforts to induce Donald to "be sensible" had not been successful. Finally, his distress making him more communicative, he related the cunning strategem by which Daney had made it possible for Donald to be separated from the source of temptation.

Elizabeth was the first to comment on his extraordinary revelations when he appeared to have finished his recital.

The girl has a great deal more character than I supposed," she opined in her soft, throaty contralto.

"She played the game in an absolutely ripping manner!" Jane declared enthusiastically. "I had no idea she was possessed of so much force. Really, I should love to be kind to her, if that were at all possible now."

The Laird smiled but without animus.

"You had ample opportunity once, Janey," he reminded her. "But then, of course, unlike Donald and myself, you had no opportunity of realizing what a fine, wholesome lass she is." He lowered his gaze and rolled a bread-crumb nervously between his thumb and finger. "They tell me at the hospital, Nellie," he began again presently, " that her absence is killing him—that he'll die if she doesn't come back. They've been whispering to Daney, and this afternoon he mentioned the matter to me." Three pairs of eyes bent upon him; gazes of mingled curiosity and distress. "Have you heard aught of such talk from the doctors and nurses?" he continued, addressing them collectively.

"I have," said Mrs. McKaye meekly, and the two girls nodded. "I think it's all poppycock," Jane added.

"It isn't all poppycock, dear," old Hector rebuked her. He rolled another bread-crumb. "Andrew has her address," he resumed after a long silence. "She's in New York. He asked me to wire her in my name. I refused. I told Daney that our boy's case was in the hands of God Almighty."

"Oh, Hector!" Mrs. McKaye had spoken. There was gentle reproach and protest in her voice, but she camouflaged it immediately by adding: "You poor dear, to be called up on to make such a decision."

C. L. B. CADETS

Officers at Headquarters are still on the upgrade. The Lt.-Col. was in command and introduced Capt. Len Stick late of the Royal Nfld. Regiment and of the Indian Army, King George's Own Pioneers who succeeds the late highly esteemed Major R.H. Tait, M.C. All ranks are proud to see another War Veteran join the staff and that Major Tait's mantle has fallen on such a worthy son of Terra Nova as the new Adjutant of the Nfld. Regiment, in the person of Capt. Leonard Stick. Captain Stick brings honour to the Brigade.

Recent Battalion orders contain the following:—Lance Corporal Whitten has been permitted to rejoin in the Department of Administration. All ranks are notified that on being placed on reserve or leaving the Brigade they must return belts, caps and badge to the Quartermaster. The Brigade takes this opportunity to request all ranks having these articles in their possession to return the same promptly to Lieut. W. R. Motty. Company Commanders and N.C.O.'s. are reminded to pay attention to this request. Several lads have been dismissed for non attendance.

Beginning Tuesday, September 25th, Guards will be changed and orders read Tuesday instead of Thursdays as formerly Thursdays becoming N.C.O's night. All ranks will note this change.

Second Lieut. J. Erley of Grand Falls Company has been promoted to Lieut. Congratulations. Outport Companies communicating with Headquarters are requested to address communications to Major George R. Williams, Regimental Correspondent St. John's. The Lt. Colonel Commanding has just received a letter from Sergt. Harold R. Blackler, No. 1 founder of the C.L.B. in Newfoundland in 1892. Mr. Blackler is now at Wellesley College Department of Zoology and Physiology, Wellesley Mass., U.S.A. He acknowledges his certificate as an Honoury member of the C.L.B. and sends greetings to all Old Comrades, which are heartily reciprocated. This mail also brings a letter from ex-Sergt. Major William H. Lewis, M.M., etc. formerly of South Africa, where he has helped to maintain the Empire's Honour in the Boer War and in German East Africa, now British East Africa. The Sergt. Major is living at 18 Maybank Avenue, Sudbury Hill, South Harrow, London, and has an important position as clerk of the works in the erection of buildings at Wembley Park for India and Burma. These dependencies are taking part in the British Empire Exhibition in London in 1924. His wife and four children are with him and he hopes to visit Newfoundland and greet his old comrades and friends here when his duties are finished. All ranks are glad to hear of Mr. Lewis's progress and of his business success. Newfoundlanders visiting the Exhibition grounds at Wembley Park, will be heartily welcomed at the Indian and Burma buildings. Sergt. Major Lewis is one of the C. L. B.'s first members.

Last week Major Tait wrote from Humerack, Mass. where he is at present resting up with his family before entering American business life.

Last night the following officers were on duty:—Lt. Col. Walter Rendell, O.B.E., Majors Herbert Outerbridge M. B. E., and George R. Williams; Capts. Leonard Stick, Adjt. P. B. Rendell; Lieuts. Hayward, Reid, Motty and Job Taylor, with 137 all ranks answering to roll call of Regt. Sergt. Major Harold Rendell.

The Officer Commanding reports great progress with his Honourary members roll. Old Comrades, parents have subscribed to date over three hundred dollars and have been granted official certificates. We ask all Brigade supporters and friends to assist the finances by enrolling their names with Lt.-Col. Rendell. The gymnasium will be open beginning next week for all C. L. B. intending competitors at the Boxing and Wrestling tournament to be "pulled off" November 14th, the Brigade's Birthday Anniversary week. It will be managed by the Brigade's Athletic Association's expert Committee, and this is a guarantee that all events will "go over the top" and the exhibition be a great success. Visitors to last year's show say that the Boxing and Wrestling tournament was the best in Newfoundland. Any non-members of the Brigade are invited to use free of cost the gymnasium on Tuesday nights from date. All competitors are asked to go into training for the great event at once. The "gym" will be open from eight to ten p.m.

Major Williams, at the request of Headquarters, is mailing to-day some thirty-five photographs of the C.L.B. in action at Camp, Church parades, and Armoury Officers. etc. The Brigade Secretary, London, is having a series of lantern slides made for exhibition in England to show the C. L. B. lads there. The Nfld. Regt. is their first Overseas Company.

We have great news from Loyal Old Trinity this week. Captain Conrad Fitzgerald, M.D., is re-organizing Trinity Company again. It will embrace Port Rexton, Trinity East and nearby settlements. Al lads wishing to join and all ex-members are requested to report for duty at once. The Brigade is grateful to Doctor Fitzgerald for undertaking this great duty again and all at Headquarters wish him good luck.

The Officers hold a Financial Conference on Tuesday at 9 o'clock, and the regular meeting of the Mess takes place Thursday at 9. Both meetings are important.

Lamaline Company under Rev. H. Kirby has been enrolled. Its official number will be 8470. Congratulations Lamaline, on being progressive and organizing the C.L.B. in your parish. It's worth while. The lads will soon show the benefits of discipline and physicial training. It is always a source of pleasure and profit to any parish to have a C. L. B. Company working. The Warrant Officers are busy devising means to raise their quota to the budget. Next month they will hold a dance about October 10th. The C. L. B. Ladies' Auxiliary have also been very helpful lately, as they have had Headquarters Armoury entirely repainted on the inside, walls and ceiling.

All ranks appreciate their aid in making the building brighter and Outport Companies (excepting Grand Falls) are requested to mail Headquarters all reports for August.

In the gymnasium last night the Battalion Band held a dance for funds to go to the Band account. Capt Morris and his musical veterans provided the music. Refreshments were looked after by Band Sergt. Kelly and Bandsman C. Cornick. Dancing was indulged in by about forty couples from 8.30 to midnight and a very jolly dance it was. The menagement are to be congratulated on its success and everybody present is looking for another.

Farquhar Steamship Companies,

AT THE CITY HALL

The regular meeting of the Council was held yesterday afternoon. The Mayor presided and Councillors Martin, Outerbridge, Vinicombe, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

Mr. C. E. Hunt, on behalf of King George V. Institute, wrote regarding the City Tax on this building which he contended should be exempt from same for several reasons, amongst which was its use for charitable and philanthropic purposes. He stated that a deputation from the Committee of Management would be only too pleased to meet the Council and place before them any information required in this respect. Mr. Hunt is to be asked to bring the matter before the Court of Revision which will be held in December next.

Messrs. Higgins, Hunt and Emerson, acting on instructions from Mr. James Lush, notified the Council that through the alteration of the natural water-curse, McKay Street, the property of thier client had been seriously damaged. They also stated that in the past the Council employees had, at this season of the year taken necessary precautions to prevent damage during the winter season, and asked that this be done as formerly. The matter was referred to the City Engineer.

Mr. E. A. Smith wrote asking certain information for publication in the "Police and Fire Guide," which he is now completing. It was ordered that same be given him.

T. H. Carter, for Garrett Brownrigg, complained of damage to property through surface water, etc., from Holloway Street, and also stated his intention to submit claim for compensation at a later date. The Engineer was instructed to inquire into the matter and report.

Permission will be granted F. M. O'Leary to erect Bill-Board on vacant property, Water Street West, near Bennett's Brewery.

The following plans were passed, subject of the approval of the Cit. Engineer and on the usual conditions:

Thos. Sweeney, alterations to dwelling, Portugal Cove Road; Edward Dawe, extension to dwelling, Springdale Street.

The Medical Officer of Health reported 15 new cases of Scarlet Fever during the past week.

The attention of the Council was called to the fact that the law re driving of cattle through public streets was being violated, and it was ordered that the section of the Act dealing with this matter be published.

Attention was also called to the Coal Weighing Machine which is being erected on the Asylum Road, some 200 feet from the main entrance to Bowring Park. Such an erection it is contended, would be most unsightly near such a popular resort, and, by reason of its being placed in one of the most narrow parts of the road, would seriously interfere with both vehicular and pedestrain traffic. A protest has already been forwarded the Department of Public Works, and it is hoped they will arrange to have the machine moved to a less objectionable site.

The condition of the thoroughfare from Water St. across Job's Bridge was the subject of considerable discussion, and the City Engineer was instructed to have some crushed stone spread over same.

The Engineer's report for the week was tabled.

Many routine matters were discussed, and the accounts for week ordered paid, after which the meeting adjourned.

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every 16 oz. can

Why they call it—
"The milk that good cooks use"

"How can I make these things I cook richer, more tasty, and yet keep down the cost?"

Because, like other home cooks, you have asked yourself that question time after time, we know you'll be interested in the milk that thousands of women have singled out as the very best kind for cooking use—the milk that in many localities is generally spoken of among housewives and grocers as "the milk that good cooks use."

Particularly since you can get it now at a nearby grocery store.

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every can

It's a canned milk, yes. But it's Libby's—and there are 7½ teaspoons of pure butter fat in every 16 oz. can of it!

Butter fat, as you know, is what makes cream and butter such great enrichers.

It's that same enriching substance—7½ teaspoons of it in every can—that has made Libby's Milk the favorite of good cooks everywhere.

"That would make things richer and finer-flavored," you say. "But how can a milk be so rich in butter fat?"

"From famous pasture lands"

Certain sections of this country, as you know, are famous for their dairy products. And it's true of these sections, as you've heard, that dairymen there are constantly competing with one another to see who can raise the finest herds, produce the richest milk.

The cows, of course, are given the best of feed, in summer and winter, are milked in model barns—and only those are kept that give large quantities of rich and wholesome milk.

It is in the heart of these fine dairy sections that Libby's condenseries are placed.

Receiving this milk daily, we test it ourselves and then evaporate it, removing more than half the moisture, to make it double rich. Nothing is added to it. It is sealed and sterilized in air-tight cans—for only thus can it be brought safely to you who live, perhaps, many hundreds of miles away.

Try it tonight and see what a difference it makes

Get a can of this milk today. Try it in place of ordinary milk in some favorite recipe tonight—in a soup or sauce or dessert.

See what wholly new richness it gives, and what fine flavor. You will know at once why Libby's is called "the milk that good cooks use."

Write for free recipe folder

We'd like to send you free a folder we've had printed that contains a number of the best recipes sent us by good cooks who use Libby's Milk—practical recipes that show how economical it is to use this richer milk. Write today.

OBITUARY

"My spirit is going to the one who gave it." Those were the last audible words of Bertha Harvey, the beloved wife of Henry Sheppard, and youngest child of the late George and Rebecca Tucker of Pt. Leamington, N.D.B., who fell asleep at the General Hospital on the 22nd ulto in her 34th year, after all human efforts to prolong life had failed.

Never of a robust constitution, yet quite able to care for her little family, she lived her short life of contentment and happiness in her quiet, peaceful home attached to parents, who were in the full sense of the term Christians, and who pre-deceased her four years ago.

Death held no terror for them, nor did it for her, as their lives had been lived in conformity to His will, Whom they fully realized was their Creator and Protector and to Whose Guidance they always willingly submitted.

Don't call me poor, she said in response to a note of sympathy expressed by one who was at her side when her spirit fled, and who was privileged to be by the side of both of those when their spirits left their earthly abodes, who had moulded her life and helped develop the beautiful unselfish Christian character that she possessed. Her request to be laid by her dear Harold who was snatched from her at the early age of eleven years in January last was willingly acceded to, and her body was tenderly put in a beautiful casket and conveyed by Portia to Leading Tickles, where a devoted and sorrowing young husband with sympathetic friends were waiting to convey her back to those she had left just a week before with the hope of getting treatment that would bring her back to normal health again.

The gathering of practically all the neighbourhood for her funeral on Sunday, the 26th ulto at Paradise, New Bay, was evidence of the esteem and respect in which she was held and the singing of the beautiful and familiar following hymns:—"Jesus Lover of My Soul," "Forever with the Lord," and "Rock of Ages Cleft for me," was a fitting close to an event, which will linger in the memory of all who were privileged to be there.

The Rev. Robt. Atkinson conducted the funeral service, which was unusually solemn.

Left to mourn are her husband, two little girls and one boy, also three sisters, Mrs. Lorenzo Noseworthy of Spaniard's Bay, Mrs. J. J. Efford, Vancouver, B.C., Mrs. Mark Stuckless, Grand Falls, and one brother, George H. Tucker of St. John's.

A wide circle of friends are sad too at the loss of one who was very dear to them.

Oddities In The News

Tomato's Hidden Treasure.

Mrs. Peat, of Old Cornforth, a Durham village, was cutting tomatoes which she had bought, when the knife struck something hard. On examination she found a gold sovereign embedded in the fruit. The coin was slightly discoloured by the juice, but otherwise in perfect condition.

Floating Island.

On Wroxham Road, Norfolk, an island sixty feet long and twelve feet wide, with two trees growing on it, is now floating, having been dislodged from the bank by rains.

Cat As Mourner.

A remarkable instance of animal fidelity was observed at the funeral of Mr. W. Greenwood, formerly caretaker of the Aldershot Borough Cemetery. An old black cat, of which he had been fond, followed the funeral to the grave. The animal climbed a tree overlooking the grave and mourners, and shortly before the end of the service descended and scratched at the earth at the grave-side.

Married His Stepmother.

A curious double wedding took place recently in the City Hall, New York. A young man married his former stepmother, while his father, from whom she had obtained a divorce, married another woman. The younger man's wife will now call her former husband father, and she will have a stepmother of her own.

Oldest Cotton Mill.

A Company has been formed to purchase the cotton mill at Styal, Cheshire, which has been in the Greg family for 139 years. The mill is believed to be the oldest cotton concern in the country. One of the Gregs, grandfather of the present owner, Mr. R. H. Greg, was M.P. for Manchester in 1841. He refused to stand a second time because "Parliament only started business when honest men went to bed."

Argentina Finds Oil.

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 21—The discovery of what are apparently rich deposits of petroleum in the province of Jujuy, Argentia, has elated industrial interests. Borings made under the direction of the administration of state railways resulted in striking oil at a depth of 530 meters. The well did not prove to be a gusher as at first reported, but a column of oil ascended the tube for a distance of 150 meters, from which two tons were pumped in three hours.

Work was then suspended to await the arrival of storage tanks. The engineers are confident that borings 30 meters deeper will tap an extensive petroleum strata. The oil is said to be of high quality.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, SEPT. 21st., 1923.

Real Action By Exporters Is Urgently Necessary

Yesterday we dealt at some length with the present system of exportation of our codfish by the fish marketing experts to be found in the Board of Trade and throughout the country.

The evils of the present system to the men who catch fish are so disastrous in their consequence as to threaten the very existence of the industry in our midst and create a situation of affairs that will see boats rotting on the banks, fishing schooners dismantled in the harbours and the prime manhood of the country departed to other lands.

Before the eyes of fishermen to-day, whose hands are chapped with dragging from the seas the product that could well provide them with a winter's livelihood, there is the spectacle of starvation prices for fish following upon a mad policy of reckless and mercenary men. Their minds are torn to distraction as to whether they should have sold a week ago, whether they should sell now or wait till later.

There is no stability.

To them, it is a cruel gamble. They are at the mercy of a system that would not do credit to the seventeenth century, and for their livelihood they must trust to a class of men, who are responsible before heaven for the gross cruelty inflicted on every fisherman who gets a receipt from his merchant for fish shipped.

After their summer's toil, with their few quintals of fish on their hands, with very little chance of further employment, and with winter ahead of them, the fishermen are given the empty consolation of a meeting in the Board of Trade rooms, where was discussed the origin and habits of codfish, a very interesting subject in itself, but one that can be calculated to have very little influence on the price of the catch.

While the exporters were listening with great interest to Dr. Huntsman, the trans-Atlantic race of cargoes had already started towards its own fatal results, with not a finger lifted, or a voice raised to sound a solemn warning.

Since the spring of the year, the Advocate has been making its appeal on behalf of the men, and emphasizing the extreme urgency of action by a united body of exporters. The appeal has fallen on deaf ears, as far as these gentlemen are concerned. They discuss very concernedly the origin and habits of fish, but the fishermen may live or die.

AN IMPERATIVE NEED

The necessity for an immigration law in Newfoundland cannot be too strongly emphasised. As matters stand now, there is nothing to prevent the most objectionable and undesirable characters from coming in here and becoming a burden on and a nuisance to the public, and that our laxity in this respect is frequently taken advantage of by hoboes and others of like calibre is but too well known.

Only a few days ago we had an example of the results attendant upon according free access to the Colony to the flotsam and jetsam of other countries, but even such cases as we refer to fail to stir us into action or impress upon us the need for immediate steps to remedy the evil that must be so apparent to all.

The experiences of our own people going to Canada or United States during recent years, the humiliations and inconveniences to which they are subjected should in themselves be sufficient to stir this country into adopting similar measures with regard to immigrants.

We talk about cleaning up the city and advance all sorts of suggestions as to what should and should not be done, but of what avail is it to start and clean up our own filth while the country remains a depository for the offal of other countries! When undesirable aliens drift in here they are allowed to land, no responsibility rests upon the steamship companies furnishing them transportation hither, and when they have become a public nuisance they can be deported only at the Colony's expense or made inmates one or other of our public institutions.

It is a comparatively easy matter to put a stop to indiscriminate immigration, and another session of the Legislature should not be allowed to pass without something in this direction being done.

THE PRESS SERVICE

We have on more than one occasion called attention to the very obvious fact that the foreign press service, on which St. John's papers have to depend for their foreign news, is not what it should be. Our protest have been justified by instances of almost daily frequency, and the latest is an item in yesterday's despatches having reference to "thirty-nine gentlemtn adventurers" who had become stranded in Los Angeles. On the same day this "news" is received here by cable from the Canadian press, come American papers from which we clip the same story. The item as contained in exchanges of date Sept. 13th is as follows:

LOS. ANGELES, Sept. 13.—Double misfortune has befallen the group of thirty-nine British gentleman adventurers, who arrived at Los Angeles harbor recently, on a path finding voyage in the interest of an airplane flight around the world, planned for next year by Capts. Noman McMillan and G. I. Malines of the Royal Air Force.

The first came yesterday when Federal officers searched their vessel, the Fontiersman, and announced they had found aboard sixty-five gallons of whiskey and pomptly attached the liquor and the boat.

The second misfortune came when a Deputy United States Marshal served notice on the Commander of the Frontiersman, Capt. Spalding, that the vessel was attached in behalf of the Los Angeles Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company for $250 said to be due for repairs.

The crew of the Frontiersman is composed of members of the Adventurers Club, of London, who serve without pay for the fun of the voyage. Seveal deckhands, stokers, oilers and cooks have notable World War records, it is said. The crew contributed $15,000 toward the expenses of the trip, the remainder being made up by popular subscription in England. The vessel left London June 16, last.

The Labrador Fizzle

(By ANDREW GRAY)

IT IS CHARITABLE to suppose that J. Lambert Payne, of Ottawa, an official of Labrador Goldfields, Ltd., was taking the sleepy dust out of his own eyes, instead of throwing some thing into the optics of the public, when he delivered himself of the following after receiving the report of W. Morley Ogilvie, who was sent to the alleged "Eldorado."

"This to me is a bitter disappointment; I believed in the thing, and to the extent that I influenced some of my personal friends, I feel humiliated and discredited. This simply means, however, that I was deceived along with many others, and I am a loser as well as they.

"I have but one consolation. In all our advertising, we presented the proposition as an absolute gamble. No one could have been misled into the belief that they were taking up a sure thing."

According to the daily papers, Mr. Ogilvie "found no gold" and "there is no gold as far as he can ascertain in the district."

Mr. Payne applies flattering unction to himself. Undoubtedly he and his associates (some of them) were deceived by stories that "a couple of men had visited Labrador and claimed to have made discoveries of gold, backing up these by alleged assays." After display advertising (long after) describing the millions likely to be made out of the Labrador leases, it may be said of Mr. Payne that he awoke. Meanwhile 129 leases had been sold for about $25,800. Probably little of that became available for testing purposes. The advertising and canvassing, office expenses and incidentals of promotors, left little for field work.

When the froth was off, the vessel to convey the expedition to Labrador needed more than froth ballast. About that time, too, the president of Labrador Goldfields, Ltd., was ousted by Mr. Payne and others. Dr. Ledoux, of New York, also denounced the principals publicly as guilty of a palable deception. Mr. Payne disclaims all responsibility for this. He admitted that he had been misled; but there was more than this in the matter when Dr. Ledoux told how two tricksters faked a Ledoux & Company analysis, confessed their culpability and contritely (?) declared they never again would be guilty of doing such a thing!

Responsibility of Public Authorities

Manifestly a good deal of the Labrador propaganda was conceived in iniquity. The Newfoundland Government, by default, allowed promotors to acquire areas and dispose of shares. The Ledoux repudiation of a forged certificate evoked no official admonition. On the contrary, shareholders in one of the Labrador ventures reinstated in office culprits who should have been prosecuted.

One or two Labrador ventures were honestly conducted. They were based upon the representations of men who claimed to have panned gold over an extensive area. It was the Payne organization that displayed the "gamble." Mr. Payne sees the light. Whatever of the public's money has been squandered may serve to emphasize the fact that there was an open season of short duration for a few birds who should be punished. Newfoundland and Quebec authorities might make an example of those who sold leases and misrepresented Ledoux & Company.

As the Canadian Mining Journal was the first to warn governments and the public against the Labrador "gamble," it may now be permitted to suggest to Mr. Payne in these pages, that he add corrective action to his admitted "humiliation and discredit."

Another Chapter Closed

The Montrealers who refrained from misrepresentation and who gave Labrador an honest tryout, have decided to abandon the square miles they acquired on Big Brook and elsewhere. They made a sporting bet, and lost. They have nothing further to say except that the prospectors' dream was a common or garden prevarication, or series of prevarications. All are agreed the placers are mythical and also that the Newfoundland Government cannot escape censure. Where pannings were said to have been obtained, one, two and three years ago, there were no colors this year. Black sand was barren of values. It is surmised that the fabled nuggets, about which so much fuss was made, never came from Labrador. One Montreal laboratory was given a sample for assay, but it consisted of fragmentary quartz containing gold. It would have to be crushed and gold recovered by the usual metallurgical processes.

The flimsiest yarns seem to have enabled crooked adventurers to sell leases as worthless as the words of those who uttered them. Practically all the promotors have left Labrador. The members of the Montreal party, on their return did not hesitate to denounce those responsible for the false representations. Newfoundland alone profited by the adventure; but the profit is dearly won. If Ottawa, Quebec and Newfoundland cannot find a means of punishing those who sold areas and shares, then the public may as well abandon all hope of redress. George Winston, a prospector, on arriving at Sydney, declared that he and a number of his fellows who paid out large sums of money for "gold" claims at Stag Bay and vicinity, would ask the Newfoundland government to proceed against the heads of various corporations that sold claims. Furthermore, Winston asserts "there isn't enough gold in Stag Bay to cover a penny."—Canadian Mining Journal.

Salvation Army's Great Loss In Japan

Colonel Thomas Cloud, leader of the Salvation Army forces in Newfoundland, has just received word from the International Headquarters, London, England, to say that the Army's Headquarters in Japan has been completely destroyed by fire in connection with the great disaster at Tokio.

Brigadier Sashida, Editor of the War Cry and all other periodicals, has been killed. Also Major Sakai, Principal of our Training College, attached to the headquarters of Japan.

These are two of the Army's most brilliant Japanese officers, who have taken many years to train. There are also others of the Headquarters Staff missing, and a score of them seriously injured. Mrs. Eadie, wife of Commissioner Eadie, who is in charge of the Army's work in Japan, is missing, and the fates of all the field officers in Tokio is uncertain.

For this reason the Colonel is anxious that every citizen should do his or her utmost in connection with His Excellency the Governor's appeal published a few days ago, to alleviate the distress caused by this great disaster.

The Danish schooner Haabet, 24 days from Oporto has arrived at Burin in salt ballast to order.

British Labor Party Held Up as Example for Canadian Unions

Trades and Labor Congress Would See Workers Wield Political Power.

VANCOUVER, Sept. 11—Canadian trades unionism took stock of itself today at the convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada here. A number of resolutions were submitted in consolidated form by the Resolutions Committee and provoked extended debate. One of these, to the effect that the Labor Congress continue to act as the Labor in Canada independently of any political organization, was discussed at considerable length, and reference was made by nearly every speaker to the tremendous political advancement of the English Labor party. An opinion was expressed that the Canadian movement was being held back in many ways by affiliation with American unions.

Attention was repeatedly drawn to the depletion of membership of various unions on both sides of the line during the past few years, and reasons for this were sought. The majority of the speakers blamed Labor's own indifference to its best interests. The One Big Union and the "Reds" were credited with reactionary influence. Delegate Simpson of Toronto pointed out that the diminution in numbers was largely due to the war. There had been a tremendous industrial inflation, with a great increase in membership and the cessation of hospitalities naturally reduced it. The statement was made during the debate that, since 1921, Canadian trades unionism had lost 100,000 members and 400 locals.

Remedy Must Be Found.

A view expressed by many delegates was crystalized by Delegate J. MacDonald of the Toronto Workers party, who said that he had to admit that trade unionism in Canada was at a crisis, their organization was at a lower level than ever before, and unless they found the cause and remedied it they would go lower still.

"Employing interests are in control of Canada," stated Delegate Pettipiece, Vancouver, "and we get as long as this condition continues." He was for a political movement that would move. Canadian workers should pattern after their fellows in Britain.

Just before adjourning resolutions were passed deploring issuing of injunctions during the Labor controversies, and promising to make every effort to have the Criminal Code amended making peaceful picketing during strikes legal; that the Federal Government be urged to abolish grants for cadet or other forms of military or naval training, and that the convention go on record as protesting against the use of military force in industrial disputes.

Points of Discussion.

The discussion centred around the resolution as introduced by Toronto Lodge No. 236, International Association of Machinists, calling on the Congress to affirm that the Canadian Congress would become the real centre of a virile, active and powerful trade union movement," if it were:

(1) Given the power to increase its per capita and levy assessments.

(2) If each international trade Labor Congress establish Canadian departments, with well-defined power and autonomy and all economic and financial activity be co-ordinated through the international officers at the department head.

(3) If each department of the American Federation of Labor building, railroads, etc., set up Canadian sections as has been done by the metal trades and railroad departments.

(4) If Canadian departments of international unions be conceded the right to strike and participate in any political activity in the interests of the Canadian working class.

The paramble to the resolution sets forth that "there has been, since the inception of trades unionism in Canada, an ever-present demand fluctuating between mild protest and open revolt, for a larger degree of Canadian autonomy in the growing struggle between capital and labor in Canada." The preamble suggests that "the more backward idealogy of the United States Labor movement, particularly of the officialdom, is ever more frequently being used as a break on the Canadian Labor movement, which is closer to the infinitely more advanced Labor movement of Great Britain."

Canadian Justice Rules In Far North

Two Eskimos Sentenced to Death for Murder of R.C.M.P. Officer.

FORT McMURAY, Alta., Sept. 12.—Two Eskimos convicted of murder were recently sentenced to death by Judge Lucien Dubuc at the Herschel Island Detachment Station of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the Arctic, according to passengers on the steamer Northland Echo, which arrived here from the North to-day.

The Eskimos will be hanged on December 7. The Executioner, who went North with the judical party from Edmonton, remained at Herschel Island, but will probably be brought to the outside" by dog team via the Yukon and Alaska on the completion of his duties.

Another coast native, also accused of murder, was sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

Judge Dubuc and his party are coming down on the steamer Slave River, it was stated.

The murder for which the Eskimos were convicted were those of R.C.M.P. Corporal Doak and Otto Binder, Hudson's Bay Co. trading post factor.

GIVING AND RECEIVING.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Giev love, and love to your life will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give love, and love to your life will paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just that we are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

"Should a young man, giving a theatre party, give assurance on his invitation that the young ladies will be safely delivered to their homes?" asked Joseph.

"Such escorts are expected without such notices, to see that the ladies get home safely. The responsibility is fully understood," said his uncle.

American Relief Organization

(From The World's Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Sept. .—Funds began pouring into the American Red Cross to-day as the nation-wide campaign for a $5,000,000 Japanese relief fund got under way. The first mail brought $125,000. This $5,000,000 is only a tentative mark. As the extent of the catastrophe becomes plainer the need for a far greater goal as America's contribution is becoming clearer to the directing heads of the Red Cross.

The American Relief Administration with its record of a $60,000,000 famine relief campaign for Russia has been drafted by the Red Cross. Secretary Hoover, Administrator of the Russian Relief, met at conferences today with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Wadsworth, acting Red Cross Chairman James L. Fieser, Edward W. Frazer and Dr. R. B. Tuesler, both of Togio and both former heads of the Japan Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Dr. Tuesler, who headed the American Red Cross Commission to Siberia, and Mr. Frazar, will return at once to Tokio as active heads of the relief work on behalf of the Red Cross. Both chanced to be in the United States and offered their experienced services. Dr. Tuesler has been in charge of a Tokio hospital. He will arrange for medical supplies in conjunction with the American Relief Fund.

Another "modern" interpretation of the Bible is announced—this one by Dr. Edgar Goodspeed, Chairman of the New Testament Department of the University of Chicago. Dr. Goodspeed has completed the writing of a modern-language version of the New Testament after devoting one and a half years to the task.

He explained that the New Testament was "not written in classical Greek," nor the "Biblical Greek" of the version of the Old Testament, nor even in the literary Greek of its day, but in the common language of everyday life, and that therefore he had sought to put his translation in the everyday language of American life.

* * * * *

The desciples said to him,

"How can we get bread enough in this solitude to feed such a crowd?"

Jesus said to them:

"How many loaves have you?"

They said:

"Seven, and a few small fish."

Then he ordered the people to take their places on the ground, and he took the seven loaves and the fish and gave thanks and gave them to his desciples, and the desciples gave them to the people. And they all ate and satisfied their hunger. And the pieces that they left were picked up filled seven baskets. There were four thousand men that were fed, besides women and children. And he dismissed the people and got into the boat and went to the district of Magadan.

* * * * *

The other modernized version of the Bible is being written by the famous Dr. Willem Van Loon, Dutch-American historian and author of "The Story of Mankind.".

* * * * *

I am glad to see that the famous labor paper, the New York Call, has been reorganized. This newspaper, which is the only English-speaking daily organ of labor in Eastern United States, is a tower of strength to the labor movement of New York. Sixteen years old, it has been owned by a few individuals who, instead of profiting by it, had continually to contribute toward its maintainence. Now a number of the great unions of the city have jointly purchased the paper and put $500,000 of new capital in it. Run on more ambitious lines, it is hoped that the paper will become self-supporting.

New editors have taken charge—Dr. Norman Thomas, editor; and Heber Blankenhorn, managing editor. Evans Clark becomes business manager. Dr. Thomas, who was formerly a minister, was editor of The World Tomorrow, and later associate editor of The Nation. Recently he was director and lecturer for the League of Industrial Democracy. He is a very forceful speaker. Mr. Blankenhorn is a well-known newspaperman, having been city editor of the New York Sun, the famous newspaper founded by Charles Dana. He was more latterly director of the Industrial Research Bureau, Inc. Mr. Blankenhorn, who is the author of a suggestive book on the press, is an authority on the coal question in the United States. He was secretary of the Interchurch Movement commission that investigated the great steel strike in 1919, and indeed the famous report made by that commission was drafted by him. Mr. Clarke, who is the husband of Freda Kirchway, managing editor of The Nation, was until recently director of the Labor Bureau, Inc. He was at one time connected with Princeton University. It so happens that I know all three of them, and I am convinced that under their editorship and management the Call will forge ahead.

* * * * *

The satisfaction occasioned by the rejuvenation of the Call is qualified by the news that the Daily Herald, the famous labor newspaper in London, is being discontinued after its brilliant career in behalf of the workers of Great Britain. Hamilton Fyfe, for years one of Lord Northcliffe's most capable editors, and until recently attached to the Daily Mail, which has a daily circulation of 2,000,000, is editor of the Daily Herald, having succeeded George Lansbury, M.P. Fyfe is a very successful novelist. The Herald had an enormous circulation, and it was one of the wonders of journalism that when it was found necessary to raise the price of the paper the circulation jumped up another 100,000 or so. It is a great pity that the poor financial condition of the unions there at present makes it necessary to close down the Herald. Let us hope that it won't be long before the fighting organ of British labor will be back again, stronger and more powerful than ever!

Quoting the Rev. F. W. Norwood, of City Temple, London:

"I know exactly where I am as a Christian minister with regard to war. Never under any circumstances can the slaughter of men be in accord with the spirit of Christ."

* * * * *

And Henry Ford:

"Politically we not only keep all the old truck around, but we make it scared. We speak in awe of 'our form of government,' and even pass laws making it a crime to critize it. Efficient service demands that we get rid of things that have outlived their usefulness. If the government doesn't do this the government will go down."

And, finally, the great poet, Walt Whitman:

"And I announce as a glory of These States that they respectfully listen to propositions, reforms, fresh views and doctrines from successions of men and women.

New Capital of Australian Commonwealth

LONDON, Sept. 14—With reference to the Australian Government's proposal to build a provisional parliament house at Canberra, the new capital of the Commonwealth, in order that the Australian Parliament could meet at Canberra as soon as possible, it is of interest to note what a big undertaking the new capital is. The site is the free gift of New South Wales and is in an area of practically virgin country.

It is in the upper basin of the Nurrumbidgee River, a branch of the Murray River, between two of its tributaries, the Molongo and the Cotter. It comprises 900 square miles of territory. The Canaberra capital area lies in well-watered, undulated but practically unoccupied territory, and the city when built will be reasonably equidistant from the chief centres of population, Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide and Brisbane.

The city of Canberra, which will be a model of its kind, is being constructed on a central area twelve miles square, with a further reservation for parks, roads, a military college and other public buildings, leaving 300,000 acres available for settlement and cultivation outside the boundaries. It will be beautifully situated near the windings of the Molongo River.

The hills within the Federal territory vary from 900 to 2,800 feet above sea level. The whole district enjoys a splendid climate, with an average rainfall of about 25 inches a year, practically the same as London. The mean shade temperature in summer is about 68 degrees and in winter 42 degrees, and there is a crisp, dry atmosphere. At midsummer the shade temperature rises occassionally to over 100 degrees, but the nights are always cool, and the winter is invigorating but not severe.

The foundation stone of the new federal capital was laid by Lord Denman, who was then Governor-General of Australia, in 1913. The expenditure already has mounted up in the millions and it will cost many millions more to complete the new capital.

At the time New South Wales gave this area to the Commonwealth Government for the purpose of a new Federal seat of New South Wales also presented an area of land for the construction of a new seaport at Jarvis Bay. Canberra is to have access to this seaport by the construction of 123 miles of railway.

"I am invited to a dinner and am not sure from which side of my plate I should take my napkin. Can you help me?" asked Maud.

"You will find your napkin placed on your plate, so you need not worry," said her sister.

NOTE OF THANKS

The husband and family of the late Mrs. Henry Sheppard (nee Bertha H. Tucker) wish to thank all those who contributed by their kind acts and sympathetic willingness to relieve her suffering, during her tedious illness, particularly Mr. Mark Brett's family, and the many kind friends of Pt. Leamington neighbourhood, Mrs. Jones, Mr. Heath and Mr. Noel of the Government Northern Coastal Service.

Drs. Anderson and Wilson, Miss Taylor, Nurses Tulk, Taffee, Smith, Gardiner, Spracklin, Coughlan, Scott, LeDrew, and B. Gosse of the General Hospital.

To the Revs. Canon Field and Netten for their kind attention and spiritual consolement.

Also to those who conveyed expressions of sympathy and consolation in their bereavement they extend their heartfelt gratitude.

North Sydney Notes

(N. S. Herald)

Mrs. W. Anderson arrived in North Sydney this morning from Burgeo to visit relatives here.

Messrs. J. Lane, from Gambo, and R. Vardy, from Hickman's Harbor, Newfoundland, arrived in North Sydney this morning and will spend their vacation here.

Miss J. Farrell, from Fortune, Newfoundland, and Mrs. Leslie Farrell, from North Bay, Newfoundland, arrived in North Sydney this morning to visit here.

The coastal schooners Una, Captain Lemoine and Rose L., Captain Lake, are in port to loda coal for the Newfoundland coastal trade.

The wooden steamer Dieuze, 598 tons, Captain Dicks, went to international pier on Monday afternoon to load coal for Newfoundland ports.

The schooner Millie Francis, Captain Thornhill, arrived in port this morning to load a cargo of flour and cargo coal. The flour has not arrived and in the meantime the schooner is at International pier where she will load the coal. Both cargoes are for Newfoundland coastal ports.

S.S. Manchester Spinner, which sailed from here a week ago with a cargo of coal for Botwood, Newfoundland, is booked to carry a cargo of Bell Island iron ore to Philadelphia.

The coastal schooners in port to load coal for Newfoundland are Ada B. M., Captain Thomas; Swan, Captain Rogers; Joseph McGill, Captain Williams; Annie D., Captain Gallant; Cavalier, Captain Mills; A. B. Francis, and Garfield, Captain Dober.

Other schooners in port to load coal are J. C. May, Captain McLellan, for Codroy, Nfld.; Minnie D., Captain Lawrence, from St. Pierre; Uncle Bob, Captain Clarck, from Channel; R. G. W. C., Captain Blackmore, from Channel; Bessie McDonald, Captain Welsh, from Lamaline, Newfoundland.

To-night's Junior Game

At St. Bon's football field to-night the Wesley and St. Mary's teams will clash in the final game of the schedule. A win for the Wesley puts them on the same level with the Cadets and Holy Cross when all three will have to play off for championship honors, whilst a draw or lose for St. Mary's will leave the Cadets and Holy Cross to play. Great interest, therefore, is centred in this game.

Rabbitts Wins In Masonic Tournament

The final game in the Masonic Club Championship Billiard Tournament was played last night, the players being G. W. Rabbitts and Jas. Edwards. Rabbitts carried off the honours, the score being: Rabbitts, 400; Edwards, 338. The biggest break, 71, was made by Rabbitts, who wins the Club Championship and special gold medal presented by the committee. Edwards made breaks of 35, 37, 38.

PERSONAL

Mr. George Cummings, of Job Bros. office staff has resigned his position and leaves by the Sachem to day enroute for Boston, where he will reside in future.

Sir P. T. McGrath, who is engaged in connection with the Labrador boundary dispute, left New York on Saturday last by the Olympic for Southampton.

Capt. J. W. Harrison, Marine Superintendent for the Furness Withy Co., who was visiting England, is a passenger by the Sachem returning to Montreal.

Mr. T. R. McGrath, who was on a holiday trip to New York, returned by the Silvia. Mr. McGrath and Mr. C. F. Taylor witnessed the Dempsey-Firpo championship bout on Friday night last.

Mr. Samuel Tiller, who underwent treatment at the General Hospital some time ago, is now fully recovered and will shortly be able to resume his duties on the F. P. Union."

By the S.S. Sachem this evening Mr. A. G. Gibb leaves for Boston, where he will make his future home. His family has already been in residence there for some months. Mr. Gibb until recently was floor-walker in the Dry Goods Department of Ayre & Sons, Ltd., with which firm he was connected for over twenty-one years; a position which he filled with complete satisfaction both to the firm and their many patrons. In leaving Newfoundland, Mr. Gibb is not severing his connection entirely with the country. He proposed establishing a commission business in Boston, through which he will keep in constant touch with many concerns here, and for which his many years experience in this country and an extensive knowledge of the American markets admirably fit him. In leaving he takes with him the best wishes of his numerous friends for his future success.

DEATH

GOUDIE—Passed peacefully away away at noon Wednesday, Sept. 19th, William Henry Goudie, beloved husband of Jane Goudie, aged 64 years. Left to mourn their sad loss are one son Stanley; two sisters, Mrs. Samuel Feaver of this city and Mrs. Elizabeth Martin, New York; also, one brother, Alexander, of Boston. Funeral from his late residence, 13 Freshwater Rd. on to-day Friday, 21st, at 3 p.m. Relatives and friends please attend.

Superintendent W. J. Long Is Honored on Birthday

Yesterday afternoon, the entire staff of the Union Publishing Co. met in the Job Department, and gave Mr. W. J. Long, the Superintendent, a pleasant surprise, when they presented him with an address and a handsome smoker's chair in honor of his forty-ninth birthday.

Mr. Long was deeply touched by the kind thoughtfulness which prompted the action of his fellow-workers, and made a suitable reply in which he expressed his sincere appreciation.

Last evening, at his home, Mr. Long was again agreeably surprised, when a number of his friends called on him to tender their congratulations and wish him many happy returns. The party were royally entertained by Mr. Long and his good wife, and a most enjoyable time was spent. During the evening "Johnny" was encased in a handsome smoking jacket, in the cosy embrace of which, and seated in his comfy smoker's chair, contentedly puffing a huge Havana, the party left him at an early hour this morning.

To Enter Hospital For Treatment

(N. S. Herald.)

Capt. W. Meikle, of S.S. Kamouraska, who was ill on arrival of the steamer here from the St. Lawrence during the week end was on the ship when she sailed this morning for Montreal with a full cargo of Scotia coal. Capt. Meikle will enter hospital at Montreal for treatment, though he was reported to be very much better this morning.

The ship was cleared from here by her first officer, Mr. Morgan, formerly her master, thought Capt. Meikle will nominally be in command of the ship on her trip up the river.

The steamer has a cargo of 6900 tons Scotia coal.

Optimistic Report of Oil Strike

AT PARSON'S POND.

The Hon. J. F. Downey received the following message yesterday from Mr. J. D. Henry, Parson's Pond:—

"On Monday struck new well at 1060 feet, encountered heavy gas and good first oil shown. On following morning gas increased and oil stood at 100 feet in drill hole. Baled out one ton; light and better than any other well has produced. Am forwarding sample to public analyst. No well drilled in the Colony has given such good drilling and quality results. This information available to press."

The Danish schooner Inglid, 5 days from North Sydney coal laden, has arrived to T. H. Carter & Co.

Well-Known Taxi Driver Dies Suddenly Yesterday

The sudden passing of Mr. Earl Miller, the popular taxi driver, which occurred at noon yesterday came as a severe blow to his parents and many friends. Deceased had complained of late of pains in the head, and thought they were caused by his teeth. Yesterday morning at 10 o'clock he visited a dentist and made an appointment to have some teeth taken out at 4 p.m. and leaving the dentist's went to Dr. Mitchel's surgery to arrange for the operation. While talking to the doctor he suddenly collapsed and fell into his arms, becoming unconscious. Seeing that his condition was serious, spiritual help was summoned. He never rallied and passed away at noon, the cause of his death being a tumor of the brain.

Deceased was an old St. Patrick's Hall boy, and served his time as a motor mechanic with Mr. Jos. Cocker, afterwards going into the taxi business, and his familiar form on the Central Stand will be sadly missed by his host of admirers.

He was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. James Miller, who are distracted over his untimely passing.

The funeral takes place on Sunday at 2.30 p.m. from his late residence No. 1 McNeil St.

Medals For R. N. R.

The following message from the High Commissioner's Office received yesterday by the G. W. V. A. will be good news to ex-Reserve men who have been without their medals:

"With reference to your telegram 18th August, 8 packages containing the medals for Nfld. Royal Naval Reserve have been received from the Accountant General of the Navy and are being forwarded Department of Militia per S. S. Digby sailing from Liverpool on or about 29th Sept."

Wedding Bells

TAYLOR—BURRY.

A very pretty wedding took place at the Parsonage, Warsaw, Ont., on Wednesday, September 12th, when Barbara Anne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Burry, of Bonavista Bay, Newfoundland, was united to Ernest Taylor, son of Mr. Richard Taylor, of Carbonear, Newfoundland.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Josephine Burry. Mrs. F. G. Weir, also a sister, played the wedding music. Rev. F. C. Weir, brother-in-law of the bride officiated. The marriage took place at 11 a.m.

After luncheon the happy couple left for Picton where they will spend their honeymoon. About the 20th of September, they will go to Montreal where the groom has a position with the Hudson Bay Company. They will reside at 782 Shuter Street.

Saints Defeat C. E. I.

The Saints carried off the honours in last night's Tie-Cup game when they defeated the C.E.I. by a score of 4—1. The game did not start till 6.40 and the last fifteen minutes was played in the darkness. Elton scored within two minutes of the start, and Bert Sawyers was responsible for No. 2 after twenty minutes play. In the second half Foster and Sawyers did the scoring. A feature of the game was Belbin's goal saving. To-night the Feildians and Guards will be seen in action again.

Labrador Report

Makovic, Holton, Smokey and Grady—Light, north, clear.

Flat Island and Domino—Light S. W. wind, clear.

Venison Island—Fresh N.W., clear.

Battle Hr.—Calm, clear; good fishing.

The general public will be glad to learn the above news and it will be trusted that the hopes which for many years centred around the Parsons Pond oil fields, will at last materalize. The creation of an oil-well industry around Parsons Pond would open up an industrial activity on the West Coast, which, combined with the Humber operations, would ensure great returns to the country. Future news regarding the oil find will be watched with interest.

S.S. Sable I. is due to-morrow morning at 8.30.

Switzerland Is Charged at League Session With Smuggling Drugs Into United States and Canada

Grave Charge Causes Sensation At League Opium Commsn. Session

Proof Advanced Showed Switzerland Was Manufacturing Drugs and Smuggling Them Into The States and Canada.

GENEVA, Sept. 22—The charge that great quantities of harmful drugs were being manufactured in Switzerland and clandestinely imported into the United States and Canada, caused a stir at yesterday's discussion of the League of Nations opium commission which on thursday decided to recommend an international conference for the promotion of the fight against opium. Dame Edith Lyttleton, of Great Britain, expressed regret that Switzerland, which had not yet ratified the Hague Narcotics Convention, should be turning out drugs based on opium and morphine and smuggling them by ingenious means into Canada and U.S.A. Gustave Ador, former President of Switzerland, quickly protested against "the grave assersion." He insisted that Switzerland is doing everything possible in the situation, and hope to ratify the convention next year. Mr. Graham, Canadian member of the commission, read documents, which he declared, proved drugs were being fraudulently exported from Switzerland to both Canada and U.S.A., other speakers intervened and saved what appeared to be developing into a most embarrassing situation.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Publishers Association and International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union last night signed an agreement under which the International Union will endeavor to run the presses of the Metropolitan dailies while the Local Union, suspended from the International body, remains on strike.

Lord Birkenhead Seeks Aid For Europe

KEYSTONE VIEW CO., NEW YORK

Lord Birkenhead, who has just arrived from England, was photographed just after speaking at the Institute of Politics at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass. This was the first of a series of lectures he will deliver in the United States and Canada. The Earl who was Lord Chancellor of Great Britain in the Lloyd George Cabinet from 1919 to 1922, urged the United States to abandon her policy of isolation and to intervene in the European situation.

CANADIAN LOAN OVERSUBSCRIBED BY 8 MILLIONS

TORONTO, Sept. 21.—Subsriptions to the new Dominion of Canada refunding loan totalled fifty-eight million dollars to-night, exceeding the preliminary offering by eight million dollars. Dealers in charge of marketing expressed complete satisfaction with the character of response and predicted the entire amount of one hundred and seventy two million dollars required by the Government to refund the 1923 victory bond issue which matures on November first would be raised in Canada without difficulty Outside of war time financing the present offering represents the most important piece of financing ever undertaken in the Dominion.

N.Y. LOCAL PRESSMEN'S CHARTER IS SUSPENDED

NEW YORK, Sept. 21—A basis for the formulation of a working agreement to resume publication, submitted at a meeting of the New York Newspaper Publishers Association by George Berry, President of the International Pressmen and Assistant Union, was up for discussion at a metting of the publishers organization this morning. The proposal calls for managing the presses by members of the International Union instead of members of the local body. The proposal followed Berry's action yesterday in declaring the charter of the local union suspended because of the walkout without the sanction of the parent body.

CALLED FROM FESTIVITIES OF WEDDING TO D ATHBED

NORTH SYDNEY, Sept. 21—To be called from his wedding festivities to the death bed of his brother, only to arrive too alte to see him alive, was the saddening experience of Noah Johnson, of North Sydney, who was married last evening to Miss Esther Caines. CHAPTER XXX.

"His decision was absolutely right," declared Elizabeth. "I'd almost prefer to see my brother decently dead than the laughing stock of the town, married to a woman that no respectable person would dare receive in her home."

Old Hector looked up in time to see Jane nod approval of her sister's sentiments, and Mrs. McKaye, by her silence, appeared also to agree with them. The Laird reached forth and laid his great hand over hers.

"Poor Nellie!" he murmured affectionately. "'Tis hard to stand between our love and duty, is it not, lass? By God, sweetheart, I had to do it. I couldn't stand to see him wie a lass that any man or woman could throw mud at." His voice shook with the intensity of his emotion; his flashing glance swept the board in pitiful defiance. "I have a right to protect my honor and the honor of my house!" he cried sharply. "Is not Jesus Christ the embodiment of honor? How can He blame me if I trust in His power and discretion. I've prayed to Him—ach—man, how I've prayed to Him—to keep my son from makin' a fule o' himsel'——"

"Now there you go again, Hector, dear," his wife soothed. She rose from her place at the table, came round to him, put her arms around his great neck, and laid her cheek against his. "An open confession is good for the soul, they say, Hector. I'm glad you've taken us into your confidence, because it permits us to share with you an equal burdens of this heart-breaking decision. But you mustn't feel badly, father. Haven't I told you our boy isn't going to die?"

"Do you think so Nellie?" he pleaded childishly for the hundredth time.

"Silly old Hector! I know so." And this time there was in her voice such a new note of confidence and in her eyes such a gelam of triumph that she actually did succeed in comforting him. "Ah well God's will be done," he said piously, and attacked his dinner again while Mrs. McKaye slipped out of the room and upstairs on some pretext. Once in her bedroom, she seized the extension telephoned and called up Andrew Daney.

"Andrew," she said softly but distinctly, "this is Nellie McKaye speaking. Hector and I have been discussing the advisability of sending for the Brent girl."

"I—I was going to take up the matter with you, Mrs. McKaye. I had a talk with your husband this afternoon, but he was a bit wild——"

"He isn't so wild now, Andrew. He's talked it over with the girls and me. It's a terrible alternative, Andrew, but it simply means our boy's life for the gratification of our own selfish family pride——"

"Exactly! Exactly! And I thought I understand how you feel, Mrs. McKaye, after all, now, it's only a nine days' wonder, and you can't keep people from talking anyhow, unless you gag the brutes. The boy has been raving, and some of the hospital attendants have talked, and the gossip is all over town again. So why not send for her? She doesn't have to marry him just because her presence will revive his sinking morale—"

"Certainly not. My idea, exactly, Andrew. Well, Andrew, suppose you telegraph her——"

"No, no, no! I'll telephone her. Remember we have a transcontinental telephone service nowadays. She might not realize the vital necessity for speed; she might question her right to come if I tried to cover the situation in a telegram. But, catch her on the 'phone, Mrs. McKaye, and you can talk to her and convince her."

"Oh, that's perfectly splendid! Place the call for me immediately, Andrew, please. And—Andrew, do not mention to Hector what I've done. He wants to do it, poor man, but he simply cannot bring himself to the point of action."

"Don't I know it?" Daney's voice rose triumphant. "The blessed old duffer!" he added. "I'll put in a call for New York immediately. We ought to get it through in an hour or two."

CHAPTER XXXI.

IT WAS MR. DANEY'S task to place the call for Nan Brent in New York City, and while he did not relish the assignment, nevertheless he was far from shrinking from it. While the citizens of Port Agnew had been aware for more than two years that trans-continental telephone was possible, they knew also that three minutes of conversation for twenty-five dollars tended to render silence more or less golden. As yet, therefore, no one in Port Agnew had essayed the great venture; wherefore Mr. Daney knew that when he did his conversation would be listened to eagerly by every telephone operator in the local office and a more or less garbled report of same circulated through the town before morning unless he took pains to prevent it. This he resolved to do, for the Tyee Lumber Company owned the local telephone company and it was quite generally understood in Port Agnew that Mr. Daney was high, low, and jack and the game, to use a sporting expression.

He stood by the telephone a moment after hanging up the received and tugged at his beard reflectively.

"No," he murmured presently, "I haven't time to motor up-country forty or fifty miles and place the call in some town where we are not known. It just isn't going to be possible to smother this miserable affair; sooner or later the lid is going to fly off, so I might as well be game and let the tail go with the hide. Oh, damn it, damn it! If I didn't feel fully responsible for this dreadful state of affairs, I would most certainly stand from under!"

He turned from the telephone and beheld Mrs. Daney, alert of countenance and fairly pop-eyed with excitement. She grasped him by the arm.

"You have a private line from the mill office to The Dreamerie," she reminded him. "Have the call run in on the office telephone, then call Mrs. McKaye, and switch her on. We can listen in on the office extensions."

Upon his spouse Mr. Daney bent a look of profound contempt.

"When I consider the loyalty, the love, the forebearance, and Christian charity that have been necessary to restrain me from tearing asunder that which God, in a careless moment, joined together, Mary, I'm inclined to regard myself as four-fifths superman and the other fifth pure angel," he declared coldly. "This is something you're not in on, woman, and I hope the strain of your curiosity will make you sick for a week."

He seized his hat and fled, leaving his wife to shed bitter, scalding tears at his cruel words. Poor thing! She prided herself on being the possessor of a superior brand of virtue and was always quick to take refuge in tears when anyone derided that virtue; indeed, she never felt so virtuous as when she clothed herself, so to speak, in an atmosphere of patient resignation to insult and misunderstanding. People who delude themselves into the belief that they can camouflage their own nastiness and weaknesses from discovery by intelligent persons are the bane of existence, and in his better half poor Daney had a heavy cross to bear.

He left the house wishing he might dare to bawl aloud with anguish that he was yoked for life to a woman of whom he was secretly ashamed; he wished he might dare to get fearfully intoxicated and remain in that condition for a long time. In his youth he had been shy and retiring, always envying the favor the ladies appeared to extend to the daring devils of his acquaintance; consequently, his prenuptial existence had not been marked by any amorous experiences, for where other men sowed wild oats, Mr. Daney planted a sweet forget-me-not. As a married man, he was a model of respectability—sacrosanct, almost. His idea of worldly happiness consisted in knowing that he was a solid, trustworthy business man, of undoubted years and discretion, whom no human being could blackmail. Now, as he fled from the odor of respectability he yearned to wallow in deviltry, to permit his soul, so long cramped in virtue, to expand in wickedness.

On his way down-town he met young Bert Darrow, son of the man after whom the adjacent lumber-town had been christened. Mr. Darrow had recently been indicted under the Mann law for a jolly little interstate romance. But yesterday Mr. Daney had regarded Bert Darrow as a wastrel and had gone a block out of his way to avoid the scapegrace; tonight, however, Bert appealed to him as a man of courage, a devil of a fellow with spirts, a lover of life in its infinite moods and tenses, a lad with a fine contempt for public opinion and established morals. Morals! Bah, what were they! In France, Bert Darrow would have earned for himself a wink and a shrug, as though to say: "Ah, these young fellows! One must watch out for the rascals!" In the United States, he was a potential felon.

"Evening, Bert," Mr .Daney saluted him pleasantly, and paused long enough to shake the latter's hand. "I saw your ad in The Seattle P. I. this morning. You young dog! Hope you crawl out of that mess all right."

"Thanks, awfully," answered Bert.

Mr. Daney felt better after that brief interview. He had clasped hands with sin and felt now like a human being.

He went directly to the local telephone office and placed his New York call with the chief operator, after which he sat in the manager's office and smoked until ten o'clock, when New York reported "Ready!"

WOMAN'S HEALTH RESTORED

She Claims Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did It After Everything Else Failed

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I feel that I ought to let you know about my case. I was ailing and could barely do my housework and washing I was so run-down, just from having one child. I took a lot of medicines and had doctors. Then I gave them all up and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel wonderfully good now. I do everything that comes along, and we all take your medicine as a tonic when we don't feel just so. I am thankful for what the Vegetable Compound has done for my health and for my family."—Mrs. MARY SAIECHECK, 944 28th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Letters like these testify to the value of the Vegetable Compound. These women speak from the fullness of their hearts. They describe as correctly as they can their conditions: First, those symptoms that affected them most conspicuously; and later the disappearance of those symptoms. They are sincere expressions of gratitude. For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so praised by women.

Bishop Jones Memorial Was Dedicated at C. of E. Cathedral Yesterday

Impressive Services Were Attended By Large Congregations

THE BISHOP OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Yesterday, the feast of St. Matthew was chosen for the dedication, at the Church of England Cathedral, of a Memorial Reredos which has been given by the surviving members of the family of the late Bishop Jones.

This work was designed by G. Gilbert Scott, N. A., the most prominent architict in England to-day, who is responsible for the new Cathedral at Liverpool which has made his name famous throughout the world The work was executed by Messrs. Thompson & Sons, Peterborough, Eng and was successfully conveyed across the Atlantic, in sections, and erected in the Cathedral, stretching across the entire eastern wall of the choir beneath the magnificient east window. A special representative of Messrs. Thompson, Mr. Tebbs erected the work in situ. Other details are given in the subsequent addresses which were delivered in yesterday's services.

The dedication services were most impressive and were attended by large congregations. His Lordship the Bishop, took the Dedication service and was also the celebrant at the Choral Communion, assisted by the Rector of the Cathedral, Rev. Canon Jeeves; The Rural Dean, Rev. Andrew Tulk; Rev. Canon Bolt, and Rev. J. Brinton as Chaplain. In addition to the above the following clergy took part:—Rev. Canons G H. Field, T. . Netten; Revs. E. C. Earp, A. B. S. Stirling, J. E. R. Nicholls, Dr. Facey, A. Pittman, I. Parsons, W. R. J. Higgett, F. P. Law, G. O. Lightbourne, Gwynne Lightbourne, (Toronto), Arthur Tulk, E. C. Clench, H. W. Facey, W. E. R. Cracknell, H. Pike.

Following the service which included the dedicatory prayers, hymns etc. His Lordship Bishop White delivered the following sermon.

THE BISHOP'S SERMON

The Open Door of Opportunity

Rev. III:8: "Behold I have set before thee an open door."

Had these words been spoken to either or all of the five Bishops consecrated to take the oversight of our Church in this land between 1839, when Bishop Spencer entered upon his episcopate, and 1878 when Bishop Jones succeeded Bishop Kelly in the office of Bishop, they would have had an appropriateness as full and as true as when they were first spoken to the aged Bishop of Philadelphia—one of the Bishops of the Seven Churches of Asia, as St. John calls them.

A brief comparison of the conditions amidst which the Bishop of the Church of Philadelphia worked on the one hand and the conditions surrounding our own bishops on the other hand will bear out what I say, having regard to the vastly different times in which the latter lived.

The Bishop of the Asian Church referred to was in all probability Demetrius. Like the other bishops of his time he probably was called to minister to "a small congregation of Christians gathered out of the back streets of those generally splendid cities in which Greek art and life went hand in hand with the luxury and superstition of Asia." Such a bishop had, as a rule, two kinds of difficulties to contend with. There was a fermentation of thought on the frontiers of the Apostolic Church in which Jewish and heathen ingredients were constantly producing one or another form of so-called Apostolic error; and this was a constant subject of anxiety to those primitive rulers of the Churches of lesser Asia. "At Philadelphia there was what is described as 'a synagogue of Satan,' the proceedings of which would have been watched by the bishop with natural misgivings."

"Besides those dangers from within, there was the constant danger of popular violence or of official persecution from without." Anti-Christian fanaticism was always ready to break out and could only be appeased by bloodshed. The Church, set in the midst of an impoverished and superstitious people, would be regarded as "a ligitimate and inviting object of assault." In other words the aged Bishop was always face to face with difficulties within and without. The circumstances were to say the least unfavourable. He had neither means, nor influence, nor prestige to help him in his struggle. The cause he represented was an unpopular cause: nay more, it was a despised cause. good enough perhaps for the outcasts and those of no account, but beneath the contempt of the cultured pagan world.

And yet it was when the outlook was so dark and unpromising that he, the Bishop, was bidden to "take heart of grace": to find in those utterly discouraging conditions the opportunity for displaying the power and enterprise of the Gospel of his Lord. "Behold I have set before thee an open door."

Now if the conditions facing the former bishops of this diocese were unlike in character to those I have been describing, they were identical in effect they presented to the bishops what must have appeared to many as an almost hopeless task, especially in the earlier days. When Bishop Spencer came to Newfoundland as Bishop "the Church was in a most disorganized and dispirited condition; the schools were languishing many of them broken up, and all were destitute of that spirit of unity and order so essential to real efficiency." In the four short years of his stay it is true that many improvements were effected; but we learn from the writings of his successor, Bishop Feild, what spiritual destitution prevailed upon his arrival in the diocese. No one having read the story of his life and labours during the 32 years of his episcopate can fail to confess that the claims of the diocese were enough to tax the endurance, both mental and physical, of the strongest and most self-sacrificing of men. When he began his work the diocese was practically without organization. Before he laid down his task it could be recorded that "Synodical order and unity prevailed; that the number of clergy had been quadrupled, that a college had been established for the education of men for the ministry, that Church schools for boys and girls were in operation, that the Orphanage had been founded, the Cathedral partially built and a partial endowment for the episcopate provided. Those who have tried to discover the nature of the efforts necessary for the accomplishment of all this work know what an uphill task it was and how at times the Bishop's stout heart was almost ready to despair.

His able and eloquent successor who for nine years had been his loyal Coadjutor, was physically unequal to the task and at the end of one year was obliged to resign his charge.

On the 1st day of May, 1878, the Bishop whom most of you know was consecrated. For 39 years he continued to exercise his office in Newfoundland and Bermuda. He resigned his charge in 1917 and entered into rest in the early days of January, 1918

It is still possible for many amongst us to recall the leading characteristics of his long episcopate. And perhaps it is only by an intimate acquaintance with the story of those years, both as regards the Colony and the Church that we are enabled to estimate at all accurately the formidable tasks with which the Bishop was then faced. The passing years brought with them increasing demands upon the resources of the Church, larger numbers of people called for more ministrations Funds and men were not easily obtained nor were they always obtainable. Financial chaos and disaster by fire imposed their burdens. Impaired health and domestic trials made their demands upon the Bishop's fortitude and faith. We know how he carried himself through it all; how he was revered by men of all shades of opinion, and to the end held the esteem of all, irrespective of denominational affiliation. He lived to see causes that were near his heart reaching at least a promise of achievement. Perhaps amongst them all the restoration of the Cathedral to that measure of completion to which it had attained before the great fire, gave him as much gratification as anything that occurred during his episcopate. For it must be borne in mind that for many years he was responsible for the Cathedral and its work not only as Bishop but as Rector as well

On all counts therefore it is surely befitting that in a building which he loved and in which he served with such dignity and devotion, a worthy memorial should find a place. And if in his cathedral a memorial should be erected, what more appropriate position could be selected than the neighborhood of the altar at which he stood so frequently to minister, and from which he gave his episcopal blessing to the people whom he loved.

The Reredos, which is the gift of the late Bishop's family, is a triumph of artistic skill; it is clothed with remarkable dignity, and is of equisite taste. It is more than a costly adornment; it makes an eloquent appeal by its beauty and its chastened strength It reminds us that all the glory of the Church: its progress and its triumphs are offerings to be laid at the feet of the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls —the Saviour and Redeemer of men Its main purpose is to beautify God's Sanctuary as well as to keep fragrant the memory of his servant. That purpose will undoubtedly be fulfilled.

I have spoken of that "open door of opportunity" supplied by the very obstacles which the late Bishop and those who preceeded him were called to meet and overcome. That door of opportunity, similarly presented, is open before the Church in our day—and in our Diocese. In order to seize and use our opportunities, to find them just because of the unfavourable outlook is to learn the lesson our Fathers-in-God have bequeathed to us from the days that are past. The work they tried to do for God and man is their best memorial and is more enduring than stone. It will last on in that eternal world wither they have gone.

The Reredos dedicated today will recall to succeeding generations the memory of an episcopate which was marked by simplicity of life and singular devotion to the pastoral office. Llewellyn Jones was first and foremost a Bishop of the Chuurch. Other interests he had but they were subordinate to the performance of the duties which properly belong to one called to be an overseer of the flock of Christ. To that high office he gave himself wholly while health and strength were given him. He has left to each of us an example of the way in which we may perform with singleness of aim the duties to which God's Providence may call us.

Hymn 53.
Benediction.
Nune Dimittis.

THE REREDOS.

The following is an explanation of what the Reredos is and what it is intended to represent:

. . . "They shall be as the stones of a crown lifted up as an ensign." —Zechariah 9-16.

So shall the eyes of the late Bishop's admirers behold these stones in the Sanctuary he loved so well. Not only by his spiritual life but by his innate sense of what was beautiful and fitting, this memorial of exquisite taste will ever connect our thoughts with the good Bishop.

He longed to see the House of God completed as it had been designed. That has not yet been done, but by these "stones" placed in the most hallowed site, a "crown" is lifted up as an "ensign" in the sanctuary of his Cathedral. The figure of Archbishop Theodore is next to the place where the Chief Pastor of the flock often sat Theodore's work of building up the Church of Christ in the early centuries suggested the work of Bishop Jones' oversight of this Diocese. Next to this figure, quite naturally, comes St. David the patron Saint of Wales. Then St. Michael triumphing over Satan who is carved with a bestial face, and on his head rests the point of the flaming sword. Before the central figure of Our Lord we fear to speak, it is difficult to express the beauty and serene majesty of this central "stone." On the right hand is seen the figure of St. George, a radiant youth in armour victorious over the dragon. He and St. Michael represent the most noble order of chivalry as well as the saintly patronage of England. Next in order comes the patron Saint of Scotland, Andrew, with his cross at hand. And upon the extreme right is Ireland's patron Saint Patrick, with the shamrock symbol and a book in the left hand.

Here then are the Saints in Stone, to remind us of the best which is in the races of British character which has helped to people and maintain so large a part of the world. They also stood with others against the forces opposed to sainthood in the years of the Great War, at the end of which the late Bishop passed out from among us. And all who see this stone screen will remember afresh his character, and it shall be to them "as an ensign lifted up."

THE EVENING SERVICE

Following a voluntary by Organist King, the evening service opened with Hymn 239, "Christ is our Corner Stone." The office was taken by the Rev. J. Brinton. The Rev. W. R. J. Higgitt read the first lesson and the Rural Dean of Conception Bay, Rev. E. C. Clench, the second lesson. After the Hymn, "Let Saints on Earth in concert sing," Canon Jeeves preached a short sermon from the text "I will give him a white stone," Revelation 217. The Rev. preacher spoke as follows:

CANON JEEVES PREACHES

In 1846 Bishop Feild went to England to raise money for Newfoundland Cathedral. The plans were drawn up by Sir Gilbert Scott, at that time considered the greatest Gothic Architect of the day. The nave was dedicated on St. Matthew's Day, 1850. The late Bishop Jones completed the choir and transepts. Fire destroyed all this work except the main walls. In 1895 the choir and transepts were built up again under the direction of Gilbert Scott, who died when comparatively young and on the road to a greater reputation than his father. In 1902 the nave rebuilding began and on St. Matthew's Day, 1905, it was rededicated.

Some of you were present on that occasion. Amongst those who have since passed on their way, we honour today, the late Bishop. It is not possible for one who was never privileged to know him, to do justice to his memory. But those who speak of him hold his memory dear as one of their most treasured recollections. And we, who minister here, can still feel his influence. Order is God's first law and it would seem to have been a first care of Bishop Jones. In many little ways his decisions govern our detailed arrangements still. We often do what we know he would have us to do.

Could human memory fail, then this splendid stone screen is our reminder and witness. It is given by the surviving sons as a memorial to their father, and your Father in God. It happens also in the choice of stone that we see the pure white freshness before we take in the details of design. But lately hewn from its Scottish bed, it reminds us. that God chooses his servants and removes them where He will. And the family have given us this white stone on earth to remind us of that white stone given with a new name inscribed by the Divine Architect, in Heaven. 'Tis the reward of victorious sainthood. This stone, so skilfully wrought under direction of one whose father's work surrounds it, will ever remind us all of that purity of purpose which marked the life of Bishop Jones. He lived for one purpose, "one thing I do, and that was to promote the glory of God." Doubt ye not therefore but earnestly believe that he is conscious of our prayers to-day. We in the earthly sanctuary look up to the lovely statues of our patron saints.

But in Paradise our late Bishop is with them. What we see behind those figures is but in a glass darkly, but he knows as in open vision.

Close to the seat he often occupied you may see the figure of Archbishop Theodore. That figure, especially selected, connects the administration of the Diocese of Newfoundland with the province of Canterbury which Theodore administered in the 7th century. When you look upon that figure let it speak to you of the late Bishop's journeyings across the ocean and in visiting the scattered parishes and missions of the Diocese. Like Theodore he had a large and unwieldly country to cover and administer. Here in this cathedral we gratefully receive this rich adornment of the House of God. It has been to-day offered to God in memory of His servant. In heaven we read the new name given is recorded in a white stone. Here it is also carved and fretted. The fairest stone is ever the one upon which the chisel lingers longest. The exquisite character is only gained through toil and tribulation nobly borne with chirstian fortitude and cheerfulness.

Many a blow and biting sculture
Polished well those stone elect.

Let them preach their own sermon to you and to me. We must follow the Saints of God in that we are ready to let the chisel cut deep into our characters. Let purity of purpose ever be your aim, remembering that white stone. Ask yourself, do I want throughout eternity to be as I am now? Then with patience submit to the work of Holy Spirit that at last having finished what God has for us to do on earth we may pass on our way. Then shall Paradise be peopled with those whom we have learnt to love and follow on earth and amongst them shall be seen the Bishop whom you have "loved long since and lost awhile."

After the sermon the Hymn "How bright these glorious spirits shine" was sung, following which the procession forming up under Mr. A. Reeves, as crossbearer passed down the North Aisle and up the nave singing (396) "Blessed City Heavenly Salem," returning to the Sanctuary. The service then concluded with the Benediction.

Junior League Football

Wesley Defeats St. Mary's.

At St. Bon's Field last evening the Wesley and St. Mary's played the last game of the Junior schedule which resulted in a win for Wesley by a score of 6—3. The game was a bit onesided. Wesley practically having the best of play all through. McKKinlay, Marshall and Perchard were the goal getters for Wesley. Burridge Stone and Crane for St. Mary's. This game leaves Wesley, Holy Cross and Cadets at the top of the table of points which makes a play off for the championship necessary.

The complete table for the years follows:

	P.	W.	L.	D.	F.	A.	Pts.
Holy Cross	7	5	0	2	20	2	12
Wesley . . .	7	5	0	2	18	8	12
Cadets . . .	7	5	0	2	17	6	12
B. I. S. . . .	7	3	3	1	12	10	7
Scouts . . .	7	2	3	2	12	17	6
Gaelic	7	2	4	1	9	14	5
T. A.	7	1	6	0	7	12	2
St. Mary's .	7	0	7	0	4	30	0

Last night the Executive of the Junior League met the captain and delegates of the Wesley, Holy Cross, and Cadets teams to discuss the play-off for the championship. It was decided to play one round, the first game of which will take place on St. George's Field next Wednesday. The games were drawn as follows:—

Cadets vs. Wesley.
Wesley vs. Holy Cross.
Cadets vs. Holy Cross.

This should result in an interesting series of games as the teams are very evenly matched and are producing an excellent brand of football.

Manoa's Passengers

Bringing one of the largest cargoes to arrive this season, the S.S. Manoa, Captain Dufour, arrived from Montreal and Charlottetown at 9.30 o'clock last night. The Manoa had splendid weather between both ports and made good time. She had 12,000 tons of general cargo, including over ten thousand barrels of flour, which is the first of the big fall shipments to arrive, while the following passengers also came by the steamer:—H. C. Thomson, C. Williams, S. C. M. and Mrs. St. John, E P. Cleary, R. A. Gledhill, Jr., Miss M. L Martin, C. G. and Mrs. McKinnon, N. W. Horwood, Dr. M. J. Mooney, .C E. Eaton, Mrs. E. C. Hurtele, J. C. Marshall, J. Bishop, Mrs. M. Finch, Mrs. E. Russell, Dr. J.J. and Mrs. Garmany, C. H. Curley, and S. Thomas.

The Manoa will not get away on the return voyage much before Monday night or Tuesday morning.

The Sable I. is due with a full general Cargo.

S.S. Cranley sailed last night from Botwood for London with four thousand three hundred and thirty tons of paper from the A.N.D. Co.

Says Fishermen Will Stand By President Coaker

Dear Sir—I wonder why it is that we never see anything from Elliston in your paper. Last Spring when elections were on we were up and doing; and why. we were full of life.

We intended to put the Government back again and we were going to secure the Humber project. We have got it. Every day we see people getting ready for the Humber, and it makes the dark cloud look bright.

Whom do we give thanks for that? It is no other person than Sir William Coaker, a man who is staunch and true, and one who has got sympathy for the poor class of people.

I have heard him abused to the very dirt, but I have taken it all aboard and have said nothing, because I knew exactly what was coming. I knew that there were better times coming for the people of Newfoundland. During the past Spring I heard people say that the Humber was only bait for votes, and that they wouldn't vote for such trash. What sensible man would entertain such an idea? If one happened to speak in favor of the Humber one was considered a fool. Now, then, these very same people are the first to shout "Humber!"

At one time all I could see going around this place were men with "saws." These were the parties who opposed the Humber, getting ready to go there. They are there with their work, and they think the Humber a great thing for them. So do I. That isw hat we want. If there was no Humber, where would the 2,500 people who are working there, be?

I hope to see conditions much better in Elliston in the near future. The Union spirit is still strong and everybody speaks well of Sir William Coaker and his colleagues. We should never put down such a man as he. If we stick to him he will stick to us. I was over to see Port Union a while ago, and I was surprised to see how it was building up.

There is under construction a factory, which when completed will take from 89 to 100 men, and there I saw Sir. William going around among the men. He looks as if he will never flinch from his aim. We thank God for such a man as this.

With best wishes,
Yours truly
N. J.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, SEPT. 22nd, 1923.

THE GIANT OF JUSTICE

There are many of a certain class of individuals who are out to kill the Fishermen's Union. Not a day passes but some underhand attempt is being made to discredit the Union, the members the Union and the leaders of the Union. Such assailants do not wait till election time to carry out their sinister designs against the toilers who have banded themselves into the F. P. U. They attempt to "curry" favor with their big interests continuously from one end of the year to another by disseminating anti-Union propaganda for the purpose of destroying the power of the fishermen.

Their failure to do so during 15 years is but an incentive to many hirelings to continue their low-down tactics in a more dastardly and despicable manner.

Still, the F. P. U. stands as a rock upon which breaks the ocean's foam unceasingly and unavailingly.

Why do the men remain staunch to Unionism?

They have great faith in their leader; and the Union stands four-square for the well-known requirements of the present day. The Union stands for Development of our resources and the betterment of our fishery system.

Its agitation, lasting for years, for the initiation of the Humber scheme and the operation of other industries have successfully materialised into actual developments. Its support of a better fishery policy (that was killed by certain mercenary exporters and political office-seekers) is none the less strong than in 1920, and every day brings evidence of the need for action to avert disaster to the staple industry. Standing for the high principles of democracy and protection, the F. P. U. is guaranteed to withstand all-comers. It cannot fail when its strength is the strength of the people.

Who would be free themselves must strike the blow? The fishermen, through their Union, have struck for freedom. Their free spirit has completely thrown its last fetters off.

Who shall place a limit to the giant's uncurbed strength, or curb its wiftness in the forward race?

With its high purposes, the fishermen will surely succeedin their fight for justice and protection. And of this, let all its enemies take notice.

IN SELF PROTECTION

Fishermen Must Take Strong Hand Soon.

With the greatest wheat crop in their history, Canadian grain growers are attaching more importance to the problem of external marketing than ever before.

With the lowest catch in the history of Newfoundland, our fish exporters are sitting complacently awaiting their steamers' race to market, watching congestion ruin the home industry.

Does it, by any chance, occur to our exporters that sitting down to a one-hour lecture on the origin and habits of codfish by Dr. Huntsman is sufficient energy to display towards the vital problem of the country—the problem of protecting the men who catch fish?

Will that wonderful effort in the Grenfell Hall on Tuesday last result in putting one copper per quintal on fish for the men who catch it?

It will not!

Research information is interesting and, as a fishing country, it will do us no harm to possess it, but if action regarding our industry is to take only the form of merchants leaving their offices and walking to the Grenfell Hall for a lecture by Dr. Huntsman, then God help the fishermen and the fishery.

We venture to assert that whether we know exactly of the origin or habits of fish or not, the fish will come to our costs in precisely the same way as theyhavedone heretofore; and, if, in the future fishermen are catching fish, there will be good voyages and bad voyages as since the time of their forefathers.

What matters chiefly is the price which the men receive for the fish that they get: the vital problem is the inauguration of a system that will ensure to the breadwinners of the sea the highest value that is possible to secure from the markets of the world.

Any system that falls short of this desired result is a scandal and disgrace to those responsible; and the responsible parties are the exporters, not one or a few exporters but all the exporters as a body.

They are not doing their duty to themselves, to the country or the people so long as they persist in fighting among themselves at the expense of the country's staple industry.

It does not require much intelligence to know that the most opportune time to "get down to business" for the protection of the industry, is when our catch is short, as it is this present year. The markets will need our fish, every quintal of fish; and, if the shipments were regulated, Newfoundland would certainly be able to demand its price Only fools would undersell one another, knife one another right and left, place our product at the mercy of foreigners and make poor fishermen bleed for such business insanity.

For the first cargoes that have gone, fishermen who shipped their fish received fairly good prices. All fishermen should be treated alike.

It is just as probable that as good or even a better price may be secured for fish unsold to date, providing sane action is taken even now by exporters.

If not, then the fishermen will have but two courses to take. They must leave the industry or see to it that the exportation business is conducted on such a basis as to render individual exporters or politicians powerless to destroy it.

There must be an exportation system, if there is to continue a fishing industry. In self-protection, the fishermen themselves will have to take a strong hand—very soon.

A MEAN SPIRIT

Mean is the spirit back of the American policy of keeping immigrant people outside her borders. That country is fabulously rich and powerful, and possesses more prosperity than does any nation on earth today — prosperity due largely to her energetic prosecution of commerce while other nations were engaged in a life and death struggle. Europe is in a welter of poverty and confusion. But is that a reason that prompts America to open her arms to suffering peoples of stricken Europe? To the contrary, she clamps down hard the barriers of exclusion, and no more than a certain percentage of people are admitted from the various countries. Every month, as a regular occurrence, indescribably sad scenes are witnessed on Ellis Island, in New York harbor, where all immigrants are received. Husbands and wives are separated, the one being admitted and the other being sent back, because the quota for the month happens to be filled. Parents and children are separated, because of the same cause. Lovers and sweethearts are separated for the same reason.. There are instances of people who had to cross the broad Atlantic three times before they got into America, the land of the free and brave. Such things happen every month. Many succumb before such treatment and give up trying to enter the country.

We are told that in the days when people lived in villages that were strickly isolated and separate from all other villages, and people lived strictly to themselves, it was almost an unknown thing for one village to admit a man from another village. Sometimes a man for some reason would be turned by his own people from the village, and after wandering for days or weeks he would come upon another village. Ten chances to one they would not permit him to enter even for a minute. Or if they did it was only to make him a common slave. Never did a newcomer get admitted on the basis of equality or citizenship. The people of those ancient villages were animated by a mean spirit of exclusiveness and insularity, and looked with suspicion and hatred upon a newcomer.

The spirit that animated those old village-dwellers and the spirit that animates the Americans today are one and the same.

But before we begin to condemn too strongly, let us look closer home! Is it not a fact that we, in this community, are apt to look with suspicion and even with worse feelings upon strangers? What, after all, is the attitude of the average one of us toward "foreigners?" One of the worst features about an isolated, insular community is that terrible, smug self-complacency that animates the people. They are testy and touchy if anyone dares criticize the community, even if in a constructive way. What they like above all is to be told what fine people they are and what a lovely community they have. But such praise is less useful to such a community than good, constructive criticism. Let us be careful lest we emulate too far that mean old spirit of the ancient villages—that spirit of exclusiveness that appear to animate not only the Americans so much now, unfortunately.

For those who would put back the clock of progress, who would keep the people in the same old rut of centuries, who would destroy their constructive works and smart their organizations or union, who would keep the plums always falling their way — these men are well the representatives of that exclusiveness which sets up barriers among humanity and tends towards dissensions and distrust.

"$1,000,000 A MINUTE"

"$1,000,000 a minute" is the price which the spectators of the Dempsey-Firpo combat had to pay for their "look-in" on this twentieth century type of savagery. In those days, when so many are boasting of the advances of civilisation and christian science, it does seem strange that humanity still revels in brute-force displays which would do justice to the Roman arena and the Spanish bull-fights. Blood gushing from the mouths and nostrils of combatants, appears wine to make men drunk, and for this they pay at the rate of $1,000,000 per minute. Great philantrophy is this, when the cries of Japan's sufferers are heard across the Pacific and millions are at the very doors of starvation and want.

Many people revel in speculation as to why is this. They dive into the most remote corners of human nature to extract an explanation.

Foolish men! The thing is simple. When two muscular giants advance towards one another to "beat the other up", with 100,000 spectators around the ringside! That is the explanation. It is a good show, such a good show as to call forth the primitive instincts in man.

The murmur of the crowd as the contestants approach, their jumping into the ring, their furtive glances one at the other, the sight of powerful chests and muscles, the money at stake, and the anticipation of blows and blood, and victory.

These make the excitement which draws the crowd and makes them pay.

The days of cannibalism are not yet past. It is a kink which is in human nature.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

The "turrible" frost experienced by hunters for the precious metal on Labrador has not cooled the gold fever, and dozens of visitors to the city this fall are coming in rock ballast, which is invariably discharged at the Government Aanalyst's office. Since gold was (not) discovered on Labrador, the old adage has changed for many local air-castle architects, and for them almost everything they see on the ground is gold whether it glitters or not.

"Who started the Labrador gold rush and who made all the money?" These are the burning questions of the minute. Canadian "suckers" who seem to have kept up to Barnum's standard of one a minute, are blaming the Newfoundland Government because their "flakes" are dough, but the poor dear creatures must look nearer home for those who administered to them the dream dope. The best joke of the whole cazy business is found in the story of the man who fooled himself by his own fake advertising.

It cost the United States public a million and a quarter dollars to have "hero" Dempsey wharp the dial of Arch-Angel Firpo. If they had hired a good mule he could have done the job as effectively, as spectacularly and much cheaper.

There is great talk in the United States about a "coal policy" for the coming winter. Newfoundland's ambition in this respect has not yet got beyond a "coal pound."

That "installment plan" must be a wonderful invention. It is said that fully half the house furnishings and three quarters of the motor cars in the city were secured by this means. The memory of the man who invented the plan must be forever green in the hearts of the dealers, even though somewhat "drab" in the same organ of the customers.

The daily press messages of the doings of the Prince of Wales since he came to this side of the water read like the last bulletins of the condition of an expiring potentate.

The Greatest of Harvests

The Canadian Bureau of Statistics has accepted the more optimistic reports of the wheat yield and has revised its figures upward with a rush. It has raised its estimate of the Canadian total to 470,328,000 bushels—not very far below the half-billion prophecy of Sir Edward Thornton, which brought him an official rap over the knuckles.

In 1915 the harvest of 393,542,600 bushels was regarded as a phenomenon, almost a miracle The highest previous yield had been 231,717,000 bushels, in 1913. But the record of 1915 was surpassed last year, and is greatly exceeded this year. The figures for ten years, in bushels, have been:

1914	161,280,000
1915	393,542,600
1916	262,781,000
1917	233,742,850
1918	189,075,350
1919	193,260,400
1920	263,189,300
1921	300,858,100
1922	399,786,400
1923	470,328,000

In this period fall wheat has averaged 15,308,290, rising to 19,731,000 bushels this year. The Prairie Provinces account for 446,775,000 bushels of this year's crop. The per capita consumption in Canada is about six bushels, and the requirements for seed about 50,000,000 bushels, leaving a surplus of nearly 370,000,000 bushels for which an outlet must be found. Canada could supply 80,000,000 people with all the wheat they need. And the quantity of wheat grown is even less than the quantity of the coarser grains. The yield of oats, barley and rye this year is estimated at 643,331,000 bushels. A much smaller proportion is exported than of wheat, but the export price regulates the domestic price. Is it surprising that Canadian grain growers attach so much importance to the problem of external markets?

The British Trade Review makes a comparison between the conditions of 1823 and 1923. The periods are alike in the fact that each followed a great war involving almost the whole of Europe, and also in the fact that the recovery was slow. Superficially, at least, the settlement of Europe after the Napaleonic wars was more rapid and satisfactory. It perpetuated some unjust conditions and perhaps sowed the seeds of future wars, but for the time it brought peace and order. One great difference was that the French Revolution preceded and caused the Napoleonic wars, while the Russian revolution was a product of the war. The other European nations united against France, but they were too war-weary to unite against Russia.

Both wars were also followed by hard times in Great Britain. Alison says that in the earlier period this was a disappointment. It was expected in Great Britain that peace would bring about the reopening of the Continental markets for British goods, but it was found that the Continental nations were too poor to buy what was offered.

There is a vast difference in regard to the relative importance of Europe. A century ago Europe was regarded as embracing almost the whole of the civilized world. The rise of the United States to a position superior to that of any other power except the British Empire; the progress of Canada, Australia and the Latin-American Republics; the awakening of Japan, have made a new world in which continental Europe plays a comparatively unimportant part. It might regain its old ascendacy in part by peace and unity, but of this there seems to be no prospect; and so long as it remains divided and rent by quarrels it must continue to decline, relatively at least.—Toronto Globe.

PROGRESSIVISM IN AMERICA

THE MOST SIGNIFICANT political feature of American life today is what may be called the revolt of the farmer against the social system which makes of him, a producer, practically a pauper. Known as Progessivism, this discontent is attracting widespread attention thruout that country, and newspapers of all political persuasions are heatedly—and, for the most part, aimlessly—discussing the wave that is engulfing the old-line parties in the west and middle-west. This farmer's revolt is going to have a great effect on the next Presidential election, which is due to take place next year.

Traditionally the farmers of the north-west have been Republicians, they, their fathers and grandfathers before them constituting the backbone of the Republican strength. Until very recently it never occurred to any farmer to vote otherwise than for the Republican party. These, with the Negro vote of the south, succeeded on many occasions in electing that party to power. The Republician party stands for a high tariff.

The Democratic party's main strength is in the south, altho there are states north that vote that way. The Democratic party never stood much chance in the north-west. This party stands for a low tariff. That is about the only difference between them. Both of them are financed and run by great capitalists, trusts and corporations. Indeed, in many cases the same men contribute toward the party funds of both parties! There is so little real difference between the Republican and Democratic parties that, on occasions, they are able to sink their "differences" for the purpose of putting up and supporting a joint candidate in opposition to a Socialist or Labor candidate.

To-day, in the north-west, the Republican party is staggering from sledge-hammer blows struck by the progressive wave. In the last year there have been a number of important senatoral and gubernatorial elections, and in almost every case it has been a progressive who was elected, in some cases over a joint candidate supported by the two old-line parties. Senator Robert M. LaFollete won a magnificient victory in the State of Wisconsin. He may be regarded as the chief of the progressives, altho there are other men almost equally looked to in that respect. Others to be elected were Senator Smith, W. Brookhart, Senator Frasier, Senator Handrick Shipstead, and Senator Magnus Johnson, etc. Senator Johnson's victory attracted nation-wide attention, owing to the sensationalism of it. He is what is called in the United States, a "dirt farmer."

That means, as opposed to a "gentleman farmer," one who actually works a farm with his own hands, and no bluff about it. He is plain-spoken, courteous man who has declared that he will go to the Senate to represent the people, not the trusts and corporations.

The cause of the farmer's revolt is, to put it briefly, the condition of Europe. Europe has always been a tremendous market for the farmers' products, but now that market cannot buy, owing to its own terrible condition. The farmers see that their own prosperity depends, for the time, on Europe's getting once more on her feet. And the farmers know that America has got to help Europe to get on her feet.

But the Republican party is against having relations with Europe. And, furthermore, the Fordney tarift, put into effect by the present Republican Government, and the lack of consideration of the farmers evinced by the Republicans—these are the factors that have turned the farmers against that party.

But the revolt is not only against the Republican party, but against the entire system represented by that and the Demecratic party.

Recently there was an important convention at Chicago, for the purpose of discussing the matter of forming a third party for the election next year. That conversation failed, but the attempt did not end there. There is excellent probability of a third party being formed.

It is possible that a coalition of the Socialist, Farmer-Labor and Non-partizan parties will be effected.

The progressive movement may not succeed in this attempt. But the signs are many that America is due to have a third party. The phenominal success of the British Labor party in Great Britain is an added impetus, and in all probability an American Labor party fashioned after that organization will be formed.

The Fishermen's Protective Union will look sympathetically upon the efforts of their fellow-workers in America to organize politically for the purpose of emanicipating themselves from economic thraldom. The cause of Labor the world over is one and the same. And all around the earth we see an awakening of the Labor giant. Once he decides to assert his strength, nothing under the sun can stop or hinder him.

Bungalows Built by Insects

Nature is very considerate of all her little creatures, and those that in their bodily structure are defenceless against enemies are provided with special armour.

We find that certain grubs with very soft bodies, and without weapons to use in self-defence against those who wish them ill, are able to build little cases in which they live during the hepless period of their life until they get their wings.

The best-known among these case-makers are caddis-worms, which glue together various materials according to the fancies of the different species; some of sand, others of pieces of wood, or leaves, or tiny shells. In these they travel about under water, to their own satisfaction and the discomfiture of their enemies.

There are certain caterpillars, known in the United States as bag-worms and in South America as basket insects, which not only build elaborate cases to protect their soft bodies, but live in trees. They travel from branch to branch, feeding upon the leaves and balancing themselves in a remarkable manner.

"Hitching one's wagon to a star" is child's play compared with the everyday accomplishments of the bag-worm, which will mvoe along the underside of a leaf, holding on to the surface with its first pair of legs, and guiding its long body enclosed in a stiff and rather cumbersome case.

At the beginnng of its caterpillar existence the tiny creature starts building its case. First it spins a double loop of silk, then creeps through it and thus gets the strands around its body. On this foundation the rest of the structure is erected, with silk as the main material, made firm by a sort of gum secreted by the caterpillar in its salivary glands.

The largest kind of bag-worm makes its case of fragments of twigs on the usual silk foundation. As the caterpillar grows it forsakes its old house and constructs a new one, the full-sized one being about two inches long. By that time it looks like a little faggot or a bunde of sticks.

CANADA MAKING MORE BUTTER

OTTAWA, Sept. 13 (AP)—Canada made 17,750,000 pounds of creamery butter in 1922, valued at $51,550,000. This is an increase of 19,000,000 pounds over 1921. The production of cheese in 1922 reached 136,500,000 pounds, worth $22,000,000. The government has been encouraging dairying of recent years.

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Many young girls are afflicted with round shoulders, simply through the carelessness of their parents. To ensure a straight back and a beautiful figure, the foundation must be begun in childhood, when the bones are soft and pliable.

Just a little attention to the way your children walk will do the greater part and proper exercising will finish the cure. To correct the tendency to round shoulders, the following exercises are recommended:

Take a full breath, raise the hands with the arms stretched straight above the head. Slowly bring the hands downward and backward, pressing with all your might, as though resisting great weight. When this exercise is finished the hands should be nearly together at the back with the chest expanded and held high. Hold the breath during the exercise. Another good movement is to take a full breath, raise the arms at the sides level with the shoulders and move the hands is as wide a circle as possible.

Baby's stomach cannot always finish the digestion of his milk in the required two hours. The stomach must for a baby's feeding, is four hours. If a nebly born baby is started on this basis, the majority of them will thrive on it. When one is started on another method, the problem is somewhat more difficult. The feeding hours should be six, ten, two, six and again at midnight. After the baby is six months old the feeding may be shifted to ten o'clock and that made the last feeding.

Feudalistic Menace Confronts Industry

(Toronto Globe)

Coupling a slashing attack on the menace of what he termed "the feudal system of industry" in the United States with an eloquent presentation of the case for the public ownership of his country's railways, Amos Pinchot, brother of Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennlylvania, wealthy backer of recalcitrant progressive groups in United States politics and one-time confidant of Roosevelt, last night told the Public Ownership Conference, in session at the King Edward Hotel, that prviate control of those railways, if continued, would ultimately crush the "democratic" in the civilization which was the boast of 110,000,000 people.

Antagonist of Wall Street.

Backing up his assertions by the citing of specific examples, this antagonist of "the invisible government in Wall Street" declared that trusts and their banking directors had gained control of four basic industries—steel, coal, beef and oil; that they "owned" the railroads to such an extent that competition in these industries was a near-impossibility; that the railroads were being manipulated to create monopoly conditions, and that the resulting piling up of wealth in the hands of the new "feudal lords" was creating huge reservoirs of power which were being used to dominate politics, education and the printing press in the interests of the maintenance of those conditions which enabled those same lords "to have the public by the throat."

Rail Issue Is Uppermost.

In the mind of Mr. Pinchot, the railroad issue overshadowed all others in the United States. The reason was simplicity itself. The transportation system held the key to that power which enabled trusts to dominate industry. Take the railroads out of the hands of those same trusts and their associated bankers turn them over to the people, and the backbone of that power which was crushing competition and making equality of opportunity a mere empty phrase would be broken.

Sees Insidious Propaganda.

After covering in some detail the dispute over the success or failure of Government operation of United States railroads from January, 1918, to march, 1920, the speaker characterized as "absolutely false" the claim that the Government could not operate the country's transportation system.

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children

In Use For Over 30 Years

Always bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

The industrial trusts and the railroads themselves were spending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to convince the public that it could not run its own railways. "There is no mystery about railroading. It is a well-developed and well-known art. If the Government can build and operate the Penama Canal, if it can construct and administer immense irrigation, reclamation and colonization projects, if it can run an army, a navy, and a postoffice—without graft and without scandal, and immeasurably more efficiently than our railroads have been run—then it is mere propaganda of a suspicious, if not false, nature to say that we cannot run our railroads—and we will run them."

Trust Interests Object

And why this propaganda which was flooding the country? Simply that the trusts feared they would lose the key to their monopoly—the railroads. The issue was not mere public or private ownership of the railways; it was an issue which struck at the very root of American industry.

"The necessity for public ownership does not lie in the fact that the roads would be better run by the Government than they are being run by prviate corporations. This is true, but it is not the meat of the case. There is a more important side of the railroad question.

"The great objection to private railroads is that the railroads are now controlled by the same interests which control our industrial trusts—the so-called steel trust, the coal trust, the beef trust and the oil trust—and that they are able to crush independent enterprise and establish what is called monopoly.

Power Is Concentrated.

"It is so easy for the trusts to obtain so much better transportation facilities than their competitors that industrial competition today has practically been killed in our basic major industries. The result is monopoly—increasing prices on the necessaries of life, on the one hand, and, on the other, the concentration of vast amounts of wealth in the hands of a few people.

THE HUNTER knows the value of MINARD'S

ELLISON Gray, a well known Nova Scotia guide, writes:

"Have used MINARD'S LINIMENT in my home, hunting and lumber camps for years and consider it the best white liniment on the market. I find that it gives quick relief to minor ailments, such as Sprains, Bruises and all kinds of wounds. Also it is a great remedy for coughs, colds, etc., which one is liable to catch when log driving and cruising during the winter and spring months. I would not be withou MINARD'S LINIMENT and cannot recommend it too highly."

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

Bombed By Shooting Stars

RAID THAT HAS LASTED MILLIONS OF YEARS.

The earth has been subjected to an aerial bombing during millions of years, yet it seems little the worse for its hammering.

Anyone who takes the trouble to watch a path of sky on a clear moonless night will see eight or ten shooting stars each hour.

It has been estimated that at least twenty million shooting stars would be visible to someone on the earth's surface if it were always dark enough and clear enough to see them.

As a shooting star, or meteor, has to be a good size to be visible at all at distances varying from forty to eighty miles, it is further computed that this number of aerial bombs must be multiplied by twenty, making the number of missiles which bombard the earth during every twentyfour hours four hundred millions.

Our Bombproof Atmosphere

How is it that cases of people being killed by this bombing, terrific though it is, are exceedingly rare? The answer is that the earth is almost bombproof sa far as meteors are concerned. Its armour-plate is the thin atmosphere.

It has long been a commonplace of defence that sandbags are more efficacious shell-stoppers, than concrete, and forty or fifty miles of atmosphere proves too much for anything but the very biggest meteors.

Wave a glowing stick about in the air and watch it rekindle. Then imagine a meteoric stone entering our atmosphere at the rate of nineteen miles a second, and think how long even the hardest metal could stand the friction. When we see them they are hotter than any blast furnace could make them. Their fine debris falls slowly and harmlessly to earth, and adds its quota to the world's bulk as meteoric dust.

Recipes For Happy Homes

DOROTHY DIX'S THREE RULES FOR PEACE-LOVING WIVES.

There are three rules for making a peaceful home. To follow them requires nerve, grit, self-control, and more readiness to sacrifice oneself than most of us possess.

In the first place, don't argue. Arguments rile the temper and start quarrels. Nobody was ever convinced by an argument, but everybody who engages in one says things he or she didn't mean, and is more stubbornly set in his or her own opinion.

The breakfast-table argument that leaves a man sore and irritated with his wife sends many a husband to his typist to be comforted and flattered back into complacency. The breakfast-table argument that leaves a woman with a bitter sense of injustice rankling in her mind makes many a woman revenge herself for what she considers her husband's brutality by indulging in some outrageous extravagance.

The Danger of Interfering.

To argue is like playing with dynamite. It is sure to go off in an explosion that wrecks things, and so it is past comprehension why otherwise sensible people should indulge in such a dangerous practice. And, anyway, arguing is mean and ungenerous, and an indication of an overbearing and tyrannical disposition.

The second rule for making a peaceful home is to give the soft answer that turns away wrath. This is pretty hard to do because the natural human instinct is to fight back when we are attacked. But it doesn't pay—especially with women, for in the domestic scrimmage the wife nearly always gets the worst of it.

Suppose a woman is unlucky enough to be married to a confirmed grumbler. When he criticizes something she has done, she can defend herself by telling him what she thinks of a husband who never speaks of anything his wife does except to find fault with it. But what can he say, what can he do, except be ashamed of himself, if he has a fibre of decency in him, if she says she is sorry she didn't please him and that she will try to do better next time?

There are few people who are cowardly enough to attack a genuine pacifist, and you simply can't scold a person who admits his or her shortcomings and is anxious to atone for them. Oppose anger with gentleness; meet impatience with patience, and unreason with reason. Always the one who can control his or her temper dominates the situation.

The third rule for making a peaceful home is not to meddle. The chief source of discord in family life is the lack of personal liberty. Because people are bound to each other by the ties of blood or marriage, they consider they have a perfect right to supervise even the most minute detail of the lives of those about them.

There are plenty of families in which no one can get up or sit down, or eat a meal, or get a letter, or buy an article of clothing in peace. They live to an almost continual accompaniment of "Why don't you go to bed? Why don't you get up? Whom is your letter from? Why did you get a blue dress instead of a red one? Why didn't you do this? Why didn't you do that?"

Nothing is more maddening. From nothing are we so anxious to get away. And it is this perpetual nagging, this never-ending interfering with the tastes and habits of those with whom we live, that wrecks the peace of homes, that reconciles husbands and wives to the loss of their mates, and that makes children leave home.

Don't argue, don't meddle, and put the soft pedal on your speech are the three rules that never fail to make a peaceful home.

COMB HAIR AND IT STAYS

Leader At Coal Conference

COPYRIGHT KEYSTONE VIEW CO., NEW YORK.

Phillip Murray, International Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America, head of the committee, recently in conference with Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, regarding the coal situation.

The Way of All Women

THEY SELDOM SAY WHAT THEY MEAN.

The words "Yes" and "No," spoken thoughtlessly, are responsible for a great deal of unhappiness.

A girl, for example, has a proposal sprung upon her by a man whom she really doesn't know whether she loves or not. She is not prepared for it; she hasn't given it serious thought.

She is confused and embarrassed, but feels that he has a right to expect an answer. She shrinks from saying "No"; she is not prepared to say "Yes"; and in her confusion and tender-heartedness she speaks the word he wishes to hear without realizing for a moment all that it means.

A Broken Romance.

Or she may say it under the excitement and glamour of a ball. The dance, the music which sets her pulses beating, the atmosphere of gaiety—all conspire to create an unreal world for her; and she answers "Yes" as lightly as if it were to an invitation to a "fox-trot."

Some girls thus decide their whole future life with less thought than they give to the choice of a dress or a hat.

No girl should think of accepting any man's offer until she has given herself time to weigh it well, for it is the most momentous decision of her life. If she has already made up her mind, well and good. She can give her answer at once. Not to do so would be foolish and unkind.

If a girl should be careful how she says "Yes," she should be none the less careful how she says "No"—when she really means "Yes." Thousands of women are leading lonely ives today as the result of their too-ready use of the negative.

A charming girl approached the writer recently and asked his advice. A young man, of whom she was really very fond, had proposed to her; and on the spur of the moment she had refused his offer. He had taken his dismissal seriously and had left her; and, though months had passed, she had never seen him once.

"And I never meant it," she said. "I really don't know what made me say it. I hadn't expected him to propose for quite a long time, and so I hadn't quite made up my mind.

When "No" Means "Yes"

"It was only from a wish to tease him; to show my independence, and to show him that I was not to be caught easily. But he has taken it seriously, which is the last thing I wished him to do, and now he has gone away and is lost to me."

The fault in cases of this kind is really with the men. When will they learn that a woman's "No" often means "Yes"? Cannot they see it is an instinct in a woman to tantalize a man to he limit of his forbearance before surrendering helfself?

She loves to draw him on in pursuit until he thinks he has caught her, and then to elude him. She lures him one day with smiles and sweetness; the next she chills the ardour she has excited with affected coldness and indifference. She does not mean to be caught until she has exhausted him in the chase. She means to make him realize what a prize she is, and what a lucky man he is to have won her.

She must carry her teasing to the last limit before she surrenders.

DEMPSEY KNOCKS OUT FIRPO IN SECOND ROUND AS REGORD POLO GROUNDS MOB CHEERS

Record Breaking Crowd of More Than 100,000 Sees Thrill-Battle — Society Women Are In Throng at the Ringside.

EPIC COMBAT STIRS MOB TO TURMOIL OF CHEERS.

92,000 SEE BIG FIGHT; RECEIPTS $1,350,000

Gross receipts for the Dempsey fight were anounced as over $1,350,000.

Of this amount Jack Dempsey's share was 37 1-2 per cent. or approximately $500,000; while Firpo's share was 12 1-2 per cent., or about $162,000.

Tex Rickard announced that there were seats for 92,000, and so far as he or anybody else could see, not a seat was vacant

This crowd broke all records in the history of the sport.

At the Dempsey-Carpentier bout, 75,385 paid admission, while lose to 88,000 looked on.

The total receipts for that bout were $1,623,280, which stands as a record. In that bout, however, the top price seats were $50 each, while at the recent bout, under the New York State law, was $25, not including war tax

(From New York World)

JACK DEMPSEY is still heavyweight champion of Fistiana. He knocked out Luis Firpo in the second round.

In all the history of figting there has never been two such rounds of fist fighting. Firpo was dropped six times in all in the first round, a left hook to the jaw bringing him down after half a minute of fighting.

He was up again and Dempsey sent him down with a right to the jaw. He went down a third time and took a count of nine after taking a right on the jaw again.

Firpo was down a fourth time with a right to the belly; this time it seemed he was down for good, but Firpo, with blood streaming from his mouth, then turned the tide with amazing swiftness.

Champion's Eye Closed

Dempsey was crowded with rights and lefts as Firpo wos on his pins again. Dempsey's left eye was almost closed as a right brought him to his knees. He got up without a count and for a time was utterly defenceless. He got going again and twice more Firpo was dropped with rights.

To the amazement of the gathering, Firpo was on his pins again for the sixth time, and with his face a bloody smear, shot his tremendous right fist to Dempsey's chin, and the champion of the world was sent flying through the ropes and into the press stand.

He quickly scrambled back, apparently none the worse for wear, and was at Firpo's head and body when the bell rang.

Dempsey came out quickly for the second round and Firpo was sent down for the seventh time in the fight with left to body and right to the jaw. He got up dazed, and as he rocked Dempsey sent a crashing right to the Argentine's jaw and he went down flat on his back and was counted out.

THE FIGHT BY ROUNDS

ROUND ONE—A left hook dropped Firpo as soon as they started. He is down four times with a right hander and he is up and Dempsey is dropped twice with rights and then the champion is sent through the ropes and into the press stand with a right.

ROUND TWO— They clinch. Dempsey whales into the body and rushes Firpo to the ropes. A left hook to the stomach and a right to the jaw puts Firpo down for the count of eight. Dempsey walks away to Firpo's corner as Gallagher bends over Firpo. Then as the wild bull arises, Dempsey dashes in again, whipping in vicious rights to the body. Firpo lands an overhand right, but Dempsey clips a right solidly to the jaw and Firpo goes down. He rolls on his back and tries to rise at the count of seven, but is on his knees and elbows at the count of ten. The time of the round was fifty-seven seconds.

* * * *

That crowd beat anything we have ever loked upon as far as boxing is concerned. Outside the gates at 8.30 o'clock an impossible horde was trying to "make" an entrance. So swiftly and powerfully did it come that cops and hired gendarmes were tossed before the wave of humanity like so much breakfast food. Men gnashed their teeth and fought like lions for a crash at the gates. Women were tossed about like dried leaves with never a thought of politeness. Politeness is left in the ice-box on fight night, and by all the gods of war last night was fight night.

At the time of the first preliminary it did seem that Mr. Rickard had sold his house out, seat for seat and dollar for dollar. We've looked on some fight crowds in our time and been in them too. We remember being impaled on an iron fence outside of a Newark armoury until Jack Dempsey himself came along and lifting us on his shoulder, saved the night and this paper from being left without a chronicler.

That was the night Wills fought Fulton. We wish to heavens Jack had been there last night to save our ribs.

Up in the grandstands a peculiar spectacle was on tap. Thousands were using opera glasses and field glasses, and when the powerful lights of the ring were reflected in the front lenses, it appeared for all the world that all the giant cats of the jungle were peering down on the fighters.

As the preliminaries were rushed along there didn't seem to be a vacant chair in the place. In spite of the jamming that occurred on the outside, it must be said that the Rickard organization ran things like oil down a window pane when the customers got on the lot.

It was a real housewarming for the monster home of the Giants. For the first time the great top tier was filled clear around to the club house that is to complete the full upper circle when the builders have done.

The ring itself was lighted with an amazing glare and from almost 100 powerful lights. The movie men had attended to that end and one would have imagined that one was sitting on the desert sands in broad daylight instead of the Polo Grounds.

Dempsey weighed in at 1 o'clock, tipping the beam at 192 1-2, and Firpo came half an hour after and registered 216 1-2. The men did not meet, but thec rowd outside the Flat Iron Building must have thought they would and with dreadful consequences, for five or six thousand of them crowded around our queer skinny building in which our boxing board holds forth, and windows were smashed in the big cigar store when the crowd surged around Dempsey.

Dempsey First on Way

The champion and the challenger did not meet. Dempsey was in his duds and on his way long before Firpo came, so they did not meet and Dempsey was robbed of the opportunity to greet his challenger with his newly polished border Spanish.

As Firpo weighed in, he was treated to a severe financial shock. Deputy Sheriffs Joseph Lanman, Frank Libertine and Tom Tynan plastered Firpo with a nice blue paper, a warrant of attachment for $54,000 with Andrew D. MacCorkindale, a man claiming to have been the one to bring Firpo to this country, as plaintiff.

Firpo blushed furiously, when it was relayed to him that the law horrible was about to dig its talons into his end of the receipts. Just what claim this man had on the "Wild Bull of the Pampas" is not known.

Women Roll Through Gate

An orderly crowd, too, inside, remarkably so. Perhaps the late customers imagined that they would be left out in the cold if they didn't make a rush on the outer portals. We were swept in with two women and both of them were sent flying as they attempted to gain entrance to the press section. A large iron door had been raised to permit a few ticket holders to gain entrance and then what a rush there was for that entrance. The two women got in, but they actually rolled in on their backs. They got up smiling, and said that since it was a man's game, they'd be men for the night at least.

The preliminaries were watched with quietness and extraordinary respect. The crowd was Dempsey-Firpoing it, and they cared little or nothing for small fry.

Jess Willard sat beside Jimmy Walker, the sweet papa of boxing in this State, and they had a front-row pow, too. Tom Mix came stalking down a centre aisle, wearing a four foot Stetson sombrero and an amazing suit of white with buckskin trimmin's.

Tom didn't expect trouble, evidently, for he came without his brace of silver-and-gold 'Betsys," the most amazing side-arms since the days of the spectacular Black Bart of the olden, golden days of the covered wagon days.

Rickard Unmoved by Scene

Tex Rickard, always a stoic at one of his own extravaganzas, walked about the ring chewing on a stogie and was the coolest man of the lot. He smiled and merely said "Ain't she a pip?" He swept his hand about, taking in his great crowd of fans, and one had to admit that "she was a pip."

The first evidence of impatience came when Bartley Madden and Leo Gates were in the last round of their bout. It was a quarter to ten, and the promise that the champion and the challenger would be in the ring at 9.30 had been broken. It was a bit chilly in the park and some wondered if the men would have the fore thought to work up a little in their quarters to loosen up with a little sparring, as old Fitzsimmons did when the weather was chilly.

Johnny Dempsey, the champion's brother, came around the ring just before the men entered it, and said his brother was confident and ready to win in a walk if he could.

As Madden and Gates battled in the last round, Firpo came down the aisle on the field close to third base, and the crowd, forgetting the men in the ring, seemed to rise as one and cheer him.

It was nothing compared to the din that went up when Dempsey followed him in a second or two later. As the preliminary men left the ring, the entire crowd was afoot looking at the two giants, Firpo and Dempsey.

Firpo First in the Ring

Firpo was the first man in the ring. He wore his famous robe of black and yellow checkers. He came without a smile, grim and scowling. Dempsey came bobbing up the stairs in white running trunks of satin, with a white sweater over his shoulders, tied in a knot. Firpo wore purple tights. The referee was Johnny Gallagher.

Feildians and Guards Play Another Draw

FOR TIE CUP.

The Feildians and Guards played a scoreless game last evening before a fair number of spectators on St. George's Field. This is the second draw game between those teams in the Tie Cup series and will mean another meeting to decide who is to play in the second round. The weather was ideal for good footer and both teams certainly gave a very creditable exhibition. The Guards mustered up all their old guard including Charlie Quick, Paddy Coultas, and Chick Quick to try and strengthen their team, while the Feildians played with ten men, Joe Goldstone suffering from a bad toe strain, contracted in the last meeting of those teams, had to retire leaving the Feildian outside left position open. The game did not start until 6.30, though advertised for 6.15, and in consequence the last 26 minutes was played in the dark. To give contestants a square deal the games in future must commence not later than 6 o'clock. Ern Churchill was referee and is to be complimented for following the ball. During the first period the Guards lost several splendid opportunities to score thru depending too much on Charlie Quick. While Charlie is a clever scorer, his team did not seem to realize that he had had no practice and could not hold the strain with the younger and more aggressive players. Upon changing ends the Feildians bombarded the Guards goal for the first ten minutes play was all over the field, the players seemed to be waiting for the full time whistle as it was nigh impossibe to follow the ball. The teams will play again probably on Monday evening.

The Village By The Sea

How beautiful in summer time,
With laughing ripples flowing,
And sweet echoes from hiding trees,
From off the soft wind blowing;
From St. John's town you take your course,
When from all cares your free,
And spend your holidays in happiness
In the village by the sea.

No grandeur do we seek to find,
Where Nature wears a crown,
But Gods own works are there to see.
In plain and rugged gown.
The songs and merry laughter,
And the children in their glee,
Tell us of the happy homes
In the village by the sea.

The maidens fair, I do declare.
Will give you a good old time,
And treat you as our mothers did
In the days of Auld Lang Syne.
And when you wander back again,
And in the city you will be,
Youll think and ponder to yourself
Of the village by the sea.

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVOCATE

Cause of Miss Lindsay's Death

WILL REMAIN MORE OR LESS A MYSTERY

There has been considerable renewed interest shown in the various reports regarding the mysterious death of Miss Lindsay at Cartwright, Labrador. The return of Detective Head Constable John Byrne from the scene of the tragedy by the last Sagona has started afresh the various rumors concerning the manner in which Miss Lindsay met her death. We endeavored on this account this morning to obtain a copy of the report of Head Byrne for publication from the Justice Department, but were informed by the Deputy Minister that no written report from Mr. Byrne has yet reached his department. Mr. Summers added, however, that the interest of his department ends with the investigation of Detective Byrne, as he was satisfied that the death of Miss Lindsay had occured in one of two ways, either accidently, which theory is now the generally accepted one, or by suicide. The finding of the body so long after her disappearance, made investigations which would lead to definite conclusions, extremely difficult. However, it is now positively known, that the first rumors, which were of a revolting character are entirely disproved. The revolver said to be in Miss Lindsay's possession, has not been found; but as there was considerable digging done around the spot where the remains were discovered, a reasonable explanation is that it was covered up or thrown away in the excavated dirt. The exact cause of the death will in all probability remain more or less of a mystery. The Newfoundland police authorities are satisfied that she came to her death as a result of the accidental discharge of the revolver which she was known to have had in her possession.

A Plucky Capture

Mr. John Moore of Government Railway Employ Lays in Wait for Burglar and Captures Him.

A resident of McKay Street, in the West End, was sentenced by J. W. McCarthy, J.P., this morning to pay a fine of $100.00, or go to jail for six months, for attempting to break into the store of Mr. John Moore, 233 South Side Road on the early morning of Sunday June 24th last.

Mr. Moore keeps a store at this number. On the 19th of June the place was burglarized and a quantity of candies, cigarettes etc., stolen. Mr. Moore decided that the thief or thieves would pay him another visit and decided to lay in wait for his quarry. On the Saturday night he barred up his shop, put out the lights and awaited developments. Shortly after midnight two men arived. They attempted to break through the rear, but failing this went round to the front door. Moore hid himself under the counter. The thieves after assuring themselves that there was no one in the shop, tried to unlock the front door, but the key was on the inside. Without a sound, Moore got over the counter and suddenly unlocked the door, seizing as he did so, the would-be maurader. The second fellow made good his escape. Single-handed Moore escorted his prisoner to his residence, which was some distance away from the store, called a neighbour, who telephoned for the police. Constable McGrath of the night watch, conveyed the prisoner to the police station, who upon being searched was found to have two keys in his possession. Just outside the police station immediately after the culprit was locked up, a turnscrew was found, and it is believed the man dropped it before entering the police station in the hope of destroying a bad bit of evidence against him.

His plea of not guilty amounted to a statement that he was taking a walk around the South Side that hour of the night and saw another man leaning up against Mr. Moore's store. He was investigating why the other follow was there, when Mr. Moore captured him. The keys belonged to his father's house and were carried to prevent the children from getting into the rooms. Mr. McCarthy in sentencing the accused, complimented Mr. Moore on his pluck in laying in wait for what might proven a dangerous criminal.

SHIPPING NOTES

Arrivals From Fishery

The Spring Bird, Theo, Hunter, master, 400 quintals; the Three Brothers, Wm. Brown, master, 400 qtls., from the French Shore, and the schrs. Hazel Minnie, Baxter Burry, 800; Noah S., Job Steer, 800, and Minnie B., Edgar Dawe, have arrived at Salvage, B.B.

The schrs. Annadale, Arthur Rowsell, master, 500 qtls.; Nina Florence, Theophilus Morey, 300 qtls.; J.P.L., Lemuel Kingman, 300 qtls.; Melina Bell, Darius Normore, 300 qtls.; Robert Young (freighter). H. S. Hellier, 1000 qtls., and the Fantone, Joseph Burton, 500 qtls., have arrived at Little Bay Islands from the Shore fishery.

For the week ending Sept. 14th the fishery from Little Bay Islands to Long Island, N. D. Bay, was good. Prevailing wind westerly, mostly fine.

From Carmel to Fortune in Burin District codfishery prospects for week ending Sept. 14th are reported by the sub collector, Spencer, to have been very good and they continue favorable for a good squid season of bait is procurable. At present bait is scarce.

From Red Island to Connore in Burgeo District codfish prospects are reported fair; squid abundant. Heavy sea prevents the fishermen getting on the grounds.

From Little St. Lawrence to Lawn Point fish was very plentiful last week—also bait, but weather very unfit for operations.

St. Jacques reports fall prospects for codfishery good, with plenty bait supply.

Dory fishermen at Great Hr., Fortune Bay District, getting from 2 to 2½ quintals daily; squid plentiful

About 80 boats, mostly motor boats, were fishing off Bonavista for week ending Sept. 14th. The sub collector reports good fishing on offer grounds (motor boats only). Squid enough for bait, but many of the fishermen are now employed at other work.

At Trinity, very poor prospects for fall fishery—bait is plentiful. Most of the Labrador fleet have arrived well fished.

St. Bon's Jubilee Scholarship Winner Farewells

McGRATH MEDALS PRESENTED

Yesterday Master George Power, the winner of the Jubilee Scholarship, 1923, paid a farewell visit to his Alma Mater. The occasion was availed by Rev. Bro. Ryan to have him meet the assembled students in the Aula Maxima. After extolling his success the Principal, in a short address, pointed him out as a splendid type of young man, one in every way worthy of the emulation of his fellows. Congratulations were tendered on behalf of all forgathered, to which were added sincere good wishes for his continued success in the course of studies which he is about to pursue at Toronto University. In reply George expressed his gratitude, paying a tribute to the painstaking efforts of his teachers, by whose exertions he was thus enabled to bring his College career to such a successful termination. He then concluded by asking for his many admiring young friends the privilege of a half-holiday which was willingly conceded and which of course was received by them as the most acceptable manner of marking the occasion.

Then followed the formal presentation of the beautiful gold medals—donated by Mr. Jack McGrath—to the members of the College team which carried off the inter-collegiate honors last winter. At the request of the Principal the presentation was made by Rev. Brother Strapp, who in a short speech, having first complimented the scholarship winner, gave to the hockeyists their well merited meed of praise. He also took occasion to place on record the munificence of the donor whose generosity, combined with his interest in his old College, made the presentation possible. Rev. Bro. Doyle was then called on to speak, and in a few well-chosed words emphasized the fact that without the whole hearted co-operation of George Power, the success attained would have been impossible. The Principal also expressed his appreciation of the practical manner in which Mr. McGrath sought to repay his indebtedness to his Alma Mater. On behalf of the team Raymond Halley, as Captain, gave fitting expression to his feelings of gratitude, after which cheers were given for following recipients of the gold medals. Raymond P. Halley, John A. Cotter, Cyril S. Eagan, Lawrence F. Furlong, William F. Flynn, Claude A. Frazer, Charles E. Donnelly, Gordon F. Higgins, and Ashley R. Graham.

Leg Broken By Motor Car

Mr. Thomas Lockyer, wharfinger at Crosbie & Co's, met with a very painful accident at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Company's premises. He was to the breast-work where Mr. George Crosbie was manoeuvring his car in the act of turning it to come up the arch-way and in getting out of the way he slipped, the front wheel of the car going over his leg and fracturing the bone near the ankle. Mr. Lockyer was rushed to the Hospital where an X-ray was taken of the injured bone and it was seen that the fracture was a bad one. The patient suffered much pain during the night but this morning the fracture was set and he is doing very well. The Advocate regrets this painful accident to Mr. Lockyer which will undoubtedly lay him up for several weeks.

KLANSMEN HELD INITIATION IN WHITE HOUSE

K. K. K. Boasts of Having Representatives In Senate and Cabinet.

CHARLESTON, West Virginia, Sept. 22.—That the Klu Kulx Klan held an initiation in the dining room of the White House, was the statement of Rev. Basil E. Newton, of Oklahoma, representing the Klan Imperial Council, to a large audience of klansmen and others during a celebration by the klan of the opening of the Charleston-Huntington Road.

We have 227 klansmen in the House of Representatives, 27 in the United States Senate, and we held one initiation in the White House, he said, and you know what that means.

Dr. Churchman, a leading klansman who was present, nudged a news paper man at this juncture and whispered, he forgot to mention five members in the Harding cabinet.

GERMANY'S WEAPONSESS WARFARE HAS COME TO END

Federal Premiers Are Summoned To Conference.

BERLIN, Sept. 22 — Germany's moral or weaponless warfare upon French and Belgian encroachment on her territory, and sovereignity may be said to have come to an end.

Officially its termination has not yet been decreed, but aside from the noisy minority of the Super-Nationalists, the complete opinions of inside official circles and the sober judgement of political, industrial, financial and labor leaders are no longer under the delusion that the drooping spirits of the people of the Ruhr and Rhineland can be sufficiently reinforced to make passive resistance and effective weapon for another single day.

BERLIN, Sept. 23—The premiers of the Federal States of Germany have been summoned for a conference on the Ruhr situation, it was announced to-day, to be held on Tuesday.

It is looked upon in official circles as presaging early action on the issue of abandoning passive resistance.

Thieves Steal Picture Worth Half Million

Reni's "The Entombment of Christ" Taken From Frame In Art Gallery.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Through the police of all the large cities in the United States and museum and art dealers on this continent and in Europe today are seeking a painting, "The Entombment of Christ," stolen from its frame in the E. B. Crocker Art Gallery here.

The painting is a priceless work of art from the brush of Guido Reni, master of the Bolognese school of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The value of the painting is placed at $500,000.

Value Beyond Figure.

W. S. Jackson, curator of the gallery, said:

"It is virtually impossible to set a price on the picture. Originals by such artists as Guido Reni bring fabulous prices when offered to large galleries or to wealthy patrons of art. All I can say is the picture is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"It is certain that the person who stole the picture knew tsi value. It is my opinion that the picture was taken for the private gallery of the person who took it, and I am afraid it will be difficult to trace, for the person may hide it for years before making even a private display of it. There is a possibility, however, that the thief intends to make an attempt to self the picture and in that case, also, the painting probably will be concealed for a long time and possibly may be carried to another part of the world before a sale is attempted."

Judges and Others Violate Prohibition

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE GIVEN REPORT OF CONVICTIONS

Washington, Sept. 13.—Conviction of judges, attorneys, federal and state officials, and millionaires, among the host-found guilty of violating the prohibition laws, was detailed in a report submitted to President Coolidge yesterday by Attorney-General Daugherty.

A synopsis of the report made public with the assent of the president reviewed the federal judiciary's work in administering the prohibition law in the first 41 months of its operation. It showed that since the statute went into effect January 16, 1920, more than 90,000 cases had been terminated in United States courts with 72,429 convictions and fines aggregating $12,367,660. There has been a constant yearly increase in prohibition prosecutions, the report showed, while jail sentences for the past 23 months have totalled more than 3,000 years.

In 80 per cent. of federal court cases defendants were found guilty. Figures for the last fiscal year are not available but it is estimated that there has been at least 10,000 more convictions than in the preceding year and 15,000 more than for two years ago. These figures, Mr. Daugherty said, indicated stricter enforcement in every section of the country. The atterney-general told the President that he was of the impression that the Government's enforcement officials, radiating from Washington, were coping with the liquor problem in a highly satisfactory manner.

Ramsey Will Not Emulate Disraeli

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Ramsay MacDonald, Leader of the Labor Opposition in the House of Commons, during his forthcoming trip to Constantinople is not likely to let himself go after the manner of the British statesman Disraeli when he went yachting in the Near East ninety years ago.

"You should see me," he wrote home, "in the costume of a Greek pirate—a blood-red shirt with silver studs as big as shillings, an immense scarf for girdle, full of pistols and daggers, red cap. red slippers, broad blue-striped jacket and trousers." He and his friends visited an Albanian bey, who could not understand their language nor they his, but whose wine and brandy put them on good terms.

"The bey drank all the brandy," said Disraeli, "the room turned round; wild attention at our feet seemed dancing in strange and fantastic whirls. The bey shook hands with me; he shouted in English, I in Greek. 'Very Good' he had caught up from us. 'Kalo, Kalo' was my rejoinder. He roared. I smacked him on the back. I remember no more."

The description suggests that the bey could not have drunk all the brandy.

Want Money Paid For Labrador Claims Repaid

That the concerns which sold Labrador gold claims may be proceeded with is the information coming from the East. There is a move on foot to ask the Newfoundland Government to proceed against the leaders of various corporations which sold these claims, in an effort to have the money obtained for the claims refunded. Labrador Goldfields, Ltd., is now in liquidation. The company, according to the directors, is unable to meet its liabilities; its stock has become of little or no value; its capital stock has been impaired to the extent of 25 per cent. and there is a probability that it will be unable to meet the claims of its creditors.

Large Paper Plant For Nfld.

Promoters Propose to Erect Rossing Plants and 500 Ton Paper Mill

(Financial Post.)

H. J. Crowe, Toronto, and Malcolm Mooney, Quebec, have concluded an agreement with the Newfoundland Government for the establishment of a large paper plant on the island. At White Bay, Crowe held 700 square miles of timberland and has secured others until he has consolidated in all about 2,000,000 acres. He has an additional 1,500 square miles secured from J. C. Hepburn, St. John's. This latter tract is at Hamilton Islet, Labrador. This will ensure a year-round supply of raw material for the 500-ton mill which it is proposed to erect. Mr. Crowe says that his White Bay plants are to demonstrate the feasibility of carrying on an operation there of rossing and shipping ready for the grinders, from fifty to one hundred thousand cords annually to a proposed large pulp and paper mill which he hopes to establish on tide water at Ship's Cove, or Rotia Bay in Bay D'Espoir on the South Coast.

Mr. Crowe says that the water powers at Bay D'Espoir give promise of a development of 150,000 h.p. and this will be gone ahead with. Rossing or drumbarking plants will be erected meanwhile, and during the next few years the pulpwood, after being prepared in the rossing plants, will be shipped to the United States. In the event of any unforseen delay in connection with the big project, arrangements have been made with the government whereby he may continue the shipment of the product of the rossing plants and saw mills for a number of years.

The agreement with the Newfoundland Government calls for the building of the plant within three years, and the expenditure of $300,000 within a year of the signing of the agreement.

The vessel had on board 600 quintals of fish, 3 traps, all fishing gear. Poor prospects of salvage.

LORD MORLEY IS DEAD OF HEARTFAILURE

— LONDON, Sept. 23 — Viscount Morley, of Blackburn, former Lord President of the Council, and Secretary of State for India, died to-night at his residence at Wimbledon from heart disease.

He was taken ill only this morning and the end was peaceful. He was eighty-five years old.

Lord Morley leaves no heir and the peerage becomes extinct. Te veteran writer and statesman lived for a long time in almost complete retirement.

Like his colleagues in the Asquith Ministry, John Burns, he parted from the government in 1914, because he could not acquiesce in the war policy.

Lord Morley came out of his retirement in 1921 to speak on the Irish agreement, and gave his support to the Irish treaty.

REPORT SAYS GREEKS ARE INNOCENT OF ASSASSINATION

BALLONE, Sept. 23—The International Mission investigating the assassination of General Tellini and suite, sent a report to the Inter-Allied Council of Ambassadors to-day.

It is understood the investigators are convinced that the Greeks are innocent of the crime, but are guilty of negligence in seeking out those who committed the murders.

The Japanese, French and British delegates, it is said, conclude that the assassinations were actuated from vengeance rather than political motives.

Price of Labrador Set at High Figure

$660,000,000 SUGESTED FAR ABOVE AMOUNT CANADA WILL GIVE

OTTAWA, Sept. 18.—Star Special)—There is no prospect of Canada's assuming the national debt of Newfoundland—placed at about $60,000,000 in exchange for the strip of land in Labrador, which is the subject of disputed ownership. The case is to come before the Privy Council next year to decide whether Newfoundland, as it claims, has title to the interior of Labrador or only a fringe of the coast, as Canada contends.

Incidental to the arrangements of the appeal, the suggestion has been advanced that Newfoundland might surrender the Labrador coast if Canada would take over the debt of the Colony.

Those interested in Canada's case were not prepared to go higher than $5,000,000, which is about $55,000,000 less than the Colony's obligations.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXXI.

"You young ladies," said Mr. Daney, addressing the two young ladies on duty, "may take a walk around the block. Port Agnew will not require any service for the next twenty minutes."

They assimilated his hint, and when he was alone with the chief operator to Mr. Daney ordered her to switch the New York call to Mrs. McKaye at The Dreamerie. Followed ten minutes of "Ready, Chicago." "All right, New York. Put your party on the line!"—a lot of persistent buzzing and sudden silence. Then: "Hello, Port Agnew."

Mr. Daney, listening on the extension in the office of the manager, recognized the voice instantly as Nan Brent's.

"Go on, Mrs. McKaye," he ordered. "That's the Brent girl calling Port Agnew."

"Hello, Miss Brent. This is Donald McKaye's mother speaking. Can you hear me distinctly?"

"Yes, Mrs. McKaye, quite distinctly."

"Donald is ill with typhoid fever. We are afraid he is not going to get well, Miss Brent. The doctors say thas is because he does not want to live. Do you understand why this should be?"

"Yes: I think I understand perfectly."

"Will you come back to Port Agnew and help save him? We all think you can do it, Miss Brent. The doctors say you are the only one that can save him." There was a moment of hesitation. "His family desires this, then?" "Would I telephone across the continent if we did not?"

"I'll come, Mrs. McKaye— for his sake and yours. I suppose you understand why I left Port Agnew. If not, I ill tell you. It was for his sake and that of his family."

"Thank you. I am aware of that, Miss Brent. Ah—of course you will be amply reimbursed for your time and trouble, Miss Brent. When he is well—when all danger of relapse has passed—I think you realize, Miss Brent, all of the impossible aspects of this unfortunate affair which renders it necessary to reduce matters strictly to a business basis."

"Quite, dear Mrs. McKaye. I shall return to Port Agnew—on business—starting to-morrow morning. If I arrive in time. I shall do my best to save your son, although to do so I shall probably have to promise not to leave him again. Of course, I realize that you do not expect me to keep that promise."

"Oh, I'm sorry, my dear girl, that I cannot say no to that. But then, since you realized, in the first place, how impossible——"

"Good-night. I must pack my trunk."

"Just a minute, my girl," Andrew Daney interrupted. "Daney, speaking. When you get to Chicago, call up the C. M. St. P. station. I'll have a special train waiting there for you."

"Thank you, Mr. Daney. I'm sorry you cannot charter an airplane for me from New York to Chicago. Goodnight, and tell Donald for me whatever you please."

"Send him a telegram," Daney pleaded. "Good-by." He turned to thech ief operator and looked her squarely in the eyes. "The Laird likes discreet young women," he announced meaningly, "and rewards discretion. If you're not the highest paid chief operator in the state of Washington from this on, I'm a mighty poor guesser."

The girl smiled at him, and suddenly, for the first time in all his humdrum existence, Romance gripped Mr Daney. He was riotously happy—and courageous! He thrust his finger under the girl's chin and tilted it in a most familiar manner, at the same time pinching it with his thumb.

"Young woman," he cautioned her, "don't you ever be prim and smug! And don't you ever mary a man until you're perfectly wild to do it; then, were he the devil himself, follow your own natural impulses." He let go her chin and shook his forefinger between her eyes. "I'd rather be happy than virtuous," the amazing man continued. "The calm placidity that comes of love of virtue and the possession of it makes me sick! Such people are dull and stupid. They play hide and seek with themselves, I tell you. Suspicious little souls peering out of windows and shocked to death at everything they see or hear—condemn everything they do not understand. Damn it, girl, give me the virtue that's had to fight like the devil to stay on its feet—the kind that's been scratched and has had the corners knocked off in contact with the world and still believes that God made man in his own image and likeness. I tell you, the Lord knew what he was about when he invented the devil. If he hadn't we'd all be so nasty-nice nobody could trust the other fellow further'n you can throw a bear up-hill by the tail. I tell you, young woman, sin is a great institution. Why, just think of all the fun we have in life—we good people—forgiving our neighbors his trespasses as he does not forgive us for trespassing against him."

And with this remarkable statement, Mr. Daney betook himself to his home. Mrs. Daney, a trifle red and waterey about the eyes and nose, satup in bed and demanded to be informed what had kept him downtown so late.

"Would you sleep better if you knew?" he demanded.

She said she would not.

"Then, woman, resign yourself to the soft embrace of Bacchus, the god of sleep," he replied, mixed metaphorically. "As for me, my dear, I'm all talked out!"

CHAPTER XXXIII.

DONALD, trembling on the brink of Beyond, not from his disease but from the exhaustion incident to it, was conscious when his father entered the room and sat down beside his bed.

"Well, lad," he greeted the boy with an assumption of heartiness he was far from feeling, "and have you no good news for your old father this morning. Tell me you're feeling better, lad."

"Read the telegram," Donald whispered, and old Hector, seeing a telegram lying on the bed, picked it up. It was dated from New York that morning, and the Laird read:

Due Port Agnew Friday morning. Remember the last line in the fairy tale. Love and kisses from your SWEETHEART.

"God bless my soul!" The Laird almost shouted. "Who the devil is 'Sweetheart?'"

"Only—have one—Scotty. Sorry—for you—but do you—happen to—know last line—fairy tale? Tell you. 'And so—they were—married and—lived happily ever—after.'"

Fell a long silence. Then from the Laird:

"And you're going to wait for her, my son?"

"Certainly. Foolish die—now. I'll try—to wait. Try hard."

He was still trying hard when Nan Brent stepped off the train at Port Agnew on Friday morning. She was heavily veiled, and because of the distinctly metropolitan cut of her garments, none recognized her. With her child trotting at her side, she walked swiftly to the company hospital, and the nurse, who had been watching for her, met her at the door. The girl raised a white, haggard face and her sad blue eyes asked the question. The nurse nodded, led her down the hall, pointed to the door of Donald's room, and then picked up Nan's child and carried him off to the hospital kitchen for a cookie.

The outcast of Port Agnew entered. Hector McKaye sat by the bed, gazing upon his son, who lay with closed eyes, so still and white and emaciated that a sudden fear rose in Nan's mind. Had she arrived too late?

The Laird turned and gazed at her an instant with dull eyes, then sprang to meet her.

"Well, lass," he demanded, and there was a belligerent and resentful note in his voice, "is this playing the game?" She nodded, her blurred eyes fixed upon his son, and old Hector's face softened with a tenderness almost paternal. "Then," he whispered, "you didn't mean that about the last line of the fairy tale?"

Her head moved in negation, but she did not look at him. She had eyes only for the wreck of the man she loved.

"I heard you needed me—to save him, Mr. McKaye. So I'm here—to save him, if I can—for you—nothing more."

Resumpiton of Diplomatic Relations Between States and Mexico Long Been Aim of Americe

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—(A.P.)—Recognition of the government of President Obregon is regarded here as in line with the American policy, started through successive administrations, of giving disinterested help to a friendly country so long as the rights of Americans are properly safeguarded. The announced aim of the Washington government has been directed consistently to such a course, although often with difficulty because of outrages upon the persons and properties of American Nationals in Mexico, and of discouraging international complications incident to a condition of revolution and civil war running over more than a decade.

The questions arising under this policy have been among the most delicate with which the United States has had a deal, and have involved military patrols along the border, naval and military expeditions into Mexico, embargoes upon the exportation of munitions, and a succession of international conferences touching indirectly on the broad question of relations with Latin-America in general.

Recently the principal question at issue has had to do with the interpretation of Article 27 in the Mexican constitution of 1917, now satisfactorily adjusted through a definite understanding of its retroactive features reached in the recent Mexico City conversations.

This question was regarded as of primary importance by the administration of President Wilson, and later the Harding administration suggested to Mexico city a treaty of amity and commerce as a means to a definite understanding. The treaty plan, however, proved unsatisfactory to President Obregon, and in time the adjustment was reached through conversations, the American government making clear that it was interested in the substance rather than the form of the accomodation.

The story of the present cycle of American-Mexican relations has its real beginning in the outbreak in 1910 of the military revolution led by Francisco I. Madero against the long-established regime of President Porfirio Diaz. A policy of non-interference was adopted by President Taft, who soon mobilized units of the regular army on the border to guarantee neutrality and protect American interests. Thereafter, extra troops were stationed there in greater or less force until 1919, by which time the general situation had eased considerably.

Because of the sporadic revolutionary movements which arose almost immediately upon Madero's entrance into Mexico City and election to the presidency, a definition of American policy in the matter of recognition did not develop until the early part of President Wilson's first term. By this time Madero has resigned, being imprisoned and assassinated, and his chief military officer, General Huerta, who had gone over to the revolutionists, had assumed the presidency.

President Wilson demanded as a condition of recognition a real election under due constitutional authority, with the elimination of Huerta as a candidate. This was refused, and President Wilson announced his histiric policy of "watchful waiting."

Disagreement with this policy resulted in the recall of Henry Lane Wilson, who had been appointed ambassador to Mexico by President Taft, and President Wilson resorted to the use of personal agents in seeking a solution of the difficulties, but these missions resulted in few tangible developments.

It was during the Huerta regime that American marines in 1914 were seized at Tampico by a Mexican army officer, and altho released with an apology, a salute to the flag was demanded by Rear Admiral Mayo. It was refused, and President Wilson ordered the American naval forces to seize Vera Cruz in order to prevent the landing of a cargo of arms by the German steamer Ypiranga. The order had been carried out and war seemed iminent when the services of Argentina, Brazil and Chile were accepted as mediators.

A conference was held at Niagara Falls, N. Y., but was without much practical effect because of the rapidly changing situation in Mexico.

Huerta's power was rapidly disintegrating as a result of the attitude of the United States and military victories of the constitutionalists in the north, headed by General Carranza, then governor of Coahuila. Carranza had proclaimed himself in a state of revolt, and had been joined by several of Madero's former generals, including Francisco Villa, Obregon and Pablo Gonzales.

Huerta fled the country in July, 1914, and Carranza, entering Mexico City, assumed the executive power. Although factional differences at once developed, after varying fortunes, Carranza was given de facto recognition by the United States in the fall of 1915 and de jure recognition after he had been elected president for four years under the constitution framed by a constituent assembly in 1917.

The refusal of Villa to support Carranza because of the latter's failure to hold an immediate constitutional election resulted in a state of guerilla warfare in northern Mexico, accompanied by serious consequences on the American side of the border.

The raid on Columbus, N. M., by Villa was followed by a National Guard mobilization, and the dispatch into Mexico of the expedition headed by General Pershing in what proved to be a fruitless search for Villa.

The condition in the north was finally accentuated in the spring of 1920 by a revolt of governors headed by Adolpho de la Huerta in Sonora, who objected to a plan for the arrest of General Obregon after the latter had announced his candidacy for the presidency in opposition to Ignacio Bonillas, favored by Carranza as his successor. The movement developed such proportions that Carranza fled the capital and sought refuge in the mountains of Hidalgo, where he was slain by Indian soldiers.

De la Huerta was proclaimed provisional president and confirmed in office by Congress, which then convoked an election. As a result General Obregon was elected for a four-year term and assumed office Dec. 1, 1920. He established a military command of the situation regarded here as satisfactory, and irritations for the United States greatly diminished.

Many nations recognized Huerta and several, including a number in Latin-America, have recognized Obregon. Others, however, notably Great Britain, preferred to await action by the United States.

"From Contented Cows"

From the Heart of Canada's Best Dairy Lands

CARNATION Milk comes from the fine dairy counties. It is tested rigidly for purity and for richness, about 60% of the natural water content is taken from it by evaporation. Then it is sealed fresh in containers and sterilized.

Open a can when you need it. The milk is still fresh and sweet. It has the creamy consistency you will enjoy in coffee or tea, on cereals or fruit.

Add water to Carnation Milk—a little more than an equal part and you have milk of natural consistency. It is safe—absolutely. But more than that, it's convenient, economical—your grocer supplies you! Order several tall (16 oz.) cans or a case of 48 cans.

The Carnation Cook Book contains many a good recipe. Write for a copy to-day. Free on request. Try this recipe yourself.

CREAM FILLING

One-third cup flour, 1⅓ cups water, 2/3 cup Carnation Milk, 2 eggs, ⅛ teaspoonful salt, ¾ cup sugar, 1 teaspoonful vanilla. Moisten the flour with a little cold milk, add this to the hot milk mixed with the water. Cook 15 minutes in double boiler. Beat the eggs, add sugar and salt. Add to them the hot liquid, return to double boiler and cook until egg thickens, stirring constantly. Remove from fire and when cool add flavoring.

WEDDING BELLS

PRINCE—FIFIELD

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized in the C. of E. Cathedral on Thursday, Sept. 20th. The contracting parties were Miss Bertha Prince of Princeton, and Mr. Hubert Fifield, of Bonavista.

At 10.30 a.m., the bride entered the church, leaning on the arm of Mr. Heber Harnet, who acted as father-giver. She looked charming in a fawn costume with fawn and blue hat, and white fox fur, and carried a boquet of white asters, sweet peas and maiden-hair fern.

The bride was attended by Miss Etta Fowlow, of the Postal Telegraph staff, who was becomingly attired in silver-grey canton crepe, with blue and grey hat, and carried a boquet of pink and white asters, sweet peas and maiden-hair fern.

The duties of best man were capably performed by Mr. H. R. Penney, of the railway despatching staff.

After the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Nicholls, the wedding party drove to the home of Mrs. Connors, Monroe Street, where a wedding breakfast was partaken of and the usual toasts duly honored.

The bride was the recipient of many costly and useful presents, including a purse of gold from the Postal Telegraph staff, of which she had for some years been a capable and energetic worker; and to the groom, a handsome travelling bag from his co-workers of the railway staff, showing the esteem in which they both were held.

The groom's present to the bride was a beautiful white fox fur; to the bridesmaid, a French-ivory dressing set; to the best man, a set of gold cuff-links; and to the father-giver, a gold tie-pin.

At 12.45 p.m. amidst showers of confetti and the best wishes of their many friends, the bridal party motored to the station, where the happy couple joined the express enroute to Boston, Mass., their future home.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, MONDAY, SEPT. 24th., 1923

BLEEDING PEOPLE WHITE

There is not a fisherman in the country but who realises he is not given a square show at the fishery.

There is not a merchant on Water Street or anywhere else in the country but who inwardly realises that present methods of marketing are unbusiness like and disastrous towards giving maximum results on everybody's fish all the year round.

Unanimity of opinion therefore exists regarding the condition of fishery affairs.

In view of the fact that the remedy required would give every fisherman a better price, and the one price on all his fish all the year round, and, at the same time, would protect the merchant by giving him the chance of getting a fair profit, why is it that some line of action has not been taken by exporters this year to discontinue the present ruination policy?

The fishermen are certainly prepared to do their duty, and lend their support to any attempt towards protection of the industry.

It is therefore up to the exporters to take action and see to it that political considerations or individual matters will not outweigh the desire to benefit the country.

To date, no action has been taken and the people are fast coming to the conclusion that they are considered by the business community as material merely to be bled white as the price of neglect and disregard.

That this condition will exist much longer is unthinkable. There is a limit to which fishermen can be penalised. When that limit is reached (and that time is fast approaching), self-protection will necessitate action.

Red Herring Tactics of Telegram

LET THE MERCHANTS DO THEIR DUTY

In its editorial of Saturday, the Telegram very adeptly endeavoured to saddle the fishermen with the responsibility of the evils attending our fishery system.

That the Telegram charges the fishermen with killing the goose which lays the golden eggs, and with injuring the industry through the matter of the cure of fish, is merely in line with the established rule of that paper to lick the hands which feed them.

Saturday's attempt, on the part of the Telegram, was an altogether too apparent game of pleading the merchants' case and camouflaging their sole responsibility for not taking this fall an active part in regulating shipments and restoring prices for fish that would pay the toiler for his trouble in catching it, and give himself and his family a chance to exist during the winter.

"Give our customers the real article" is a very good doctrine, but the paper which winks out of sight the insane business system which prevails in the marketing process cannot conceal its hypocrisy by inferring that the Newfoundland article is generally ill-cured, that it is inferior to the product of competing countries, that the fishermen are to blame for laxity and neglect, and the exporters are the innocents who must suffer for it all.

This portion is not borne out by fact, and every individual acquainted with our fishery affairs will recognize the absurdity of an argument that would lay at the doors of fishermen a responsibility that belongs to those merchants whose actions result for market glutting and cut-throat competition.

If the Telegram newspaper will resort to its back fyles, it will be reminded that, but a few years ago, Sir William Coaker was instrumental in placing on the statute book a law for the standardization of codfish to be enforced in conjunction with the regulation of export to and sale in the foreign markets.

The absolutely despicable attitude that Opposition newspapers assumed towards the attempt to produce the good article on the one hand and market it to the best advantage on the other hand (thereby securing the best possible returns to fishermen and country) will go down in Newfoundland history as the biggest piece of political knifery ever perpetrated on a toiling people.

Here was an honest attempt made by one who more than any individual in the country was representative of the fishermen, and whose business experience and travel through the fish markets had given him the clearest insight into the requirements necessary to protect the industry, fishermen and the business community. And there were a clique of defeated politicians, many of whom were also business men, dishonest enough, treacherous and disloyal enough to so intrigue, belie and deceive as to destroy a sincere attempt to benefit the people.

A few years ago they denounced Coaker and the Government for penalizing the fishermen through standardization regulations, and now the Telegram asserts standardization is necessary to make the fishermen do their duty; and only infers that the merchants are responsible inasmuch as they do not impose upon the fishermen such conditions as will make them produce a better article.

The Telegram well knows it stops at half measures, purposely. If it were playing a straight-from-the-shoulder game it would immediately attack the exporters for gross neglect towards the exportation and marketing problems. For it is in that direction very largely that the cancer lies, which threatens death to our staple industry and may drive our fishermen from our shores.

Cut out camouflage, stop licking the hands which held the knife that stabbed a sincere and genuine attempt, initiated through the fishermen themselves, to make conditions different from what they are to-day.

The fishermen are willing to pay their price towards a better condition of affairs, but it would be manifestly unfair to give merchants the opportunity to cull their fish under a standardization law, unless the merchants were themselves prepared to play their end of the game honestly and fairly. If the exporters proved their sincerity and public spirit in some honest endeavour to cure the disease which is strangling our industry in the Mediterranean and other markets, the fishermen will not be found wanting in the requirements that they may be expected to meet regarding standardization or the cull of fish.

It is admitted that some fishermen cure their fish better than others, but the merchants' cull and the merchants' price take care of that; and if the merchants could blame, as they did blame, standardization regulations for their cull, life, already unbearable for the toilers, would not be worth living.

Let the exporters, we repeat, cease their present madness and the fishermen will shoulder their responsibility. shouldering standardization requirements.

Without a sensible exportation policy, fish, however excellent, will rot in the markets and the fishermen will be sacrificed anyhow. The present conditions regarding the policy do not require half measures.

Accusations against the fishermen in the matter are nothing short of hypocrisy and cowardice on the part of merchants or newspapers.

THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH

Latest despatches indicate that they are introducing a new form of cannibalism in parts of the United States.

Under the old and recognized form of cannibalism a man merely ate his neighbor. Under the twentieth century star, the Ku Klux Klan consider a man should eat himself, and are initiating their principles by forcibly clipping off parts of a man and feeding them to him in moderate portions.

For instance, to-day's despatch presents the spectacle of a man undertaking the unpleasant task of eating himself by beginning with one of his ears, while the K. K. K. look upon his efforts with fiendish approval, but deplore his lack of appetite.

To cope with this barbaric condition, Governor Walton of Oklahoma has declared his state under martial law, and in the midst of turmoil which has assumed proportions of grave national concern to the United States, declares most forcibly he will impose law and order in his jurisdiction, even though he has to fight the popular approval and risk his political future.

If Walton will succeed in confining these cannibalistic methods among those practising them, he may be calculated to win out against present difficulties.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

In a paper which a few days ago contained a lot of editorial "drivel" about "cleaning up the city" I read on Saturday, when it had been brought to my attention by a child of eight or nine years of age, a theatre advertisement containing the following: "The highest kicking dancer in Texas City,—Miss Faucet or Fawnett—will open here on Friday next."

Presumably the theatre in question has in store for its patrons an "intellectual treat." In all probability too the proprietors of the theatre guaged correctly the sincerity of the Telegram Editor's clean-up spasm and were prompted to get him to put his o.k. to their vulgar (coming) leg-show by accepting for his paper the brazen announcement that our youth will have the benefit of watching the highest female kicker in Texas City.

What strides we are making towards social perfection! how modern we are really becoming! and still one finds cranks who persist in saying "times aint like they uster was." Away with such paltry pessimism! Have we not uplift leagues, social service leagues, child welfare leagues and every other old kind of league you may mention? And does it not seem but yesternight when we had to smuggle a high-kicker in like a can of moonshine and then keep her dark though the heavens fell? Is it an age ago since- chin-whiskered benedicts, if they wanted to get to a show in which some she-mule was throwing her feet in the air promiscuously, had to tell their unbelieving other halves that they were going to see a man about a dog?

Progress! I'll whisper in the ear of the world that we are making progress. Can we not in such patriarchal household journals as the Evening Telegram read the announcement of where, when and how the next generous-hearted exhibitor of doubtful female charms will make her appearance?

The one thing this poor little hole of a town needs at this stage is a high-kicker of the she-male variety. She will act as a tonic for the bald-headed old tom-cats who no doubt will buy up the orchestra seats in advance, while her advent will add polish to the education of the mamma's darlings who have five silk shirts for every canvas jacket their grandfathers wore and whose gall sacks were placed by mistake in their brain pans.

This announcement in the Telegram of the coming of the highest female foot-slinger in Texas City (it took some going to get her evidently) is in line with the "social" progress this burg has made in the past eight or ten years. Up to that time we were woefully backward. If a girl wanted to smoke a cigarette "for the fun of it," she sneaked one from her brother's case and sought a secluded corner. Now she buys her own, or charges them to her papa's account and smokes them openly at dances or dinner parties. In ye olden days the young girl who took a glass of wine at dinner also took a chance on hearing "more about it" when she was alone with her parents, while now, the flapper who doesn't have to be preambulated home and deposited inside the storm-door like the milk-bottle is counted "an old frisby."

Similar progress has been made in the case of the male off-spring of those who had to work hard and honestly for a living. Where but a few years ago a young man was not accounted as "qualified" until he had learned some trade or business from the bottom up, he can to-day become the "man of the world" with more expedition and less brain fag. Given a wrist watch, a pair of bone-rimmed goggles and two or three yards of multi-colored silk handkerchief and, sans brains or brawn, the average substitute for a man can dismiss his father with a snap of his fingers, cut more didoes in a dance-hall than Vernon Castle and spend on himself more cents to the dollar of his legitimate income than a Scotch miser can save.

"If you have tears prepare to shed them now." The high-kicker from Texas City will do no high-kicking in this city. The motion picture censors and police authorities will see to that.

EXPERT'S FOUR YEARS TOWN PLANNING TASK.

Mr. Thomas Adams, of Messrs. Adams and Thompson, town planning consultants, of Victoria Street, has been appointed chief consultant of the New York Town Planning Committee.

He will take up his duties in October.

"The New York Town Planning Committee," Mr. Adams told The Evening News to-day, "is a body of citizens which is considering the development of New York and its environs in the next 50 years.

"There is a population of 9,000,000 people in the area which is to be dealt with," he said, "and the work will take about four years to complete.

"The idea is to lay out this area with consideration for the traffic and other problems which must necessarily affect future develpment.

NEWFOUNDLAND TOO.

"I shall act as general director of operations, and shall be assisted by a staff of American consultants.

"I have an American practice as well as one in Victoria Street, and shall devote my time equally between England and America.

"At the present time my firm is engaged in planning a town in Newfoundland for Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth and Co.

"In the New York scheme the co-operation of many local authorities will have to be obtained to make it a success.

"It would be impossible to deal with it in any other way, as it covers a 50 miles radius from Manhattan."

Mr. Adams is at present engaged in a town-planning scheme for West Middlesex and the Thames Valley.

In 1910 Mr. Adams was appointed expert adviser to the then Local Government Board under the Town Planning Act.

Previously he had planned the development of several large, private estates.—London Evening News, Sept. 12.

Notes From Champney's

Weather conditions for September have been extremely bad and have rendered the hook and line men unable to cruise on the local grounds. During the past two weeks better results have been met with and our fishermen feel confident they will secure an adequate amount of cod to recompense them for their trouble.

The railway track is now being reballasted in this section and also it is understood other improvements will be made. A few men from each locality have been taken on, which speaks well of our energetic representatives in considering the needs of the different localities in this section.

The schooners Grace and Goldfinch are taking their fish on board and will be ready to sail for St. John's within a day or so. According to market report Labrador fish is very low in price—let us hope improvements will take place so that a fair price will be secured by them as well as others who are getting ready to market their catch. The above schooners hail for 1000 and 700 qtls. respectively.

According to reports from Port Union the S.S. Kriton has loaded and sailed for foreign markets. Sir Wm. is one of the busiest in Port Union when a vessel or steamboat is there loading or discharging.

The motor Purity arrived here last Friday and took fish on board at the F.P.U. store. She then proceeded to Port Rexton and finished. Skipper Tom is always lucky and never takes the Purity away from here without a freight.

The new church is well under construction and it is hoped by spring of 1924 the people of Champney's North and West will be able to attend divine service within its walls. Much credit is due to people of that section in having it so well under construction by free labor and money, &c., subscribed by them; scarcely any support has been given them from outside friends.

Soon we hope to again open our Council when our union friends get home. The F.P.U. is still strong as ever and fishermen are always ready to rally to the meetings when called upon.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout.

Benito Mussilini, dictator of Italy by virtue of the Black Shirts, in refusing the other day to allow the League of Nations to abjudicate on the question of Italy's occupation of the Greek Island of Corfu, said that in a matter involving "Italian national honor" Italy would not accept the mediation of an outside authority. (Which, by the way, is the same as the case of a man who, claiming that he had been "insulted" by another, proceeded to break his leg, and steadfastly refused to allow a court of law to abjudicate on the matter, saying that as his "honor" was involved, he did not propose to allow any "outside" authority to interfere.)

This loose talk about national "honor," and there has been a lot of it of late years, recalls to me a passage in one of Bertrand Russell's books, "Justice in Wartime." Says he:

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

"In private life exactly the same state of opinion existed so long as duelling was practiced, and exists still in those countries in which this custom still survives. It is now recognized, at any rate in the Anglo-Saxon world, that the so-called 'honor' which made dueling appear inevitable was a folly and a delusion. It is perhaps not too much to hope that the day may come when the honor of nations, like that of individuals, will be no longer measured by their willingness to inflict slaughter."

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

Since I wrote the preceding paragraphs (you see, I do not always write this entire column at the one sitting) I have come across two quotations that have caused me to laugh loud and heartily. I shall reprint them here, and you may possibly be of opinion that they are not cause for hilarity, but gravity. But, remembering the truth of the two quotations, and what has happened since they were spoken, it is ludicrously funny. Either that or painfully sad.

The first speaker is David Lloyd George, former Prime Minister of Great Britain, January 28, 1921:

"What I have put forward," said he, "is an expression of the views of all the experts.....Every one wants gold, which Germany has not got, and they will not take German goods. Nations can only pay debts by gold, goods, services or bills of exchange on nations which are its debtors.

"The real difficulty.....is due to the difficulty of securing payment outside the limits of Germany. Germany could pay—pay easily—inside her own boundary, but she could not export her forests, railways, or land across her own frontiers and make them over to the Allies. Take the railways, for example. Suppose the Allies took possession of them and doubled the charges; they would be paid in paper marks which would be valueless directly they cross the border.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

"The only way Germany could pay," concluded the British Prime Minister, "was by way of exports—that is, by difference between German exports and imports. If, however, German imports were too much restricted, the Germans would be unable to secure food and raw materials necessary for their manufacturers. Some of Germany's principal markets—Russia and Central Europe——were no longer purchasers, and if she exported too much to the Allies, it meant the ruin of their industry and lack of employment for their people."

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

The other quotation is from a speech by the French Prime Minister, M. Briand, Feb. 3, 1921:

"We must not lose sight of the fact that in order to pay us Germany must every year create wealth abroad for herself by developing her exports, and reducing her imports to strictly necessary things. She can only do that to the detriment of the commerce and industry of the Allies. That is a strange and regrettable consequence of facts."

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

The only way Germany can pay, therefore, is by creating a surplus to export considerably more than she imports, or to produce more than she consumes.

If she consumed and imported less, it would mean so much less to the countries from which she imported, wouldn't it? And if she exported more, it would ruin the industries of the countries to which she exported, wouldn't it? Then if the countries concerned refused to receive this surplus of exports, how can Germany pay?

You're right—she can't. Lloyd George was right—only, he should have had the courage and wisdom to insist on a Peace Treaty on the recognition of that plain fact in economics.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

I find the quotations, by the way, reprinted in "The Fruits of Victory," by Norman Angell, author of the famous "Great Illusion." As Mr. Angell says, Lloyd George's speech was nothing less than a perfect paraphrase of the first chapter of "The Great Illusion."

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

"I WENT INTO THE BRITISH ARMY BELIEVING THAT IF YOU WANT PEACE YOU MUST BE PREPARED FOR WAR. IBELIEVE NOW THAT IF YOU PREPARE THOROUGHLY AND EFFICIENCY FOR WAR YOU GET WAR."—General Sir Frederick Maurice.

* * * * *

Haste that in your hat.

* * * * *

I must admit that my sympathies are with Harry Barnhart, leader of the band of that name, New York, who recently refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at every one of his concerts in Central Park. Mr. Barnhart has been conducting large community sings in the big park, and because he did not begin each concert by playing that militaristic warlike anthem certain people made it hot for him and tried their best to force him to play it. He refused, and the city broke its agreement with him and forbade him from playing in the park unless he played the anthem. The conductor held to his contention that "The Star Spangled Banner," which, he rightly claimed, was not a proper song to be sung by children, in view of its pictures of "bombs bursting in air," and all the rest of it. The people have passed thru a fierce war, as he said, and the dismal air and wrong spirit of the words of this anthem are not the kind that should be sung.

Besides, it is by no means the national anthem. "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "Land of My Fathers" are often referred to it, and the truth is that there is no such thing as an American national anthem.

"The Star Spangled Banner," with its glorification of war, is no fit song to be a national anthem. A national anthem of a democratic people ought express only the loftiest concepts of justice, honor, freedom and democracy.

FIRE THREATENS S.S. MANOA

A fire that threatened disastrous results, occurred on board the s.s. Manoa at Harvey's Wharf at 4 a.m. yesterday. The fire broke out in the quartermaster's quarters, which are situated on the after deck.

How the fire originated is unknown but three of the men who were in their berths at the time, the other being on watch, awoke to find the room in flames.

They immediately gave the alarm and turned the ship's fire-fighting apparatus. The flames completely enveloped the room, and spread to the poop deck which was badly scorched.

It took nearly half an hour before the fire was subdued, leaving the place a wreck, while the four officers lost everything they possessed.

The city fire companies were not called out, the ship's apparatus being sufficient to quench the blaze.

Parsons' Pond Oil

THE MOST IMPORTANT DISCOVERY MADE IN THE FIELD.

Interesting developments are reported in connection with the Palmer well on the property of General Oil Fields, Ltd., at Parson's Pond. Work at this well was started near the end of last year but work was held up until a month ago owing to the late arrival of a boiler from America. In the middle of August the well was cased and drilling was restarted about three weeks ago, when the depth was less than 900 feet. At from that depth to 1,000 feet gas was encountered and on Monday, September 16th, there was a good first show of oil. On the following day the workmen baled upwards of a ton and the oil stood in the hole to a depth of 100 feet. Mr. Henry states that this discovery at 1063 feet in the most important yet made in the oil fields.

In previous wells nothing better than shows were discovered at this comparatively shallow depth. Oil was not expected at less than 1,500 ft. and the well will be drilled to that depth for the purpose of tapping a more prolific formation. It was at this site where, when this well was started, Mr. Henry reported that oil of an exceptional quality would be found. He is certain that the oil will be found to justify his expectations. He believes it will on analysis be proved to be the best quality of oil found in the Colony. Samples have been forwarded to London and St. John's.

Chapter of Accidents

Motor Cars of W. E. Bearns and J. Miller in Collision—Both Badly Damaged.

Yesterday afternoon two motor cars were damaged by a collision at the corner of Rennie's Mill and Circular Roads.

The cars were owned by Mr. W. E. Bearns and Mr. J. Miller. The former was going along Circular Road when Miller's car unexpectedly crossed from Rennie's Mill Road and both cars crashed. Miller's car had the dasher carried away, headlights smashed and engine damaged, while Bearns' car had the radiator damaged and engine put out of commission. Both claim the other fellow was the cause of it all.

Mr. Thos. Hussey Injures Eye.

While engaged opening goods cases at an uptown store Saturday, a young man named Thomas Hussey, got hit in the eye by a flying nail or a piece of tin. He suffered great pain and was taken to the General Hospital where his injuries were dressed and he was visited by Dr. Smith. It is feared Hussey may lose the sight of his eye.

MISS VIGUERS FRACTURES ARM

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Minnie Viguers met with a painful accident when she tripped and fell over the stairs at her home, King's Road, fracturing her left arm. At the time, she was preparing to go motoring with Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Moore. She suffered much pain and was driven to the General hospital by Mr. P. F. Moore, where thei njured limb was set.

POLICE COURT

Two drunks were discharged.

A drunk and disorderly was fined $2.00 or 7 days.

A grocer of Pleasant Street had a cooper from Mundy's Pond Road before the court on a charge of using threatening language towards him on several occasions. A neighbor who heard the loud and abusive language was called as a witness, but as he was unable to identify the defendant his evidence was of very little value. The defendant under oath denied the charge and said he was not in the vicinity of defendant's premises at the time complained of. His honor not being satisfied as to the identification of the accused suspended sentence, but obliged the cooper to enter into a bond to keep the peace towards the complainant.

A girl who has repeatedly been arrested for street walking was sent down for 30 days.

OBITUARY

MRS. FREDERICK HOUSE

The Evening Advocate joins with his numerous friends to-day, in extending sincere condolence to Mr. F. G. House and family upon the demise of his wife, nee Ethel Noseworthy, which occurred at her late residence, Topsail Road, this city, on Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

The deceased lady was well and popularly known to a large circle of friends, and her early passing out of life takes away a lovable character, a kind and generous friend and affectionate mother and wife. She was a daughter of Johnathan Noseworthy, of this city. Her illness extended over a period of two years, and despite the best medical treatment, and the unremitting care of family and friends, the Master's call had come for her to join the loved ones gone before, and the soul of Ethel House winged its way at the hour stated, to the foot of the Great White Throne.

The funeral, which was largely attended, took place this afternoon.

BULGARIA IN GRIP OF REVOLUTION

Regular Troops Take Stand Against Organized and Armed Peasants.

SEEK OVERTHROW OF GOVT.

PARIS, Sept. 24—A despatch to the Havas agency from Sofia, says the present insurrection in Bulgaria is spreading and gathering strength.

One hundred thousand peasants, the majority well armed and organized, are closing in on Sofia in an attempt to overthrow the government.

The cabinet sat throughout Saturday night with King Boris as president.

Two regular regiments have been sent out to make a stand against the peasants who are reported to have halted in the face of rifle fire.

LONDON, Sept. —A Reuter despatch from Sofia says that aside from the recent communist uprising at Nova Seagora and Tchirpan, in which seventy communists were either killed or wounded, there have been no disturbances in Bulgaria.

VICTORIA, B.C., Sept. 24—Passengers of the Empress of Australia unfolded a story of the heroism of Commander S. Robinson, officers and crew, during the earthquake at Yokohama.

Threatened by fire every moment, the commander and crew stayed at their posts, protected the ship and rendered effective aid to more than thirty thousand sufferers of every nationality.

As a memoir of the heroism of the crew, a committee formed on the trip out from the devastated islands, collected sufficient funds to place a tablet in the ship, suitably engraved, with an account of the ship's and crew's part in the greatest tragedy of the age.

Complications May Arise In International Schooner Race

HALIFAX, Sept. 24—In replying to-day to the message sent Saturday by the American Race Committee, to the Halifax members of the International Schooner Race Committee, the latter pointed out that additions to the rules did not apply to vessels previously constructed, and did not technically bar every possible United States entrant as rigged at present.

They also agreed to meet the American members in conference this week in Yarmouth, St. John or any neutral point that could be agreed upon. This offsets the report sent out from Gloucester to-day declaring that the Canadian committee had refused to agree to a conference as requested by the American members.

Slight tremblings were noticed this morning.

Coolidge Praises Nation as Relief Hits $8,000,000

(N. Y. World.)

President Coolidge in a message to the American people, yesterday expressed his gratification at the generous response to the appeals for the earthquake sufferers, which, to date, with still more cash and pledges flowing in, is sending $3,000,000 more than was first asked by the Red Cross.

"The prompt and generous response of the American people to the urgent needs of a friendly nation in time of great distress has been most gratifying," the message read.

"At the close of this successful campaign I wish to extend to the people of the United States my deep appreciation for this manifestation of their generosity and their willingness at all times to answer the call of suffering humanity."

Fund Reaches $8,000,000.

Red Cross headquarters last night totalled $8,000,000, and pledges and a great jump in the fund is expected from collections taken in churches throughout the country yesterday. The contributions by division to date are:

Washington division	$4,400,000
New England division	513,000
Southern division	206,000
Central division..	1,141,000

Stolen Finds Are Finding Way Back

TORONTO, Sept. 24—Nearly twenty thousand dollars of the eighty-four thousand stolen by bandits in a sensational hold-up of bank messengers of the Bank of Nova Scotia and Sterling Bank in Toronto on the morning of July 24, has found its way back to the bank headquarters.

This amount has come in three different lots and was exchanged by bandits for American currency in Chicago and St. Paul, Minn.

Detectives of both countries are endeavoring to trace by this clue, but with no success.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXXIII.

He bowed to her, deeply, humbly, as if she were in truth the grandest lady in the land, then left the room hurriedly. Nan approached the bed and leaned over Donald, gazing at him for several minutes, for he was not as yet aware of her presence. Suddenly she commenced to sing softly the song he loved: "Carry me Back to Old Virginny," and her hand stole into his. The little grin that crept over his bearded face was ghastly; after the first bar, she bent and laid her cool cheek against his.

"Well, old shipmate," she murmured in his ear, "I'm back."

" 'God's in—His Heaven' " he whispered. " 'All's right—with the—world.' "

CHAPTER XXXIII.

FROM THE company hospital, The Laird went straight to his general manager's office. Entering, he strode to Daney's desk and transfixed that harassed individual with an accusing finger.

"Andrew, this is your work, is it not?"

Mr. Daney's heart skipped a beat, but he remembered this was Friday morning. So he decided not to be foolish and spar for time by asking The Laird what work he referred to. Also, having read somewhere that, in battle, the offensive frequently wins—the defensive never—he glared defiantly at The Laird and growled.

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" His demeanor appeared to say: "This is my work, and I'm proud of it."

To Daney's profound amazement, The Laird smiled benignantly and thrust outh is hand, which Daney shook gingerly, as one might a can of nitroglycerin.

"I thank you more than you will ever realize, Andrew, for taking this matter out of my hands. I left the decision up to the Almighty and evidently he inspired you to disobey me and save the day—without compromising me."

"Pooh! That's the easiest thing I do." Mr. Daney's courage had returned with a rush. For heaven's sake, don't talk about it, sir. I placed a call for the girl in the telephone—at your expense. Yes, sir; I talked with her clear across the continent, and before she even started from New York, it was understood that she is to jilt Donald the minute the doctors pronounce him strong enough to stand jilting."

"She told me practically the same thing. Oh, Andrew, Andrew, boy, this is bully work! Bully! Bully!"

Mr. Daney replied to this econium with a deprecatory shrug and hoped The Laird would never ask him who had made the bargain. Thus far, he flattered himself, he had not strayed from the straight and narrow path of strict veracity, and he hoped he would not have to. To obviate this, he decided to get rid of The Laird immediately; so he affected embarrassment; fussed with the pile of mail on his desk, and growled:

"All right, boss. If you're satisfied, I am. I haven't been able to sleep very well since I started mixing in your family affairs, and without sleep a man cannot hold up his job. I've got a lot of work to do, and I cannot have any idle interfering fellows stampeding round my office; so I suggest that you run up to The Dreamerie to break the good news to your poor wife and the girls, and let me get something done."

"All right, Andrew; I'll go in a minute. Er—ah—you're certain, Andrew, the girl understands quite thoroughly that I haven't had a thing to do with bringing her back to Port Agnew?" The Laird smote the desk resolutely; he desired to be absolutely certain of his ground.

Mr. Daney looked up with a slight frown.

"I'll answer your question with another. Have you seen and talked with Nan Brent this morning?"

"Yes. I did—the minute she entered Donald's room."

"And you demanded a show-down then and there?" Parenthetically it may be stated that Mr. Daney's intimate knowledge of The Laird's character prompted this question. He was certain of an affirmative reply.

"I did."

"And her answer was satisfactory?"

"Absolutely!"

"So I judged from the fact that you shook hands with me upon entering my office. I had expected nothing more or less than instant dismissal . . . . . Well, since you desire the girl's testimony confirmed, I repeat that she came out here on the distinct understanding that Donald's family had not receded from its original position. This is a business trip, pure and simple, in so far as the McKaye family is concerned, although I grant you there is a heap of sentiment on Nan's part—at least sufficient to persuade her to do anything for the boy's sake. She places his welfare above her own."

The Laird nodded.

"The girl is capable of doing the most unexpected things, Andrew. I really think she'll play the game. When she told me what her intentions were, I believe she stated the absolute truth."

"Well, let us hope she doesn't change them, sir. Remember, she has no more intention of marrying him this morning than she had when she fled from Port Agnew. I was certain of that when listening to her on the telephone the other night. However, sir, I want to go on record, here and now, as disclaiming responsibility for anything that may occur hereafter. I am not the seventh son of a seventh son, and neither was I born with a caul. Hence, I do not pretend to foretell future events with any degree of exactitude. I simply guarantee you, sir, that the girl realizes that you have had nothing whatsoever, directly or indirectly, to do with the request for her return. Also, I give you my word of honor that I have not made her a single promise—directly or indirectly."

"Well, I am relieved. I dreaded the thought that I might be compromised—indirectly, for, as you well know, Andrew, I have a repugnance to asking favors from anybody to whom I am not prepared to grant them. My son is my chief happiness. Now, if I were to ask her to save my happiness, while at the same time reserving the right to deny the girl hers—well thank God I'm saved that embarrassment! Thank you, you fox!" he added."

"Bless my wicked heart! I'm glad you've gone and that I'm out of it so easy," the general manager soliloquised, as the door closed behind The Laird.

He reached for the telephone and called Mrs. McKays at The Dreamerie.

"Your husband is on his way home, Mrs. McKaye," he advised her. "The girl is here, The Laird has met her and talked with her and is quite happy over the situation. However, I want to warn you that you will avoid unpleasantness by keeping from him the fact that you asked the Brent girl to come back to Port Agnew. He thinks I did that, and I have not seen fit, for reasons of my own, to deny it."

"Why, I asked you not to tell him, Andrew," she declared, surprised that he should forget it.

"I know. But you had planned to tell him yourself if, after the girl had arrived, you discovered he was secretly pleased that she had come."

"Yes; that is true. However, since you say Hector is quite pleased with the situation, why should I not tell him, Andrew?"

"I have a suspicion the news will trouble him. He is quite willing to accept of the girl's services, as it were, but not at the behest of any member of his family. Better hear what he has to say on the subject before you commit yourself, Mrs. McKaye."

"Oh, I think I can be depended upon to manage Hector," she seplied confidently, and hung up, for already through the window she could see The Laird's car taking the grade up Tyee Head. He arrived a few minutes later and entered smilingly, rubbing his hands as indicatative of his entire satisfaction with the universe as constituted that morning.

"My dears, I have wonderful news for you!" he announced.

Elizabeth, warned by her mother of the impending announcement, and al ready in the latter's confidence regarding the long-distance conversation with Nan Brent, interrupted him. Se was a born actress.

"Oh, do tell us quickly, daddy," she gushed, and flew and threw her arms round his neck. Over his shoulder she winked at Jane and her mother, and grimaced knowingly.

"Donald's going to pull through. The doctors feel certain he'll take in the slack on his life-line, now that the Brent girl has suddenly turned up. In fact the lad has been holding his own since he received a telegram from her some days back. I didn't tell you about that, my dears, not being desirous of worrying you; and since it was no doings of mine, I saw it could not be helped, and we'd have to make the best of it."

"Oh, daddy! How could you? That's perfectly dreadful news!" the artful Elizabeth cried, while her mother raised her eyes resignedly upward and clasped her hands so tightly that they trembled. The Laird thought his wife sought comfort from above; had he known, he would not have hugged her to his heart as he forthwith proceeded to do.

PUTS HEALTH AND VIM INTO WOMEN

So Says Mrs. MacPherson of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brantford, Ontario.—"I was always tired and the least exertion would put me out for a day or two. I had a pressing pain on the top of my head, pain in the nape of my neck, and when I stooped over I could not get up without help, because of pain in my back. I did not sleep well and was nervous at the least noise. I keep house, but I was such a wreck that I could not sweep the floor nor wash the dishes without lying down afterwards. A friend living near me told me what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for her so I began to take it. With the first bottle I felt brighter and got so I could wash dishes and sweep without having to lie down. Later I became regular again in my monthly terms. I have taken ten bottles all told and am now all better. I can truly say that your wonderful medicine cannot be beaten for putting health and vim into a woman."—Mrs. JAMES H. MACPHERSON, 309 Greenwich St., Brantford, Ont.

HERE, THERE AND EVERYWHERE

What America's Discovery Cost.

After a searching inquiry and minute calculations a Yankee statistician has estimated down to a cent what it cost to discover America.

Columbus was paid $320. That was not excessive compensation for finding a new world. The Pinzons who commanded the other two caravels were paid $130 each, and common sailors $29 for the voyage. Without going into detail, the whole trip cost Spain, or Luis Santaga, who furnished most of the money, $7,250, some 45,000 pesetas, less than many a deputy paid in the last campaign to get elected to Parliament, says Francisco Grand-montague in El Sol (Madrid.)

These figures suggest innumerable reflections. Waiving the question raised by the poet Pascarella, whether the Indians did not discover Columbus instead of Columbus discovering the Indians, we must admit that the meeting of the two—largely accidental as it was, since Columbus was trying to get to Asia—was worth more than $7,250.

Wreaks Strange Vengeance

Mlle. Rappoport, daughter of a famous French Communist and former Deputy, was dangerously dounded recently by a Russian who, for an unknown reason, shot her in her father's apartment.

At about 1 o'clock a man giving the name of Ivan Keletcheff called at M. Rappoport's apartment in the Avenue Victor Hugo and asked to see the Communist leader. The daughter, who opened the door, asked whether another member of the family would do, adding, "I am his daughter."

Without any further word, the Russian drew a pistol and shot her thru the chest. Then he walked calmly to the nearest police station and delivered himself up.

Mlle. Rappoport is in a dangerous condition in a hospital.

A cross-examination of the Russian resulted in the discovery that his real name is Katz Nelson. He served in the war in the French Foreign Legion. It is stated that he wished to avenge all his comrades who suffered torture by the Bolsheviks, and chose Rappoport because he considered him one of the most dangerous of the Bolsheviks outside of Russia.

C. P. R. TO CARRY FREE SUPPLIES TO JAPAN

The Canadian Pacific Railway will contribute the sum of $25,000 for the relief of the sufferers in Japan, and has also decided that supplies of Canadian foodstuffs and clothing donated for relief work will be transported free over the company's rail and steamship lines. This action was taken because of the reports of the intense hardships due to the disaster, and not-withstanding the fact that the company had lost heavily by the catastrophe.

FOREST DESTROYED TO EXTENT OF $14,500,000 EVERY YEAR SINCE 1918

Canada's bill for damages sustained by reason of forest fires during the past five years averages $14,500,000 annually. The number of forest fires averaged 5779 a year and the causes of this shocking display of vandalism were, nine times in ten, human recklessness. Campers accounted for 24 per cent. of all these fires; settlers burning slash started 22 per cent; lighting 10 per cent.; and railways 26 per cent. The figure charged to railways is, however, an unfair index of responsibility. In the first place, practically all fires started, or said to be started, from railway lines are instantly reported. This is not true of campers and settlers and lightning fires. Again, the majority of railway fires, being quickly detected, are quickly put out so that as timber destroyers the railway lines have fallen to a minor position.

AT THE IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

Canada and the other British Dominions will find two new sisters, namely Rhodesia and the Irish Free State, awaiting them at the Imperial Economic Conference.

Dublin messages attest hearty enthusiasm there over Ireland's membership in the League of Nations. Her inclusion, however, in the Imperial Economic Conference stirs less public feeling, chiefly because of old feuds, but its significance is admitted.

The addition of Rhodesia, which is only 30 years removed from a primitive state, to the British family of nations is heralded by the Edinburgh Scotsman as "a striking tribute to British genius for colonigation and an illustration of British wisdom in developing responsibility."

ADDING MACHINE OF ANCIENT INCAS DISCOVERED IN PERU

That the ancient Inca civilization in Peru possessed an adding and calculating machine has been revealed in the recent discovery by excavators of a knotted cord, or "quipu," in the ruins of a prehistoric tomb. The cord is sixteen yards long and contains one hundred knots. Divided into ten unequal sections, these knots represent the odd numbers from 1 to 19. The sections are of different colors, including red, brown, yellow, blue and green, and are separated by silver heads, which represent the even numbers from 2 to 20. By using this simple way of counting, based on the decimal system, rapid calculations can be made.

The Worker and the Boss:

THE POLICEMAN AND THE HOSS

Once there was a boss. He had a hundred people working for him. He had two horses working for him.

There was lots of work. It was busy. The workers worked many hours. They received fair wages. They received extra pay for overtime.

The horses were busy. They worked hard. They worked overtime. They had a large airy stable and were given fine oats.

The orders were filled. Things slackened down. There was no work. The boss began to think.

He called the workers together. He began to address them in this fashion:

"Boys, we always got along nicely, did we not."

"Yes, sir!" they answered.

"You worked according to the rules and regulations?"

"Yes, sir," they responded.

"I paid time and a half for overtime, have I not?"

"Yes, sir," they sang again.

"Now, boys, I have some sad news. There is no work and you cannot expect me to pay. Therefore, you are laid off. You are discharged. When I need you I shall send for you."

With bowed heads and drooping shoulders the workers walked out.

"Now," said the boss, "I am rid of the men; but what about the horses?" After a while he decided to do with the horses as he had done with the workers.

He placed himself in front of the horses and began to address them "Horses, I always treated you nicely, didn't I?" The horses nodded their heads in assent. "I fed you on the best of oats, haven't I?" Again the horses nodded.

"Now, horses, I have no work for you. You do not expect me to pay you when you are not working? You are therefore laid off: you are discharged. When I need horses again I will send for you."

He opened the door and the horses walked out.

It was the first time these horses walked without a driver. Naturally they walked a zig-zag.

The policeman saw the horses. He took hold of them. Whomever he met he asked: "Do you own these horses?"

"No!" was the reply. Finally he asked one man if he knew the horses and the man said he worked with them for the same boss.

"Who is the boss?" the policeman inquired. "Come with me," the driver said.

So the driver, the policemen and the horses began to walk. They at last reached the office of the boss.

"Say," the policemen shouted, "do you know these horses?"

"Yes," answered the boss.

"Do you know the law of horses? the officer asked.

"What is the law?" asked the boss.

"The law says that you must take care of horses w hether they work or not.

"No horse is allowed to suffer or starve. No horse is allowed to be without a stable.

"What are you going to do about it." Will I arrest you or will you take care of the horses?"

"Officer," said the boss, "let me have the horses."

The boss took the horses back to the stables and promised to provide for them.

The driver witnessed all this. He thought what a fine idea it would be if human beings were also provided for. He looked at the officer for a while and said:

"Say, Officer, tell him to do the same for me that he does for the horse, wil lyou?"

"Aw, shut up! You ain't no horse. You're only a workingman," said the officer.

LIFE'S CANVAS.

By Edgar E. Guest.

Sunshine and shadows and laughter and tears,
These are forever the paints of the years,
Splashed on the canvas of life day by day,
We are the artists, the colors are they.
We are the painters, the pigments we use
Never we're wholly permitted to choose.
Grief with its gray tint and joy with its red
Come from life's tubes to be blended and spread.

Here as the easel, the brushes at hand,
Each for a time is permitted to stand.
White was the canvas when first we began,
Ready to picture the life of a man.
Now we are splashing the pigments about,
Knowing the reds and the blues must give out,
Soon we must turn to the dull hues and gray,
Painting the sorrows that darken the way.

Now with the sunshine and now with the shade
Slowly but surely the picture is made,
Even the gray tints with beauty may glow,
Recalling the joy of the lost long ago,
Let me not daub it with doubt and despair,
Deeds that are hasty, unkind and unfair,
But when the last bit of pigment is dried,
Let me look back at my canvas with pride.

Let me when trouble is mine to portray,
Dip, with good courage, my brush in the gray;
After the tears and the grief let there be Something of faith for my children to see.
Lord, let me paint not in anger or hate,
Grant me the patience to work and to wait,
Make me an artist, though humble my style,
And let my life's canvas show something worth while.

Freaks of Fortune-Makers

DRAMATIC HOME-COMINGS OF SUCCESSFUL MEN

A millionaire appeared in Chicago recently and literally threw his money about. He tossed notes in the air and newsboys scrambled for them. Then he collected a crowd of ragged urchins and took them to a bootshop, where each was fitted out with footwear.

The same night he gave a dinner to a hundred newsboys. He explained that he himself had started life by selling newspapers in the streets. When he made his fortune in Mexico he decided that his first action on returning home would be to give some pleasure to his successors. Like them, he had known the pangs of cold and hunger.

Only a few weeks ago the son of a poor Scottish crofter returned from abroad to buy an estate worth £100,000. He is now a landed proprietor in the district where once he was a humble clerk.

Pennies for Singing Anthems

Another interesting pilgrimage home was made by a Lancashire man who earned a few shillings by delivering milk in Preston. Subsequently he drifted to America, where he made a fortune. During his visit home he attended the church where formerly he earned welcome pennies by singing anthems.

A country youth began his business life as a pedlar in his home district. When he tried to display his wares in the servants' quarters of a local mansion he was turned away with jeers and insults. The incident affected him so much that he left the village determined never to return except as the owner of the very country-house from which he had been turned away.

It took him some years to do it, but eventually he realized his ambition. Several of the servants who had insulted him were still there. Instead of dismissing them he doubled their wages and kept them on.

Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, which we ascribe to Heaven.
All Well That Ends Well.—

Yarns They Spin In America

TALL TALES ABOUT BRITISH ROYALTY

Americans enjoy gossip about royalty, and if they cannot get real anecdotes they simply make them up!

Here are two tales which appeared not long ago in a paper published in Boston. The first concerns Princess Mary and an incident supposed to have taken place at a garden party held at Buckingham Palace some years ago.

"Princess Mary, dressed in a simple white frock, was allowed, rather as a favour, to mingle with the guests. Running up to a Court official who was in conversation with an important member of the Government, she pulled his coat sleeve several times to gain his attention. At last he turned round and said courteously, but impatiently, 'Run away, little girl, I'm busy now.'

"Queen Mary had observed the scene from a distance, and her daughter ran up to her and said, indignantly, 'Sir——called me 'little lady' and told me to run away.'"

"'You had better go back to him, my dear,' replied the Queen, 'and tell him that though you are a princess you have yet to learn to be a lady.'"

Too Precious to Use

The other story is about the Prince of Wales.

"Simplicity and common sense have governed Queen Mary in the bringing up of the Royal Family.

"On the occasion of the launch of a great liner, the Prince was a guest in the house of one of the partners in the firm that had built the vessel. Wonderful preparations had been made. Among other things a set of costly pillow-cases with monograms and real lace frills was specially prepared, and a real crystal ewer and basin were placed in the Royal bedroom.

"In the morning it was found that the Prince had taken off the pillow-cases and folded them neatly on a chair as too precious to be used, and had washed his hands in the sponge bowl for fear of damaging the crystal basin!"

Blow, Blow thou winter wind
As man's ingratitude,
As man's ungratitude,
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen
Altho thy breath be rude.

Manufactured Falsehoods

Lord, Lord, how subject we old men are to this device of lying.
—Henry IV. Act. III.

Falsehood is cowardice; and the writer of this morning's editorial of the Daily News, proclaims himself coward of the worst type.

A falsehood which is all a falsehood may be met and fought with outright, but one which bears the semblance of truth is the blackest of its kind, and its perpetrator the worst kind of falsifier. And when that individual happens to be a self-styled political purist and inflated egotist it merely adds to the enormity of his hypocrisy and paints the blackness blacker.

The Daily News lied consciously this morning when it stated Sir William Coaker was the promoter of a flour mill proposition which was said to be under the consideration of the Executive Council at a meeting last night. Sir William Coaker, who has been out of town for several weeks past, has never, at any time, laid before an Executive Council any flour-mill proposition in connection with Port Union, and the allegation that it was done last night is a low-down machination belonging to the Daily News office.

The Advocate challenges the Daily News outfit to produce the proof of its assertions, or stand condemned for political misrepresentation of an opponent. If it would lay claim to ordinary political decency, it will immediately retract this morning's allegations, and confess that, like the Telegram of a few days ago, it embraced the opportunity of using a business project, separate from Sir William Coaker and separate from Port Union, for the miserable purpose of an attack on Sir William Coaker and his F. P. U. associations.

These tactics are in a line with those pursued by the editor of the News since the Fishermen's Protective Union started among the fishermen, and since the influence of Sir William Coaker has been instrumental in placing his present assailant in the impotent political position which he occupies to-day.

The F. P. U. and Coaker have come up through the years in the face of their opponents and they will maintain their position even though the editor of the News persists in continuing to fight them unfairly, cowardly and dishonestly.

Hitting Below The Belt

"Fight your political opponent fairly and squarely" is a maxim which many forget.

Not only in election times do they forget it. When the battle is over and in the calmer moments, they resort to false methods and pursue their political motives with a vindictiveness that would do justice to a savage race.

Says Voltaire: "How horrible it is to be a mischievous and malignant hypocrite! how inexpressible is the meaning of being one."

Some people there are who will fight bitterly during a campaign and leave the victory to the victor; while others will use their ability in continuous attempts to deal out misrepresentation from day to day, to a public who have rejected their political associates.

If rumour speaks disparagingly, the hypocrite will use it as the truth, and if some legitimate business proposition is under discussion, he will proceed to knock it and gain political advantage by shouting a false political cry against an opponent.

A good instance of this form of political hypocrisy will be seen in the columns of the News this morning, whose writer basing his concoctions on some other business matter, raises a false cry against Sir William Coaker, who has been at Port Union for two weeks past and has never consulted an executive about any project of that nature associated with the F. P. U.

But the day has passed when people can so dash and brew the half-truth with falsehood as to make a food for fishermen to swallow.

THE HUMBER HUMS

In another column will be seen a review of Humber activities which indicate that the extensive operations already in swing a month ago have taken on immense proportions and are making the western section of the island the centre of a stupendous industry.

A high official of the Armstrong Whitworth Company has advised the Advocate that about 2300 working men are engaged on the various works, including Corner Brook, Deer Lake, Junction Brook and the canal works between Grand Lake and Deer Lake. In addition to this direct labor-giving advantage, there are the almost equally great indirect advantages derived from the Humber development project, which may be seen from the extra railway earnings and employment, the requirements for material, supplies and goods of all descriptions, all of which set the wheels of labour and industry going in many sections of the country remote from the actual seen of operations.

To Humbermouth, the Humber means new life. It has become a centre of great activity; for there, large shipments of supplies and machinery arrive for the operations, while at Corner Brook many steamers have arrived with machinery cargoes for the works, and for movement to the interior centres of development. What the Humber means to the local trade can very well be seen, not only in the numerous schooners bringing lumber and material to Corner Brook, but also in the various factories and business places of St. John's, where much material is supplied for the needs of working men and the plant itself.

Extra earnings on the railway must be very considerable, for not only has traffic tremendously increased between Corner Brook and Howley, but a very visible increase has resulted between St. John's and Corner Brook.

The policy of the Government Railway Commission in bringing the railway to its present state of efficiency is now amply justified when it must be considered that the Humber proposition would be a practical impossibility without present railway facilities. It will be remembered that Sir William Coaker and other members of the Railway Commission were much abused for their railway improvement programme, but the working men who are now engaged on the project, will realise the necessity of providing, at the proper time, transportation facilities which are essential to the beginning of great industrial schemes.

Even now Armstrong-Whitworth and Company find themselves embarrassed by lack of railway facilities, as they will require at least five loaded trains per day over a fifty mile length of railway track.

Considering the matter as a whole, and despite the unfortunate fact that, owing to a poor shore fishery, many men will find it difficult to obtain work, it must be admitted that the "Humber" will be a blessing to Terra Nova. From day to day the new industry is proving its worth, and now it is but in its initial stages.

In its different centres, men of all political parties work, They admit its high value to them and their families, and give credit to those whose labours, covering a period of years, made the Humber a reality.

And foremost among these were Sir W. F. Coaker and the Fishermen's Union.

"Business Man" Commends Advocate's Stand In Fishery Matters

ASSERTS EXPORTERS SHOULD TAKE ACTION.

Editor Evening Advocate.

Dear Sir,—I have noted with no small satisfaction the stand the Advocate is taking on the matter of codfish exportation, a stand which is in line with the policy of your paper for some years past.

That the results of your better-marketing cruisade have not been more fruitful should in no way discourage you, nor should it influence you to abate one jot in your commendable campaign against a system which is slowly but surely placing our once great codfish industry amongst the past glories of this much-abused country of ours.

The fact that you have thus far failed to stir the exporters into proper action is a proof of their utter unfitness for the important place they occupy in the community rather than a reflection upon the manner in which you are striving to save the heritage of our people. Those who look not beneath the surface of things are apt to dismiss this all-important question of fishery exportation with the remark that what was good enough for our fathers ought be good enough for us. It must not be forgotten, however, that the whole industrial world has had to readjust its methods of doing business in the past decade. There is scarcely a civilized country today that has not had to adapt its methods of marketing to suit annually-changing conditions. Policies that worked out successfully two or three years ago might be ruinous now, and the very best minds in every producing country are continually and almost exclusively occupied with keeping in touch with new conditions which demand new methods of meeting them.

That being so, why is it, I often ask myself, that the exporters of our principal product trouble themselves little or not at all about the changing order and the necessity for changed methods to cope with new conditions? Is it egotism? Do our exporters really imagine that what keeps the leading economic experts of the old and new worlds constantly on the qui vive, is merely a bagatelle to them, or do they fondly imagine that that "Providence which shapes our ends" is going to sell our fish for us at profitable prices while we "rough hue" our chances of doing successful business by playing directly into the hands of those whose legitimate aim it is to get the best of us in any deal we may have with them?

Whatever the cause, the effect does not have to be sought after with a magnifying glass, and if the Advocate can succeed, even after its years of effort, in making the exporters of this country realize their duty and perform it, then it will have done more than has been done by any other local newspaper for many a long day.

Yours truly,
BUSINESS MAN.

St. John's, Sept. 24, 1923.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

The Prince of Wales, as Lord Renfrew, happens to be an ordinary man after all, according to Canadian despatches. He appears to know an ordinary snow-storm when he sees one, and when he gets a chance to dance with a pretty girl, he manages to dance on his own feet. As if such an experienced dancer as the Prince, would dance on somebody else's.

Which reminds one that there is too much of treading on other people's corns going, for some people's liking.

"Rivers of rum" flowing from Canada to the United States is the cause of much discussion in the Canadian and American press. The "Yanks," (who do not drink, of course,) reproach Canadians for having in their midst 'bootleggers' who sell the stuff to free and independent citizens of America.

But for the presence of the broad Atlantic, there may be seen rivers from St. Pierre to this country, from St. Pierre to the States and from Terra Nova to the States.

Funny how different men have different opinions. Mussolini, leader of the Black Shirts of Italy, is held by many to be a rascal of no mean order and by others as one whose sagacity, courage, patriotism and honesty saved Italy from Bolshevism. But we don't have to go to Italy for such divergence of opinion.

If some of the "brilliant" American writers, such as George Allan England, who come here from time to time to study the "natives" and get samples of the dialect with which to regale their readers, would take a trip to some of the Western States just about this time, they would get some fine local color for their blood-and-thunder emanations.

The Wang-the-Miller of the Daily News has joined his little brother of the Telegram in dickering around the old "mill stream." Wonder if the little fellow fell in or got caught in the wheel?

Change Islds. Notes

NOTWITHSTANDING the dullness of the weather, Change Islands has been quite a summer resort this year. Many of our young folks who have made their homes elsewhere have returned to their old home for a visit.

Mrs. J. T. Richards, wife of the C. of E. Missionary at Flower's Cove, and Mrs. E Smith of Boston, have spent a few weeks here visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Oake.

Mirr Ida Dowell, of Nova Scotia, whose father was for so many years C. of E. school teacher here, visited her old friends at Change Islands. We are always glad to see Miss Dowell.

Mrs. Andrews of Stewisacke, Nova Scotia, (nee Miss Nina Oake) who was our post mistress and telegraph operator a few years ago, was staying with her cousin, Miss Beatrice Torraville. Mrs. Andrews came as a bride, and we would like to take this opportunity of offering our very sincere wishes for a happy wedded life.

One of our most popular visitors is always Mrs. J. S. Gilliver of New York, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Earle. Mrs. Gilliver is sure of a welcome and we are only sorry that there was so little sunshine this year. Try it again next year, Mrs. G.
.oWpG

Miss Edna Kimmerby, the little daughter of Mrs. Frank Kimmerby, of New York, also visited her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Earle. Edna was born here and she was glad to visit her old home.

Mr. E. Oake and his daughter, Mrs. Mercer, of Sydney, N.S., were here for a few weeks. We are glad to know that Mr. Oake has made good at Sydney.

Mrs. Elizabeth Torraville, who has been living with her son at Truro, came back to spend the summer with her daughter, Mrs. Arch Scammell. We would like to know that Mrs. Torraville has come to stay.

Miss Clare Scammell, who has recently graduated as nurse from the St. John's Hospital, Brooklyn, New York, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Scammell. We congratulate Miss Scammell and wish her every success in her chosen profession. We are very sorry to learn, however, that Miss Scammell's parents are leaving, us with their family, to make their home at New York. They will be greatly missed.

We regret to say that in the past few months, about sixty people have left our little town to reside in the States and Canada.

By last week's Clyde, Mrs. Seeley and family left to join her husband, Capt. Arthur Seeley at New York. Captain Arthur was a prominent man at Change Islands, and will be missed by all.

Mrs. E. White and family were also passengers by the Clyde, en route to Toronto, where her husband has made a home.

Miss Alice Porter, who for six years has been in the employ of Earle and Sons, left last Saturday for Toronto, also Miss Elsie Hawkins of the Union Trading Co., and Miss Olive Hart of S. Roberts'. We were sorry to say good-by to these three young ladies, who have made themselves very popular by their unfailing courtesy and kindness in their respective positions. We wish them every success.

Miss Carrie Oake accompanied her sister, Mrs. E. Smith, on her return to Boston.

Miss Olive Hinds went by the Clyde to Boston.

Mrs. J. Young and two children, from Hr. Grace, arrived by the Prospero. Her mother, who was visiting her, also returned.

Misses Hunt and Peckford of St. John's, are the guests of Mrs. J. Brett.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Elliott and family, who were visiting their relatives, left by the Susu enroute to Detroit, U.S., where they will reside in future.

Mr. O. Torraville, who was the Principal of the High School for six years, has gone, with his wife, to Channel, where he will act in the same capacity.

Misses Ida Parsons, Ida Lodre, Ida Torraville, Agnes Hinds and Winnie Bussey have resumed their work as teachers, after the summer vacation.

The schools have re-opened with a new staff in each. The C. of E. High School has for its Principal, Mr. W. Short, of Bonaventure, and Miss Sheppard, of Catalina. The Methodist School is staffed by Mr. Moore, of Bay de Verde, and Miss Brenton of Wesleyville.

Our sympathy goes out to Mrs. Trephlena Cave, who with her daughter Phoebe, left here two weeks ago. Mrs. Cave was taking Phoebe to Toronto for medical treatment, and stayed off at Millertown for a week to visit her son. While there, Phoebe passed away almost suddenly. We deeply sympathize with Mrs. Cave in her bereavement.

We are glad to say that all the schooners that have arrived to date from the Straits and Labrador, have all full loads: Captains Thos Scammell, Wm. Waterman, Chas. Peckford, Henry Waterman, John Waterman, Levi Lodre, Joseph Peckford, Sam Elliott, Fred Parsons, and John Parsons. Congratulations, boys. We hope you'll get a good price for it.

We might mention that Capt. Thos. Scammell has been the first to arrive for three years in succession, each time with a full load.

The price of shore fish has been fixed by the merchants here at $6.25. This seems a very fair price, considering the conditions in the markets to-day.

Fish is very scarce here just now, but as there is an improvement in the weather, we hope there will be a like improvement in the fish.

—CORRESPONDENT.

OUTDOING COLUMBUS

The sailing cutter Firecrest, thirty feet long, arrived recently at Fort Totten. L.I., having voyaged from Cannes by way of Gibraltar. Aboard was Alian J. Gerbault, tennis player and able seaman, and nobody else. It has long been regarded as marvellous that Columbus crossed the Atlantic in a cockle-shell sailboat so tiny as the Santa Maria, but his craft was considerably larger than the Firecrest and he carried a crew.

This is a world's record less likely to be duplicated than the crossing of Alcock and Brown. As airplanes are improved it becomes inevitable that flocks of them shall some time ply between London and New York, but the marvel of covering 5,600 miles of salt water in a tiny sailboat alone will not be reduced by inventions. The hazard of the trip is indicated by Gerbault's story. A slight variation in luck at any point in the narrative and the tale would never have been told. The Firecrest had one chance in a thousand to come through, and unbelievably, it came.

Ninety Thousand Quintals Shipped By Steamer To Date

According to messages received by the Customs Department yesterday, three other steamers with cargoes for the Mediterranean have cleared from the Labrador during the past forty-eight hours, which with the Lom that sailed from here on Saturday makes four cargoes enroute to market. The Belize which loaded at Battle Harbor for Baine Johnston and Company, took 10235 quintals for Patras, Greece. The Sif, which took 3210 quintals for Alicante, for Job Brothers and Company, will be coming on here to finish, while the Kong Inge also loaded by Job Brothers and Company, at Fishing Ship Harbour has 16,617 qtls. and has sailed to Gibraltar for orders. The following steamers have cleared to date with direct cargoes:

Hekla	13,000
Ingunn	8,900
Kriton	17,176
Lom	19,919
Belize	10,235
Kong Inge	16,617
Sift (not finished)	3,210
	89,057

From the above it will be seen that altogether nearly ninety thousand quintals have been forwarded by direct boats.

Further Details of Loss of Schr. Jacinth

A further report of the loss of the schooner Jacinth is obtained from the crew of the Annie L. Warren, which is now discharging coal cargo at Marshall's wharf.

The Warren reports that the Jacinth went right up against the cliff and that her jibboon was smashed off when she struck. When the Warren passed yesterday the vessel was lying on the rocks with all sails set. It is understood the Jacinth which is a two masted vessel of 62 tons, was bound here from Halifax when she went ashore, and that she is owned by John Barbour of Newtown, P.B.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout

The Prince of Wales, I hear, believes in Socialism, and privately supports the Fabian Society, which includes in its membership such famous men as George Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells, Sidney Webb, Sir Sydney Oliver, Sir Leo Chiozza Money, and in the past included such great celebrites as William Morris, John Ruskin, and others. It is an Englishman of considerable knowledge of the labor movement of Great Britain who tells me this. I hardly know whether to give the statement credit or not. I will say that, knowing the reputation enjoyed by the Prince of Wales for being sincerely interested in social problems, I shouldn't be surprised. As I stated in this column not long ago, the entire royal family of Japan is engaged, or was up to the time of the recent disasters there, in the study of Socialism. And I do know for a certainty that the son of the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain, is a pronounced Socialist.

I told in this column, not long after I began it, about the great learning possessed by Henry Thomas Buckle, famed author of "The History of Civilization in England." I even reprinted some striking passages from his ponderous 3-volume work. Buckle, who died at forty, spoke something like eighteen languages and had read 40,000 books, ordinarily reading them at the rate of three a day.

I am reprinting here some further paragraphs of considerable interest. They tell us just how armies originated,—regular armies, that is. Buckle is adducing evidence to show that, over a great period of time, the warlike spirit in man has been gradually decaying.

"The causes of this decay," he says, "are clearly traceable to the circumstances that, owing to the immense increase of intellectual employments, few men of ability will now enter a profession into which, in antiquity, men of ability eagerly crowded, as supplying the best means of exercising those faculties which, in more civilized countries, are turned to better account. This, indeed, is a very important change; and thus to transfer the most powerful intellects from the arts of war to the arts of peace has been the slow work of many centuries, the gradual, but constant, encroachments of advancing knowledge. To write the history of those encroachments would be to write the history of the human intellect, a task impossible for any single man adequately to perform. But the subject is one of such interest, and has been so little studied, that though I have already carried this analysis further than I had intended, I cannot refrain from noticing what appear to me to be the three leading ways in which the warlike spirit of the ancient world has been weakened by the progress of European knowledge.

"The first of these arose out of the invention of gunpowder; which, though a warlike contrivance, has in its results been eminently serviceable to the interests of peace. This important invention is said to have been made in the thirteenth century; but it was not in common use until the fourteenth, or even the beginning of the fifteenth century. Scarcely had it become into operation, when it worked a great change in the whole scheme and practice of war.

"Before this time, it was considered the duty of nearly every citizen to be prepared to enter the military service, for the purpose either of defending his own country or of attacking others. Standing armies were entirely unknown; and in their place there existed a rude and barbarous militia, always ready for battle, and always unwilling to engage in those peaceful pursuits which were then universally despised.

"Nearly every man being a soldier, the military profession, as such, had no separate existence; or, to speak more properly, the whole of Europe composed one great army, in which all other professions were merged. To this the only exception was the ecclesiastical profession; but even that was affected by the general tendency, and it was not at all uncommon to see large bodies of troops led to the field by bishops and abbots, to most of whom the arts of war were in those days perfectly familiar.

"At all events, between these two professions men were necessarily divided: the only avocations were war and theology; and if you refused to enter the church, you were bound to serve in the army. As a natural consequence, everything of real importance was altogether neglected. There were, indeed, many priests and many warriors, many sermons and many battles. But, on the other hand, there was no science, no literature: the useful arts were entirely unknown; and even the highest ranks of society were unacquainted, not only with the most ordinary comforts, but with the commonest decencies of civilized life.

"But so soon as gunpowder came into use, there was laid the foundation of a great change. According to the old system, a man had only to possess, what he generally inherited from his father, either a sword or a bow, and he was ready equipped for the field. According to the new system, new means were required, and the equipment became more costly and more difficult. First, there was the supply of gunpowder; then there was the possession of muskets, which were expensive weapons, and considered difficult to manage. Then, too, there were other contrivances to which gunpowder naturally gave rise, such as pistols, bombs, mortars, shells, mines and the like.

"All these things, by increasing the complication of the military art, increased the necessity of discipline and practice; while, at the same time, the change that was being effected in the ordinary weapons deprived the great majority of men of the possibility of procuring them. To suit these altered circumstances a new system was organized; and it was found advisable to train up bodies of men for the sole purpose of war, and to separate them as much as possible from those other employments in which formerly all soldiers were occasionally engaged. Thus it was that there arose standing armies, the first of which was formed in the middle of the fifteenth century, almost immediately after gunpowder was generally known. Thus, too, there arose the custom of employing mercenary troops, of which we find a few earlier examples, though the practice was not fully established until the latter part of the fourteenth century.

"Thus it was," explains the great scholar, "that a division was first broadly established between the soldier and the civilian; and there arose a separate military profession which, consisting of a comparatively small number of the total amount of citizens, left the remainder to settle in some other pursuit. In this way, immense bodies of men were gradually weaned from their old warlike habits; and being as it were forced into civil life, their energies became available for the general purposes of society, and the cultivation of those arts of peace which had formerly been neglected.

"The result was that the European mind, instead of being as heretofore solely occupied with war or with theology, now struck out into a middle path, and created those great branches of knowledge to which modern civilization owes its origin.

"This third, or intellectual class first displayed an independent, though still a vague, activity, in the fourteenth centuries, it has extended its aim to every department of public and private life, diffusing education teaching legislators, controlling kings and, above all, settling on a sure foundation that supremacy of Public Opinion to which not only constitutional princes, but even the most despotic sovereigns are now rendered strictly amenable."

* * *

As soon as, and only when, the mass of the people and the worthiest people were released from miltariy service and could devote their energy, enthusiasm, ability and time to the arts of peace, a civilization was born and flourished.

Mankind emancipated itself from the restrictive yoke of military service, a special standing army was created to do the fighting, and the bulk of mankind was left free to devote its vast energies to the task of building up a civilization.

That was a very great step forward. The next step is that of abolishing the standing armies, with the vast systems of costly armaments that comprise equipment:

Because the cost of maintaining such forces, and such armament constitutes a restriction on creative effort that is well nigh fatal; and, worse still, such forces and such armaments, by their existence, periodically precipitate civilization into a holocaust of blood that drains great proportions of the vital elements of civilization.

London Letter

By MRS. CECIL CHESTERTON

LONDON, Sept. 4.—(By Mail.—The Chown Prince of Sweden with his son, Prince Bertil and his daughter, Princess Ingrid, have fallen in with the present fashion of visiting London in the months of August and September. The family seems to have democratic tastes and to enjoy the informal style of their reception. The Crown Prince has become a familiar figure in the parks and the children's delight with Kensington Gardens takes them very often to the Round Pond, where under the shadow of Peter Pan, the young people thoroughly enjoy themselves. I understand a general tour of England's most attractive spots is to be made by the Crown Prince before he returns to Sweden. Another visitor lately arrived is Princess Ileana of Roumania. She is staying with a relative in the West of England and spends most of her days bathing from the Cordish coast. The artistic colony who have staked out that part of Cornwall for their own are enthusiastic as to the Princess's bathing dress which incorporates the national colors of Roumania, a soft blue with flaming vermilion. The wearer has a complexion which can stand the contrast.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

London society is considerably stirred by the statement of the Bishop of London, that the conditions prevailing in our parks and open spaces is scandalous. His Grace himself has not conducted a personal investigation, but a certain council for the promotion of public morality has employed men of great experience, to "observe." These men state that they have seen many cases of improperiety. The Chief of the Office of Works, however, says that officials of his department visit Hyde Park night after night, but never see anything more shocking than two young people kissing each other behind a bush. It was George Gissing who observed that the streets were the drawing room of the poor, in which case we may regard Hyde Park as their parlour. It is rumoured that the Bishop desires an alteration in the bye-laws which govern parks and open spaces, and intends to ask that Hyde Park may be closed at an earlier hour, while the army of overlookers shall be increased. The point is likely to be raised in the House at the next session.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

The company of Red Indians encamped at the Crystal Palace, are enjoying London immensely. Two ancient Redskins, Chief Goes-In-The-Lodge and Standing Bear, who play prominent parts in "The Covered Wagon" shortly to be released in London, are impressive-looking persons. It was somewhat of a surprise, however, and a little disappointing, to discover that the old Chief was a University man, and had taken a brilliant degree in the States. In spite of degrees, however, they still wear their native moccasins, feathers and coloured blankets, and each man carries a tomahawk. I am told that our Royal visitors from Sweden are giving the Chiefs a special reception. It is difficult to say whether the Chiefs or the hosts will be the more interessed.

✣ ✣ ✣ ✣

For the first time at a West End theatre, a woman is stage manager. "The Green Goddess", William Archer's melodrama, is being introduced under the direction of Miss Maude Howell. She is not, however, British but American. Mr. William Arliss who plays the lead is even more American than she is, though he was born in England. We have had many women managers over here including Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Lady Wyndham, Miss Marie Lohr and Miss Gladys Cooper, but up to the present, stage managers have been of the male sex, though their assistants are very often quite young girls. There seems to me no reason why we should not have a successful woman producer. There are already several in the States and I believe the experiment has been tried with great advantage in the film world. It will be interesting to see if Miss Howell's pretty but rather obvious twang affects the company. We can imagine an Eastern potenate using the Oxford accent, but Oxford-cum-New York in Ceneral Asit would be startling!

The increasing number of motor accidents, owing to the inexperience of owner-drivers, is likely to lead to an alteration in the law. At present—unlike the Dominions or America—any owner can have a license on payment of five shillings. The driver who plies for hire, however, has to pass a most severe test. But while owners without the slightest knowledge of a car are let loose on the public, this affords but little protection. It is suggested that no owner should be given a license until he has shown himself qualified to handle a car and possessed of certain mechanical know ledge. So strong is public feeling on this question that while Scotland Yard looks after the taxi-drivers the London County Council licenses the owners. It is thought that the Automobile Association which only qualified motorists can join, will bring pressure to bear on the authorities.

The question of Policewomen for London, has once again been raised. Scotland Yard considered that the expense attached to a special corps was not commensurate with their usefulness, and it was decided to demobilize the women. Lady Astor, however, opened a campaign for their retention, and as a compromise some twenty women were retained. Now a demand for the reinstatement of the corps has been launched. Scotland Yard is once again considering the question. The official argument against the policewomen is that they have not the right of arrest, their funtions being mostly "advisory," such expenditure of public money is not justified.

PROPER MANNERS

"Should I shake hands with a girl when she is brought to call upon me?" asked Edith.

"In their own home one always extends her hand to show a cordial welcome to a new acquaintance," said her mother.

"When you cannot remember the name of an acquaintance and wish to introduce them, what is the proper thing to do?" asked Ned.

"'Say to the new friend: 'Forgive me, but I cannot recall your name,' then proceed with the introduction," said his father.

"When invited to a church wedding should my husband and I call upon the bride and groom?" asked Mrs. Anxious.

"If no at home cards were enclosed you need not call, but it would be courteous to do so," said her aunt.

"Is a young man supposed to send flowers to a young lady who is to accompany him to a dance?" asked George.

"It is a grateful thing to do not obligatory. If engaged to the girl he should send flowers," said his friend.

SCENE FROM "IF WINTER COMES"

Here are Mark Sabre and Lady Tybar, of the moving picture version of A. S. M. Hutchison's famous novel, "If Winter Comes." Percy Marmont and Ann Forrest are the puzzle-headed hero and loyal-hearted heroine of the story.

HEALTH HINTS

When advised to cut down on protein foods, says Nurse, do not make a mistake of going entirely to starchy or sweet foods. The result would be almost as bad as before. The best rule is to eat a mixed diet, of which grains, vegetables and fruits compose the larger part.

The one sided or unbalanced diet, such as excessive starches, will produce an acid formation in the intestinal tract and this, in turn, will cause an overstimulation of the action of the intestines. This will carry the food out of the stomach before it has been given a chance to assimulate.

Eggs help in balancing the diet and they may be combined with many things. Eggs are rich in fats, phosporus and albumin and are lacking carbohydrates. They should be often added to rice and other starchy foods. Potatoes should never be allowed on the table when rice is part of the meal. Cheese is high in food value, and may be eaten three or four times a week.

How to Look At Camera Views

MISTAKES TO AVOID WHEN TAKING SNAPSHOTS.

There are more ways than one of looking at a view through the camera. The human eyes accommodate themselves to circumstances, and they are assisted by the brain, which takes account of things that are not precisely in front of the eyes. They not only look at something; they convey an impression. The camera lens does no thinking; it merely records what is in front of it.

If the photographer wishes to vary the aspect of a certain view he must move his camera upwards or downwards, or to right or left. Novices, unaware of these points, are often disappointed with a photograph because it represents something different to what they saw when making the snapshot.

A Simple Experiment.

Now and then this is due to the fact that the eye of the camera was not placed exactly where the human eye was when it looked at the view, but somewhere near the waist-line of the body. To appreciate what a difference this makes one has only to stoop and look at a view from the height of the waist-line and then, standing erect, look at the same view again. The perspective of the picture is completely altered.

The moral is obvious. If one must hold the camera so low before making the snap one should take a peep at the view from the lower position and note if it is satisfactory.

So far as the snapshot camera is concerned, the question of height is fixed by the pattern of the finder. The ideal finder is one which allows the user to hold the instrument at eye level, but the majority of finders have to be held at the waist level.

The difference between the two finders is this: In the case of the waist-line finder the operator looks down upon it to see the view reflected on a mirror. In the case of the eye-level finder one looks through it standing erect. It is merely a wire frame, the size of the plate, erected above the lens.

At the back of the camera is a point level with the centre of the frame. As the eye looks over the top of this point through the centre of the frame over the lens, one sees precisely the view which will be registered on the plate when the exposure is made. Any ingenious camera man can make a frame for himself, or they can be bought quite cheaply. It is a good plan to have the camera fitted with both systems.

But before considering the height at which the camera should be when taking a view, the right position must be selected. The question of a yard or so to the right or to the left will settle the fate of the picture from an artistic point of view.

A simple experiment will place the importance of the subject beyond dispute. Walk along a country lane and stop at a point from which a pretty view can be seen along the road. If we stand in the middle of the road and look in the finder, or, better still, on the focusing screen, we see that the whole of the foreground is taken up by bare road. The whole thing is unattractive.

We move to the side of the road and look again. The road, instead of leading into the middle of the picture and taking up the greater part of it, now leads in from a bottom corner, leaving the greater part of the foreground to be filled up with more picturesque subject matter.

Camera views are composed largely by the simple expedient of moving the camera about until the best point of view is obtained. It is an expedient which one cannot afford to ignore.

The Bible as an Oracle

SUPERSTITIOUS PEOPLE WHO "SEEK FOR A SIGN"

A common practice with those who "seek for a sign" is to open the Bible at random and find their answer in the pages upon which their thumb rests as they part the leaves.

In pagan times this divination was accomplished by placing the finger at random on a passage of Homer, Virgil, or some other great author. Virgil was a particular favourite, and the practice of consulting him continued down to modern times, though the Bible is the book now generally used.

During the Middle Ages Virgil became so enveloped in a mist of tradition and superstition that he was alluded to by the uneducated as "Virgil the Wizard"; and the popular estimation of the chief value of the "Æneid" was an oracle.

As late as the time of Charles I. the Bible had not entirely supplanted the "Æneid" for purposes of divination, as is evidenced by the well-known story of how that monarch learned his fate by the "Sortes Virgilianæ," as it was called.

Virgil the Wizard

This practice of divination by books is said to have "originated in the respect and veneration of certain books arising from their wisdom and reputation"; and it is easy to understand the psychology which induced people of the Middle Ages to consult "Virgil the Wizard," and leads men of a superstitious trend of mind to-day to turn to the Bible into an oracle.

The beginning of the idea dates back to the first introduction of letters, when, to the common mind, there was something supernatural in the power of a few marks made in a certain way to convey from one person to another not merely ideas but whole speeches, word for word.

The feeling is displayed to-day by remote tribes of savages when they see for the first time the use of the printed or written word in communications.

Methuselahs of the Deep

With land animals it is comparatively easy to get information as to their length of life. We know definitely that an elephant will live for more than a century, and that a goose can survive to the age of sixty.

But when we come to fish or to creatures whose life is spent in the waters, the difficulty of ascertaining their ages is very great.

Since it is usually the largest animals that live longest, we can assume that the whale is very long-lived. Of this fact we have also some definite proof. In 1866 a huge bull sperm whale was killed. In its body was found the head of an old harpoon, marks upon which showed that it belonged to a whaler which had been broken up forty years before.

A Turtle's Lifetime.

It would seem that this whale had been hunted at least half a century earlier, and since the creature must then have been of fair size, it is probable that at the time of its death it was about a hundred years old.

Walruses certainly live to fifty years of age, and possibly much longer, while a seal has lived in captivity for thirty years.

The longest-lived creatures are reptiles, and we are aware that the giant Galapagos tortoise has a life extending to two centures. And since we know that the great sea turtles are very slow growing, yet reach a weight of six hundred pounds, we are justified in believing that these creatures, too, may live to be at least a hundred years old.

$10,000 Will Buy Island and a Brace of Titles

CAGLIARI, Sardinia, Aug. 23 (AP)—Why marry a worthless prince when you can buy an island principality together with the title, and bestow them on a husband of your own choice? is the argument an enterprising Sardinian realtor has used in trying to sell a Mediterranean island to an American woman.

The woman was not in the market for a title, either with or without a prince, but she promised to mention the alluring prospect to some of her friends, and thus extracted further information about the property from the enterprising real estate man. He withheld the name, but assured her the island is well located and is highly desirable both as a summer and winter residence. It has an old castle which is in need of repair, several hundred acres of vineyard and farmland badly in need of modernization, and two villages, also badly in need of repair, with about 500 inhabitants.

The entire property is offered for $10,000, the princely name included, with a guarantee that the present holder of the title will legally sanction its transfer.

Preliminary Hearing Into Death of Michael Fewer Begins

The preliminary enquiry into the death of Michael Fewer at Chapel's Cove, on the 3rd. September, was proceeded with before Judge Morris at four o'clock yesterday afternoon. The accused, Anthony Hawco, was charged by the judge but was told he was not to plead to the charge. He was unrepresented by counsel stating he was too poor to retain one.

The Crown was represented by Mr. H. A. Winter, B.L. and Mr. R. Cramm, B.L. One witness was called, Christopher Dwyer. After the termination of his evidence the Crown intimated they were unable to proceed any further at present. In capital cases where the accused is unable to procure counsel, the Supreme Court appoints a lawyer to defend the accused. There are several other indictable offences in the preliminary stage of procedure and it looks as though the fall term of the Supreme Court will be a busy one.

Disaster Hits Salvationists Extremely Hard

FURTHER DETAILS OF LOSS OF SALVATION ARMY IN JAPAN

From recent advices received by Colonel Thomas Cloud, Territorial Commandander for Newfoundland, it is learned that the Salvation Army's loss in Japan both in property and lives, is greater than at first believed.

The headquarters at Tokio, which was completely demolished, was a splendid structure, and cost an immense amount of money. We have been privileged to see a photo of this building, as well as of several other army buildings which have been destroyed, and which it must have taken years of self-denying labor to acquire. It is feared that the various officers about whose safety there was some doubt, have practically all perished. We quote the following from an appeal made by Commander Eva Booth in the "American War Cry."

"The immeasurable and seemingly unparalleled disaster that has befallen Japan by earthquake, tidal wave and fire, presents in itself an appeal that defies expression. These stricken cities, their smouldering ruins with their uncounted dead, present a mute though anguished call for help. But what of the myriad living, homeless, waterless and foodless, bereaved and bewildered as they must be? Such an appallingly stupendous disaster requires a world response, and after the utmost has been done the residue of unrelieved suffering must be enormous."

Let us in Newfoundland display our proverbial sympathy and warmheartedness in responding generously to the appeals made on behalf of these stricken people.

Operations On Humber Are Going On Apace

6 Steamers and 12 Schooners Have Arrived at Corner Brook In Past Fortnight With Machinery, Lumber, Etc.

TRANSPORTATION NOT ADEQUATE.

Over-supply of Ordinary Labor, But Contractors Cannot Get Sufficient Skilled Workers. Warm Praise Is Given Men Now Engaged.

THE DIFFERENT contracting companies at Corner Brook and Deer Lake continue to make satisfactory progress in construction work for the big Armstrong-Whitworth power and paper plants, and between twenty two and twenty-three hundred men are employed between the two principal bases of operation.

At Corner Brook there is still about a quarter of a million cubic yards of gravel to be moved in the filling-in process, while the work of piling with concrete and timber piles for the pier and mill foundation isg oing ahead at the rate of one hundred and twenty piles per day. There is now installed at the pier a 35-ton Mead-Morrison crane for the discharging of heavy machinery, large shipments of which are arriving at the scene of operations almost daily.

Six Steamers in Fortnight.

In the last fortnight, no less than six steamer-loads of machinery and material have arrived direct at Corner Brook, and much of this had to be moved inland to Deer Lake for the power plant, dams, etc. There have also arrived at this shipping point in the same period, from various harbors around the coast, about a dozen schooners, all laden with lumber; the total quantity thus freighted to date being some three-quarters of a million feet.

Town Site Activities.

The preliminary work in connection with the new town site has commenced, and what will be the largest and most up-to-date town outside St. John's is fast taking shape under the hands of a large staff of workmen, carpenters and other tradesmen. Number 1 staff-house is already completed, and the staff have taken up their quarters there. It is hoped to have the main staff-house completed in readiness for occupancy in the early spring.

At Deer Lake, the Horwood Lumber Company have completed the erection of ten up-to-date and permanent staff residences,

The Northern Construction Company are doing good work on the Canal, and are well away on the earth-filled dam which forms part of the artificial lake which is to be used for log storage purposes. At the main dam, the W. R. Bishop Company have excavation operations completed and are now pouring concrete. At present they have two large mixing plants working about half time.

The stop-log dam at Grand Lake, which was built last winter, is proving a great success. The bottom stop-logs have been put in and the lake is rising at the rate of an inch per day. Junction Brook has been dried and the whole presents a very interesting picture.

The cross-country trains are now running on part of the diversion line between Grand Lake and Howley.

Transportation Handicap.

The Armstrong-Whitworth Company and the other contracting companies are suffering greatly, so they say, from lack of rolling-stock and other railway accomodation, such as sidings, etc., as well as from lack of telegraphic service, both on the railway and Postal lines. This is due to the fact that there are not sufficient lines to handle the ordinary business and at the same time meet the extra demands made upon them as a result of construction activities.

To handle the heavy material only, it will be necessary to move five loaded trains a day over the fifty-mile section between Corner Brook and Howley. This will need more rolling-stock than is at present accessable.

Speak Well of Men.

The various contractors employing men at the different phases of the work speak very highly of those now employed. It is very difficult to find their equal for the class of work they are called upon to perform. There is, however, a great scarcity of skiled or semi-skilled labor, such as men fitted for foremen's jobs, blacksmiths, etc., and while there is an over-supply of ordinary labor, the companies could employ many more of the former class. Some men who were taken off the ordinary pick and shovel work, having been found capable as steam-shovel men, at blacksmith work and other similar branchers, are now making excellent pay and giving the utmost satisfaction.

All the companies are working night and day, wherever practicable, and they purpose to continue work the whole winter until they are absolutely forced to quit by weather conditions.

Working Night and Day.

Asked if it were possible that the contracting companies would lay off men who had been working for some time, in order to give others who had got no employment in connection with these operations a chance, a representative of the Armstrong-Whitworth people said it would be unreasonable to expect this. The various companies have their contracts. Their object is to get the most possible work done in the best manner, in the least possible time. The men now employed are used to their jobs, they know their foremen, and their foremen know them and would not be satisfied under any circumstances, to exchange them for green hands from whom they could not expect the maximum results for a long time after taking them on. The plants have to be finished and operating in two years, according to the contract, and to accomplish this is the sole aim of the contractors.

The Union Trading Company schr. Humber Deal which arrived from Port Union yesterday is now loading general cargo for that port and will likely leave port to-night.

Cummins, and from there to Bermuda to spend a short time with her daughter, Mrs. Ted Ring and Mrs. Arthur Hollis. Mrs. Jackman will be returning about the middle of December.

Tug Goes In Search of Boat

The Keeper at the Lighthouse reported a motor boat in distress in Deadman's Bay yesterday afternoon. The Fisheries Department made arrangements with the Tug Company and the Tug Hero was sent to render assistance.

The Tug cruised about in the vicinity for some time but failed to locate the boat. Cabot Tower in the meantime reported that the trouble evidently caused by the engine getting out of order had been repaired and the boat came into the harbor without assistance. There were two boys in the boat which was fishing on the local grounds.

POLICE COURT

Three laborers, drunk, were discharged.

The Portuguese fisherman who threatened to assault his captain at the office of Hon. Tasker Cook yesterday p.m. was before Judge Morris this morning and charged with attempted assault. This he denied. The captain told his story which was repeated to the court through an interpreter. The trouble seemed to be that the owners of the vessel have not remitted any funds to pay her expenses and repairs. The men want money and are also anxious to get home, as they have been laying up here for several weeks. A local shipwright is also looking for payment for repairs to the hull and rudder but cannot get his money. The captain says, "Soon get the money, everything be all right." He was willing to take the belligerent member of the crew back upon a promise that he would be good, this Antoneo promised he would be. This decision of the captain was arrived at after he had been told that he would have to pay the man's board if he was kept in the Penitentiary until the vessel was ready for sea.

A sequel to a case which came up yesterday occurred in the Police Court this morning, when the same defendant was called to answer a charge of being drunk and disorderly in complainant's house. The complainant runs a grocery store on Pleasant Street, near Cornwall Avenue. While he was preparing for bed last night his wife said there's——— at it again. He ran down stairs and on to the street, captured his man and brought him into the kitchen, where he held him prisoner, while the police were being telephoned for. The complainant was unable to prove that any language of a threatening or abusive nature had been used and he had no legal right to arrest the man in the manner in which he did. He should have telephoned for the police, but complainant said nobody seemed to be able to identify the defendant and he took this means of being sure of his man. The accused said he was invited into the shop and held until the police arrived. He was told by the Judge to make himself scarce in that neighborhood; because if he is again caught at his abusive tricks he will not be given the chance to pay a fine, but will be given a substantial term of imprisonment.

Tug H. A. Walker With Lumbering Supplies and General Outfit Sails This Afternoon

The tug H. A. Walker is loading general supplies at A. J. Harvey's today for the company of which Dr. J. M. Mooney is the head and starts at 5 p.m. this afternoon for Harbor Deep via Lewisporte. This tug is owned by Mr. M. E. Martin and has been chartered to carry a full load of provisions and other supplies to the site where the pulp mill for which the necessary legislation was put through last session of the legislature will be erected. The tug is calling at Lewisporte to take on board Dr. Mooney, who left town by the 1 p.m. express, and three engineers. Mr. Johns and wife, bush foreman; Mr. Williams, chief cook; Mr. Davidson, the installation mechanic are amongst those going along by the boat this afternoon, as is also Mr. Gledhill, who is looking after the shipment of stores, &c. Seen at the railway station just before starting Dr. Mooney said he could not state positively how many men would be employed, but as soon as he got on the ground and looked things over he thought 500 men would be given employment by the first of October and this number would be increased as rapidly as possible and it was hoped when winter operations were in full swing that from 2000 to 2500 men would be required. The starting up of this industry will be welcome news, particularly with French Shore and White Bay settlements. Several members of Parliament, including Mr. Scammell, Mr. K. Brown and Mr. Walsh were at the station to see the party off and no doubt with a view towards keeping in touch with the principals in the enterprise and obtaining place for their quota of men on the job. Dr. Mooney has lost no time in getting to work in earnest and the Advocate wishes him every success. Men should not go to the prospective work until they are assured of employment when they get there. The facilities for travel are difficult and persons seeking work must bear this fact in mind.

CITY SEES BUILDING ACTIVITIES

Big Contracts Make Good Progress Towards Completion.

PALACE WILL BE FINE BUILDING.

Reid Nfld. Co.'s New Office Quarters Employ Many Men at Construction Work.

NOT FOR A LONG time has St. John's witnessed greater building activities than are now in progress and which are giving a great deal of badly-needed employment.

The new R. C. Palace which is being erected on the site of the old building, is fast taking shape, and the outer-walls are already erected to the height of the first storey. The work is much more tedious, however, than that of the ordinary concrete building, the large stones, being used, necessitating the employment of a large crane for lifting them into place. The slabs of Wallace stone imported from Nova Scotia, weigt up to half a ton, and are very difficult to handle. It ish oped to have the work sufficiently advanced before the winter comes to make inside work possible

The New Reid Building.

Ont of the most expeditious pieces of building construction seen in this city in its history, is that which marks the erection of the Reid building on Duckworth Street, opposite the Crosbie Hotel, and completely filling in the vacant and heretofore unsightly space between the Law Chambers and the Royal Stores Furniture buildings. This is to be a three-storey concrete building with basement, and already the outer-walls are nearing completion. The structure will be completed early in the New Year, and will be one of the most commodious office-buildings in the city. Its presence, moreover, will add immeasurably to the appearance of the street on which it is located.

The Norman School.

The Horwood Lumber Company and sub-contractors are making excellent progress on the Normal School. The front of the building including the portico and main entrance, is fast taking on a finished appearance, while the plasterers are now at work on the interior, and have some of the rooms practically finished.

There are several other large buildings going up in the east and west ends of the town, and building trades men will be kept busy for the balance of the season.

Seventy Are Entombed in Flooded Mine

One Party Makes Escape, But at Least Forty Are Believed Dead.

GLASGOW, Sept. 25—Seventy men were entombed when a deep pit at the James Mining Company's colliery near Falkirk, was flooded to-day.

It was feared that all would perish, but one party of men succeeded in making their escape through a disused shaft. Forty-one are unaccounted for and it is almost certain they are dead.

French Watch Poli ics In Germany With Anxiety

PARIS, Sept. 25—The political situation in Germany as an aftermath of the decision to abandon passive resistance in the Ruhr is being watched by the French government with some anxiety in view of the possibilities of a national movement such as one tending to separate Bavaria from the Reich.

An outbreak of mild bolshevism in Prussia is giving fresh impetus to the Separatist movement in the Rhineland.

German Premiers Agree To Abandon Resistance

Stresemann Will Get Support In Efforts To End Ruhr Impasse.

BERLIN, Sept. 25—It was officially announced this afternoon that the premiers of the German Federated States at their conference with Chancellor Stresemann to-day, unanimously agreed to the abandonment of the passive resistance program, but at the same time, expressed their determination to safeguard the unity of the country.

BERLIN, Sept. 25—Support for Chancellor Stresemann in his efforts to bring about a speedy termination of the Ruhr and Rhineland conflict is sufficiently crystalized to warrant the prediction that the government will command more than a comfortable majority in approval of its formal declaration to the Reichstag on Thursday by Chancellor Stresemann.

The most convincing argument throughout the extended conversations of the past forty-eight hours proved to be the official admission that passive resistance has been costing Germany eight quadtrillion marks weekly towards the end.

The S. S. Watuka with coal for the Government Railway left Sydney at 10 p.m. Monday and is due here to-night.

Distant view of Mt. Fuji, dormant volcano about sixty miles southwest of Tokio. This is the key to the violent earth shocks, which have wrought destruction in Tokio, Yokohama and many other smaller cities.

Intervention Reparations Commission Will Be Asked

PARIS, Sept. 25—Premier Poincare's next move, in view of the economic surrender will be to ask the inter-allied Reparations Commission to deal with the situation, it was indicated to-day.

As soon as the German government officially withdraws resistance orders, directions will be sent to General Degotte to make the Ruhr occupation as invisible as possible.

The action of the German government is not regarded here as completely clearing the situation in the Ruhr, although the German authorities have officially instructed all authorities that passive resistance to occupation authorities be discontinued.

Canada Gets Norwegians Move Grain

PORT ARTHUR, Sept. 25—Operated by Canadian companies, a fleet of Norwegian steamers has crossed the Atlantic and will engage with the Canadian steamers in getting Western Canada's grain to market.

There are said to be eight vessels in the fleet, and they will materially aid in relieving the blockade which may occur because of the refusal of the United States Association ships to engage in the transportation of the grain.

Orders Issued Against House Convening

OKLAHOMA CITY, Sept. 25—A general order, issued by Adjutant-General B. H. Markham, forbidding the convening to-morrow of the special session of the State House of Representatives was served late to-day on the House members gathering here for the session.

Two Are Killed In N. S. Mine

SPRINGHILL, N. S., Sept. 26—Two miners, Charles Bougenaki, forty-seven and Wosil Meckon, forty-two, were killed in one of the local coal mines, when a "bump" buried them under fifteen feet of coal and stone, and wrecked a section of the coal mine covering sixty feet.

The body of Meckon has been recovered, and that of Bougenaki can be seen standing, his mine lamp still burning.

Quiet Is Restorid In Bulgaria

SOFIA, Sept. 25—Order has been restored in a majority of the disturbed districts of Bulgaria, says a semi-official statement.

PARIS, Sept. 25—A despatch from Sofia says that the situation in southern Bulgaria last evening was tranquil, and that the communist movement there has been suppressed.

It still continues in a few communes in the northwestern part of the country but has failed in the regions of Ferdinandovo and Berkovitza.

S. S. Watchful left Catalina 2.30 yesterday for Trinity with the Circuit Court on board.

LATEST

ATHENS, Sept. 26—The Italian Legation yesterday informed the Greek Foreign Minister that the evacuation of Corfu would be completed to-day and Corfu restored to Greece on Thursday.

PARIS, Sept. 26—Calm has been restored in districts of Bulgaria where the communists provoked trouble, according to a news despatch from Sofia. One section only remains in ferment and that is Ferdinanover, but government measures to put down the outbreak there are proceeding normally.

The allied council has authorized the necessary increase in Bulgaria's standing army to enable them to deal with the situation.

Many of the batches of surrendered arms contain rifles of Russian manufacture.

PARIS, Sept. 26—The Council of Ambassadors to-day reached a decision on the question of the payment of 50,000,000 lire indemnity by Greece to Italy. The decision will be kept secret until Greece can be notified. It is understood, however, that the council found Greece had been dilatory in seeking the perpetrators of the Janina crime, and hence the money will be payable to Italy at once.

THREE MEN BURIED IN BED OF RIVER UNDER TONS OF WET CONCRETE

WOODEN MOULD FOR AN ARCH BREAKS UNDER WEIGHT OF 230 CUBIC YARDS.

SCHENECTADY, Sept. 17.—The bodies of three men are buried in the Mohawk River, near this city, under tons of wet concrete, which forced them under water when wooden scaffolding on the Great Western Gateway Bridge gave way to-night.

One of the men is Kenneth Davidson, Superintendent of Construction. Another worker was rescued, but it is thought he too will die. Several others have been taken to the hospital, slightly injured.

About 230 cubic yards of concrete had been poured for the first arch on the northern bank of the river, workmen said, when the wooden framework gave away. The men went down with the soft mass in twelve feet of water.

Was Killed By Fall

NORTH SYDNEY, Sept. 25—Paralysis overcoming him while he was working on the roof of his barn, J. T. Power, 74, proprietor of Columbia House, N. Sydney, tumbled to the ground and died from the shock, at one o'clock this morning.

Rumoured Insurrection

LONDON, A Reuter despatch from Riga to-day, says it is rumored that masses of insurrectionary peasants are surrounding Petrograd.

There is no confirmation of these rumors from any quarters.

S. S. Prospero left Conche at 1.30 a.m. today, coming south.

Belgium Wins Balloon Race

BRUSSELS, Sept. 25—Belgium appears to have won the International balloon race for the Gordon-Bennett cup again this year, either with Demuyter, the landing of whose balloon, the Belgica at one o'clock Monday about the centre of Sweden, gives him a distance of about five hundred miles, or with Venstra, piloting the Prince Leopold, whose fate at the moment is still unknown.

ADVERTISE IN THE WEEKLY ADVOCATE

To Await Entry

HALIFAX, Sept. 25—The steamer Devonian, bound from Liverpool for Boston, put into Halifax this morning, to land 25 emigrant passengers who were prevented from landing in the United States, because the September quota has been exhausted. They will remain here to take advantage of the October quota.

Berlin's Action Has Caused No Disturbance

DUSSELDORF, Sept. 25—The decision of the Berlin government to cease passive resistance in the Ruhr, has not thus far produced a single ripple of disturbance among the population of the Ruhr.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

"Now, now, Nellie, my dear," he soothed her, "it's all for the best. Don't cross your bridges before you come to them. Wait till I tell you everything. That fox, Daney, had the common sense to call the girl on the telephone and explain the situation; he induced her to come out here and coax that soft-hearted moonstruck son of ours back to life."

"Hector McKaye," Jane declared, "you've really got to do something very handsome for Andrew Daney."

"Yes, indeed," Elizabeth cooed.

"Dear, capable, faithful Andrew!" Mrs. McKaye sighed.

"Ah, he's a canny lad, is Andrew," old Hector declared happily. "He took smart care not to compromise me, for well he knows my code. When I rejected his suggestion that a mere man, would have concluded I send for the lass, Andrew knew why without asking foolish questions. Well, he realized that if I should ask her to come and save my son, I would not be unfair enough to tell her later that she was not a fit wife for that son. As a matter o' manly principle, I would have had to withdraw my opposition, and Donald could wed her if he liked and with my blessing, for all the bitter cost. I did not build the Dreamerie with the thought that Donald would bring a wife like this Brent lass home to live in it, but —God be thanked!—the puir bairn loves him too well to ruin him——"

He broke off, wiping his eyes, moist now with the pressure of his emotions, and while he was wiping them, Mrs. McKaye and her daughters exchanged frightened glances. Elizabeth's penchant for ill-timed humor disappeared; she stood, alert and awed, biting her lip, Jane's eyebrows went up in quick warning to her mother, who paled and flushed alternately. The latter understood now why Andrew Daney had taken the precaution to warn her against the danger of conjugal confidences in the matter of Nan Brent; devoutly she wished she had had the common sense to have left those delicate negotiations entirely in the hands of dear, capable, faithful Andrew, for, delicate as they had been, she realized now, when it was too late, that in all probability Mr. Daney, although them without compromising the McKaye family. Surely he would have had the good taste to assure Nan that he was acting entirely upon his own initiative.

On the instant, Mrs. McKaye hated the unfortunate general manager. She told herself that, had he been possessed of the brains of a chipmunk, he would have pointed out to her the danger of her course; that he had not done so was proof that the craven had feared to compromise himself. He had made a cat's-paw of her, that's what he had done! He had taken advantage of a momentary lack of caution—the result of her impetuous mother love. Ah, what a blockhead the man was, not to have warned her of the diplomatic dangers she was risking! At that moment, placid Nellie McKaye could have shrieked with fury; it would have been a relief to her if she could have stuck her hatpin in that monumental chucklehead, Daney. Like so many of her sex, the good lady's code of sportsmanship was a curious one, to say the least. It had not been prudence but an instinctive desire to protect her son that had moved her to be careful when begging Nan to return to Port Agnew, to indicate that the request predicted no retirement from the resolute stand which the family had taken against the latter's alliance with Donald. In a hazy indefinite way, she had realized the importance of nullifying any tendency on her part to compromise herself or her family by the mere act of telephoning to Nan, and with the unintentional brutality of a not very intelligent, tactless woman she had taken this means of protection.

Curiously enough, it had not occurred to her until this moment that she had done something shameful and cruel and stupid and unwomanly. She shriveled mentally in the contemplation of it. Not until her husband had so unexpectedly revealed to her a hitherto hidden facet of his character—his masculine code of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth—did she realize how dreadfully she had blundered. She realized now that, without having given the slightest thought to the commission of an act unworhy of her womanhood, she had acted because, to her, the end appeared to justify the means; never given to self-analysis, she had merely followed the imperative call of her mother love to the point where nothing mattered save results.

She looked up tearfully at The Laird. For thirty-odd years she had lived with this strange soul, yet she had not known till now how fierce was his desire for independence, how dear to him was his passion for self-respect. Even now, she found it difficult to understand why, even if he had been able to subdue his pride to the point of asking Nan Brent to preserve life in that which was dearer to him than his own life, his passion for always giving value received should preclude bargaining with the girl. It was plain to her, therefore, that her husband could never love his son as his mother loved him, else, in a matter of life or death, he would not have caused to consider the effect on himself of any action that might safeguard his son's existence. She knew what he had thought when Daney first proposed the matter to him. That sort of thing "wasn't playing the game." Poor troubled soul! She did not know that he was capable of playing any game to the finish, even though every point scored against him should burn like a branding-iron.

The Laird, noting her great distress, held her fondly in his arms and soothed her; manlike, he assumed that she wept because her heart was overflowing with joy. For half an hour he chatted with her; then, with a light step and a cheerful "Good-bye, Nellie, wife," he entered his automobile and drove back to town.

His departure was the signal for Jane and Elizabeth to rally to their mother's side and inaugurate a plan of defense.

"Well, mother dear," Elizabeth opined calmly, "it appears that you've spilled the beans."

"What a funny old popsy-wops it is, to be sure!" Jane chirped. "It's fine to be such a grand oud sport, but so dreadfully inconvenient! Beth, can you imagine what father McKaye would say if he only knew?"

"I wouldn't mind the things he'd say. The things he'd do would be apt to linger longest in our memories."

"Oh, my dears, what shall I do?" poor Mrs. McKaye quavered.

"Stand pat, should necessity ever arise, and put the buck up to Mr. Daney," the slangly Elizabeth suggested promptly. "He has warned you not to confess to father, hasn't he? Now, why did he do this? Answer: Because he realized that if dod should learn that you telephoned this odious creature from the Saw dust Pile, the head of our clan would consider himself compromised—bound by the action of a member of his clan, as it were. Then we'll have a wedding and after the wedding we'll all be thrown out of The Dreamerie to make room for Master Don and his consort. So, it appears to me, since Mr. Daney has warned you not to tell, mother dear, that he cannot afford to tell on you himself—no, not even to save his own skin."

"You do not understand, Elizabeth," Mrs. McKaye sobbed. "It isn't because that stupid Andrew cares a snap of his fingers for us; it's because he's devoted to Hector and doesn't want him worried or made unhappy."

And in this observation, it is more than probable that the lady spoke more truly than she realized.

"Oh, well, if that's the case, it's all clear as mud!" Jane cried triumphantly. "If the worst should ever come to the worst, Mr. Daney will lie like a gentleman and—why, he has already done so, silly! Of course he has, and it's rather gallant of him to do it, I think."

"He's an imbecile, and why Hector has employed him all these years—why he trusts him so implicitly, I'm sure I am at a loss to comprehend.' Mrs. McKaye complained waspishly.

"Dear, capable, faithful Andrew!" Elizabeth mimicked her mother's speech earlier in the day. "Cheer up, ma! Cheeries are ripe." She snapped her fingers, swayed her body, and undulated gracefully to the piano, where she brought both hands down with a crash, and played ragtime with feverish fury for five minutes. Then, her impish nature asserting itself, she literally smashed out the opening bars of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, and shouted with glee when her mohter, a finger in each ear, flew from the room.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

MR. DANEY worked through a stack of mail with his stenographer before he dismissed her, and, in the privacy of his sanctum, lighted his pipe and proceeded to mend his fences. In the discretion of the chief operator at the telephone exchange, he had great confidence; in that of Mrs. McKaye, none at all. He believed that the risk of having the secret leak out through Nan herself was negligible, and, of course (provided he did not talk in his sleep) the reason for Nan's return was absolutely safe with him. Indeed, the very fact that The Laird had demanded and received explanation from the girl would indicate to Nan that Mrs. McKaye had acted on her own initiative; hence, Nan would, in all probability, refrain from disclosing this fact to The Laird in any future conversations.

Reasoning further, Daney concluded there would be no future conversations. The Laird, following his usual custom of refraining from discussing a subject already settled to his satisfaction, could be depended upon to avoid a discussion of any kind with Nan Brent in future, for such discussions would not be to his interest, and he was singularly adept in guarding that interest.

His cogitations were interrupted by a telephone-call from Mrs. McKaye. The good soul's first gust of resentment having passed, she desired to thank him for his timely warning, and to assure him that, on the subject of that transcontinental telephone conversation she and her daughters could be depended upon to rtmain as silent as the sphinx.

This information relieved Mr. Daney greatly. "After all," he confided to the cuspidor, "it is up to the girl whether we fish or cut bait. But then, what man in his senses can trust a woman to stay put. Females are always making high dives in shoal water, and those tactless McKaye women are going to smear everything up yet. You wait and see."

The longer Mr. Daney considered this situation, the more convinced did he become that mischief was brewing. Did not periods of seraphic calm always precede a tornado? In the impending social explosion, a few hard missles would most certainly come his way, and in a sudden agony of apprehension and shame because he had told the Laird the half truth, he sprang to his feet, resolved to seek old Hector, inform him that Mrs. McKaye had compromised the family, and thus enable him to meet the issue like a gentleman. But this decision was succeeded by the reflection that perhaps this action would merely serve to precipitate a situation that might not be evolved in the ordinary course of affairs. Furthermore, he could not afford to betray Mrs. McKaye on the mere suspicion that, sooner or later she would betray herself, for this would savor of too much anxiety to save his own skin at her expense. "I'm a singularly unhappy old duffer," he groaned and kicked his inoffending waste-basket almost across the office.

Death of Brother of Late Bishop McDonald of Hr. Grace

ANTIGONISH, Sept. 21—Rev. Roderick MacDonald, one of the oldest clergymen from the point of service in the diocese of Antigonish, passed away after a long illness at the home of his sister this evening at the age of 76, terminating a service of 51 years in the priesthood. His passing was not unexpected.

Born at Maryvale, Antigonish county, Sept. 1, 1847, his parents being the late Hugh MacDonald (Martin), and Florence McDougall, Roderick MacDonald entered Pictou Academy in 1862 and studied there until the fall of 1865, when he attended St. Francis Xavier's college, completing his course at this institution in 1869, when he entered the Grand Seminary, Quebec.

He was ordained on the 26th May, 1872, at Point Levis, Que., by the late Cardinal Taschereau, his first appointment being that of assistant priest at Pictou in 1872. From Pictou he was transferred in 1876 to St. George's Nfld. and subsequently, at the request of Bishop McIntyre, to Peter's Bay, Parish in P. E. I., where he labored for two years. He was appointed parish priest of Margaree in 1878, and in 1881 returned to Pictou as parish priest, succeeding his brother, Father Ronald MacDonald, who was appointed Bishop of Harbor Grace, Nfld. His next change was Ferrona and Bridgeville, in Pictou county, folowed by a pastorate at Pomquet. His last parish was Westville, which he was obliged to resign from in 1912, owing to ill health.

His physicial condition made it necessary for him to retire from the active ministry, and he returned to Antigonish where he spent the last years of his life with relatives and friends. In May 1922 homage was rendered the venerable priest by the bishop and priests of the diocese and many of his other friends when the golden jubilee of his ordination was celebrated in the chapel at Maryville the parish of his birth. It was not long after this tribute was paid the venerable clergyman that he began rapidly to decline in health.

Rev. Roderick MacDonald, familiarly known as Father Rod—one of the pioneer priests of the diocese, gave his life to his Saviour. He rendered service under great hardship and disadvantages, when there were no railroads and other conveniences which are enjoyed today. When he went to St. George's, Nfld., he took passage in a small schooner. Father Rod's ministry was a true exemplification of the faithful shepherd. In Antigonish everybody knew and esteemed Father MacDonald and his friends were in every denomination.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday morning next. Following Requiem High Mass at St. Ninian's Cathedral, the remains will be taken to Maryvale, where they will be interred. Deceased is survived by two sisters (Mrs. Annie MacDonald, Antigonish; and Mrs. Margaret Gillis, Miscouche, P.E.I.) and one brother (Angus MacDonald, who resides on the old homestead, at Maryvale.)

He was a brother of the late Archbishop MacDonald, of Gortena.

The deceased priest will be well and affectionately remembered at Hr. Grace and Carbonear, where he visited in the early days of his brother's episcopate.

T. A. Ladies' Auxiliary

The T. A. Ladies' Auxiliary opened their fall program last night with a card party and dance in their rooms, which was largely attended.

The prizes were won by Miss Myron and Mr. J. Costello, who had the largest number of games. The dance proved most enjoyable and did not conclude till 2 a.m.

The Ladies' Auxiliary are making big preparations for the annual Father Matthew celebration which takes place on October 1th and promises to be amongst the big social gatherings for next month.

Committed For Trial on Manslaughter Charge

The preliminary enquiry into the case of Charles Tuff, charged with manslaughter as a result of the death of the little girl Humphries who had killed in a motor-cycle accident some time ago, concluded yesterday afternoon. Deputy Minister of Justice Summers, K.C., who conducted the case for the Crown, moved for committal. Judge McCarthy held that on the evidence sumbitted he would commit accused to the Supreme Court for trial.

Mr. Emerson, representing the accused, made a motion to re-call a witness who had already been examined. The motion was opposed by the Deputy Minister of Justice on behalf of the Crown. Mr. McCarthy refused the motion.

The formal committment was postponed until this p.m., to have the bondsmen present.

TIe-Cup Series

The Cadets retained their championship honors again last evening, when they defeated the Irish before a large gathering of spectators on St. George's Field, with the close margin of one to nil.

Weather conditions were ideal, and the game started on time. The champions defended the eastern goal and once more Walter Callahan sent in the winning goal. Walter has taken his team out of every difficult spot so far this year.

The Irish lads being more lively than their opponents, gave them almost more than they could handle, but the checking of the Cadet backs was too strenuous for the light forward line of the Irish team.

Play was very rough at times and Referee Quick had to take a firm hand.

Both agregations combined nicely, but the game from the spectators' point of view would have been much better if the Cadet halves would exercise a little patience and keep the ball in play.

To-night the Saints and Guadrs will compete.

The final and championship game will come on Friday, provided there is a win in to-night's game.

Mr. Ern Churchill will referee to-night.

General Degoutte Criticizes German Policies in Ruhr

DUSSELDORF, Sept. 20—(A.P)—Germany has spent enough money in bolstering up passive resistance in the Ruhr Valley since the French troops entered last January, to have made her regular reparations payments to the Allies for two years, declared General Degoutte to-day to the correspondent of the Associated Press. Moveover, he said, the reckless expenditure should be calculated entirely apart from the incalculable loss caused by the economic stagnation of this once thriving industrial centre, the direct result of the refusal of Germany to co-operate with the occupational forces.

"More than 1,000,000 workers," said the commander of the French forces, "have now had a nice long eight months' vacation with pay, and naturally they are rather keen to have the occupation continue; but it is not difficult to see that this economic fallacy cannot continue indefinitely."

Judging from the general attitude of the German population toward the occupying troops, General Degoutte said he was fully convinced that if it had not been for the interference from Berlin, the problem of making the occupation pay, as well as of keeping the economic fabric of the Ruhr intact, would have solved itself long before now.

"Some day, he said, "Berlin will see, as many sensible people in the Ruhr already see, that the German government made a great economic mistake in agreeing to pay thousands of workers for doing nothing. Leaving aside the ultimate failure of this method to frustrate the effects of the occupation, as it is bound to fail, the idea of pouring out money to workers for doing nothing is very bad psychology. It will have many disastrous ramifications. Already other workers, such as the miners, have caught the idea of passive resistance to their own employers. These workers, encouraged by the fact that their fellow workers, who have been affected by the occupation, have been able to leave their jobs and still receive full pay, have now adopted the method of going to their work and spending the day discussing the problems of life or playing cards. The natural consequence has been that most of them were locked out. The same thing should have been applied to all the workers who refused to work under the occupation autorities. If it had been, passive resistance would have melted away and there would have been no interruption in the normal economic life of the occupied area."

When asked what his impression was of the general attitude of the German population toward the presence of the French troops, General Degoutte replied:

"It's too good. It's bad for military discipline."

When further asked if the seizures of increasing amounts of marks, which have been prominently published during the past few days in the German press, represented a departure from methods hitherto practiced by the occupation army, he answered:

"Not at all. We have been seizing money for the expenses of the army ever since we entered the Ruhr. The seizures now seem much greater than at first because the mark now represents only a fraction of what it did when we came, thanks to Berlin's policy of paying vast sums for non-production."

"Let me explain about these seizures of money," the General continued. "As you know, the Treaty of Versailles provides that Germany shall pay the expenses of whatever occupation forces may be considered necessary. When we first came, I wrote a requisition on the Reichsbank for the army's expenses for the first week. The Reichsbank refused to honor it, as Germany decided the occupation was illegal. I thereupon said: 'All right, we'll just take what is necessary for our expenses.' But don't forget that for every paper mark we seized, we gave a receipt to the person from whom it was seized, and I am reliably informed that all holders of receipts have been reimbursed by the Reichbank.

"The same thing is true of everything else we have requisitioned for the army, including automobiles. You may be surprised to know that several Germans have come to us requesting that we requisition their automobiles, so that they migh cash their receipts with the Reichsbank at a profit."

"It is a great art to know how to listen."

"Nothing inspires confidence in a business man sooner than punctuality."

HEALTH HINTS

Many times in the care of an ill person, says Nurse, water becomes distasteful to them and fails to quench their thirst. The following may be given in such case, if the doctor is willing: Apple water is made by cutting two large apples in slices and poring over them a quprt of boiling water. Let this stand three or four hours, sweeten to taste, strain and chill.

Barley water is made by washing two tablespoons of common barley, simmering it gently in three pints of water with a little lemon peel and sweetening, if desired. Water gruel is made by rubbing smooth a large spoonful of oatmeal with two of water and pouring it into a pint of water. Stir it quickly and boil fifteen minutes, then strain and add a little salt.

Sago gruel is made by mixing two tablespoons of sago in a little water and simmering it until it is clear, stirring all the time. All a dash of nutmeg, some sugar and a little butter.

Some colds are caused by exposure to inclement weather or wet feet, but many have their origin in germs, says Nurse. One of the most common methods of spreading these so called colds is through the carelessness of the ill ones who are careless in handling their infected handkerchiefs and who sneeze and cough when near others.

Such people do not cover their mouths or noses as they should, as the people's in the mouth and nostrils are filled with infective germs. It is a common thing for colds to go through the entire family. It is usually the result of coming into too close contact with the sick ones or handling articles that have become infected. If the person sick with such a cold can stay in bed in a well ventilated room and the discharges are taken care of properly, there will be little danger for the rest of the family.

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

A new baby should be weighed frequently and an account of the daily changes should be kept. This is very important to keep the little one in good health. The first week of life the baby usually loses several ounces in weight, but in each succeeding week he should gain. It is only by weighing him that you can tell whether or not his food is nourishing him properly.

If a baby is nursed by his mother, goes to sleep regularly after his meal, if his bowels move regularly and his gain is natural, he is probably properly nourished and in normal condition. If he vomits, is fussy and constipated and does not gain in weight, his food is not what he should have.

Such a condition shows that the mother's milk is not sufficient for him. It is only by careful watching and consultation with the family physician that a baby will have the care that will result in making him a normal and healthy child.

The outfit of the average baby should be, first of all, a little, loosely knitted vest especially valuable on account of its warm, lightness and porous qualities. It should be made double breasted and the first vest should have long sleeves.

This, in addition to a warm belt, will make two of the most important garments. The next important thing is a light weight flannel petticoat and this should be long enough to pin over the bay's feet with safety pins in cold weather, or when a child is to be taken out of doors. Then should come a wash dress, short or long sleeves as one wishes.

These are all that are really needed, although there is no reason why a petticoat of fine lawn, made on the same lines as the flannel ones, should not be provided, and a frock of similar fine muslin or lawn which may be substituted for the plainer one when fancy dictates.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26th, 1923

The Telegram and the Merchants

Claiming to prefer fact to verbosity, the Telegram yesterday made an extra effort to belie itself, filled up a whole double-column—and said nothing.

It appears that our contemporary wants to clean up the fish business and uses a wide experience in that business to suggest means towards this end.

Hence, the day before yesterday he surprised all and sundry by insinuating that the large responsibility of the present position regarding our fishery affairs rested on the shoulders of fishermen who did not or would not cure their fish properly. There was the trouble, it was stated, and the merchants were to blame for not imposing such conditions upon the fishermen as would make them tow the line.

Realising the aptitude of the Telegram "to fly off the handle," a tendency peculiar to those who value their own opinions very highly, the Advocate very gently pointed out that enough impositions were already inflicted upon the fishermen as far as the cull of fish was concerned, and that however excellent the quality, fish would rot in the markets under the present exportation system.

Our accusation that half-measures were not sufficient seems to have highly insulted the Telegram, and out it rushes denying it is in collusion with the merchants and substantiating its denial by extracts from publications dated July 16th and 21st.

These extracts at that time did cause a little consternation. It represented a distinct reversion of the Telegram's policy of playing the game for the handful on Water Street who are satisfied to let fishermen suffer for unbusinesslike methods of exportation.

But, it was a case of the new broom sweeping clean. The Telegram is back on its old grounds, and it was only to be expected. In justice, however, to the editor, his opinions as expressed on July 16th and July 21st may have been his own personal opinion regarding the situation through his publication of them yesterday merely indicates how the mighty has fallen.

No intelligent person will deny the desirability of the best possible cure of fish, but how one so skilled in fishery matters will contend that good quality is the main solution of our difficulties, it is hard to understand.

What fishermen want at the present time is a price for fish that wil enable them to live. What the merchants evidently desire is some kind of standardization or cull regulations that will permit them to blame the Government or Coaker (as was done unjustly a few years ago) for sacrificing people's fish and placing their own prices on the various grades.

Why should fishermen be further victimized, unless the merchants on their end are prepared to play their part regarding regulations of shipments, and insure living prices for fish to the fishermen.

The Telegram well knows it stops at half measures. That paper is not so green as to realise that fishermen may later com eto St. John's with the very best possible quality of Labrador fish and be either paid a starvation price for it or will be unable to sell it at all.

And in the face of this, there are those who wink out of sight the almost criminal neglect of exporters, and would place a false responsibility on the already burdened shoulders of innocent fishermen.

POLITICAL BIAS

The utter political bias and personal spleen on the part of the News and the Telegram towards the F. P. U. and Sir William Coaker was clearly indicated in their attitude towards the flour-mill proposition now under the consideration of the Government.

Yesterday morning the News attacked Sir William Coaker as being the promoter of a flour-mill proposition at Port Union, and charged him with the attempt of forcing it through the executive in the absence of Prime Minister Warren.

Without knowing or caring about the particulars of the proposal, it cowardly attacked the proposition and its assumed promoter. This morning the News realises how far it was at sea. The News editor has not the courtesy to retract his falsehoods of yesterday, but is audacious enough to intimate that because he assumed it was an F. P. U. proposal, he denounced it, while now that somebody has advised that it is not an F. P. U. proposal, he considers it not such a bad proposition.

The Telegram confesses itself in the same miserable position and was yesterday afternoon forced to take back water on what it represents was an exposure of a scheme to erect flour mills at Port Union.

During the day, it is evident, somebody shouted across Water Street from the Board of Trade rooms that it was not Coaker after all and the scheme was one to erect flour-mills at Shoal Harbour.

Then the News and Telegram ceased howling. It was no longer a scandal, no longer something to be exposed. It was a sound business proposition.

Consistency, thou art a jewel!

Passing Judgment

Said the Telegram yesterday:

"There was a time when we thought the President of the Fishermen's Union would achieve for the fishermen some lasting benefit."

How very flattering indeed!

Such a statement as this is likely to set the whole country wondering since it was only a month or so ago when an editorial change took place within the precincts of the Evening Telegram.

What has caused the conversion?

Perhaps the answer may be found in the context of the Telegram's editorial, when there is something said of the fleshpots of Egypt.

"Weighed in the balance and found wanting!" Hark to the judgment once more passed upon the fishermen by a modern Daniel, who sticks to facts. Strange indeed (is it not?) when for three elections the northern districts have returned their Union candidates, the Evening Telegram preachings notwithstanding!

What may the Union next expect from such a propounder of public opinion!

"Weighed in the balance and found wanting!"

Hear what's talking.

Hunting Mare's Nests

The favorite pastime of the Daily News and Telegram is the old game of hunting mares' nests. This seems to be a form of sport extremely popular with Tory papers, and in the years that have passed the public often received the benefit of a particularly sensational mare's nest unearthed by some ubiquitous scribe of Tory persuasions and exhibited with all the pride attendant upon discoveries of unusual nature.

To those who may not be acquainted with mare's nest hunting we may say that it is a game for youngsters rather than for grown ups, and the only equipment necessary are a child-like credulity, a vivid imagination and a readiness to believe ill of all who in any way differ from the hunter. Add to these a keen nose for sensationalism and you have all the necessary paraphernalia of the most deadly mare's nest chaser.

It is because they possess the above named faculties in a marked degree that the Daily News and Telegram can run a mare's nest to earth in the quickest possible time.

Indeed, it is notorious that no worth-while mare's nest stands a ghost of a chance anywhere within miles of News or Telegram offices.

Unlike bi ds' nests, mare's nests can be found almost anywhere if you know how to look for them.

Strange as it may seem the pleasure for the News and Telegram in "mare's-nesting" is not merely in the chase. The fun of the thing for them lies mainly in what they can do to a good mare's nest when they get one—and that is frequently. It may have been observed by the more discerning readers that most of the editorial matter of these papers is based on mares' nests and, no doubt, thinking people wonder why this is so and why the intellectual giants who guide the destinies of these papers would not use their gray matter on real issues rather than on mares' nests. We do not know the reason any more than we know why a cow will spend hours trying to devour a discarded mattress thru a picket fence when she may get more clean sweet hay than she can eat by going home for it.

Be that as it may, the News and Telegram will continue to hunt their mare's nests, just as ducks will continue to swim, because it is their nature and, like good sports, they will continue to share and share alike those which they may find and deal with them simili modo.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

"Observer" learns that the bookstores of the city had a tremendous demand for dictionaries yesterday afternoon, following the appearance of the Telegram on the street. The profundity of that paper's utterance was barely equalled by the paucity of information furnished, hence the demand for dictionaries in order to get the correct translation of the French phase quoted by the sapient leader writer.

I suppose I should be crushed into chop-suey by the well-disguised "rebuke" administered me. However, as I am not, I want to console the editor of the Pink'un by telling him that it was not lack of "punch" in what he meant to have been a frightful jolt that is responsible for my continued existence, but my own denseness in bieng unable to see the point of his remark (sic). After puzzling what serves me as a brain for some considerable time, the only conclusion I was able to arrive at was that while the editor of the Telegram is keen on the "clean-up" stuff, he dearly loves a high-kicker. I suppose, to have resort, like the journalistic prodigy of Water Street, to the back of the dictionary, it's a case of "tempori parendum."

And speaking of mules, the same Telegram informs its readers again yesterday that the "high-kicker" is getting nearer and nearer, and having imparted that information the Telegram says "our readers can fudge for themselves." Nasty I call it. Is this another evidence of the editor's partiality for high-kickers?

Apart altogether from kickers high or low, I would give the aspiring newspaper man of the Telegram a bit of good advice. Let him not indulge so freely in hurling those "furrin" phrases from the rear-end of his dictionary at the heads of his readers, most of whom are ordinary people who have no time for playing hide and seek to get at the meaning of what they are reading. In other words, I want to help the young man by inducing him to forget that he is just out of school.

Japanese People Express Sincere Thanks For Kind Sympathy

Relations With Russia.

(Daily News.)

The surface of Russian resources has so far been scratched over with a light rake. It is within the power of Great Britain to assist Russia on the productive task of digging much deeper down and to share in the profits. We believe, too, that by the honest development of our mutual economic interests we shall succeed in removing mutual suspicions of hostile intentions in the East and in banishing altogether a serious threat in that quarter to the peace of the world.

FAINTING.

What is best to be done when a person faints?

Answer: Lay the sufferer down at once in such a position that her head will be lower than her body, thus allowing the blood to flow toward the brain. If she is in a chair gently lower it until the head rests on the floor; keep away the crowd and admit plenty of air; hold a handkerchief or a bit of gauze saturated with aromatic spirits of ammonia near but not up to the nostrils. When she recovers, give her a drink of cold water and let her rest for a while.

Board of Trade Discusses Flour Mill Project

In the absence of the President, Mr. Frank Steer, Vice-President of the Board of Trade, presided at this morning's meeting of the Board of Trade, which was called to consider a communication of Colonial Secretary Halfyard, in which he requests that the Board take the matter up for consideration and furnish any recommendation the Board may decide upon, to the Government.

The proposition is for the establishment of a flour mill in this country, as submitted to the Government on Monday night, emanates from a company incorporated in Newfoundland, whose Managing Director is Mr. Roland H. Palmer, a native of Shoal Harbour, who has had fifteen years of experience in mills and milling. The capital of the Company is limited to $1,030,000, and its New York office is at 40 Wall St. We are informed that up to the present no local firms are financially associated with the enterprise.

The Company is to erect a Mill at a cost of about $650,000, its location at present not being definitely decided upon.

Raw material, that is to say, grain in bulk, and machinery to be admitted duty free. Exclusive rights for milling flour to be granted for a period of twenty years. The Company guarantee to sell flour at the same price that it is sold in Canada and the States for home consumption, and Bran Middlings or Cattle Feed at half the imported cost.

The Company claim that the Mills and labor incident to the enterprize, making barrels, shipping, etc, will employ 400 men.

The output is placed at 1,000 barrels a day, or say 300,000 barrels a year.

With the exception of skilled mill men all employees are to be residents of the Colony.

We are assured by the Managing Director that the Company are not looking for any Minute-of-Council contract, and understand clearly that any agreement that may be entered into must not be regarded as binding unless and until ratified by the Legislature.

This morning's meeting brought forth no definite results, and after some discussion, an adjournment was taken until to-morrow at noon, when an invitation will be extended to Mr. Palmer to be present and state his side of the project.

Mr. William Campbell was the principal objecor to the establishment of flour mills in this country. He contended that the revenue would suffer to the extent of $300,000, duty now collected on flour, and that the number of men employed would not exceed sixty or seventy. He stated that Mr. Palmer had told the editor of a certain newspaper yesterday that the number employed would not be more than ninety. Our own view is that the estimate is based on the actual number employed in the mill, but the handling, preparing sacks, barrels, etc., will give employment to a very much larger number of persons.

Mr. Reg Harvey thought that the traffic in flour shipments would be considerably curtailed. Capt. A. Kean, basing his remarks on the outline of the project as given in The Daily News of even date, gave the project his support, and called upon all members to approach the consideration of the enterprise from a national viewpoint, and not as if a certain form of business may suffer in consequence of the establishment of an industry which would give employment to a large number of men.

Mr. Walter Monroe favored inviting Mr. Palmer to a meeting, when the Board might hear his views and be intelligently able to reach a decision which might be communicated to the Government. The Board of Trade should consider that they did not represent St. John's alone, but the whole country, and if the project was a good one and a purely business undertaking clear of politics, it ought to be encouraged; but if it was intended as had been rumored to establish a mill at Port Union where to get work the employee had to belong to the Fishermen's Union then it ought to be opposed. He suggested that Mr. Palmer be asked to address a meeting of the Board of Trade at an early date. Capt. Kean moved that Mr. Palmer be invited to lay his views before the Trade at a meeting to be held to-morrow noon. Mr. Campbell said that Mr. Palmer had been approached to have the mill located at Port Union. Mr. Wm. White in seconding the motion to invite Mr. Palmer, said every reasonable encouragement ought be given any project which would give our young men employment and pointed out that every steam boat which left the city was taking away our best men. The unanimous decision of the meeting was to ask Mr. Palmer to be present at to-morrow's meeting, and the Secretary was directed to write him accordingly.

HOME HELPS

"How may I wash this so-called wash dress so it will not fade?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"Never wash any colored goods in very hot water or with any cleansing preparation. Wash in tepid water using a pure soap and rinse in cold water. Hang in the share," said Mrs. Neighbor.

"How may I clean my ebony hair brush without wetting the ebony?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"Rub a little vvaseline over the back," said Mrs. Neibor. "The ammonia or soda, used to wash the brush, will not then come in contact with the ebony."

"What do you suppose is the matter with my machine? It does not run at all well," fussed Mrs. Newlywed. "Kerosine oil and absorbant cotton are best to use on it, followed by a good lubericating oil," said Mrs. Neighbor. "Too many women do not understand that a machine is a piece of machinery."

"How may I get rid of mice?" questioned Mrs. Newlywed. "My pantry is overrun with them."

"Cayenne pepper is a good remedy," said Mrs. Neighbor. "Sprinkle it over the floor and put wet rags, sprinkled with it, in the holes from which the mice come."

"I want to clean my white coat but do not know how to go abou. it," complained Mrs. Newlywed. "Can you tell me some method?"

"Heat some cornmeal and pour it over the coat, after spreading the garment on a clean sheet," said Mrs. Neighbor. "Then rub the coat well with the meal."

"This pudding should be delicious," said Mrs. Newlywed as she stooped to take out her latest cooking triumph. "Won't you taste it."

"It is too hot," said Mrs. Neighbor. "Put some salt in a dish and set the pudding dish in it. It will cool quickly."

We writers usually have little more than information. But information is a very useful thing. Because a plentiful supply of information is apt to generate ideas. And ideas, you know, are the basis of conduct.

From which beginning you may safely presume that I have an idea which I intend to print here today.

My idea is that every sizable outport in Newfoundland ought to possess at least one radio set.

Indeed, I will be more emphatic, and say that, with radios in existence, it is altogether wrong that there are so few radio sets in the country. The radio is far and away ahead of the gramophone, because when you have it installed you can run it at less expense, and you can get more music, and better music, and more of everything else than a gramophone can supply, no matter how many records you have.

* * *

A good radio outfit could receive from New York easily, and even from farther points on the continent. A man equipped with such an outfit could listen in on more concerts and programs than he could have time for, because there are dozens of broadcasting stations.

Last summer I was in Prince Edward Island, which is not far from Newfoundland, and in Summerside saw a radio set by which its owner continually got concerts from New York and more Western cities.

In the United States now there are, 10,000,000 individual radio sets in as many homes. These sets range in price from $10 to $100 or $200 or $300 each. In New York City, for instance, a $20 or $30 outfit is perfectly sufficient to receive all the concerts broadcast from stations in the city there, while those desiring to get concerts broadcast from cities across the continent naturally have stronger sets.

* * *

In New York alone there are half a dozen broadcasting stations. I may as well explain what a broadcasting station does. In a word, it secures musicians and other performers to come to their studio and sing, or play, or otherwise perform, in front of a small apparatus which takes the sounds thru the air in all directions. People with radio sets in their houses simply tune up their sets to receive the concerts, and there is no cost in the least for the service. The cost of the concerts is borne by the broad-casting stations, who are, for the most part, also manufacturers of radio sets, and make their money on the sale of the sets and parts. These broadcasting stations secure the services of some of the outstanding musicians and performers of the country, and radio fans at no cost to themselves are enabled to listen in.

* * *

These broadcasting stations send out all sorts of concerts: music by piano, organ, violin, bands, orchestras, choirs, and every kind of music you ever heard. Mostly they secure individual performers to come to their broadcasting studio and perform, altho in many cases they install a broadcasting apparatus in the hall where a concert actually is being given by that orchestra or band, and where many people have paid to attend. For instance, the famous Philharmonic orchestra of America gave a series of great concerts during the summer in the Lewisohn Stadium, thousands of people attending and paying 50c. and $1 each to be admitted. These were marvellous concerts by the best orchestra in America, one that tours the great music centers of the world, and performs in the Metropolitan Opera House of New York. It has over 100 musicians. Having heard it on more than one occasion I know how wonderful is this music. Well, one of the big broadcasting stations simply installed a broadcasting apparatus right on the platform where the concerts were given, and hundreds of thousands and probably millions of people all over America listened in, at no cost whatever to themselves, to the same music to hear which thousands had paid. Twenty thousand people paid admittance to hear the Philharmonic on its final summer performance some weeks ago.

And that was only one. The same thing was done by another station in connection with the concerts given in Central Park by the Goldman Band all summer. Similarly, in all sorts of concerts actually given for the public, to hear which thousands pay admittance, radio fans simpy tune in their sets and get it for nothing.

Whenever there is a big boxing match on, the radio fans tune in to some broadcasting station and a man right at the ringside, with his eyes on the fighters and his mouth to the broadcasting apparatus, describes the fight as it takes pace, telling when one boxer punches his opponent, and where, and how the other fellow hits back, and so on. This arrangement is so perfect that you can hear the bell that tolls the rounds, and when the great crowd present cheers you can hear it as plainly as if you were there yourself!

Whenever a big politician makes a speech radio fans simply tune in and they can hear it. For instance, when ex-President Harding went on his nation-wide tour and spoke in many cities, the radio fans all over the country listened in to his speeches, just as if they were in the audience before him. Thus, the New York radio fans could hear him as plainly when he spoke in Vancouver as if they had been in Vancouver. They could even hear the cheering and applause of the people who actually were before President Harding.

It is the same with all other big speakers. When Senator Hiram Johnson returned from Europe and made his notable speech in opposition to the League of Nations at a big banquet in the Waldorf Astoria hotel in New York, people all over the country listened in and heard him as plainly as did (probably plainer, because the broadcasting apparatus was near his mouth) the auditors at the banquet.

The broadcasting stations engage well-known men to give lectures on various topics. These lectures include all subjects. Also, the broadcasting stations on Sunday broadcast actual church services, many churches having installed broadcasting sets right in the church. You hear the sermons, the music, the people singing, and the entire service, exactly as if you were there!

I could fill this column over and over again, simply telling the kind of things that comprise these concerts.

And bear in mind that there are dozens of broadcasting stations in New York, Boston, Washington, Chicago, Toronto, etc., all competing to give good concerts, so that if you get tired of one concert you have only to turn a little disk on your set and listen into a concert being broadcasted by another company. If you don't like that, you can tune into a third or a fourth. Or if there is a particular item in one concert in which you are not interested, you can tune in to something else until that is over, and then tune back for the remainder of the concert.

And these concerts are always on. For example, in New York there are such big stations as WJZ, WEAF, etc. These begin broadcasting in the forenoon, carry on in the afternoon and continue in the night until after 11 o'clock. You can tune in your radio at almost any hour and be sure of getting a concert.

* * *

Now, tell me, could you have a better thing in a Newfoundland outport for passing away the winter nights and Sundays?

The radio set is easy to install and easy to operate. And the only cost, when you have installed it, is for a new battery occasionally.

If I were living in such a place as Port Union, or Twillingate, or Trinity, or Grand Bank, or Fortune, or Burin, or Hr. Grace, etc., I should do this: try to interest a sufficient number of people in this, and form a club, and take up a collection for the purpose of purchasing a radio set. Then we would install it in a club-room, the school-house, hall, or in the house of one of us—the house that was roomiest, and in which most people could crowd to hear the concerts.

This could be done, and it seems to me that it ought to be done. I know this: if I were a millionaire (!) I'd certainly donate a hundred sets to as many outports, for the radio would not only entertain, amuse and instruct our people, but would have the highly desirable effect of broadening their ideas by bringing them into direct contact with the outside world. The radio, it seems to me, will break down those barriers of stupid insularity and insolation which hedge us Newfoundlanders in.

* * *

Perhaps President Coaker could do something in this respect? Mind, I do not know, not having spoken to him about the subject in one way or another. But of this I am certain: he would be sure to approve my suggestion, and I feel equally sure that he would be willing to help in any practicable way possible. Perhaps he could get the Trading Co. to import a few sets and so enable the clubs or groups of people I suggested to secure the sets?

But of course it would be unfair to expect him to act in the matter without sufficient indication that people were interested.

I therefore suggest two things: all those who like the idea, or are in any way interested, drop me a note, care this office; or, better still, drop a note to the President, saying that you think it a good idea, and if he would do as I have suggested you would undertake to get a few people together in your locality with the object of getting a set.

Better Health For Women

Any woman who will stop and consider the result of a questionaire recently sent out by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., of Cobourg, Ont., will in all fairness admit the value of this old-fashioned root and herb medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Fifty thousand replies were received, and 98 out of every 100 women stated that they had been benefited or restored to health by its use. This means better health for women in America. It will surely pay any woman who suffers from any ailment or weakness peculiar to her sex to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

Presbyterian School Reopens

Yesterday, the formal re-opening of the Presbyterian School took place, at which the Rev. Robert J. Power, M. A., presided. Mr. Alex Robertson, on behalf of the Board, was very happy in his remarks, and gave some good sound advice to the young people.

The complete teaching staff was present. Miss Hughes, after a sad bereavement, and Miss Dunbar, after a trip to Scotland, were each given a hearty welcome back.

The Principal also had a few words to say, and urged the necessity of starting right down to work, and of making the best use of the two winter terms, for getting in the hardest part of the work for the examinations next year.

It is imperative that parents and guardians who have not yet sent their children back, should do so at once.

There are a few vacancies for this term, and the Principal will be glad to interview any parents between the hours of 2 and 4 p.m.

On this day was fought the famous duel between Augustus Healey and Denis Dooley for the love of a prominent city belle. The encounter took place in Fort Townsend Hollow, and the seconds were F. C. Burnham (buyer at Knowling's) and the late Thomas Allan. Fortunately the bullets had been removed and no damage was done. Dooley fainted, but Healey stood his ground. The love-stricken combatants afterwards tried the more natural weapon—"the firsts"—behind John Casey's barn, and Healey won the day. It is interesting to note that the lady who was the cause of the quarrell, a short time after married another man. The following verses are part of a song made on the occasion, 1873:—

"On Friday last at half-past two, two love-bestricken chaps,
Up in Fort Townsend Hollow met for satisfaction raps.
One of them, Gus Healey was, the other Dooley Din,
Came over here from Heart's Content, Miss "Blank's" green heart to win.

"John Sullivan, the bobby fop, turned six policemen out,
And wheeled to the pistolizing sound right round to the left-about.
With pistols lowered beneath their arms, they hied to Casey's farm,
Where Dooley Din got well oiled off behind John Casey's barn."

MANAGER RUSSELL DISCUSSES RAILWAY MATTERS

Immense Traffic Resulting From Humber Operations Is Being Handled Satisfactorily.

CONTRACTORS WELL SATISFIED.

500 Extra Men Are Now Engaged on Road Repairs and Line Is In Excellent Condition.

General Manager, H. J. Russell of the Nfld. Government Railway, returned to the city yesterday afternoon, having completed a tour of inspection over the whole system with the exception of one or two of the branch lines.

Seen by an Advocate representative this morning, Mr. Russell said the road bed is now in splendid condition and was never better able to take care of the increased traffic which has had to be handled the past few months. There are some five hundred men employed in addition to the regular section men, and these are engaged in ballasting, putting in new ties and fish-plates and making general repairs.

A new station and freight sheds are being built at Millertown Junction and a new coaling station has been erected at Kitty's Brook.

The Humber Traffic.

Mr. Russell, in the course of his tour, stopped off at Deer Lake and Corner Brook for a conference with the Armstrong-Whitworth men and heads of the other contracting concerns engaged there and found everything concerning the railway's end of the operations very satisfactory.

With regard to the complaint that the contractors are handicapped by a paucity of railway equipment, as voiced by an Armstrong official in an interview published in the Advocate yesterday, Mr. Russell said such a complaint could only be the result of an insufficient knowledge of the facts. There were cases where the railway had been tied up by the contractors because material which the former were ready to move, had not been available for them.

Trains Day And Night.

At present there is an almost continual stream of trains over the section from Corner Brook to Deer Lake and the railway has had to meet this unprecedented traffic by the opening of new stations and telegraph offices, laying new sidings and Y's and by other increases in equipment.

On this section, for the purpose of handling the Armstrong-Withworth traffic, there are nine engines with a corresponding number of box and flat cars. Trains on the development section are able to make two and three trips a day and while at times the equipment is strained to its utmost capacity, there has been no kick, so far as the general handling of the traffic is concerned. Material in tremenduously large quantities has been coming in and this is being moved with entire satisfaction. In addition to this, there have been large quantities of freight, sent out from this end. In addition to the other supplies which the railway has had to handle for the Humber Project, there os about 15,000 tons of coal which constitutes the contractors' winter supply. The Humber Development area, from the railway view point presents a scene of activity such as has never before been witnessed in Newfoundland.

FATAL CRASH LAID TO FIGHTIN PLANE

Lawyer Insinuates American Woman and Englishman's Struggle Caused Death of 5.

SHE IS MRS. E. R. ARMITAGE.

Diamler Passenger Machine Fell Mysteriously in Small Field.

LONDON, Sept. 22—Was a struggle between a man and an American woman in the cabin of the Daimler passenger airplane recently the cause of the crash in which all fiv occupants of the machine were instantly killed?

This insinuation was made at the Coroner's inquest to-day by a lawyer for the airplane company. The evidence given showed that the woman vistim was Mrs. Ethel Russell Armitage, wife of an American, said to be a neval officer who lives in New Jersey. Witnesses did not know Armitage's American address and said that he had not been here for eighteen months and that the wife would not live in America.

Before the fatal flight John Grimshaw booked passage for himself and wife, and after the disaster it was supposed that the body of the woman found beside Grimshaw was Mrs. Grimshaw. But to-day the real Mrs. Grimshaw appeared at the inquest after identifying her husband's body, and his woman companion was identified as Mrs. Armitage by Mrs. Jane Harriet, her landlady.

While Harry Grimshaw, the dead man's brother, was testifying, the airplane company's lawyer asked him if his brother had told him that on numerous ocasions Mrs. Armitage had violently assaulted him. The coroner objected to this as irrevelant.

The lawyer explained that the company could not understand the accident, there being no evidence why it should have occurred or why an experienced pilot like Capt. Robinson should have landed in a small field unless a landing was urgently necessary.

POLICE COURT

Judge Morris Presides—A Lengthy Docket.

Judge Morris presided in the Police Court this morning. A lengthy docked occupied His Honor's attention until lunch hour.

A vagrant was discharged.

A drunk, who appeared a fit subject for a hospital, was released upon giving a bond to pay the doctor's fee of $2.50. Yesterday the unfortunate man fell on Duckworth Street and split his head open. Dr. Anderson was called and several stitches were required to close the ugly wound.

For assaulting his sister-in-law in her own house, a drunk was fined $5.00 or 10 days.

Still another drunk got his release upon payment of cab hire.

The case against Sir Edgar Bowring's chaffeur for speeding on the Topsail Road on the 12th. inst. was withdrawn. This case arose out of evidence given by A. Tooton's chaufeur a few days ago. Inspector General Hutchings said it had been insinuated that favoritism was shown and that was why the summons was issued.

Higgins, K.C., appeared for the defendant and there being no evidence against his client, the case was withdrawn.

For discrarging a gun to clean it out, a defendant was fined costs.

A West Ender charged with a breach of the Prohibition Act, had his case postponed until Friday. The evidence of a cripple man from Lawn and his daughter was taken. He swore he bought liquor from defendant at 50 cents a drink. Another case in which the same party is the principal witness, was also postponed until Friday.

A middle Cove milkman for a breach of the Pure Food Act, proved if his milk was below the standard, it was purely accidental. Inspector Lawlor said previous tests showed defendant's milk to be of good quality. He was fined costs and cautioned to be careful in future.

A Logy Bay man, charged with the larceny of two motor rugs valued at $50.00. He was represented by Higgins K.C., and honorably discharged, there being no evidence against him.

PERSONAL

Mr. John Hoskins, foreman mason, who on yesterday fell a distance of fifteen feet from a ladder while working on the Methodist College Hall, was still unconscious at the General Hospital at noon to-day.

Mr. Walter Scammell, who has for a number of years been associated with the firm of Earle, Sons & Co., Ltd., of Fogo, has been transferred to the company's office here. Mr. Scammell, in conjunction with Mr. Leonard Earle, will, in future, be looking after the firm's interests in the city.

DISTINGUISHED PREACHER COMING TO ST. ANDREW'S

In response to the unanimous invitation of the Kirk Session, Dr. Geo. Hanson, of Montreal, is coming to our city for "A week's teaching and preaching," beginning Sunday, Oct. 14th.

Before coming to Canada Dr. Hansen was for 12 years the minister of Marleborne Presbyterian Church, London, and during that time became recognized as one of the outstanding religious leaders in the Metropolis.

Dr. Hanson has published many books, among the best known of which are "A Chain of Graces," a devotional work, and "An apology for Christianity," dealing with the evidences of Christ's Resurrection.

In a church noted for its preaching ability, Dr. Hansen is regarded as one of its strongest preachers. There will be nothing denominational about the services, they will be for all, and the general public will be invited to share in them.

A detailed program of the services will appear later.

Bye-Elections Are Set for October

Yesterday's Royal Gazette contained the proclamation ordering that the bye-elections in the districts of Harbor Main, Fogo and St. George's, to fill the seats vacated by Hons M. E. Hawco, Mr. Geo. Grimes and J. F. Downey thru their acceptance of positions as departmental heads, be held. Nomination has been set for Monday, October 15th.

OBITUARY

At an early hour this morning there passed to the Great Beyond an estimable lady, in the person of Mary, wife of Mr. Joseph J. Miller, the well known city ship-smith. The deceased lady had been ailing for over a year, and while her condition was critical for some time past the end came suddenly. All thru her sufferings, the deceased lady never complained, despite the fact that her ailment was a most trying one. To the last she maintained that self poise which characterized her whole life.

Mrs. Miller was a daughter of the late Robert Butt of Western Bay and her passing will be noted with regret by her friends both at home and abroad.

The deceased lady was an ideal mother, her whole life being devoted to the comfort and welfare of her loved ones. During the early stages of her illness, she fought hard against the desease which eventually ended her earthly career.

Left to mourn the loss of a loving wife and affectionate mother are husband, and four daughters, Mrs. J. G. Harsant, Mrs. Ed. Roper, Mrs. Hubert LeMessurier and Miss Blanche at home; three sons, James J, of the Nfld. Coal and Trading Co., Robert, the well known city Insurance Broker, and Eric, all of whom are residing here.

The funeral takes place on Friday afternoon at 2.30 p.m. from her late residence, 15 Dick's Square.

To the sorrwing husband and family the Advocate tenders sincere sympathy.

The British Cradle

Calgary Albertan: The only important European warring country that did not fall victim to diminishing population during the war was England. It had more births than deaths all through the war, though the surplus of births over deaths dropped from 370,000 in 1923 to as low as 50,000 in 1918. The figure in 1922 had crawled up to 293,000. The British will "come back" rapidly in the matter of man-power. Their death rate in the last twenty years has been reduced from 17 for each thousand to 13.

GERMANY REGARDS THE FUTURE WITH MUCH SKEPTICISM

Constitutional Rights are Curtailed But Freedom of Press is Restored

BERLIN, Sept. 27—Germany's foreign troubles are just about to commence, and the time to speak of "congratulations" has not exactly arrived, for the fate of the Ruhr is intimately interlocked with the impending resumption of the reparations problem.

This is a gist of a candid statement by a government leader to a private audience of Berlin editors who were frankly told that the Government contemplated the immediate future withprofound syeptic ism, if not pessimism, and that it is not deluding itself into the belief that daylight and freedom await Germany now that she has relenquished passive resistance. Our troubles are only beginning, he continued, we have yet to learn the Allies attitude towards our abandonment of passive resistance and whether occupying powers are since really desirious of cooperating with us in the complex task of restoring order.

BERLIN, Sept. 27.—Presidental decree has been issued cutailing the number of constitutional rights in Germany and conferring executive power in Minister of Defence. Among the rights restored are freedom of press and right of meeting.

LEVIATHAN OF AIR MAKES SUCCESSFUL TEST FLIGHT

A view of the ZR-1, the first American-made rigid dirigible, leaving her immense hangar at Lakehurst, N. J., just before making her first trial flight, which was a complete success in every respect. The Giant of the air spent an hour on high and as she prepared to descend, the spectators thrilled to the idea that the biggest of all rigid dirigibles now in operation, is American made in every detail. Elated at the behavior of the Big Blimp, Rear Admiral Moffett, head of the Naval Air Forces, prophesied that the ship could make a trip to the North Pole and back without any trouble.

WOMAN IS ELECTED TO IMPORTANT UNION POST

LONDON, Sept. 26—Miss Margaret Bonfield, well-known leader among women workers, was to-day elected chairman of the general council of the trades union congress, for the ensuing year. She is the first woman to hold this post, which is the most important in the trades union movement in Great Britain.

Earl Haig's Visit to Edinburgh Castle

LONDON, Sept. 17—Earle Haig recently paid a surprise visit to Edinburgh Castle and the great Field-Marshall received a greater surprise than he gave by his unannounced visit. He was in mufti and accompanied by his wife and two daughters.

"Go back and pay your admission money," was the salute he received when attempting to pass the sentaries, who of course did not know him under the circumstances.

Earl Haig did as he was told and then he and his wife and daughters proceeded to look around the Castle. He chatted with several of the men on duty, one of whom he recognized as having seen service at Los. He left without calling on the Castle authorities and the fact of his visit was not known until some time afterwards.

It would have been interesting to have heard Earl Haig's opinion of the statue of himself on the esplanade of Edinburgh Castle. It had been completed for nearly a year and had not yet been unveiled. The statue was a gift to the city of Edinburgh from an Indian admirer of the Earl. An endeavor was made to get the Prince of Wales to perform the unveiling ceremony, just after it was finished, but it was put off owing to the donor of the statue being recalled to India. This was follwed by further postponements.

ADVERTISE IN THE WEEKLY ADVOCATE

TOKIO, Sept. 27—Another severe earthquake occurred in Japan Monday, in Hiroshima District. The extent of the damage is not determined, as communications were disrupted. The floods have followed typhoons in Fukagawa and Honja, wards of Tokio. Many have suffered, as thousands of refugees were encamped in rude shacks in the wards. The storm damaged rice and other crops in many sections.

GREECE PAYS ITALY INDEMNITY

PARIS, Sept. 26—The Greeco-Italian affair was brought to a close today, so far as the inter-allied council of ambassadors is concerned, when that body decided that fifty million lire, deposited by Greece in the Bank of Switzerland, as security for the indemnity, should be paid to Italy.

The payment was ordered as a penalty for Greek dilitariness in searching for the assassins of the Italian boundary mission, near Janina, the slaying of which brought about the Italian-Greeco crisis and the subsequent occupation of Corfu Island by Italy.

The ambassadors upheld their decision that in view of Greece's action in fulfilling the terms laid down by the Council including the payment of the indemnity, saluting the allied fleet at Phaleron, and rendering honors to the bodies of the slain commissioners, Italy was in duty bound to evacuate Corfu.

It was announced to-day that this evacuation was already begun and would be completed to-morrow.

VON KAHR IS BAVARIAN COMMISS'NR

MUNICH, Sept. 26—Dr. Von Kahr former Premier was to-night appointed general commissioner for Bavaria, with full power to proclaim any exceptional state, and adopt any other military or police measures to protect Munich against insurrection from reactionary or radical sources.

The appointment follows upon the activities of Hitler Guards or other so-called patriotic leagues, who are mobilizing for a general review on Friday.

This official action is viewed as purely local precautionary measure, and is in no wise aimed at the central government.

The rumor that an exceptional state has been proclaimed is officially denied.

The commissioner will take action against all acts of hostility to the country, and against any resistance to his orders, by every means at his disposal.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXXV.

NAN DID NOT remain at the hospital more than fifteen minutes. She was ill at ease there; it was no comfort to her to gaze upon the pallid, wasted face of the man she loved when she realized that, by her presence here, she was constituting herself a party to a heart-breaking swindle, and must deny herself the joy of gazing upon that same beloved countenance when, later, it should be glowing with health and youth and high hopes. He was too weak to speak more than a few words to her. It appeared to be a tremendous effort for him to open his eyes and look up at her. When, however, he had satisfied his swimming senses, that she was really there in the flesh, he murmured:

"You'll not run—away again? Promise?"

"I promise, dear. The next time I leave Port Agnew, I'll say good-bye."

"You must not leave—again. Promise?"

She knew his life might be the reward of a kindly lie; so she told it, bravely and without hesitation. Was she not there for that purpose?

"Good news!—If I get—well, will you marry me,—Nan?" She choked up then; nevertheless, she nodded.

"More good—news! Wait for me—Sawdust Pile—sweetheart."

She interpreted this as a dismissal, and gratefully made her exit. From the hospital office she telephoned orders to the butcher, the baker, the grocer, and the milkman, forcibly separated little Don from the nurse, and walked down through Port Agnew to the Sawdust Pile.

The old-fashioned garden welcomed her with its fragrance. The air in the little house was hot and fetid, so she threw open the doors and windows. Dust had accumulated everywhere and, with a certain detachment, she noted even in her distress, that she had gone away without closing the square piano. She ran her fingers over the dusty keys and brought forth a few sonorous chords; then she observed that the little, ancient, half-portion grandfather's clock had died of inanition; so she made a mental note to listen for the twelve o'clock whistle on the Tyee mill and set the clock by it. The spigot over the kitchen sink was leaking a little, and it occurred to her, in the same curious detached way, that it needed a new gasket.

She sighed. Once more, in this silent little house so fraught with happy memories, the old burden of existence was bearing upon her—the feeling that she was in jail. For fully a month she had been free—free to walk the streets, to look in shop windows, to seek a living and talk to other human beings without that terrible feeling that, no matter how pleasant they may appear to be, their eyes were secretly appraising her—that they were thinking. And now to be forced to abandon that freedom—

"Oh, well! It can't last forever," she soliloquised, and, blinking away her tears, she proceeded to change into a house dress and put her little home in order. Presently, the local expressman arrived with her baggage and was followed by sundry youths bearing sundry provisions; at twelve-thirty, when she and young Don sat down to the luncheon she had prepared, her flight to New York and return appeared singularly unreal, like the memory of a dream.

She visited the hospital next day, choosing an hour when Port Agnew was it its evening meal and too preoccupied with that important detail to note her coming and going. She returned to her home under cover of darkness.

At the hospital she received a favorable report of the patient's progress. His physicians were distinctly encouraged. Nan looked in on her lover for a minute, and then hurried away on the plea that her baby was locked in the Sawdust Pile, in the absence of some one to care for him; she had the usual maternal presentiment that he was playing with matches.

As she was going out she met The Laird and Mrs. McKaye coming in. Old Hector lifted his hat and said quite heartily:

"How do you do, my dear girl. The news this evening is most encouraging—thanks to you, I'm told—so we are permitted to see Donald for a few minutes. Nellie, my dear, you remember little Nan Brent, do you not?"

Mrs. McKaye's mouth contracted in a small, automatic smile that did not extend to her eyes. She acknowledged Nan's "Good evening, Mrs. McKaye," with a brief nod, and again favored the girl with another property smile, between the coming and going of which her teeth flashed with the swiftness of the opening and closing of a camera shutter.

"We are so grateful to you, Miss Brent," she murmured. And then, woman-like, her alert brown eyes, starting their appraisal at Nan's shoes, roved swiftly and calmly upward, noting every item of her dress, every soft, seductive curve of her healthy young body. Her glance came to a rest on the girl's face, and for the space of several seconds they looked at each other frankly while old Hector was saying:

"Aye, grateful indeed, Nan. We shall never be out of your debt. There are times when a kindness and a sacrifice are all the more welcome because unexpected, and we had no right to expect this from you. God bless you, my dear, and remember—I am always your friend."

"Yes, indeed," his wife murmured, in a voice that, lacking his enthusiasm, conveyed to Nan the information that The Laird spoke for himself. She tugged gently at her husband's arm; again the automatic smile; with a cool; "Good-night, Miss Brent. Thank you again—so much," she propelled The Laird toward the hospital entrance. He obeyed her promptly, glad to escape a situation that was painful to him, for he had realized that which his wife did not credit him with having realized—to wit, that his wife's camouflage was somewhat frayed and poorly manufactured. She had not played the game with him. It would have cost her nothing to have been as kindly and sincere as he had been toward this unfortunate girl; nevertheless, while he had sensed her deficiency, his wife had carried the affair off so well that he could not advance a sound argument to convince her of it. So he merely remarked dryly as the hospital door closed behind them:

"Nellie, I'm going to propound a conundrum for you. Why did your greeting of the Brent girl remind me of that Louis Quintze tapestry for which you paid sixty thousand francs the last time you were abroad?"

"I loathe conundrums, Hector," she replied coldly. "I do not care to guess the answer."

"The answer is: Not quite genuine," he retorted mildly, and said no more about it.

After that visit, Nan went no more to the hospital. She had met Donald's mother for the first time in four years and had been greeted as "Miss Brent," although in an elder day, when a child, Donald had brought her to The Dreamerie to visit his mother and sisters, and later when she had sung in the local Presbyterian choir, Mrs. McKaye and her daughters had been wont to greet her as "Nan." The girl did not relish the prospect of facing again that camera-shutter smile she shrank with the utmost distress from a chance meeting at the hospital with Elizabeth or Jane McKaye. As for The Laird, while she never felt ill at ease in his presence, still she preferred to meet him as infrequently as possible. As a result of this decision, she wrote Andrew Daney, and after explaining to him what she intended to do and why, asked him if he would not send some trustworthy person to her every evening with a report of Donald's progress.

According, Dirty Dan O'Leary, hat in hand, and greatly embarrassed, presented himself at the Sawdust Pile the following day under cover of darkness, and handed her a note from Daney. Donald's condition was continuing to improve. For his services, Mr. O'Leary was duly thanked and given a bouquet from Nan's old-fashioned garden for presentation to the invalid. Tucked away in the heart of it was a tiny envelop that enclosed a message of love and cheer.

Dirty Dan was thrilled to think that he had been selected as the intermediary in this secret romance. Clasping the boquet in his grimy left hand, he bowed low and placed his equally grimy right in the region of his umbilicus.

"Sure 'tis to the divil an' back agin I'd be proud to go to favor ye, Miss Brint."

"I know you would, Dan," she agreed, tactfully setting the wild rascal at his ease when addressing him by his Christian name. "I know what you did for Mr. Donald that night. I think you're very, very wonderful. I haven't had an opportunity heretofore to tell you how grateful I am to you for saving him."

Hardships of Ocean Crossing in 30 Foot Boat Told by Skipper

Alain Gerbault, French Aviator and Tennis Star, Near Death Often on Daring Trip from Gibraltar to New York.

NEW YORK. — Alain Gerbault, French aviator and tennis star, landed at Fort Totten, L. I., Saturday morning, alone in his 30-foot boat. It had taken him exactly 100 days to cross the Atlantic in it from Gibraltar.

The daring navigator had many a narrow escape during his hazardous trip, but he is still undaunted, and has apparently not yet satisfied his lust for adventure.

"I shall spend the rest of my life in a little boat," he said, as he unwound the sail which consisted mostly of patches. "I am going to sell this one, if I can get a reasonable offer, and buy a smaller one, then I will start on a voyage around the world, touching all French possessions. After that I shall spend the remainder of my days in a small boat in the South Seas. I am going back to Paris to sell everything I have and put all my money in the bank. Then I shall have no worries of that kind."

For nearly a month of the voyage the only drink Gerbault had was one cup of water a day. This was due to the fact that his five oak-casks were not properly seasoned and the water in them fermented with the juices in the wood, making an undrinkable mixture. He suffered from fever and a swollen throat for over a week, but never lost consciousness, and was never unable to do his day's work. He was blown out of his course for weeks, so that his log showed a total sailing of 5,600 miles. The straight course from Gibraltar is less than four thousand miles.

His little vessel, the Fire Crest, was swamped at one time by a tremendous wave, which carried away the bowsprit and some of the sails. Water leaked through the deck and rose ankle deep in the hold, rusting the pig-iron ballast. Added to this, his pump broke, and he nearly despaired until he discovered that a match in the valve was causing the trouble. Gerbault had to dive into the water after the broken bowsprit and some of the sails. Water leaked through the deck and rose ankle deep in the hold, rusting the pig-iron ballast. Added to this, his pump broke, and he nearly despaired until he discovered that a match in the valve was causing the trouble. Gerbault had to dive into the water after the broken bowsprit and was nearly washed off by the waves several times. Once in a furious gale he had to work on the ropes, hanging head downwards with his knees gripping the mast.

CARGO OF BROOKS.

He suffered greatly from thirst while rationing his water, he said, but several days' heavy rain proved his salvation. He caught gallons of water in the sails and re-filled his casks, which by that time had become seasoned.

Gerbault's cargo, besides his food, consisted of numerous tennis trophies, including a large bowl presented to him by the King of Spain, and a collection of fine volumes by seventeenth century French and Italian printers. When he was not attending to his sails he passed his time reading Poe's poems and a library of sea stories, the latter being all written in English.

"My favorite of all sea stories is 'Captain Courageous,'" he said.

Among the old volumes owned by the solitary voyager to these shores, perhaps the finest is "The History of the New and Id Testament," with hundreds of engravings by Pierre Mortier. This contains maps giving the precise location of the terrestrial paradise and tracing with an unhesitating hand the winding courses of the four rivers that rolled through the Garden of Eden.

TRIP WAS DRY.

This work is in two huge volumes in a fine state of preservation. There are three other fine early printings and a sheaf of detached engravings for which the solitary navigator is looking for a market in this country.

Apart from the dampening influence of the ocean, Gerbault's trip was a "dry" one, he claims. He did not have a drop of liquor on board when he started out, and although he got some brandy from the Greek steamer Byron, he gave it away later to a fishing boat, the captain of which gave him fresh fish and meat.

Gerbault has three missions in this country. First, he wants to sell his old books and buy some new ones. His second desire is to take some airplane flights, and lastly, he is anxious to play tennis.

TO PUBLISH BOOK.

He writes English as well as he does French, and intends to publish a book on his voyage. Included in this will be a treatise on fishing for bonitas. Excellent results in this direction, he claims, can be obtained by trailing a white shirt in the water and stabbing the fish with harpoons. Flying fish are caught easily in the tropics. All he had to do each morning was taken them out of the sails.

"I don't know what record I have made exactly, but I don't think so long a trip has been made in so small a boat before. I think the record of 100 days for one man alone in a boat is also unique."

During the war, Gerbault was an airman, and is credited with bringing down four German planes. After the armistice, he tried to get various French firms to build him a plane to fly across the Atlantic in. Not being successful, he resorted to his boat, which has been his home for three years. It is a little too large, he said, to be comfortably manageable by one person, and sometimes kept him awake for four days at a stretch in the course of his long trip. He slept for eighteen hours on arrival, after being without sleep for eighty. He is an engineer by profession, but says he will never practice.

New here is an opportunity for a courageous maid, with a wistful longing for romance, for apparently marriage is not cutside the adventurer's sphere.

"If by chance I should marry, my wife must be a sailor. For her I would get a boat, a tiny bit bigger than this one."

What more can he offer than that?

Effect of Disaster On Japanese Missions

TORONTO, Sept. 17—The effect of the Japan disaster on Christian missions in that country, will vary as widely as methods of work vary, according to statements given out by officials of the Methodist Missionary Society. What is called newspaper evangelism, which is really a campaign of advertising and correspondence, need scarcely be affected at all, but the loss of churches, schools, orphanages and social settlements will be seriously felt.

By adopting the use of modern advertising and "follow-up" methods in Christian propaganda the Canadian missionaries appear to have prevented the destruction of their enterprise in Dai Nippon. The first generation of Canadian preachers and physicians in Japan relied upon the Japanese thirst for the English language and western culture to get a hearing for Christianity. Today their colleges have to turn away hundreds of students. Last year the Kwansei Gakuin or Methodist College at Kobe accepted 1,600 students and because of insufficient staff and buildings had to reject 1,200 applicants.

But in recent years many congregations had been established and by Canadian and Japanese gifts churches had been built in the larger cities in the devastated area. More recently still the workers, notably Dr. Daniel Norman, now on furlough in Toronto, turned to newspaper evangelism.

During 1922, his latest year of work along this line, Dr. Norman had then eight hundred letters of enquiry and thanks. When leaving for Canada he was able to turn over to his temporary successor a list of 560 persons who were under his instructions by mail, so effective had his advertisements, letters and pamphlets proved. He has sold over a hundred New Testaments to inquirers and has had 21 beptisms from those on his list.

Naturally Dr. Norman is an enthusiast in favour of this modern method of reaching the people in the rural sections. He points out that, like Canada, Japan is a newspaper reading country, covered by newspaper circulation as by nothing else. This is due to the fact that while illiteracy is practically unknown and nearly all have had a public school education, still the number who rely on anything but the daily or weekly newspaper is very small. The advertisements used are small in size but the campaign is continuous, and, owing to the scarcity of funds, very carefully planned. The follow-up is individual and persistent and the good faith of applicants for further information is tested by charging them with the cost of the literature furnished.

General Meeting of Board of Trade Favors Erection of Flour Mill

THE ADJOURNED meeting of the Board of Trade, held this morning, at which Mr. Palmer, the promotor of the flour mill, himself a Newfoundlander, was present, was attended by about sixty members.

On the meeting being called to order. Mr. Palmer, in acknowledging the invitation to be in attendance, said he was prepared to answer any proper question which might be put to him, but he would like to be understood in stating that he considered it no part of his duty to tell the community how they were going to run the business, which was a private concern.

Mr. Steer intimated that the meeting was anxious to know how the labor situation at present existing in St. John's, would be affected. Mr. Campbell, who appeared as the chief spokesman of the opposition to the project, wanted to know how many men would be permanently employed to make up for the loss of labor which would occur owing to short shipments of flour. Mr. Palmer said he had no objection to stating the requirements of the company in the respect referred to. Ninety men would be employed in the mill proper, one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy in other departments; 300 or 400 men would be employed getting lumber for a period equal to the time the same number of longshoremen might be getting permanent employment. Mr. Campbell said mills in Canada employed considerably less help, to which Mr. Palmer replied, that was merely a difference of opinion.

Captain Kean supplemented his speech of yesterday, and pointed out that the objection raised by the opponents of the project were more fancied than real. Whether the flour comes into the city by steamer or rail the truckmen would be required to haul it to the various premises. He also said there was a surplus of long shore labor available in St. John's, and if another avenue of employment was opened up at which they could get suitable employment, it would be so much the better for those who were left.

There were many outport 'longshoremen who would be glad to get a steady job at Shoal Hr. or anywhere else. Two steamers were being negotiated for in the event of the mills being started which would add to instead of taking from the shipping coming to the country.

Capt. Kean said for 38 years he had been listening to the pessemist whenever a new industry was in contemplation. When the Ropewalk was started it was throwing good money after bad—in fact the pessemists regarded it a calamity. Again, 30 years ago we had the Allan Line running here very irregularly, and every attempt to improve the service was opposed by certain factions; to-day we have four or five different services and all hands are happy.

Mr. Campbell repeated his question, if any subsidy was being asked?

Mr. Palmer gave a negative reply.

Mr. J. R. Bennett advocated delay. He thought we ought to wait until the Prime Minister and the Ex-Prime Minister, and Sir Michael Cashin, got back.

Mr. Steer said there should be no political color given to the meeting, to which Mr. Bennett replied he was there as a citizen speaking in the interests of St. John's.

Mr. Geo. Williams wanted a guarantee by the Company that its full capital would be put into the venture. He feared the country might get a black eye if the enterprise fell through.

Asked if a site had been decided upon, Mr. Palmer said no. The site to be selected must contain a suitable foundation capable of carrying 20 tons to the square foot; Port Union was not being considered and he had never seen Sir Wm. Coaker.

Mr. Palmer gave the details of the costs of the various buildings in connection with the establishment of the mills, which totalled $1,000,000. He was a Newfoundlander himself, and after 14 years' experience was here with a proposition which meant spending one million dollars in the country. As before stated, no subsidy was asked, and not a cent would be spent until the agreement had been ratified by the Legislature.

Hon. W. J. Ellis supported the idea and strongly urged St. John's as the site to be selected.

Capt. Kean's motion that the Board of Trade favored the project, and that St. John's be considered favorably as a suitable place to erect the mills upon being put to the meeting was carried, and the result of the meeting's decision will be communicated to the Government.

Therefore we may predict that the establishment of flour mills in Nfld. in the near future is quite probable. The sooner the better.

HERE, THERE, AND EVERYWHERE

Pugnacious Swordfish

A gigantic swordfish, weighing nearly half a ton, recently caused a panic in Montauk Bay, N.Y., when, maddened by a lance thrust, it turned on its attackers and demoblished a fishing boat by cutting most of the bottom away, throwing the crew in to the water. Ignoring the struggling men, the monster charged other boats in the vicinity and sent them scampering to all parts of the bay. Finally a fisherman put out in a power trawler and succeeded in killing the fish after ten minutes of shooting.

Schappy Swordfish

Henry Kelly, one of the crew of the Gloucester swordfishing schooner Liberty, Capt. Claude Wagner, recently had a thrilling experience with a swordfish off the Nantucket Shoal lightship, which he does not care to repeat again in a hurry.

Kelly had jumped into the dory after a large fish had been struck with the lily iron, and from that moment until the fish was captured it was a case of "Hang on Kelly or Sink."

The maddened swordmish went off with the line, turned suddenly and rushed back towards the dory in which Kelly was following, and came up under it, driving his sword clear through. In the struggle the fish tossed the dory about like a piece of driftwood and all Kelly could do was to hang on to both sides while the fish battled to clear himself. The crew of the Liberty came to Kelly's rescue in another dory and managed to subdue the big fish. The dory was then hoisted to the Liberty's deck with the swordfish still hanging and his sword still pierced through the side.

Whale Rams Vessel

A monster sperm whale, after being harpoone d,charged the whaling vessel Brown, of the Pacific Consolidated Whaling Company, and damaged both propeller and shaft forty miles out from Kyupuot whaling station, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, recently.

The Brown, commanded by Captain Martinson, had been cruising all day and had taken two whales. Another whale was sighted and a hide and seek game between the vessel and its quarry developed. After some manoeuvring the harpoon was launched and found its target. The whale dived, came to the surface suddenly, and charged on the vessel. The boat was badly shaken by the impact. The propeller blades were snapped and the huge shaft bent nearly double. Despite the bad ramming, the whale was captured. The Brown is now in drydock undergoing repairs.

New 'Healthy Food' From Herring

So many herring have been caught off Icelandic coasts that new uses for the fish have been devised to care for the surplus after a sufficient quality is salted. Several years ago, through Norwegian, Danish and Icelandic interests, factories were erected in Iceland for the preparation of herring flour, Consul General Letcher, Copenhagen, informs the Department of Commerce. This product is highly prized in Norway as a strength food, inasmuch as it contains 70 per cent of fat and protein. Much of this flour is also exported to Japan where it is used as a fertilizer in connection with flower growing. As herring can be caught in unlimited quantities off Iceland in summer time, it is planned in a greater measure than before, in connection with the salting for export, to use herring for strength food and for oil. Herring oil is extracted by pressing out the fats in the herring. By "hardening" it can be made both tasteless and odorless and is then well adapted for margarine production, being especially rich in body building properties.

"Is it proper for a gentleman to extend his hand to a lady when he meets a friend," asked Edgar.

"A man, when he is not acting as a host, should wait for the woman to offer her hand," replied his sister.

Political Spleen

MONROE INSULTS UNION MEN, IN BOARD OF TRADE SPEECH.

Mr. Walter Monroe does not forget his defeat last May in Bonavista District.

The little man is permeated with the spirit of vengeance and shows it in the most small-minded fashion. Quite recently through the columns of the News and Telegram he dared to call F.P.U. men "bolshevists" and yesterday, he is found among various wiseacres of the Board of Trade, further insulting the Union and Unionmen while discussing an altogether separate subject.

It required Mr. Monroe to remind the members of the Board of Trade that they not only represented themselves, but that they represented the whole country, which indicates very well the high opinion Mr. Monroe has of himself.

One would think that the Board of Trade, including Mr. Monroe, had swept the whole north during last May, and had earned at the polls the right to speak in such authoritative terms; but even Monroe could not clothe himself with even the briefest authority, though the "Earl of Devon" was conspicuous during his campaign.

Who is Monroe that he should disparage Port Union and Unionism in the rooms of the Board of Trade? Unionmen treated him in manly fashion last May. Why should he attack fishermen because they happen to be F. P. U. men and deny them consideration on that account?

Whether the flour mill's location was Shoal Hr. or Port Union it was proper to discuss it on business lines, and it was contemptible on the part of Monroe to introduce in the argument what was merely a partisan spirit of vindictiveness.

His remarks were certainly not calculated to impress the public with any regard for Mr. Monroe's opinion on a public matter. His anti-Union utterances merely proved how miserably mean and contemptible the spirit of political spleen will cause a Water Street merchant to appear.

THE CLOVEN HOOF

The controversy that has taken place with regard to the flour mill project has resulted in the exposure of what must be regarded by fair-minded men as the lowest and most unpardonable piece of political spleen ever manifested by persons who profess to have a claim to decency.

It is a recognized fact that any man in any country, whether it be in the present age of much-vaunted democracy or back in the dark days of depression and slavery, who has had the temerity to come out in the open and take upon himself the herculean task of fighting the battles of the poor and defenceless against the mighty forces of autocracy, has ever been regarded as fair game for such hirelings as have shown their hands in the discussion on this flour-mill project.

Ever since the day on which W. F. Coaker laid the corner-stone of that great organization, the Fishermen's Protective Union and thereby began the breaking of the chains which bound the fishermen of this country in unbearable serfdom to relentless task-masters, he has been the target for all the slings and arrows that a hate-ridden horde could hurl at him. The wound that he inflicted in the self-complacency of a handful of merchants and politicians more than a decade ago has never healed, but has been festering with the passing years till to-day those enemies which he made when he took up the fishermen's fight no longer seek to hide the fiendishness that characterizes their mode of attack but, on the contrary, boast of their readiness to strike a blow below the belt whenever the opportunity offers.

When the Daily News and Telegram heard that a project was on foot for the establishment of a flour mill, they did not have the decency to ascertain whose the project was, nor what might be its nature, notwithstanding that the information was easily available, before launching out into torrents of abuse of Coaker. and the Fishermen's Union They assumed, on what grounds we know not, that the mooted project was Coaker's and immediately worked themselves into a fit of righteous indignation over an imaginary guarantee which he was to exact from the Government. While the Telegram merely made a laughing-stock of itself, the Daily News was so disgusting as to be nauseating. The hypocritical cant that literally oozed from it made the Pharisees in the Temple look like self-accusing pick-pockets. The writer of the News drivel professed to be all worked up over what was going to happen to his bleeding country, but we doubt not that the purveyor of such unblushing and unadulterated hypocrisy would sell his country, if he has one, for a chance to stab an opponent in the dark and not lose a night's sleep regretting the bargain.

The one unforgivable sin of W. F. Coaker, in the eyes of those mongrels who are incessantly yapping at his heels, is that he has been instrumental in setting on foot too many projects to please those who would like to keep the people in everlasting subjection. He has set the wheels of progress moving, and where he has led the way, others are now following. To his undisputed energy and self-sacrificing interest in the country and its common people Newfoundland owes the advent of an era of the greatest industrial development in her history.

The fact that gold does not immediately begin to grow on the trees and that there are still lingering traces of that depression from which we have suffered for some years past is seized upon by politicians and their henchmen as proof positive that we are drifting to absolute ruination, but the people are not as green as the Daily News and Telegram would like to have them. They realize that Rome was not built in a day, and they have real faith enough in the land that gave them birth to look beyond the ephemeral difficulties of the present to the permanent prosperity that lies in the immediate future.

It is a pity that newspapers whose motives could at one time be regarded without suspicion should now be so lacking in self-respect as to openly gloat over tactics that the worst type of yellow journalism would hesitate to employ. Yet that is precisely what the Daily News does in the case of its attempt to saddle Sir W. F. Coaker with something that had its existence only in the diseased mind of the writer of the hate-begotten screed to which we refer. That some people allow themselves to be carried away by the inanities of the News and Telegram but serves to show that there are those who foolishly mistake the braying of the ass for the outpourings of the oracle.

ASSAILING THE CHAMPION OF THE FISHERMEN'S RIGHTS

To defend the poor and to help them, has in this country become in the eyes of many people a crime.

To champion the rights of the fishermen challenges the sneers and ridicule of a group of individuals who have lived off those men and who want to manipulate public affairs in order to retain their grip upon them.

When confronted with these facts, such people will declare them a monstrous charge and a reflection against their public spirit and honesty of purpose. And it is all that.

They talk about the need of all classes understand each other and working together, yet, neither in their actions nor in their public discussions do they evidence anything but scorn or contempt for the men who keep the country going.

There is the Board of Trade, who are supposed to represent the business community of the country, and who are a body of men who could be of tremendous benefit to the country if they would decide to get together and do something. Every member will admit that there is great work to be done, and a work which under present circumstances, they only can initiate. They are content to sit around the rooms of their institution day after day, discuss various small matters, abuse Coaker and the Union and do nothing.

While they are so busily engaged, the country's chief industry is being ruined by their inaction, and fishermen are paid starvation prices for fish and are charged "to the top-notch" for supplies.

To the credit of some individual members, it may be said they did their duty when an effort was made to remedy matters, but all must engage in and suffer from a business policy which is permitted to continue by the exporters as a whole.

Responsibility is theirs. But far from shouldering it, they are acting in a most selfish and unmanly fashion by insulting, time and time again, the man and the organization, who have for 15 years fought for the rights of the fishermen and have accomplished much for them in the face of great opposition.

There were members in the Board of Trade yesterday whose sneers at Unionism and Coaker served only to bring themselves into contempt.

While fishermen thereby see the utter callousness of the merchants regarding their conditions, how can the latter be expected to earn the fishermen's respect?

If Sir William Coaker and the F. P. U. are to be forever abused because of their work for the fishermen, it is certain they will ever retain the fishermen's respect and support.

Cleopatra Washed Her Face This Way

She used Palm and Olive oils, the same rare oils which are blended in Palmolive. She knew that to have a fresh fine skin, thorough cleansing was necessary. The crude combination of Palm and Olive oils which was the best that even royalty could then obtain is now brought to perfection in Palmolive.

The girl of today, if she would be beautiful, follows Cleopatra's practice. Every day she cleanses the skin thoroughly with mild Palmolive Soap. Never does she permit cold cream, rouge and powder to accumulate and clog the pores of the skin. She knows that this starts irritation and blackheads, pimples and other blemishes result.

Palmolive with its mild creamy lather is lotion-like in its action. It freshens, revives and stimulates and leaves the skin delightfully fresh and rosy.

Thus a great luxury may be enjoyed at the price of ordinary soap. You can pay more, but you can't get a finer, milder cleanser.

You can buy Palmolive Soap at all first-class dealers.

Palm and olive oils —nothing else— give nature's green color to Palmolive Soap.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

By OBSERVER.

The inter-allied conference of ambassadors have set a very bad precedent for the Mussolinis of the world by their decision to make Greece pay 50,000,000 Lire to Italy as blood-money for the Albanian Commission. Mussolini would sacrifice more than one commission at such a price.

A woman has been elected "chairman" of the trades and labor congress in England, this being the first time that a member of the gentle sex has occupied such a position. What are our suffragettes doing? They seem to be unable to get any further in public activity than reading papers (to which nobody listens) at the Old Colony Club and perfecting themselves in the art of tea pour-at bun-fights. This kind of dilatoriness will never do!

Judging from the extent and frequency of earthquake horrors in the East, the nervously inclined cannot be blamed for thinking that this is the "beginning of the end" of the world.

"Give a fellow an inch and he will take a foot" is an old proverb; which is another way of saying do a fellow a favour and he will daily jade you. Hospitality is a virtue, but over-hospitality is an indiscretion.

LONDON, Sept. .-Those who rent and sell houses may be interested in the case of a tenant who won his action in court in connection with a house which he rented. He found that the husband of his landlady had died of tuberculosis and he alleged that the house was infected. The Judge agreed with him:

"The plaintiff acted wisely on the doctor's advice to leave the house," and his advance rent which had been paid, was ordered returned.

Be as indifferent as possible if you want to attract attention.

The Ku-Klux-Klan

The Ku-Klux-Klan, a secret society was originally formed at the close of the revolutionary war in the United States, its alleged primary object being to revenge outrages committed by negroes on white persons. The chief mode of punishment was for members of the Klan, disguised in fantastic costumes, to pounce secretly upon the culprit, hustle him away to the woods, strip him of all his clothing, beat him severely, then tar and feather him, put him in a vehicle and take him back to his home town, leaving him in some public square. The Klan spread its operations to what is considered "bad" white people, and became so powerful and daring that the Government stepped in and suppressed it. For some reason or other it was revived two years ago, since which time it has committed many outrages on both white and blacks. The Klan is so secret and mysterious in its actions that it has created terror in the Southern States. It has also spread to some of the Northern States, and up to the present, seems to have defied all laws to suppress it.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH SERVICE

RING 436

THE POSTAL is the only extensive public telegraph service for Newfoundland, and has connection to all inland places. A ten word message costs only twenty-five cents, the address and signature, as well as Postal telephone transmission to destination is free of cost.

The Postal has also immediate and constant connection with the Wireless Stations at Cape Race, Fogo and Battle Harbor, and in Summer with Labrador Wireless Stations. Also with Wireless to and from ships at sea.

Cable business handed to the Postal ensures quick service via New York or Canso to Brazil, Bahia, Pernambuco, Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda. Our connections are as follows:

"American Postal Telegraph," "Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraphs," "All American Cables for Central and South America," "Halifax and Bermuda and Direct West India Cables."

A cheap night, as well as day service, is also given to all points in Canada and the United States of America. The Postal has also direct connection with Great Britain, thence to all European points. Rates as low as 6c. per word, Stamps to value of ten cents must be affixed by senders to all cable (foreign) messages from Newfoundland. The Newfoundland revenue benefits largely when you patronize the Postal Telegraphs. Its whole staff (clerical and operators) from Superintendent to Messengers are sworn to secrecy.

From The Masthead

By The Lookout

"Observer," in the column conducted in this newspaper (and let me say that I appreciate his writings) touched some time ago upon one very important matter. He pointed out one phase of it, but, in my opinion, missed the vital phase of the entire business.

* * * * *

He was talking about the Central District Court's newly-announced policy of severely punishing convicted offenders against the anti-speeding regulations. The first man after the Court had announced this policy of severe punishmeit happened to be a mechanic, and him the judge sentenced, if I recall correctly, to a jail term of half a year. "Observer," commending the severity of the sentence, remarked that it would probably appear to many to be least unfortunate that the first man to be arrested and sentenced under the new policy of severity should be a "mere" mechanic, and not at all in the class of men who had been persistently speeding all summer, and all last summer and summer before.

"Observer" said that it might lead many people to doubt the sincerity of the policy and other authorities in the announced policy of stern justice for speeders.

* * * * *

But my esteemed fellow-columnist apparently approved the idea of making an "example" of this man, or of any man who happened to be arrested for the same charge. And, presumably, he should have approved the idea of making an "example" of any man arrested and convicted of any particular crime.

I protest against the idea of making an "example" of any man, no matter what crime he has committed. I say that a man ought to be judged and considered only on the merits of the particular breach of any law that he committed. He should be punished, if at all, only for his own offences, and the offences of others ought not to be counted against him.

* * * * *

Let us suppose that in a certain town for several months there had been an epidemic of a certain crime. Many offences of the same character had been committed by different individuals, but they could not be apprehended. So the police and courts announced that the first man to be arrested and convicted should be severely punished, so as to prove an example to the others.

That, I say, would be an outrage. It would be punishing him for the accumulated crimes of others, whereas, of course, he was responsible for his own individual crime.

* * * * *

In a certain town (I shall not tell you which one)a few years ago several men of a foreign nationality were killed, and a young man of the same nationality, a friend of the killed men, was arrested and charged with murder.

Now, it happened that there were in that town several hundred men of the same nationality as the dead men and the accused murderer. They were ordinarily of a most peaceable disposition, harmless, sober, industrious. But when this triple killing occurred, many citizens of this town I speak of became somewhat alarmed, and there was considerablle feeling against the men of that nationality.

* * * * *

So the accused came to trial, and all the evidence was brought out. The lawyer who acted against the accused—the lawyer, in other words, who was doing the most that his ability and knowledge of the law allowed to get the accused convicted and so killed—appealed to the prejudice of the jury, and actually said (and this in a British court of Justice!) that they, the jury, ought to find the accused guilty, so that the remaining men of that foreign nationality would be taught a lesson! If you don't find this man guilty, he told the jury, look what will happen: the several hundred men of his nationality who live in our city, will be encouraged to go around murdering people, and the city won't be safe and no man's life will be safe.

So they found him guilty, and he was duly killed.

In other words, this poor devil was punished for something for which he was not responsible, (namely, the possibility that if he were not killed, other men whose actions he did not control would do this or that.) From the evidence that had been brought out in the trial there was a fair presumption that the accused man had committed the murder with which he was formally charged, but there was likewise a fair presumption that he had committed the murder under circumstances which absolved him of responsibility or blameworthiness He was a young man. He had been cruelly ill-treated by the men whom he had killed. They had brought him from his home to work for them, and had kept him practically in peonage. They fed him poorly. He got sick and they would not get a doctor. He had no friends. He was a stranger in a strange city and a strange land, and even a strange world. There is great probability that his mind snapped as a result as lack of nutrition, ill-treatment and worry brought on by those conditions. Furthermore, he claimed himself in the trial that he had been threatened with his life by the men he had killed, and that he had killed in self-defence.

Had that young man been a native of this city I am telling you about, and had he not been a foreigner, there is excellent probability that he should have been found "not guilty," and a very excellent probability that he should not have been killed as he was.

But it was thought desirable to "teach the other foreigners a lesson," to make an "example" of this poor young devil. And so twelve good men and true in their wisdom found him guilty, after being addressed by learned counsel, and he was duly killed.

And thus did the authorities of that city follow the teaching of the lowly and compassionate Jesus, who said; "Ye have heard it said, An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

A thing I have often puzzled over is this: who was it that said, "But I say unto you, Forgive your enemies."

Well, God's in His heaven and all's well with the world. Everything is as it should be, and this is the best of all possible worlds. The status quo is perfect, and all who suggest changing it ought to be clapped in jail.

THE WORLD'S PRESS

Pessimism.

(Sunday Review.)

There are at least three ways of setting about reforming the world—all of them ineffective.

(Boston Transcript.)

The discovery of America is said to have cost $7,250, which is one case where there seems to have been a fair enough return on the capital invested.

Let Us Think Peace

(Daily Mail.)

Britain stands for peace, not for war; for law, not for force. She must concentrate her whole mind on the conservation of her virile energies, while the other nations of Europe dissipate their wasting assets. Let us think peace while races think war. Let us think right while they think might.

Popular Education.

(Daily Chronicle.)

It is quite evident that during recent years a definite thirst for knowledge has been awakened among a very large section of the masses. In these days, when so much is heard of universal degeneration, it is as well to record with pleasure and approval at least one hopeful manifestation of intellectual development.

The Touch of Nature.

(Washington Post.)

The call for aid to the Japanese is insistent. Mother earth, ours as well as theirs, has brought catastrophe to Japan. Currents of air that we as well as they breathe have wrought devastation. Waves that in their passage lave America's shores as well as those of Japan have swept the island borders with destruction. The same Nature that holds sway over us has worked havoc with the Japanese.

The Tangle of World Debts.

(The Times.)

Some traders and manufacturers are frankly in favor of wiping out debt will suffer from the competition that payment of debts must take the form of goods and services, they fear the consequences to their own business of the competition of these goods and services. If, however, the debts are cancelled, the countries which carry the heaviest burden of away, throwing the crew into the of the lightly-burdened countries, and in the long run traders will suffer.

When beggers die there are no comets seen;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.
Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it come.—Jul C.

Allendale Farm Finds Virtues in 'Bad' Boys

LAKE VILLA, Ill., Sept. 25 (AP)—Thirty years' experience as director of the Allendale Farm has convinced Edward L. Bradley of the virtue of "badness" in boys.

Upon the 260 acres of land and water of the farm, "badness" is accounted a natural part of the development of Captain Bradley's 100 boys. Years ago Mr. Bradley devoted himself to a new ideal in boy culture, and his faith, he says, in the inherent goodness of American youth has yielded increasingly great returns.

Foundation of the farm, according to Mr. Bradley, might be taken as a protest against the institutionalism which ofttimes attempts to reform boys into "un-natural little angels." The other extreme was at first the policy at the farm and it has changed but slightly. The boys here are of the normal kind, Mr. Bradley says, made from "snaps, snails and puppy dog tails." They are encouraged to be themselves.

There are few warnings or "don'ts" at Allendale. But there is an unwritten law which no one violates. The boys may lie, steal, throw stones "normally," and pay for it only as they might in the best of homes, but whoever dares smoke a cigarette treads dangerous ground, and perhaps numbers his days at Allendale.

"Nothing so limits the future of a boy as the cigarette," Captain Bradley believes. "That is the only thing we will not tolerate."

"Some boys require special attention," the director admitted. "Sometimes we fail to handle them. Then we hand them over to the boys themselves and they always bring them around. In all our years we have had to expel only two boys. We say to the boys: 'Here he is, if you can put up with him, if you want to give him a chance, if you will take the responsibility for his conduct, we'll keep him.'

"They take him and soon the objectionable qualities disappear. They take pride in being their brother's keeper."

A list of the nationalities of the boys on the farm includes nearly all the names in the league of nations. Among the hundreds who have gone out from the school, are many, the director says, who are drawing average salaries of $6,000 and $7,000 a year. "And they are fine family men," he adds.

MEXICAN REVOLT DAMAGE CLAIMS PASS $250,000,000

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 7 (AP)—Claims for damages to foreign property resulting from the Mexican revolution, already filed with the National Claims Commission total more than $250,000,000, according to the commission's last report.

Should a revolutionary claims convention be adopted after resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and Mexico, as proposed in the understanding reached at the pre-recognition conference, this amount will be enormously increased as numerous American and other foreign claims have not yet been filed with the national commission, but are held up for settlement through diplomatic channels.

PROPER MANNERS

"Should a man leave a motor car first and help the ladies to alight or should he stay at his wheel?" asked Joe.

"The lady should get out first without the gentleman leaving his wheel," said his brother. "This is to prevent an accident."

"To whom should wedding invitations be issued?" asked Grace.

"They are usually sent out by the parents of the bride elect two, three or even four weeks before the ceremony," said her newly married friend.

"Must I use engraved invitations in asking guests to attend a private reading?" asked Wilfred.

"Notes or cards, unengraved, may be used with propriety in inviting friends to such an affair, said his father.

"When ladies are present should a gentleman remove his hat in an elevator?" asked Joseph.

"It is a matter of courtesy. However, a man is not doing wrong socially in keeping his hat on if no ladies he knows are present," said his uncle.

"Is it proper to use a toothpick on the street as I have seen many persons doing?" asked Julia.

"Picking one's teeth in any public place is never to be excused. It shows a lack of training or gross carelessness on the part of the offender," said her aunt.

"Is 'Yours respectively' proper to use in concluding a note to friends?" asked Clarence.

"The correct ending to notes to friends is 'Yours sincerely' or 'Yours most cordially,'" said his mother.

TODAY I AM REAL WELL

So Writes Woman After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Jamestown, N. Y.—"I was nervous, easily excited and discouraged and had no ambition. Part of the time I was not able to sit up as I suffered with pains in my back and with weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, both the liquid and tablet forms, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash for inflammation. Today I am real well and run a rooming house and do the work. I recommend your medicine to every woman who complains, and you may use my letter to help any one else. I am passing through the Change of Life now and I keep the Vegetable Compound in the house, ready to take when I feel the need of it."—Mrs. ALICE D. DAVIS, 203 W. Second St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine for such troubles. In many cases it removed the cause of the trouble.

Russian Princess Seeks A Job To Support Her Family

With Husband She Escaped From Bolsheviks and Came to U. S. Penniless.

(The New York World.)

A LADY speaking English, French and German, of best family, desires situation to take care of children.

Between these brief lines appearing in the Female Help Wanted columns of The World could be inserted a story of hardship and adventure that would make the incredulous gasp and the credulous weep. All Princess Sofie Toumanoff, Russian emigre, wants is a job.

With her husband, Prince Irakley Toumanoff, a former colonel in the Imperial Guard of Petrograd her old mother and her two sons, George and Vladimir, aged respectively five years and five months, Princess Toumanoff faces a most uncertain to-morrow. One must have work to get money to buy milk and food. One must have work to get money to pay rent, even for a single furnished rom.

"I can do more than the little it says in the advertisement," Princess Toumanoff, tall, blue-eyed and still young, declared in New York.

"I speak, read and write French German, English and Russian. I can sew and embroider. I have a well-trained mezzosoprano voice and can accompany myself on the piano. And I can milk cows, too. The Bolsheviks taught me. But I'd rather not do that."

The Prince is a crack horseman and plays the violin and balalaika.

"We are willing to go to the country to work if we can all be together and once more have a home," Princess Toumanoff said.

Both have a five-year record of flight, imprisonment and starvation in Armenian and Turkish cities in sArmenian and Turkish cities Princess Toumanoff left Moscow as a Red Cross nurse in a train of insane soldiers, with whom she rode eleven days.

The Toumanoffs arrived in New York tw weeks ago from Constantinople.

There is no certainty, they think, that the accused criminal will tell only the truth.

The Panama Canala has paid a profit in all but three of the nine years since it was completed, but the profit last year was much greater than in any previous year. Colonel Morrow, governor of the canal, says: "Receipts from canal tolls are paying all expenses of operation, upkeep, depreciation, interest at three per cent on the canal bonds and so forth, leaving a net balance of from $60,000 to $70,000 a month. We have written off about $100,000,000 of the canal bond issue of about $375,000,000.

Things Nova Scotia Fishermen Must Contend With

Perils of Marketing Not The only Worry — Enemies of the Deep Offer Trying Obstacles as Well.

(Canadian Fisherman.)

Take a look at my three neighbours who have just come in with some haddock These are "shore fish" ("bank fish" come from "The Banks" one to two hundred miles out. The bankers use two—masters a hundred feet over all and catch most of their fish on set trawls, they are divided in salt bankers and fresh bankers.) These men are shore fishermen who use gasoline motor boats from twenty-five to fifty feet long and have from two to six in a crew and catch all their fish on handlines, within a league of the shore, except when they go lobstering or mackereling. These three men had started out to Hawk Inlet about day-light, with bait costing them 60 cents a bucket and gasoline at 50 cents a gallon. They ran out about six miles, just off the "Automatic" buoy outside" Sou' west Ledge." They fished on the slack tide and hauled in the big soft pollock about as fast as they could draw them. The crates were full when they got into harbor at about mid-afternoon with six hundred pounds of pollock.

Meanwhile Uncle Sam had been busy with the big stick and had written a law which militated against our Nova Scotia fishermen, charging a cent to a cent-and-ahalf a pound on all fresh fish coming into the U.S. That was more than the price per pound paid in Canada for freshly caught fish by the U.S. buyers. They paid this crew ¾ of a cent a pound for pollock—the really magnificient price of seventy-five cents a hundred pounds for these big fresh fish, and the same day they paid but a cent-and-a-quarter a pound for freshly caught shore cod. You may say "Why that's what they paid here last year; it is no less than it was before the new law," well, you cannot take something from nothing, so even this most unfair law did not further decrease the price of the shore caught fish when bought in Canada.

But try to take your load of fresh or salt banker's cod, taken in a Canadian bottom by Canadian fishermen to Boston or Gloucester and you will see what happens—duty 1¼c. per pound. For this reason nearly all bank fish caught in Canadian bottoms goes to Lunenburg, N.S., and coastal towns and is there "made up" (salted dried, flaked, or filleted,- and sold by us direct to the West Indies, South America and Spain. To get about this unfair law occurs "the exodus" Nova Scotians pouring out of Canada into the New England States. Go and stand on the wharf of Yarmouth and see the carloads of household furniture being hastened aboard. See the well-built squat man in the blue suit directing. He is the Nova Scotia fisherman, and he is going in his hundreds and his thousands and taking all his kiddies with him, until I can go down any road in Nova Scotia that leads to a shore village and buy a good hundred-acre farm, barn, fences, orchard, often the very furniture in the house, a good house, too, that would cost from $1,500 to $2,000 for $250 up to $500. And there are so many of them that we do not bother buying; it is easier to pay rental than be burdened with depreciated household property. What is going to become of these villages?

The marvelous thing is that the decimated population that is left is keeping up the excellent gravel roads and keeping them open in winter, too, but the governments are paying good road work wages and some of the men are mightily helped thereby.

Well, let's return to my three neighbours—good hardworking chaps when on the sea. (Very few Nova Scotians can be both good fishermen and good farmers, so the land ofter suffers.) They got just for those three crates of big fresh fish. Let's see how much they made. The engine ate up two gallons of gas, there was some oil used and the gear and tackle is high-priced, and the two buckets of bait spoiled another dollar, so actual expenses were $2.50 close figuring and the fish sold for $4.50. And there were men to divide that two dollars. Oh me! Oh my! What's the use of asking me why my neighbours go to the U.S.!

Enemies, Too Underneath Water

Man is not the only enemy these Nova Scotian fishermen have to contend with. Nature has just a few in the sea. I show you the typical motor boat coming in with a halibut. These three men did get a fish—a white (under 100 pounds; over they are "grey" and not worth nearly so much) 100 pounds of halibut. It took ten hours trawling to land this big sweet-fleshed fish and it used several gallons of gas. So even if these men did get 12 cents a pound for their one big fish they had less than two dollars a piece for over-head counts up fast on this harsh coast where so much gear is lost.

If you want to really see the enemies of the Nova Scotia fisherman look at my photographs of the wolf fish (catfish locally) and the mouth of the Blue Dog Shark. I haven't a print off my Doy Fish negaive to show you so I really slight the greatest enemy of all. These grey sharply, smooth, swift, big-toothed dog fish are terrors. I have known boat after boat to be literally driven off the fishing grounds by the schools of "dogs" that attacked every bait and every hooked fish until the water fairly churned with them and the men unavailingly struck at them with killing sticks and "gaffs". (Gaff hooks) until they had to up anchor and away to another spot and at once the school of dogs was there, so it was go home with all the bait lost and no fish to sell. There was a time when we had reduction works to take these lesser sharks and render them for oil and fertilizer but man in his usually greedy way, left the dogfish alone the moment fishing improved, and the plant naturally shut up.

Since that most wonderful diabetes cure, that new factor called Insulin, is to be found in the dogfish let us hope that it spells his partial destruction. There are places where they do render the dogfish for the oil. Individuals on little islands and reefs camp out in summer and pirate down. You just want to keep to windward of that individual plant. It may not be a large plant but it smells large.

Sharks Are Bad Medicine.

The big soft mud shark of this coast is a nuisance, but there are not enough of them to make much trouble. I know of a crew fishing out of a long motor boat getting their lines fouled one after another in something away down below until every man of the six were fast.

"Let's all draw up!" said Peter. They did and a shark almost as long as the boat slowly and sulkily rose to the surface. There it lay inert while the men cut out their hooks. Then, they clubbed and prodded the shark and finally they got a noose on its tail and drew about two yards of the thinnest part of Mr. Shark up over the rail. Just then he woke up to the fact that something unusual in his life was happening and he squirmed a bit. When a monster of a six hundred pound shark squirns something has to go and most moveable on that motor boat went. The crew flew on high squat mast, deck house cuddy roof, aft with a grade of 1 in 3, thru which the underdeck, anywhere out of that awful frail. Then the noose slipped off the bit and the beast went down below. And it seemed that he just had to have hooks in for he managed to get all those big codhooks firmly imbedded again in this dove-grey side and the men had to cut loose and lose several fathoms of line and a lot of hooks. I once came across a boat that was big enough to carry a cook. He was a "chink." The boys were dredging and there was a long rope with a noose on the end attached to the snubbing post so that the very next time a big shark came along and nosed about the cook's side they could snub him by the tail and watch his struggles. The cook heard the men telling just how it was done, so while they were smoking the noon hour away, Mr. Chinaman went on deck and nosed that shark. The only mistake he made was that he undid the big rope from the post and held the end in his hand while he dangled that noose dangerously near that big forked tail—over went the big noose—tightly did the "chink" draw it—and just then the shark decided to go below and John went with him. There was a squeal like that of a baby being bathed and the men ran on deck to see what was splashing. Nothing was just then, but pretty soon John came up and he had that rope in a death grip and almost instantly he went below again. On his next appearance the Swede boss yelled: "Let go! let him go!" meaning the rope. Down went John again and into the hole in the sea went the big Swede. He cuffed the chink once when he came up and tore the rope from his straining fingers. "Good rope ban down, I bet you!" the captain grinned as he clambered up the side. The men had most of the water drained out of the Chink by now and the moment he came too and could stand aud saw that big Swede making another noose he only said, "belly blad fish" and dived into his galley.

Beecham's Pills
Keep you fit

Wolf Eel is Dreaded.

In this great rough tide-swirled and tempest-tossed Atlantic, there are many other dangers our fishing boys encounter but the wolf fish is always there or thereabouts. Look down over the side of the motor boat when it is swaying on the end of its anchor rope in "The Race." There, ten and twenty shapes; they look very much like four foot sticks of spruce corkwood waterlogged and sunken. These are the dreaded catfish of this coast. Utterly useless as food or bait they cover the bottoms of the reefs where the pollock love to lie and feed and eat greedily of the tiny silvery Billfish.

It is a wonderful sight to see a school of these tiny thin silvery bait fishes leap into the air ahead of a pursuing pollock or Wolf Eel. From the deck of the fishing boat they look exactly like a flock of shorebirds scooting over the sea.

Some of these young fishermen, to make a bit of money, join the dredgers and wrecking boats that from time to time salvage the bones of steamers that beat to pieces on these thickly strewn shoals. One boat was over a rusty wreckage on So'west Ledge. The boys helped the diver on with his weighted canvass suit, screwed the big goggle-eyed helmet on and carefully assisted the odd man-fish over the side. Down he went rung after rung. The water was clear and the tide almost slack. No sooner had the leaded feet of the diver touched the reef than as a spoon disturbs and grounds in a cup so did his big feet disturb the wolf eels big five-foot, myriad-toothed monsters. All the jaws and roof of the mouth are so thickly set with peglike teeth that there seems no room for a single one more. The swirling mass of wolves rose about the knees, the body, the head of the diver until he was completely hidden from the young fishermen leaning over the rail staring wide-eyes at the commotion below. It did just happen that this diver had had a like experience before so he knew enough to stand as nearly still as the tidal current would let him while the awful things swirled about him. He had a big hammer in his hand and he said after: "I'd like to have let one of 'em bally grinnin' things have one for his own!" He stood down there quietly until the several hundred great scavangers settled down to bottom and then he made his explosive fast to the rusty plates and ribs and slowly came up. So when you hear of anxious watchers for the bodies of the poor souls lost at sea you can account for their non-appearance.

The dogfish were so bad one year off the "so'west coast" that it was almost impossible to draw up a single code through the snapping whirling mass. One odd thing is that these three to four feea, dove-gray, really very beautiful fish, give birth to their young alive. After we draw one in as a specimen she will disgorge all the crowded spuid from out her stomach and then exude on the hot boards several exact counterparts of the mother fish.

POSTAL OFFICIAL IS SENTENCED

The charge against an ex-letter carrier of the Post office, who with another, recently convicted, was charged with tampering with the mails, came up for hearing before Judge Morris yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Higgins, K. C., apepared for the defendant, who had on a former occasion had pleaded not guilty, and withdrew the plea, entering a plea of guilty on behalf of the defendant.

Mr. Higgins, K.C., apepared for Court on behalf of the defendant, asking for clemency for his client, pointed out that his future, so far as the service in which he was employed was concerned , had been blighted. He has to make a fresh start and, it being his first fall, he asked the court to be as considerate as the ends of justice would permit.

The judge said that the stealing a letter from the Post Office was out of the category of ordinary larceny. The Crown, by special enactment, had made it a felony punishable by imprisonment, but this case came before him under the Summary Jurisdiction Act.

Considering all the circumstances, and it being the defendant's first offence, he imposed a fine of $200 or twelve month's imprisonment.

OBITUARY

SAMUEL SNELGROVE

A well-known citizen in the person of Mr. Samuel Snelgrove, passed away at the General Hospital yesterday morning, after an illness of only a couple of weeks. Deceased for forty years was the storekeeper for Mr. J. R. Knight, Commission Merchant, and on Mr. Knight's retirement a few years ago, went into the commission business for himself.

Deceased was a member of the L.O.A. and S.O.E., and is survived by three daughters, Misses Susie, who is a nurse at Boston, and Edith in the same profession at Montreal, as well as Mrs. R. J. Green of this city, also one son, James, of Henry Blair's.

Owing to the fact that the residence of his son-in-law, with whom he formerly resided, being under quarantine, the funeral of the late Mr. Snelgrove will take place from Carnell's mortuary room, at 2.30 this afternoon.

To-night's Concert at S. A. Citadel

To-night at the No. 1 Citadel, Gower Street, there will be a great musical treat given by Commandant and Mrs. Urquhart, who are clever musicians, and can bring music out of almost anything. So this great treat of Gospel in music and song will be given to-night. Among the instruments, he will play aluminum chimes, sleigh bells, hand bells, wood pile, musical saw, tomato tin, banjo, violin, guitar and others.

What The Hespeler News says about them: "A great musical treat was provided at the Methodist Church last night, and it is doubtful if two clever musicians than Commandant and Mrs. Urquhart ever appeared in Hespeler. They are two stars. They played instruments of various kinds, and it seemed that they got music out of every article, even a saw and a jam tin. They gave pleasing selections, and were obliged to respond to many encores, which were given without any hesitation.

So to-night at the Citadel there is a great musical treat in store.

Commandant Hurd, who is leaving for Canada Saturday, will preside. This will be his last meeting. All are welcome.

PROFESSIONAL BUSINESS TRAINING

Business College Evening Classes Open

The commercial night school of the United Business College (formerly Springdale St. Commercial School) re-opened on Monday in the Synod Building, kindly placed at the disposal of the school by Dr. Blackall, Superintendent of Education, whose best wishes were extended to the school. The best wishes of the C. of E. city board of education were also expressed very kindly to the principal of the school, Mr. P. G. Butler, regretting that the Board were unable to expend any further funds in the cause of advanced commercial education, and had decided to abandon the effort altogether. They recognized the great work that had been done in the old school at Springdale St., but this work had grown beyond the province of the board, and the commercial rooms were urgently needed for elementary purposes, as shown by Mr. Butler's repeated requests for more school accomodation. They thanked him for the hard work he had put into the school, and wished his commercial ideas and efforts every success.

The business college will have the best wishes and support of Mr. Butler's hundreds of successful old students and of leading men of all denominations throughout the country, who will no doubt respond to the need of sending in more students.

A larger number of students than usual attended the opening, in accounting, English, mathematics, etc., which Mr. Butler is giving his personal attention; also in the stenographic and industrial departments in charge of Miss E. G. Freeman, who is a well-trained instructor and assistant. Both at evening and day classes students have an opportunity to specialize in the business career they intend to enter, whether it is trading, banking, book-keeping, accounting, salesmanship, stenography, or other forms of commercial life.

It will be an up-to-date school of commerce, affording the facilities required for a sound and thorough training, and it is up to the business people of the city and the country to patronize it. It is possible that funds will be needed for its proper development, in order to get the wherewithal to pay the staff, provide more equipment and scholarships, accomodate increased numbers of students, and afford a thorough course of instruction that will be recognized anywhere.

The object will be to serve the people, thus rendering valuable service in this direction. Thec ountry deserves the best facilities that can be offered in training for business life, and it is the duty of parents to provide these facilities. Why should our sons and daughters have to go away from Newfoundland to attend Business Colleges? An earnest united appeal is made to all the people to support and build up this business college in our midst to meet the needs of the country in providing advanced business training for all.

COMMERCIAL BOWLING

League Meets

The Commercial Bowling League met at the King George Institute on Tuesday evening for the purpose of drawing up their program for the coming season. Fourteen clubs were represented and great enthusiasm prevailed.

Bishop, Sons, & Co. and the Nail Factory have withdrawn from the League, but Job Bros. and the Customs have joined up so that the membership has not been impaired.

The season, which opens on the night of Oct. 16th, promises to far out-distance last winter's in point of interest and keenness of competition, and the fixtures provide for two games every night except Mondays and Saturdays.

The election of officers resulted in Mr. Charles Ayre being chosen as President and Mr. Robert Simms Secretary-treasurer.

The cup donated last year by Mr. Fred W. Ayre and won by Harvey & Co's. team, will be competed for again this season, as it must be won two years in succession to become the permanent property of any team. In addition to this trophy there will be medals for first and second place.

Reformers try to reform but they don't reform themselves.

LOCAL ITEMS

The enquiry into the death of the young lad Griffiths who was killed by a motor car driven by Don Whiteway, on the Southside Road, some weeks ago, will be held in the Magistrate's Court, starting on Thursday next.

Charles Tuff, who is charged with manslaughter, was formally committed to the Supreme Court for trial, yesterday afternoon. Accused was granted bail in his own bond for $5,000 and Messrs Reg Brown and Edmond Tuff in $2,500 each.

Const. Trickett, who was a member of the Labrador special squad, has been transferred to Belleoram, and left by yesterday's train to take up his new duties.

New Sanitary Stables Are Well Away

The new Sanitary Stables, the erection of which started on the 2nd. inst. are now well advanced, splendid work having been done by Messrs. Bolger Bros., the contractors since they began work. The building is being constructed under the supervision of Mr. Jonas Barter, Architect and will be the last word in modern equipment. The new stables will measure 130 feet by 32 feet, will be two storeys high with accommodation for thirty horses besides containing the office, work-room, lunch-room for the staff and lavatories and washroom.

The stalls will be floored with tarvia concrete and drained in the most improved manner in connection with the sewerage system. They will be constructed along the most modern lines and equipped with the latest stable fittings.

The second story will be used for the storage of hay, oats etc., and the building will be covered in by the end of the next fortnight.

The plans were drawn up by the city engineer, and are worthy of special commendation.

POLICE COURT

A Norwegian, named Olsen, who was before the Court yesterday, was up again to-day on a vagrancy charge. He beat his way to Port Aux Basques and travelled acrosss the country. Later he has been prowling about the near-by settlements to the annoyance and alarm of the residence. He was sent down for 8 days.

Six Battery fishermen were before Judge Morris for a breach of the fishery regulations. Under a regulation made at the request of the fishermen themselves, the use of bulltows is prohibited in St. John's District from Empty Basket, the Northern Head of Petty Hr. to Sugar Loaf from June 1st. to October 1 st.

The hook and line men complained to the department that they were being interferred with. The defendants pleaded guilty to a technical breach and were each fined $1.00 and costs.

POPULAR BARBER MEETS GUN ACCIDENT

Arch Wiseman Has Left Arm Amputated From Shoulder.

Mr. Arch Wiseman, the popular foreman of Bartlett's Hairdressing establis ment, now lies at the General Hospital in a precarious condition, as a result of a self-inflicted gun wound sustained this morning while he was snipe shooting in the vicinity of the Old Railway Track.

Mr. Wiseman, who had not been long out of the General Hospital, where he underwent an operation for appendicitis, left his home shortly after six o'clock to go shooting and after some time spent in the neighborhood of the old track bed, he decided to go up thru a field owned by the late Matt Kelly, which fronts on Freshwater Rd. He stood his gun, which was loaded, up by the wire fence while he crawled thru and then reached out to draw the fire-arm after him. In pulling it between the wires of the fence, he caught the trigger and discharged the contents of the weapon which entered his upper left arm beneath the shoulder. There was nobody around at the time and evidently the shot was not heard. The injured man, with the lacerated arm hanging uselessly and bleeding freely, staggered in the direction of the nearest house, situated on the Common to the south of the track. He was unable to get far, however, as loss of blood soon weakened him and finally he was forced to abandon the attempt and fell to the ground. For some time he called for help but it must have been nearly a quarter of an hour before assistance came. Mr. Mike MacKey, whose house was nearest to the scene of the accident, heard the cries of the injured man for some time, but attached no significance to them at first. Later however, he saw Mr. Wiseman and with James Fifield, went to his assistance. They had started to help him towards the house when Patrick Coady of the Sanitary Dept. was seen with his horse and cart some little distance away and on finding that a serious accident had occurred, he immediately dumped out his load and took the injured man on board to bring him to the nearest doctor. He was taken as speedily as possible to Dr. Macpherson's home on Rennie's Mill Rd. and after doing what he could temporarily for the lacerated arm, he took Mr. Wiseman in his car and rushed him to the Hospital, where an hour or so later, the patient was operated on by Dr. Anderson, who amputated the arm at the shoulder.

It was fortunate that the victim of the regrettable accident was not further in the woods at the time as he undoubtedly would have bled to death before assistance could have reached him.

Mr. Wiseman has for many years been a keen sportsman and was in the habit of going out almost daily during the shooting season for snipe and other small game. His host of friends in the City deeply regret the deplorable accident.

Slight Fire

At noon to-day a 'phone message brought the Central firemen to the residence of Mr. Edward Sinnott, M.H.A., Rennie's Mill Road. Sparks from the chimney ignited the roof. The fire was extinguished by using the chemical engine. The damage done was slight.

New Premier Of Japan

COPYRIGHT KEYSTONE VIEW CO., NEW YORK

Count Gombei Yamamoto, who has been appointed Premier of Japan, to succeed the late Baron Kato. The appointment came as somewhat of a surprise in view of the recent attack on the Count by the Genro who advise the crown, and who were said to favor continuing the Kato Cabinet under the temporary Premiership of Viscount Uchida until the elections next May. Count Yamamoto ranks high in the political and social life of Japan. He was Premier from 1913 to 1914 and holds the title of Admiral. He is well known in thi country, which he visited in 1907.

RUMANIA OFFERS TO HELP FIGHT

BUCHAREST, Sept, 27—It is reported that Rumania has offered the Bulgarian Government military assistance in restoring order in Bulgaria should the Communist revolution there assume the upper hand.

GERMAN GOVMT. HANDED OVER TO DICTATORSHIP

PARIS, Sept. 27—The German Government has been practically handed over to a military dictatorship, it is deduced at the Foreign Office from despatches received to-day from Berlin. The situation is regarded as full of dangerous possibilities, but as furnishing no basis at present for any action on the part of the Allies.

BIRKENHEAD PREDICTS BIG INCREASE IN POPULATION

Says Next Ten Years Will Mean Five Millions More For Canada.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 27—"I cannot discover any well informed students of sociology in the Dominion of Canada who do not believe that the next ten years will see an increase in your population of five million," said Lord Birkenhead, former Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, in the course of an address before the Canadian Club here yesterday. He recommended free reciprocal trade with the British Empire.

FORMER GOOD RELATIONS RESTORED BY CONFERENCE

Distrust Has Been Changed To Confidence, Says Premier Baldwin.

NORTHAMPTON, Sept. 27—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, speaking here to-day, declared that his conference with Premier Poincare in Paris last week had the effect of restoring the former good relations between France and Great Britain. The atmosphere of restraint and almost of distrust that had prevailed between the two countries had been changed, he said, into one of mutual confidence. "I think there is now both in Paris and London recognition of the Entente's importance in this way, that without it a European settlement would be far more difficult. The best hope of settlement lies in intimate relationship between France and this country," Mr. Baldwin said.

STRIKE IS PROTEST OF OPERATIVES

German Government's Policy Is Not Popular.

DUSSELDORF, Sept. 27—Miners in Gelsenkirchen, Recklinghausen and Wanne districts, in the heart of the Ruhr mine fields, declared a general strike to-day as the first action in protest against the Berlin Government's decision to give up passive resistance, and also against the exploitation of the district by the French. Six thousand miners had to quit work at noon.

DORTMUND, Sept. 27—News of the Government's abandonment of passive resistance in the Ruhr reached the mining section late Tuesday afternoon and although the local newspapers have been forecasting such action, official verification of the Government's plan produced a feeling of profound depression among all claseses of people. Labor leaders are adminishing the workers to remain calm and warning them against supporting the Communistic agitation which they say is now seeking to feed on the present critical situation.

Gives 100,000,000 Yen To Quake Victims

KEYSTONE VIEW CO., NEW YORK

Prince Regent Hirohito has given Premier Yammoto, of Japan, 100,000,000 yen, or the equivalent of $50,000,000 for the relief of the earthquake sufferers. The gift was accompanied by an expression of great concern for the victims and instructions to the government to unite in efforts to alleviate their sufferings.

BULGARIA WILL FIGHT COMMUNISM

Last Oounce of Strength Will Be Used To Stop Westward Sweep of Sovietism.

SOFIA, Sept. 27—Bulgaria will fight to the last ounce of her strength, not her own only, but the world's battle against Communism said President Seankoff yesterday in an interview with the Associated Press. Seankoff asserted that Communism after shattering civilization in Russia was trying to do Bulgaria a similar injury. The Third Internationale, he said, plans to extend Sovietism to other Balkan States and then sweep westward. In spite of our weakness we are determined to stop them or die in the attempt."

CORFU IS RETURNED TO GREECE

ATHENS, Sept. 27—The Island of Curfu, occuppied by Italy on August 31st, was returned to Greece this morning, it was announced in despatches received here.

Polish Woman Spy Sentenced To Death

PETROGRAD, Sept. 27—Polish Countess Ceselia Potopskaya, has been sentenced to death for espionage on behalf of Poland in the alleged betrayal of fifteen Polish Communists to the Warsaw Government. The accused woman is said to have admitted she came to Russia on behalf of the Polish Intelligence Bureau.

LONDON, Sept. 27—News despatches from Berlin state that one was killed, five fatally wounded and twenty slightly injured, in street fighting in Dresdon between less extreme radicals and communists.

NEW SITUATION IS BALDWIN VICTORY

Question of Legality of Ruhr Occupation To Be Dropped For Present.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Premier Baldwin's pronouncement at Northampton is considered in political circles to have partly lifted the veil which hatherto has hidden recent conversations between Mr. Baldwin and Premier Poincare, and to have revealed the adoption of a new policy on the part of the British Government, brought about by the fresh situation in Germany.

Apparently the idea in political quarters is that a separate reply to Germany on reparations is for the present at least abandoned, and the question of the legality of the Franco-Belgian occupation of the Ruhr is to be quietly dropped.

Germany's unconditional abandonment of passive resistance seems to be held by British Ministers as justifying hope that it now will be possible for Great Britain and France again to cooperate in the work of securing solution of the reparations problem.

If this should prove to be the consequence of the recent Baldwin-Poincare interview and a new situation in Germany, it is said it will be represented by Liberal and Labor parties here as a complete surrender to France, and a triumph for Premier Poincare.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXXV.

Here was a mystery! Mr. O'Leary in his Sunday clothes bound for Ireland, resembled Dirty Dan O'Leary in the raiment of a lumber-jack, his wild hair no longer controlled by judicious applications of pomade, and his mustache now—alas—returned to its original state of neglect, as a butterfly resembles a catapillar. Without pausing to consider this, Dirty Dan, taking the license of a more or less privileged character, queried impudently:

"Are ye glad they sent for ye to come back?"

She decided that Mr. O'Leary was inclined to be familiar; so she merely looked at him and her cool glance chilled him. "Becuz if ye are," he continued, embarrassed, "ye have me to thank for it. I know a thing or two wit'out bein' told. Have ye not been surprised that they knew so well where to find ye whin they wanted ye?"

She stared at him in frank amazement.

"Yes, I've been tremendously interested in learning the secret of their marvelous perspicacity."

"I supplied Misther Daney wit' yer address, allanah."

"How did you know it? Did the Laird——"

"He did not. I did it all be mesel.' Ah, 'tis the romantic divil I am, Miss Brint. Sure I got a notion ye were runnin' away an' I says to mesel': 'I dont like the idea at all, at all.' I realized what a popular laddy buck I'd be wit' Misther Donald if I knew what he didn't know."

"But how did you procure my address in New York?" she demanded.

"Now I'm a wise man, but if I towld ye that ye'd be as wise as I am. Ye'll have to excuse me from blatherin' all I know."

"Oh, but you must tell me, Dan. There are reasons why I should know, and you wouldn't refuse to set my mind at ease, would you?"

Dirty Dan grinned and played his ace.

"If ye'll sing 'The Low-backed Car' and 'She Moved through The Fair,' I'll tell ye," he promised. "Sure I listened to ye the night o' the battle, an' so close to death was I, sure I t'ought 'twas an angel from glory singin'. Troth, I did."

She sat down, laughing, at the antiquated piano, and sang him songs he loved; then, because she owed him a great debt, she sang for him "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Pretty Molly Brannigan," "The Harp That Once," and "Killarney." Dan stood just outside the kitchen door, not presuming to enter, and when the last song was finished, he had tears in his piggy little eyes; so he fled with the posies, nor tarried to thank her and wish her a pleasant good night. Neither did he keep his promise by telling her how he came to know her New York address.

"Let me hear anny blackguard mintion her name with' a lack o' respect, an I'll break the back o' him in two halves! Whirro-o-o! Sure I'd make a mummy out o' him!"

CHAPTER XXXVI

A MONTH PASSED, and to the Sawdust Pile one evening, instead of Dirty Dan, there came another messenger. It was Mr. Daney. To Nan's invitation to enter and be seated, he gave ready acceptance; once seated, he showed indubitable evidence of uneasiness, and that he was the bearer of news of more than ordinary interest was aparent by the nervous manner in which he twirled his hat and scattered over her clean floor a quantity of sawdust which had accumulated under the rim during his peregrinations round the mill that day.

"Well, Nan, he went home to The Dreamerie this afternoon," the general manager began presently. "Got up and dressed himself unaided, and insisted on walking out to the car without assistance. He's back on a solid diet now, and the way he's filling up the chinks in his superstructure is a sight to marvel at. I expect he'll be back on the job within a month."

"That is wonderful news, Mr. Daney."

"Of course," Daney continued, "his hair is falling out, and he'll soon be as bald as a Chihuahua dog. But—it'll grow in again. Yes, indeed. It'll grow in."

"Oh, dear! I hope it'll grow out," she bantered, in an effort to put him at his ease. "What a pity if his illness should leave poor Don with a head like a thistle—with all the fuzzy-wuzzy inside."

He laughed.

"I'm glad to find you in such good spirits, Nan, because I've called to talk business. And, for some reason or other I do not relish my job."

"Then, suppose I dismiss you from this particular job, Mr. Daney. Suppose I decline to discuss business."

"Oh, but business is something that has to be discussed sooner or later," he assured her, on the authority of one whose life had been dedicated to that exacting duty. "I suppose you have kept track of your expenses since you left New York. That of course, will include the outlay for your living expenses while here, and in order to make doubly certain that we are on the safe side, I am instructed to double this total to cover the additional expenses of your return to New York. And if you'll set a value upon your lost time from the day you left New York until you return, both days included, I will include that in the check also."

"Suppose I should charge you a thousand dollars a day for my lost time," she suggested curiously.

"I should pay it without the slightest quibble. The Laird would be delighted to get off so cheaply. He feels himself obligated to you for returning to Port Agnew——"

"Did The Laird send you here to adjust these financial details with me, Mr. Daney?"

"He did not. The matter is entirely in my hands. Certainly, in all justice, you should be reimbursed for the expenses of a journey voluntarily incurred for the McKaye benefit."

"Did he says so?"

"No. But I know him so well that I have little difficulty in anticipating his desires. I am acting under Mrs. McKaye's promise to you over the phone to reimburse you."

"I am glad to know that, Mr. Daney. I have a very high regard for Donald's father, and I should not care to convict him of an attempt to settle with me on a cash basis for declining to marry his son. I wish you would inform The Laird, Mr. Daney, that what I did was done because it pleased me to do it for his sake and for Donald's. They have been at some pains, throughout the years, to be kind to the Brents, but, unfortunately for the Brents, opportunities for reciprocity have always been lacking until the night Mrs. McKaye telephoned me in New York. I cannot afford the gratification of very many happy desires—even very simple ones, Mr .Daney—but this happens to be one of the rare occasions when I can. To quote Sir Anthony Gloster, 'Thank God I can pay for my fancies!' The Laird doesn't owe me a dollar, and I beg you, Mr. Daney, not to distress me by offering it."

"But, my dear girl, it must have cost you at least five hundred dollars——"

"What a marvelous sunset we had this evening, Mr. Daney. Did you observe it? My father always maintained that those curious clouds predicted southwest squalls."

"I didn't come here, girl, to talk about sunsets. You're foolish if you do not accept——"

The outcast of Port Agnew turned upon Mr. Daney with a pair of blue eyes that flashed dangerously.

"I think I have paid my debt to the McKayes," she declared, and in her calm voice there was a sibilant little note of passion. "Indeed I have a slight credit balance due me, and tho Mrs. McKaye and her daughters cannot bring themselves to the point of acknowledging this indebtedness, I must insist upon collecting it. In view of the justice of my claim, however, I cannot stultify my woman hood by permitting the McKaye women to think they can dismiss the obligation by writing a check. I am not an abandoned woman, Mr. Daney. I have sensibilities, and strange to say, I too, have pride—more than the McKayes I think sometimes. It is possible to insult me, to hurt me, and cause me to suffer cruelty, and I tell you, Mr. Daney, I would rather lie down and die by the roadside than accept one penny of McKaye money."

Mr. Daney stared at her, visibly distressed.

"Why, what's happened?" he blurted.

She ignored him.

"I repeat that The Laird owes me nothing—not even his thanks. I met him one night with Mrs. McKaye on the hospital steps, and he tendered me his meed of gratitude like the gentleman that he is."

"Oh, I see!" A great light had suddenly dawned on Mr. Daney. "The Laird led trumps, but Nellie McKaye revoked and played a little duce?"

"Well, Mr. Daney, it seemed to me she fumbled the ball, to employ a sporting metaphor. She bowed to me—like this—and smiled at me—like that!" Her cool, patronizing nod and the sudden contraction and relaxation of Nan's facial muscles brought a wry smile to old Daney's stolid countenance. "Even if I felt that I could afford to or was forced to accept reimbursement for my expenses and lost time, her action precluded it. Can't you realize that, Mr. Daney? And Jane and Elizabeth went her one—on, two—better. I'm going to tell you about it. I went uptown the other day to send a telegram, and in the telegraph office I met Donald's sisters. I knew they would not care to have me speak to them in public, so, when the telegrapher wasn't looking at me and intuition told me that They were, I glanced up and favored them with a very small but very polite smile of recognition."

"And then," quoted Mr. Daney, reaching into his ragbag of a mind and bringing up a remnant of Shakespeare, "there came a frost—a killing frost!' "

"Two hundred and forty-five degrees below zero, and not even a stick of kindling in the wood-box," she assured him humorously. "They loked at me, through me, over me, beyond me——"

"And never batted an eye?"

"Not even the flicker of an eyelash."

Sun Life Has Taken $10,000,000 of Loan

Within a comparatively few hours of the public announcement of the new issue of $50,000,000 5 per cent. Dominion Government bonds it was announced at noon today by T. B. Macaulay, president of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, Limited, that the finance committee of that company had approved a subscription of $10,000,000.

This step was stated to be in line with the company's well-known policy of giving its utmost support to the Dominion Government in handling its financial problems.

As a considerable portion of the issue is expected to be taken in exchange for maturing bonds it is believed that this large subscription places the seal of success on the issue as a whole.—Montreal Star.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH SERVICE

RING 436.

THE POSTAL is the only extensive public telegraph service for Newfoundland, and has connection to all inland places. A ten word message costs only twenty-five cents, the address and signature, as well as Postal telephone transmission to destination is free of cost.

The Postal has also immediate and constant connection with the Wireless Stations at Cape Race, Fogo and Battle Harbor, and in Summer with Labrador Wireless Stations. Also with Wireless to and from ships at sea.

Cable business handed to the Postal ensures quick service via New York or Canso to Brazil, Bahia, Pernambuco, Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda. Our connections are as follows:

"American Postal Telegraph," "Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraphs," 'All American Cables for Central and South America," "Halifax and Bermuda and Direct West India Cables."

A cheap night, as well as day service, is also given to all points in Canada and the United States of America. The Postal has also direct connection with Great Britain, thence to all European points. Rates as low as 6c. per word. Stamps to value of ten cents must be affixed by senders to all cable (foreign) messages from Newfoundland. The Newfoundland revenue benefits largely when you patronize the Postal Telegraphs. Its whole staff (clerical and operators) from Superintendent to Messengers are sworn to secrecy.

Commandant Hurd Leaves To-morrow

Extends Thanks to All Helpers IN Maternity Hospital Campaign

COMMANDANT HURD, financial representative for the Maritime Provinces, Newfoundland and Bermuda, of the Salvation Army, who has been here for the past three months in the interest of the new Maternity Hospital, sails to-morrow on the s.s. Rosalind for his home in Moncton. On October 10th, he leaves for Toronto, to attend the annual convention which is conducted by the Chief of the Staff, second in command of the world-wide Salvation Army.

The Commandant has done exceptionally well, considering the financial conditions of the country just now, and he wishes to thank the different organizations who have come to his assistance on the first Tag-day he had. Mrs. Harry Peddigrew, with her band of workers, and Mrs. D. Johnson, and the comrades of the corps did excetionally well. The second Tag-day was run by the Daughters of the Empire and the Girl Guides. Considering the wet weather they did exceptionally well, and the Commandant wishes to thank Miss Hayward, Miss Furlong, and Mrs. Hutchings for the good work they did, also Mr. Higgins, Mr. H Cowan and Mr. G. R. Williams, for the splendid assistance given.

The opening of the hospital was a great success. The presence of the Governor and Lady Allardyce and those associated with them was very much appreciated, and added greatly to the success of the opening.

Commandant Hurd also wishes to thank Rev. Mrs. Earp, of St. Thomas's, Mrs. Canon Jeeves of the C. of E. Cathedral, Mrs. D. Johnston, of the Presbyterian Church, and the Home League leaders of the different corps, as well as the officers and those associated with them, for the splendid service rendered in supplying the refreshments. Also Lady Winter, for supplying the Governor's table, and Mr. A. E. Canning for supplying the flowers from Bowring Park for the Governor's table; also Mr. Taylor of the Southside, for lending the boilers, as well as Dr. McPherson for the loan of a tent for Regatta Day. He also wishes to thank His Worship the Mayor for many deeds of kindness, and Sir Marmaduke Winter, who did everything he could to assist in the campaign, and Dr. Roberts is especially thanked for the ordering of the Sterilizing and operating outfits, to meet the needs of the hospital, and those who have seen these outfits know what a splendid apparatus it is. Thanks are also due to Colonel and Mrs. Cloud, and the Headquarters Staff for what has been done in helping and subscribing towards the effort.

Five thousand dollars more are needed to meet the cost of furnishings.

Although Commandant Hurd will leave here to-morrow, he will be returning the first or second week in November, to try and get the balance that is necessary.

If any subscriber does not receive his paper regularly please send in name, address and particulars of same so that the matter may be rectified.

Empire Steel Expects Japanese Contracts

After a meeting of the board of directors of the British Empire Steel Corporation, it was announced that D. H. McDougall, vice-president, had resigned, and that George F. Downs, late president of the Lackawanna Steel Company had been appointed a director and member of the executive committee.

Mr. McDougall remains a member of the board. He was president of Nova Scotia Steel when the present company absorbed it. He has been identified with the steel and coal industry of Nova Scotia for many years, having been associated with the Dominion Coal Company for many years. Mr. Downs, the new director, is an experienced steel man.

It is stated that the steel business has shown considerable improvement of late, particularly as regards export business and the prospects of securing Japanese large contracts are bright. It may be necessary to start another blast furnace shortly to meet the increased demand.

As regards the coal business, the president stated that production during August on the north side of Sydney harbor was the largest in any month in the history of that district, while the production in the Glace Bay district in August was larger than any month since the beginning of 1916.—Montreal Star.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, FRIDAY, SEPT. 28th., 1923

The Spirit of the Board of Trade

Several members of the Board of Trade, including Mr. Monroe, evidenced an extreme narrow-mindedness of spirit in their discussion of the flour-mill project. They followed too closely the type of the Daily News and Telegram and exposed themselves to the ridicule of the general public by allowing their speeches to be coloured by party politics and personal spite.

So obsessed are certain of these members against Coaker and the F. P. U. they could not enter into a discussion of some other party's business proposition without dragging Unionism into their utterances, an action of which they should now be entirely sickened. Carried on for 15 years and through three election campaigns, their deceptive harangues have become so monotonous, as to be a form of fanaticism.

If the flour mill project were not associated with the F. P. U. or with Sir William Coaker, it was, in their opinion, worthy of consideration. If it were connected with Port Union, then they would fight it, irrespective of whether they thought it was beneficial to the country or not.

What a petty spirit of narrowness is this to be evidenced by members of the body who would be supposed to represent the business community of the whole country!

If it is Coaker or Port Union, down it; if it is not Coaker, it should be considered.

It was against such opposition as this, and against such a lack of public spirit as this, that Coaker and the Union outportmen had to contend since the F. P. U. entered the field in 1908.

Even so late as last spring the same attitude was displayed by majority of the Board of Trade against the Humber proposition which now employs 2300 workingmen.

Proportional Representation

The first real try-out of Proportional Representation in the English speaking world was had in the recent Free State elections. The conditions were favorable because of the entrance of several groups into the field. In the 147 contested seats the first-preference votes were distributed among the parties as follows (the second column of figures showing the seats obtained by each):

	Votes	Seats.
Government	400,201	60
Republican	285,213	44
Farmers	121,756	15
Labor	124,235	15
Independents	97,267	13
Total	1,034,672	147

If the parties had won seats in exact proportion to first-preference votes the distribution would have been: Government, 58; Republicans, 40; Farmers, 17; Labor, 18; Independents, 14. The correspondence between the party strengths in the country and in the Dail is close enough to justify the Proportional Representation Society of Great Britain in claiming that the system has achieved what was expected of it. It was an exceptional situation, as the supporters of the Anglo-Irish Treaty were divided into four groups. Even now opinion is not agreed as to what the consequences would have been if the old method of voting had been retained. In one-member constituencies especially, when there are more than two condidates running, the return of minority candidates has been the rule rather than the exception in innumerable elections in all countries. Because of this the present British Government, for exampl, represents a minority of the popular vote. This may be pleasing to British Conservatives, but they would deplore a Republican victory in Ireland on the same basis.

Premier Baldwin's Statement

Premier Stanley Baldwin's declaration at Northampton yesterday that his recent conference with Premier Poincare in Paris had had the effect of restoring complete confidence between the two great nations of Europe is perhaps the most important announcement that has been recorded since post-war problems began to occupy the centre of the international poltical stage. The deadlock resulting from the failure of Great Britain and her Republican ally to see eye to eye on the matter of German reparations undoubtedly assumed a serious aspect, so much so, that a rupture in the Entente was for a time regarded as inevitable. France's determination not to recede from her policy of occupation, despite the evil influence which such a policy was held to be exercising upon the industrial life of her neighbor and ally across the Channel, created an impasse that called for the most careful handling. That the situation was largely the result of misunderstanding seems now beyond doubt and had Britain lacked the guiding hand of a master statesman and diplomat there might well be a different story to tell to-day.

Premier Baldwin took the position that the greatest hope for the ultimate settlement of the inter-allied difficulties lay in maintaining the old friendly relations between England and France. This was presumably the motive behind his visit to Paris, and while no definite basis of settlement of the European trouple resulted from his conference with Poincare, we are assured that inestimable good has come from it.

The Telegram Confesses

The Telegram has contended that, to a large extent, the trouble with the fishery problem is the way fishermen cure their fish. In other words, the fishermen have themselves to blame for low prices and the merchants would pay the high prices if the fishermen gave them the right goods.

For some days the Advocate has been endeavouring to impress the Evening Telegram with the fact that its opinions on such a matter were not worth much.

The Telegram goes a little further and says we have made much ado about nothing.

"Nothing" is right.

It is quite a confession, even if it is the truth.

Oilfield Expert Speaks Well of New Find

IMPORTANT RESULTS AT THE PALMER WELL

We learn that there have been interesting developments at what is known as the Palmer Well (named after Father Palmer, of Boston) on the property of the General Oil fields, Ltd., at Parsons Pond. This is a new well started near the end of last year, but at which work was held up until a month ago by the late arrival of a boiler from America. In the middle of August the well was cased and drilling was restarted about three weeks ago when the depth was a little less than 900 feet. At from that depth to 1000 feet gas was encountered, and on Monday, September 16th there was a good first show of oil. On the following day the workmen bailed upyards of a ton and the oil stood in the hole to a depth of 100 feet. Mr. Henry has forwarded this information to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines. He states that this discovery at 1066 feet is the most important yet made in this oilfield. In the previous wells nothing better than shows were discovered at this comparitively shallow depth. Oil was not expected at less than 1500 feet and the well will be drilled to that depth for the purpose of tapping a more prolific formation. It was at this site, where when this well was started, Mr. Henry reported that oil of an exceptional quality would be found. He is certain that oil will be found to justify his expectations. He believes it will be proved on analysis to be the best quality of oil found in the colony. Samples have been forwarded to London and St. John's.

Mr. Matthew Rumage an oil man from Brownwood, Texas, is spending a fortnight looking over oil claims between Parsons Pond and St. Paul's Bay. He will also visit Hawke's Bay, where the group he represents also has oil claims. He was staying with Mr. Henry when oil was struck in the Palmer Well. Concerning the quality of this oil he states it is the best he has seen anywhere outside the Pioneer field in Texas, where the oil is of 46 gravity. In this respect it is likely to attract considerable interest in the oil world. The discovery was immensely interesting to him because it was made on the occasion of his first visit to the oil fields of the Colony.—Western Star.

MOSCOW, Sept. 28—M. Lafroff, chairman of the Russian Karelian Boundary Commission has been killed and two members wounded by assassins at the frontier, while returning to Finland, according to despatches.

RENO, Sept. 28—John Locke, of Stockton, California, Road Contractor, was fatally injured, and seven of his employees killed, when an interurban motor train crashed into their stalled motor car eleven miles east of here yesterday.

CASPER, N.Y., Sept. 28—At least forty persons are believed to be dead, and scores injured, in the wreck of a Chicago, Burlington and Quincey passenger train which plunged thru a bridge fourteen miles east of here last night, and buried itself in the swollen waters of the big muddy river.

Thrilling rescues were a feature of the wreck, eight escaped from a submerged car by crawling hand over hand on the rope suspended from bank to bank and lowered to within their reach.

Those dead were trapped in their berths, and in the coaches, and were drowned before there was a chance for escape or rescue.

SOFIA, Sept. 28—The city of Ferdinandovo was occupied to-day by the government forces, the communistic revolutionists thus having lost their last centre of resistance. The occupation was made possible by the capture of Berkowitza, Saturday night, this success opening the way to Ferdinandovo.

TEHERAN, Sept. 28—Several earthquake shocks have again been felt at Kerman, where much damage has been done. Tremors also have been experienced at Bujnurd, Rafsenjan, Bain and Anar. It is reported that smoke is issuing from a mountain near Bujnurd.

DUSSELDORF, Sept. 28—A demonstration strike of twenty-four hours was declared yesterday among the miners in several mining districts in the Ruhr.

The strike isd esigned to show the workers' disapproval of the condemnation of passive resistance.

The first reports were that the strike was of a general nature, for unlimited duration, but later advices show the intent as a protest gesture, and that work would be resumed in the mines to-day.

Criminals Making Use of War Gases

Serious Menace Seen from Tear, Sneezing and Other Dangerous Fumes

NEED GREATER SAFEGUARDS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26—Disturbed at the extent to which tear gas and other products used in chemical warfare are falling into private hands. War Department officials are making a thorough study of the problem with a view to drafting Legislation calculated to prevent their indiscriminate manufacture and sale.

Tear gas and certain other products are becoming more and more popular as weapons for police, prison and asylum officers in the apprehension and control of criminals and maniacs—in fact criminals themselves are learning to use these products effectively and it is feared that unless some means of control is devised the new weapons which have proved so valuable to law officers may develop into a boomerang.

It is reported that the Police Departments of the 600 cities are now equipped with tear gas and apparatus for its use. The first use of this gas by Police Departments was in the form of grenades, tanks and bombs, which were found particularly efficient for work against criminals who had barricaded themselves and against riotous mobs in the streets.

The most recent development of the use of tear gas is the so-called projector, now employed by the Washington Police Department and those of other large cities. It consists of two small tanks about 7 inches high and two and a half inches in diameter, one of which is filled with tear gas while the other is a high-pressure tank capable of projecting the gas from twenty-five to fifty yards, and its flow can be turned on or off like a hose.

This device has proven popular for use in prisons and insane asylums, where intervening walls or bars make the throwing of bombc dificult if not impossible. Projectors can be procured only under a strict system of numbering and registration.

Reports received by the War Department indicates tant in one way or another criminals are not only learning the use of tear gas, but also are providing themselves with masks for protection against it. An example in the first instance is the case of bootleggers who had equipped their automobile with a tank of tear gas, which was released through the exhaust, rendering pursuit by motorcycle police impossible.

In fact the practice of criminals in providing themselves with masks for protection against tear gas has caused the police authorities of some cities to seriously consider the use of some other gas that is capable of penetrating these masks. This would involve the use of chemical products that are not so harmless in their effects as tear gas. Sneezing gas is very penetrating and while not so deadly as phosgene or mustard gas it has a noticeable after effect when taken in considerable quantities.

RESPONSIBILITY LIES ON EXPORTERS' SHOULDERS

Fishermen Support Advocate's Contention That Half Measures Are Useless.

Princeton, B.B.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—The great majority of the fishermen are behind the Advocate in its remarks about the Telegram's pronouncement concerning standardization or the cull of fish. It appears to most of us that they want to bite the poor man every time. They are not content to bite the poor man every time—they want to shout about it in their newspapers.

Thank God we have a newspaper to stick up for the toiler's rights and show the men, who would not know a codfish from a sculpin that the fishermen are not so blind as they used to be.

They can see a thing or two now and they know a good deal more about fish and the cure of fish than lots of individuals who assume the right to lay the blame of fishery problems on our shoulders.

They should be well ashamed of themselves, after fishermen slaving from one end of the summer to the other in all kinds of weather to insult them by saddling them for the neglect of the exporters of Water Street.

Fishermen try to make as good an article as they can, for we all know it is better to have good fish than bad. But what encouragement do we get, anyhow?

The fishermen tried to conform with the standardization rules when President Coaker and the Government were trying to get the fish marketed in a proper way. We kept the rules even when we knew the merchants were using them to fleece us on the grades of our fish. They had Coaker and the Government to blame then, now they and their servile newspapers want to blame the fishermen.

The fishermen are not fools. They know who the wirepullers are who sacrifice the toilers and then accuse them for the rotten conditions which they are responsible for.

Give us a sound, business system and the fishermen will do their part.

Wishing the Union every success.

Germans Living With No Stomach

SURGEONS CUT THEM OUT—NEW ANAESTHETIC IS IN USE.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 25.—A new method of anestesia now in use in Germany and Austria is described by Dr. S. B. Pennock, surgeon-in-chief of the Osteopathic Hospital, just returned from a three months' tour of hospitals in Europe. It is known as splanchnic anaesthetic, he said, and permits a patient to watch an abdominal operation with full consciousness.

It is in general use in Europe, and Dr. Pennock administered it himself three times. It is in the form of nova-caine, and is injected into the abdominal cavity.

The anaesthesia minimizes the shock to the patient's heart, Dr. Pennock said. Many Germans and Austrians are now living without their stomachs, he said, due to the drastic practice now in vogue by German surgeons.

The German doctors are removing the stomachs from a large number of patients suffering from ulcers and other gasiric disorders.

"The diet enforced by war conditions," Dr. Pennock said, "has caused much illness in these countries."

Tuberculosis, cancer and goitre, the latter due to snow water from the mountains, are very prevalent. The former is treated very successfully by the sunlight treatment, hundreds at a time undergoing the treatment in open spaces laid out for the purpose.

"There is great rivalry between the pathologists and surgeons over there. Every death in hospital has a post-mortem and in case of error, the offending surgeon is promptly shown up in the medical and scientific journals."

The preposterous slogan of the bloody Ku Klux Klan is that America should be "White, Nordic, Protestant, Gentile." This is preposterous for the simple but sufficient reason that, to evict all who do not fall within that classification, it would be necessary to evict about sixty per cent. of the entire population!

Furthermore, I assert (altho I happen myself to be "White, Nordic, Protestant and Gentile) that all the virtues are not the exclusive possession of people falling under this classification. Still further, such people possess many evils and defects in their character. All peoples and all races possess both virtues and vices. There is no people or no race that is all good or all bad. It is absurd to indict a race or a people.

The various races of the world have produced various civilization and various cultures. It is the height of absurdity to argue over the superiority or inferiority of one culture of civilization or another. It is like debating over the weighty point of the superiority of men over women, or women over men, or arguing as to which of the two is the more important. Men and women are both necessary to the race. Similarly, all races, all civilizations, all cultures are necessary to make up the world civilization, the world culture.

The German culture possesses certain virtues in excess of Italian culture and vice versa. The same may be said of German-English cultures, or of English-French, or of any comparative civilizations.

This is peculiarly true of the United States, which is made up of people of all races and nationalities. The American character is a cosmopolitan one, being derived from the many currents and forces within its borders.

Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz, the world-famous electrical engineer, usually called "the electrical wizard," in his interesting book, "America and the New Era," which I have just been reading, writes entertainingly of this feature:

"The American nation," he says, "was formed—or rather is being formed, since it is still in the formation period—by the commingling of the Anglo-Saxon, Teuton, Celt, Slav and Mediterranean. None of these races is in the majority, or even in such a large minority that it could expect to have character, its viewpoints, habits and temperament predominate in the resultant race.

"The white population of the United States probably comprises about 30 to 35 per cent. of Anglo-Saxon origin (English, Scotch, etc.), and about 30 per cent. of Teuton origin (German, Dutch, Scandanavian, etc.), 15 per cent. of Celtic origin (Irish), and 20 to 25 per cent. Slav and Mediterranean.

"The American race thus cannot be Anglo-Saxon, or Teuton, or Irish, or Slav or Latin, but must have characteristics of all these races; and to talk about 'blood is thicker than water,' and apply this to 'our British cousins,' or speak of Germany as 'Fatherland,' or of our country as a 'Greater Ireland,' this is not American citizenship, but is racial sectarianism, and as such to be condemned as reprehensible, since it retards the bringing about of the racial unity which is he first and fundamental requirement of a stable nation."

* * *

"It must be realized," points out Dr. Steinmetz, who, by the way, is a keen student of social forces as well as a great electrician, "that it was the mixed races which have done the world's work, and it was the vitality given by the mixture of races which has created all great nations. Thus England as a nation was formed by the mixture of the Norman and the Anglo-Saxon; France by the Celt, Roman and Frank; far back before history tradition tells of the creation of the Roman nation by the tri-union of tribes—even the name 'tribe' contains the root 'three," in memory of this formation of the Roman nation from three branches.

"Thus there is no doubt that had it not been for the mixture of the various leading races of the world, America would not be what it is today.

"The characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon is his great initiative. He is the empire-builder. To him is due the push and the energy which have opened and conquered the New World.

"The Teutons, by their racial characteristics, are the great organizers. We only need, in the history of our nation, think of a few names, as Astor, Goethals, Guggenheim, Harriman, Roosevelt, Schiff, Schwab, Strauss, Vanderbilt, Vanderlip, Rockefeller Wanamaker, etc.

"Characteristic of the Celtic race is the strong collectivistic temperament, associated with an individualistic nature, which specially fits them as administrators. Thus the Celt has been most successful in politics. It is characteristic that America's largest city (New York) has been ruled almost uninterruptedly by the Celtic race.

"And now about the contribution to America by the other races, outside of these three leading civilized races of to-day? Do not let us forget that the greatest of all Americans was neither Anglo-Saxon, nor Teuton; nay, was not even Aryan, but was of the Turanian race—Abe Lincoln."

* * *

My spirit has pass'd in compassion and determination around the whole earth,
I have look'd for equals and lovers and round them ready for me in all lands,
I think some divine rapport has equalized me with them.

All you continentals of Asia, Africa, Europe, Australia, indifferent of place!
All you on the numberless islands of the archipelagoes of the sea!
And you of centuries hence when you listen to me!
And you each and everywhere whom I specify not, but include just the same!
Health to you! good will to you all, from me and America sent!
Each of us is inevitable,
Each of us limitless—each of us with his or her right upon the earth,
Each of us allow'd the eternal purports of the earth.
Each of us here as divinely as any is here.

Chicken Delight

Recipe from Mrs. L. Heyward Timberlake proprietress Tim's T Table Lynchburg, Va.

1 cup chicken stock (or ½ stock, ½ water)
½ cup Libby's Milk
⅓ cup sifted flour

Blend flour with the cold liquid and heat to boiling, stirring constantly; cook fifteen minutes and add—

1 pimento
½ cup mushrooms
½ cup celery (cut in small pieces and parboiled till tender)
¼ green pepper
Salt and pepper
¾ tablespoon Sherry O
1 hard-cooked egg
1 cup chicken meat (cut in small pieces)

Heat slowly and serve on toast garnished with parsley. This makes six generous servings.

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every 16 oz. can

Mrs. Timberlake makes her specialty, Chicken Delight, with Libby's Milk

A place where exceptionally delicious foods are temptingly served is Tim's T Table in Lynchburg, Virginia.

And among all the good things served there, none is more popular than Chicken Delight. It's a specialty of Mrs. Timberlake's, a dish that she makes as you do your favorite—with every care to have it perfect.

That she uses Libby's Milk in it, as shown by the recipe above, is just another bit of evidence that this milk is best for cooking purposes.

Thousands of other good cooks are using it regularly; so many of them, in fact, that Libby's is now generally known as "the milk that good cooks use".

7½ teaspoons of butter fat in every can

They notice, as you will, that anything made with Libby's Milk has greater richness, finer flavor. It must, for there are 7½ teaspoons of pure butter fat in every 16 oz. can of this milk—the very same butter fat that makes cream and butter such great enrichers of foods.

Cow's milk made double rich

Unlike ordinary milk, you see, Libby's Milk comes only from selected herds in the finest dairy sections of the country — those places where ideal pasture lands abound, and where men specialize in raising cows that give exceptionally rich milk.

Not only that. At our condenseries in the heart of these favored dairy sections, we remove more than half the moisture from this fine milk, making it double rich.

Nothing is added to it; none of its food values taken away. But to bring it safely to you who live, perhaps, many hundreds of miles away we must seal it in air-tight cans and sterilize it.

Have richer dishes tonight

Order a can of Libby's Milk from your grocer today. Try it tonight in one of your favorite dishes, in place of ordinary milk. See what wholly new richness it gives. And what fine flavor. You'll want Libby's Milk for all your cooking!

Write for free recipe folder

Upon request we'll gladly send you, free, a copy of a new folder which contains a number of excellent recipes sent us by good cooks who use Libby's Milk.

Greece Orders Return of Lands Seized From Bulgars

ATHENS, Sept. 3 (AP)—As an assurance of its desire to cultivate friendly relations with Bulgaria under the new regime, the Greek government has notified the provincial authorities that all Bulgarians interned on Aaegean islands from Western Thrace during the operations of the war with Turkey must be returned to their original homes.

The restoration of all seized properties of these interned inhabitants, on no more direct proof than the testimony of their neighbors, has also been ordered.

All Bulgarians who have fled from Western Thrace will also be permitted to return to their homes, and their properties which have been seized by military authorities or by deserters, will be restored on the conditions as those of the inhabitants now released from internment.

It is estimated that these orders of restitution affect between 150,000 and 200,000 persons.

Life Restored To Child After Death on Operating Table

LONDON, Sept. 20, — (Canadian Press Cable.)—A remarkable story of a child dying during an operation and then being brought back to life for a short time was told to a coroner at Westminister last night at an inquest on the death of a nine-year-old girl.

The girl had undergone several operations and recently underwent an other. Her heart stopped beating. She died. Massage and other remedies were applied and her heart began to beat again. The heart kept on beating for an hour and a quarter and the girl began to breathe. She was taken back to the ward in the hospital from which she had been brought but collapsed and died.

The hospital doctor said the girl's death was due to heart failure.

The coroner said a miracle had been performed and had it not been for the condition of the girl's blood the chances were that she might have recovered completely.

"My celery seems to wilt so quickly and I cannot get it fresh again," sighed Mrs. Newlywed.

"Leave it for a few hours in cold water to which a little salt has been added. This will freshen it wonderfully," said Mrs. Neighbor.

HEALTH HINTS

The more tired one is the more difficult it is to keep home conditions up to the top notch, says Nurse, and, too, the more important this is. Hunger is actually a matter of the mind and body. It is not fancy but is a solid and serious fact that a soiled tablecloth will sometimes prevent the flow of gastric juices and start indigestion.

A large amount of nervous exhaustion is because many women of the present day do not think it necessary to serve a dinner well. After one has been working all day long it is a fine thing, too, for the worker to spend five minutes at their toilet before sitting down to the meal.

It is not well to eat in the same clothes that you have worn during the long working day. This is not a question of looks; it is the appetite. There will be more grastric juices and the food will digest better if you have on fresh clothing. Rinse the mouth well before starting to eat and eat very slowly. Chew thoroughly but not enough to destroy the taste of your food.

The most usual form of nasal catarrh, says Nurse, is inflommation of the mucous membrance. Undoubtedly it affacts the general health and absorbs certain nutriment that should go to other parts of the body. It also affects other nerves that lie in the region of the affliction Nurse advises this remedy.

Get some borac acid powder and an ordinary nasal syringe. But a teaspoon of the powder into a pint of hot water and, when dissolved thoroughly, syringe the inside of the nose. After this sniff the powder up into each nostril. This should be done each morning and again at night just before retiring. It will not be long before you will begin to feel benefited. It should, however, be kept up for a month or more twice a day, then once a day will be sufficient.

Why is a parcel that has been undone and tied up again like a well-known historical event?

Because it is recorded.

AT THE CITY HALL

THE regular meeting of the council was held yesterday afternoon. Mayor Cook presided and Councillors Martin, Outerbridge, Vinnicombe, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.

Very little business came up for discussion at this session.

The Nfld. Motor Association asked for information concerning Government grants and what proportion is allocated the City of St. John's for the building and maintenance of streets. The information will be forwarded.

The Nfld. Board of Trade notified the Council that the following members had been appointed to co-operate in the management of Bowring Park, namely: Sir Edgar Bowring, L. C. Outerbridge and D. M. Baird. The three members selected from the Council Board are Messrs Ryan, Dowden and Collier These gentlemen, with the Mayor ex-officio, will form the Bowring Park Committee.

Application of Mr. Geo. M. Browne to have certain repairs made to Coleman's Lane, off Circular Road, was granted.

The following matters were referred to the city engineer:

Communication from J. Quigley, re condition of sidewalk, Pleasant St.; petition of residents Casey St., to have the tank recently removed, placed in its former position.

Permits were granted the following subject to the approval of the city engineer: W. Spurrell, extension to dwelling, Quidi Vidi Road; W. Chafe, repairs to dwelling, Stewart Avenue; Maritime Drug & Commission Coy., to erect sign, Water Street.

Mr. James Murdock applied for new street line, Cockpit Road. This will be looked after by the city engineer.

Regarding the using of buildings in residential sections for laundry purposes, the City Solicitor informed the Board he was of opinion nothing could be done in the case of those already established, but that they could withhold permits from any future applicants. With regard to complaints made by owners of adjacent buildings, he stated this was a private matter over which the Council had no control.

Medical Officer of Health reported eleven new cases of scarlet fever in the city during the week.

The reports of the city engineer and sanitary supervisor were tabled.

Accounts for the week were ordered paid.

The meeting then adjourned.

FAREWELL MEETING WESLEY CHURCH

Presentation Made To Prominent Church Worker.

Last night at Wesley primary room the ladies of the W.M.S. and the Ladies Aid, gave a tea in honor of Mrs. James Gushue, who for a long number of years was active in both branches of the church, to show their appreciation of the faithful work performed by her.

She was presented with a purse of gold. The address was read by Mrs. R. Cross for the W.M.S. and Mrs. Wm. Whelan, for the Ladies Aid. The presentation was made by Mrs. Robt. Joyce, President of the W.M.S., a Life Members Gold Pin was also presented by Mrs. Crane. Addresses were given by Mrs. E. Lindsay, Branch President, Mrs. J. Peter, Branch Secretary, Mrs F. B. Boone, Hillyard Leslie and the Pastor.

Solos were rendered by Mrs. F. B. Boone and Miss Way after partaking of the good things provided by the ladies. Hymn "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung, closing with mizpah.

Mrs. Gushue with her daughter, is leaving next week for Boston, U.S.A. to make her future home with her sons, George, Ray and Fred, who now hold position under Uncle Sam.

C.L.B. O.C.

The Old Comrades' Association held their annual meeting last night, President Ern Chafe in the chair, with Colonel Rendell, Majors Outerbridge and Williams, Captain Len Stick and Lieut Hayward of the officers' mess. present.

Treasurer Bradbury submitted the annual report, showing the Association to be in a strong condition. The Old Comrades are handing to the Brigade a cheque for $500 as their contribution towards the upkeep of the Brigade for 1923. Col. Walter Rendell conducted the election of officers for the ensuing year, resulting as follows:

President—John Crane.
Vice-Pres.—Herbert Crossman.
Secretary—Samuel Gardner.
Treasurer—Arthur Thomas.
Chaplain—Rev. J. Brinton.
Guard, George England.
Executive Committee—Messrs E. Chafe, K. Ruby, A. Wyatt and Lieut. H. Hayward.

Susu Sails

The ss Susu, Captain Roberts, sailed on the Fogo service at 10 a. m, yesterday, taking a full freight and the following passengers:—Mesdames E. Brett, E. P. Parsons, E. Hann, Misses J. Young, M. Ralph, G. Head; Messrs M. Brett, G. W. Snow, E. P. Parsons, P. Coleridge and Fred. Oakley.

At the Crosbie—C. T. Ava, Toronto; J. C. Willock, Montreal; C. H. Kinch, Barbados; C. A. Redmond, Halifax, C. Coles, Halifax, N.S.; W. H. Taylor, St. George's; J. Kopstein, Montreal; R. Duff, Carbonear.

Business men who want profitable results advertise in are always welcomed.

POLICE COURT

The old man, Wm. French, who was recently released from the Penitentiary because he had to be sent there on a vagrancy charge having no home was picked up by the police last night. The unfortunate man tottered to the bar. This paper has several times called attention to his condition and pointed out that able-bodied men were housed and fed at public expense while this poor unfortunate is allowed to perish. Judge Morris said he greatly sympathized with the old man and characterized it as uncivilized to have him wandering about liable to die from exposure, while beds were occupied by those who should be working.

A case of assault, where the father of an unfortunate girl pleaded guilty to assaulting a carpenter from the Higher Levels, was dismissed. The reasons given by the defendant was that he believed the complaintant was encouraging his wayward daughter to keep away from her home.

The case against Joseph Burnstein for a breach of the Prohibition Act occupied the attention of the Court all the forenoon. Defendant conducted his own case and called three witnesses to-day and contradicted the evidence of Jarvis and his daughter. Burnstein contends he gave the defendant Jarvis free drinks and sheltered him because he was a crippled man. Jarvis promised to repay Burnstein by sending him a package containing a drop of White Eagle, from St. Pierre and a bundle of fish, but denied receiving payment for the liquor given the crown witness. Judge Morris said he would give a judgment this afternoon.

Junior Football

The first game of the play-off for the Junior Championship took place last night at St. George's Field before a fairly large attendance of spectators. The game was fast and resulted in a win for the Cadets, by a score of 1 to 0.

Wesley won the toss and took advantage of the sun and wind. Play opened briskly, the forwards of both teams playing good combination at times. Wesley pressed matters for a while and bombarded the Cadet goal, but without result. After changing over, the Cadets became aggressive but Wesley backs guarded their territory well and there was no scoring.

Wesley now brought the ball up field, to be returned again, and a scrimmage occurred in front of Wesley goal. The ball had just been cleared out of danger when Dooley, the Cadet centre-half, obtained control, and with a beautiful drop shot, scored the winning goal.

Mr. T. Delahaunty having resigned as official referee, it was hoped to secure Mr. Ern Churchill, but at the last moment, he found it impossible to atend, and the position was admirably filled by Mr. Fred Brien.

The championship will be decided by a round of games. The next game will be Holy Cross vs. Wesley, on Monday evening.

LOST — Last night at the football game, a Waterman's Fountain Pen with gold bands. Finder will be rewarded on leaving same at George Davey & Co. 1i.

How To Cross The Street

It is being urged by the Canadian Safety League that there should be debated a few minutes each day in the public schools of this and other Canadian cities to instructing children in the very great need of exercising greater care when crossing streets. Since the automobile has become such an important factor in our streets, all efforts to lessen accidents there cannot but have public approbation. It is to be sincerely hoped that the League will get the hearty co-operation of school principals in its commendable campaign. Street fatalities have now become so numerous, in practically all cities, as to create profound concern. Undoubtedly the problem of lessening these accidents is a complex one. It would be unjust to put all the blame for accidents on the shoulders of drivers. On the other hand, while the duty certainly devolves on pedestrians to "stop, look and listen" before venturing to cross streets, they should not be in danger of their lives if they chance to be off their guard for a moment. It is astonishing, however, when the peril of the streets is taken into consideration, to note the lack of care with which so many people leave the sidewalks and plunge into congested traffic.

In the matter of reckless driving, it is to the credit of the Automobile Association of this city that it most vigorously assails it; but there are always the uncontrollable ones. It is such drivers, and the thorghtless pedestrain, who supply the bulk of the street accidents. The most convincing proof is to hand that number less accidents could be prevented if proper forethought was observed on the part of the man on the street and the man at the wheel.—Montreal Star.

"How can I prevent the colors running in my socks and stockings," asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"If a handful of salt is added to the water the socks or stockings are washed in, I am sure the colors will not run," replied Mrs. Neighbor.

"I often burn my hands while I am cooking, what can I use to take out the burn," asked Mrs. Neflywed.

A little oil and flour is splendid and limewater and oil is good to apply. Wrap the burn in a soft cloth to keep out the air," replied Mrs. Neighbor.

The man who shouts for help is not the one who helps.

Rotarians Dine Wistrict Governor at Donovans

St. John's Rotary Club tendered a dinner to Rotarian Harvey L. Spangler, Governor of the 32nd District, at Donovans last evening. Rotarian Dr. Tim. Mitchell presided and there was a large gathering, including several guests.

Following the toast to the King, Rotary International was proposed by the chairman, who introduced the District Governor. The latter's reply was a master-piece of after-dinner speaking, and was listened to with deep interest by the gathering.

St. John's Rotary Club was proposed by Dr. J. Alex Robinson, in a happy speech and responded to by Rotarian Ernest A. Watson.

Rotarian Ruben Horwood spoke eloquently and pointedly to the toast "St. John's Boy Life," which was replied to in an eloquent and scholarly manner by Rt. Rev. Mgr. McDermott.

"Our Guests" was proposed by Rotarian Chas. E. Hunt, in his inimitably humorous manner, and was replied to by Mr. C. E. A. Jeffery.

The health of the chairman was proposed by Hon. H. A. Winter, B.A., and responded to by Dr. Mitchell.

Rotary songs, in which all took part, solos and duets, by Rotarians Williams, Ruggles and Kearney, with Rotarian Hutton at the piano interspersed the speaking. At the close, District Governor Spangler said a few words of appreciation, which will no doubt prove an incentive to the St. John's Rotary Club to greater efforts in years to come.

The singing of 'God Save The King' and 'Auld Lang Syne' brought a very pleasant evening to a close.

Motors Collide

A bad motor smash occurred at the corner of Pleasant Street and Patrick Streets about 5 o'clock last evening, when Mr. Dugald Munn's car collided with Louis Crocker's taxi.

Munn's car was bound west along Patrick Street, and Crocker's was coming down Pleasant Street. The impact was so great that the taxi was turned over on its side and considerably wrecked, while Mr. Crocker received slight wounds about the head.

Munn's car was also damaged, but the occupants escaped injury.

This is the second smash-up in which Crocker has figured recently, as a few weeks ago he collided with a street car and had his car put out of commission.

Tie-Cup Championship Will Be Played Tonight

This evening the Tie-cup championship game will be played on St. George's Field, and in order to avoid playing in the dark, the game will start at 5.45 with referee Ern Church ill in charge.

The contesting teams are the Guards and the Cadets who were the runners-up. The meet should provide one of the most exciting games of the season.

Concerning Dr. Hanson

On Wednesday night at the Presbyterian Hall, the first of a series of services was held in preparation for the visit of Dr. Hanson on the 14th of October.

The subject of study was "Revivals of the Bible, their nature and manifestation." Special prayer was offered for Dr. Hanson, the Kirk people and the community, that all may benefit by these services. Much interest has already been manifested, and as the time draws near, will increase.

On every morning of the week commencing October 14th, there will be teaching services, and in the evening they will be of a more general nature, to which the public are invited, as there is to be nohting denominational in any of the services.

Magical Beautifiers For Women

Women everywhere are trying all kinds of beautifiers, only to find that their effects are transitory. The first requisite of beauty is health. Without it the steps lag, eyes are lusterless, the dark circles appear beneath them, the complexion becomes sallow, and almost invariably the underlying cause is some ailment peculiar to women. There is a very inexpensive remedy for this condition in Lydia E. Pinkham's vegetable compound, which for nearly fifty years has been relieving women from some of the worst forms of female ills. Why not let it restore you to health and beauty and the joys of living?

LEAGUE GIVES ITALY NO QUARTER

50 PERISH IN WYOMING RAILWAY WRECK

WORLD FORUM SCORES ITALY FOR DISREGARD OF OBLIGATIONS

Council of Ambassadors Is Condemned For Making Greece Pay Indemnity To Italy. Question of Coercion Must Be Set At Rest.

GENEVA, Sept. 28—Well worthy being characterized a world forum, with voices rising from four continents was the great debate in the assembly of the League of Nations to-night, when the delegates, while generally approving the decision of the Council of the League, to submit the question of the interpretation of the covenant of the League to jurists, scorned the old time practice of the bigger states, coercing the weaker and also sent out a warning that henceforth violence must cease and peaceful methods be followed in harmonizing national differences. That it was a hard session for Italy was the unanimous opinion in League circles. Signr Salandra, head of the Italian delegation, said no thing during the debate as speaker after speaker directly or indirectly accused Italy of not living up to her solemn engagements. He even remained silent when Gilbert Murray of Great Britain openly reproached the League for what he termed its neglect in protecting weak communities against the chicane and tyranny of strong representatives. Several countries attacked the Council of Ambassadors for making Greece pay Italy sixty million lire as indemnity, and criticised the ambassadors for refusing to allow the court of International Justice fix the amount of reparation in accordance with previous understanding. Lord Robert Cecil in defending his own country's past conduct, said that the world wanted this question of coercion set at rest, not on account of the past but for the future, and hence the proposed interpretation of the covenant. He remarked that the council would be free to act when it received the report of the jurists and that it might even decide to re-submit the matter to the permanen court in an attempt to establish principles for the future. "We have taken one more step toward the re-establishment of the region of law among nations and ending the system of violence which always is coincident with injustice," remarked Lord Robert. Prince Mirza Kahn, of Persia, said his instructions from Teheran were to insist upon the competency of the league.

German Chancellor Is Working Towards Readjustment Of Foreign Affairs

Government Will Use Most Effective Means To Quell Attempts To Jeopardise Administration.

BERLIN, Sept. 28—With the Munich situation having calmed down and the internal situation generally safeguarded for the time being through the provisions of the Government emergency proclamation the Chancellor is directing official activities toward accomplishing a speedy liquidation of the situation in the Ruhr and Rhineland with the purpose facilitating an early readjustment of Germany's foreign affairs. An official communication issued to-night sets forth the reasons which urompted the Government to proclaim a state of emergency throughout the federal territory. It says the Government's act of emergency has been wrongly interpreted abroad. This precautionary measure, the official statement declares, was dictated primarily by a determination to forestall any attempt to create disturbance. It adds, the Government proposes to make the most effective use of such defensive resources as are at its disposal and promptly quell any attempt to place the Government of the Republic in jeopardy.

KINDRED OF THE DUST

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XXXVI

His canine loyalty bade Mr. Daney defend The Lairds Ewe Lambs.

'Well, maybe they didn't recognize you," he protested. "A good deal of water has run under a number of bridges since the McKaye girls saw you last."

"In that event, Mr. Daney, I charge that their manners would have been extremely bad. I know town dogs that smile at me when I smile at them. However, much as I would like to assure you that they didn't know me, I must insist, Mr. Daney, that they did."

"Well, now, how do you know, Nan?"

"A little devil took possession of me, Mr. Daney, and inspired me to smoke them out. I walked up and held out my hand to Jane. 'How do you do, Jane,' said I. 'I'm Nan Brent. Have you forgotten me?' "

Mr. Daney raised both arms towards the ceiling.

" 'Oh, God! Cried the Woodcock,—and away he flew!' What did the chit say?"

"She said, 'Why, not at all,' and turned her back on me. I then proffered Elizabeth a similar greeting and said, 'Surely, Elizabeth, you have not forgotten me!' Elizabeth was rael funny. She replied: 'So sorry! I've always been absent minded!' She loked at me steadily with such cool mirth in her eyes—she has nice eyes, too—and I must have had mirth in mine, also, because I remember that at precisely that minute I thought up a perfectly wonderful joke on Elizabeth and Jane and their mother. Of course the poor Laird will not see the point of the joke, but then he's the innocent byestander, and innocent bye-staders are always getting hurt."

"Ah, do not hurt him!" Daney pleaded anxiously. He's a good, kind manly gentleman. Spare him! spare him, my dear!"

"Oh, I wouldn't hurt him, Mr. Daney, if I did not know I had the power to heal his hurts."

Suddenly she commenced to laugh, albeit there was in her laugh a quality which almost caused Mr. Daney to imagine that he had hackles on his back and that they were rising. He much preferred the note of anger of a few minutes previous; with a rush all of his old apprehensions returned, and he rasped out irritably:

"Well, well! What's the joke, any how? Tell me and perhaps I may laugh too."

"Oh, no, Mr. Daney, you'd never laugh at this one. You'd weep."

"Try me."

"Very well. You will recall, Mr. Daney, that when Mrs. McKaye rang me up in New York, she was careful even while asking me to return, to let me know my place?"

"Yes, yes. I was listening on the line. I heard her and I thought she was a bit raw. But no matter. Proceed."

Ended the Stiffness in his wrist

Isaac C. Mann, of Matapedia, Que., has written us as follows:

"Fourteen years ago I got the cords of my left wrist nearly severed, and for about nine months I had no use of my hand. I tried other liniments, also doctors, and was receiving no benefit. Under persuasion from a friend I got Minard's Liniment and used one bottle which completely ended my trouble. I have been using Minard's Liniment in my family ever since and find it the same as when I first used it". 30

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

"Well since she asked me to return to Port Agnew, I'm wondering who is going to ask me to go away again?"

I'll be shot if I will! Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha!" And Mr. Daney threw back his head and laughed the most enjoyable laugh he had known since the night an intinerant hypnotist, entertaining the citizens of Port Agnew, had requested an adventurous gentleman in the audience who thought he could not be hypnotized, to walk up and prove it. Dirty Dan O'Leary had volunteered, had been mesmerized after a struggle, and, upon being told that he was Dick Whittington's cat, had proceeded to cut some feline capers that would have tickled the sensibilities of a totem pole. Mr. Daney's honest cachinations were now so infectious that Nan commenced to laugh with him—heartily, but no longer with that strident little note of resentment, and cumulatively, as Mr. Daney's mirth mounted until the honest fellow's tears cascaded across his ruddy cheeks.

"Egad, Nan," he declared presently, "but you have a rare sense of humor! Yes, do it. Do it. Make 'em all come down—right here to the Saw dust Pile! Make 'em remember you—all three of 'em—make 'em say please! Yes, sir! 'Please Nan, forgive me for forgetting you. Please Nan forgive me for smiling like the head of an old fiddle. Please, Nan get out of Port Agnew so we can sleep nights. Please, Nan, be careful not to say "Good-by." Please, Nan, knock out a couple of your front teeth and wear a black wig and a sunbonnet, so nobody'll regognize you when you leave, follow you, and learn your address.' " He paused to wipe his eyes. "Why, dog my cats, girl, you've got 'em where the hair is short; so make 'em toe the scratch!"

"Well, of course," Nan reminded him., "they are not likely to toe the scratch unless they receive a hint that being scratches is going to be fashionable in our best Port Agnew circles this winter.

Mr. Daney arched his wild eyebrows, pursed his lips, popped his eyes, and loked at Nan over the rims of his spectacles.

"Very well, my dear girl, I'll be the goat. A lesson in humility will not be wasted on certain parties. But suppose they object? Suppose they buck, and pitch and sidestep and brawl and cary on? What then?"

"Why," Nan replied innocently, regarding him in friendly fashion with those wistful eyes, "you might hint that I'm liable to go to the Laird and tell him I regard him as a very poor sport, indeed, to expect me to give up his son, in view of the fact that his mother sent for me to save that son's life. Do you know, dear Mr. Daney, I suspect that if The Laird knew his wife had compromised him so, he would be a singularly wild Scot!"

"Onward Christian soldier, marching as to war!" cried Mr. Daney, and, seizing his his hat from the table, he fled into the night.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

UPON reaching his home, Mr. Daney telephoned to Mrs. McKaye

"It is important," he informed her, "that you, Miss Jane and Miss Elizabeth come down to my office to-morrow for a conference. I would come up to the Dreamerie to see you, but Donald is home now, and his father will be with him; so I would prefer to see you down-town. I have some news of interest for you."

The hint of news of interest was sufficient to secure from Mrs. McKaye a promise to call at his office with the girls at ten o'clock the following morning.

"What is this interesting news, Andrew?" Mrs. Daney asked, with well-simulated disinterestedness she was knitting for the French was relief committee a pair of those prodigious socks with which well-meaning souls all over the United States have inspired many a poor devil of a poilu with the thought that the French must be regarded by us as a Brobgingnagian race.

"We're arranging a big blow-out unknown to The Laird and Donald, to celebrate the boy's return to health. I'm planning to shut down the mill and the logging camps for three days," he replied glibly. Af late he was finding it much easier to lie to her than to tell the truth, and he had observed with satisfaction that Mrs. Daney's bovine brain assimilated either with equal avidity.

"How perfectly lovely!" she cooed, and dropped a stitch which later would be heard from on the march, in the shape of a blister on a Gallic heel. "You're so thoughtful and kind, Andrew! Sometimes I wonder if the McKayes really appreciate your worth."

gimatically, and went off to bed.

It was with a feeling of alert interest that he awaited in his office, the following morning, the arrival of the ladies from The Dreamerie. They arrived half an hour late, very well content with themselves and the world in general, and filling Mr. Daney's office with the perfume of their presence. They appeared to be in such good fettle, indeed, that Mr. Daney took a secret savage delight in dissipating their nonchalance.

"Well, ladies, I lecided yesterday that it was getting along toward the season of the year when my thoughts stray, as usual, toward the Sawdust Pile as a drying yard. So I went down to see if Nan Brent had abandoned it again—and sure enough she hadn't." He paused exasperatingly, after the fashion of an orator who realizes that he has awakened in his audience an alert and respectful interest. "Fine kettle of fish brewing down there," he resumed darkly, and paused again, glanced at the ceiling critically as if searching for leaks, smacked his lips and murmured confidentially a single word: "Snag!"

" 'Snag!' " In chorus.

"Snag!" In some unaccountable manner, it apepars that you ladies have aroused in Nan Brent a spirit of antagonism——"

"The idea "

"Fiddlesticks!"

ADVERTISE IN THE "ADVOCATE"

Orphanaid Club Awards Prize

A meeting of the Orphanaid Club was held last evening. The President, Hon. Dr. Mosdell occupied the chair, and various matters were discussed, all present taking part in the discussion. The Secretary, Mr. Reg. Dowden, reported that he had scrutinized the ticket held by Mr. A. Curnew for the first prize, $1,500.00.

On motion of Hon. S. D. Blandford and H. G. Press, President Mosdell and Treasures Stafford were authorized to sign the cheque, and the lucky winner received it this morning from Hon. Dr. Mosdell.

The regular meetings will begin next week, and the club is looking forward to a busy winter, with the main object of helping the orphans.

The Orphanaid Club is composed of a dozen or so gentlemen who give much of their time to help along the little fatherless ones who need assistance.

The Daily News this morning confirms a very discouraging report from Bell Island ore mines which gained currency through the city late last evening. The report is verified in a telephone message from Manager C. B. Archibald, who states that another slope, in addition to the one closed down some weeks ago, would cease work immediately.

Questioned as to the cause of this further curtailment in operations, Mr. Archibald said it was due to the condition of the market, there being very little demand for ore. The manager could give no information as to how long the close-down was liable to last.

With the closing down of this second slope, not more than 1200 men will be employed in the mines, and the output is a serious one both for Conception Bay and the country in general. Some weeks ago over 200 men were paid off at Bell Island when one of the slopes closed down, and this additional curtailment of operations brings the total of those paid off within a month ors o, up to 500.

The men affected by the previous close-down, belonged mostly to the mainland districts of Conception Bay, but it is understood that by the closing down of the second slope, a large number of permanent residents of the Island will be out of work.

NOTES FROM PARADISE

(Editor Evening Advocate)

Dear Sir—Will you please allow me space to record the death of our dear friend of this place, Bertha Harvey Sheppard, who departed this life on August 22nd, at the General Hospital, St. John's.

She was the youngest daughter of the late George and Rebecca Tucker of Port de Grave, C.B.

Deceased lady had been ill all the summer and was taken to the General Hospital, St. John's for treatment.

Shortly after she arrived in the city, however, she passed away, and was brought home again, and buried on August 26th, by the side of her oldest son. The funeral was largely attended.

Left to mourn her are husband, three children, three sisters, and one brother. Mr. Sheppard wishes to thank all the people for their kindness shown his wife while she was ill, including the people of Leading Tickles, Point Leamington, and the crews of the Portia and Prospero and the doctors and the nurses of the hospital.

The school here was opened last week.

Miss V. Snow, from Campbellton has replaced Miss D. Pennell as teacher here this year. Miss Pennell left for the United States in June.

Rev. R. Atkinson is on the mission this year in place of Rev. E. Lacey,

Yours truly
CHAS. G. ROLFE.

Africa Offers Trade Chances

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28—(A.P.)—The Union of South Africa as a customer for American made goods is increasing in importance and is improving in character of trade, according to Trade Commissioner Stevenson, of the Department of Commerce, who recently returned to this city after three years of service at Johannesburg.

While in pre-war days the American share of South Africa's imports was insignificant, and during the war it was abnormally large, it has now settled down to a substantial amount and represents business secured after keen competition. Since the office of the American Trade Commissioner at Johannesburg was opened, more than 100 American goods agencies have been made operative.

In order to establish the desirability of South Africa as a market in the minds of American shippers and manufacturers, Mr. Stevenson is now making a tour of trade centres, describing its advantages.

Trawlers to Operate Inshore

(Canadian Fisherman.)

By order-in-council of August 17 steam trawlers are permitted for this year to operate on the Atlantic coast within the twelve mile limit, but not within the three mile zone, during the months of August, September and October. An afficer of the fisheries department is to be placed on one trawler operating in a previously restricted zone to the east of Prince Edward Island, and another on one operating in St. George's Bay, to insure that the equipment of inshore fishermen is not disturbed.

By order-in-council of December 28, 1916 trawlers were forbidden to operate within the twelve mile limit along the Atlantic seaboard, the area within twelve miles being reserved for the operations of the inshore fishermen, with St. Peter's and Chedabucto Bays totally restricted to the use of the latter. Recently, however, representatives were made to authorities that sufficient quantities of fish to meet the requirements of the fresh fish markets are not obtainable from the inshore fishermen on the portions of the coast from which fish suitable for the purpose can be drawn. Experience has shown that during the months of August, September and October the haddock taken by steam trawlers on the outside banks are thin and flabby and unsuitable for the fish trade. It was suggested, therefore, that, as fish of excellent quality is obtainable during these months in certain more inshore areas, particularly in St. George's Bay and the east end of Prince Edward Island trawlers should be permitted to fish within the twelve mile limit, assurance being given that the hand trawls of inshore fishermen would not be interferred with. And has been said, the Government has consented, but should the officers placed aboard the trawlers find that inshore fishermen are being tampered with in their operations, then the privilege will cease immediately.

GANG OF N. Y. THUGS WOUND ELECTRICIAN AND ATTACK FIANCEE

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Scores of residents of Central Park west and 103rd stheet, aroused by 40 or more shots, joined in pursuit of two men, believed to be members of a gang of six who early today stabbed a young man, left him bleeding to death in Central Park, and then assaulted his fiancee, who had just come from Germany.

The chase led over a cliff, through backyards and over walls. The two suspects were finally captured. Both were identified by their girl victim, police say.

George Vollond, 21, of Brooklyn, an electrician, was stabbed by the gang. He is in a critical condition at a hospital. One of the seven stab wounds penetrated his right lung. He was covered with newspapers and left bleeding to death by the atackers.

His fiancee, Margaret Lachman, 19 was cut and bruised, and was in a dazed condition when rescued.

Vollond, who had saved the money to bring Miss Lachman from Germany two months ago, met her last night near the park. They were seated on a bench near the lake opposie 103rd street, when six men approached.

Rings Fire-alarm.

Asked for a match and a cigaret, Vollond was reaching in his pockets, when one man struck him. In the fight that followed he finally collapsed from loss of blood. Two hours later he regained consciousness and reached a fire-aarm box.

DON'T SNEEZE ON SUNDAY!

Don't Sneeze on Sunday!

Superstitions and Customs of the Past

According to Lancashire folk-lore, much depends upon the day of the week in the matter of sneeking. It may bring the sneezer either good or bad luck:—

Sneeze on a Monday, you sneeze for danger.

Sneeze on a Tuesday, you kiss a stranger.

Sneeze on a Wednesday, you sneeze for a letter.

Sneeze on a Thursday for something better.

Sneeze on a Friday, you sneeze for sorrow.

Sneeze on a Saturday, your sweetheart to-morrow.

Sneeze on a Sunday, for safety seek;

The Devil will have you the rest of the week!

Chained to a Rock.

The old custom of saying "God bless you!" to a sneezer dates back to the days of Greek mythology. A youh named Prometheus is supposed to have incurred the wrath of Jupiter. As a punishment he was chained to a rock, where an eagle fed upon his liver every day, the destroyed part growing again in the night! After he had been there some time, Hercules came and killed the eagle, unchaining Prometheus at the same time.

The reason Jupiter was so incensed against this young man was because he had stolen some fire from Heaven. Prometheus had stolen this fire for the purpose of putting it up the nostrils of a man he had fashioned in mud, and so giving the image life. As the image began to live, it sneezed, and that's how the custom started.

In olden days, if someone sneezed when a man was dressing in the morning, he would promptly return to bed to escape the bad luck that would otherwise fall upon him during the day.

According to the wise men of Ancient Greece, sneezing from noon to midnight is good, and from night to noon extremely bad.

"Will you please tell me if married and unmarried women carny the same size visiting cards." asked Marjorie

"Yes, except in the case of a debutante, then they are a little smaller," said her married sister.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SATURDAY, SEPT. 29th., 1923.

IS IT A CRIME TO HELP THE FISHERMEN?

There are people who, as a rule, pretend to be well disposed towards their fellow countrymen, but who, now and then, betray their real feeling of contemptuous dislike. There are also those who loudly declare their approval of methods and measures calculated to increase human happiness and comfort, but frequently explode into spiteful and sneering abuse of any institution established for the advancement of justice and the good of the common people.

During the past decade or so, the country has become well acquainted with the periodical, if not continual, outburst of a flood of opposition and ill-will on the part of individuals who pretend they are working for the country's general good and yet are solely concerned with lining their own pockets at the expense of the working classes. At ordinary times the intelligent observer will penetrate their hypocrisy, though their inward sentiments are best discerned by the general public when the common people themselves take action on their own behalf.

During the past week particularly have these people, who are among the members of the Board of Trade, allowed vent to their true feelings.

They have seized the opportunity of publicly discussing a business project (which may or may not materialize), to pour upon the Fishermen's Protective Union, a veritable flood of abuse and mockery. In their political utterances as well as in their every day political conduct, they have clearly shown they hate the Union just as bitterly and vindictively as they did when the Union flags were first hoisted in the north.

Why do they hate the Union?

Why do they, in President Coaker's absence, yap at his organization and his work among the fishermen like so many puppies behind a fence?

These men must remember that whatever they think, it is not a crime to help the poor man; and in the eyes of many thousands of toilers in this country that has been President Coaker's only crime. Since he stepped into the arena of public life, to help the poor man has been his ambition. Towards that end he has slaved night and day for years, defending the fishermen and fighting their assailments and being abused for his work by those who were his enemies then and now.

During the life of the Union, the sealers, lumbermen and fishermen have had cause to thank God for Coaker. He recognized these toilers as men worthy of the best the country could give them.

No man in Terra Nova's history has worked harder for them and, despite the bitterness of opposition, he succeeded not only in placing laws on the Statute Book which recognised the toilers as men and not as beasts, but in raising a social, political and industrial structure in the north which cannot be destroyed.

Is there anything criminal in working for the people so unselfishly? The criminality lies in the hearts of those self-centred men who would reward such efforts with abuse and falsehood.

Around Sir William have been gathered intelligent and true-hearted men, who undoubtedly can take their place among the highest types of Newfoundland manhood. They experienced the miserable conditions under which their fathers and they had lived, knew they should be remedied, and felt the fishermen only were able to secure the remedy. They became F. P. U. men and that, to this day, qualified them for the sneers, contempt and misrepresentation of Coaker's enemies.

The fishermen have now come to realise that enemy actions are but the proof of Coaker's sincerity on the fishermen's behalf. And they may well realise this when it is a fact that these political and merchant assailants have opposed every measure calculated to benefit the toilers, among which were the Sealing Law, the Logging Bills, the fishery regulations and th Humber proposition.

Coaker may laugh at his enemies and their mongrel tactics.

CLOSING OF BELL ISLAND SLOPE PLACES 300 MEN OUT OF EMPLOYMENT

The British Empire Steel Corporation have decided to close down a slope on Bell Island to-night, and 300 men will be paid off.

A few weeks ago the corporation dismissed 200 men, and their latest action places 500 workmen out of employment.

Coming at the period of the season when men are leaving the fishery and seeking employment, and when conditions are accentuated by a poor shore fishery, this news will be regarded as most unwelcome, particularly in Conception Bay.

The latter section was hard hit by the Company's action of a few weeks ago, as practically all the men, then laid off belonged around the bay. The Advocate learns from Bell Island today that the present development will affect workmen from all sections, and not only the residents of Bell Island as was at first reported.

The explanation given for the dismissal of the men is that the state of the markets do not warrant operations; and there is no hope offered that the slope will re-open in the near future.

It cannot be overlooked that while the company is purely a business concern operating in this country, it has received encouragement from present and past governments, who have accorded them very liberal concessions towards their operations, among which is the right to free export of ore.

During the last session of the Assembly, the opinion was unanimous that in view of the Government's concessions to the company that it was reasonable to expect operations to continue in full swing, and no curtailment of employment should pass unless the country was fully satisfied that such curtailment was justified by existing conditions.

PROGRESS OF DOMINIONS, COLONIES AND PROTECTORATES AT WEMBLEY

Decisions by Dominions, Colonies and Protectorates communicated during the month to the Association have made it certain that almost every part of the Empire will be represented at Wembley Park in 1924. Practically the only Colonies that are as yet not represented are: Gibraltar, Ascension Island, Gambia, Somaliland, and British North Borneo.

The Acting High Commissioner for Newfoundland has received instructions to proceed with the construction of a Newfoundland pavilion. The site allotted has been accepted, and designs for the pavilion and provisional estimates have been prepared.

The Fiji Government has agreed to the construction of a pavilion. Designs and provisional estimates have been prepared, and sanction to proceed with the building is expected shortly.

The High Commissioner for South Africa has accepted a tender for the foundations of the South African pavilion. It is estimated that the work will be completed by September 26th.

The East African Committee contract has been signed and provides for the completion of construction on December 19th. The Kenya Government has increased the sum it is prepared to spend from £10,000 to £12,000.

The design for the Malta pavilion has been approved. It will occupy 3,750 square feet. Estimates of cost of construction are being prepared.

The Government of Hong-Kong has authorized the committee in London to proceed with the plans for the Hong-Kong pavilion. Work on the site has begun.

Work on the Ceylon site was begun on August 3rd, in anticipation of the signature of a contract.

The contract for the Sarawak Government buildings has been signed, and building operations are well advanced.

The West Indian and Atlantic Group Committee have authorized the commencement of work on their pavilion. British Guiana will occupy a large part (about 10,000 square feet) of this pavilion, which will be surrounded by a fine tropical garden.

The Burmese Government have decided to exhibit specimens of Burmese elephants and Burmese peacocks within their section.

The work on the West African building was begun on August 2nd, and is estimated for completion on January 30th.

The Exodus From Nova Scotia

From Sept. 1st to Sept. 15th, 33,000 People have left Halifax County, While Thousands More have Departed From Other Parts of the Province

(Halifax Citizen.)

The United States and Upper Canede still continues to milk this province dry. The big interests of this country, and particularly the industrial powers across our border, are destined to bleed this part of our country to the point of exhaustion, and eventually place us on the casualty list, so far as business is concerned.

From Sept. 1st to Sept. 15th of this year, no fewer than 3300 people have left this province.

In the last few months 350 fishermen have made their exodus from Prospect and Sheet Harbor, and by all reports hundreds more of the young blood of the fishing centres are leaving for the United States.

Hundreds of young men have left and are leaving the finely cultivated fruit farms of the Annapolis Valley and are shaking from their feet the dust of a land that is fast becoming the graveyard of industry and the burial place of every form of progressive ambition.

Since 1920 thousands of skilled workers have packed their kit and have gone away to the United States to work, and there is no present likelihood of them ever coming back. Every trade union in Halifax is today recording the loss of many members, and the Labor movement is mourning the loss of a large number of its most active and progressive workers. Not only that, but Halifax has lost many of its most skilled workmen — men who are the backbone of the community.

Mr. Orr Gets Important Appointment

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Abbey Effervescent Salt Co. 342 Madison Ave., New York, Mr. J. B. Orr was elected vice-president and general manager for the United States Corporation. Mr. Orr expects to leave St. John's in December to take up his new duties. We understand the business of J. B. Orr Co., Ltd., and the agencies controlled by Mr. J. B. Orr as agent, will be continued under the management of Mr. M. D. Shears.

The News' Game

The Daily News gloats over the fact that each outgoing steamer takes large numbers of passengers from here to United States points. It is quite true that many young men and women are leaving the Colony, but if they are, they are going away to better themselves, and most of them will be returning again after a few months when conditions here will have so much improved as to render Newfoundland once again in a position to take care of her workers.

Had the policy which the Daily News advocated during the past year or so been inaugurated, there would be many more leaving our shores to-day than are going now. When the Government were working their hardest to establish such industrial projects as would give employment, the Daily News was doing all that underhand methods could accomplish towards the frustration of those praiseworthy efforts. It the Daily News had had its way there would be no Grand Falls or Bishop's Falls industries employing thousands of men; neither would 2300 breadwinners be working today on a Humber proposition. Apparently the exodus is not all the Daily News would like it to be. It certainly is not all it would be had the people taken the advice given them by the morning glory of the Tory camp.

One would imagine from the moanings of the News that Newfoundland was the only place under the sun which people were leaving, but we would refer our readers to an article from the "Halifax Citizen" on the same subject which we reprint elsewhere in this issue.

FISHERMAN RESENTS ATTACK ON F.P.U.

Editor Advocate.

Dear Sir,—I am a Bonavista Bay man and have been told about the letter signed by "Outport Fisherman" which was published in the Daily News this morning. The writer, who may be none other than Mr. Monroe himself, is trying to whitewash Monroe for his unbridled attack on the Union and Union men in the Board of Trade rooms the other day.

That letter won't whitewash Monroe nor will it bluff the fishermen. They have their own opinion of the little individual whose "Earl of Devon" tactics in Bonavista Bay last spring will not be forgotten.

I was in the district at the time and know as much about the Earl of Devon rum incident as anyone else. Sir William Coaker played a square game last spring and Mr. Monroe knows it. So did F. P. U. men play a square game, and Coaker did not mention his opponent's name in a disparaging way during the campaign. That is more than can be said of Monroe in the Board of Trade rooms, where his insinuation about Port Union residents were uncalled for and beneath him.

Wishing the Union every success.

Yours truly,
"COASTER."

FISHERY NEWS

From Upper Amherst Cove to Largent, in Bonavista Bay, fish was fairly plentiful last week. Boats on the offer grounds got from 5 to 8 quintals; prospects good for fall fishery, but many men have gone at different jobs. A considerable number have gone to Sydney and other places. There is enough squid for bait.

The shore fishery at Trinity is practically ended, the voyage has been the worst on record. There is some fish being caught on trawls, and bait is plentiful.

From Ferryland to Caplin Bay codfish prospects for fall catch are good; eight dories and 61 motor boats fishing.

One boat from Banks reports fish very pleniful there, hails for 200 qtls.

Schr. R. E. Bishop, Herbert Bishop master, has arrived at Brigus from Labrador with 650 qtls. for a crew of eight men.

The schooner H. A. MacIntosh sailed Saturday for Halifax from Sandy Point with 1253 bbls. of berring and 250 quintals fish.

England In Quest of Fighter

ABLE TO WIN HEAVY-WEIGHT TITLE.

LONDON, Sept. 27—(A.P.)—England is fine-combing her ranks of youth and strength in search of a man of sufficient physique to meet the heavy-weight champion of the world. For 25 years the country has failed to produce a real heavy-weight leader. It is on this account that Tex O'Rourke, who has trained some of America's best fighters, has been brought to England to lend his advice to British pugilistic promoters and sporting clubs in their quest for a "British Hope."

At a recent meeting of boxing enthusiastics held in London to celebrate the "movement," the American expert gave an interesting account of the adventures he encountered in his search for a contender for the championship.

All the towns and villages of England, Mr. Rourke explained, have been searched for the right man. The plan is, when a heavy-weight of potentialities is discovered, to pay him the same salary he has been earning and put him through the most rigorous training that an English boxer has ever experienced. He will be taught "the whole business" and, when he is fit, started fighting at the bottom rung of the the ladder until his experience is such that he may have some chance of beating whoever the champion of the time happens to be. O'Rourke said, in his search of England, that he had discovered four or five young men with the desired physical qualities coupled, as far as could be known at this stage, with the necessary mental qualities. The first discovery to pass the test was Leslie Price, son of a Bristol hotel-keeper, who is 6 ft. 2 in. in height, weighs 220 younds, and is 20 years of age. In the same town was found Henry Walter McCran, 6 ft. 3 in. tall, 217 pounds in weight, aged 22. "I have never seen a man 'in the row' possessed of more aggression than this one," said Mr. O'Rourke.

From Birmingham comes William Prestage, 6 ft. 3 in., 196 pounds, with exceptionally large hands and a very long reach. Liverpool has given Isaac Ingleton, a giant of 6 ft. 5 in., who has been accustomed at his trade throw about bags of sugar weighing 200 pounds as if they were feather pillows.

London's contribution is a policeman 6 ft. 3 in. in height, with good hands and a long reach.

All these "hopes" shortly will begin a long course of training at a camp in Malvern. And they will do nothing except train and learn for the next six months, when the best of them will be given a match. But even if they live up to all expectations, it is anticipated that 18 months must pass before any one of them might have a chance of meeting the title holder.

HEALTH HINTS

Garlic, Nurse says, is one of the most healthful herbs that can be eaten. It stimulates new secretions and its effect is very strong upon persons having liver troubles or kidney complaints. A teaspoon of garlic juice and sugar will usually ward off an oncoming cold. Garlic eaters have good skin and the herb is excellent for almost any skin trouble.

Races that eat a great deal of garlic are the ones that are the least susceptible to tuberculosis. Many physicials treat this dicease with garlic, giving it internally in the form of syrup and externally in the form of poultices. They also make patients inhale an infusion of garlic.

* * *

Coffee is very bad for the nervous and highly strung person, says Nurse. The one with the phlegmatic temperament may not feel the reaction which coffee always gives as much as the sentitive one, but the effect is there just the same.

Some persons can drink coffee regularly through life and suffer no apparent ill effects, but it is nevertheless known that coffee is harmful for all, even on the least sensitive types, Cocoa, some cereal drinks, milk and water are about the only liquids that should be taken into the stomach.

Tea is more insiduous than coffee in its harmful effects on the system. In the long run, it may be just as harmful. Neither coffee or tea is of the least benefit as a food. Of course the real nerve sedative is sleep, have the right kind of diet and plenty of sleep and the nervous person will be sure to show improvment.

"My confectioners sugar gets all lumpy and I can't get the lumps out. Is there anything I can do?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

""Yes, place the sugar in a small sieve and press it with a potato masher. This makes the sugar soft and easy to use, said Mrs. Neighbor.

Curzon's Handling of Foreign Office Peeves Baldwin

(By HENRY WALES)

PARIS, Sept. 21.—Serious differences of opinion exist between the British Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, and Lord Curzon, according to reports in well-informed French circles.

Mr. Baldwin is understood to be extremely dissatisfied with the way the Foreign Secretary fumbled the recent series of international diplomatic incidents, in which he was badly worsted every time. It is even hinted that there may be a change in the British Foreign Office after Mr. Baldwin returns to Downing Street and gets back in the saddle.

Curzon Dissatisfied.

Lord Curzon is understood to be bitterly peeved because of Mr. Baldwin's long conversation with Premier Poincare, on the ground that it intrudes on his prerogative as Foreign Secretary.

This, it is explained, is the reason a number of London newspapers belittle the progress made by Mr. Baldwin at the luncheon Wednesday with Premier Poincare at the Embassy here.

Close friends of Mr. Baldwin indicate that the Prime Minister is highly provoked over Great Brtain's muddle in the Ruhr affair when Lord Curzon threatened France, in a speech in Parliament, that he would take independent action toward Germany unless France abandoned its policy and embraced London's viewpoint immediately.

Failure in Italo-Greek Crisis.

Private advices conveyed to Mr. Baldwin lead him to believe Premier Poincare will soon score a big victory over Germany by the abandonment of the Ruhr resistance and Berlin's offer to pay a revised indemnity total.

Mr. Baldwin is also discomforted by Lord Curzon's failure in the Italo-Greek controversy, when the Foreign Secretary backed Lord Robert Cecil to handle the matter at Geneva, while Premier Poincare succeeded in keeping the affair in the hands of the Ambassadors' Council.

EXHIBITION BUILDINGS AT WEMBLEY

LONDON, Sept. 28—The many types of buildings now in course of erection in the British Empire Exhibition Grounds at Wembley, provide an interesting and instructive study in art, utilitarianism and national ideals. No two buildings are alike; each dominion has asserted itself along lines of architecture different from each other, with national characteristics predominating.

The Canadian structure will probably attract attention as much for the artistry employed in its design as for its embodiment of the Canadian national ideals. It is situated at the head of the main artery leading from the northern to the southern bounds of the exhibition. By adherence to ancient Greek lines of architecture, the artist has sucseeded in endowing Canada's edifice with a dignity that will make it conspicuous in the Exhibition.

In addition to merit of design, the pavilion will be imposing for its size also. It has a frontage of 415 feet, a depth of 280 feet and a height of nearly seventy-five feet, making it nearly, if not quite, the largest Dominion building to be erected at Wembley, and requiring for its completion, about seven hundred artisans and workmen.

The future of Mexico lies in the establishment of 7,000 primary schools throughout the republic, according to Enrique Corona, of the Department of Public Instruction. He declared that, of the 14,000,000 inhabitants of Mexico, 8,000,000 are illiterates and that 4,000,000 of these illiterates cannot even speak Spanish, but cling to ancient Indian dialects.

Street singers in London and the other large British cities find their occupation so remunerative that they have refused offers of $50.00 a week to apear on the stage.

London is flooded with these singers but they seem to prosper even above the noise of the traffic. Often they appear in groups of five and six and sometimes they literally line up along the curbs of the principal thoroughfares.

Barter trading with Russia has been carried on for some time in small transactions, but the first steamer to carry a full load of goods for barter is shortly leaving Grimsby for the Kara Sea. This is the steamer "Trotsky," owned by the Russian Norwegian Navigation Company, which will carry tea, coffee, wines, textiles and agriculaural implements to be exchanged for furs, skins, swansdown and horsehair. These will be brought by caravan a distance of 2,000 miles to a point on the Kara Sea, which the "Trotsky" will touch at.

A wax mask of Napoleon, made a few hours after the Euperor's death by an English surgeon of the 20th Regiment of Infantry, has just been found hidden away in a house in a small French town.

Some years after Napoleon's death the mask was sent to England, where it was purchased by a Russian diplomat and presented by him to the Czar Alexander I. Later it was taken to Holland and Bavavria, but for the past 20 years it has been lost.

An eye lash can still be seen attached to the mould.

Quack doctors have made their appearance in almost all the villages of Siberia, offering to cure any of the ills flesh is heir to, and some of their alleged remedies are marvellous.

In the Nikolsk district a doctor has appeared who undertakes the cure of consumption in all stages. As consumption is rather widespread in the district his patients are many, and the man is rapidly making a fortune. His remedy is a concoction of cabbages and milk boiled together for some hours by a special "secret process."

Other and more dangerous quacks are making fortunes for the moment, but the situation is such that the authorities have decided to step in and protect the credulous people.

Mining activities in the Portland Canal Region of British Columbia and southeastern Alaska have been greater during the past summer than ever before in the history of the district, according to advices from various sources reaching Seattle. A dispatch from Hyder, Alaska, centre of the area, says new and important discoveries had been made during the season, more prospectors are in the field than ever before, and development work is being carried on extensively.

Especially important finds were made in the Texas Creek and Chikamen alley sections, both in American territory, where silver-lead ore running more than $100 to the ton in silver content was said to have been uncovered.

Seven war vessels at Philadelphia Navy Yard are to be scrapped under the provisions of the Treaty for the Limitation of Armaments, recently approved. They include two cruisers and five battleships.

The cruisers are the Constitution and the United States, which had been under construction at the navy yard for some time. They are to be scrapped at once, acetylene torches being used to cut them to pieces. A little later workmen will start on the five battle-ships consigned to the international junk heap. Four of them, the Minnesota, South Carolina, Michigan and New Hampshire, are out of commission and have been laying in the storage basin at the navy yard for months. The fifth, the South Carolina, will have a fitting end to a long career, for she will be taken to sea and sunk, in tests of various deck and under-water attacking methods lately devised by the Navy Department engineers.

An eighteen battleship, the Washington, which was under construction at the New York Shipbuilding Corporation's yard in Camden, N.J., also will be shattered by the gunfire and torpedo attack of the Atlantic fleet.

"Is it possible to boil fish and have the flesh look white and not so dark looking as it is apt to look," asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"Fish may be boiled and come to the table looking white and nice if, when it is boiled the juice of half a lemon is added to the water," replied Mrs. Neighbor.

"The Stooped and Silent Toilers of the World"

Edwin Markham is the man who wrote that famous poem, "The Man With The Hoe." He is often declared to be America's greatest living poet. And, by the way, if you have not read "The Man With The Hoe" you most assuredly should! Maybe I will reprint it in this column one of these days.

I am reprinting to-day a poem by Markham—one entitled "The Carriers of the Load," and composed recently, I believe. Don't fail to read it:

* * * * *

THE CARRIERS OF THE LOAD.
By Edwin Markham.

I, wreathed with riches, crowned with culture, sat
By my great window opening to the stars,
The smoke-rings circling upward as I mused,
The vast rooms glowing with their marbles, filled
With treasures from a hundred lands. Outside
My purring motor stood. All things were mine—
All mine at last, and life smacked very sweet;
For I had won them with my own strong powers!

* * * * *

Then flashed on me a visionary host,
The stooped and silent toilers of the world.
I saw the dust-dark miners, candle in cap,
Gouging the coal from caverns underground—
Thousands of men imprisoned under the earth,
As tho' condemned for crime incredible.
In the gray dawn, under the fading stars,
I saw bent ploughmen with their smoking teams
Turning the deep, dark furrows to the light—
Saw harvesters, in long, hot afternoons,
Reaping the grain and piling fragrant hay
In golden heaps. On far Atlantic shores
I saw the white sails of the fishing boats
Groping their way from rivers to the sea.
I saw the liners on the ocean rim
Trailing their bannered smoke upon the wind,
While, buried deep in the steaming hold of the ship,
The reeking stokers, red in the furnace glare,
Heaved all day long their endless tons of coal.

* * * * *

On Texan plains I saw the cowboys ride
In clouds of dust behind the bellowing herds;
I saw the trains sing over the narrowing rails
With sleepless watchers at the throttle-bar.
Far in the Northwest suddenly I heard
The axes ringing out of Oregon,
Answered by axes in Wisconsin Woods,
In chorus with the lumber mills of Maine.
Then I saw builders hewing heavy beams,
Lifting the rafters, driving home the nails.
Erecting mansions never to be their homes.
Far in the South, among the foam-white fields,
I saw the cotton pickers, stooped in the sun
And moving wearily. Then they faded out
And mills of cotton-weavers glided in,
Mills choked with the flying lint and murky air,
Where haggard children toiled among the frames.
And then I saw pale workmen, row on row,
Bent in the sweatshops in the eternal roar
Of wheels and flying needles. Mothers were there,
Crushed with grim burdens that unwomaned them.
With children who are aged even in youth.

* * * * *

These visions rose and faded; then a voice
Cried into my heart: "Man of white-handed ease,
You have beheld your hard-pressed brothers, seen
The conscripts who are carrying your load."

* * * * *

It is possible that I may be wrong, but I feel that it would do some of our fish merchants and exporters no harm to read over those lines and take their meaning to heart.

Fifty thousand fishermen and their families toiling to produce the national wealth of this country, and thousands of workers in the city toiling on waterfront and in workshop and factory, ought always to be in the minds of the businessman and trader as he enjoys his comfortable mansion, good food, fine automobile and sumptuous offices.

For it was the toil of the workers that produced these things.

And if any effort of theirs can secure to the fishermen and city workers a more generous share of the things so produced, the businessman and trader should make that effort.

If they do not make the effort, or if they make it and fail, then the fisherman will try his hand.

For, be it known to both merchant and exporter, and to all others concerned, the fishermen of this Island intend to secure as generous a share of the wealth they themselves produce as human ingenuity and effort can secure.

A Samson In Petticoats

Hindu's Amazing Feats of Strength.

There have recently come to light some extraordinary feats of strength by a Hindu woman, which should cause men of to-day to think twice before referring to women as the weaker sex.

The woman in question is Miss Tarabai, born some thirty years ago in a small village in Rejputana, and her amazing feats are described in the 'Strand Magazine' for September.

At the age of seven she was left an orphan and adopted by fakirs (holy men), with whom she remained for several years, disguised as a boy. It was by these men that she was initiated into the mysteries of breath control and the power of commanding her physicial and mental forces.

A bed of Spears.

Suspended between two chairs by its shafts. her head and feet, Miss Tarabai had a stone weighing a quarter of a ton placed on her chest, while two men pounded upon it with heavy sledge-hammers. But this did not affect her.

Miss Tarabai then lay down upon the ground, and a cart laden with men and boys was drawn across her chest and arms. She was protected only by a pad, but she did not flinch.

She thinks nothing of raising from the ground a stone weighing two hundred and forty pounds by means of ropes tied to her hair.

It is the remarkable power of directing all the energies she possesses to any particular part of her body at will that enables her to lie for several minutes on the sharp points of five spares, and to push backwards a laden cart by pressing with her head against the sharp point of a spear fastened to

COMPLIMENTS AUNT JANE AND TELLS HOW CHAMPNEYS FISHERMEN ARE STRONG FOR COAKER AND THE FISHERMEN'S UNION

Champney's,
September 22nd, 1923.

Editor, Evening Advocate,

Dear Sir,—First of all I must apologize for intruding on your valuable paper, but then, if Aunt Jane be allowed to speak her mind to the public through the Advocate, surely I have the same right.

I must say Sam is a down-right Union man. He always was a firm believer in Sir W. F. Coaker and the F.P.U.. The other night Sam said to me, I wish you were as smart as Aunt Jane. You are alright to wag your tongue for Sir William and the Union, but you don't write to the Advocate. I replied that as I was 86 years old, I ought to be preparing for the other world, but says Sam, "Polly maid, you will have to answer for this. You must give Sir William and the Union all the help you can." That decided me to write.

I am glad Aunt Jane is such a Union woman. She appears to have Jim, who is a good Union man, metwixt her thumb and finger. That is a good place to have him in my opinion, as otherwise he might fall in Tory company and be persuaded to fall from the Union.

When Mr. Hibbs and Captain Randell were here last Spring, poor Sam was really to sick to go to the meeting to cheer for the Union. He was just after having a bad cold. I vowed he would not go, but although 86 years old the old man is so stubborn and he said such a lot of cuss words that I had to box his ears. He went after all and he voted too. He always traded with the Union stores, and yesterday we sold our berries to them. As long as myself and Sam live we will be buying our stuff from our own Union store.

Knowing that Aunt Jane lives in Change Islands, Sam wants Skipper Peter Randell to put him off on Change Islands when he is going to the Labrador next Spring, but that would never do.

I read Aunt Jane's last letter to the Advocate. I think she is right when she said that women should have a voice in politics. They would certainly be a great help to the F.P.U.

The Council meeting will soon open, and Sam is longing for the night to get on the floors once more. The people of Champney's are strong for President Coaker.

The wish of myself and Sam is that God will bless our Union, Sir William Coaker and all the fishermen of this country.

With kindest regards,
Yours very sincerely.
AUNT POLLY.

Will Now Be Frequent Visitor To Colony Says Esmond Harmsworth

Young Parliamentarian and Paper Owner Is Greatly Impressed With Newfoundland on His First Visit.

THE Hon. Esmond Harmsworth, M.P., only surviving son and heir of Viscount Rothermere, and nephew of the late Lord Northcliffe, who is visiting Newfoundland for the first time, arrived in the city at 3.45 this morning, from Grand Falls, coming with Messrs D'Erlanger and Redhed, who are accompanying him on his tour by the A.N.D. Co's private car, "Shananditti."

Seen at the Crosbie Hotel when he lunched at one o'clock to-day, Mr. Harmsworth told an Advocate representative that his stay in Newfoundland, short though it has been, was a most enjoyable one. He is greatly impressed with what he has seen of the country, and says that in future he will be a yearly visitor here.

Three days were spent at Grand Falls and vicinity, during which time Mr. Harmsworth availed of the opportunity to pay a visit to the various points which are included in the Anglo-Newfoundland Co's. activities.

After inspecting the mills at Grand Falls, the plant at Bishop's Falls and the shipping port of Botwood, he went to Alexander Bay to look over the Terra Nova Sulphite plant of which the A.N.D. have recently assumed control. While not prepared to say off hand just what the Company's future plans are, Mr. Harmsworth assured us that the general program of the Company in Newfoundland would be one of extension. He says that the Grand Falls mills, which are at present equal to anything he has seen elsewhere, are to be further extended and the pipe line for the pumping of the liquid pulp from Bishop's Falls to Grand Falls is in line with this further development.

Mr. Harmsworth and his companions spent some time shooting around the Topsails and he was fortunate in getting a large goose for his hand.

The youthful heir to the immense Rothermere and Harmsworth interests, which include on this side of the water, in addition to the Newfoundland properties, large paper mills in Clarke City, Canada, is already in his second term as a member of the British House of Commons for the Isle. of Tenet, Kent. He is an Independent-Conservative and won his seat on the Anti-waste policy. He is emphatically an anti-prohibitionist. Mr. Harmsworth is a veteran of the World War in which his two brothers were killed.

The party had an opportunity of seeing some of the City's surroundings this forenoon when they were taken to Bowring Park, Bally Haley and other points of interest by Mr. M. F. Sullivan, M. H. A., the A.N.D. Co's. St. John's representative, whose guests they were at lunch. A call was also made at Government House this morning, where His Excellency the Governor cordially welcomed the distinguished visitors to Newfoundland.

Mr. Harmsworth leaves to-day by the Rosalind enroute to New York, where he will be joined later by his wife, when they will probably pay another visit to Canada before returning to England. He has not yet decided when the return will be made.

The Colony is glad to welcome her distinguished visitor whose interests are so interwoven with our own, and his future visits will be looked forward to with no small pleasure.

Postmaster at Burgeo Arrested For Burglary

Postmaster Filler of Burgeo recently was arrested on an alleged charge of burglary. Filler is accused of breaking into the premises of T. Moulton at that place and breaking open the safe, getting away with about $2500, only $[illegible] of which was in cheques and the balance in cash.

The entry was effected by breaking a window and as the combination of the safe was out of order very little difficulty was found in getting at the cash. When the robbery was discovered suspicion pointed to the postmaster, who was about the place on the night of the robbery.

No trace of the money, however, was found in his possession and the evidence against him is said to be a purely circumstancial character.

The accused, who is still in jail at Burgeo, stoutly protests his innocense.

The Manoa leaves Montreal this afternoon for Charlottetown and this port.

Motor Accident Reported

The Advocate learns of a somewhat serious accident which occurred at Topsail yesterday and in which Hon. Sir Edgar Bowring's big car was considerably damaged by being ditched. The chaffeur was slightly injured but so far as we can learn, nobody else was hurt.

Additional Passengers By S. S. Rosalind

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Sceviour and baby, C. J. Aver, Miss Bride Fowlow, Mrs. Thos. McGrath, Miss McGrath, Mr. James, J. Kopstein, Misses. A. and M. Power, Hon. Esmond Harmsworth, L. Evlanger, R. Redhead, H. Sutton.

General Cargo

The Coastal schooner, Ada B. M., Captain Thomas is due to Rose Blanche, with a general cargo and a small amount of coal.

"For East is East, and West is West,
And never the twain shall meet."
But when misfortune shakes the world,
Life has one common street.
And West meets East as a brother may
And feels as a brother can,
For sympathy is a mighty cord
That binds us man to man.

In life the deep things are most real
Loss, sorrow, pain, and tears,
The parting from the ones we love,
The blank and empty years,
And East, your grief today is ours,
Your pain we make our own,
We mourn with you these awful hours
In your far Island Home.

Yet in the midst of pain and grief
New seeds of hope will spring,
Fresh courage, too, and stalwart faith,
New life to you will bring,
And in the days to come, should men
Talk lightly of your land,
The ones who knew, and mourned with you
Will feel, and understand.

—Holliday.

A Clergyman with a large nose was invited to tea with a woman, who had a talkative child, whom his mother warned severely not to pass any rude remarks during the meal.

The boy's eyes were fixed on the clergyman so long that the mother frowned upon the child, whereupon he shouted:—

"It's all right, mother, I'm not going to say anything. I'm only looking at it;"

POLICE COURT

FIFTEEN business and professional men, contractors, and other citizens were before Judge Morris this morning at the suit of the Attorney-General, to answer to the charge that they did not furnish returns to the Minister of Finance and Customs as required by the Income Tax law.

A number of the delinquents failed to appear, but they reported to the Crown lawyer, Mr. Cramm, that they intended complying immediately with the law.

Judge Morris held that they should be there, either in person, or be represented by counsel. The law is mandatory and obliges all and sundry to report their income to the Customs Dept. on or before the 30th day of April in any year. It makes no difference whether the business or professional gentleman is liable to the tax or not. In fact, no notice is required from the Department. There is the statutory obligation, and those who fail or neglect to report are liable to a penalty of ten dollars per day.

Last year and every year, the assessor has the same difficulty in obtaining the required information and he has been reluctantly compelled to have summons issued against the delinquents.

All the parties present this morning had practically the same excuse. It was carelessness on their part.

Mr. Cramm intimated that the Crown did not press a heavy penalty, but asked the Court to make it clear that all are under a penalty who neglect to do as the law requires. Endless trouble is caused otherwise. Last year, like proceedings had to be taken. The judge pointed out that every person who failed to report was liable to a penalty for every day in default, and if the Crown pressed for enforcement thereof, he would be obliged to inflict it. The Department did not so desire. He therefore fined each party $5.

Several of the gentlemen who found themselves before the court this morning were highly indignant when they learned that a prominent politician who failed to report until the summons was issued against him a day or two ago, was since allowed to file his statement, and his name did not appear on the court records.

Why so? They ask.

A doctor asked for the same privilege and was refused. They very properly contend that all should be treated alike, and the $5 fine go against every person summoned.

CANADA'S EXPORTS GROWING

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 24 (A.P.—The United States is Canada's best customer. LONDON, Sept. 29—An impressive farewell ovation was given Lloyd George at Waterloo station as he and party left to sail for Canada.

A crowd of admirers cheered the former premier as they did in his days of greatest popularity.

His compartment in the train was banked with flowers, while Mrs. Lloyd George and Megan were showered with flowers and gifts.

With his flowing white hair, his bright lavender ulster reaching to the ground, and his weather-beaten bowler hat, the former premier presented a striking figure as he was escorted to the train.

"Look after the old country while I'm gone," he admonished his friends.

Burnstein Heavily Fined

YESTERDAY afternoon the case against Joseph Burnstein for a breach of the Prohibition Act was concluded before Judge Morris, and the defendant was sentenced to pay a fine of $300, and in default, 60 days imprisonment.

The fine was paid, but Burnstein gave notice of appeal, to the bond to prosecute the appeal in the Supreme Court.

Burnstein, for his defence, called E. J. Whitty, a boarder, who gave evidence of sharing his room with the prosecution's chief witness, Jarvis. Witness Jarvis stayed at Burnstein's house, as a charity boarder for six days, from the 15th to the 22nd of September. He saw Jarvis get drinks on several occasions, but did not see any money passed over for the liquor.

Peter Power, a barber, was next called, and said he brought Jarvis to Burnstein's house late in the night, and asked accused to keep him, as he had no home. He also admitted that Jarvis had got a drink there, but never saw any money paid. A servant girl also testified that she saw Jarvis in the house and saw him get drinks, but that he did not pay for them.

Burnstein himself denied the charge and stated he had taken Jarvis in only out of kindness of heart. He swore he received no money from Jarvis, but admitted he gave him several drinks a day. Burnstein claimed the whole case was a frame-up. This concluded the case, and recess was taken till 4 p.m.

The Court reviewed the evidence, laying particular stress upon that of Jarvis and his daughter. Jarvis admitted on oath that he paid for over twenty drinks at fifty cents a time. He only got three drinks for nothing. He was an armless man, who was a mail courier at Lawn and was receiving $10.50 per month salary. He had a pass on the railway and boats and came to the city, each fall and collected money from the charitably disposed, to support his wife and eight children. Jarvis swore that he never went to Burnstein's to solicit alms. Rebecca Jarvis, in the evidence, said that she was present in Burnstein's store on Friday two weeks, when accused sold her father drink, charging him fifty cents a glass.

The girl is in service here and she swore that it was in Burnstein's upstairs room that she saw accused take the money from her father's pocket. Judge Morris, continuing his review of the evidence, pointed out that the witnesses for the defence sustained the prosecution's contention in that all admitted that Burnstein gave Jarvis drink as did also Burnstein himself, in his evidence.

According to the Act, it did not matter whether Jarvis paid for the drink or not. He also pointed out that Burnstein swore that Peter Power, who was in the store at the time of the daughter's visit, was going to slap the girl in the face, because she wanted her father to go along with her. In concluding, Judge Morris said it was the worst case and the most pitiful that has come before him, and he imposed a fine of $300 of 60 days imprisonment.

"If two ladies who are strangers to each other, are both seated and a mutual friend comes up and introduces them, should they rise or remain seated," inquired Helen.

"When two ladies are seated and they are introduced to each other it is best to remain seated as they would naturally be seated near together," replied her mother.
