She had not taught twenty years in a female seminary without learning the ways and wants of hungry girls. After "raving" over the chocolate and and had everything in readiness for a

"Oh, I say!" said Nina, "did you notice Henrietta Miller's hands today? Weren't they dreadful? Why, they were so chapped and red they really gave me the shivers! I should think she would be ashamed! One of the first requirements of a lady is white, smooth hands.

'Oh, yes!" laughed Kate. "I've had sorry trial with those hands. You know last week Tuesday was a holiday, and Henrietta had asked me to teach her how to embroider violets. She came over Tuesday with her silks and pattern, and I tried to teach her, but my! the silks stuck so to here hands I simply couldn't do a thing. "I was just wild, and finally I hinted as well as I could that her violets would never look smooth if she didn't keep her hands more like a lady's should be. She didn't say anything, and I don't think she understood, because they are as bad as ever."

Aunt Abigail knew these girls very well, and they talked before her without restraint.
