Easy Enough

To find argument for a straight cash business. Who but the man with the ready dollar is always welcome everywhere that goods are to be sold. We are not trammelled by any combines or syndicates, never having introduced the granger principle into our business, hence the great success that has attended our honest efforts to give the people the best at the lowest price possible. Like all the most successful houses of our country we stand alone and are not dictated to by any set of men intent only on the big profits they can squeeze out of their satellites.

Thursday, the 2nd, our Dress Goods Buyer and Millinery and Mantle Buyer leave for Europe to purchase goods for our great cash business. No country is too distant, no obstacle so great for us to reach and surmount in search of the best.

CHAPTER XX.

The United Irish Committee — Martin Visits Dennis Dermott in Prison — Lord Rathlin Shot.

As we know, Martin disliked and distrusted Counsellor M'Nally, but he reflected that in this piece of business the leading legal adviser of the United Irishmen was likely to give him valuable help, so he resolved to put the matter into M'Nally's hands.

Ere reaching the door Lord Edward wrapped a cloak about him, but made no attempt at disguising himself, and the three men went forth into the dimly-lighted streets. Thus recklessly did Lord Edward go about the streets of Dublin, though he had been warned again and again that the Government had information against him and sought his arrest. At the corner of the street they parted, and Lord Edward, escorted by half a dozen United Irishmen carrying swords and pistols under their cloaks, went off to a friend's house, where he was to pass the night.

Counsellor M'Nally now led Martin to his chambers in King street, not far from the Castle and the law courts, and took him into his business room. Here the lawyer produced a bottle of whisky and called for hot water, but Martin would not drink.

"You believe in keeping your head clear, Mr. Callaghan," said McNally, pouring out a tumblerfull of the liquor for himself. "Might tell secrets if you got fuddled—eh? Well, well, I'll write you out your petition and let you go."

Counsellor M'Nally was a very clever man at his business, and in a few minutes the petition setting forth all the facts in clear language was ready to be signed.

"I think you had better put your name to it as well as I," said the lawyer, "seeing that General Lake made the promise to you."

"By all means," said Martin, and he signed his name below that of Leonard M'Nally.

"I will send this to Dublin Castle tomorrow," remarked M'Nally, "and we will see what Lord Camden makes of it. His Excellency is a fair minded man on the whole, and likely, I think, to regard the petition favorably."

On Martin asking if it would be possible for him to see Dennis Dermott, the Counsellor shook his head doubtfully.

"The authorities will scarcely permit interviews between prisoners and their nearest friends even," he said. "But I will see what can be done. I have some little influence which I can use."

"Thank you heartily, Mr. M'Nally," said Martin, beginning to think that he had done the lawyer wrong in suspecting him. "You are most kind."

"Say no more, Mr. Callaghan," returned the lawyer, taking a drink from his tumbler, "we United Irishmen can never forget your services to Lord Edward and Wolfe Tone."

"Mr. Tone has quite repaid me for anything I was able to do for him," said Martin, and he told the lawyer how, when he and O'Flaherty had been imprisoned in France through the agency of Hugh Fitzgerald, Wolfe Tone had got them released.

"Ah, that monstrous villain, Fitzgerald!" cried the lawyer, "may the foul fiend take him!" And Mr. Wolfe Tone trusted him so, and told him all our plans. But Tone was always very communicative. I daresay, now, Mr. Callaghan, on the voyage to France, Tone told you all his schemes, all his doings?"

"By no means," said Martin promptly. He saw that the lawyer wished to find out if he had any private information and he was extremely anxious to let it be known he was not acquainted with any of the secrets of the United Irishmen, save those he had learned that evening. "Mr. Tone made no communication to me. To tell the truth, Mr. M'Nally, I rather avoided his society on the voyage, being afraid that he might impart dangerous secrets to me."

Martin spoke so earnestly and sincerely that Counsellor M'Nally, a shrewd judge of men, immediately believed him. He had not been in the confidence of Wolfe Tone, either in France or elsewhere, that was plain. M'Nally regretted this, for he knew that his letter to the Lord Lieutenant conveying important information communicated by Mr. Wolfe Tone to a young compatriot in France, and confided by the latter to J. W." would be eagerly read by the Dublin Castle authorities. But J. W.—the initials under which M'Nally wrote to the Lord Lieutenant—had to recognize that Martin Callaghan had really nothing to tell. The next thing for McNally to consider was whether it would be worth while for him to betray Martin to the Government—to procure his arrest on a charge of having assisted Lord Edward Fitzgerald and Wolfe Tone to escape when General Lake went to seize them at Castle Rathlin. The Counsellor did not like to have his efforts thrown away. He had taken some trouble in connection with Callaghan that evening, and apparently there was to be no result from his work. Should he allow Callaghan to slip through his fingers altogether?"

Martin left the lawyer's chambers, little thinking as he shook hands with M'Nally of the scheme concerning himself that was being formed in the lawyer's brain. He went to his inn, being challenged several times on the way by the military patrol, and retired to rest feeling glad that he had never had anything to do with revolutionary movements that were certain only to bring ruin upon all connected with them.

Next day Martin went forth bent upon visiting M'Nally to see if the Counsellor had been able to procure his admission to Dennis Dermott in prison. Even had he known of the peril in which he stood of the designs concerning him which M'Nally was forming Martin would probably have gone to M'Nally all the same. As we have seen again and again, this young man was quite fearless of danger. When he had a duty to perform he did it without thought of the consequences to himself, and his very fearlessness had brought him in safety through many perils. Martin, therefore, would undoubtedly have still sought the Counsellor even had he been aware that M'Nally was an informer and a spy harboring designs upon himself.

While passing the imposing Castle buildings, Martin noticed a group of men standing round a gateway reading a notice which had just been posted up. The words "£1000 Reward" in large letters caught his eye, and he too stopped to read the notice, which offered the sum mentioned as a reward for the apprehension of Lord Edward Fitzgerald.

"And to think that I was in his company last night!" said Martin to himself as he passed on. "Well, he cannot long escape. Going about as he does, openly and without disguise, some one is sure to pounce upon him. There is a danger, too, of some one betraying him. Yes, poor Lord Edward will soon be in the hands of the Government unless the insurrection breaks out very speedily."

At the end of King street Martin met Counsellor M'Nally, who held out a dirty-looking hand to him, and greeted him with what was meant for a winning smile.

"My dear Mr. Callaghan!" he cried, "were you coming to see me? I should have been greatly distressed had I missed you. The petition has been sent in, and will doubtless be considered by the Lord-Lieutenant and his advisers in Council this afternoon, and you are to be admitted to the prisoner."

"A thousand thanks, Mr. M'Nally," said Martin gratefully. "I shall go to him at once."

"Do so, and tell him what we are doing on his behalf; it will cheer him up. I will give you a note," and M'Nally wrote a few words on a leaf of his pocket-book and gave it to Martin. "Show that to the jailor and you will get in without much difficulty. And now, my dear Mr. Callaghan, is there really no prospect of your joining us?"

"None," replied Martin very decidedly. "Why, you are all in danger of your lives! A reward of a thousand pounds has just been offered for the apprehension of Lord Edward. The Government is evidently on the track of the conspirators, and can any one doubt that it will very soon succeed in discovering and seizing them all?"

"You forget that in a few days the country will have risen in rebellion against the Government," replied M'Nally. "It will not be easy to seize the leaders when they are surrounded by thousands of armed men."

"Against whom the Government can bring tens of thousands," said Martin, and M'Nally bade him good-day and passed on, smiling to himself as he thought how exactly Martin's ideas agreed with his own. Early that morning the traitor had sent a full account of last night's meeting to Lord Camden, and had urged the Lord-Lieutenant to seize the leaders without delay and so prevent the rebellion from breaking out.

Why is it that one man is old and decrepid at 45, and another, hale and hearty at 80? The accident of birth has something to do with it. Some men are born stronger than others, but frequently the strong man becomes weak and the weak man strong. It depends on the care he takes of himself. When the man who runs an engine hears an unusual sound about it, he stops immediately and looks it up. If he finds a little looseness, or a little crack, it is remedied immediately. If it isn't, there will come a break presently — a break that will wreck the engine. Likely as not, this same man will totally ignore the call for help from some one of his own organs. He will let the trouble grow and grow until it lays him out in bed. If he keeps on working with a damaged body, he will soon wear it out. The strain on his nerves will tell on his constitution. He will not be hearty when he is old. The chances are he never will be old at all. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery restores health. It is not only a cure for disease, it is a preventive. Whenever a man feels that he is not quite as well as he ought to be, whenever he is listless, without energy and without vitality, whenever he finds that he is losing weight and that his ordinary work gives him undue fatigue, he needs the "Golden Medical Discovery." No matter how his trouble shows itself, this wonderful remedy will cure him. We say it is wonderful because of its wonderful results, and not because there is anything supernatural about it—not because it does anything that is unexpected, or anything which its discoverer did not mean it to do. That it cures many different so-called diseases is the most natural thing in the world when you understand that nearly all diseases spring from the same thing—bad digestion and consequent impure blood. The "Discovery" makes the appetite good, the digestion strong, assimiliation easy, and the blood rich and pure. No disease of the blood can withstand its action.

Learn more about it from Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, profusely illustrated; which will be sent free on receipt of thirty-one (31) one-cent stamps to cover cost of customs and mailing only. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.
