NOTES OF FORT MONCKTON

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The establishment in 1749, by De La Corne, of the French military post which developed into Fort Beausigour, on the south side of the Isthmus of Chignecto, was immediately followed by the erection of Fort Lawrence, 2 miles distant, on the British side of the Missiquash. The Acadians apparently were not actively hostile to the measure, for on Sept. 27th, 1750, M. Prevost, Comptroller of Louisburg, informed the French Minister of War that the English had disembarked 2,000 men at Beaubassin to form a settlement there, and that the Incians desired to disturb them, but that the Acadians refused to do so, preferring to retire to the woods, pending the settlement of the boundary question. In fact it appears they were inclined to preserve peace upon the Isthmus, for in the following November they stated to the Governor of Louisburg that Fort Lawrence was of little importance; and the French despatches of June 1751 report their continued resistance to Le Loutre's efforts to transplant them to the Island of St. John, "because they await a settlement of the boundaries."

The demonstration of the English was regarded otherwise by Le Loutre, who, recognizing the importance of maintaining communication between the fertile Acadian settlements of the Bay of Fundy and the fortresses of Quebec and Louisburg, urged the instant necessity of building regular works at Beausejour, and also at Gaspereau River in Baie Ve.te, with storehouses and magazines at the latter place. A letter from him dated 1750 states that 40 families were already settled about Gaspereau, and that he expected an addition of 60 in the spring from Beaubassin.

His representations were avidently forcible, for preparations were at once ready settled about Gaspereau, and that he expected an addition of 60 in the spring from Beaubassin.

His representations were evidently forcible, for preparations were at once made to capture Fort Beausejour, and in the same year, intelligence was received at Halifax, that the actual construction of Fort Gaspereau had been commenced. Almost simultaneously, news arrived there of the capture in Baie Verte of the French sloop London, 70 tons, laden with arms, ammunition and stores for the new fort, by Captain Le Cras of the Triad.

A letter from M. de St. Ours Dechaillon, commending the posts of Acadia, dated Aulac, 8th May, 1751, says that he has made it his duty to build two forts, one at Point Beausejour, the other at Baie Verte, where he will wait for all his re-inforcements. The same letter refers to the shipwreck of an English vessel near Queskak, the crew of which had been protected by the French from Indian outrage. Another, dated Louisburg, 29th June, states that it is necessary that M. de la Clue should go to Eaje Verte, in order to convey there the ships which should go thence to Canada; presumably with provisions for the garrison of Quebec.

George Ge Fort Gaspereau, now Fort Moncton, is placed upon a point of land only a was brought by them a prisoner to Fort Gaspereau, and detained for a month until ransomed.

In the spring of 1754 the fort was strengthed and a road 15 miles in length made to Beausejour. Some of the piles then driven to carry a plank roadway across the marsh to Baie Verte, are still cound beneath the surface. So busily occupied were the French and Indians in this undertaking, that the English garaison of Fort Lawrence enjoyed comparative peace during its progress Early in 1752. Shirley, Governor of New England, raised a regiment of two buttailons, each 1000 strong, for the reduction of Beausejour and Gaspereau. The command of the expedition was given to Golonel Robert Monckton, who afterwards distinguished himself by capturing the Island of Martinque at the head of eleven buttailons from New York. Shirley's men were enlisted for a term not exceeding one year, receiving ten pounds bounty, and pay at the rate of regular soldiers. The first and second buttailous were commanded respectfully by Lieut. Colonels Winslow and Scott. Winslow's list of officers is appended. The whole were embarked in the following transports, and the expedition, under convoy of three ships of the Royal Navy, left Boston on the 23 May, 1755.

flash. If I ran back inside of our lines to give the alarm, the chances were a thousand to one that the enemy would have the outlying redoubt, very likely would have them both, and would turn the guns before help could come. But I knew, at least I hoped, that there was time for me to get to the more exposed redoubt ahead of them and give the word to spike the guns. It was all in an instant, I say, that I found this thought in my mind, and my musket and cartridge box thrown I don't know where, and myself dashing off through the mist across self dashing off through the mist across in that battery.

Tap! and I had the nail suppose there real y would have been the very devil to pay had the enemy of his men. Tap fact I had the nail halfway home as the mejor jumped down beside me, with his sword raised. I knew that I could parry his blow with the hammer and then possibly get away; but I wanted to make the case is not quite so black against Private Laboure as it at sure that the gun could not be turned on us. And so—It was quick thinking that I did just then, Monsieur—tap! and the gun was no better than old iron. At that same instant it seemed to me that the whole world shot after all? burst into a tremendous roar and ten burst into a tremendous roar and ten thousand b'azing stars—but it was only the sword of that confounded racher brave—ch. colonel?—to stay in

"Then the man was more civil.

The Russians were driven back,' he said, and a lot of them were captured You owe it to the same Russian major who almost killed you that your life was saved. As soon as he was brought into camp he sent a message to the general begging that you might be looked after quickly. If there were any life left in you it was a piece of work as ever was done by a French soldier for the honor of France!"

"And so you see Monsions it was should equal his Here is your commission.
