In this crucial moment in human history the Methodist Church issues a summons to every man and woman nursed on her bosom and shielded by her strong arms to rally to her assistance in her struggle against the forces of darkness. The explanation of this summons is found in the new conditions confronting the Church in the re-construction period and to the insistent demands made upon her for larger service for the greater glory of God. She calls upon her entire membership to unite with her divine Lord and Head in faithful, persistent intercession for the salvation of those redeemed by His blood. She submits to them a claim, strong and imperative, to present of their best—their sons and daughters—for the extension of His Kingdom in the earth. Further, she extends to all her members and adherents the great privilege of contributing of their earthly substance to enable her to create a new order of social conditions, to bring into existence "a new earth in which shall dwell righteousness."

Nor is this HER call alone; it is also the call of her crucified, risen, and glorified Lord to enter into the fellowship of His suffering for the uplifting of the race.

What shall the answer be? Surely no one who follows Him in thought and sympathy through Gethsemane, and the mock trial up to Calvary's Cross and the tomb lying hard by, can refuse Him anything that He demands.

The issues involved are tremendous. Our responsibilities are commensurate with our opportunities, and all Heaven is witnessing our decision.

The Campaign immediately impending is Financial. Funds are needed to carry on the work of God as expressed in Missions, Education and in making provision for the aged Ministers of the Church and the Widows of the Ministers. The result of this Campaign will be the outward and visible test of the Spiritual consecration within. We sing "Take my silver and my gold"; let us make an offering of these worthy of Him and of us.

L. CURTIS,
Chairman of Conference Committee of Minute Men.

Shannahan and Tucker on Calamity Howlers.

Every man in this world has a grievance, says Tucker, every man must have his growl about one thing or the other, or he wouldn't live. But in this country we all growl about the Municipal Council. About a hundred men have been elected to the Council since the old Water Works Department was wiped out of existence, and not one of them have pleased the crowd. The crowd, the taxpayers or non-taxpayers, whatever you like to call them, are the queerest bunch that it is possible to run up against. For the most part they are a conglomeration of human beings who have not sufficient interest in the cleanliness of the city to pick up a tub and put it away out of sight. If they would start in to learn that every citizen has a duty to perform in helping to keep the city clean, we would not waste so much time in grumbling. On the contrary no one seems to understand this duty, or, if they do realize that they have a duty to perform, they fail to perform it. If a woman has an old feather bed to get rid of, instead of burning it up in the kitchen stove, she fires it out on the street to await the arrival of the sanitary man. If a woman goes papering, instead of burning up the old paper, she places it out in the drain, and the first gust of wind that rambles along drives it down the street, across the square and into another street, and thus it keeps on going its rounds till a rainstorm comes and melts it away. Every citizen owns a dog. You must have a dog if you are a citizen, that seems to be the rule. But no one has any control over a dog. He can ramble all over the city, knock down ash pails, eat the haunches of horses, and frighten the life out of children, and every one grumbles at the other fellow's dog; but fails to tumble to the fact that while he is grumbling, his dog is in some other part of the city performing similar feats of annoyance. Two-thirds of the dog owners let their dogs out at large at night. No one owns a dog house, or takes the least trouble to see that his mongrel is barred up at night. Result: Dismal howlings the whole long night, interspersed with several rows in which every dog in the neighborhood takes an active part. This is a great town for iron and wire hoops. Just start in and count the number of hoops you will see on the streets during the next week. How many of them will you pick up and fire over the nearest fence? 'Tis not your business. Well, perhaps not, but don't blame the Council if returning home in the dark you walk on one and are conveyed to the hospital in the ambulance. Tucker says the man who fires iron hoops on the thoroughfare is usually the man that makes the best speech denouncing the Mayor and Councillors.

A housekeeper wants to get rid of dirty water; not always, but seven times out of ten, she will stand in her doorway and fire the contents of the pail in the drain, or as near the drain as proficiency in the art of dumping enables her to do so. Occasionally a man on his way to dinner has a narrow escape from drowning, but remembering that his daughter has time and again been guilty of a similar offence, says nothing and feels thankful that he escaped so well.

And so it goes on from day to day. Everyone does as he pleases, and the result is as we see it.

Tucker offers no suggestions on improvement. He realises 't would be as useless to do so as to try to solve the booze question. No law will make angels out of men if they don't want to be angels, and no Council will make the city clean if the people themselves don't want it to be clean.
