Teachings of History Teach Us Nothing.

The end of the Lenin-Trotsky Bolshevik regime is in sight. It cannot be otherwise. Class rule, called for a better name, the "Dictatorship of the Proletariat," was bound to fall as are all dictatorships. One cannot successfully rule to the exclusion of all other classes, and behind us lies Greece and Rome and France, under the Commune, and Russia under the Czar to prove it. John Spargo in his "Psychology of Bolshevism" — cynically observes, "most men learn nothing from history," and the Lenins, Trotskys and Kuns can hardly be said to have learned that little. If the leaders of the Bolshevik regime had got away from, in place of adhering to the tactics of the Paris Commune of 1871, then the uprising in Russia might have been another story. It was just a further glaring illustration of mental inability to profit by that history teaches. All of which records with Lenin's famous statement at the Third Soviet Conference, which was to this effect: "Among one hundred so-called Bolsheviks there is one real Bolshevik with thirty-nine criminals and sixty fools."

This dreadful Russian fiasco, if one may call it by so pleasant a name, might have been avoided had the rulers of the Allied nations had sufficient vision, back at the time the Czar's Government was overthrown and Kerensky became the "man on horseback." All failed at the critical period to act democratically toward the budding republic. There was lack of frankness toward the Kerensky Government which was fatal to it. Agreements had been previously entered into between France, Britain, Italy, and the Czar's Government. That these agreements, with the Czar in confinement but still alive, should be looked upon with suspicion by the new Provisional Russian Government was to be expected. These treaties had been made by the Czar for the purpose of Czarism. Past experience has shown the Russian people that such had little in common with themselves. It was but natural that they asked for a new deal and a new deal, but the Allies lacked the vision and so missed their opportunity of backing up Kerensky. A little frankness might have turned the trick. As a consequence of the silence which followed Kerensky's appeal to the Allies, the faith of the Russian on the street and the soldier in the trenches began to fall him. They had been fooled so often. Was, after all, Kerensky their friend, or did he represent a capitalistic-imperialistic enterprise? Lenin and Trotsky, the first a semi-maniac and the latter a cheap but cute faker, saw their opportunity. They played upon the suspicion of soldier and civilian alike. Kerensky was eventually obliged to flee for his life and the Great Russian Tragedy entered upon its career.—Saturday Night.

Rights and Duties.

Governor Coolidge, in his speech at Worcester uttered some truths which are well worthy of consideration by men and women of all classes. He said: "We Americans talk a great deal about the rights of man. We talk too little about the duties of man. One man's rights are another man's duties. Unless duties are observed there can be no enjoyment of rights. There can be no freedom without corresponding restraint. There is no condition made or imposed by men. It is the result of the condition into which men are born."—Washington Post.

The Blessings of War.

Of the many evils of war the one that most often appears in the guise of a blessing is high prices. Those who profit by them are the last to welcome peace and first to respond to incitements to renewed strife. Enriched as many farmers have been by the exceptional conditions of the last five years, they have no more reason than any other element of the population to fear the consequences of a general and an orderly deflation.—New York World.

Cured by Accident.

An Ointment For Rheumatism Made Hair Grow, and a Snake Bite Cured Skin Trouble!

It was simply through the mistake of an assistant in filling a bottle with anisole instead of anise oil, that Professor Fraenkel discovered a preparation which absolutely destroys the insect which carries the germ of spotted fever or typhus.

This is by no means the only case of a remedy discovered purely by accident.

Visiting an elderly parishioner whom he had not seen for some time, the rector of a Norfolk parish was astonished to find that the old gentleman, who previously had possessed a pate as shiny as a billiard-ball, now displayed a fine crop of hair.

The rector very naturally inquired how this amazing miracle had come about, and was informed that it was the result of a certain ointment for rheumatism.

"You see, sir," said the old fellow, "I have rheumatism in my leg, and after I rubbed the ointment on my leg I wiped my hands on my bald head. Soon the hair began to grow, and now, after being bald for thirty years, I have a fine thatch again."

The remedy, it is said, has already been put upon the market under another name.

At Death's Door.

The use of snake poison in certain skin diseases was first proclaimed to the medical world by a Brazilian scientist, Dr. de Moura.

Happening to visit an Indian village, he saw there a man who, by marks on his body, had evidently suffered from a peculiarly terrible form of skin disease, and was regarded as incurable. He made inquiries, and the sufferer told him that, a year previously, he had been dying from this disease when he was accidentally bitten by a pit viper.

This started Dr. Moura on experiments with snake venom, which have since proved to be of great value in many skin diseases, and which, it is said, will even arrest the progress of leprosy.

Professor Rontgen's X-Rays, one of the greatest benefits ever conferred on suffering man, afford still another instance of accidental discovery.

History "Howlers."

Schoolboys' Notions of the Past More Picturesque Than Those of the Experts.

History, as it is written by schoolboys, is much more interesting than the history written by experts. The boy who stated that "the Salic Law is that you must take everything with a grain of salt," was probably thinking of history in general, and the one who said that "Julius Caesar was renowned for his great strength. He threw a bridge across the Rhine," was only mixing mind and matter!

A small boy, who had been reading about Raleigh and the Virgin Queen, got the former mixed up with his Scripture-lesson, and said: "As Elijah went up to heaven, he dropped his mantle, and Queen Elizabeth walked over it." But he was much farther out in his dates than the boy who, when asked what Prince Harry did when he heard of the illness of his father, Henry IV, replied: "He sent a postcard to say he was coming at once."

Another small boy from East London must have been thinking of the water-butt when he said, "the Feudal System is what we get our water out of," but was not more at sea than the youth who said, "Chivalry was when you feel cold," or the boy who said that "Queen Elizabeth was thin and pale, but a stout Protestant."

"Lollards were lazy people, who always wanted to rest against something," may be put side by side with what "Mr. Doctor Watts wrote about the voice of the Sluggard, which we have at home." But this is news about James the Second. "Finally, James the Second gave birth to a son, and so the people turned him off the throne!"

"The Three Estates of the Realm are Buckingham Palace, Windsor, and Balmoral," asserted a fervent patriot but the boy who, in writing of the Middle Ages, said that "a man could not become a monk unless he had his tonsils out," got mixed between a tonsorial and surgical operation.

But the boy who went farthest astray in his historical perspective was the one who wrote "Joan of Ark was Noah's misels."

Trees That Own Themselves.

In the United States of America there are two trees that own themselves and the ground on which they stand.

One of these famous trees is an oak in Georgia—where everything is peaches, by the way—and the other a sycamore in Kentucky. The former stood upon the land of a colonel named Jackson, who left the following paragraph in his will:

"I, W. H. Jackson, of the County of Clarke, State of Georgia, of the one part, and this oak-tree (giving location) of the other part, witness that the said W. H. Jackson in consideration of the great affection he bears said tree, and his desire to see it protected, has conveyed unto the said tree entire possession of itself and the land within eight feet of it on all sides."

The sycamore is an even larger landowner, for thirty-six feet all round it were bequeathed to it by a certain Miss Lloyd, whose will contained the following:

"The said tree is conveyed, in consideration of the value of itself as a resting-place of the weary under its shade, itself, together with the terra-firma beneath, and said tree are to belong to themselves absolutely, and to each other, for all the purposes for which God and man intended them, among which is the purpose of the soil to nurture and feed the tree, and that of the tree to shade, grace, and beautify the said terra-firma."
