SUCH A LITTLE CHANGE!

RUTH CAMERON

If there is anything more maddening than to have something one has said, repeated with a twist that gives it a totally different meaning than that which one intended, I have yet to meet with it. Here is an example of that sort of thing which I encountered recently.

A friend of mine and I went to see a mutual friend who has a brand new baby.

The All-Important Decision.

The nurse brought the baby in and after we had inspected its minute perfections, decided whom it was to look like, and commented on the pathos of its infinite helplessness, its mother said to the woman with me:

"Whatever would you do if you had a helpless little bundle like that in your home?"

The point of that remark lay in the fact that the visitor is an artist who has been married several years and has no children, and is not strong for domestic cares.

Before and After Translating.

"Well," she said, "if one came to me I suppose I should look after it the same as everyone else does."

Yesterday I heard that remark, which had evidently passed through several mouths, repeated. And this is how it now went:

"Elsie said she guessed if she had a baby she could look after it as well as anybody else could."

Not a very great change in wording, was it? But all the change in the world in spirit.

As it was said in the first place, it meant simply that she supposed that if she were confronted with the care of a baby she would manage to take care of it, just as millions of other women do who have never had babies before.

As it was repeated, it meant that she, without any experience, could do as well as anyone else.

Change of Emphasis Does It.

Unquestionably this woman is inclined to be self-confident on many subjects. And it was this knowledge of her character that those who repeated that remark were injecting into their translation.

But I heard that particular remark; I know it was not made self-confidently, and I resent for her the injustice of that translation.

It is so easy by the exchange of a single word, or just by the change of emphasis, to give a meaning that the speaker did not intend. And it is such a temptation to do this when one has a preconceived idea of the person's character and can fit the remark into that. But it is no fun to have it done to oneself. And if you have the least respect for the Golden Rule it is, therefore a good thing to try not to do.

announcement of Alderman Dodger's retirement?"

Editor: "Under 'Public Improvement'."

Little Son: "Father, is there a reason for all this?"

Father: "Yes, I suppose so."

Little Son: "Well, then, father, why do you lay eggs?"

Father: "Because they can't stand them on end."

"I suppose in your business nearly everyone you go to see asks you to call again?"

"Ask me?" replied the collector of the furniture money. "Some of them dare me."

"Our train ran into a cow," said a traveller to his wife, who met him on the railway platform.

"Was it on the line?" said the wife.

"No," replied the husband, "we chased it over two fields, through a wood and then up a tree!"

Neil: "Miss Passay says Mr. Gold-son proposed to her on Wednesday night, but she didn't give him her

MY COLUMN

(By the CUB-EDITOR.)

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

I am now enjoying a rest from the vicissitudes (good word that) of serial writing, and how better could I enjoy it, than by setting out on paper my views with respect to woman suffrage. In doing so, I am fully aware that I shall incur the dislike if not the deadly hatred of everyone interested in this so-called reform, but let me say here, that never shall it be said of the C.E. that "he hesitated to express his convictions because he feared the consequences." And now, enough of this preamble! I shall, to use a colloquialism, "cut the cackle and get to the horses."

I shall begin by asking a question—Why do women want the vote? The answer is, because they haven't got it. Somebody may accuse me of trying to be funny. I am not. I am in deadly earnest. Women are like the child crying for the moon. They always want what they haven't got and when they get it they don't want it. (Editor: Oh, help! Cub-Editor—Look here, is this my article or yours?)

You gas the public enough, so let somebody else have a chance.) In any case, women do not want what every other woman has. Just as Mrs. Brown won't wear a certain dress because Mrs. Smith has one just like it; so will Mrs. Smith not want a vote because Mrs. Brown has one also. But you may say, they all want the vote at present. Yes, so they do, or think they do. But wait till they get it and then see what happens. At present they are all united in their struggle for franchise, because they have nothing else to do, and are anxious to add to the troubles of the mere men who people our assembly. But once a woman, always a woman. Mark my words, and to use the expression of a famous statesman, "Wait and see."

(In my next column I shall discuss the ways in which women will probably use the vote—when they get it.)

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON.

On Friday night the Sports in town. Will all to the Casino go;

And with the soothing weed, will drown

All thoughts of sleet, cold, rain and snow.

Their keen attention too, they'll lend

To recitations by Tom Halley;

The air with their applause they'll rend

In accents loud—phenomenally.

And then they'll follow Tom O'Neil

And with him, cremate Sam Mc-

Ge;

By that time they will likely feel

That they are on a joyous spree.

And then—now hold your breaths, I pray—

Applause will strike the atmosphere

And up will rise to have his say,

None other than our own George Ayre.

But what he'll say, I shall not tell;

Go to the meeting and you'll hear

'Twill be told then and told you well,

And from the lips of Mister Ayre.

A THOUGHTFUL TRAMP.

A gentleman returning home late one night down a lonely country road was suddenly attacked by a tramp, who, not satisfied with annexing his victim's watch and chain, turned his pockets out also, and took his money.

When the unfortunate gentleman staggered on to his feet again he beheld the tramp smiling at his discomfort.

"Here's half a crown for yer, guv'nor," he said, "my mate's down the road, and if he meets you, and you ain't got no money on you, he might hurt you. Good night!"

"My ancestors ewre all people with brains." Miss Sharpe (examining it): "H'm! Do you—er—like it?"

Grace: "I didn't accept Walter the first time he proposed." Gladys: "No, dearie; you weren't there."

"Say, old chap, are you fond of moving pictures?" "I should say so."

"Then come round to our house next Tuesday, and give a hand. We're moving that day."

Biggs: "That dog of neighbor Snooks kept me awake all night with its continual howling."

Jiggs: "They say that is a sure sign of death."

Biggs: "Yes; it would have been had I my gun near at hand at the time."

New Cook: "Well, I daresay your place will do, but—ah, I forgot—have you any children?"

The Prospective Master (wearily): "Yes, I have five, but of course, I could drown two or three if you insist upon it."

"What are you crying for?" "Teacher kept me in and called me a little ass."

"Well, cheer up, that's not much to cry for." "Bee-hoo, but it's so unkind to father."

Miss Sent: "It's an opal ring Mr. Cheesely gave me."

Miss Sharpe (examining it): "H'm! Do you—er—like it?"

Miss Sent: "Oh, yes; but you know the old superstition. I'm afraid it will bring me bad luck."

Miss Sharpe: "I wouldn't worry. This can't bring you anything worse than an imitation of bad luck."

Rooster Named in Suit.

Charge That Vicious Fowl Ruined Sight of Child.

CHICAGO, May 26.—A rooster was made defendant in a $20,000 damage suit filed in the Lake County Circuit Court at Waukegan by Leonard P. Kinsley of Chicago.

Kinsley, who directed his suit against Emil Wienecke, farmer at Barrington, Ill., owner of the rooster, declared that the bird had ruined the sight of his daughter, Lenor Kinsley 5 years old.

In the declaration the plaintiff set forth that Wienecke knew the rooster to be a vicious disposition, but had allowed it to run at large despite the fact that it had menaced other children visiting the farm. Wienecke is the uncle of the injured girl.
