THIS ORIGINAL DOCUMENT IS IN VERY POOR CONDITION

Jamie concluded that the pedestrian had been resting himself behind this, and had risen up to resume his way.

As to the question who he might be, there was a probability of solving that, for he was proceeding at a pace so leisurely that the edger's sober-paced pony would ere long overtake him, and, in point of fact, the distance between the rider and the walker grew every minute less.

Jamie had ample time to observe the stranger, and though it was but a back view he obtained, his appearance struck him as peculiar. He seemed to be an exceedingly powerful man. He was fully six feet high, and his height was fully matched by his limbs, which were massive and muscular. His shoulders were broad and square. He had long swinging arms. In his right hand he carried a thick knotty cudgel, which he used as a walking-stick, and his tread was firm as that of a man who walked in the height of his strength.

His dress was the hodge-grey of a common shepherd. A plaid was cast negligently across his shoulders, and a broad blue bonnet sat somewhat jauntily on his head.

He's a sony carle that, thought Jamie to himself, as he slowly but surely overtook him. "By his cleeidin' he sul be a maritand here, but that walk isna like the jog-trot o' a hill man. And then whaur's his dog?"

"Here's a braw nicht, friend," observed the cadger, who never failed to speak to every one he met in his journeyings, but in this instance curiously, as well as country courtesy, induced him to enter into conversation with the stranger.

"Ay, a bonny nicht," responded the latter, turning his face towards Jamie, and eyeing him broadly.

Of the breadth of accent in the stranger's speech there was no room to complain, but the voice was far richer than that of a common shepherd, and the purity of tone betokened a man higher in rank than his dress indicated. Jamie tried hard to scan his features, but he was on that side of the road where the light of the moon cast his face into the shadow, and though Jamie's countenance could be clearly seen by him, his own could not be discerned.

There was no desire evinced on his part, however, to shun observation, for his bonnet was placed high above his head, and he turned full round to Jamie as he spoke, and kept his full front steadily presented towards him.

"Ye're late on the road," was Jamie's next remark.

"Nae later than myself," was the good-humoured rejoinder.

"Hoots, but my way o' livin' tak's me abroad at a hours, an' it's little wonder tae find me journeying after nightfa'. A walker like yersel' isna sae often frae hame in the mornin'."

"True, but these troublous times mak's an honest man tramp the country at unquiet hours. Ye ride the night by choice but aiblins my naig is necessary, and aiblins tae I was as soon be at my ain ingle side."

"Ye'll be a stranger in thir parts," said Jamie, making no direct response to the stranger's last remark, for he was always on his guard in speaking of the cause to those whom he knew nothing about.

"That's as muckle as tae say ye dinna ken me," was the reply.

"Weel, no, I canna say I dae."

"Then I'm better aff, for I ken you. Ye are Jamie Tamsan, the cadger."

"Atweel am I; but I'm no juist surprised at that, for me an' my ponny are gey kenspeckle, an' far m' folk recognise me than I'm acquaint wi'."

"You are Jamie Tamsan, then, I guessed as much from the description I have had of you," said the stranger, speaking now in more cultivated language, and in an abrupt earnest manner. "No need," he added, "for further caution either on my side or yours; and, to banish your distrust, I will tell you who I am—Mr. Lellan, the laird of Barscob."

"Guid life, is it possible?" said Jamie, with a start, and speaking in a low alarmed tone.

"I am here, as you see, disguised. I heard late last night of the conventicle at Moorside Moss, and that capture of Mr. Gordon and Mr. Elliot, and have come into Nithsdale to learn particulars. I am making my way now to Birkenside to see Mrs. Elliot, and am glad I have met you. Do you know anything about our friends, or where the troopers have taken them?"

"They are in Dumfriesshire at present, but are to march for Edinburgh in the mornin'."

"For Edinburgh?" said Mr. Lellan, mournfully. "They are to go into the hands of the Council! Then will they fall ill at the hands of Sharp and his persecuting crew?"

"I dread that, sir—I surely dread that," returned Jamie, speaking now on the dangerous topic without reserve, for the Laird of Barscob was well known about Greystone as a staunch Covenanter, he having given shelter to Mr. Gordon when ejected from his parish, and hid him at Barscob during the period of his exile.

"But how know you they are to go to Edinburgh to-morrow? This can hardly be known yet, for they would not be examined by the Commander till to-day, and it rests with him to say what is to be done with them."

"Maybe sae," returned Jamie, "but it is just as I tell ye. I got the information by chance this afternoon. As I was leavin' Sanquhar, a trooper cam' in frae Dumfriesshire wi' a blawn horse, an' betin' acquaint wi' him a bit, as I am, he said that Turner's dragoon-care fellows, I sounded him as to the prisoners, and that was the news he told me. Captain Allan, wi' a pair o' his troop, is tae leave Dumfriesshire at eight. Mair than that, sir, added Jamie, in a cautious whisper, "they are gaird by Leathills, and that brings them through the Enterkin Pass, where a dozen bold men might rescue every one o' the prisoners."

"You are right, Jamie," exclaimed the other, eagerly. "In that Pass the escort will be completely in the power of a party on the heights."

"There's nae doubt o't," rejoined Jamie. "A' that's wantin' is a leader. I could find the men atween this and the mornin'."

"Then do it, Jamie," cried the laird, with great energy. "Find me a dozen brave determined men, and I will lead them."

A Bradford paper reports over the fact that the fees of the local police office have risen to $800 for the past year, while in any previous year they have never exceeded $75. It seems to think there is not more crime but a healthier surveillance fell overboard, and poor Duncomb in endeavoring to save it, himself fell into the sea. Read heard his cries for help, but was unable to render any assistance, and the unfortunate fellow perished. Read was now left alone in the boat with only a single oar, and in utter ignorance as to where he was. Being unable to make any efforts for his own safety, he gave himself up to prayer. Things went on thus till mid-day on the Sunday, when, being literally reduced to death's door, he was espied by the crew of the Albatross, and picked up. The French vessel having had a protracted voyage, was short of provisions, but the crew cheerfully shared their little with poor Read, who speaks of their kindness in the most grateful terms.

A SKATING INCIDENT.—The Standard mentions the following:—"On the 5th January, 1791, Napoleon was enjoying the exercise of skating on the ditch, at that time deep, which borders the fortress wall outside Auxonne. Dinner hour having sounded, the future Emperor took off his skates and prepared to depart. "Another turn," said two of his fellow students. He hesitated a moment and then said, 'No, it is time to go.' The others would not hear of leaving off, and dashed on again; but the moment after the ice gave way, and in spite of all the efforts of Napoleon Bonaparte to save them, they were both drowned."

In New York, the other day, one Chas. Herman, a cigar maker, committed suicide on being told, jeocosely, that his employer's daughter was in love with him. There was too much joy in the information, and so the poor Teuton went and hanged himself.

AMERICAN SILVER.—The course pursued by the banking institutions of Halifax has operated so successfully that not a dollar of American silver remains in circulation. They simply made a rule that they would take off twenty per cent discount, and receive quarters at twenty cents each. The consequence was, that at once, throughout the city, this became the current valuation, and the brokers began to buy up and export the article to the place where it would realize the highest price.

Another lady of Manchester has immortalized herself by recording her vote, not in a Parliamentary, but in a municipal election. Miss Jessie Goodwin is the strong-minded female in question. Her name being found upon the roll as a citizen of Manchester, her vote was received.

The debt of India is now estimated at one hundred million sterling, or less than two years' income. The interest paid is 4 per cent.

GERMAN IMMIGRATION.—A well-informed American paper notices the fact that for the last two years the German immigration has been twice as numerous as that of the Irish, and, while the former is increasing, the latter is diminishing. The emigration of the Germans has been stimulated by the same cause that gave us so large an addition of Americans to our Canadian population a few years ago,—a desire to avoid the political troubles of the country, and a wish to escape the draft for military service.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE of the

AMERICAN WATCH

THE American Watch Company of Waltham, Mass., being determined to place their several grades of Watches at prices within the reach of all parties, and to effectually shut out all Swiss counterfeit Watches, have decided from this date to supply their Watches in the Dominion of Canada at the net Gold value of American Currency. The Company by thus paying all duty, costs and charges on their Watches into Canada, will supply to the people of the Dominion the Cheapest Watches in the World.

The Watches are of all grades, from the finest Gold Watch made, adapted to any climate from the Tropics to the Poles, at a price to suit the wealthy connoisseur or for presentation, to the Cheap Silver Lever, strong and serviceable, regulated to minutes, suitable to the Mechanic and Farmer, and quite as low in price as any moderate quality Swiss Watch. Our grades of Extra Heavy Cased Watches for Railway Engineers and Lumbermen deserve particular attention in Canada, as nothing can equal them for the purpose. Our leading Watches in 18 Carat Gold Cases for Ladies and Private Gentlemen, at medium prices, will be found very desirable.

We are frequently asked why we don't advertise prices. We reply that as we only supply the trade and as our Watches are now kept by best respectable houses, the public can rely on being served at a fair advance on the Manufacturer's List. Our trade marks are AMERICAN WATCH CO., APPLETON, TRACY & CO., WALTHAM WATCH CO., P. S. BARTLETT, WM. ELLERY, HOWE WATCH CO. Guaranteed in all cases by special certificate (except the Howe Co., which is warranted by the seller. The purchaser should always require the guarantee, as there are Swiss counterfeits for sale in some places.
