Orendaga Staff.
The staff for the Orendaga Saga, the camp paper is as follows: Editor, in chief, Jessie McGeechay, Sarnia; sports, Marion Henderson, Sarnia; serial editor, Isabel Griffiths; host and found, Margaret Griffiths; cartoonist, Alice McFarlane, heard and seen, Mary Watson, Sarnia; personals, Danny Webster; health and beauty, Elaine Kennedy; poetry, Alma Reid; nature study, Bessie Sandeman; nature study, Laura Beattie.

Under their capable management an excellent paper was brought out on Saturday evening, and the campers are eagerly looking forward to the second edition, which is to appear Tuesday evening, when the "Further Adventures of the Long Green Worm" will be continued. The staff remains the same for the second paper except that owing to the resignation of Jessie McGeechay, who has returned to Sarnia on Sunday, Laura Beattie was elected to the position of editor-in-chief.

Some very exciting games of baseball have been played between the girls of Orendaga and the Port Bruce girls. The girls have played good ball, the star players being: Elsie Saunders, Ivy Slater, who have done excellent work in the field; Alice McFarlane, on second, and Billy Miller, pitching. We dislike to record the scores, but at any rate, the girls are improving. The score of the last game was 10 to 0.

SECRET OF HIS SUCCESS

One of the most noted, successful and richest men in this country, is a recent article said: "Whatever I am, and whatever success I have attained in this world, I owe it all to my wife. From the day I first knew her, she has been an inspiration and the greatest helpmate of my life." Health is the first essential of every woman who wants to be a successful wife, and to hold the love and admiration of her husband. If a woman finds her energies flagging, and dark circles appearing under her eyes, she has headache, dizziness, nervousness and "the blues," she should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the medicine which holds the record of helping 38 out of every 100 women who try it. There is nothing better.—Adv.

Lauder dainty things
twice as often, this way

It's not necessary to keep your prettiest things folded and laid away. Wash them—often. Launder them just as often as necessary. But do it this way:

Use Palmolive PRINCESS SOAP FLAKES—and see fragile creases, silks, laces, come from laundering absolutely unharmed. Colors brightened and freshened, if anything.

The great foam of suds contains nothing to hurt the daintiest fabric, the most delicate coloring. It dissolves the dirt, however, most thoroughly—and washes it away.

These snowy, crinkly flakes contain nothing but pure soap. So they go farther, cleanse, more efficiently. That makes it economical to use them in the washing machine, for all laundering, and for every general household purpose.

If only to try, get some today of your dealer. He has them—in handy one-pound packages, or in bags.

First Cold Weather Sends
Milady's Arms To Cover

Long and Tight Sleeves Appear On Afternoon Costumes, Coming Well Over the Hand, As Paris Prescribes.

New York, Aug. 23.—Men may need a Bok Prize peace plan, but only a hint of cold weather was needed to send arms under cover so far as women are concerned. Sleeves appeared as if by magic, and even short-sleeved or sleeveless frocks were worn, arms that had been bare all summer were covered by gloves. Some compromised by the addition of little double puffs, two puffs to each arm, attached at the shoulder. These are plaited together and come midway to the elbow. Sleeves on afternoon costumes, in most instances, are long and light, coming well over the hand, as the Paris mode prescribes. Necklines, however, continue to follow the canoe type, with open gunwales—that is, the hem stands well away from the neck and shoulders. Sometimes a standing collar is featured.

A contrary tendency is exhibited in hats. Now that the rays of the sun are least to be feared, hats have grown larger, until some of the cape-line models have assumed the proportions of small parasols. In nearly every instance these droop well over the right shoulder, with tulle scarves or ribbons dangling still further down the right side. A short husband may walk through the streets beside a tall, slim wife, wearing one of these creations, and be perfectly protected.

The cape-line has not entirely pre-empted the field, however, for the cloche and beret types still are popular. Velvets and velvets are favorite materials for these types, with many bright colors in evidence, especially in the cloche.

cially the so-called Chinese reds and blues. With the berets, the chief adornment sometimes is found in hat pins of jet or crystal.

The bustle bow has slipped. It has declined to remain modestly in the rear, but has worked around to positions on the side of the new dresses, and even is posed directly in front.

In its journeyings, however, it has diminished materially in size if not in stiffness. Frequently the bow is of the same material as the dress, but faced with contrasting colors.

A bustle bow of that type is effectively used on an evening frock just imported here, which is of cherry-colored satin crepe, made on perfectly straight lines and bloused at the low waistline by a bustle sack of the same shade, with the bow placed directly in front.

The irrepressible pleats are pressed into service on nearly every possible variety of gown today. These pleats appear on lingerie on strictly-tailored suits, and on afternoon and evening costumes of all descriptions.

During the summer months, the pleats are running horizontally around the waist and vertically on the drawers.
