
THE ADMINISTRATION
OF THE
COLONIES.
PART I.

THE several changes in interests and territories; which have taken place in the colonies of the European world on the event of Peace, have given a general impression of some new state of things arising. One cannot but observe, that there is some general idea of some revolution of events, beyond the ordinary course of things; some general apprehension, of something new arising in the world; of some new channel of business, applicable to
