N an hiftorical account of General Boquet's expedition against the Ohio Indians, published under his inspection, in 1765, we meet with a list of the fighting men of the different Indian nations of the northern and fouthern districts of North-America, amounting to fifty-fix thousand, five hundred and eighty, confisting, chiefly, of such Indians as the French were connected with in Canada and Louisiana.

This account we are there told may be depended upon, fo far as matters of this kind can be brought near the truth, being given by a French trader of confiderable note, who had refided many years amongft the Indians.

The publisher of that account, a perfon of reputation, now in this city, who has for many years made matters relating to
