NYE ON THE BRINY

From Bill Nye's Despatch to the "Detroit Free Press." About Half Way Between the Bowery and Whitechapel, Str. "Allan," Atlantic Ocean.

How strange it seems to be once more on the bounding billow! The weather is fine. We had a good start. Only one thing failed me. The two men I had engaged to bring me flowers, as I sailed from New York, did not come. They had not failed me before, but I did wrong to pay them till they had brought the goods. There is a German air about the ship, and the band is playing one on the deck also. We have a good deal of music and gravy.

The table groans with good things to eat. I did not feel well for a day or two. It was not sea-sickness, but somehow food did not agree with me. Still

I was pressed by all hands to eat. There were more meals as we went east and more gravy. For fear of a famine, lunch was served three times a day in the smoking room. Then the steward, when he saw my place vacant at table, sent a waiter to my stateroom to make me come down, or allow them to bring up some dish with gravy in it.

Last night we came on the path of a great storm. We could see places along the way, where the lightning had struck. We also found when the sun came
