

In Dr. Cathell's book all these delicate points are taken into account, and hundreds of suggestions are made which show very plainly how easy it is to get on the wrong track in these respects. This is especially the case with a young physician, who may, like the renowned character in Mark Twain's novel, be designated as a "Pudd'nhead," on account of the most trivial error in deportment. A special feature of the new edition of Dr. Cathell's book is the introduction of hundreds of apt quotations in display lines which tend to lighten up the character of the book and make it even more readable than in preceding editions. The investment of the price of this book is a small sum compared to a doctor's reputation.

Of course, such a comparison is entirely ridiculous and absurd; on its face there can be no such comparison. Nevertheless, we have the testimony of hundreds of the brightest physicians this country has ever known to the effect that the possession of such a work as Cathell's book on "The Physician Himself" would, at the outset of their careers, have been worth hundreds of times its price as an unerring guide to govern their relations with the general public.

The grateful remembrance in which the painstaking preceptor is held by the earnest student is one of the compensations of the physician whose value cannot be estimated in money. The presentation of a copy of "Cathell" to the proud possessor of a new diploma will always be accepted as a peculiarly appropriate gift. Once more we advise those who read this notice to obtain a copy.

F. W. C.

Transactions of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, Third Series, Volume the twenty-fourth, Philadelphia, printed for the College.

The Committee of publication has favoured us with a copy of this book, which contains all the papers read before the Society from January to December, 1902. The volume opens with memoirs of Dr. John Ashurst, Jr., Dr. Alfred Stillé, Dr. William Fisher Norris and Dr. J. M. Da Costa, all men well known to the profession as eminent teachers of the Philadelphia Schools. The various papers cover a variety of subjects, and all are more or less interesting. We have read several of them with profit.

F. W. C.

A Text-Book of Practical Medicine. For the use of Students and Practitioners. By William Gilman Thompson, M.D., Professor of Medicine in Cornell University Medical College, Physician to the Presbyterian Hospital, Bellevue Hospital, etc., New York.—New (second) edition, thoroughly revised. In one octavo volume of 1,104 pages, with 62 illustrations. Cloth, $5.00; leather, $6.00; half morocco, $6.50 net. Lea Brothers & Co, Philadelphia and New York.

A book on Medicine of over one thousand pages, which has been in such demand that the first edition was completely exhausted in less than two years, and a second revised edition was called for,