The Committee recommends that the federal government, in partnership with provinces and territories, increase its investment in crime prevention activities and that the federal government allocate 1% a year of the current federal budget for police, courts and corrections to crime prevention over a five-year period. At the end of five years, the government should have the capacity to provide a range of services to communities and individuals in partnership with provinces and territories to create model, non-commercialist solutions to crime, with no political ideology being used to justify the approach. In this way, the government can encourage provinces and territories to adopt a tested new, measured

Recommendation 6

The Committee recommends that Parliament's own committee on justice protection be given the authority to review the policies contained under the Criminal Code and Young Offenders Act, the Corrections and Conditional Sentence Act, the Sex Offender Management Policy Act and related criminal justice measures. (Page 70)

Recommendation 7

The Committee recommends that the federal government expand Statistics Canada's program of victimization surveys to capture the nature of child victimization at regular intervals and to allow for population samples conveniently large to capture the spectrum of important subgroups of the Canadian population. The information collected from the victimization survey should be used to support the research agenda of the proposed national child protection centre. (Page 201)

Recommendation 8

The Committee recommends that the federal government work with the provinces and territories to expand programs to promote violence-prevention activities as an integral part of the curriculum in elementary, junior and high schools across Canada. (Page 201)

Recommendation 9

The Committee recommends that the Minister of Justice, in consultation with provinces and territories, review existing prison policies and make a series of specific, science-backed changes to ensure that, where appropriate, offenders are
