COPY FOR THE PRINCIPAL, SIR ARTHUR CURRIE.

Dear Prof. -----

I am sending a copy of this letter to each and every member of the Faculty of McGill College. The letter is confidential, therefore, only in the sense that any discussion of its contents had better, for the present I suggest, be confined to our own Faculty and to the members of any other Faculty of the University who may appear personally interested.

Several departments of the University have recently mentioned to me the possibility of publishing a departmental journal or series of approved departmental studies, and I need not say how praiseworthy these proposals are. There is, however, a bigger question involved in these proposals and that is the question whether or not McGill can any longer afford to do without a scholarly magazine similar to The University Magazine which was discontinued a few years ago. I know from personal experience East and West that The University Magazine was one of the best ventures McGill ever undertook, and the University owes a deep debt of gratitude to Sir Andrew Macphail for the careful, scholarly character of that Magazine. Why not revive The University Magazine or a similar magazine? I am convinced that
