had his him a all the haplain Prayers. is Side-1p Dinn? The ikes anink it a had been Or fhall prentice did not Bufinefs? edge this e to be hing. It ely well Inquiry, and

[25]

and then, if my poor Abilities can be ferviceable to Mr. P——ke, and, as from my Soul I think, to the Justice of his Cause, he may frankly command them. I shall only remark here, that they, who advise their Soverelgen to any Act of Power contrary to his natural Clemency, will have very little Right to the public Compassion, when they shall themselves become Objects of his Justice.

But if the Author of this Letter should ever be encouraged by Your Approbation, GENTLEMEN, and that of the Public, to write again, permit him to afsure You, that no Sentiments of Slavery and adulation; no Language unbecoming the Character of a Citizen of this great Metropolis; no Principles disconsurable or injurious to Liberty; no perfonal In-E vective,