at the close of the market:

Wheat—Has responded to the weakness of the real situation to-day and under pressure of liquidation about the lowest prices on the crop year were reached. This in itself is an important factor, inasmuch as it leaves no holder of the cereal with a profit, while many are carrying lines which were bought at much higher prices. Probably the report of the inter-state common to grid were commission, issued as a result of investigations in the Northwest, had a great influence upon holders, tending to convince them that the reports of small yields in the above sections of the country were entirely unfounded, in fact the report stated that only a small portion of the crop of the three states has thus far been marketed, while country elevators and everything that can be utilized to store wheat in are filled. On any further decline it would not be surprising if stop or dear were reached, but in any even we cannot advise the long side, as the situation continues to look very weak to us.

Corn and Oats—Have held very steady in face of the weakness in wheat and altho some recession in price was recorded, the same was almost insignificant. The the same recession in price was recorded, the same was almost insignificant. The general-tone seems weak to us, however.

Provisions — Were somewhat irregular but quite firm, with no special feature.

It hardly seems possible that the early Jones estimate as regards the spring wheat crop will be correct, but the indications according to reports to-day point that way.
