

Six Stormy Days At Sea End With Boat, Poultry And Pigs On Board Safe

Captain
Hessie Barrack
and wife feeding survivors of the cruise

New York, March 5. — The stormy weather at sea in recent weeks has produced many a weird tale of the Atlantic's whims, but none more grotesque than that of Captain Hessie Barrack and his wife.

After six perilous days at sea, during which their boat became coated with ice a foot thick, and the decks piled deep with snow, Captain and Mrs. Barrack brought their vessel into New York harbor safely with all hands on board safe and well.

All hand included not only the captain and Mrs. Barrack, who emerged from the experience none the worse for the exposure, but their poultry and livestock, as well.

Tutankhamen
Had Bread
In Tomb

Reopening the tombs in the Valley of the Kings of Ancient Egypt reveals the fact that the people of the greatest of the Pharaohs had such a reverence for the power of Bread that they buried a supply with him to sustain his soul along its journey.

It is a far cry from the food of foods of 5,000 years ago, that was so coarse it wore the teeth down, to the delicate richness of Butternut Bread — the climax of ten thousand years of baking progress.

1922, 54,000 electric street lamps at a cost of $1,400,000. To provide the same service by using rented electric street lamps would cost approximately $2,800,000 a year. From this it is apparent that the city, by operating its own system, is saving the taxpayers approximately $1,400,000 a year.

"The first municipal electric lighting system was placed in operation on Christmas Eve, 1887. The equipment consisted of one 125-horsepower engine and four 80-light, low tension arc dynamos. One hundred lights were placed in service, lighting the river at street intersections.

"The energy for the operation of Chicago's street lamps is obtained from the hydroelectric plant of the Sanitary District at an annual rate of $15 per kilowatt, or $0.0044 per kilowatt hour. The cost of operation has decreased, due to economical methods, introduction of more efficient types of lighting units, and reduction of current rates, from an average of $65.40 per lamp in 1900 to an average of $24.85 per lamp in 1922.

"Five types of lamps are in use, ranging from 100 to 1,000 candle power. One thousand flickering candles at a street intersection might be arranged to provide an artistic lighting effect, but with Chicago's reputation as a city of the future, it is not before the first ones would be out before the thousand could be lighted.

"The Department of Gas and Electricity operates in residence districts a large number of 100 candle power, 4 ampere, gas-filled series incandescent lamps. A submerging cable is laid in the parkway and ornamental cast iron or concrete posts are installed to carry the lamp equipment. Seventy-five of these lamps are installed per mile of street, two being placed at each intersection of a street and an alley, and in general one lamp for each 75 lineal feet of street.

"A new type of residence lighting system, known as the group lighting system, has been designed. Twenty-one thousand lamps have been installed on this type of circuit and by the spring of this year there will have been installed an additional 14,000 lamps. This system is constructed at a saving of 43 per cent. in first cost and so designed that it is impossible for the public to come in contact with dangerous wires. In the technical language of the electrician, it is explained as follows:

"The cables are laid in the parkway, a 5,000-volt cable being used for the primary circuit and a 600-volt cable for the secondary circuit. For street and alley crossings the cable is protected by fibre conduits encased in concrete or steel pipe, which is pushed from curb to curb without disturbing the existing pavement. There are 200 to 300 100-candlepower series lamps on each circuit, and these lamps are operated in groups of seventeen to thirty-one lamps for each group. Each group
