is a teetotaler; it was, in short, a not yet told 'the whole strange story very dry crowd. And here again I of his life, but when he does tell it it interject another somewhat irrevelant observation as a symbol of changes brought about by the war. I was present at a lunch given to the Russian journalists. Whatever were the faults of the Russian n the past, he could always be relied upon to take his whack and to compete successfully with a man of any other nationality in carrying his liquor. But to my surprise every Russian journalist steadily refused to touch anything but mineral water : it brought home to one the gigantic revolution which the war and the prohibition of vodka has made in the habits of all the Russian people.

Mr. Bonar Law never puts sentence on paper, however serious be the occasion on which he has to speak, and thus at a certain moment say on the question of Imperial reorat the luncheon I could see him ganization, which is one of the most retire into himself and begin to certain and desirable results of this fashion in his inner mind what he was going to say. I have often told how he sits down in an arm chair when he has a big speech to deliver : remains seated for a couple of hours; and then gets up with his speech ready, but with his body and mind as worn out as if he had been writing for the two hours. When he does speak, with such preparation, he speaks remarkably well. He has the gift of words beyond all doubt and especially when words of tact are required. This is one of the reasons why he succeeded so remark. ably well when Mr. Asquith, with great Parliamentary adroitness, appointed him as the chief spokesnan of the Government Conscription Bill. This is the reason also why he has advanced so rapidly in Parliamentary favour since he became member of the present Government. His speech at the lunch was quite excellent : saying the right word, and saying no more, and pleasing everybody.

The figure, however, which was more interesting to me than even that of Mr. Bonar Law-largely because it was quite unfamiliar to me—was that of Mr. Hughes. Sitting opposite to him, I was startled by both the smallness of his stature and the apparent fragility of his frame. He seemed just a little man whose head scarcely came above the table, and who was a bundle of tremulous who was a bunnel of trendform in the different countries now at in the different countries now at war," says the Heraut, "exhibits if he were going to be hanged. His secretary placed before him a large bundle of manuscript, and I saw him laboriously going through this, with every appearance of anxiety, making the Entente powers, ardently and a correction here and a correction there. With such preparations it seemed more than probable that we should have from him a halting, a discursive and a ragged speech. Mr. Hughes, as everybody knows, is Welsh, and looks typically Welsh. the dark complexion, the dark and brilliant eyes of his countrymen. In some respects he reminds one a little of his illustrious countryman, Mr. Lloyd George, except that there can be no true comparison between the joyous look nations, is in spirit and utterance of Mr. Lloyd George's sparkling eyes aloof from this divergence of personal and the wondering and anxious views. expression of Mr. Hughes. I may confess that I was almost as nervous as Mr. Hughes, for I did not know firmly united. She is spiritual how he was going to solve the problem of being effective and fluent and at the same time of sticking to his terrible manuscript.

What happened was quite the contrary of everything I expected. He never looked at the manuscript for mediator of peace. a moment; it might just as well not have existed, but in a tide of eloquence, with antoccasional pause, he burst upon the whole audience with a crash. A few moments after he had risen; he was master of them and they listened astounded and spellbound. I was particularly struck with the beauty and distincspellbound. tion of the language; it was evidently the language of an educated and well-read man. Now and then it had an ironical touch which reminded me of Henry James. But the most astonishing thing was that this frail pale-faced, anxious little man appeared to be a soul on fire. There was inflexible resolution, fiery oratory in every word, and especially when he got on the now popular topic of the unscrupulousness and elentlessness, as well as almost diabolical skill, with which the Germans had spread their tentacles of trade all over the world. This was followed of course by a revelation of the drastic and prompt measures by which Mr. Hughes and the Australian Parliament had confronted this octopus and strangled it. I will say little of the substance of the speech of Mr. Hughes; I was more concerned with the form and the manner. He seems to me to belong to the school which exists in Protestants can show very little of Labor ranks alone in Australia, the this spirit of human brotherbood. which would set up a whole Tariff system in the British Empire gainst all German goods—a scheme which I may say at once will meet with the most vigorous resistance from most of the great business men and all the Free Traders of Great patient. Thus there is a cathe dral for the secular, and one for the regular clergy under his rule. As a matter of fact, there are more religious in the diocese than secular clergy ; and the chapter of the late Bishop consisted entirely of members of his Order. There will now be two chapters, one at Belmont, as formerly, and the other at Cardiff, and thus both classes of clergy will have their voice in the administra-tion of the archdiocese. In Cardiff there are seven churches to six parishes, so that the erection of one into a cathedral will cause no hard ship.

It may be a little surprise to you to learn that it takes $100 a week to keep my mission going. I am glad when I see that amount contributed in the RECORD, but when it is less I am sad to see my little reserve sum diminished and the catastrophe arriving when I must close my chapels, discharge my catechists and reduce my expenses to the few dollars coming in weekly. I beseech you to make one more supreme effort during 1916 to keep this mission on its feet. You will be surprised to learn what a great deal I am doing with $100 a week-keeping myself and curate, 30 catechists, 7 chapels, and free schools, 3 churches in different cities with caretakers. supporting two big catechumenates of men, women and children during their preparation for baptism and building a church every year.
