RUSSIAN PRIME SHOT.

Paris, Sept. 21.-The Petit Bleu yesterday printed a despatch from Algiers saying that a relative of the Czar, who had eloped with the wife of an engineer, had attempted suicide in her room in a hotel at Algiers. The first report said the man was Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovich, uncle of the Czar, and later this was changed to Grand Duke Valdimir. Another report The Russian is apparently Prince Vladimir Troubetskoi. The shooting appears to have been more or less of an accident, after two days of somewhat riotous living. He will recover, Refinement of the body impairs strength; but this is not true of character. Anything that refines character strengthens it.

A man talks about owning his business. But as a matter of fact his ousiness owns him. His whole life is regulated by the demands of the business. The time at which he rises, his breakfast hour, the time given to meals, are all determined by business obligations. He rushes through lunch because he "can't spare the time from business" to eat leisurely. He won't take a rest because he is needed at seen on every hand. Men dyspeptic, irritable, nervous, with drawn faces, stand behind the counter until they collapse in a fit of sichness, or are taken away by heart failure. Those who cannot escape the exactions of business will find a friend in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It strengthens the stomach, increases the creasing the vitality and physical vigor. THE SONG OF THE SHIRT.

With fingers weary and worn, With eyelids heavy and red, A woman sat in unwomanly rags, Plying her needle and thread-Stitch! Stitch! Stitch! In poverty, hunger and dirt, And still with a voice of dolorous pitch She sang the "Song of the Shirt!"

"O men, with sisters dear! "O men, with sisters dear!
O men, with mothers and wives!
It is not linen you're wearing out,
But human creatures' lives!
Stitch—Stitch—Stitch,
In poverty, hunger and dirt,
Sewing at once, with a double thread,
A shroud as well as a shirt.

Work-work-work! My labor never flags;
And what are its wages? A bed of straw,
A crust of bread—and rags.
That shatter'd roof—and this naked floor—
A table—a broken chair—
And a wall so blank, my shadow I thank
For sometimes failing there!

"Oh! but for one short hour! A respite, however brief!

No blessed leisure for love or hope,
But only time for grief!
A little weeping would ease my heart,
But in their briny bed
My tears must stop, for every drop
Hinders needle and thread!"

-Thomas Hood, FAMOUS BROOKFIELD STABLE.

The Great Stables of Baroness Burdett-Coutts Seen by a Canadian.

In my last letter I wrote of the visit of some of the Canadian Ministers to Holly Lodge, the residence of Mr. and the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, near London, where the famous Brookfield stud is kept. Highgate is close to Hampstead Heath, famous in all the annals of London life, and the public owe to the host at Holly Lodge the successful issue of what is known as the Hampstead Heath act. by which Parliament Hill and an additional three hundred acres of land 1885.

Our host led the way down a shaded path between great banks of holly and rhododend-Perterb Singh, who is one of the ing of the Morgan ship combine, said most courtly of Imperial Highnesses to be found in the group of distinguished men sent to the coronation of King Edward. It is very clearly to be seen that this Indian Prince has never walked when it is possible to ride. He has the gait of the cavalryman, and the smartest of patent leather footgear, which looked curiously out of keeping with the tight, grey trousers which clung to most un-English of nether extremities and still more out of keeping with the low-collared frock coat of fine dark cloth which reached below the knees, and the magnificent turban of delicate colored puggaree, which was wrapped about his dark face in a most becoming fashion. I wonder if in my last letter I spoke of the Chinese Ambassador and his wife and little girl of about eight years of age, who accompanies her parents everywhere, dressed in the quaint garb the store or office. He is in fact an of her country, and evidently "takabsolute slave to business. The result ing in' the "topsy-turvy" world which follow this slavery are to be which her Chinese ideas must teach her to think exists in this part of the globe. Not a little bored, I exand hollow eyes, sit at the desk or pect, by the lonely position she is forced to occupy, is this rather largeeyed and not at all unprepossessing little Chinese maiden. Her mother has the most charmingly genial face, a great contrast to the grave lord and master, who is a good-lookinng type of Li Hung Chang. Evidently action of the blood-making glands, in- there were no more keenly interested spectators of the beautiful horse show we were treated to than the Chinese and the Indians of Mr. Burdett-Coutts. And what of the horses and mares and foals which were brought out by the natty grooms and stablemen for our inspection as we sat moving pictures, which had for a background the stable walls where the Brookfield stud is kept?

There was a splendid quiver of excitement and pride in the attitude of each famous mare as she brought with her before the audience assembled what her mother's heart told her was the reproduction, and often the reproduction made perfect of her own magnificent personality. Rosa Bonheur or Lady Butler would have simply delighted in these pictures, which pass all too quickly be-fore us. There is no class of horse-breeding which could appeal with greater charm to the artistic sense than this hackney strain, which in truth represents the very best form which "horsiness' can assume. A well-ordered establishment, a comfortable country home, seem nothing without a few well-bred horses for general utility purposes as an accompaniment. Race horses may lead to undesirable connections, and hunters are to those who do not follow the hounds a selfish luxury, but the delights and comforts of country life, the most same and wholesome type of life in Great Britain, and, indeed, in the whole world, are those which we connect with the possession of well-bred and carefully-bred horses of the

The stupid historian dubs us "Saxon" and 'Sassenach,' and naught else, and is stupid even in his descriptions. We are neither Saxon nor Sassenach. We are mostly fools. But fools be we as we may, we are fools with a glimmering of intellect. There is one supreme evidence of this. We have abandoned maffickingism. walked late on Thursday night from Ludgate Hill Circus to Trafalgar Square. I walked among the people constrained, restrained, decent. There was no woman who wanted to reveal the underlining of her petticoat.

There was no stupid Boeotian - all these fellows have the brains of the brainless—who wanted to reveal to the world the sole of his foot, a decorous, well-sustained, self-controlled, good-humored people walked along, and walked along in some-thing like dignity. You missed the hi-hi-tidilledy-iddely-hi-hi-tiism of the ordinary mob. You had a really decorous people—a people you could re-spect, a people with their hands in their pockets and not in the air, a people greater than their own, design, for they knew not their des-I stood at Ludgate Hill on Thurs-

All at once a wagon passed along in which the chevaliers of the East End were hustled close togeth-Suddenly one of their companions - a loidy - began to sing the 'Soldiers of the King" in a raucous voice. Not a soul responded. The crowds on either side regarded her as she opened her mouth, it to en gulf an empire, as a harridan, a termagant, a fool, and then she, dis pirited, desisted. Then as by an inspiration she howled out "God Save the King." She had caught the popular temper and sounded a note the popular voice could harmonize with. Up rose a great chorus-a chorus that really had something of sentiment in it. 'Twas not Bacchanalian; twas really human. And my girl and boy sang tenor and contralto to my bass.

I left Ludgate and walked to Hyde Park corner, passing all slong through a jostling, wrestling, who-shall-be-first crowd. The whole way along I began to believe with intensified force in the English people. I have never been aught but a disheliever, as I have said, in the theory of Saxonism. And these people were not Saxon in their emotion. they were generally phelgmatic and stolid, but their stolidity concealed a real sentiment—the sentiment of sympathy. I conversed with these people-, the people who repressed the larrigans, refused to buy those raucous-toned paper trumpets, and who despised the Hooligans, men and women alike, wanted to kiss the heavens with their steel-toed boots, and I found that they regarded the King not so much as a monarch but as a good fellow. What has killed the republican spirit in England is not so much the question of the moment as the appreciation of the King's humanity What use hiding it? The late Queen was a good woman, but a good wonan only of the Gaelic type. She belonged to the "bang-goes-saxpence" example of womanhood-an example that would see an appetite sacrificed for a bawbee. The King doesn't belong to the same class. 'clawss'' in London-'tis the neans of showing your patriotism As I stood outside a group beyond the entrance to the Hotel Cecilthis was at 10.30 on Thursday night -I heard a lady of much-petticoats and many frills declare that the King was a man. There you have the secret at once. "Puritanize the King," said a distinguished Liberal statesman to me at the National Liberal Club the other night, "and we shall think him to be a Pharisee." And there you have the secret of the new mood of the people-the mood that is resentful of stupidity, of secrecy, of anti-manliness, of anti-humanity.

Still the crowd flowed along beside me. It was a good-humored natured, man-loving crowd. These scurrying fellows knew nothing of the nuances of economics-they knew nothing of the difference between godliness and stupidity, between Jingo-ism and hate-ism. They only thought of the man.
