In the early morning of April 9, 1912 in silver or stamps. an electric burglar trap came into successful operation on the premises of Messrs. Achille Serre, of Balham usefulness was soon apparent. An errand boy employed by the firm arrived Size on the premises at eight o'clock, his opening the door he heard yells and shouts from a back room, two doors between having been broken down. Looking through, the boy saw a man we are compelled to advance the prior standing by the desk with both hands on a metal rod. The man swore at him, saying "the man will die." The intruder was suffering severely from the shock, but the current was not strong enough to cause lasting injury. It appeared that he had effected an entry by cutting out a glass panel and breaking through the two doors. But hen he placed his hands on the rod of the desk he was caught, and the electric current held him fast. It was lucky for the boy that this happened, for the police found on him a revolver loaded in six chambers, and would probably have gone badly with the youngster had he released him.
