"Put a lion in bed with me!" yelled the darky. "No, sah! Not a-tall. I quite right here and now."

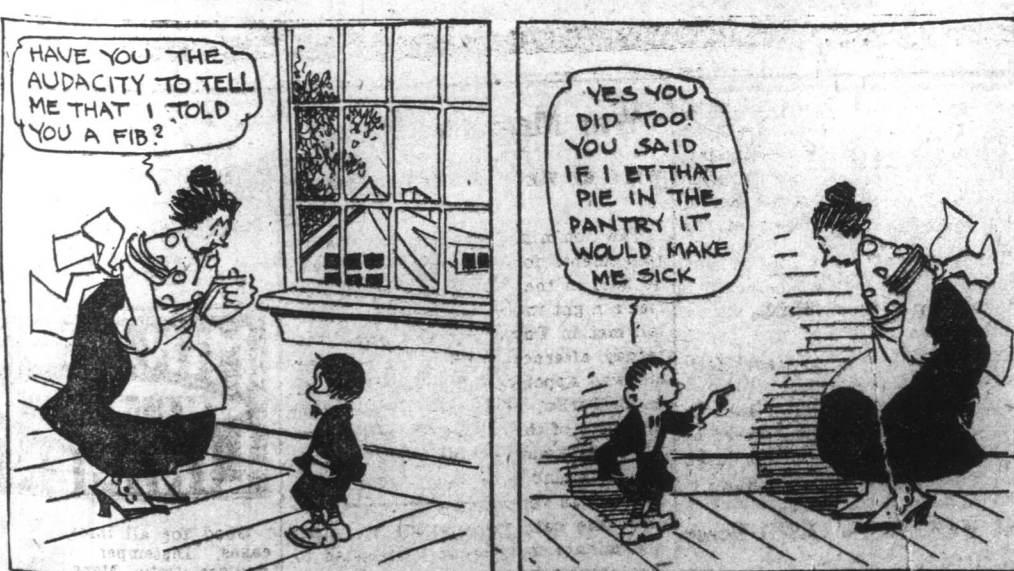

"But," protested the producer, "it is lion won't hurt you. This lion was brought up on milk."

"So was I brought up on milk," yelled the darky, "but I eat meat now."

The Prince at Madras.

PICTURESQUE GREETINGS FROM NATIVE CHILDREN.

Madras, like other places, has succumbed to the charm of the personality of the Prince of Wales. Remarkable enthusiasm, for instance, was shown for the Prince when he inspected the boy scouts and the girl guides at Government House. In mass horse-shoe formation the boys and girls greeted the Prince with a chorus of "Madras, welcomes you." After various evolutions, "cub howls" and much cheering, the Prince addressed a few words to the delighted youngsters. Less than half an hour later His Royal Highness was inspecting 12,000 European and Madras school-children gathered on the side of the "island" bordering the river Cooum. On his arrival a dainty, richly-dressed little Indian girl presented him with a bouquet. When the Prince had ridden around the "island" a group of children gave a display of Indian gymnastics, and the European children sang "God bless the Prince of Wales." It was a very pretty picture, amid a vivid tropical environment, upon which the sun beat in tingling splendour. Shortly before noon the Prince reviewed about 800 police on the "island." Contingents from the city, the "Mofussil," and Chingleput districts formed three sides of a square facing the Munro statue, and the Prince proceeded through the ranks, occasionally pausing to speak to the men. His Royal Highness next turned his attention to a parade of ex-Service men, and some of them with distinguished records were presented to him by the Officer Commanding the Pensioners' Camp. The most interesting event, however, was the inspection of the First Battalion of the Prince of Wales' Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). On entering Fort St. George by the Wallajah gate, the Prince was received with a Royal salute, after which the usual ceremonial evolutions were carried out. Before lunching at the officers' mess the Prince visited St. Mary's, the FIRST ENGLISH CHURCH IN INDIA, which was finished in 1680. He saw there the tombs of the missionary Schwartz, Sir Thomas Munro, Sir Henry Ward, and Lord Phipps and Herbert. He also inspected the stone which is still on the original site where Elihu Yale was buried, whose father founded Yale College, America. Leaving this mouldering edifice, the Prince looked in at the sergeants' mess of the Leinster Regiment, and stayed there for a brief while chatting. Madras, languorous in a deep heat, is amused at the untiring energy of the Prince. Although he was dancing in the Adyar Club until midnight, he was away snipe-shooting on the Ghats, 30 miles off, early next morning. In the afternoon he attended the races at Guindy, being heartily cheered all along the five miles route and receiving a great ovation on his arrival at the course, about which he strolled freely. In the evening he dined with the members of the Madras Club, and was much amused at the traditional custom of tossing the Governor over the bar counter—said to be the longest in India—"just to show equality." From the terrace he watched a grand fireworks display upon the island, afterwards motoring to the Central Station, where amid a crescendo of enthusiasm, he left for Bangalore, the first stage on his track through Central India.—News of the World.

A FORM OF PAINLESS GIVING.

What fun anyone with an imagination can have making a will. It is such a pleasant way of giving things away without having to give them up—in fact one of the few forms of painless giving I know.

And when I speak of making a will I do not mean necessarily a formal instrument disposing of portentous sums of money. That must be fun, too, but even if one has little or no money it is interesting and worthwhile to make plans for the disposition of one's little treasures in a way that will prevent any possible ill feeling among one's relatives; and will give whatever trifles one has to leave a special value in the minds of those to whom they go because each thing will carry with it the assurance of one's thoughtfulness and regard for the recipient.

We All Have Treasures.

I know a woman who greatly enjoys making a will every two or three years leaving the pretties she has accumulated to different friends and relatives. Her new evening gown is to go to a friend who is very near her, and favors the same colors she does. Her fur coat is willed to one of her in-laws who would never have a fur coat otherwise. Her dearly loved wrist watch is to go to her favorite niece. The amber beads which are her choicest treasures are to go to one sister and her lovely new travelling bag to another.

In the course of a year or two some of these treasures will be spoiled by use, of course, and no longer worth giving to anyone, and then she will make a new will.

Don't Trust to a Memorandum. Someone will probably suggest that, considering the high cost of lawyers, this is a somewhat expensive diversion. In this particular case the husband is a lawyer so it is possible for her to make these changes without spending any money. I do not know the law, and of course it varies in the different states, but I should think that if one had a lawyer once and made a will, he could tell one in advance how to make codicils from time to time in such a way that they would be legal.

One might think that in any respectable family a mere list of what one wishes done with one's little treasures would be binding on the natural heirs without legal formality, but such is the instinctive acquisitiveness, such is the ability of human nature to justify itself in any course it wants to follow, that one cannot always be sure.

How Is This for Meanness?

I know a case where a legal will was made disposing of a few little treasures and a few hundred dollars, which the wife had earned herself. Her mother outlived her and the wife left the money to her as she greatly needs it. The husband who dislikes his mother-in-law is trying to get the court to let him use the money for funeral expenses. Yet he is distinctly well to do. How is that for the kind of meanness that may crop up in the most respectable family?

Better make your will legal, if you can, and then when you are thinking how your heirs will bless you in that time (which you are willing to contemplate in this hazy way but do not seriously expect ever to come) when they are given your little pretties with a touching message—your visions need not be marred by a doubt as to whether they will ever get them, after all.

THE SPEEDING YEAR.

WALT MARCH

It's labeled Nineteen-Twenty-Two, this blessed year of grace, and it will soon be out of view, so swiftly does it race, to join the sad and phantom crew in Time's dark dumping place. So let us waste no useful days, but pinch them as they pass, and saw our wood and hoe our maize, and cut all kinds of grass, or in our old age we shall raise the future's cheap alas. Our years of usefulness are few, soon fails the strong man's vim, and lethargy attacks the thief, and feeble grows the limb; so mark the days of Twenty-two, and nail them as they skim. How mournful is the pilgrim hoar, who for lost chances weeps? How futile is the bustled bore who in the porchouse slumbers! The year that's gone comes back no more. It's looped the loops for keeps. So let us labor with our hands, and with our heads and feet, in offices or peanut stands, in fields of shredded wheat; and when old age upon us lands, we'll find life's winter sweet. The brave new year is speeding by, its cylinders all hit, it's climbing all the hills on high, and throwing dust and grit; so grab the bright hours as they fly, the minutes as they fly.
