THE SUCCESSFUL DAUGHTER-IN-LAW.

Recently I answered in "this column a letter from a Letter Friend who was about to go to live with her son and new daughter-in-law, and asked me if I could give any suggestions as to how to be a successful mother-in-law.

To-day I have promised, in answer to the chorus of demands from mother-in-laws that I heard on my private psychic wireless, to tell the daughter-in-laws that the mother doesn't have to do all, that if the three cornered home is to be a happy one, she has got to help.

How?

Well, in the first place, she must make up her mind not to be jealous, not to try in any way, subtle or direct, to lessen her husband's natural and right love for his mother. A man can love a mother and a wife each with all his heart, and yet rob neither.

She Can Afford To Be Generous.

In the second place, she must try not to be arrogant about the fact that the home is—and should be hers. She has a right to do everything her way perhaps, but as Phillips Brook says: "We don't have a right to all our rights." Her mother-in-law has had many years' experience. Why not avail herself of some of it once in a while? Why not be gracious and kindly enough to do something her way occasionally? And if the mother does certain household tasks the daughter should as far as possible, let her do them, just as she wants to do them even if it doesn't seem to her the most efficient or most modern way.

The daughter should remember that in giving up her own home, the mother is passing through a difficult experience and should have extra forbearance and tenderness on that account.

A Way To Lose Love.

The daughter should not always be digging at her husband by mentioning something that his mother has done that she doesn't like. If there is any serious difficulty that has to be adjusted naturally she has a right to consult her husband and even ask him to intervene. I know a home where the mother-in-law absolutely would not lift a finger to do her share of the work. The wife finally had to ask her husband to speak to her. But I know there are many more homes where the wife likes to make constant little nagging complaints and criticisms to her husband to put him on the defensive. It is a great mistake tactically. It may make trouble between him and his mother, but is just as apt to make him feel resentful toward the complainant.

A kind daughter-in-law will try to let her mother-in-law share some of their pleasures and will do little tactful things such as suggesting she entertain her own friends when for some reason she and her husband are to be away to meals.

The Happy Three Cornered Home

"The daughter is mistress in the home but, on the other hand, it is the only home the mother has and while she cannot be allowed to run it, she should be allowed to have all the comfort and pleasure possible, a room fixed up so that she will enjoy sitting in it (if a private sitting room is possible) and any other forms of consideration that are desirable and possible.

The whole thing comes back to tact and the Golden Rule. If all three will obey the Golden Rule a three cornered home can be as happy as any other kind—or happier since there are more kinds of love in it.

Safeguard Your Prints

Just make it a habit to put one of each of your "Snaps" securely in an album so that you've got them for reference, otherwise you'll find you've often given away the very ones you wanted to keep particularly.

Albums are a photographic necessity, but not an expensive one if you shop at Tooton's, where there is a magnificent stock of Snap Shot Albums in all grades and sizes, and in a wide range of prices.

Musings.

A new hired girl sweeps clean—for a while.

I know just how Columbus felt. I felt just like that when my first baby grew his first tooth.

There's one time I'm sure of a compliment from my husband, and that's when I bring out my last winter's hat and try it on to see if it will do to wear any more.

The woman whose husband speaks gently when he is trying to sharpen his razor with which she trimmed her corns, doesn't need to ask him if he loves her. He does!

Two classes of people know just how to rear children—the ones who never had children and never will and the ones who reared five or six or more who were neighborhood terrors.

Some folks don't believe in sanctification, but I know a woman who was shut in on a rainy Saturday with five children of her own and three of the neighbors' and never lost her temper all day. Now if that isn't perfection in grace, what is? I'd like to know!—Farm Life.

Luck Man.

Lecturing recently on the subject of missionaries and their work, Dr. John McNeill, the Scottish evangelist, told this story:

A chief in the New Hebrides Islands, who, before his conversion had been a cannibal, was reading his Bible one day when a trader came up to him and exclaimed: "What is that you are reading?"

"The Bible,"

"Oh, that's played out," said the trader. "I don't believe it ever did anyone any good."

"Don't you?" replied the chief.

"Then let me tell you, sir, if it were not for the Bible you would be in my cooking pot!"—Pearsons.

Exit the Flapper.

The flapper has had her day.

Her end is predicted by fashion experts in metropolitan gown shops who present the latest importations in gowns, suits and millinery as proof positive. With the coming of the autumn mode, the flapper must make her exit, they say.

The reign of the bobbed hair, bare kneed ingenue type has ended. Fashion has staged a revolt against the youthful tyrant who put grandmothers in knee length evening gowns, and disclosed to the heartless world bowed legs and elbows like nutmeg graters.

There are many who will not mourn the passing, according to the modistes.—Ex.

Largest Statue.

It is reported from Japan that there is being carved there the largest statue in the world. It is a recumbent effigy of Nichiren, a Japanese patron saint, cut from a natural granite rock on a hillside in the island of Ushigakubi, or the "Cow's Head," in the inland sea of Seto.

This strange image, it appears, will be 240 feet long, 60 feet longer than the sleeping Buddha at Segoo, and considerably larger than the Sphinx in Egypt.

Nichiren, whose name means "Lotus of the Sun," was a religious teacher, who lived in the 13th century. At one time he was condemned to death, but the headman's sword, the Japanese say, "was unable to decapitate him." One of his present-day worshippers, a very wealthy Japanese, is bearing the expense of having the huge stone carved in honor of the saint.—Washington Star.

All for Twenty-One Shillings a Week.

An English insurance company, it appears, advertised recently for an experienced clerk, salary twenty-one shillings a week, and among the replies received was the following, according to a London paper:

Dear Sir—I would respectfully apply for the position you offer. I am an expert in insurance in all its branches. In addition, I converse freely in Gum Arabic, Gorgonzola, Zola, and Billingsgate. I write shorthand, longhand, left hand and right hand. I can supply my own typewriter if necessary, and I may mention that I type write half an hour, in ten minutes—the record for Great Britain. I would be willing also to let you have the services, gratis, of my large family of boys, and if agreeable to you, my wife would be pleased to clean your office regularly without extra charge. The cost of postage for your answer to this application can be deducted from my salary. Please note that if you have a back yard, I would make bricks in my spare time.

MELANCHOLY.

I'm full of weariness to-night, in vain I strive to shed a grin; the moon that once was shining bright looks like a planet made of tin. I have two bolts upon my neck, and two more threaten to arrive, and so I sadly cry, "By heck," and wonder why I am alive. I hear the laughter of the young, a sound I loved in days of yore, but now it keeps my nerves unstrung, and makes my head exceeding sore. I read the works of Sunny Jim, that used to soothe my savage breast, but now I'd rend him limb from limb, and throw the fragments east and west. My aunts tune up their lyres and lutes, for music once possessed its joys, but now I don my hat and boots and leave the house to dodge the noise. The night wind has a wailing sound, it sighs and whimpers by my shack; my poultice weighs a half a pound, and keeps on sliding down my back. It is in vain my brow to deck with wreaths of laurel, fairly won; for I've two bolts upon my neck, and "wreaths" aren't worth ten cents a ton.

A good dinner deserves a good cigarette, a bad dinner needs one. Let your choice be CUB.

Sierra Loone.

As will be seen the Exhibition is to be a grand effort of the people and the Governments in connection with the Empire. As the Prince of Wales said: "An Empire worth dying for is also worth living for, and working for."

Every section of work in connection with the Exhibition is in the hands of experts. Special committee system for classification and organization of exhibits is being extended to cover every important trade and industry. All the members of these committees are experts in their own line, men of business or commercial repute, or men of high standing in the study of their particular subject. There is not an industry in the Empire of any importance that will not be so represented. No Exhibition ever held has been so greatly favoured with capable advisers.

A One-Man Town.

A travelling man sold some to the proprietor of a general in a small town. When the man arrived it was not up to him and was returned. The house sight draft on the merchant to the local bank, which was not the letter asking the postmaster about the financial standing of the merchant was returned by the government official marked "OK" house wrote the postmaster to a lawyer to collect the amount received this reply:

"The undersigned is the man on whom you tried to palm off worthless goods. The undersigned owner and president of the house which sent back your sight draft to the lawyer you sought to be for your fake business. If he signed were not also pastor of church at this place he would you to go to hell."
