A valuable trotting horse was brought to the school recently for the treatment of a fractured jaw, the result of attempts to manage him. He had a habit taking the bit under his tongue, thus making himself master of the situation, and being a horse of high spirit he would proceed to hold or do as he chose. He was a trotter, but was practically valueless on account of his habit of bolting and breaking. Prof. Harrison took the matter in hand, resolving to make an attempt to save the animal. He procured a galvano-As a general rule, the safest plan is to breed what you can sell to the best advantage in your market; this is, of course, conditioned upon the fact that your farm is adapted for this purpose. But it is strictly necessary from the start to have some definate purpose in view and select your stook, and mate to breed to that purpose, using on both sides stock that will give you the best results towards that nurpose.
