

THE STANDARD. PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY, BY A. W. SMITH. At his Office in Saint Andrews, N. B.

The Standard, OR RAILWAY AND COMMERCIAL RECORD.

No 2 SAINT ANDREWS, N. B., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1849. [Vol. 16]

ENGLISH MAILS. Table listing shipping schedules for various destinations including Europe, America, Canada, and the West Indies.

MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE. Protection Insurance Company of N. B. CAPITAL $200,000.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CONNECTICUT. CAPITAL $1,000,000.

THE Standard, being received by the Agents for the Province of New Brunswick, and the Colonies, and is published weekly, on Wednesdays, at the Office of the Proprietor, in Saint Andrews, N. B.

POETRY. OUR LITTLE BOY.

When the evening shadows gather Round the hearth, and the fire burns bright, Comes our little boy, and he bends himself to the earth, And with light and gladness, And with eyes that gleam and shine, And with a smile that is so sweet, This the prayer he offers nightly To the Source of light and love:

OUR LITTLE GIRL. Our tender babe! our bright eyed one! Our youngest, darling joy, We teach, at evening hour, to kneel Beside our little boy, And though she cannot lip a word, Nor breathe a simple prayer, We know her Maker blesteth her, The while she kneeleth there.

OUR LITTLE GIRL. And, O, we love our little one, So ardent and so pure! She hath so many warring ways, Our fondness to secure, And while she thus in silence kneels, Some angle-prompted tone, Heard by us, may mingle with The prayer to Mercy's throne!

OUR LITTLE GIRL. And she, too, fondly comes to us With eyes of sparkling bliss, And, like her brother, she receives, A good-night, parting kiss, Nor ought of fear disturbs our breast, For such as she will ever find The guardianship of Heaven!

ARRIVAL OF THE MAIL. The American Gaily transmits the arrangements for a month, and the Colquhoun by steam to Calicut, despatched for this steamer has been the December mail, and will meet the side of the 10th.

of Panama, to which it will be forwarded by steam, and the rail-road carriage necessary to cross the Isthmus - Kingston News.

From the London People's Journal. STABILITY. BY HENRY J. HARRISON. Bole by the right.

It is stability of principle which is indispensably necessary to the success and happiness of the world, to maintain such a line of conduct as we know to be right. There is nothing which proves weakness of mind so much as following the example of others, merely to avoid the pain and trouble of thinking and exercising for ourselves. Such a practice is a robbery and a forfeiture of spirit, which inevitably entails a mental state of apathy. We are not to be guided by the crowd, but by the light of our own reason, and a Divine precept pointing down from the Father of light, and which tells us to try all things, to hold fast that which is good.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

By a steady and determined principle of conduct, we are enabled to resist the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and to stand firm in the path of duty. We are not to be guided by the crowd, but by the light of our own reason, and a Divine precept pointing down from the Father of light, and which tells us to try all things, to hold fast that which is good.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is stability of principle which is indispensably necessary to the success and happiness of the world, to maintain such a line of conduct as we know to be right. There is nothing which proves weakness of mind so much as following the example of others, merely to avoid the pain and trouble of thinking and exercising for ourselves.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is stability of principle which is indispensably necessary to the success and happiness of the world, to maintain such a line of conduct as we know to be right. There is nothing which proves weakness of mind so much as following the example of others, merely to avoid the pain and trouble of thinking and exercising for ourselves.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

LAW RESPECTING NEWS PAPERS. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscriptions.

English and America Machinery. By the late arrivals from New York and Boston, it appears that the iron works are becoming alarmed at the large importations from this country during the present year.

It is stability of principle which is indispensably necessary to the success and happiness of the world, to maintain such a line of conduct as we know to be right. There is nothing which proves weakness of mind so much as following the example of others, merely to avoid the pain and trouble of thinking and exercising for ourselves.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.

It is the distinguishing character of man to appreciate moral truth, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience. Every man's duty is to follow the dictates of his conscience, and to follow its dictates toward principle, which is not a momentary impulse or current opinion of the day, but the eternal principle of the highest reason, which is the foundation of an enlightened conscience.