Besides the leading articles, and the reviews of books and papers, it has departments devoted to FIELD NOTES, to CORRESPONDENCE, and to NOTES and NEWS, thus covering the whole field of Ornithology in a way to make the Magazine indispensable to all classes of students

Each number contains about 100 pages, and the illustrations occasionally include colored plates

"This journal has the best of American Ornithologists in its editorial corps. It promises, as its pages show, to be attractive to the popular reader, as well as to the scientific, and should have a large circulation."—American Journal of Science.
