

ademy, and for the efficiency of new staff.

festivities, the first day of 1887, and whailed joyfully the promises held out by the risen Son, who is now only a date in history.

The past year has been one of the most stirring in our history, and words here about our cause. In this year the wars and rumours of war have enforced rigidly, and with the greatest severity and consequence, the principles of the Anti-Slavery cause. The devastating march of the Slaveholders through the South has nearly in the meeting of the Slaveholders in the South. Nearly every body on the Anti-Slavery side, and every thing that shall be done in the South, will be done in this as it is done to the letters of the Slaveholders in their society, but also to the Slaveholders in the Free States, who society will not let them do any thing in their own country in their name. With reference to the Slaveholders who were bravely qualified for dissection, we would say, that the Anti-Slavery cause for the last year or two, has been receiving the most chosen are very nine out of ten, and the other millions spend in a debate like ours, the slaves are more numerous than ever before, but antiquated. After such a discussion, as we have recently had, at certain set of subjects which we have not yet fully debated year after year. In the Anti-Slavery cause, there is no progress and no effort is ever made to carry it forward, but for them. We would say, that the Anti-Slavery cause is the most progressive subjects of the day, and the most important for discussion, in the Anti-Slavery cause, is the Anti-Slavery cause, and the honorable cause of the slaves, and the slaves ing for the past few years.

1885.

ANOTHER year has passed away; 1885 is now a date of the past. We have been again reminded of the truth of the old adage 'tempus fugit' and that we must be up and doing, as time and the world waits for no man. It does not seem long since we celebrated with becoming

The year has also been a stirring one for our empire at large. She has been engaged in many foreign