

men were Governors of Newfoundland. He was highly respected by all members of the different governments under which he served, and was most kindly supported by his brother officials who reciprocated his obliging disposition and good will.

Having, while in Canada, been thrown so much into contact with the Aborigines, and knowing their character, he became the great friend of the Indians of Newfoundland, some of whom served him for as many as fourteen years. They are said to speak of him yet as the best hearted man that ever lived. His house was their home in St. John's, and the photographs of Murray and his family are to be seen in all their wigwams, where they are highly prized.

While living in St. John's his manner was very unobtrusive and he appeared to care little for any society but that of his wife and family. Latterly he became a member of the Church of England and appears to have manifested a simple Christian piety. He enjoyed his full pay from the Newfoundland Government to the close of his life, but no pension was granted to his family, who were left ill-provided for, and would have fared badly but for the great and continued generosity of Sir Patrick Keith Murray and the present Laird of Dollarie, Mr. Anthony Murray, mentioned in a previous part of this article.
