

people. Give them the franchise, and risk their asking something which it would be injurious to them to have. They have not been trusted for nothing, they have always been steadied by every increase of political power. Responsibility, and power have gone together. Both as regards Ireland and as regards labour the people may be trusted.

---