

principally the 22nd, suffered dreadfully from the intense heat, and forced marching; but returned, having accomplished the object. Ali Morad, having shewn so much bravery throughout the whole of the proceedings, and performed so much service for Sir Charles, was at once appointed the Rais over the whole of Scinde, subject to the British. Shere Mahomed took up another position early in March, and succeeded in collecting a much larger force. Sir Charles, who had a mere handful of men, was joined by the brigade named, as having left Sukkur under Major Stack, and who arrived on the 22nd March, just in time to be present, (fortunately for Sir Charles,) at the battle of Dubba, on the 24th, which terminated in favor of the General again. The loss on our side was very considerable; on theirs, vast indeed. The 22nd acted most nobly. This corps suffered considerably in wounded men. Leslie's Troop, in conjunction with the 22nd Regiment, stood the brunt of the battle, and most assuredly deserve all the credit due. The 3rd Light Cavalry made several noble movements, and taking into consideration the number opposed to them—about six to one—it was one of the greatest victories gained in the annals of history.

The 41st, who were expecting every day to sail for Old England, were up to the last hour in active service, having to keep Kurrachie; and were under arms continually during this outbreak. They, however, shortly afterwards embarked from that port,
