sorry to find its chief advocate to be the first minister—that publicity must be avoiged. Why did not the insurance superintendent and the minister of finance give warning when they knew, as the files of the department show, that gross irregularities existed for years in the insurance business?

Mr. Maclean insisted that this investigation belonged to parliament. He dissented from the doctrine that the house was a mere electoral codlege to choose the government.

Reasons for a Committee.

There were many cogent reasons for appointing a committee of parliament.

1. The committee would get at the facts. It would contain members from the opposition, anxious to probe any corruption. A department of the government was under fire, and it was to 'the interests of the country that nothing be hidden or screened. There should be some person in every investigation to prosecute. Investigators must be aggressive and suspicious, their efforts should not be confined to putting in as much time as possible. They should be on the alert to unearth anything that ought to 'be known.

2. 'This matter, involving $500,000,000 of insurance and hundreds of thousands of policyholders, was of such national interest as to demand the 'attention of parliament.

3. Were this investigation made by national interest as to demand the action of parliament.

3. Were this investigation made by members of parliament, they would, thereby, thoroly learn the insurance business; they would know the evils and how to grapple with them and at the conclusion of their labors they would be in a position to frame the proper legislation.

would be in a position to frame the proper legislation.

Mr. Fielding: "The greatest evil that has arisen in connection with life insurance affairs has been the creation of unnecessary alarm leading a great many of the policyholders to allow their policies to lapse."

Policyholders Should Hold On.

Policyholders Should Hold On.
Statistics showed that a very large number of small policyholders in the United States permitted themselves to be alarmed unnecessarily. We should be careful that we guard against a similar evil in Canada, and if there were any evils in Canada needing investigation, by all means let us investigate them; but be careful that we do 'not frighten the policyholders of Canada into taking a course which would be disastrous to their own interests.

"I think I am justified in saying that in so far as the insurance investigation has proceeded, white certain irregularities have been pointed out, irregularities which may well lead us to learn the lesson of experience, and to bring about, in due course, a reform in our legislation, yet, in regard to nearly all the companies—I think I might also go 'farther and say all of them—there is nothing to show that those companies are not sound and solthose companies are not sound and solvent, and able to hear their responsivolt has been started in Korea, this bilities," 'said Mr. Maclean.

but to hold on to it until the investigation is completed."

Mr. Fielding insisted 'that the commissioners were well qualified. They had employed Miles Dawson, the same actuary who had assisted the Armstrong committee. Need for Haste. Dr. Sproule took issue with the min-ister's 'statement that the alarm was unnecessary. Was there no occasion for Ottawa, May 28 .- Sir Wilfrid Laurier may attend the meeting of the alarm among policyholders who found Canadian Forestry Association in Van- that their companies had misappropri ouver in September.

The governor-general has signified vested trust funds in doubtful securities? It was time people were dropping their policies. And why? They held on for a long time hoping for some reassurance from the government. Now that they could see no prospect of any report from the insurance commission, or action on the part of the government, they were giving up in despair, and letting their policies lapse.

Mr. Fitzpatrick said the insurance department was not under investiga tion. This commission was appointed examine a difficult question, which required experts. It would be ridiculany such task He read a memorandum from Mr Shepley, from which it appeared that the commission had been engaged in

Value of Committee. Mr. Monk (Jacques Cartier) favored the appointment of a comimitee. The committee appointed to deal with the telephone question had thoroly mastered that extensive subject and had been well prepared to deal with any neces-sary legislation. One great advantage of an equiry by parliament arose from the fact that thereby the members thoroly learned what was needed and were in a position to legislate intelligently upon it.

Mr. Henderson (Halton) complained of the Canada Life Company. The dividends due policyholders had been taken from them to swell the reserve and make the shares of stock more valuable. Would this subject be taken up by the government, and could the policyholders hope for any restitution?
Mr. Fitzpatrick doubted if there could be any hope of restitution.
