PHILADELPHIA. A correspondent records a case of making the best of a broken shop window. It was in a narrow street of a large town, and a carter had done the damage in turning his wagon around. The shopkeeper (nursed, no doubt) displayed this notice: "The Result of Backing Horses."

Two Points of View

By RUTH CAMERON

"THE minute I get to New York I always feel shabby, no matter how well dressed I felt before," said a woman from a less metropolitan city, who sometimes goes to New York to see her mother. "I feel as if everybody was staring at my clothes."

"Why, I never felt like that," answered another woman. "There are so many wonderful things to look at in New York that it never occurred to me that anyone would look at me."

Each of us, for himself, the centre of the universe. That is a law of psychology. Even the most unselfish person cannot think of the world in any other way than that. Although he may wear himself out in the service of others, he must still think of this unselfish service as built around himself.

Don't worry about receiving too much attention from others. Unless you are signally disfigured, you are in no such danger. Half the time when you think people are staring at you, they are only looking at you as they look at the trees, or the houses they pass, with entirely self-absorbed eyes.

"Why I saw them of course," explained the pretty one indignantly. "Then you were staring at them just as much," triumphantly pointed out the blunt young person. "And there wasn't anything wrong or remarkable about them, was there? People have to look at something. They can't walk along with their eyes closed. That's all it means. I would be sorry if I were you."

Princess Camporeale, Duke of Adraga, who was at the time attached to the Italian legation at Washington. His only sister, Her Serene Highness Dona Maria, was the wife of Prince Buseca of Naples. Dona Laura, the daughter of the historic Anglo-Italian house of Acton, Prince Camporeale, by reason of his former residence in Washington, is regarded in Rome as an expert on American affairs.

An intimate friend of Dowager Queen Margherita, she, as the widow of a man who was a member of the Order of the Annunziata, ranked herself as a "titular cousin of the sovereign." As a cousin of the house of Acton, it is of course goes without saying that Dona Laura spoke English as her mother tongue.

The Acton, who was an old Shropshire family, and received a baronetcy from Charles I., have always had foreign attachments. Joseph Acton was a general and prime minister in the service of the King of Naples. His son was an admiral in the Neapolitan or Italian navy.

Another Acton became a cardinal, and prime minister of the Kingdom of Naples. Sir Ferdinand Acton married the only daughter and heiress of the last Duke of Dalberg and, dying five years later, his widow married the late Lord Rossmore, who entrusted the education of his young son to the care of the late Lord Acton, first to Cardinal Wiseman and afterwards to the celebrated Doctor Dolinger, in Munich, the former of the nomination known as the Old Catholic.

His pupil, young Sir John Acton, became imbued with his ideas and disdained himself in 1869 and 1870, by his hostility to the doctrine of papal infallibility. This Sir John, who in 1869 was elevated to the peerage as Baron Acton, married the German Countess Marie Arco-Valley. He was lord in waiting to Queen Victoria and a great favorite of Empress Frederick of Germany. His son, the second baron, is in the diplomatic service, and has been attached, as secretary, to the British legations in Berlin, Vienna, Madrid and the Hague. He is married to the daughter of T. F. Lyon of Appleton Hall, Cheshire, and has several children. The family name is Dalberg-Acton.

Londoners witnessed a strange sight on Thursday last. A tribe of Zingaris, or continental Gypsies, assembled at the Charing Cross station, dressed in the bright colored and curiously out garments that their kind in the southeast of Europe affect, and laden with burnished copper pots and pans and busts of various shapes and sizes, boarded the train for Dover, there to shake the dust of England from their sandals and embark for kinder skies. The customs of Great Britain were decidedly unpropitious to these nomads. They could not understand why the health authorities should insist upon their indulging in an occasional wash and clean-up, and obeying even the rudimentary rules of hygiene. The regulations against unrestricted dirt became irksome to them, so they donned their best finery, packed up their belongings and made off for a clime where they can do as they please and not be interfered with, animated, possibly, by that spirit of their race which in early times gave rise to their name of "Touch-nots."

However this may be, I will not venture into a discussion of the origin of these peculiar people, who are supposed, by many of those who have delved into ancient history, to have come from India, and, after wandering through Persia, Asia Minor, Egypt, Turkey, and the south east of Europe, found their way into every country, the bulk of them, however, remaining in Hungary and adjacent territories where they seem to feel more at home than anywhere else.

It will be remembered that in 1807, Germany, at the instance of the Kaiser, made a determined effort to get rid of them, the Prussian prime minister giving special instructions to suppress the "Gypsy nuisance." It seems a pity that the Kaiser did not have the knowledge gained from recent events in England. If he had insisted upon the Gypsies washing themselves regularly, and had appointed a Prussian bureaucrat to see that they carried out the law to the letter, all the Zingari would quickly have left the country, bag and baggage, of their own accord.

In Rumania they enjoyed exceptionally good treatment, although a large proportion of them were tied down to the land, prevented from wandering, and reduced to the condition of serfs. It is from this class that the Gypsy bands and Zingari orchestras that attract so much attention in America, are derived.

Their treatment by the Kaiser's government as "undesirable aliens," and the British regulations regarding soap-and-water, may seem harsh in these days, but they are kindness itself compared to the treatment these wanderers received in the middle ages. In Austria they were put to death wherever found. In Scotland their mere presence in the kingdom was a capital crime, while under an old English statute, which was repealed only about 100 years ago, it was a felony, "without benefit of clergy," merely to associate with

Daily Hints For the Cook

BAKED PORK TENDERLOIN

Split the tenderloin through lengthwise; make a stuffing of bread seasoned with salt, pepper and some kind of sweet herb, stuff the tenderloin and tie a string around it to keep the filling in, add a cupful of water and bake from forty to fifty minutes; baste frequently.

PINEAPPLE PIE

Peel and take out the core and little ends of one pineapple. Grate it or chop it into very fine pieces. Mix together and beat one cupful butter until creamed. Add the beaten yolks of five eggs, then the pineapple and one cupful of sweet cream and lastly add the beaten whites of the eggs, whipped in the pie mixture very lightly. Bake with undercrust only.

ROYAL BOUILLON

To make three pints of rich bouillon, take two and a half pounds of lean beef that has been finely chopped and cover with two and a half quarts of cold water, allowing it to stand for one hour; then cover and place on a moderate fire, only just simmering for three hours and remove any scum that may arise; now add one small onion, one carrot, a sprig of parsley, one bay leaf, two cloves, four peppercorns and two stalks of celery, all cut in dice, and simmer until the vegetables are tender. Strain into an earthenware bowl and let it cool without covering.

A LONG LOOK. A nervous woman went to have her throat examined by a specialist, who, while adjusting the laryngoscope, remarked: "You'd be surprised to hear how fast down we can see with this instrument." "Is that so, doctor?" faltered the patient. "Then, after a pause, she said: 'Before you begin, doctor, I ought to tell you that I really had my time to mend that hole in my stocking before I came here.'"
