

[From the Haligonian.]

A FRAGMENT.

TO OBEDIENT PRAISEPENNIES, ESQ.

Deuce take this world's confounded rabble,
They deave one's ears with gibble gabble;
Nought can be done without a squabble,
Be't it wrong or right;
A very trifling useless bauble
Will cause a fight.

The people are playing the very deuce,
Their tongues are getting by far too loose;
There's no one safe from their abuse,
They are so uncivil;
That really they don't e'en excuse
The very devil.

The very mischief's now a brewing,
Great folks did never get such screwing;
Pray Radicals what are ye doing?
It is too bad—
Such cutting, carving, sawing, hewing,
You'll set us mad!

'Twould seem as people lost their senses,
They're reckless of consequences;
The very constitution's since
They are pulling down;
How can a house with empty benches
Support the Crown?

Who does not sicken at the sight,
To see things come to such a height;
For every silly, paltry wight
Turns politician;
One's apt to get into a fright,
At our condition

It's hard to kick against the pricks,
It's hard for good and bad to mix;
Even do your best in politics,
What can you do?
You must use many casts, and tricks,
Then please but few.

Heavens, will there never be an ending,
Of ways, and constitutions, meading;
For ever wrangling and contending,
With great long stories;
One's at a loss, even on depending
On Whigs, or Tories.

Halifax, March 4, 1840.
