

IS UNDECIDED

Appendix will be found another article from the Standard of Empire or "Problems of Empire," this time contributed by Rt. Hon. A. Lyttleton, M.P., former colonial secretary.

Note—In this article the term Asiatic immigration is confined to the immigration of Asiatics who are British subjects. It is accurate to say that the disposition of all English speaking nationalities in hostilities Asiatic immigration, even of British subjects, except under stringent restrictions, such as those imposed in British Guiana, Trinidad, and other West Indian colonies, in the self governing colony of Natal and in the Transvaal under the Chinese ordinance. This hostility arises from the conviction that (a) Territories conquered or occupied by Britons have been won by the sword, and the people of the race and the founders and their posterity have a right to enjoy the fruit of their efforts unassailed by the competition of men of different races and less earnest standard of living; (b) That the fusion of white with colored races in marriage either does not take place, or, if it does, results in a progeny of a racial and social type inferior to the Anglo-Saxon; (c) That such immigration tends to create a quasi-servile class, to whom equality of political rights is denied, and whose existence perpetually lowers manual labor in the eyes of the white population.

Two remarkable expressions of the typical attitude of the people of Australia and South Africa—the first that of a colonist loyal to the core, the second that of an able and unprejudiced British official, an observer who enjoyed excellent opportunities for judgment—are on record.

In 1888, Sir H. Parkes, in defending his refusal to let the Chinese land on Australian soil (and who will contend for a moment that his language would have been different had the question been of British Indians?) said in the assembly: "If in doing that we have infringed any law, I say that this house is bound in honor to indemnify us, because in infringing the law we have obeyed the higher law of conserving society." Neither for her majesty's ships of war, nor for her majesty's representative on the spot, nor for the secretary of state for the colonies, do we intend to turn aside from our purpose, which is to terminate the landing of Chinese on these shores for ever, except under the restrictions of this bill." Scarcely less vigorous though more reasoned in argument, in expression are the words of Sir A. Lawley, formerly lieutenant governor of the Transvaal, who in a despatch to Lord Milner in 1904 describing the conviction of the people of the Transvaal as to the need to restrict Indian immigration, and referring to the pledges of Sir G. Napier, governor of Cape Colony, in May, 1848, that "there shall not be in the eye of the law any distinction or discrimination whatever founded on mere distinction of color, origin, language or creed, but that the protection of the law in letter and in substance shall be extended impartially to all alike," said:

"In my opinion we are face to face with the most difficult problem of modern civilization. The British empire is now so extended as to include, in the typical of every climate; it contains large tropical tracts, some, like India, thickly populated, others, like Central Africa, almost destitute of population, both alike incapable of becoming the permanent home of a white nation. It likewise happens to contain a certain principal share of the temperate countries still open for settlement by European races, and it belongs to the first class and is a country in which the European leads a purely exotic existence. The European element, as compared numerically to the native, can never be otherwise than insignificant, and must always be confined to the official and military classes, and the higher branches of commerce and industry. In any other branch there never was and never will be any question of the European outliving the native. India has in her climate a protection more permanent and more effective against social invasion than any act of years' experience of northern Australia and the result in these tropical regions of the "White Australia" policy. That long experience has proved, in the biographies of the statesmen who have been banished, is one which is injurious to the health of white men, tending to produce and intensify diseases peculiar to the tropics, and especially to those bearing more difficult and dangerous than in the south; that, further, the health of children is unsatisfactory; they grow too fast, and are pale and lacking in the healthy vigor of the white race; if temperate, are able to preserve their health, though not their energy; and yet all their energy is needed, for upon them and their labor is placed the heavy burden and cost of two homes demanded by the necessity of sending wife and family away for a long and expensive change.

The bishop also points out how important are the questions of accessibility and defense in relation to northern Australia. Few people in Melbourne, in his opinion, realize how near northern Australia is to the east and how impossible of any day's journey it is to the south. Port Darwin is distant from the Philippine Islands only 1156 miles, but from Melbourne 3000. Again, from Thues day island to Dutch New Guinea is 112 miles, and from German New Guinea to white Melbourne it is 2230 miles.

Australians, as the discussion aroused by the bishop's paper proved, and as a most interesting article in the Melbourne Argus testified are beginning to realize the formidable nature of the argument: "You can make no profitable use of this country yourselves, why should you grudge it to others?"

The illustration—and it might be shown not to be an isolated one—is given here in an entirely uncontroversial spirit. No one realizes more clearly than I do the limitations of the empire, and the hazards, and we shall not offer any opposition to the proposals intended with that object; but we also ask you to bear in mind the traditions of the empire, which make no distinction in favor of or against, race or color; and to exclude by reason of their color, or by reason of their race, all of her majesty's Indian subjects, or even all Asiatics, would be an act so offensive to those peoples that it would be most painful, I am certain, to her majesty to have to sanction it. * * * The United Kingdom owns as its brightest and greatest dependency that enormous empire of India, with 300,000,000 of subjects who are as loyal to the crown as you are yourselves and among them there are hundreds and thousands of men who are every whit as civilized as we are ourselves, who are, if that is anything, better born in the sense that they have older traditions and older families, who are men of wealth, men of cultivation, men of distinguished valor, men who have brought whole armies and placed them at the service of the queen and have in times of great difficulty and trouble, such, for instance, as the Indian Mutiny, saved the empire their loyalty. I say, you, who have seen all this, cannot be willing to put upon these men a slight which I think is absolutely unnecessary for your purpose, and which would be calculated to provoke ill feeling, discontent, irritation and would be most unpalatable to the feelings not only of her majesty the queen, but of all her people.

Yet the colonial minister found himself constrained to assent to the Natal act in 1897, which has since become, in substance, the model of similar legislation in Cape Colony and Australia, which employs language, it is true, polite and unaggressive, but substantial, and entrusts the colony with the power at discretion of prohibiting Asiatic immigration. Certain incidents in the Transvaal may particularly be mentioned as arising from the action of Mr. Chamberlain's successor, who insisted after the war in maintaining certain rights of British Indians settled in that colony on the faith of British promises, but these do not detract from the fact that the act is a limited number of Asiatic immigrants and need not be further referred to here except as illustrating the sharp line of cleavage dividing the question of the now admitted power of a colony to regulate future immigration and the question of the obligations of a colony towards British subjects encouraged in the past to settle within her borders. The right to restrict future Asiatic immigration of British subjects was not disputed by the late government any more than by his majesty's present advisers. Canada has not adopted the same methods of exclusion as the Asiatic, but it cannot be doubted that the dominion government is at one with her sister states of Australia and South Africa in the resolution to prevent the effective competition of British subjects of the Asiatic races and the facts briefly summarized above prove that the imperial government has, although reluctantly, been driven to acquiescence in a policy which is useless and dangerous, even if it were expedient at the present time to resist.

A shrewd appreciation of what the attitude of the British democracy would be towards Asiatic immigration if this country were not protected against such competition by climate has in this matter imposed moderation of language upon an otherwise more moderate people, and has kept the law any distinction or discrimination whatever founded on mere distinction of color, origin, language or creed, but that the protection of the law in letter and in substance shall be extended impartially to all alike," said:

dustrial freedom of Asiatic labor, objections based in some cases no doubt on ignorance and prejudice, but in others on lofty and inspiring ideals. Yet it seems almost incredible that the conflicting aims of those who passionately desire to preserve the purity of the industrial standards of the race, yet flinch from the waste of the country's resources, following the exclusion from wide tropical lands of those who alone can effectively gather from them their increase.

IS A SUPERB EXHIBIT

CANADIAN PALACE AT BRITISH EXPOSITION

THE DOMINION IS SPLENDIDLY REPRESENTED

(The Standard of Empire.)

The display made by Canada at this Franco-British exposition in London, now in progress, is thus described: The Canadian Palace stands out amidst all this magnificent with a conspicuousness and character of its own. One of the largest separate buildings in this city of great erections, it is also the purest in architecture. Some of the palaces in the City of the Entente are of a later date, and are not out of place in a great popular exhibition—but the dominion building is a fine specimen of pure Renaissance design. It is a lofty and simple structure, and is approached on three sides by fine porticos. The roof supports a number of hexagonal domes, the central and largest one bearing on each of its sides the design of a great maple leaf, which is outlined at night with electric glow lamps.

There have been special difficulties attendant on the preparation of this exhibition, and these have been met by the Canadian people, who have been pushing forward with the aid of a large staff, and Canada will have the satisfaction of its conclusion of possessing the finest separate exhibit in the whole exhibition. The palace is to be thrown open to the public within the next few days.

Colonel Hutchinson, who is organizing the exhibit, has been overworking himself with the zest of an enthusiast to get the palace in perfect order for the June rush of visitors. In the course of a special interview and tour of inspection, he directed special attention to the great trophy which reaches up to the top of the central dome. The trophy, however, is an anachronism throughout Canada on the question of the woman's vote in politics.

The trophy represents Canada's womanhood, which in the last resource is the mainstay of the All-Red route and the empire's granary," he said.

"The hopper itself, as you see, towers right up to the roof. It is topped with bags of flour, and is surrounded by great conical piles woven out of Canadian wheat straw. At the base of the trophy, a number of Canadian grains, and the four arches which are flanked by portraits of the king, the queen, the prince and the princess of Wales.

"One of our special attractions will be a group of nature's earliest tappers and engineers—beavers. Here they are. The Canadian beavers will certainly be visited by all the children at the exposition. There are five of them, all alive, and they have made their home in front of a cleverly contrived model of a beaver dam. From this dam a cascade of water falls into a miniature pool below. They were all eating with great appetite during our representative's inspection, and with their stage setting, they are a fine sight.

"These trophies on either side of the dam are being covered with specimens of Canadian woods," continued Col. Hutchinson. "There are other specimens of the same kind on the walls.

"The series of oil pictures running all round the palace are of typical Canadian scenes and homesteads. They are all the work of a painter who is up at night by electricity. The big sepia yonder is a built up horticultural scene. It is a composite picture, taken from several landscapes. The scene is a good display of agricultural machinery. Col. Hutchinson stopped at a large glass case, and tore away a corner of the sheeting with which it was carefully covered.

"Look at this statuary group, and tell me what it is sculptured in," he said. "The group was a very fine one, representing Jacques Cartier, the explorer, and a boatman in a boat, while on the shore close at hand stood an erect and dignified Indian. The chiselling of this group throughout is very clean, and the commanding figure of the nude Indian is superb in its realism. To all appearances, the sculptor's material was a very fine quality of creamy marble.

"I've read in butter-frozen butter—every one of them," was the colonel's starting remark. "There came in another of our difficulties, by the way. We could not get sufficient electric power for refrigerating purposes, and have had to use dry ice for the collection of the next case will contain frozen portrait statues of the king and queen."

A tour of the palace, which contains 100,000 sq. ft. of floor space, showed that the arrangement and display of the exhibits from the different provinces of the dominion were nearly complete. Ontario is making a capital display of magnificent furs. Quebec shows wood and wood pulp for paper-making; and British Columbia has a rich of fruits and colonial produce of many kinds.

The final effect produced by the Canadian exhibit is one of boundless energy and untiring effort. Every one who visits this spacious building, erected at a cost of over $55,000, will come away realizing what Canada means to the empire as a grain-store now—and still more what Canada means to the empire as a store of manhood in the years to come.

This great hall is an epitome of the dominion's resources. It forces one to realize that Canada's future as a manufacturing country must keep pace with its agricultural development. With all the climatic advantages of California, with vast deposits of mineral wealth which have yet been hardly tapped, Canada is clearly the great coming nation of the world. Under the United States, under the empire's flag, the manufactures shown combine the solidity of English productions with the ingenuity of the Americans. The rows on rows of exhibits, whether tools, machinery, furniture, or clothing materials, all bear evidence of highly intelligent design and soundness of manufacture. It goes without saying that the display of polished and natural woods is second to none, that the fruits and cereals are rich in quality as they are wonderful in variety, and that the dairy products are second to none.

In another sense the Canadian Palace is the psychological centre of the exhibition. Within its walls the people of the world will realize the true meaning of common ground, for it embodies the combined national genius of the Anglo-Saxon and French races.

FOR WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE

STRONG PLEA MADE AT COAST BY REV. S. J. THOMPSON

THE RELATION OF FRANCHISE TO MORAL REFORM

(Special to The Daily News.) VICTORIA, June 19.—A strong plea for woman's suffrage was made by Rev. S. J. Thompson in addressing the members of the W.C.T.U. in British Columbia at the opening of their 25th annual convention. His subject was "The Relation of Woman's Franchise to Moral Reform," and his address was liberally punctuated with rounds of applause. After expressing pleasure and satisfaction at being present, he said:

"The subject of woman's franchise is not as popular in British Columbia as it should be and is not as popular in Canada as it will be when the W.C.T.U. wakes up. They are waking up. I do not stand alone in this question. There are numbers of men who exercise the franchise who are with us, in British Columbia—who think that women and men should have equal voice in the making of the country's laws. The present, however, is an anachronism throughout Canada on the question of the woman's vote in politics.

"The attitude of the press I will avoid except to say that I am reading in some paper in the city and in the province and Canada should take up the side of woman's franchise. There is at present a movement afoot to establish a franchise for women in the province of British Columbia. There is very little published on the matter in Canada and we have to go to the United States to get the latest news.
