LOVE and MARRIED LIFE

by the noted author
Idah McGlone Gibson

MY HUSBAND.
"No, no, I didn't mean that! I couldn't mean it!" I heard a voice say in low tones of blended protest and horror.
A cold shudder shook me from head to foot. I looked up quickly—furtively—as John pushed an annoyed face above his newspaper, with a grunt.
And then I realized that the voice was not his; that he had been silent, as usual, behind the effective screen of his newspaper which stood propped up by the water bottle and held in place by the salt and pepper shakers.
"What did you say?" he inquired gruffly. "If you must talk, speak out, won't you, so that one can hear? You should know by this time that I detest these mysterious whisperings which take my mind from my paper and yet are too indistinct for me to understand."
Again a convulsive shudder swept over me. I caught my hands tightly together in my lap as the realization dawned upon me that it had been my own strained voice, in horrified denial, that had annoyed my husband and yet that quick, terrified exclamation had come as unconsciously as had the awful wish which it denied.
"What shall I answer?" I asked myself. And then I breathed easier because I saw that my life partner had calmly raised his newspaper to a higher angle, again obscuring his face, and from what I could hear seemed to be proceeding with his breakfast and the sporting news with his usual noise and speed.
As was his wont, he did not expect an answer to his question. Already he seemed to have forgotten that I had spoken at all. Nothing disturbed the silence of the room except the rustling of the newspaper, as John turned to the first page, and I knew he was reading some of the news stories, the headlines of which he had probably glanced over before I came down. He had not spoken to me as I came in for which I was rather glad, for I had overslept and I did not want to be reproved like a small child for my tardiness.
I realized that my hands were damp with perspiration, and I forced myself to open them quietly and pour a cup of coffee. The noise of the flowing liquid must have reached my husband's consciousness, for without a word he passed his cup to me. Silently I filled it. Then I had to call his attention to the fact that I was holding it out to him, for his eyes were glued to the paper which he now was holding before his face.

Hurriedly he took the cup from my hand and looked at his watch as the rumble of the motor told him that the car was at the door.
In his haste he swallowed his coffee noisily and I had all that I could do to keep my rasped nerves from protesting. As it was, I must have moved uneasily, for he put his paper down and for the first time that morning, gave me a seeing glance.
"What is the trouble? Aren't you well?" he inquired perfunctorily. Without waiting for a reply, he continued: "The trouble with you is, you don't have enough to do. You don't exercise enough. You make mountains of every little ill you have. Look at me—I didn't get in 'til all hours of the morning!"
"I wanted to interpolate just here," "Yes, I see how fit you are, and I also realize that the long hours in which I waited sleeplessly for your coming last night, probably passed all too quickly for you." But before I could find any word to speak he had continued in a would-be jocular manner: "You look so pale and washed out this morning! Are you going to be one of those women who, if their husband stays out a little later than usual at night, the next day has a headache which should belong to him?"
I did not speak—I could not.
As I looked in the glass behind him, I knew he was right—I did look pale and washed out. I saw that my features were drawn but I knew it was because I was telling myself that I was the wickedest woman in the world—the very wickedest!
I, Kate Gordon, had wished that my husband, the man to whom I had been married barely three years—the father of my baby—were dead!

DUTCH TAKING MEASURES TO DESPATCH TROOPS TO FRONTIER.

Rotterdam, Oct. 5.—The Amsterdam Telegraph, under the headline "Is a Belgium D'Annunzio coming?" publishes a despatch from Maastricht, saying the Dutch Government is taking measures to despatch forces to the Belgium-Limbourg frontier and that the Maastricht garrison has been dispatched to Eyden, the most southerly frontier village of Limbourg.

The Associated Press learns that, while some military precautions have been taken, the feeling in Dutch official circles is that an agreement with Belgium over the Province of Limbourg and the Scheldt River will be reached.

Fear is expressed in some Dutch quarters of the possibility that excited Belgian annexationists might seek to emulate Gabriele D'Annunzio and take over the disputed territory.
