

attend the labours of the Society's agents, in this direction, and may those little ones who are now being trained and educated in our schools feel it a duty in after life to aid, as far as it may lay in their power, the Society from which at the present time they are receiving so much benefit.