NORA BRADY'S VOW. BY MRS. ANNA H. DORSEY. CHAPFER I.

2

"We're men-as such, should know our rights, and knowing should defend; Who would be free the mselves must dare the tyrant's chain to rend; Ah ! fruitess is the grife that springs above a nation's fears-One firm reselve of mighty men is worth a sea of tears." __Sonce one two Nation

-SONGS OF THE NATION.

A sunset of unu-ual beauty, and a A sunset of unu-ual beauty, and a few bright tints still lingering on he edges of many a drifting cloud, diffused a peculiar and transparent clearness in the stmosphere, and threw out, on the smooth waters of the Suire, successive images of picturesque scenery. Rocks, trees and overhanging banks, touched here with light and softened there with shadow, with traceries of tangled shrub running through it all, were pic-forth with rare and beautiful bery tured forth Adelity ; but beyond these fell a sterner om, and more solemn shadows, which med to chill the very waves in whose calm depths they slumbered like wild and sorrowful dreams in some living human heart. There was a ruin on that shore, a ruin of old, whose grav walls, majestic tower, and mild arches had for centuries past stood like a hoary prophet beside those waves, to remind the living of their faded glories, and incite them to a future which should the sorrows and losses of the And now, as the soft twilight owly gathered around the old Abbey oly-Cross by-the Suire, it only re quied a vivid imagination to people that quiet solitude with its by-gone inmates. The swift flitting of bats through its pillared arcades, the sad cry of the bittern brooding in the rank grass below, and the faint rusting of the ivy clinging to the runned walls, when blended with the long-ago memories and legends haunting the spot made a language expressive enough for any lover of the ideal to work his spells with, and drape cloisters and shrines with their ancient splendors, and crowd those broad aisles once more with saint-like processions or prostrate forms. Erected by the piety and muni-ficence of Donald O Brien, King of Linerick, in the year 1169, the magni florance of its architecture made it a fane worthy of the sacred shrine which inclosed a relic of the True Cross in cased in a reliquary of gold and jewels of inestimable value, and presented by Pope Paschal II. to McMorrogh th sessor of Donald. Its magain cent altars, dedicated to the Holy Cross, to St. Mary, and St. Benedict famed throughout the land, not only for the splendor which surrounded them, but for the multitude and devotion of the worshipers and pilgrims who contisually thronged thither; while the austerity and holiness of the monks who, holding the Cistercian rule, filled its cloisters, rendered it one of the most celebrated and sacred monastic establishments in freland. But, like cense exhaled from precious flowers. those souls which through succeeding enturies glorified God in their won of holiness and purity, were now fled the feet of the spoiler had trampled over the place, and unholy hands had desecrated and ruined the shrines; facore.' the earth, rich in the dust of bodie which had consecrated themselves to God, was torn up and scattered, in search of perishable treasures; magnificence of architecture, the costli ness and charm of rare sculptured marb es, the rich and gorgeous stained glass windows, were all defaced-broken-ruined. And there it stands at this late day, to tell its own tale of voe, appealing to the Lord of hosts for and vengeance on an iniquitous and oppressive system which for cen turies has tortured His Spouse the Church with fetters and disfigured her robes with the rust and tears of oppres The moon now risen poured down flood of light into the broad nave, slanting her silver beams on the long rows of pillars, leaving the aisles in darknoss and shadow. The altar of the Holy Cross stood out conspicuous and beautiful in the unclouded radiance One might almost have imagined that the careful old monks had thrown

THE CATHOLIC RECORD.

it wrings my very soul to see ener-gies thrown away—worse than wasted which, at the right time, might work wondrous changes; to know how men whom I honor for their worth and un-selfshness will fall in the unequal tails without area the honor of a so the tomb and shrine which first awoke my fairest dreams for the regeneration and freedom of this dear land.—It may be the last time I shall ever look on ye fairest dreams for the regeneration freedom of this dear land.-It may old relies of the days that are gone; but if I fall in this struggle, let me hope, O heaven I that the blood which shall be poured out like water, in de fense of man's holiest rights, may nurstrife without even the honor of a sol-dier's grave; and how others, the noble descendants of the McCarthy More, the O'Brien, the O'Doo ghu, and the O'Neill, will be hunted like felons to suffer a felon's doom. I know ture into fall strength and maturity the roots of that glorious tree whose leaves shall sweeten the bitter waters of the woes of my country." There felons to some a teron s doem. I know ye all, John Halloran. Some are my own kinsmen, some of my flock, and yet woe's me, I can neither stay their mad-ness nor arrest their folly—" of the woes of my country." There was a tone of deep feeling in his voice, and an earnest enthusiasm in every gesture, as he turned in under the arches of the old abbey, which indicated

"Father!" said the young man suddenly interrupting him, while a bright smile burst over his countenance. ia his nature the elements of heroic ourage, and a spirit which would glory ere ten days are over, you will sing n martyrdom. When he saw the kneeling figure of Te Deum in your mountain chapel for the deliverance of Ireland. The mo ment the first blow is struck, the whole the priest, he started, then drew back in the shadow of a pillar, where In the shadow of a print, where he stood like some gray statue, gszing thoughtfully on the scene. But pres-ently the aged man finished his prayer; he made the sign of the cross on his breast, and, bowing his head country will fly to arms, and our op pressors, unprepared for the over-powering crisis, will be seattered like chaff on the whirlwind. Brian Boroib me and Malachi the brave will be our everently for an instant, in honor of rallying words, and, after a few decis the Majesty Who once dwelt there, he turned to leave the abbey, when the other stepped forward, and, laying his ive struggles, our land will be all ou own. We shall have once more ou own laws, our own parliament, our own rulers. The old names will be honored in the land. The Church will lift her hand with affectionate freedom on his shoulder, said-"Father McCarthy, I did not expect head free and rejoicing ; and the great to find you here !" "John Halloran !" said the pricat, possessions, wrested from the old princely sons of the soil by the virgin starting. " I am glad to meet you. I Queen Elizabeth by the Jameses, and have had you in mind this livelong day, and have just come down from Glendariff, where I went to seek you. Ease my heart at once by saying that you have abandoned the wild and ruin by that devil's own psalm-singer, Crom well, will be restored to their descen dants....'' "Halloran," interrupted Father Mc Carthy, "your dream is the one which has haunted me for years; but, alas! bus scheme-the hopeless plan that we have spoken of before." it is only the glean of a meteor, the splendor if a rainbow, which fades while we gaze on it. Would to God your foundations i but, alsa i boy, the means "Father, I am sorry we have met, if the old dispute is to begin-the old and useless dispute. Shame on the clergy of Ireland, who oppose this dar ing effort for the freedom of their flocks and their altars, and lend their influence of the foes against which you contend are almost omniscient. While you plot, they counter-plot; while you and hand to the oppressor !" exclaimed the young man, angrily. "Thou, God, knowest how baseless scheme, they undermine; and already, by the aid of base informers, the chief leaders of this rebellion (Rebellion of is the charge," said the priest, baring his grav locks, and lifting his hands and '48) are marked, and predestined to ignominy and death. It will only be the eyes toward heaven, as if apcealing against such numerited injustice. "Thou knowest how we have stood for re-an etment of the tragedy of '98 Bat I will say no more, except this; and listen well, John Halioran, for I am ong, sorrowful years between the porch long, sorrowill years between the porch and the altar, bowed down with the woes of the land, and leading the p-ople through the wilderness toward the place f promise. But the people sin going to knock roughly against the doors of your heart; and if this con sideration which I offer fails, then God help you; I will say no more. Up yonder, at Glendariff, is a meck and by disobedience and revolt : they wait of the barrest, but pluck the un ripe fruits and suffer; they wait not Gods time and God's holy will, and loving woman, whose cheeks have be-come worn and thin with watching, and with the anxieties to which the con long bitter years are added to their exile John Halloran, I am old-more tinual perils of her husband give birth She sits now beside two weeping chil than seventy years have rolled over my head. I have in that time seen much dren, who divide her love and hope with their absent father. A few months of men, and I have watched, like an eagle from his eyrie, for the daydawn ; ago, Glendariff was the abode of hap piness and peace; now it is the re-treat of lear and sorrow. Who is this mother? who this wife? She belongs but I tell you I see it not yet. Thes revolts-these volcanic eruptions of ew burning hearts, which at best only to one of the old princely septs of th eave their ashes to their countryland. She was the sunshine and flower of her old feadal home, and her hand was destined for a rich and powerful insurrec ions, which never assume the dignity of revolutions, only rivet the chains more firmly, and put off the day of deliverance into the dim and distant nobleman, her equal in birth. A spler did future was before Mary O' But she spurned it all-rank, riche and spleador-to wed with one " Now, Father, what is the use-what worth alone was his nobility, and whose is the use of all this? Age and mis fortune have cooled your blood and patriotism together, and near the riches consisted of the old farm-hous and the few acres where his forefather and toiled generations before him grave, you have but small care for

John Halloran, you know whom I mean future which will roll over your ashes On, my Father!" exclaimed John Hal Have you a right to drag down that high born, gentle woman into poverty, and at the best, exile-to impoverise lorso, with deep pathos, "does not the "Of these ruins I will not speak the children she has borce you, and fix the name of felon's brood on them ? but of yonder wretched cabins, thrown "Even that I do dare," said John together from their fragments, and Halloran, in a calm, stern voice; "that -all-everything for the sacred cause which scarcely afford a miserable shelter for the human beings whe whe my country. I am one of the people occupy them, of the want and desc alory in having sorung from them lation which surround them, I must and will speak. Their wretch and I, John Halloran, will deliver them or die. Life-son -wife-children-and home l' he exclaimed, striking the ruined altar by which he stood with his clinched fist. "Let me only strike s, possessed of the immortal souls, are re aced by the system which oppresses a blow for Ireland, let me be remen is their activity-where their energy? pered among her deliverers, and I Crushed out of their lives by a knowl would not barter the title it will give me for an mperial diadem, or the most 1.bor, and the hopelessness of their conancient birthright that the archives of Mary My sweet, saint-like wife! That was tender coord for you to crash down so radely on, my Father. May the Blessed Mother of God succor and defend he and her babes," he said in a low, trembling voice. "But I must haster home. You mean well, my Father, but you are behind the times. One grasp of the hand, and your blessing, ere And he threw himself with a le abandon at the feet of Father go.' mole McCarthy, adown whose furrowe cheeks warm tears were fast falling. "My child," he said, in a broken The voice, while he laid his hand on th head of the kneeling man, " perchance we shall never meet again on earth. Our meeting to-night is not one of chance You are engaged in a perilous enter prise, and, to my certain knowledge will pass a terrible orisis in a few days Let not, then, this hour go by unimproved, but at the sacred tribunal of soul and God. Here, beneath the solemn heavens, above the dust of the his dead, give me power by performing sacramental penance with an humble and contrite heart, to absolve you from the guilt of sin, if perchance your con science is burdened and sore." The appeal was not in vain. It was enough. Like a child, simple ye strong in his faith, the noble but mis aken man, kneeling by the side of the venerable priest of God, who sat on a broken tomb, poured out in whispered words the sincere and earnest con-fession of his soul. Thus alone in that No old rain, watched over and guarded by unseen angels, we leave them, and wend our way to Glendariff, the home of John Halloran.

Mary Halloran, whose mind had been unusually disturbed that day by vague apprehensions, grew more and more un-easy as the hours wore on and wan-dered out to station herself on the side dered out to station herself on the side of what, at Gi.ndsriff, was called the "Sunset Hill," to watch for the return of her husband. But the brightness faded from the sky, twilight deepened into gloom, and soon the chilly night and the pale moonlight, which grew grotesque, weird looking shadows around her, warned her in. "I cannot rest," her, warned her in. "I cannot rest,' she murmured, with a deep sigh :" the veiled sorrow pursues me everywhere Oh, why does not John come ? While While he is near me, the dread and terror stand aloof; when he is ab ent, they haunt and scourge me." She lingered a few moments at the door, listening in ently for the well-known sound of his horse's hoofs on the gravel. But all was silent ; and, turning away with s shudder, she entered the house, and, with slow, heavy sleps, went up into the children's room to seek some solace in their smiles and caresses. But the little ones were asleep in their cribs, and, leaning over, her tears fell heavy and fast on the golden curls and fair cheeks of Gracie ; but when she gazed down on the fine manly face of her Desmond, over whose crimson cheek dark locks of curling hair had strayed and saw the hanghty brow and firm, well-see lips, her tears ceased, and, folding her hands together, she whis pored, "God help thee, boy I thy battles will be strong and bitter with life; they may break, but never bend thee." Then she felt, as she watched the holy calm that overspread their features, and knew how dark and their leatures, and knew now dark and stormy was all before them, a wish, haif defined — almost a prayer — that each little soul, ere day dawa, could be housed in heaven. She kissed them softly, and, bidding Ellen shade the light from their eyes, went down into the drawing room, that she might hear the first sound of her husbaud's footfall when he entered. There was a large oriel window opening down to the lawn -the only modern addition John Halloran had made to his house when Halloran h he came of age-from whence she had always been accustomed, since their marriage, to watch his approach up the road leading to Glendariff. She back the heavy curtains, and looked out long and anxiously : but all walonely and silent, the very shrubs, or which the moonbeams had woven a tissue of silver, being motionless. The heavy d apery fell from the grass of her siender fingers, and, with an aching heart, she went away, and threw he self with an exhausted air into a low cushioned chair near the fire. A door opened noiselessly, and a light footstep entered. Mrs. Hailoran turned her head quickly, hoping it

"Oh, is it you, Nora?" she said. "Yes, ma'am; I came in to see if you would have lights."

"On Nora, I am so uneasy about Mr Hailoran. No-no-no; do not bring in the lights yet," she said, in ar Mr Halloran agitated tone

" It's a cup of tea would set you up, ma'am ; let me fetch in the tray

'No, dear ; not until Mr. Halloran mes," she replied. Mora stood a moment looking at the fragile form and pale countenance of Mrs. Hailoran, which seemed whiter and more sunken in the fitful fire-light, surrounded as it was by the dark cri n son cushions against which she leaned and an expression of bitter sorrow flitted over the girl's handsome face, while a tear stole silently down from the black fringes of her eyes, and fell unneeded. Then she closed the door very softly, and went back to the kitchen, muttering, "It's no use to deny it, but it's an evil heart would put the mildew and tear on such a delicate dower as that, sure. So much for put tin' new wine in ould bottles. everybody mate with their equals, high as well as low." Then she gathered up her work and took her seat beside cheerful fire, with an attempt to look cheerful and unconcerned and few efforts to sing blithely, which were adder than the bitterest tears would h.ve been. The door of the spacious, performed here. There was another building, spart from the man-sion, where all this was done, and where substantial comfort prevailed; for if was one of the substantial confort prevailed; or it was one of the cares of Joh for it was one of the cares of John Halloran's life to attend to the well being of every living thing connected with him, and he was rewarded by in-creased prosperity and a cheertul ser-vice which was becoming rare and un-certain in the down-trodden country. Nora's song gradually ceased, and a deep, thoughtful expression settled on to the door and looked anxiously down the path, but returned each time with a disappointed look to her chair. The red in her cheeks grew deeper, and something like a frown gathered on the mooth, white forehead of Nora, as giv ing her head a toss she broke out with

"It will be a good thing altogether, I believe, if there wasn't a man to be found; for wherever one is there is trouble, surely. There's the mistress, now, with her beautiful face growing more like a wraith every day, by of the great oneasiness that's on her in respect to the meanderings of Mister Hallorsn, and no one to the fore but that Donald Dhu to comfort her, that, in place of easing her poor heart, fills it with the afflictions of Job hisselt, that's got a leer in the bad eyes of him, enough to pizen a witch. Then, on the back of that, as if it wasn't enough to put a decent girl demented, here nes that ommalawn from Kildare, laving his forge, and the hoots that wouldn't be amiss if they give him a kick or two, to persuade me by troth, to marry him, and buthering me up about his new lease and the fine cow. But I won t - if he's got a lease for fivehundred years on the onld place, and ten cows, and ten horses, and twenty sheep forenent it. I litet the born villa n into a saicret, before long, that'll make sim hop like a lame duck. But whist ! It's ap ould saying, if them's his feet I ear on the gravel, that talk of the devil Lord save us !) and he's surely at hand.

"A good-even to you, Nora. I've been watching you all the way up from the gate, an' faith it did my heart good o see you looking so happy like, an' the red light shining about you asthore, as it will some better day in glory," said a weary sounding voice at the door. "Come in, Dennis Byrne, and don stand there jabbering at the door . sill to disturb Mrs. Halloran," she replied, without looking up, although she was halt tempted to do so, and was ready to barst into tears; for there was some thing so unusally sad in Dennis Byrne s voice, that she felt at once that some thing had happened.

"It's a poor welcome you give me, tramp from Kildare," he said, still leaning against the door.

Come in and rest yourself. No one hinders you," was her upgracious reply. "You saw the sogers go past today ?" he said, taking a chair near her. "It's like enough I'd leave my iron ing and plaiting to run down to the road to stare at sogers! I can't afford to lose the time that some does," she replied, with a toss of her head.

"S pose then, bedad, they come thundering up here to Glendar ff and ordered you at the point of their bay-onets to sew a button on every man's coat of 'em ?''

" And if they did," she replied, while her eyes flashed -- " if they did, I wouldn t. I d try to make some of 'em vish they'd never h'ard such a thing as button was invented But what do ou mean, man alive ? You look as if you had been dead and buried '

"On, nothing very particular, only 've been shoeing ho rses since 10 o'clock this morning, with a cocked pistol aimed at my head, and all I got for my pains was curses and bard knocks. An I'll tell you, Nora bhan asthore, h'ard some things said about Glendariff Muster Halloran that it would be well enough to make him acquainted with.

"It's mighty strange Dennis, they should talk out before you ?'' said Nora, fixing her black eyes with an anxious expression on his.

FEBRUARY 1, 1908.

"Halloran, out, ch ? I came up to see him on business. Do you expect him in soon ?' he said, with a dark and sinister look. "Every moment. I hope to see him come in every instant," she replied, come in every instant, " the replica, hurriedly, "Yes, I hope so too. The country is in a very troubled state, and I believe government is on the alert to arrest government is on the aftert to arrest every one whose conduct is at all sus-piclous. John is the leading man in his district; and the law expects him, of course, to keep order among his ten-ants." ants.

ants." "Of course — yes, of course. John has always endeavored to keep order among our people. He has made them his friends, Cousin Donald, by promot-ing in every way their interests and comfort and morals. I don't hink we shall have trouble with our people," she said, anxiously. "I hope not. John's Qusker blood ought to preach and plead for peace. By the by, Cousin Mary, you know I was in France when you got married, and I'm not well acquainted with Halloran's antecedents. What is the family history? There ought to be some legends connected with an old place What is the family like Glendariff."

There are none," she said, quietly, "John's family, as far back as we can trace them, have been Quakers and the proprietors of Glendariff. He, you know, is the last of his name, and the inheritor of their wealth " "But Halloran is a Catholic: that is strange. Yes, thank God, John is a good and sincere Catholic. He became one a few years before our marriage, at Rome." Hum-ahem-and you met him-2" "In Dublin. We frequented the same circles." "Bat — pardon me, my lady cousin, for interrupting you again-a rumor came to me over the water that the beautiful Mary O'More, the last of the lineal descendants of the McOarthy More, was about mating with the Earl of Rathlinn, the wealthiest of our Irish peers.

"Mary O'More had enough of the pride of the princes of Munster left in her not to mate with a man who, if famous for his riches and power, was still more notorious for his vices. She preferred the noble and unsullied hear he has chosen, who, if he has no rank to boast of, can show an ancestry without stain or reproach, whose virtues he inherits and whose honors," exclaimed fair name he Halloran exclaimed Mrs. onsing herself and speaking proudly, Yes," drawled Donald, well named the Black, with an insufferably super-cilious air; "yes, I h-ard he was a clever person. It would be a pity, though-" though-"""""" "What would be a pity ?" she inquired, baughtily. "It would be a great pity if Halloran should get mixed up in these secret organizations which are on foot. It would be a pity for this fine old property to be involved." "John Halioran is one who scorne all anticipated pity, being sufficient in his own resources for whatever may be-fall him. But why should Donald More suggest such things ?' she said, with "Well," he said, "the times suggest them-not I. Every man ought to be on his gaard who has landed interests at stake, and children to inherit them." Just then a quick step bounded through the hall, and the next moment Mary Halloran lay sobbing on the bosom her husband. "Ha, More! I'm glad to see you," he said, supporting his wife in one arm, while he held his hand out to her kinswhile he held his band out to her sur-man. "Mary, darling, you have moped yourself to death, and are nervous. my business is ala ost completed Bat apropos, where is supper ? Nora ! Nora Brady, let us have tes and cold fowl, and any other nice things you may have," said Mr. Halloran, calling to

Nora in cheerlui tones. "I wonder you are not more careful, Halloran," said Donald More, as John Halloran,' Halloran threw himself on the sofa be-side his wife; "outrages are fearinily com non-burnings and murders by the turned away to flitted over her "Go, Nora,

Shea to prepare Mr. More ; tell Go, have it don said Mrs. Halle

"I am sorry Donald," said J shoulder-my God, Halloran!

he screamed. "You will f quiet. Mrs. S remedy for burn "Do try, Joh south room at o be done," said sorry for him.

"Yes-yes-shall go mad if utes longer. I There-Diable with the assista

Hallorah's arm.

a remedy was his pains consi ing draught ad

influence of wh

were somewhat sharing in the regarded him, d made her escap dark heart in l hall fall on the

I have not de steps day and n bed me of my fi boyhood. She inheritance, wh

her inconstancy

this virago-b dainty cheek, n vengeance is n fell asleep, to

It was past hush was over the old roof sle

Halloran, He

lone couch, on She had refused sad presentime through that asleep, when sh him gone; but her to lie dow her hand in his ant words to he

with the emoti slamber stole o

looked liked d ful and solemn.

from his eyes a his heart almost perchance, he i face again. A roll by ere he again, except

A pang wrung grew deadly wissed her, the sors from the w

the long fair cheek, and plac derly in his ponce more, and left the room t little pebbles (love ! how sure with which, at are slung into nature, bringi level with you the blow sinks making it heav

stone, and as

Marah! John

now: there we heads. He lit hands to his pressed long, rosy lips. Bu gering look a gering look a tore himself in thing whispere

twain would fli

only the vision tears and kiss

lay so calm would work.

he was asleep. out, and, findi vent to the re ing the stairs,

" Accident !

FEBRUA Nora shrugged

cloth of gold over it, to protect iro dampness and dust its treasures ; but no, it was only the cold, bright moon light, the faithful witness and tende consoler of its silent woes, which still sought to brighten its deep desolution throw a beauty around its decay At a little distance were the broke altars of the Virgin Mother and S Benedict, near which stood the royal tomb of the O'Brien, with its canopy o marble supported by twisted pillars Here and there the moonbeams lit them up, gleaming on a rare tracery, o silvering over some sculptured arch touching here a broken shaft, there the defaced image of saint or cherub, or rippling down over the moss-grown graves like the footprints of the angels watch the dust of those who sleep in the Lord.

Suddenly the silence was broken by a slow footstep, and a man, old and gray, entered the ruin. Arrested by the exquisite and mournful beauty of the scene, he stood a moment, leaning on his staff, to survey it : then, rever ently uncovering his head, he knelt, and, folding his hands over his bosom in the form of a cross, appeared to pray devoutly. We cannot say for pray devoutly. We cannot say for what or whom he prayed. It may have been for the repose of those who slept in peace around him; it may have been for some living tempted sonl : or it may have been for his country, for troubl ous times again threatened it, and well he knew, t at aged priest, that one, nor two, nor thousands of victims could close or fill the awful gulf which up successful outbreaks always opened. Ere long the clatter of horses' ho was heard on the bridge which spanned the Suire, and soon issning from the shadow and galloping along the shore, the horseman urged his steed up toward the ruins, where suddenly haiting, he lifted his cap from his head, and wiping the moisture from his brow, he threw back the thick clustering locks that fell over it.

"your gray ruins have not been vain teachers, and once more must I visit man, who can only pray and plead and 'They have lost almost the noble mage of man. Cheir gaunt, athletic trames are meager and fleshless-thei olor livid-their features sharpenedheir countenances express the habitual influence of strong, deep pas Where is the quick intellige which only flashes out now and the ningled with the lurking slyness of dis trust? Where are the thrift, the in austry, the plenty, which should be taeirs? Ask the tithe-gatherers, the tax collectors, the drivers, who, locusts, devour their substance like children are want-stricken and badiy clad, while the loveliness of their age is disfigured by squalid poverty and the drapery of extreme want ; they are idle and joyless, and loiter about the cabin-door without an aim, while the hese uncertain irresponsive lation dition dignity of inmates,

them to a level with the beasts.

edge of the utter inadequacy of tather, perchance, has gone to see employment in the English harvest fields where his hire is paid with a smile of derision, and he is expected to excite laughter by his blunders, who night well command tears by wretchedness. (Lady Morgan) these are your children-these are the miserable ones to whom you would have as dony succor! It is only in this poor hamlet that such things are seen blotting the face of nature ? No, oh God I over all the land the same disspectacie is seen : from every cabin is heard the wait of anguish, and wherever thrift and plenty smile, it is or those foreign leeches who add to on burdens and have no right to a foothold on our soil. And can we rest? Must we rest? Shall we desist ? rather let us perish !" exclaimed the imost frantic man.

"John Halloran," said the aged priest whose bowed form trembled with an emotion he could scarcely control "think you that these things move you and leave me unscathed ? I declare solemnly before Heaven that, had I a thousand lives, I would lay each life down to be trampled out by separate and distinct tortures, if by the sacri-and distinct tortures, if by the sacri fice this dear land of my birth could be "Old Holy Cross I" he murmured.

- A LANDER & B. Make March

CHAPPER II.

Oh, the moment was sad when my love and parted : Savourneen Deelish, Eileen Ogge ; As I kissed off her tears, I was nigh broker hearted Bavourneen Deelish, Eileen Ozge: Wan was her cheek, which hung on m shoulder; Damp was her hand; no marble was colder; I felt in my heart I should ne'er more beha her ; Savourneen Deelish, Eileen Ogge.

cheerful kitchen, where supreme, was thrown open, and a broad stream of light flowed out on the sward and the shrubbery, setting them all aglow, as it a red susset were gleaming over Glendariff. The brick anded in fantastic patterns, and the dressers literally glittered with the well-scoured pewter and copper utensils that covered them. Here and there hung a colored print, nearly framed in carred bog wood, of the "Annuccia tion," "St. Agnes," and "St. John the Evangelist," over which were arranged tastefaily sprigs of holly and tern. On a little shelf, apart, reposed a handsome prayer-book, and a rosary of coral and silver, her last year Christmas-gift from Mrs. Halloran, and which she was specially proud.

Nora was a fine specimen of her class Above the middle height, handsome and well formed, everything about her expressed an innate pride of character and a high degree of self-respect. She had been the laything and playmate of Mrs. Halloran when they were both children at Fada-Brae Abbey; and, as Mary O'More would never study unle Brady had lessons also, Mrs. O'More, to secare her daughter's at tention, and also to benefit the girl, o whom she was fond, directed the gov erness to indulge her daughter's affei tionate whim, until she was sent to France to finish her education. Thus commenced the affection between the nobly born Mary O'More and Nora Brady. Widely separated by rank, yet loving and grateful, they continued to other in their respective erve each spheres until a mutual dependence wa established, which developed many a noble and beautiful trait in each. ||Nora's service was light enough, and which she preferred to any other situation at Glendariff, as in it she en joyed all the benefits of an active life d could contribute very essentially to the comfort of those she served Nora's kitchen was her parlor, reception, and sitting room, and its neatness tion, and sitting room, and its neatness out his band, and said-was a marvel to all who were privileged "I hope, my lady t) enter it; for let it not be supposed that the drudgery and cocking for the people employed at Glendariff were thought it was John-

"Faith, then, it's not so mighty strange, seein' I never let a word of Eoglish out of my jaws, but nonplushed 'em with a little Kerry lingo, that set em half wild," he said, while a flash of "Now tell me, Dennis dear, what it all means," said Nora, laying her hand on his shoulder, while tears gathered in her eyes. "Whist, Nora, ma colleen," he whis pered ; "there's a rebelfion afoot, an' Mister Halloran's one of the chiefs of And they're going to station soger at Glendariff, and set spies on him, and ake him up to Dublin if they catch him

"And what if he's taken ?" gasped Nora.

"He'll be hung or transported." "On, Jesus!" exclaimed Nors, with cry of butter anguish.

Hist, Nora asthore ! hist ! I hear footsteps on the gravel." "The holy Virgin grant it may Mister Halloran !" said Nora. " I

I er. pect they'll want lights now, and I'll step in with the candelabra." Tie Tie wax candles, stood in a close with thing She hastily took it out, and, lighting the trip med and oiled wicks, went into the drawing ro m with it. She soon wax candles, stood in a closet all ready. the drawing to m with it. She soon returned, and, resuming her seat, while a crim son flash dyed her cheeks, she said "No, it's not Mister Halloran : it's that bad, black Donald, that I'll put some throuble on yet, if he don't keep his dirty hands to himself.'

What's that you're saging, Nora ?"

asked Dennis Byrne. "Nothing-nothing. Mind your own business, Dennis, man. I said Mister Halloran has not come vet," she replied, bustling over her work-basket. So it was. Mrs. Halloran bad heard the footsteps, and sprang toward the d or to meet her husband, but, when she saw her dark kinaman, always an unwelcome guest, she drew back with a loud cry of disappointment, He held out his hand, and said --

"I hope, my lady cousin, I am not intruding." no," she said, hurriedly ; I only

It's the old song, and a convenient and most plausible excase for new exac-tions-new oppressions," he replied, carelessly. "I know something about these matters. I know how, insulted and trodden on, exasperated and maddened, my poor countrymen sometimes turn like worms and sting the heels that crush them. Then come the outery and the death cry together, and the auge hand of oppression, armed with a thousand scourges, falls heavily far and wide. No, I am not afraid; and once it would have been a marvel to hear one of the McCarthy Mores talk of fear." "Toat's very flue-a very flue senti-ment; but I suppose the Mores are de-generating with the rest of mankind; sides, you know, I am a lateral branch, and my mother was an Englishwoman sc 1 m sworn in from my birth, and all my natural proclivities are for the Union said Donald More, laughing sarcasti-ally. Sitting a little back from the others, he had been watching Nora as she came in aud out, making eyes at her, and grimacing, which liberties she re-sented by looks of ineffable scorn on her handsome face; and finally, as she attempted to reach across to put the tea urn in its place, he suddenly pinched her cheek.

screamed Nora, and the " Ugh !" next instant the tea-urn, with its boil-ing contents, was toppled over him. He sprang up with a fearful oath. Mrs. Hallo an shrieked, and her husban who in a mirror opposite, had watched the whole affair, could scarcely control

"Nora-why Nora," he said, as she came in with a cloth to wipe up the floor, "that was extremely awkward." floor, "that was extremely aways bug "I know it was, sir; an' if a vile bug the cheek, it hadn't stung me on the cheek, it wouldn't have happened at all. I wish St. Patrick himself was here to drive all such venomous creatures away from Glendariff, anyways. Did it hurt you, sir ?" she asked, innocently, turning to Donald More, who, half frantic with pain, had thrown himself on the sofa, where he lay groaning vociferously. His reply was full of profanity and fury.

And now he fall-orbed mo splendor upon the antique ge stacks of the tremulous shad on the deep-se he see it again TO 1

THE]

One summer den of Toled pretty young story. While she mystery of it kissing the l she placked th flower that g egend. If I could re solt charm and it had in her r as I was moved fortunate Sara Bat as this what I rememb

In one of th tuous alleywa hemmed in and the tall Moor Musarabic p shadows and family dower Daniel Levi h in a ruinous o erable as its o He was rand all his race, hypocrite that According t e could be se the dark doo ing and fixing old girdles, or with which h among the p Zocodover, the and the poor s Implacable and of all peri passed close