men were engaged in the liquor traffic. Both these points may be admitted .-For my part I have my own business, but it owes nothing to the liquor traffic. It is undeniable that almost all 1 ble men have gone out of the 11 alic. Those who are now engaged in it have little claims to respectability unless we agree to extend the designation to lawbreakers in general. Demoralized as the public consumer has become it will hardly stoop to that. "The rum traffic is a bad one" but there is money in it, and we have amongst us many persons who belief that they are respectable. The sooner this delusion is exploded the better. By all means let temperance men patronize merchants and craftsmen of their own way of thinking. They will find them as honest and efficient as the rumselling classes. Call it "Boycotting's or what you please; it is clearly the
