The New Water System.

The water was turned off just inside of Rawlins' Cross, near Sunny-side Cottage, on Rennie's Mill Road, last night for the purpose of connecting up the new system lately completed to the higher levels by Mr. T. Kent. The supply to the East End of the city was cut off for a few hours while the work was in progress, and the task was completed by Engineer Ryan and his staff in a most successful manner. This will give the people of the higher levels an ample supply, and one independent to the mains in other parts of the city. During the progress of a fire in the lower parts of the city in the future there will be no necessity to curtail the supply to the people of the upper portion, and the danger of pipes freezing there will be minimized if not altogether obviated. The route of the new system starting at Rawlins' Cross is in Monkstown Road, up Catherine Street, in Hayward Avenue turning up through McDougall Street, across Barnes' Road, up Howley Avenue, crossing Allandale Road and into the field south of St. Michael's Orphanage thence to Merrymead Road and connects further on with the new main brought from Windsor Lake. Mr. Kent undertook a big job but performed it satisfactorily, while at times meeting difficulties in the shape of rock cuts, etc., that seemed insurmountable.

Christmas at Bell Island

Christmas was observed at Bell Island with old time vim and jollity. Dances were held in many private residences and public halls, and the merrymen, who were out contributed much to the amusement of the populace. The religious aspect of the festival demonstrated the devotion of the people and all the churches were crowded at the morning and night services, both on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day.

IN PERIL OF THEIR LIVES.

Mr. Chas. F. Taylor and Capt. Williams, of the Rosalind, Narrowly Escape Drowning.

Just as the Rosalind was about to leave port shortly after 11 o'clock last night an accident occurred which came very near costing Captain Williams, of the ship, and Mr. C. F. Taylor, of St. John's, their lives. The ship lay since her arrival at A. J. Harvey & Co.'s premises, and several officers away. A few moments before the gangway was about to be taken ashore the forward spring slipped off the gump head to which it was attached, the ship's head fell off and she brought the gangway off the wharf and it fell over against her side in a perpendicular position. When this was secured Mr. Taylor was in the act of coming ashore, and only a few moments before 5 men had been standing on the gangway. When Captain Williams saw Mr. Taylor's danger as the end of the gangway was being gradually drawn from the wharf with the motion of his ship, he ran to his aid to try either to push him quickly ashore or draw him back to the vessel's deck. Before he could do so, however, the gang plank fell and Mr. Taylor was thrown violently into the water. Captain Williams now tried to clamber down the gangway which was now in a vertical position against the ship's side to Mr. Taylor's aid but in doing so fell off into the water, and the two men in the darkness were left battling for their lives in the water. There was intense excitement and consternation amongst the few people on the wharf and it was feared that one if not both would drown. Capt. Williams reached the line which had slipped and hung over the ship's side and seizing it clung to it. Those on the wharf threw a line in Mr. Taylor's direction and he managed to grasp it. He, however, was heavily clad, and those on the wharf tried to draw him up his strength gradually became exhausted. Pilot George Lewis now divested himself of his over and under coats and climbing down on the shores of the head of the pier held on to a rope which hung over it and grasping Mr. Taylor with one of his hands held on to him and kept him above water until the pilot boat which was on the other side of the ship, and in which was Capt. Goss and E. Malone, came around and picked up Mr. Taylor and also the captain. The former was chilled and exhausted and could have held above water only a few minutes longer. Captain Williams was also heavily clad and suffered from the chilly effects of the water. Several of the police on duty came to the premises and hearing of the outcry on the streets, but the men had then been drawn to safety.
Mr. Lewis deserves credit for his plucky act in getting down on the shores in the darkness and at great risk. Had he not done so Mr. Taylor must have been drowned.

A True Story of a Northern Trapper

Come Jack, come Jane, come one, come all
List to a tale—so high a call
To leave this punning busy mart
The icy Northern's frozen heart.

Yes, Jane, it happened during the winter of nineteen hundred and six, I was trapping on one of the mountains beyond Surprise Lake opposite the Great Crater, some twenty miles or more above Adlin, B.C. My father and I had climbed some distance when we discovered a bear trail. Following it up from different directions I roused the old fellow from his lair. My first shot failed to kill him and the savage beast infuriated with rage and pain rushed after me with a roar I shall never forget to my dying day. I was unable to reload and it became a chase for life. Round the trees, sliding through snow and brushwood and that awful roar behind me! "God help me!" I murmured, as with horror I saw he was gaining upon me and realized my last hour had come. Stout-hearted trapper, though I was, his fearful outcries filled me with terror. The very hair of my head stood on end. My father, who had taken a different course in the hunt happened to strike a cross trail, and when it seemed as if the bear had all but reached me, a shot followed by a last awful roar, which made the very foundations of the earth tremble, told me help had come and the grim old bandit bounded in the air and then lay still forever.

Glad to get back to Discovery, did you say? Glad and no mistake! But I carried an immense silver-tip grizzly with me—the largest obtained in that district—and the price? "Well, you know the best things are worth the fight."

The officers for the ensuing year were elected last night by Atlantic Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., at their rooms. Mr. D. Cook presided and the election resulted as follows:—
