TRINITY.

These men in Trinity who contribute most largely to the best interests of the community, and of whom as citizens we are proud, some at home all the time, and others away from home the greater part of the time. The one, however, who is the subject of this article—Mr. Grant—is away from home most of the time, and at home seven days of every year. During these months the community is largely indebted to Mr. Grant, for remuneration given to the hundreds of men who work with him at Blanc Sablon, and during the seven months, the community is again indebted to him for the circulation of the money he and his men during the months away. We do not believe the permanent annual income of his bank accounts for the very part of it, whilst as a citizen we are always thankful for his generous expenditure of a proportion of his earnings and for his moral and Christian example and influence in daily life.

Grant is the product of an old-school, conducted by an old-school master, who was a school trained in the same kind of school. The school in which Mr. Grant was trained, was the fishing school at Blanc Sablon, and the master who trained him was Samuel Blundford. Before he was admitted to this school, he was a primary school teacher, and was a primary school teacher. So, as a man, he was not running errands for his father in the carpenter shop, or carrying the parson's tray, he was fishing on Long Bay with Solomon Hiscock. Then a summer fishing at Labrador, John Gover, and a spring to the with Capt. Sam, and being twenty years of age, he was qualified to be a student at Blanc Sablon, and Capt. Sam was agent for, and owner with Messrs. Job Bros.

One who knew Capt. Sam as a man, know how comprehensive his knowledge of the practical knowledge was, in respect of all that the fish and curing of fish meant.

And when we find that Mr. Grant served under him for sixteen years, we are prepared to accept him as a graduate with highest honours, in every department and detail of the business. There were times when—to judge from the school-master's language and actions towards his pupil, that he did not think very highly of either his pupil's ability or capacity. The master, however, though naturally reticent, was a keen observer of the young man, and (though few suspected it) he was proud of his pupil. This became suddenly and emphatically known one day—from the owner at St. John's to the smallest boy at Blanc Sablon. It came about in this way: Capt. Sam had discovered new fishing grounds at Cape Chidley. This necessitated his personal supervision during the summer months. It also necessitated another Manager at Blanc Sablon. The owner at St. John's notified Capt. Sam that Mr. Grant would be sent down from St. John's to undertake this responsible work.

As Capt. Sam read the letter—like the old person whilst reading the lessons in church—he commented freely and emphatically on the contents. "Send a man down from St. John's!" "Indeed! By thunder, No! There is only one man for that job, and that man is Mr. Grant." This was made perfectly plain in his letter on the subject to the owners at St. John's, who accepted Capt. Sam's nomination, without hesitation, and were only too glad to hear such good accounts of the captain's understudy, and he was appointed in charge of the business at Blanc Sablon, during Capt. Sam's absence. This appointment, with its increased privileges and responsibilities, gave Mr. Grant the opportunity to gain new experience, and to put into practice many ideas that were latent in the back of his head. When years after, Capt. Sam, resigned the management, Mr. Grant, with consent of all concerned, was appointed to succeed him, and though he has now completed twenty years of that responsible management—like Johnnie Walker, "he is still going strong"—and is in full enjoyment of the confidence of his employers, and the love and respect of all who have served, and are serving under him.

During those thirty-six years, Mr.

Grant has witnessed many changes in the methods of catching and curing fish; and as he watches the new-days fishing with that ease which modern equipment provides, he shakes his head, and harks back in memory to the days of hemp cod seines, spruce oars, black punts, high break-back flakes, and oar rope. Today, one hundred and fifty planters go to their trawls and hook-and-line fishing in up-to-date motor boats, followed by the one hundred and fifty hired men who work the traps. It has been found necessary to hire the trap men, in order to equalize the value of trap berths. Mr. Grant has also seen the business (which was begun at the old Jersey Room at Blanc Sablon) go on extending year by year, till it has included the Rooms at Isle au Bois, L'Anse au Clair, Greenly Island, L'Anse au Loup, Porteau, and that of Fruling & Co. on the other side of the river at Blanc Sablon, thus including from Bras d'or to L'Anse au Loup—on twenty miles of coast—what at one time were eleven distinct fishing Rooms; that of Fruling & Co. being the last Jersey firm in either Newfoundland or Labrador.

Mr. Grant remembers his sale of 10,000 quintals of fish in 1902 for $1.80 a quintal, whilst other sales were made at $1. He remembers when the catch of 14,000 quintals was sold for $2.50, $2.80 and $3.00 a quintal. He would find it difficult to forget 1911, the year when not a caplin was seen on the shore, and the season ended with a deficit of several thousand dollars. He recalls the excitement of Capt. Joe Blundford, when, having seen for the first time a motor boat belonging to the Light House steamer, towing a loaded lighter to the shore—he saw a vision of the loss of such motor boats towing the loaded trap skiffs, etc., here and there along the coast; and emphatically declared "that's what we need Sir! and that's what we must have Sir!"

Though somewhat skeptical of Capt. Joe's prophecy and declaration at the time; the next season found the company with one boat fitted with a Norwegian hot-head engine, which they could do nothing with, and a man had to be imported from Norway to find out why it would not work. Mr. Grant still laughs when he recalls the fact that the only thing necessary to have made that engine work splendidly from the beginning, was the heating of the head up to a certain temperature, and they had been afraid to do that, lest the whole thing would blow up.

To-day, along that shore, where twelve years ago the Light House steamer's motor boat, resigned supreme, and without a rival, there are at least one hundred of such boats, of the most modern type, thirty of which belong to, and are controlled by the Blanc Sablon Co.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Shut and closely made at home, but it beats them all for its effect.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any drugstore, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—warms and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membrane, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle, and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic cough, hoarseness or bronchial asthma. Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by getting your drugstore for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

A Criticism—Any advertiser, either in the Evening Telegram, or in any other respectable newspaper, who believes that the embodiment of such a sentence as: "Get wise men . . . for what the R. do you care?" will increase his trade, is, in my opinion, sadly mistaken. Other persons, such as "Billy the Kid" read the advertisements, and have clothes to be cleaned and hats to be blocked. But.

Queen Ann's Bounty.

Queen Anne celebrated her fortieth birthday by a noble act of beneficence. The birthday actually fell on a Sunday—February 6, 1704—but on the following day, Sir Charles Hodges, Secretary of State, brought down to the House of Commons a message from the Queen stating that her Majesty desired to make a grant of the whole of that portion of her revenue, arising out of the First Fruits and Tenths for the benefit of the poorer clergy. These first fruits and tenths were originally sent to Rome, but Henry VIII. added them to the Crown revenue. Charles II. squandered funds on his mistresses and his offspring. Bishop Burnet had recommended to William and Mary a plan for benefitting the poorer clergy by the use of the fund, and he took considerable credit for Anne's resolve. The income was £170,000 a year, to which Parliament added an annual grant of £100,000. The bill enabling her Majesty to alienate this branch of her revenue also created a corporation to act as trustees for the poor. There was likewise a clause repealing part of the statute of the mortmain, so that it might henceforth be free to any man to give what he thought fit, either by deed or will towards the augmentation of benefices. This clause was warmly opposed in the Lords, but it was eventually carried with the rest of the Bill. Later statutes of George I., George II., and Victoria enlarged the scope of the original Act as touching the livings to be dealt with, and further allowed certain advances for the repairing of churches, buildings, parsonages, and other similar purposes. "Queen Anne's Bounty" has well fulfilled its appointment, and rendered signal service to the Church.

QUEBEC MAN GETS RESULTS FROM DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mr. H. Dinelle Suffered from a Complication of Kidney Troubles and tells How Dodd's Kidney Pills Helped Him.

Cheneville, Que., Feb. 14.—(Special.) "I suffered for eight years from diabetes, neuralgia of the heart and rheumatism.

"A year ago I commenced to take Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My health is very much improved." In these three concise sentences Mr. Hyacinthe Dinelle, a well-known and highly respected resident here, tells why he recommends Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Dinelle is still using Dodd's Kidney Pills. He believes that his troubles are caused by sick kidneys and that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the remedy he needs.

Sick kidneys are the cause of many serious diseases. When the kidneys are not right they try to do their full work of straining all the impurities, all the seeds of disease, out of the blood. There can be no pure blood if the kidneys are wrong. There can be no good health unless the blood is pure.

Ask your neighbors if Dodd's Kidney Pills are not the sovereign remedy for sick kidneys.

Establishment of British Power in India.

The news that the Prince of Wales is to open the new Parliament in India, brings to mind that February 5, 1857, was the date of a battle in the Ditch of Fort William, Calcutta, which may be said to have established British supremacy in India. The Nabob of Bengal commenced hostilities against the British, and having overpowered Calcutta, confined his victims in the famous "Black Hole," this killing them in a truly fiendish manner for only twenty three out of over a thousand survived the horrors of that night. By the time the news of this outrage had reached England, rousing the indignation of every British subject, Colonel—afterwards Lord—Clive, and already marched up country with the intention of speedily avenging this atrocity. After visiting Calcutta, in spite of what appeared insurmountable difficulties, he arrived with an army of three thousand men within a day's march of the Nabob's encampment. Clive had set himself a task that appeared well-nigh hopeless. The enemy were at least fifty thousand strong, and his determination to advance was formed in spite of the advice to the contrary from his officers. The Bengalee came in a mass, and looked formidable enough to have appalled even a strong force; but the first cannonade from the British threw the enemy into confusion; it turned and fled, and the English found India open to them.

why he does not join his father, the former German Emperor, at Doorn. Frederick William also sets forth his plans regarding the education of his sons.

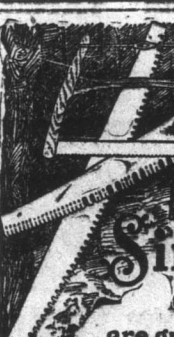

"Naturally I would be glad to return to Germany, and I would be happy if I could devote myself to agriculture, particularly to horse breeding, the former Crown Prince is quoted as saying. "I could rejoice to associate with the learned men at Breslau University and regain what I lost during the war at Wieringen. I would like to use what little power I have to help build up the Fatherland, but that cannot be. My friends in the Fatherland and abroad would see my hand in every deed which others might begin, but of which I would know nothing at all. Unrest would follow. I cannot go to my parents at Doorn. Our opponents are continually trying to put us in the position of being ready to set the world on fire, and if we were together, then, in the eyes of our opponents, the overthrow of the world would be a question of but a short time."

EUGENE DEBS.

EUGENE DEBS.

In a prison cell he sits, for his carnival of crime, jailed for three long sundry fits at a nervous, crucial time. Now the crucial time is past, and 'twould make the angels weep that we hold him, caged and fast, sighing in his dungeon keep. Poor Eugene! His heart is good, and his courage high and strong, but his head has wheels of wood and they're always turning wrong; and when war was sweeping by, sponsored by some tinhorn kings, he reared up, nine cubits high, and reeled off some foolish things. Then the hearts of men were hot as we watched war's crimson tide, and we all were talking rot—but we took the proper side. Then the wheels in Eugene's head backward turned, as is their wont, and he pawed around and said silly things, in language blunt. And he's been in jail for years, and it seems he'll there remain, while the beastly profiteers flourish on their crooked gain; and the gangsters run at large, and the slayers shoot and stab, and they're not placed in charge of the prison grim and drab; and the swindlers and the thieves raise their divers kinds of hell, while poor Eugene sits and grieves at the window of his cell. In the bustle and the rush many errors must prevail, but our Uncle Sam should blush that this man remains in jail.
