JUST BETWEEN

Dodgers Get To Giants Again ball is one often asked by Canadian fans in the Mint. It is believed that next year more attention will be paid to the sandlots of Western Ontario in recruiting for whatever league may be in existence then. Buzz Wetzel has in mind a couting trip around the sand lots of Western Ontario as soon as the Mint seaon closes and it may start other managers on the same quest.

Certainly Canadian simon pures have had very few chances to break into aseball. The American, no matter how green a rookle he may be, gets first call. John Jones from Wichita, Kansas, is far more likely looking than John Jones from Mull's Corners, Ontario, to the average manager in the professional leagues and to Canadian fans themselves.

A few have broken into the game, George Gibson, now leader of the Pirates. and Archer, formerly with the Chicago Cubs, the most prominent of recent years in the majors and both by a strange coincidence, backstops. There are a few who have made minor league history, but the percentage is so small as to make a Canadian-born player almost a curiosity. However, it isn't from this end of the deal that the evidence of Canadian talent comes. It is rather from the fact that where there are semi-pro teams operating, big leaguers have not always been the outstanding stars of the games in which they participated. Many cases could be cited all over the country where there are ex-majors performing and working very hard in the company

1 of all-Canadian talent and not shining any too well. Reis, this year with Toronto and certainly not the wobbliest of the wobbly Leaf staff, played last year in the Tri-County league and didn't hurt no-hit, no-run games every day against the other teams in the league. "Suds" Sutherland, ex-Detroit and Portland, Oregon, hurler, had a rough passage recently when he opposed the Sarnia semi-pros. In other games he has been touched up

Sutherland had won five games for Detroit when he was told to report back to the coast and refused to go.

Babe Dye is the most prominent Canuck in the Mint. Dye was the Babe Ruth of the Toronto amateur ranks and in one season he is heading for that title in the Mint. He wasn't the first few games he played. He looked as if he was still a simon pure. With the glamor of professional ball shining in his eyes Dye looked amateurish at first, but now he has all the ability and all the confidence of a veteran.

These are just isolated cases that have come to notice locally, but there nust be thousands of others that would furnish food for reflection. All-Canadian teams are an impossibility for years to come, but a larger percentage of natives on pro. teams could well be looked for series if the Cockneys do not win the second series Maines has made mistakes—he is only human in doing so—but he has proved a live wire for the league, and it is doubtful if another man could be secured who would devote the time to the duties as Maines has done. London may be able to grab off the pennants, but when it comes to ruling the league as well, the Chirpers will find that there is a way of keeping them in their place. their place.

One thing, President Maines shouldn't have any kick against Critchlow, for Crich got him more publicity than the world's series

KID GLEASON, flery leader of the White Sox, doesn't like to be alled "Pa" or "Pop." He resents it, and the bird who calls him either one of those pet names had best be a block away when he dresses Gleason in a term of en-dearment that bespeaks the armchair and tottering age.

"Now, listen here," Gleason said to one member of a party of friends who had gathered with him after a game of baseball, "you can call me anything except 'Pop,' but I'm not going to stand for that." Gleason, one of the quaintest fig-ures in baseball, is livelier than ballplayers half his age, and the Sox boss is 57. The marvel is that he retains his vitality at his age. many an athlete of 25 has turned an envious eye upon the Kid in batting and fielding prac-

Nearly every time a trainload of White Sox players pulls out for enother city Capt. Eddie Collins starts an uproar and a mad chase through half a dozen coaches and Pullman cars by addressing Gleason as "Methuselah," "Grandpa," or "Old Greyhead." But it is noted that each time Collins calls out any of these terms he is a car length away and ready to run. For once Gleason catches the offender there is a rough and tumble, though playful battle, and Gleason is always on top when the skirmish ends.
