

DEBILITATING TREMORS.

Experience of a Victim - Yagarias and Victims Bearing Testimony From the Doctor's Opinion.

I had been on an unusually protracted jamboree, and it frightens me now when I recall the immense quantity of mixed drinks I absorbed during its continuance. For about three weeks I had been anxiously putting one drink on top of another, but during the last week of partial sobriety thought of "letting up" and "weaving off" for a season. One night a shadow passed swiftly before my face, preceded by a peculiar dull sensation in that portion of the cranium, which is allotted by phrenologists to the organ of veneration. The numbness (which in the main very nearly expresses the nature of the sensation) from this point spread gradually downwards. Its progress was alarmingly apparent to me, as I had been made to my room, and repaired to my room, hoping that an application of cold water and a good night's rest might bring relief. Before reaching home my numbness had begun to affect my eyesight to such an extent that all objects had become a shadow, uncertain appearance, and to my vision the letters in the names of the streets on the right and left side of the thoroughfare by my knowledge I gained from the sign. Arrived at my room I saturated a towel with ice-cold water, and enveloped my head with it, turned on the light, and retired. While walking along the street, when I was about to be affected, several times a shadow seemed to pass over my eyes, and I was obliged to close my eyes, and I was very similar to the flight of a hat. Now, while lying on my bed, this singular shadow seemed to pass between my vision and the ceiling, and I was perfectly aware that this was a vagary of a disordered brain, but still hoped and believed that rest would bring relief. Confident in this conviction, I endeavored to compose myself to sleep, but the numbness increased rather than diminished, the bewitching shadows continued to annoy my vision, and I was soon convinced that sleep, under such circumstances, was out of the question.

At last the numbness and feeling consequent upon my delirium became too much for my nerves to stand, and I arose and repaired to the next all-night bazaar, hoping, amid the cheerful convivial company I was sure to find there, to get rid of the apparatus which was engaged in some game of cards and endeavored to divert myself by watching them play. While doing so I suddenly saw a woman whom I had not seen for some time. The sober second thought which I was enabled to evolve from my reasoning faculties by this extraordinary incident will, I demonstrated to me satisfactorily the utter absurdity of such an idea, and I was now pretty well satisfied that I was in the early stages of the "jinn-jams," and on the impulse of the moment, realizing fully the cause to which was my deplorable condition, firmly resolved that not another drop of liquor of any description should pass my lips as a beverage.

The Champion Bear Story. From the Post Mail, August 12, 1884. A respectable correspondent vouches for the truth of the following rather incredible story.

Charles W. Moores, while out in the woods at Bear Island, York county, a few days ago, was met by a large bear. The bear was about to take refuge in a tree when the bear attacked him from the opposite side of the tree. Mr. Moores, however, had a revolver and started for a firm grip till rescued next day by Mr. G. Havelock Van Wart, who happened to be hunting in the woods. The bear was about a mile distant, and hearing some one calling from the woods for help, left his horse in charge of Mr. Van Wart, and started for the bear. When he came in sight of the bear he drew a revolver and fired two shots, one killing the bear and the other passing through the bear's throat, commonly known as "Adam's apple," inflicting a severe wound. The bear when dressed weighed 400 lbs.

John Bright's Popularity. From the Post Mail, August 12, 1884. The most striking demonstration in the "march past" yesterday was certainly that opposite Mr. Bright's house in Piccadilly. Mr. Bright was sitting at the open window, surrounded by his family, and each detachment of the procession as it filed past with the one before it in the heartiness of its cheers. And in the park, it was clear that Mr. Bright was the popular hero, one of the few mastiffs which last occurred being caused by a man having "sandalized" John Bright. The man in question had ventured to remark that Mr. Bright had never been friendly to trades unions, but the feeling of the people clearly was that his services as a reformer would cover any quantity of sins. No liberal statesman, other than Mr. Gladstone, or Mr. Bright, came in for any mark of popular favor, and the most remarkable and not the most satisfactory features of yesterday's show.

The Newspaper Press Most in Demand. From the Washington Capital. The most remarkable press ever produced by the Hoe establishment is one just completed which will turn out 75,000 copies in one hour. It is a masterpiece of paper, and is quite complicated, but in case of an enormous demand for a paper will obviously be of vast utility. All the news of the day is printed on it, and the press is increasing their press facilities constantly, and the business of press making is more flourishing than ever before. The demand in demand is one which prints 14,000 a hour, single sheet or double sheet, from the type without stereotyping.

KANGAROOING IN AUSTRALIA.

An Exciting Sport Enjoyed by Thousands in the Antipodes. Interview in San Francisco Chronicle.

"What is your most interesting sport in Australia?"

"Kangarooing. It is one of the most exciting sports in the world. Large meets are organized, parties from twenty to thirty joining in these hunts. They ride to the kangaroo grounds and as soon as one is sighted the two dogs are released and the horses are given their heads. If the Australian horse is well up in his business and if you let him take you instead of trying to take him, he will carry you safely, avoiding the trees and underbrush. A good strong kangaroo will make a long chase, and very few real riders are to be seen in the country. The horses are made longer; they now sweep the ground, not as a train, but sufficiently to rest upon it—an inconvenient fashion, to rest upon it more difficult to hold up than when longer and spool easily.

Transparent bonnets are most a la mode. I have seen them in black chenille, in straw, in gold and many varieties, they are made so far apart that the hair was plainly visible through them. The gold bonnets with almost any dress, unless a piece of the dress is used; but grotesque paintings on cotton and wool of some of the designs for a drab satin parasol! Red parasols are a great deal worn.

GOVERNOR CLEGG'S REPORT.

The Supreme Power must be exercised for the benefit of the people.

ALBANY, N. Y., August 18, 1884. The letter of acceptance of the nomination of Governor Clegg to the office of the President of the National Convention at Chicago, I received with a sense of solemnity.

It is a privilege to have a fellow citizen so fully considered the convention and the same. So plain a declaration of faith and purpose on the part of the people needs no support. It should be the office of the President to be essentially executive laws enacted by the government, the bound faith to the wisdom of the political one of its members.
