A Novel Fish. Several fishermen who were at work out-side Digby Gut last Friday are the author-ity for the statement that a huge fish, which could be nothing else than a sea serpent, was sporting itself in those waters. It was about forty feet in length and pure white and was madly dashing the water into foam. The fact that several parties at different spots saw the creature would serve to show that it was not fancy and some of the boatmen were so alarmed that they left their work to seek a place of safety. f myself to go with him down to his farm in Worcestershire for two days. We grateful-ly accept the invitation, so on the 6th of May we are off for one of the first gardens of Eng-land: Kent stands first and Worcestershire second. But since we have another invita-tion from a gentleman to visit Kent we will fare pretty well. In less than an hour we are plunging through the delightful scenery of Derbyshire. At High Peak Tunnel we have gained the highest elevation on the route, but the high peak towers above us many hundred feet, and we have one and one-quarter miles to get through it. After leaving the tunnel we travel at the rate of sixty miles per hour. I had the pleasure of travelling by this road twice, and I would like to spend a month among the Devonshire hills. At one time we are under Husden Hall, then of the home of the late Sir Joseph Wickworth, then we are running along the rivor Derwent. The beautiful white lime-stone roads between the hedges and the lime-stone walls form all sorts of twists and turns among the rich shrubbery. Mattock Bath is very pretty. At Hole-way we eagerly embrace our opportunity to get a look at the home of the Jorean Nightinway we eagerly embrace our opportunity to get a look at the home of Florence Nightin-

way we eagerly embrace for opportunity to gale. In our ride we cross the river Der-went nine times, amidst the most bewitching scenery. We pass Derby and Worcester are are soon to the garden of our friend in Worcester county. We get off at a station called Flatbush. One of Mr. Swift's farm managers and chief servant meets us at the station with a fine strong dog cart, and we four mount and for about five hours are en-tertained with a rare treat; for aside from the luxury of looking upon the great enter-prise of our friend, we see a lot of English county life. This farm of 650 acres con-tains nearly 500 acres of garden and 150 acres of wbeat and grass. The wheat is cultivated principally for the straw to protect the veg-etables in transit to market. Not will attempt to give you some sta-tistics of the importance of this market gar-den: 60 acres of cabbage turning 1500 dozen to the acre; 8 acres parsnips, 3 acres coa-batas, 8 acres seed cabbage, 50 acres po-tatoes, 8 acres seed cabbage, 50 acres po-tatoes, 8 acres seed cabbage, 50 acres pri-tatose, 8 acres seed cabbage, 50 acres pri-tatose, 8 acres seed cabbage, 50 acres for mpties. Here we see the willow from the tree to the backt ready for the market. We called at one of the barns to see the po-tato he acres in the barns to see the po-tato he acres in the barns to see the po-tate billing in a huge biller for the silo in which an estimate of 50 tons are already alted down. Mr. Pritchard, the farm servant, looks at me with pitying eyes when] I refuse to imbibe. However, I am treated to a nice bunch of wallflowers for my appreciation of the nice, well kept flower beds.

Mr. Swift has a little matter of busine Mr. Swift has a little matter of business with his manager, and thus we have a good look at the kitchen of a fairly well condi-tioned English tenant farmer. We note particularly the big source cun terous table, the flag stone floor, the spacior dresser, and the, hops. We protest against the clock hang English.
