

To the memory of the Rev. Father Jean Baptiste de la Brosse, last Jesuit missionary of Tadousac, who died in the odor of sanctity at the age of 58 years, and was buried in the chapel of Tadousac April 12, 1782.

To the rear of this historic little church is the old parish cemetery. "God's Acre," where those who, in many years ago, knelt in reverent prayer within its humble walls, now lie wrapped in the dark draperies of the tomb. "Ici Repose" and "Ci-gît" meet the eye of pilgrim and tourist on every side, as he moves among the cross-crowned graves, where the Angel of Death sentinels the white-robed armies of Eternity.

Tadousac is but a village, yet its century-dowered history illumines the pages of our Canadian Past with a splendor born of the genius of Catholic heroism and faith.

THOMAS O'HAGAN.

